SLAM, to shat with violence and noise. (Scand.) 'To slam one, to beat or cuff one strenuously, to push violently; hy slamm'd to the door; North;' Grose's Provincial Glossary, ed. 1790.—Norweg. slamba, to smack, bang, hang or slam a door quickly; also spelt slemma, slamra; Swed. dial. slämma, to slam, strike or push hastily, to slam a door (Aasen, Rietz); Icel. slamra, slambra, to slam. Cf. Swed. slamra, to prate, chatter, jingle; slammer, a clank, noise. To slam is to strike smartly, and is related to Slap; see Slap. Of imitative origin; note prov. E. slam-bung, slap-bung, violently; Halliwell.

SLANDER, scandal, calumny, false report, defamation. (F.—I.—Gk.) A doublet of scandal, as will appear. ME. slaunder, Chaucer, C. T. 8598 (E 722); slaunder, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 41; K. Alisaunder, 757.—OF. esclandre, 'a slander;' Cot. (We find the OF. forms escandele, escandele, escandre (Burguy); and lastly, by insertion of l, the form esclandre).—L. scandalum; see Scandal. Der. slander, verb, ME. slaunderen, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21; slander-er; slander-ous, from OF. esclandreux (Cot.); slander-ous-ly. Doublet, scandal.

SLANG, low, vulgar language, a colloquial and familiar mode of expression. (Scand.) Not in early use. In the Slang Dict., the earliest known instance is given as follows. 'Let proper nurses be assigned, to take care of these babes of grace [young thieves] . . . The master who teaches them should be a man well versed in the cant language commonly called the slang patter, in which they should by all means excel;' Jonathan Wild's Advice to his Successor; London, J. Scott, 1758. The same Dict. gives: 'Slang, to cheat, abuse in foul language; Slang-whanger, a long-winded speaker; also, out on the slang, to travel with a hawk's licence; slang, a watch-chain, a travelling-show.' [But the existence of this book (of 1758) is doubted. In 1762, Foote has: 'ay, but that's all slang [pretence]; I suppose;' The Orators, A. i. sc. 1.] Probably derived from slang, 2nd grade of the verb to sling, i. e. to throw, cast. This is shown by Wedgwood, following Aasen. β. We find, for example, Norweg. sleng, a slinging, also an invention, device, stratagem; also, a little addition, or burthen of a song, in verse and melody; etterling (lit. after-slang), a burthen at the end of a verse of a ballad; slengu, to dangle (which shows why slang sometimes means a watch-chain); slengja, to sling, cast, slengja kjöfen (lit. to sling the jaw), to use abusive language, to slang; slengjennam, a nickname (lit. a slang-name), also, a name that has no just reason; slengjörd (lit. a slang-word), an insulting word or allusion, a new word that has no just reason, or, as Aasen puts it, forærmelige Ord eller Hentydninger, nye Ord som ikke have nogen rigtig Grund. 'The use of slang in the sense "to cheat" reminds us of Icel. slengr, slunginn, versed in a thing, cunning. And that all the above Norweg. and Icel. words are derivatives from sling is quite clear; see Sling. I see no objection to this explanation. Note also Swed. slanger, gossip. ¶ Taylor, in his Words and Places, gives, without any proof or reference, the following explanation. 'A slang is a narrow strip of waste land by the road-side, such as those which are chosen by the gipsies for their encampments. [This is amplified from Halliwell, who merely says: 'Slang, a narrow piece of land, sometimes called slanket.'] To be out on the slang, in the lingo used by thieves and gipsies, means to travel about the country as a hawker, encamping by night on the roadside slangs. [Amplified from the Slang Dict., which says not a word about these night-encampments. A travelling-show was also called a slang. It is easy to see how the term slang was transferred to the language spoken by hawkers and itinerant showmen.' To this I take exception; it is not 'easy to see.' On the other hand, it is likely that a slang (from the verb slang, to cast) may have meant 'a cast' or 'a pitch'; for both east and pitch are used to mean a camping-place, or a place where a travelling-show is exhibited; and, indeed, 'a narrow slip of ground' is also called a slinget or slangeit; (E. D. D.).

SLANT, to slope. (Scand.) 'Fortune beginneth so to slant,' i. e. fall; Libell of E. Pollice, l. 757. We also have slant, adj. sloping; the verb should rather take the form to slent. Lowland Sc. slent, sklent, sklint, to give a slanting direction, to dart askance (in relation to the eyes), to pass obliquely, to render sloping (Jamieson). ME. slenten, to slope, to glide; 'it [a blow] slented doune to the erthe,' Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. xvii. c. 1; leaf 345. 'A fote ynto the erthe hyt slente'; MS. Camb. Ff. ii. 38, fol. 113; cited in Halliwell, p. 711. [The insertion of e, as in slenten, occurs again in MF. slendure for mod. F. slender;—Norw. slenta, to fall aside, or fall slanting (Ross); Swed. dial. slenta, slänta, lit. 'to cause to slide'; causal form of the strong verb slänta (pt. t. slant, pp. sluntit), to slide, slip with the foot (Rietz). Cf. MSwed. slänta, to slip with the foot (Ihre); Swed. slänta, to slip, miss one's step, to glance (as a chisel on a stone), to slip or glance (as a knife); Wiedgren. Also MDan. slanten, slack; slente, to slip aside, be slack; Swed. slänta (= slunta), to slant, slope. β. The E. adj. slant, sloping, answers to the Swed. dial. slant, adj. slippery, esp. used of a path; the connexion between sloping and slippery in this case, is obvious. Der. slant-ly, slant-wise; also a-slant, q. v.

SLAP, to smack, to strike with the flat open hand. (E.) Rare in literature; but we find MF. slappe, sb., a smart blow; Palladius on Husbandry, b. iv. l. 763. It seems to be an E. word; it occurs both in Low and High German. +Low G. slapp, the sound of a blow, a sounding blow on the ears. +Slap! sloug ik em en de snute, I hit him on the snout, slap! Bremen Wörterbuch; G. schlapp, interj., slap! schlapp, sb., a slap; schlappen, verb, to slap. [Quite a different word from Swed. slappa, lax, loose, Dan. slap, slack, &c.] β. An imitative word, to express the sound of a blow; allied to slam; cf. prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently (Halliwell). Der. slap, sb., ME. slappe, as above; slap, adv., slap-bang, violently.

SLASH, to cut with a violent sweep, cut at random or violently. (F.—Teut.) ME. slaschen; rare. In Wyclif, 3 Kings, v. 18, the L. dañuērit is translated by han ouerscorche in the earlier text, with the various reading han slascht; the later text has hewiden. 'Hewing and dashing'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 15. 'Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash'; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 90. 'But presently slash off his traitorous head'; Green, Alphonsus, Act ii; ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 23. 'Slash, a cut or gash, Yorhah,' Halliwell. Slashed sleeves are sleeves with gashes in them, as is well known. (OF. eschacier, to break in pieces (Godefroy).—OF. es. (< L. ex), very; and Teut. type klakjan*, MHG. Mecken, to break with a 'clack'; cf. F. claquer, a clack, from MHG. clac, a clack, sudden noise. See Körting, § 5280. β. Perhaps confused with OF. eschacier, eschier, to slice; see SLICE. γ. The Swed. slaska, to splash, accounts only for prov. E. slashy, wet, Lowland Sc. slash, to work in wet, slatch, to dabble in water, slatch, to bedaub; which are words unrelated to the present one, but allied to prov. E. slash and slush. Der. slash, sb. Slash, to whip, is perhaps an intensive form of lash, q. v.

SLAT, a long, narrow strip of wood, a lath. (F.—Teut.) The same word as slate (below). Cf. prov. E. slat, a slate; ME. slat, a slate, Prompt. Parv.

SLATE (1), a well-known stone that is easily split, a piece of such stone. (F.—Teut.) ME. slat, usually slat, Wyclif, Luke, v. 19. So called from its fissile nature.—OF. esclat, 'a shiver, splinter, or little piece of wood broken off with violence; also a small thin lath or shingle,' Cot. [A shingle is a sort of wooden tile].—OF. esclater; whence esclater, 'to split, burst, shiver: into splinters'; Cot. This answers to a Late L. type ex-clapitäre*, to break with a clap; from L. ex, very, and Low G. klapp, a clap, klappen, to clap. Körting, § 5282. See SLAB (1). The OF. esclat = mod. F. éclat; hence éclat is the same word. Der. slate-pencil, slat-er, slat-ing, slat-y, Doublets, éclat, slat.

SLATE (2), to set on a dog, to bait, damage, abuse. (E.) 'Of bole slating,' bull-baiting; King Alisaunder, 200. AS. slætan, to cause to rend.—AS. slāt, and grade of slitan, to slit, tear; see SLIT.

SLATTERN, a sluttish, untidy woman. (Scand.) It is used both by Butler and Dryden; Todd's Johnson (no reference). The final -n is difficult to account for; it is either a mere addition, as in bitter-n, or slattern is short for slatterin = slattering; unless it was borrowed directly from MDan. slatten, untidy, dirty; slatten-spād, a slattern (Kalkar). Ray, in his North-Country Words, has: 'Dawgos, or Dawkin, a dirty slatternly woman.' Kersey (1721) has: Slattern, a slattering woman.' Grose's Supp. (1790) has slatterkin. The word is formed from the verb to slatter, to waste, use wastefully, be untidy. 'Slatter, to waste; or rather, perhaps, not to make a proper and due use of anything; thus they say, take care, or you'll slatter it all away; also, to be negligent and slovenly; 'Halliwell. 'Slatter, to wash in a careless way, throwing the water about it' Forby. Slatter is the frequentative (with the usual suffix -er) of prov. E. slat, to splash, to dash; cf. Icel. slatta, to slap, dab (liquids). Perhaps from slatt, as seen in Norw. slatta, str. verb (pt. t. slatt), to dangle, to hang loose (as clothes do); also, to be idle (Aasen); by-form of slenta, to slip, fall aside; see SLANT. Allied words are Dan. slat, a slip; slat, slatten, slattet, loose, flabby; slattes, to become slack; slatte, a slattern; Low G. slajje, a slattern. Also Icel. slattari, a tramp. Der. slattern-ly. Distinct from slut, but perhaps allied to it.

SLAUGHTER, a slaying, carnage, butchery. (Scand.) ME. slaghter, Pricke of Conscience, 3367; also slautir, spelt slawtyr in Prompt. Parv. The word is strictly Scand., from Icel. slátr, a slaughtering, butcher's meat, whence slátra, verb, to slaughter cattle. See Norcen, § 224. If the E. word had been uninfluenced by the Icel. word, it would have taken the form slaght or slaght; in fact, the commonest forms in ME. are slay, Rob. of Glouc. p. 56, l. 1286; slawhte, Gower, C. A. i. 348; directly from AS. slæht, Grein, ii. 455. β. The AS. slæht is cognate with Du. and Swed. slagt, G. schlacht. Teut. types slak-taz*, m., slak-tā*, f., a slaying (Fick, iii. 358); the Icel. slátr is a neut. sb., closely related, with the same sense. γ. All from the base SLATI, whence F. slay; see SLAY. Der. slaughter, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 302; slaughter-man, -house; slaughter-ous, Mach. v. 5. 14; slaughter-er.

SLAVE, a scrf, one in bondage. (F.—L.—Gk.—Slavonic.) In Chaucer, Troil. iii. 391. In A Deuise of a Maske for the right honourable Viscount Mountacute, Gascoigne introduces the words slawe and slaweries; see Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 82, ll. 15, 20; i. 81, l. 13.—F. esclave, 'a slave'; Cot.—Late L. slavicus, a Slavonian captive, a slave.—Late Gk. Σκλάβος, Ἑσκλάβος, a Slavonian, one of Slavonic race captured and made a bondman. 'From the Fuxine to the Adriatic, in the state of captives or subjects . . . they [the Slavonians] overspread the land; and the national appellation of the Slaves has been degraded by chance or malice from the signification of glory to that of servitude;' Gibbon, Decline of the Roman Empire, c. 55. β. Gibbon here supposes slave to be allied to Russ. slava, glory, fame; but the true origin of Slavonian is unknown; Miklosich, p. 308. Der. slave, verb, K. Lear, iv. 1. 71; slaw-er, slaw-er-y, slaw-ish, -ly, -ness; slave-trade; also en-slave.

SLAVER, to slubber. (Scand.) 'His mouthe slauers'; Pricke of Conscience, 784. Slavery [for slawerly] is used to translate F. bave; Walter de Bibbesworth, l. 12, in Wright's Vocab. l. 143.—Icel. slafra, to slaver; cognate with Low G. slabbern, to slaver, slubber; see SLABBER. Der. slaver, sb., from Icel. slafir (also slafa), sb.; slaver-er. Doublet, slabber.

SLAY (1), to kill. (E.) Orig. to strike, smite. ME. steen, lee, Chaucer, C. T. 663 (A 661); pt. t. sloun, slon (slaw in Tyrwhitt), l. 989 (A 987); pp. slain, id. 994 (A 992). AS. slæan (contracted form of slahan*), to smite, slay; pt. t. slāh, slōg, pl. slōgon; pp. slēgen; Grein, ii. 455. 456. +Du. slaan, pt. t. sloug, pp. geslagen; Icel. slā; Dan. slaae; Swed. slå; Goth. slahan; G. schlagen; OIIG. slahan. β. All from Teut. type slah-an*, to smite; Fick, iii. 358. Cf. OIrish slig-im, I strike. Der. slay-er, ME. slay-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2007 (A 2005); also slaugh-t-er, q. v.; slay (2), q. v.: sledge-hammer, q. v.

SLAY (2), SLEY, a weaver's reed. (E.) 'Slay, an instrument belonging to a weaver's loom that has teeth like a comb;' Phillips. 'Slay, a weavers tool;' Palsgrave.—AS. slāw; 'P[er]c[us]sio, slāw;' Voc. 262. 21; also slage, Voc. 188. 5; also (in the 8th century) 'Pectica, slahne,' id. 39. 19. So called from its striking or pressing the web tightly together.—AS. slah*-, base of slān, to strike, smite; see SLAY (1). 'Percussio ferient insecti pectine dentes'; Ovid, Metam. vi. 58. Cf. Icel. slā, a bar, bolt. See Camb. Phil. Trans. 1899, p. 139 (231).

SLEAVE, SLEAVE-SILK, soft floss silk. (Scand.—G.) 'Ravell'd sleeve,' i. e. tangled loose silk, Mach. ii. 2. 37. See Nares and Halliwell.—Dan. dial. sløve, a knot, twist, tangle (in thread); Dan. dial. sløfgarn, yarn that runs into knots; Dan. sløffe, a bow, a knot; EFries. sløve, sløffe, a slip-knot.—G. (dial.) schlöße, a slip-knot; with the same sense as G. schleife (Kluge). Cf. OIIG. sloufan, causal of sloufan, to slip. See SLIP.

SLEAZY, poor, light, said of a material. (Silesia.) 'Such sleazy stuff;' Howell's Letters, vol. i. let. 1. 'Sleazie Holland, common people take to be all forain linnen, which is sleight [slight] or ill wrought; whereas that only is properly Slesia or Slesia linnen cloth, which is made in, and comes from the Countrey Slesia in Germany;'

Blount's Gloss., ed. 1681. In fact, it is called Silesia still; see Silesia in C. D., where the name is said to be used in the United States; but it is used in England also.

SLED, SLEDGE, SLEIGH, a carriage made for sliding over snow or ice. (Du.) M.E. slede, Prompt. Parv. Pl. sledis, Wyclif, i Chron. xx. 3; spelt sledis in the later text. = M.Du. slede, a sledge; Du. slede. We also find Icel. slebi, Swed. släde, Dan. slæde. These forms are evidently from a Teut. root slad*, whence would be formed the 2d grade slad*, and a weak grade slud*, giving the strong verb sladan*-, pt. t. slad*, pp. sladanoz*; quite distinct from E. slide, though a parallel formation and having a similar sense. Franck connects Du. slede with E. slide, without explaining the vowel. But it is obvious that the Norw. sludde, a kind of rude sledge (I.arsen), cannot be related to the form slide. Cf. Irish and Gael. slad, a sledge, from slad, to slide. β. The different spellings may be thus explained. 1. The right form is sled. 2. The form sledge (perhaps from the pl. sleds) appears to be due to confusion with the commoner word sledge in the sense of 'hammer'; see Sledge-hammer. 3. The form sleigh is due to contraction by the loss of d. Thus the Norwegian and Low G. have both slede and slee; so also Du. sleekvoet, a sleigh-coach, stands for sledekoets. The final gh is unmeaning.

SLEDGE-HAMMER, a mallet or heavy hammer. (E.) Properly sledge; sledge-hammer means 'hammer-hammer', and shows reduplication. Sledge represents M.E. slegge, Romans of l'artemay, 3000; Trevisa, tr. of l'Illegend, vi. 199. AS. slæg (lat. sleugo), a heavy hammer; Voc. 448. 1. Lit. 'a smiter'; for slag-iu*, fem.; from slag-, for slah-, base of AS. slān, to smite, slay; see slay (1). †Du.* slegge, slei, a mallet; Swed. slägga, a sledge; Icel. slægga. Cf. also G. schlegel, Du. stegel, a mallet; from the same verb. We even find G. schiele-hammer, with hammer suffixed, as in English.

SLEEK, SLICK, smooth, glossy, soft. (Scand.) I. sleeke, I make paper smooth with a sleke-stone, Je fais glissant; 'Palgrave.' And if the cattis skyn be sluk and gay; 'Chaucer, C. T. (D 351), Ellesmere MS.; other readings sluke, schlyke. Tyrwhitt prints sleke, l. 5933. Spelt sluke, adv., smoothly, Havelock, 1157. There is no AS. slie (see Napier); only AS. slician, to make smooth. = Icel. slíkr, sleek, smooth; whence slíki-stein, a fine whetstone; (for polishing). Cf. M.Du. slieyk, 'plaine, or even'; Hexham. β. The Du. slíjk, Low G. slíkk, G. schlick, grease, slime, mud, are closely related words; so also is the strong verb which appears in Low G. slíken (pt. t. sliek, pp. slíken), G. schleichen (pt. t. schlich, pp. geschlichen), OHG. slíhhan, to slink, crawl, sneak, move slowly (as if through mire); see Slink. The Teut. type of the verb is sléikan*-, pt. t. slai*k, pp. slíkanoz*. The orig. sense of sleek is 'greasy, like soft mud'. In exactly the same way, from the base slíp*, we have Icel. slípp, slippery (Norw. E. slapp), and slípa, to make smooth, to whet, Du. slíppen, to polish, G. schleifen, to glide, to whet, polish.

SLEEP, to slumber, repose. (E.) M.E. sleepen, Chaucer, C. T. 10. Properly a strong verb, with pt. t. slēp, which has become sleep in Prov. E., and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 98. AS. slēpan, slēpan, pt. t. slēp; Grein, ii. 455. †Du.* slāpen; Goth. slēpan, pt. t. sai-slēp (with reduplication); G. schlafen; OHG. slīfan. β. In connexion with these is the sb. which appears as E. sleep, AS. slēp, Du. slāp, Goth. slēps, G. schlaf, OHG. slāf; of which the orig. sense is drowsiness, numbness, lethargy; as shown more clearly by the related adjective in Low G. slāpp, G. schlaff, lax, loose, unben, remiss, flabby. Cf. Russ. slabui, weak, feeble, faint, slack, loose; also L. lābi, to glide; labare, to totter. The Teut. type of the sb. is slēpaz*, m.; and of the verb, slēpan*-. Brugmann, l. §§ 200, 567. Der. a-sleep, q.v.; sleep-er, sleep-less, sleep-less-ly, sleep-less-ness; sleep-walk-er, sleep-walk-ing; sleep-y, sleep-i-ly, ness.

SLEEPER, a block of wood on which rails rest. (E.) From the verb above. Cf. F. dormant, a sleeper, from dormir, to sleep. And see Cules.

SLEET, rain mingled with snow or hail. (E.) M.E. sleet, Chaucer, C. T. 11562 (F 1250). The word is English; answering to OMer. slēte, AS. slēte*, slēte*, not found. Cf. E.Fries. slēte, hail; Low G. slōten, pl. hailstones (Lübben); G. hlosse, hailstone. The E. word would result regularly from the Teut. type slāufj*, orig. sense unknown. Cf. Norw. slāt, sleet (Russ); from the related Teut. base slāt*- (appearing in the Du. slāuten, to close, shut; so that the orig. sense may have been 'blinding,' or closing the eyes).

SLEEVE, part of a garment, covering the arm. (E.) M.E. sleeve, sleeve (with u-v); Chaucer, C. T. 193. OMer. slēf; AS. slif* (for earlier slēf). 'On his twā slēfan, in his two sleeves'; Blickling Hom., p. 181, l. 17. 'On his twā slifum' in his two sleeves; Alfric's Homilies, l. 376. Slēf-les, sleeveless; Voc. 151. 35. 'Manica, slif'; id. 328. 13; pt. slifan, id. 125. 5. We also find the verb slēfan, to put on, to clothe; Life of St. Guthlac, c. 16. The long e (ē) results from a mutation of AS. ea-Teut. au, pointing back to a Teut. type slāufj*, f., from Teut. root slēub*-, variant of slēub*-, whence MHG. sloufe, a cover, allied to MHG. sloufen, to let slip, to cover. Cf. Goth. slīpan (pt. t. slāp), to slip, creep into. It is thus allied to slip; from the slipping off and on of the sleeve, in dressing and undressing; compare the history of Smock. See Slip, and Slop (2). †M.Du.* slouve, 'a vaile, or a skine; the turning up of anything'; whence slouven, 'to turne up ones sleeves, to cover ones head'; Hexham. Also M.Du. sloue, 'a sleeve'; id.; G. schlaube, a lusk, shell (Flügel). Der. sleeve-less, AS. slēfless, as above. Horre Tooke explains a sleeveless errand (Troil. v. 4. 9) as meaning 'without a cover or pretence,' which is hardly intelligible; I suspect it to mean simply 'imperfect,' hence 'poor,' like a garment without sleeves; cf. AS. slēfless, said of a garment. We find: 'sleeveless rhymes,' Hall, Sat. iv. 1. 34; 'a sleeveless reason,' Kel. Antiq. i. 83; 'any sleeveless excuse,' 1. 7y's Euphuus, p. 114. In each instance it means 'imperfect, poor.'

SLEIGH, the same as Sled, q.v. Modern; Du. slēe, for slēde. The gh is unmeaning. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 273.

SLEIGHT, cunning, dexterity. (Scand.) M.E. slēighte, Chaucer, C. T. 606 (A 604); slēighte, slēithe, P. Plowman, C. xii. 98; slēighte, Will. of Palerne, 2151; slēighte, Layamon, 17212 (later text, where the first text has slēte, the E. word). = Icel. slēgh (for slæg), slyness, cunning. Formed with suffix -gh, from slæg (for slæg), sly; see Sly. Swed. slög, mechanical apt, dexterity (which is one sense of E. slight); from slig, handy, dexterous, expert; Wildegen. β. Thus slight (formerly slēight) is equivalent to sl-yth, i.e. slyness. Der. slight-of-hand. See Slold.

SLENDER, thin, narrow, slight, feeble. (F.—OLow G.) M.E. slendre, Chaucer, C. T. 589 (A 587), Richard Cœur de Lion, 3530. = OF. esclendre, 'Palgrave', p. 323. = M.Du. slender, 'slender, or thinn'; Hexham. The same word is also used as a sb., meaning 'a water-snake': whilst slindereu or sliddereneu means 'to dragge or to traine'. Allied to G. schlender, the train of a gown, an easy lounging walk; schlenderen, to saunter, loiter; also to Low G. slender, a long, easy, trailing gown, slindereu, to slide on the ice, as children do in sport. β. Prosl. unaltered derivatives from the base of the verb to slide; see Slide. But to some extent confused with Du. slenderen, to saunter along, and Swed. slinta, to slip, glance; see Slant and Slim. Der. slender-ly, ness.

SLEUTH-HOUND, Explained under Slot (2).

SLICE, a thin, broad piece. (F.—OHG.) The sb. slice seems to be older than the verb. M.E. slíce, selice, a thin piece, silver, splinter. 'They braken speres to selices'; King Alisaunder, 3833. = OF. esclier, a shiver, splinter, broken piece of wood; from the verb esclier, to slit, split, break (Godefroy). = OHG. slīzjan, slīzen, related to slīzan, to slit; cognate with E. slit, q.v. Der. slīze, verb; slīced into pieces, Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxii. l. 298; slīce-er.

SLICK, the same as Sleek, q.v.

SLIDE, to glide, slip along, fall. (E.) M.E. sliden, sliden, Chaucer, C. T. 7958 (F 82); pt. t. slode, Wyclif, l.ament. iii. 53, later text; pp. sliden, spelt sliden, ibid., earlier text. AS. slīdan, pt. t. slīd, pp. slīden; only found in compounds. The pt. t. ai-slād is in Alfric's Homilies, ii. 512, l. 10; the pp. ā-sliden in the same, i. 492, l. 11. From the Teut. base SLĪD, to slide (Fick, iii. 359); whence also AS. slīde, a slip, slīdor, slippery, Icel. slīðrar, icm. pl., a scabbard (into which a sword slides); G. schlitten, a sledge, schlittschuh, a skate (lit. slide-shoe); M.Du. slinder, a water-snake, slindereu, sliddereneu, 'to dragge or to traine', Hexham; &c. See Slender. β. Further related to Irish and Gael. slad, to trail, Lithuan. slīdas, slippery. Der. slīde, sb., slīd-er; also slēd, slēde, or slēigh (under Slēd); also slender, q.v.

SLEIGHT, trifling, small, weak, slender. (OLow G.) M.E. slēght, slēght. 'So smolpe, so smal, so seme slēght', said of a fair young girl; Allit. Poems, A. 190. The orig. sense is even, flat, as a thing made smooth. = M.Du. slīcht, 'even, or plaine'; slēcht, 'slight, simple, single, vile, or of little account'; slēcht ende recht, 'simple and right, without deceit or guile'. Hexham. Thus the successive senses are flat or even, smooth, simple, guileless, vile; by a depreciation similar to that which changed the sense of silly from that of 'guileless' to that of 'half-witted'. The verb to slight was actually once used in the sense of 'to make smooth'; thus Hexham explains M.Du. slīchten by 'to alight, to make even or plaine'. †OLow G.* slīgt, even, smooth, simple, silly, poor, bad; Icel. slēttir, flat, smooth, slight, trivial, common; Dan. slēt, flat, level, bad; Swed. slät, smooth, level, plain, wretched, worthless, slight; Goth. slāhts, smooth; Luke, iii. 5; G. schlecht, bad; OHG. slēht, smooth; G. schlicht, smooth, sleek, plain, homely. β. All from Teut. type slēht-raz*, smooth. Of doubtful origin. Der. slight-ly, slight-ness; slight, verb, to consider as worthless.

SLIM, weak, slender, thin, slight. (Du.) Not in early use. Noticed in Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671, as being in common use in Lincolnshire. Halliwell has: 'Slin, distorted or worthless, sly, cunning, crafty, slender, thin, slight'; also slam, tall and lean, the slope of a hill. The orig. sense was 'lax' or 'bending'; hence 'oblique', or 'transverse'; then sly, crafty, slight, slender (in the metaphorical sense of unsubstantial); and hence slender or slight in the common sense of those words. Thus Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy, says: 'that was a slim [slight, weak] excuse'; Todd. Perhaps the earliest instance in which it approaches the modern sense is: 'A thin slim-guttled fox made a hard slitt to wriggle his body into a henroost.' L'Estrange (in Todd). Perhaps the use of the word has been influenced by confusion with the (unrelated) word slender, which sounds somewhat like it. 'Slim, naughty, crafty, Lincolnsh.; also, slender.' Bailey, vol. 1. ed. 1735. — MIu. slin, 'awry, or byas-wise; craftie,' Hexham; [Dan. and Swed. slen, bad, vile, worthless; from German]; G. schlimm, bad, evil, sad, unwell, arch, cunning. Der. slim-ness.

SLIME, any glutinous substance, viscous mire, mucus. (E.) ME. slime, slyme, or slim (with long i); Gower, C. A. iii. 96; bk. vii. 338; spelt slim, Ancrén Riwle, p. 276, l. 18. AS. slim; as a various reading in Ps. lxxvii. 2 (Spelman). — DU. slimp, plegm, slime; Icel. slin; Swed. slen; Dan. slim, mucus; G. schleim. Cf. L. lima, a file; Latin, to file smooth; and limus, mud. Brugmann, l. § 877. Allied to LIME (1) and LOAM. Der. slim-y, slim-i-ness.

SLING, to sling, cast with a jerk, let swing. (Scand.) ME. slingen; pt. slang, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 132, l. 2; pt. slougen; Sir Percival, 672, in the Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell. — Icel. slingva, slingva, pt. sling, slangva, pt. slunginn, to sling, fling, throw; MIu. slinge, to sling, cast, twist; Swed. dial. slinga (pt. slang), to sling. Cf. Dan. slinge, weak verb; Swed. slunga, weak verb; G. schlingen, pt. schlang, pt. geschlingen, to wind, twist, entwine, sling. Teut. type slenguan*; pt. slang*. Allied, formally, to Lith. slinkti, to creep. Brugmann, l. § 424 (4). — AS. slingan (rare), to creep, seems to be a variant of slincan (below). Der. sling, sb., King Alisaunder, 1191; slinger. Also slang, q.v.

SLINK, to sneak, crawl away. (E.) — That some of few shall be right feyn to slinky away and hyde; Tale of Iseyn, 3334. AS. slincan, Gen. vi. 7. A nasalised form of an AS. slincan*, to creep, not found, but cognate with the strong Low G. verb sliken (pt. sliek, pt. slenen) and the G. schlichen (pt. schlich, pt. geschlichen), to sink, crawl, creep, move slowly; see BLEEK. Cf. Swed. dial. slinka (pt. slank), to hang loose, to slip. — BE. The AS. slincan was a strong verb; we still use slunk as the past tense; see Titus Andronicus, iv. 1. 63. Allied to Skt. līṅg, to limp, L. languere, to be languid. Perhaps allied to SLING.

SLIP, to creep or glide along, to slink, move out of place, escape; also, to cause to slide, omit, let loose. (E.) We have confused the strong (intransitive) and weak (transitive) forms; or rather, we have preserved only the weak verb, with pt. slipped, pt. slipped or slipt. The strong verb would have become slipe*, pt. slope*, *pt. slippen, long disused; but Gower has him dipeth (used reflexively), rining with dipeth, C. A. ii. 347; bk. v. 6530. Gower also has he dipte (wrongly used intransitively), from the weak verb slippen; C. A. ii. 72; bk. iv. 2109; the pt. slipped (correctly used) is in Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 244. ME. slippen, intransitive weak verb, derived from an AS. strong verb slipan* (not found; pt. slap*, *pt. slipen), to slip, glide. The AS. slip, slippen, slippery, is from the weak grade of the pp.; it occurs in Alfric's Homilies, ii. 92, l. 16. [It must further be remarked that there is another form of the verb, with a different root-vowel, occurring as AS. slapan* (pt. slap, pt. slopan); Grein, ii. 457; pt. DU. sloppen (weak), to slip, escape; Dan. slippe (pt. slap), to let go, also to escape; Swed. slippa (weak), to get rid of, also to escape; OHG. slifan, MHG. sliften, to glide away; a weak verb, from OHG. slifan, G. schleifen, to slide, glance, also to grind, whet, polish (i.e. make slippery or smooth). In the last sense, to polish, we find also DU. slippen, Swed. slipa, Dan. slibe, Icel. slifa; the forms require careful arrangement. — BE. All these are from a Teut. base slip-, to slip, glide. But the usual form of the base is slēp-; whence Goth. slupan (pt. slaup, pt. slupans), to slip or creep into, 2 Tim. iii. 6; AS. slupan, as above; DU. slupen, to sneak; G. schlüpfen, to slip, glide. The base slēp-* corresponds to an līg- base SLIUB, whence L. lab-riens, slippery; see LUBRICATE. Cf. Brugmann, l. § 553, 563. Der. slip, sb.; slip-knot, slip-shod; also slipper, a loose shoe easily slipped on, K. John, iv. 2. 197, called in AS. slippe-sca, a slip-shoe; Voc. 277, 29. Also slipper-y, adj., formed by adding -y (= AS. -ig) to ME. sliper (AS. sliper), slippery, which occurs, spelt slipper, as late as in Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 246, and Spenser, Shep. Kal., Nov. 153; slipper-i-ness. Also slop, q.v., sleeve, q.v., slops, q.v.

SLIT, to split, tear, rend, cut into strips. (E.) Just as we make slip do duty for two forms slip and slipe (see SLIP), so we use slit in place of both slit and slite. ME. sliten, weak verb, Chaucer, C. T.

14402 (B 5674); from sliten, strong verb, whence the pp. slitun (with short i). Prompt. Parv. The latter is derived from AS. slitan, pt. slāt, pt. sliten (short i); Grein, ii. 456. — Icel. slita, pt. t. slait, pt. slitinn, to slit, rend; Dan. slide; Swed. slita, to tear, pull, wear; DU. sliten, to wear out, consume; OHG. slizan, G. schleissen, to slit, split; whence the weak verb schleizen, to slit, slash, cleave. — BE. All from Teut. type slentan-, pt. slait; pt. slitanoz. Der. slit, sb., AS. slite, Matt. ix. 16. Also slite, q.v.

SLIVER, a splinter, twig, small branch broken off, slice. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 174. ME. sliver, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1013. Sliver is the dimin. of slive, just as skiver is of shive, and splinter of splint. Prov. E. slive, a slice, chip, from the verb slive, to cut or slice off; Halliwell. 'I slive 2. . . flour from his branches,' Palsgrave. The verb slive is ME. sliten, to cleave, spelt sluyen in Prompt. Parv. — AS. slifan (pt. slif, pt. slifem), to cleave; as in in-slif, Voc. 406, 29. This verb appears to be exactly parallel to AS. slitan (pt. slāt, pt. sliten); see SLIT.

SLOBBER, to sllobber, drivel, do carelessly. (E.) ME. sloberen (Statmann). A variant of SLUBBER, q.v.

SLOE, a small sour wild plum. (E.) ME. slo, pt. slon (with long o), King Alisaunder, 4983. AS. slā, pt. slān. 'Moros, slān;' Voc. 269, 7. Also slāk, sing.; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 32. — DU. sler, formerly sleru; Dan. slanen; Swed. slån; G. schlehe; OHG. slēha. Teut. type slōhika*. Fick compares it with Lithuan. slōvas, a plum; Rns. sliva, a plum; the suffixes do not correspond. — BE. Sloe is 'the small astringent wild plum, so named from what we call setting the teeth on edge, which in other languages is conceived as blunting them; see Adelung;' Wedgwood. Cf. MIu. slēnu, 'sharp or tart'; slēe or slēnu, 'tender, slender, thinn or blunt'; de slēnuighēdyt der tanden, 'the edginess or sourness of the teeth'; Hexham. The DU. slēnu is the same word as E. sloe; as if the sloe is the slow (i.e. tart) fruit. But the forms do not correspond (except in Dutch); and it can hardly be right. — Y. The Russ. sliva seems to be related to L. tinidus, blue; with reference to the colour; and sloe may be connected with livid likewise.

SLOGAN, a Highland war-cry. (Gaelic.) Englished from Gael. slough-ghairn, 'the signal for battle among the Highland clans.' — Gael. slough, a host, army (W. llu, OIrish slung); and ghairn, a call, outcry, from ghairn, to call, cry out, crow as a cock. Cf. Irish gairn, W. gairn, outcry; OIrish gair, W. gair, clamour, allied to L. garrire, to prate. See Stokes-Fick, p. 106, 320. The sense is 'cry of the host.'

SLOID, SLOYD, mechanical skill, esp. in wood-carving. (Swed.) Modern. — Swed. slöjd, sleight, skill; cognate with F. slight, q.v.

SLOOP, a one-masted ship. (Du. — Low G.) 'Sloop, a small sea-vessel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Mentioned in Dampier, Voyages, an. 1680 (R.); and in Hexham. — DU. sloep; MDu. sloepe, sloepken, 'a sloop, or a boat,' Hexham, ed. 1658. From Low G. slump, slupe, a sloop; whence also F. chaloupe, whence E. shallop; see SHALLOP. The Low G. sb. is usually derived (as in the Bremen Wort.) from Low G. slupen, to glide along, orig. to slip; see SLIP. Shallop seems to be older than sloop, as far as English usage is concerned. Doublet, shallop.

SLOP (1), a puddle, water or liquid carelessly spilt. (E.) ME. sloppe, a pool, Monte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3923. AS. sloppa*, slyppe*, the sloppy droppings of a cow; occurring in cu-sloppe, a cow-slop (now cow-slip), and oxun-slyppe, an ox-slop (now oxlip); Voc. 135, 26. We also find AS. slope, a viscid substance, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 18, l. 27, spelt slupe in the next line. — BE. From Teut. slup*, AS. slup, weaker grade of slupan, to slip; see SLIP. 'Pā weaþ hēorn heorta tū-slopan = then was their heart dissolved, made faint; Joshua, v. 1. Similarly, slop (2) is from a closely related verb. Perhaps slop, a pool, merely meant 'a slippery place,' a place slippery with wet and mire. Der. slop, verb, to spill water, esp. dirty water; slopp-y, slopp-i-ness. Also cow-slip, q.v., ox-(s)lip, q.v.

SLOP (2), a loose garment. (Scand.) Usually in the pl. slops, large loose trousers, 2 Hen. IV. i. 24. ME. sloffe, Chaucer, C. T. 1610r (G 633). We find 'in stolis vel on ofer-sloppum' = in stoles or over-slops, as a gloss to in stolis in the Northumbrian version of Luke, xx. 46. The word is Scand. rather than E., the AS. word being ofer-slopp (dative case), Alfric's Homilies, i. 456, l. 19. — Icel. sloppa, a slop, gown, loose trailing garment; whence afirsloppa, an outer gown or over-slop. — Icel. slup, weak grade of slappa, to slip, a strong verb; so called from its looseness or its trailing on the ground. Cf. DU. slēpen, to trail on the ground. Related to the AS. type slipan* (?); see SLIP. Cf. Streithorn, § 203.

SLOPE, an incline. (E.) 'Slope, or oblique;' Minshew. ME. slope. 'For many times I have it seen That many have begyled been For trust that they have set in hope Which fell them afterward a-slope; 'Rom. of the Rose, 4464. Here a-slope, lit. on the slope, means 'contrary to expectation, or 'in a disappointing way.' It is the same idiom as when we talk of 'giving one the slip.' It is a derivative of the verb to slip; formed from the Teut. slup-* (in AS. slapan, pp.), weaker grade of the verb appearing as AS. slāpan; see Slip. Thus a-slope is 'ready to slip; and slope means an 'inclination.' Der. slope, verb, Macb. iv. 1. 87; a-slope.

SLOT (1), a broad, flat wooden bar which holds together larger pieces, bolt of a door. (Du.) 'Still in use in the North, and applied to a bolt of almost any kind.' Halliwell. 'Slots of a door, loquet'; 'Palsgrave. Spelt slot, sloot; Prompt. Parv. — Du. slot, a lock (Sewel); de sloten van kisten, 'the locks of chests; 'de sloten van huysen', 'the closures of houses; 'Hexham. The Du. slot also means a castle. From Teut. slut-* (Du. slut-), weak stem of Teut. slutan-* (Du. sluten), to shut (pt. t. slot, pp. gesloten). So also OFries. slot, from slāta, to shut; Low G. slot, from slāten. β. The Teut. type slutan-*, to shut, appears in Du. sluten; OFries. sluta; Low G. sluten; Swed. sluta (pt. t. slūt, pp. slutit); G. schliessen, MHG. sliesen, OHG. sliazan. γ. Cognate with L. claudere, to shut; from skleud-*; Brugmann, i. § 795 (2). See Close (1). ¶ Slot, with the sense of groove or rill, appears to be from Du. slot, Low G. sloot, a ditch, trench, furrow; perhaps so called from its use as enclosing a field or piece of land; from sloot, 2nd grade of the same verb. Or perhaps the sense was affected by ME. slēten (pt. t. slōt), to slit.

SLOT (2), the track of a deer. (AF.—Scand.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—AF. eslot, the track of a deer (Godefroy). Modified from ML. South, slōth; also spelt slēth, as in the derivative Lowland Sc. slēth-hound (Jamieson). ME. slēth, a track, Barbour's Bruce, vii. 21; whence slēth-hound, slēth-hund, slōth-hound, a hound for tracking deer, id. vi. 26, 484, 669. Also slōth, Cursor Mundi, 1254; Ormulum, 1194.—Icel. slōð, a track or trail in snow or the like; cf. slōða, to trail, slōðr, a gown that trails on the ground. Swed. dial. slō, a track; prov. E. slōd, a cart-rut.

SLOTH (1), laziness, sluggishness. (E.) Lit. 'slowness.' ME. slouth, Chaucer, C. T. 15726 (G 258). For slow-uth*; formed directly from the adj. slow. In P. Plowman, B. v. 392, we find the form slēthe, from AS. slōw, sloth; from AS. slōw, slow (with mutation). Der. slōth, sb., an animal (below); slōth-ful, i Hen. VI. iii. 2. 7; slōth-ful-ly; slōth-ful-ness.

SLOTH (2), a name sometimes given to the glutton (Gulo luscus); but usually to a S. American tardigrade edentate mammal that moves with difficulty on the ground. (E.) The same word as slōth (1) above. Prob. suggested by Span. perrezoso, (1) slothful, (2) a sloth (Neuman, s. v. Slōth). Phillips (1706) has: 'Pigritia, slothfulness: also an American beast call'd a Slōth.'

SLOUCH, to have a clownish look or gait. (Scand.) Now a verb; but formerly also a sb. 'Slouch, a great, unwieldy, ill-fashioned man'; Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Slouch, a great lubberly fellow, a meer country-bumpkin'; Phillips. The ch is for k; Levins has: 'Slouke, iners, ignarus.' Cf. also Lowl. Sc. slouch, slouch, a lazy fellow.—Icel. slōkr, a slouching fellow; Norw. slōk, a lazy fellow; cf. sloka, to be sluggish (Aasen); also slōkje, the same as slōk (Ross); Swed. sloka, to hang down, droop, flag, slōkje, hanging, slouching.—Icel. slōk*, 2nd grade of slak*, as in slakr, slack. See Slack. ¶ Perhaps influenced by OF. sloucher, slouchier, to loosen, also, to become loose (Godefroy); from L. ex, and G. locher, loose.

SLOUGH (1), a hollow place filled with mud, a mire. (E.) ME. slough, Chaucer, C. T. 7147, 14804 (D 1565, B 3988). AS. slōh (stem slāg); Kemble's A. S. Charters, 59, 123, 354, 554 (Leo). The formation of slough is precisely parallel to that of clough, which is related to the OHG. klung, with the same sense. In like manner, the AS. slōh is due to an older form slouh*, corresponding to a Teut. base slonx-, for slānx-, from the strong verb which appears in the G. schling-en, to devour; so that the original sense was 'that which swallows up.' β. Similarly, G. schlund, a chasm, gulf, is derived from MHG. slinden, to devour, with a like sense; and Schmöller gives Javay. schlung, with the same sense as G. schlund, i.e. a chasm; so also Bavar. schlunk = G. schlund; cf. Westphal. slenke, a ravine. The long o in slōh shows the loss of u. See Clough. And see schlingen in Kluge; where it appears to be doubtful if the sense 'to devour' is of early date.

SLOUGH (2), the cast-off skin of a snake; the dead part which separates from a sore. (Scand.) Pronounced sluf. Spelt slough, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 483; ed. Arber, p. 58. ME. slouh, slow, Pricke of Conscience, 520 (footnote), where it is used in the sense of caul or integument. 'Slughe, squama; slughes of ednyrs (snakes), exemie'; Cathol. Anglicum, p. 345; see the note. Spelt slughe, slouh, slouye, in the sense of skin of a snake; Cursor Mundi, 745. From its occurrence in these Northern poems we may presume that the word is Scandinavian. It answers in form to MDan. slug, a gap, opening, mouth, swallow; Dan. dial. slug, slough on an animal's horn. The Swed. dial. sluw, slough, is a different word.

β. [With the latter form sluw we may compare Low G. slu, sluwe, a husk, covering, the pod of a bean or pea, husk of a nut; answering to the Cleveland word slough, the skin of a gooseberry (Atkinson); MDu. slouwe, 'a vaille or a skinne'; Hexham; cf. slouwen, 'to cover ones head'; id.; G. schlaube (provincial), 'a shell, husk, slough.' The etymology of the latter set of forms is from the Teut. base slēub*, noticed under Sleeve, q. v. The sense is 'that out of which a snake slips, or a loose covering.' γ. But the E. slough and Jutland slug are allied to Dan. slug, gullet, sluge, to swallow; Norw. sluka, Low G. sluken, G. schlucken, to swallow, and, further, to G. schlauch, a skin, bag; MHG. slūch, a skin, bag. Cf. Old Irish slucc-im, I swallow.

SLOVEN, a careless, lazy fellow. (Du.) Spelt slouen, stouyn, in Palsgrave. 'Some sluggish slouyns, that sleepe day and nyght'; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 191. ME. sloueyn, Coventry Myst. p. 218. The suffix -eyn = F. -ain, from L. -ānus, as in ME. scriv-ein = OF. escriv-ain, from Late L. scrib-ānus; see Sorivener. This OF. suffix may have been added at first to give the word an adjectival force, which would soon be lost.—MDu. slōf, slōf, 'a careless man, a sloven, or a nasty fellow'; Hexham; whence slōfachtig, 'negligent, or slovenly'; id. We also find the verb slouen, 'to play the sloven'; id. Sewel gives Du. slōf, careless; slōf, sb., an old slipper, slōf, sb., neglect, slōffen, to dangle with slovenly. +Low G. sluf, slovenly; sluffen, sluffern, to be careless; sluffen, to go about in slippers, sluffen, slippers. Der. sloven-ly, sloven-li-ness.

SLOW, tardy, late, not ready. (E.) ME. slow, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 26; slaw, Prompt. Parv. (where it has the sense of blunt, or dull of edge). AS. slāw, Matt. xxv. 26.—Du. slēuw; Icel. slār, slār; OSax. slāw; OHG. slāw, blunt, dull, lukewarm. Teut. type slāwiz*, blunt, weak, slow; Fick, iii. 358. Some think it allied to L. lenuis, Russ. lennii, (Gk. λαός, left (of the hand); which is doubtful. Der. slow-ly, slow-ness. Also slō-th (for slow-ik), q. v.

SLOW-WORM, a kind of snake. (E.) The allied words show that it cannot mean 'slow worm,' but the sense is rather 'slayer' or 'striker,' from its (supposed) deadly sting. Indeed, the Swedish word is equivalent to an E. form worm-slow, i.e. 'worm-striker' or stinging serpent, showing clearly that the word is compounded of two substantives. It was (and still is) supposed to be very poisonous. I remember an old rhyme: 'If the adder could hear, and the blind-worm see, Neither man nor beast would ever go free.' But it is quite harmless. Lowl. Sc. slayworm. ME. slowerme, Voc. 571. 33; slowurme, id. 566. 15. AS. slā-wyrme. We find: 'Stellio, slā-wyrme'; Voc. 122. 15; 321. 26. Here slā is (I suppose) contracted from slah, from slahan*, usually slān, to smite; the sb. slag-a, a striker, occurs in Exod. xxii. 2; see Blay. +Swed. slā, usually ormslā, a blindworm (where orm = E. worm); from slā, to strike (Rietz, p. 618, where the dialectal form slō is given); Norweg. slō, a blindworm; also called ormslō (Aasen); from slān, to strike. Cf. Icel. slāgr, kicking, vicious (as a horse); from slā, to strike. (Doubtful.) ¶ Quite distinct from Swed. slā, blunt, dull, the cognate form with slow.

SLOYD, the same as Slold, q. v.

SLUBBER, to do carelessly, to sully. (Scand.) 'I slubber, I fyle [defile] a thyng'; Palsgrave. And see Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 8. 39; Oth. i. 3. 227.—Dan. slubbe, to slubber; Swed. dial. slubba, to be disorderly, to slubber, slobber with the lips, a frequentative verb with suffix -ra (for -era) from sluba, to mix up liquids in a slovenly way, to be careless (Rietz). +Du. slubberen, 'to slap, to sup up'; Sewel; Low G. slubbern, to lap, sip. From the weak grade (slub-) of slab- in slabber; see Slabber.

SLUDGE, soft, greasy mud. (E.) ME. sluche; Destr. of Troy. 1. 12529; apparently a corrupt form of sluche, with the same sense, spelt slithe, id., l. 13547; prov. E. slutch, also slēch, slēch, slēch. North E. slit, Barbour, Bruce, xiii. 352. An E. word; cognate with North Fries. slēch, Eries. slit, slime, +Du. slitj, prov. G. schlick, grease, Westphal. slēch. See Slēek. ¶ The w may be due to prov. E. slud, mud, mire, Icel. sludda, a cloud of mucus.

SLUG, to be inactive. (Scand.) 'To slug in slouth'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 23. ME. sluggen, Prompt. Parv.; where we also find slugge, adj., slothful; sluggy, adj., the same; sluggy-ness, slugne, sloth. Sluggi, adj., Ancren Riwle, p. 258. 'I slugge, I waxe slowe, or draw behind'; Palsgrave. The verb is now obsolete.—Dan. slug, voiced form of sluk, appearing in slugtør, sluktør, with drooping ears; Swed. dial. slugga, to be sluggish; allied to Norweg. slōka, to go heavily, to slouch, Swed. slōka, to hang down, droop. Cf. Icel. slāk, a slouching fellow; and see Slough. Note also Low G. slukern, slakern, to totter, sluk, melancholy, downcast; from the weak grade of slak, slack. See Slack. Der. slugg-ish, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 10; slugg-ish-ly, slugg-ish-ness. Also slugg-ard, Rich. III, v. 3. 225, with the F. suffix -ard (=OHG. -hart, cognate with E. hard); sluggard-y, ME. slorgardie, Chaucer, C. T. 1044 (A 1042). Also slug, sb.

SLUG-HORN. (C.) An absurd perversion, by Chatterton (Battle of Hastings, pt. ii. st. 10) and Browning (Childe Roland of the Owl. Sc. slorgorne, in G. Douglas, tr. of Rineid, bk. vii. c. xl. l. 87). And slorgorne is a bad spelling of slogane, a battle-cry; see SLUGAN. Hence a 'slug-horn' is not a horn, but a cry; L. 'tessera'.

SLUICE. a sliding gate in a frame for shutting off, or letting out, water; a floodgate. (F.-L.) In Shak. Venus, 956; Lucrece, 1076. ME. sluce, Aynbite of Inwyt, p. 255. -OF. excluse, 'a sluice, floodgate'; Cot. Cf. Span. exclusa, a sluice, floodgate. -Late L. exclusa, a floodgate; lit. 'shut off (water)'; Hist. Mon. de Abingdon, ii. 92. -L. exclusa, fem. of exclusus, pp. of excludere, to shut out; see EXCLUDE.

SLUMBER. to sleep lightly, repose. (E.) The b (after m) is excrement. ME. slumeren, Bestiary, 576; slumberen, slombren, P. Plowman, A. prol. 10, B. prol. 10. Frequentative form of ME. slumen, to slumber, Layamon, 17995, 18408, 32058. And this verb is from the sb. slume, slumber, spelt sloume in Allit. Poems, C. 186. AS. slāma, sb., slumber; Grein, ii. 457. This is formed, with the substantival suffix -ma, from a Teut. base slen-*, to be silent; cf. Goth. slawan, to be silent, from the 2nd grade slan-*. +Du. sluimeren; Dan. slumre, frequentative of slumme, to slumber; Swed. slumra, verb; slummer, sb.; G. schlummern, verb; schlummer, sb. Der. slumber, sb., slumber-er, slumber-ous.

SLUMP. a sudden fall, failure in stocks. (E.) From prov. E. slump, to fall suddenly, esp. into a ditch. Cf. Swed. and Dan. slump, a chance, an accident, Low G. slump. Of imitative origin; cf. Norw. slump, the noise made by plunging into water. See SLIP.

SLUMS, dirty back-streets. (L.) Prob. allied to prov. E. slump, a muddy place, and (by gradation) to prov. E. slamp, wet, Low G. slam, mire (Lübben); Dan. and Swed. slam, from G. schlamm, mire. Cf. Bavarian schlumpen, to be dirty; prov. E. slammock, a slattern; Low G. slummerke, a slattern (Schambach).

SLUR. to soil, contaminate, reprove, pass over lightly with slight notice. (MDu.) 'With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes'; Dryden (in Todd). 'They impudently slur the gospel'; Cudworth, Sermons, p. 73 (Todd). 'Without some fingering trick or slur'; Butler, Misc. Thoughts; Works, ed. Bell, iii. 176. Cf. ME. slor, store, mud, clay, Prompt. Parv.; whence sloroyd, muddy, il. Prov. E. slur, thin washy mud; Halliwell, Forly. The orig. sense is 'to trail', or drizzle; hence, to pass over in a sliding or slight way, also, to trail in dirt, to contaminate. -MDu. sluren, slouren, to drag, trail, Du. sluren, to trail; cf. MDu. slorigh, 'filthy', Hexham. Also Low G. sluren, slören, to drizzle, Swed. dial. slora, to be negligent; Norw. slöra, to be negligent, to sully; EFries. sluren, slären, to go about carelessly and noisily. From a base slen-*; perhaps the same as that in SLUMBER (Frank). Der. slur, sb.

SLUSH. mire, mud. (Scand.) Perhaps from MDan. slus, (1) sleet; (2) mud (Kalkar); Dan. dial. slus, sleet. Or rather from Norw. slusk, mud, dirty roads or weather (Ross); related by gradation to Swed. slask, sloppiness, wet weather, slaska, to splash, to dabble in water; cf. prov. E. slush, slush; slask, to splash.

SLUT. a slovenly woman, slattern. (Scand.) ME. slutte, Coventry Plays, 218 (Stratmann). and in Palsgrave. Slutte, Cenosa; Prompt. Parv. Slutte occurs also in Hoccleve, Letter of Cupide, st. 34; l. 237. Hence slutish, Chaucer, C. T. 16104 (G 636). -Swed. dial. slata, an idle woman, slut, slutter, an idler; Norw. slutt, an idler. Cf. Icel. slota, to droop, Swed. dial. slota, to be lazy, Norw. sluta, to droop; allied to Dan. slat, loose, flabby, slatta, a slattern (Ferrall). β. The root-verb appears in Norw. slatta (pt. t. slatt, pp. slotted), to dangle, hang loose like clothes, to drift, to idle about, to be lazy (Aasen); and tt represents nt. Cf. Swed. dial. sluta (pt. t. slutt, pp. sluttit), to slide, glide, slip aside, with its derivatives slanta, to be idle, and slunt, 'a lubber, lazy sturdy fellow', Wiedgren. γ. Thus E. slattern and Dan. slatte may be referred to slatt, slent, and grade of slata, slenta (whence also Icel. slautr, sluth); while E. slut, Norw. slutt, may be referred to slott, slott, weak grade of the same; cf. Low G. sluntje, a slut. All from the Teut. str. slentan-, to slip aside, pt. t. slant, pp. slentanoz*. See SLANT. Der. slut-shy, ly-ness.

SLY. cunning, wily. (Scand.) ME. sligh, Chaucer, C. T. 3201; slay, Havelok, 1084; slah, Ormulut, 13498. -Icel. slagr (for slagr), sly, cunning; Swed. slög, cunning, dexterous. The Icel. slagr is from a Teut. type slög-joz* (Noreen, § 360), where slög-* may represent the 2nd grade of Teut. slahan-*, to strike; see SLAY. 'From the use of a hammer being taken as the type of a handicraft'; Wedgwood; and see Fick, iii. 358, who adduces G. verschlagen, cunning, crafty, subtle, slay, from the same root. ¶ But Swed. slug, cunning, Dan. slu, Du. sluu, G. schlau, sly, are unrelated. Der. slily, sliness. Also slight (i. c. slyly), q. v.

SMACK (1), taste, flavour, savour. (E.) ME. smak, a taste; Prompt. Parv. AS. smac, taste; Grein, ii. 457; whence the verb smegan, smaccan, to taste. 'Gusto, ic gesmege', Voc. 109. 11; ic smacce, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 166, l. 6. +MDu. smack, 'tast, smack, or savour'; smacken, 'to savour'; Hexham; Du. smaken, to taste; [Dan. smag, taste, smage, to taste, Swed. smak, taste, smaka, to taste, from Low G. smakh, taste;] G. geschmack, taste, schmecken, to taste. Der. smack, verb.

SMACK (2), a sounding blow. (Scand.) We find smack, sb., a loud kiss, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 180. But the word does not seem to be at all old, and its supposed connexion with SMACK (1) is disproved by the forms found. It has been confused with it, but is quite distinct. It seems to be of imitative origin, and may be an L. word, unless borrowed from Scandinavian. β. The related words are Swed. smacka, to smack [distinct from smaka, to taste]; Swed. dial. smakka, to throw down noisily, smakk, a light quick blow from the flat hand, smäkka, to hit smartly; Dan. smække, to slam, bang [distinct from smage, to taste], smak, a smack, rap [distinct from smag, taste]. Also Low G. smakken, to smack the lips [distinct from smekken, to taste]; MDu. smacken, 19u. smakken, to cast on the ground, fling, throw [distinct from Du. smaken, to taste]; Du. smak, a loud noise. And see SMASH. Apparently of imitative origin, as seen in Du. smak, Dan. smæk; allied to Lith. smug-it, to strike, smag-dit, to strike with a whip. Cf. knack, crack. Der. smack, verb; cf. smatt-er, q. v., smash, q. v.

SMACK (3), a fishing-boat. (Du.) In Sewell's Du. Dict. Doubtless borrowed from Dutch, like hoy, skipper, boom, yacht, &c. -MDu. smacke, 'a kind of a long ship or boat', Hexham; smak, 'a hoy, smack'; Sewel, ed. 1754. +Low G. smack, a smack. β. Generally supposed to be a corruption for smack, allied to snake; cf. AS. snacc, a smack, small vessel, A. S. Chron. an. 1066, in the Land MS., ed. Thorpe, p. 337; Icel. snækja, a kind of sailing-ship, so called from its snake-like movement in the water. So also Swed. snäcka, Dan. snække (or snække). ¶ For the interchange of sm- and sn-, see SMATTER.

SMALL. little, unimportant. (E.) ME. smal; pl. smale, Chaucer, C. T. 9. AS. smal, small, thin; Grein, ii. 457. +Du., Dan., and Swed. smal, narrow, thin; Goth. smals, small; G. schmal, narrow, thin, slim. Teut. type smaloz*. Further allied to Icel. smali, small cattle, sheep; Gk. μῆλον, a sheep; Rnss. malui, small. ¶ We also find Icel. smírr, Dan. smarr, Swed. små, OIIG. småhi, small. Der. small-ness; small-fox (see POX); small-age, q. v.

SMALLAGE. celery. (Hybrid (E. and F.-L.)) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Smallage, a former name of the celery, meaning the small ache or parsley, as compared with the great parsley, slut atrum. See Turner's Nomenclator, A. D. 1548, and Gerard's Herbal'; Prior, Popular Names of British Plants. ME. smalge, Voc. 711. 15; smalache, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 94. -AS. smel, small (see above); and F. ache, parsley, from L. apium, parsley.

SMALT. glass tinged of a deep blue, used as a pigment. (Ital. -OIIG.) 'Smalt, a kind of blew powder-colour, us'd in painting; blue enamel'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. -Ital. smalto, 'a mell [enamel] for goldsmiths'; Florio; allied to smalzo, butter. -Low G. smalt (Lübben), dial. form of G. schmalz, fat, butter; OHG. smalzi, smelzi, smalt. From the 2nd grade (smaltz) of OIIG. smelzan, str. vb., to become liquid; whence also OHG. smelzen, G. schmelzen, weak vb., to melt. See SMELT (1). ¶ The Du. smalt (in the present sense) is borrowed from Italian. See Weigand.

SMARAGDUS. a precious stone, emerald. (L. -Gk. -Skt. -Semitic.) Also smaragd; ME. smaragde, An O. E. Miscellany, p. 98, l. 174. -L. smaragdus. -Gk. σμάραγδος, an emerald; also found in the form μάρμαρος, which is from skt. marakata(m), marakata(m), an emerald. Hence (says Uhlenbeck) a Prakrit amrit maragadi, lit. emerald stone (from skt. amrit, a stone); whence Gk. σμάραγδος, shortened to σμάραγδος by loss of -ma (repeated). Further, the Skt. marakata(m) is from Semitic maragat*, as in Heb. baragel, an emerald, from barag, to flash. See Schade, OHG. Dict., p. 1430. See EMERALD. Doublet, emerald.

SMART. to feel a pain, to be punished. (E.) ME. smerten, Havelok, 2647; spelt smoerten, Ancrer Kiwle, p. 238, last line. Once a strong verb; the pt. t. smear occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 21, l. 27. AS. smortan (Toller). The AS. pt. t. would be smear*; and the pp. smorten*. +Du. smarten, to give pain; smart, pain; Dan. smerte, vb. and sb.; Swed. smarta, vb. and sb.; OHG. smertan, sometimes used as a strong verb (pt. t. smarz), G. schmerzen, to smart; OHG. smertza, G. schmerz, smart, pain. +L. mordere (with lost initial s), to bite, pain, sting; Skt. mrd, to rub, grind, crush. β. All from SMERD*; see Fick, i. 836. Whence also Gk.

I choke; allied to Gk. σμούειν (a aor. ἔ-σμούειν), to burn slowly in a smouldering fire. Brugmann, i. § 849. Der. smoke, vb., AS. smœc-gan, as above; smok-er, smok-y, smok-i-ness.

SMOLT, a salmon in its second year, when it has assumed its silvery scales. (E.) From AS. smolt, serene, gentle; the prov. E. smolt not only means fair, serene, but also smooth, shining, and polished. See Smelt.

SMOOTH, having an even surface. (E.) ME. smothe, Rom. of the Rose, 542; also common in the form smethe, due to vowel-change from o to æ (= e), Roh. of Glouc. p. 424, l. 871; Pricke of Conscience, 6349. AS. smœðe, Luke, iii. 5; where the Northumb. versions have smoeðe; cf. Aspera, unsmodi, Voc. 350. 29; un-smodi, Corpus Gloss., 232. The preservation of the (older) vowel æ in mod. E. is remarkable. β. The form smode, with long o, shows that (as in other, tooth, goose) an n has been lost; the form of the base is smoth-, for an older form smanth-, corresponding to an ldg. base smant-*.

(Y. This ldg. base is remarkably exemplified in the G. Schmant (Bavar. schmand), a dialectal word corresponding to late MIIG. smant, cream; allied to Bohem. smetani, cream; Miklosich, p. 180. Cf. Skt. manthaya-, butter; from manth, math, to churn. The Hamburg smöden, to smoothe (Richey) may be related. Der. smooth, verb, from the adj.; cf. AS. smæðian, Voc. 130. 36; smooth-ly; smooth-ness, AS. smœðness, Voc. 177. 5.

SMOTHER, a suffocating smoke, thick stifling dust. (E.) Smother stands for smotherer, having lost an r, which was retained even in the 14th century. ME. smotherer; spelt smorþre, smorþur, P. Plowman, c. xx. 303, 305 (some MSS. have smolder, id. B. xvii. 321). Smor-ther is that which stifles; formed with the suffix -ther (ldg. -ter) of the agent, from AS. smor-ian, to choke, stifle, Matt. xiii. 7 (Rushworth MS.), preserved in Lowland Sc. smoor, to stifle; see Burns, Brigs of Ayr, l. 33. β. Cognate with AS. smorian are Du. smoren, to suffocate, stifle, stew, and G. schmoren, to stew. Cf. MDu. smoor, 'smotherer, vapour, or fume' (Hexham); Du. smuieren, to smother. Apparently from a root smeur-*, from an older root SMEU; see Smoulder, Smoke. Der. smother, verb, ME. smotheren, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251, l. 7. And see Smoulder.

SMOLDER, to burn with a stifling smoke. (E.) 'I smolder, as wete wood doth; I smolder one, or I stoppe his bethre with smoke'; Palsgrave. ME. smolderen, Allit. Poems, B. 955; from the sb. smolder, a stifling smoke. 'Smoke and smolder', P. Plowman, B. xvii. 321; where the later text has 'smoke and smorþer' (= E. smother), id. C. xx. 303; and see Palladius on Husbandry, i. 920. [The Dan. smulde, to crumble, moulder, from smul, dust, may be ultimately related, but is not the original of the E. word, being too remote in sense.] β. The E. smolder (for smol-ther*) is closely connected with Low G. smöden, smölen, to smoulder, as in dat holt smelet weg 'the wood smoulders away' (Bremen Wörterbuch); Du. smölen, 'to smook hiddenly'; Sewel; Low G. smöln, to give out fumes (Damen). See Smell. From a root smel-*, from an older root SMEU; see Smother (above).

SMUDGE, to sully, to smear with dirt. (Scand.) ME. smogen, in Halliwell; a voiced form of smutch. Cf. Dan. smuds, smut, dirt, smudse, to soil; from G. schmutz, smut, dirt; MIIG. smuz. Also ME. smoot, dirt, Allit. Poems, B. 711; E'ries, and Low G. smuuden, to soil; Du. smoddig, dirty. See Smut.

SMUG, neat, trim, spruce. (Low G.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 49; &c. 'I could have brought a noble regiment Of *smug-skinne*d Nunnies into my country soyle'; Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A. n. 1572; Works, i. 393. Spelt smugg, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 484; ed. Arber, p. 59. A voiced form of smuk.—MDan. smug, smooth, pliable (Kalkar); and Outzen (s. v. smug) notices a South Dan. form smugg; from Low G. smuk, neat, trim; cf. MDn. smucken, 'to be smugged' Hexham. Hence also G. schmuck, trim, spruce. β. The MIIG. smucken meant not only to clothe, adorn, but also to withdraw oneself into a place of security, and is an intensive form from the older strong verb smiegen, to creep into (G. schmiegen, to wind, bend, ply, cling to). This MIIG. smiegen is cognate with AS. smiagan, to creep. γ. This links smug with smock, which has the same change from g to k, as shown under that word. A smock, orig. so named from the hole for the neck into which one crept, became a general term for dress, clothes, or attire, as in the case of G. schmuck, attire, dress, ornament, adornment, &c.; and smug is merely the corresponding adjective, meaning 'dressed', hence spruce, neat, &c. See further under Smock and Smuggle.

SMUGGLE, to import or export secretly, without paying legal duty. (Low G.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the phrase 'to smuggle goods.' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has: 'Smuglers, stealers of customs, well known upon the Thames.' Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1749, gives: 'Slycken, to smuggle; slycker, a smuggler.' [The word is not Dutch, the Du. smokkelen, to smuggle, being modern, and unnoticed by Sewel and Hexham. It is, however, plainly a sailor's word, and of Low G. origin.]—Low G. smuggeln (whence also Dan. smugle), to smuggle; a frequentative form (with usual suffix -le) from the weak grade of the old strong verb found in Norweg. smjuga (pt. t. smaug), to creep; whence also Dan. i smug, adv., secretly, privately, and smughandel, contraband trade. Closely allied to Dan. smøge, a narrow (secret) passage, Swed. smuga, a lurking-hole (Wiedgren), Icel. smuga, a hole to creep through, smugall, smugligr, penetrating. β. All from the weak grade of the strong verb found in Icel. smjuga (pt. t. smaug, pl. smugu, pp. smoginn), to creep, creep through a hole, put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through; cf. Swed. smuga, to sneak, to smuggle. Cognate with AS. smiagan, to creep (pt. t. smæg, pl. smugon, pp. smogen); MHG. smiegen, strong verb, to press into (Pick, iii. 357); all from Teut. base SMEUG, to creep. Cf. Lithuan. smukti, to glide (pr. t. smunkti, I glide), i-smukti, to creep in. See Streitberg, § 203, note 1. Der. smuggel-er; see smock, smug.

SMUT, a spot of dirt, esp. of soot. (E.) From the base smut-, ME. smut-, as in i-smotted, smutted, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 359; bi-smot-ered, besmotted, Chaucer, C. T. 76. Cf. G. schmutz, dirt. β. Hence the form smutch. 'Smutch on ones face, barboylement'; Palsgrave. 'Tlast smutched thy nose'; Winter's Tale, i. 2. 121.—Swed. smuts, smut, dirt, filth, soil; whence smutsa, verb, to dirt, to sully. Cf. Dan. smuts, filth; whence smudse, to soil, dirty, sully. The Dan. form (not old) resembles F. smulge, to smear, to soil (Halliwell), and ME. smoge, with the same sense (id.); see Smudge. γ. The Swed. smuts, Dan. smuts, were borrowed from G. schmutz (above). ¶ Perhaps allied to Du. smet, a spot, and to ME. smitten, to contaminate; from a base smet-*. Der. smul, verb; smut-y, smut-i-ly, smut-i-ness.

SNACK, a part, portion, share; see Snotch.

SNAFFLE, a bridle with a piece confining the nose, and with a slender mouth-piece. (Du.) 'A bitte or a snaffle'; Baret (1580). Short for snaffle-piece=nose-piece. 'With a snaffle and a bridle'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1266 e. And in Shak. Antony, ii. 2. 63. 'A snaffle, Camus; to snaffle, rudere'; Levin.—Du. snavel, a horse's muzzle; MDu. snabel, snivel, 'the nose or snout of a beast or a fish'; Hexham. Dinius, of MDu. snabbe, snethe, 'the bill or neb of a bird'; id. *†*G. schnebel, bill, snout; Lith. snapas, a bill. Allied to Web, q. v. And see Snape.

SNAG, an abrupt projection, as on a tree where a branch has been cut off, a short branch, knot, projecting tooth. (Scand.) 'Which with a staffe, all full of little snags'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 23; cf. iv. 7. 7. [The word knag, which has much the same sense, occurs as knag in Swedish; see Knag.] Hence the prov. E. verb snag, to trim, to cut off the twigs and small branches from a tree; the tool used (a kind of bill-hook) is called a snagger; hence also the Kentish snaggle, to stubble (Halliwell).—Norw. snag, a projecting point or end, a spike; cf. Norw. snager, a projecting tongue of land; Icel. snag-hyrndr, with spiky horns; Icel. snagi, a clothes-peg; Norw. snaga, to stick out (Koss).

SNAIL, a slimy creeping gastropod. (E.) ME. snayle, Prompt. Parv. The i (y) is due to an earlier g, precisely as in hail (1), noil. AS. snægl, snegel; Voc. 121. 31, 321. 29; snegl, Voc. 30. 18. Snægl (= snag-il*) is a diminutive, with g for c, from AS. snaca, a snake, a creeping thing; see Snake. The lit. sense is 'a small creeping thing', or little reptile. Cf. ME. snegge (prov. E. snage), a snail, Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 32; and G. schnecke, a snail, Swed. snicka, *†*Icel. snigill, a snail; Dan. snegl, a snail; Swed. snigel, a slug; Westphal. snöel, a snail; Low G. snigge, a snail; NFries. snegge. Teut. types snagiloz*, snegiloz*, masc. See Noreen, § 252.

SNAKE, a kind of serpent. (E.) The lit. sense is 'a creeping thing', which is also the sense of serpent and of reptile. ME. snake, Wyclif, Rom. iii. 13. AS. snaca, to translate L. scorpio, Luke, x. 19. The sense is 'reptile', but the related verb is only found in OHG. snakhan, pt. t. snok, which presupposes a Teut. type snak-an-, to creep, pt. snök, *†*Icel. snök; also snükr, Dan. snög, Swed. snok (from the base snök*); MDu. snake, a snake. And cf. Skt. sniga-s, a serpent. See Snake. Der. snail.

SNAP, to bite suddenly, snatch up. (Du.) In Shak. Much Ado, v. 1. 116. 'A snapper-up of unconsidered trifles'; Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 26. 'I snappe at a thing to catche it with my tethe'; Palsgrave. Not an old word.—Du. snappen, to snap, snatch; 'to snap up, or to intercept', Hexham. *†*Dan. snappe, Swed. snappa, from Low G. snappen; G. schnappen, MHG. snappen, to snap, snatch. β. All from Teut. base snap*; see Snaffle. Der. snapp-ish, i. e. ready to bite or snap; snapp-ish-ly, -ness. Also snap-dragon, a plant, so called because the lips of the corolla, when parted, snap together like a dragon's mouth; also a game in which raisins are snapped out of a flame, as if from a fiery dragon. Also snap-hance, a fire-lock (Nares), from Du. snaphaan, a fire-lock, MDu. snaphaen, 'a robber that snaps upon one in the highway, or a snap-haunce' (Hexham); from Du.

snapper, to snap, and haan, a cock, also a cock of a gun, allied to E. haan, q.v. Also snaff-le, q.v. And see snip. It may be added that there have been an old strong Teut. vb. snē-an*, pt. t. snab*, pp. snabanoz*. Rietz, indeed, gives a similar verb as still found in Swed. dialects, viz. infin. snippa, pt. t. snapp, old pp. snupit, with the sense to snap, to snatch. This at once accounts for E. snip; cf. also snub, and snuff (2), to snap or snip off the end of the work of a candle. And cf. Snip, Snatch.

SNARE, a noose, trap. (E.) Properly a noose, a trap formed with a looped string. 'Hingide himself with a snare'; Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 5. AS. snear, a cord, string; Græin, ii. 459. + Du. snaar, a string; Icel. snara, a snare, halter; Dan. snare; Swed. snara; OHG. snaraha, a noose; cited by Fick, iii. 350. Curtius, i. 392. β. From the Teut. base snark-* (the k being preserved in OHG.); and this is from the 2nd grade of the Teut. strong verb snerhan-*, appearing in OHG. snerhan, to bind tightly, to twist tightly; whence also Icel. snara, to turn quickly, twist, wring (though this is a weak verb). γ. The Teut. SNERIK answers to Ildg. SNERK, to draw together, contract, whence Gk. σνερν, cramp, numbness; see Nariculus. 8. The Ildg. SNERIK is an extension from SNER*, to twist, wind; whence Lithuan. ner-ti, to thread a needle, draw into a chain. α. And we may further note the Olrish snáthe, thread; from the SNĒ*, to wind, spin, whence L. nāre, to spin, G. schür, a string. Cf. Skt. snāva-s, a tendon, sinew. Der. snare, verb, Temp. ii. 2. 174. ME. snaren, Prompt. Parv.; snar-er, en-snar. Also (obsolete) snar-l, a noose, Trevisa, ii. 385.

SNARL, to growl as a surly dog. (E.) In Shak. K. John, iv. 3. 150. The -l is a frequentative suffix; the sense is 'to keep on snarling'. 'I snurre, as a dogge doth under a door when he sheweth his tethes'; Palgrave; spelt snar, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 12. 27. Of Olow G. origin; perhaps F., though not found in AS. Cf. MDu. snarren, 'to brawl, to scold, or to snarl'; Hexham; G. schnarren, to rattle the letter R, to snarl, speak in the throat; MHG. snar, a growling. Cf. also Icel. snörgla, to rattle in the throat; snörgl (pronounced snörgl), a rattling sound in the throat. Evidently related to Sneer; and see Snort.

SNATCH, to seize quickly, snap up. (E.) ME. snatchen, Wars of Alisaunder, 6559; spelt sneochen, Ancien Kivle, p. 324, l. 27. Snatchen is a palatalised form of snakken*, and may be considered as an F. word, though not found in AS. The k is preserved in the sb. snack, a portion, lit. a snatch or thing snatched up; Lowland Scotch snack, a snatch made by a dog at a hart, a snap of the jaws, Douglas, tr. of Virgil, iii. 754 (1. text). 'Snack, a share; as, to go snack with one'; Phillips, ed. 1706. + Du. snakken, to gasp, desire, long, aspire; 'de Visch snakt na het water, the fish gasps for water'; Hexham. β. From a Teut. base snak-, to catch at with the mouth, move the jaws, parallel to snap- (as in F. snap). These bases are imitative, with the notion of a movement of the jaws. Der. snatch, sb.; body-snatcher. Also snack, sb., as above. Also prov. E. sneek, the 'snap' or latch of a door.

SNEAK, to creep or steal away slyly, to behave meanly. (E.) In Shak. Troil. i. 2. 246. Variant of ME. sniken. 'Sniked in ant ut neddrin'—adders creep in and out; O. Eng. Homilies, l. 251; which is from AS. sneican, to creep; Græin, ii. 459. Supposed to be a strong verb (pt. t. snice*, pp. snicen*); the Icel. pp. snikinn occurs, from an obsolete verb snika*, with the sense of covetous, hankering after. We also find Icel. snika (weak verb), to hanker after, to beg for food silently, as a dog does; Dan. snige sig, to sneak, slink. Also Swed. dial. sniga, to creep, strong verb (pt. t. sneg); snika, to hanker after, strong verb (pt. t. snek). β. All from a Teut. verb snickan-* (pt. t. snik*, pp. snikanoz*), to creep. Cf. Irish and Gael. snick, to creep, crawl, sneak (from E.). The mod. E. sneak would result from an *AS. sneican, a derivative from the second grade snice*; whence also ME. snoken, to creep about; Wyclif, Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 83. Der. snake, q.v., snail, q.v.

SNEAP, to pinch, click. (Scand.) See Snub.

SNEER, to express contempt. (Scand.) 'Sneer, to laugh foolishly or scornfully'; Phillips, ed. 1706; prov. E. sneering-match, a grinning match (Forby). Rare. ME. snieren, to deride. 'pai snered me with snering swa, Not gausted over me with their tellie tha'—wey derided me so with sneering, also they gnashed upon me with their teeth; Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson (Surtees Soc.), Ps. xxxiv. 16; and see Ps. ii. 4. = Dan. snærre, to grin like a dog; Hundens snærrede ad hem, the dog showed its teeth at him (Molbech); cf. MDan. snærre, the same. Closely allied to the obsolete E. snar; for which see Snarl.

SNEEZE, to eject air rapidly and audibly through the nose. (E.) 'Looking against the sunne doth induce sneezing'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 687. ME. sneesen, Trevisa, v. 389 (Stratmann). In Chaucer, Group H, l. 62 (l. 17011, ed. Tyrwhitt), the right reading is sneezeth, not sneeth. But sneesen is doubtless either a modification of fnasen, or a parallel form to it; the initial s is perhaps due to Dan. snuse, to sniff, for which see Snout. β. We find also fnasunge, violent blowing, Wyclif, Job, xli. 9. = AS. fnosan, to sneeze; whence fnosung, stermutatio; Voc. 162. 40. Allied to AS. fnast, a puff, blast, Græin, i. 307; Icel. fnasa, to sneeze, snort. + Du. fnuizen, to sneeze; Swed. fnasa, Dan. fnyse, to snort. γ. We thus arrive at a Teut. base fnas-*, Ildg. PNĒUS, evidently a mere variant of INĒUS, to sneeze, Fick, iii. 82; for which see Neose. Cf. Gk. σνῆω, I breathe; see Pneumatic. Der. sneeze, sb. And see neese.

SNIFE, to scent, draw in air sharply through the nose. (Scand.) Not common in old books. Johnson defines snuff, sb., as 'recentment expressed by sniffing'. ME. snevien or snaueu (with u=v), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 37, l. 25; ii. 207, l. 16; this would give a later *E. sneue, whence was formed snevie, to snivel, given in Minshew. = Icel. sneffa*, a lust verb; whence the pp. snaffr, sharp-scented, (Acts, xvii. 21); sneffill, a slight scent; Dan. snive, to sniff, snuff. Note MDan. sniffe (Kalkar), Dan. sniffe, to sniff (whence E. snift, above), from MDan. snift, air, breath. And cf. Icel. snippa, to sniff with the nose, snapa, to sniff. Der. sniff, sb.; sniv-el, q.v.

SNIP, to cut off, esp. with shears or scissors. (Du.) Shak. has snip, sb., L. L. L. iii. 22; also snip, pp., All's Well, iv. 5. 2. He connects it with snap, L. L. L. v. 1. 63. = Du. snippen, to nip, clip. Allied to Du. snappen, 'to snap up, or to intercept'; Hexham; see Snip. + EFries. snippen; Low G. snippeln, to cut small; G. schnippen, to snap; schnappen, to snap, to catch. Cf. also EFries. snip, sharp; snip, snippe, a small piece of land; Hamburg schnippen, to cut into small bits (Kichey). ¶ It has probably been influenced in use by the similar word snip. Der. snip, sb.; snipp-et, a small piece, dimin. of snip, sb., Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 824. Also snip-snap, Pope, Dunciad, ii. 240.

SNIFE, a bird with a long bill, frequenting marshy places. (Scand.) ME. snype. 'Snype, or snyte, byrde, lbex'; Prompt. Parv. 'Hic thio, or hic lbex, a snype'; Voc. 701. 39. 'Snype, or snyte'; Baret (1580). [Snipe and snyte are parallel names for the same bird; it is possible that the vowel of snipe has been affected by that of snyte, which is the older word, found as AS. snite, Voc. 3. 28.] = Icel. snipa, a snipe, found in the comp. myri-snipa, a moor-snipe. Cf. Dan. snippe, a snipe, Swed. snäppa, a sandpiper; from Du. snip, snep, MDu. snippe, sneppe, snipe (Hexham); G. schnepfe, snipe. β. The word means 'a snipper' or 'a snapper'; the standard form appears in MDu. sneppe, formed by the addition of a suffix -pe (for -ya) and vowel-change, from the Teut. base SNAL, to snap up; see Snip. (Cf. MDu. snabbe, snebbe, 'the bill of a bird'; Hexham; a word with the same sense of 'snapper'. See Snaffle.)

SNITE (1), to wipe the nose. (E.) See Snout.

SNITE (2), a snipe. (E.) See under Snipe.

SNIVEL, to sniff continually, to have a running at the nose, to whimper. (Scand.) Formerly snevel; spelt snevelly, Skelton, Colin Clout, 1223. ME. sneulen (with u=v), P. Plowman, R. v. 135, footnote; other MSS. have nyuelunge, neuelunge. Also snivelen (Stratmann); answering to an *AS. form sniflan; whence the derived sb. snifflung, in Napier's additions. = AS. snoff, inucus; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 24. Cf. Low G. sniven, to sniff; Swed. sniffa, Dan. snivle, to snuffle, which is a parallel form; see Snuffle. And cf. Snuff. Der. snivell-er, snivel, sb.

SNOB, a vulgar person. (Scand.) 'That old snob'; Howard, The Committee (1665); A. iv. sc. 1 (Song). Prov. E. snob, a vulgar ignorant person; orig. a journeyman-shoemaker (Suffolk); see E. D. D. 'Snob, a lad or servant, now mostly used ludicrously'; Thoresby's letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17); 'Snape, a pert youth, North', Halliwell. Lowland Sc. snab, a shoemaker's or cobbler's boy (Janieson). Of Scand. origin. = Dan. dial. snoff, snuff, bashful, silly; MDan. snab, foolish (Kalkar); Icel. snäpr, a dolt, idiot, with the notion of impostor or charlatan, a boaster, used as a by-word; Swed. dial. snipp, a boy, anything stumpy. The same Icel. word means the pointed end of a pencil; but senses may be explained from Swed. dial. snäppa, to cut off, make stumpy, hence to snub. Cf. Swed. snopen, out of countenance, ashamed. See Snub, Snubnosed.

SNOOD, a fillet, ribbon. (E.) 'Her satin snood'; Sir W. Scott, Lady of the Lake, c. l. st. 19; and see note 25 (31). ME. snūd (12th century); Voc. 549. 39. AS. snūd, 'Vitta, snūd'; Voc. 107. 35. The orig. sense is 'a twist'; cf. Olrish snáthe, thread; from the Ildg. root snē*, snā*, to spin, to twist; whence also G. schür, a string. Cf. Skt. snāva-s, a tendon, a muscle; Gk. σνῆω, I spin, σνῆω, thread, L. nāre, to spin. Note W. noden, a thread; ymoden, a fillet. See Snare.

SNOOZE, to doze, to nap. (Scand.) Rietz gives Swed. dial. snusa, (1) to take snuff; (2) to draw breath loudly in sleep, like a child. Cf. Dan. snuse, to snuff, to sniff, to poke one's nose into a thing; just as the prov. E. snuzzle not only means 'to doze', but also 'to sniff and poke with the nose,' like a dog. Cf. also Low G. snuss, with the same sense as snute, a snout; snusseln, to poke with the nose; W. Flem. snuisieren, snosteren, to sniff after, like a dog. Allied to Dan. and Swed. snus, snuff; and prob. of imitative origin, like Sniff, Snuff.

SNORE, to breathe hoarsely in sleep. (E.) ME. snoren, Chaucer, C. T. 5210 (B 790). Substituted for snoren. Cf. AS. snora, as in 'Sternutatio, fnoia'; Wright's Voc. 48. 14. The change from sn to n occurs again in the case of the allied word sneeze (AS. snēosan). In Chaucer (as above), MS. E. has snoreth, MS. C. has snorith, and MSS. Hn. Cp. have snorith. β. Formed from the weak grade snor (< snus*), as seen in snor-en, pp. of snēosan, to sneeze; precisely as the word froze, frozen (Milton, P. L. ii. 595) is the pp. of frēosan, to freeze. See further under Sneeze; and Notes on E. Etym., p. 273. Influenced by Snort. Der. snore, sb., snor-er.

SNORT, to force air violently through the nose, as a horse. (Scand.) MF. snorten, to snore, Chaucer, C. T. 4161 (A 163). Cf. Low G. snurten, snarten, to make an explosive noise. From base snur*; as in Low G. snurren, to hum; MDu. snorren, to murmur. Cf. also (with k for f) Dan. snørke, to snort; Swed. snorka, to threaten (to snort, fume, be angry); Du. snorken, to snore, snort; G. snarchen, to snore, snort, bluster; Swed. snarka, to snore; prov. E. snork, to snort. And see Snarl. Der. snort-er; snort, sb.

SNOUT, mucus from the nose. (E.) ME. snoute, snoth, Prompt. Parv. AS. ge-snot; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 54. (OFries. snotte, †Du. snot; Low G. snotte; Dan. snot. Supposed to be allied to the pp. snuten of a lost strong verb, which would appear as AS. snūtan*; see further under Snout.

SNOOT, the nose of an animal. (E.) ME. snoute, Chaucer, C. T. 14911 (B 4095); snute, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1082. AS. snūt*; whence sniften, vb., to snite, was formed by vowel-change; see Snite. OFries. snūte, †Swed. snut, a snout, muzzle; Dan. snude; Low G. snute; Westphal. snūt; Du. snuit, G. schnauze. β. From a Teut. str. vb. snūtan*, to sniff, pt. t. snaut*, pp. snutanoz*. From the prime grade snūt*- we have E. snout; also Icel. snúta, to wipe the nose, Swed. snuta, Dan. snutte, the same, AS. snylan, whence E. snyle, to blow the nose (Halliwell). From the 2nd grade we find G. schnuaze; and from the weak grade G. snut, mucus. γ. We find shorter forms in Dan. snue, to sniff, snuff, snort, Low G. snau, prov. G. schnuu, a snout, beak; all from a base SNEU. And it is clear that prov. G. schnuif, a snout, E. snuff, sniff, snivel, Dan. snuse, to snuff or sniff, go back to the same base, which seems to have indicated a sudden inspiration of the breath through the nose. Cf. Lithuan. snuklis, a snout.

SNOW, a form of frozen vapour. (E.) ME. snow; hence snow-white, Chaucer, C. T. 8264 (E 388). AS. snāw; Grein, ii. 458. †Du. sneeuw; Icel. snær, snjúr, snjör; Dan. snee; Swed. snö; Goth. snaiwus; G. schnee; †Lithuan. snėgas; Russ. snieg; L. nix (gen. niuis); Gk. acc. vípa, whence vípas, a snow-flake; Irish and Gael. sneachd; W. nyf. β. All from the √SNEI(GW), to snow, whence L. ningit, it snows (with inserted n), Lithuan. snigti, sniginti, to snow, Greek veípeis, veípeis, it snows, Zend. snizh, to snow; Pick, i. 828. Brugmann, i. § 394. Der. snow, verb; snow-blind, -drift, -drop, -plough, -shoe, -slip; also snow-y, snow-i-ness.

SNUB, to check, scold, reprimand. (Scand.) 'To snub out, to take one up sharply,' Phillips, ed. 1706; spelt snubbe in Levins, ed. 1570. Another form is snub or snib; spelt snubbe, Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb. i. 126; snib, id. Mother Hubbard's Tale, 372. ME. snibben, Chaucer, C. T. 523. — Dan. snubbe, to nip off, to snub (Larsen); also snibbe, 'to set down, blow up,' i. e. reprimand (whence E. snib); Swed. snubba, to snub, to check; NFries. snubbe, Icel. snubba, to snub, chide. The orig. sense was to sniff off the end of a thing; cf. Icel. snubbóttr, snubbed, nipped, the pointed end being cut off; Swed. dial. snubba, to snip or clip off; OFries. snubbela, to snatch away, to snap.

β. A form allied to snub appears in sneap, to check, pinch, nip, L. L. I. i. 1. 100; Wint. Tale, i. 2. 13. This is from Icel. sneyja, orig. to castrate, then used as a law-term, to outrage, dishonour, and in mod. usage to chide or snub a child; whence sneyja, a disgrace. This is a related word, and cognate with Swed. snubba, to castrate, Swed. dial. snappa, to cut off, to snuff a candle; Icel. snuppa, to snub, chide. Der. snub, sb.; also snub-nosed, q. v.

SNUB-NOSED, having a short nose. (Scand. and E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. It means, literally, with a short or stumpy nose, as if cut off short. Cf. snubbes, s. pl., the short stumpy projections on a staff that has been roughly cut and trimmed, Spenser, F. Q. i. 8. 7. Snub is from the Swed. dial. snubba, to elip, snip; whence Swed. dial. snubba, a cow without horns or with cut horns, Icel. snubbóttr, snipped, clipped, with the end cut off. See Snub above. And see Nose.

SNUFF (1), to sniff, draw in air violently through the nose, to smell. (Du.) 'As if you snuff up love by smelling love;' L. L. I. iii. 16. Spelt snuff in Levins, ed. 1570; snuffs and snuff in Palsgrave. — MDu. snuffen, 'to snuffle out the filth out of one's nose' (Hefham); cf. Du. snuff, smelling, scent, snuffelen, to smell out; allied to MDu. snuyven, Du. snuiwen, to snort. †Swed. snufva, a cold, catarrh; snuffven, a sniff or scent of a thing; Swed. dial. snafva, snöfva, snuffa, to snuffle (which is the frequent. form); Dan. snuffle, to snuffle; G. schnuften, schnuften, schneiben, to snuff, snort; from a Teut. base snueh*; Idg. base snuep*-. We also find G. schnuffen, to snuffle, schnuffen, to take snuff; prov. G. schnuffeln, schnuffeln, to snuffle, to smell (Flügel). Der. snuff-le, the frequentative form; snuff, sb., powdered tobacco; snuff-box, snuff-y.

SNUFF (2), to snip the top off a candle-wick. (E.) ME. snuffen, to snuff out a candle, Wyclif, Exod. xxv. 38, note γ (later version); the earlier version has: 'where the snuffe, ben quenched' = where the candle-snuffs are extinguished. β. This form snuffen is a parallel form to snuppen*, snoppen*, which agrees with prov. E. snop, to eat off, as cattle do young shoots (Halliwell). — Swed. dial. snoppa, to snip or cut off, esp. to snuff a candle (Rietz); cf. Norw. snappa, snubba, to dock, cut off a top (Ross); snippe, a stump (Aasen); Hamburg snuffe, the peak of a shoe (Kiechey); Dan. snubbe, to nip off, the same word as E. snub; see Snub. Der. snuff (of a candle), sb., ME. snuffe, as above; snuff-dishes, Exod. xxv. 38; snuff-ers, Exod. xxxvii. 23.

SNUG, comfortable, lying close and warm. (Scand.) 'Where you lay snug;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Past. iii. 24. Shak. has 'Snug the joiner;' Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 66. Cf. prov. E. snug, tight, handsome, Lancashire (Halliwell); snog, tidy, trimmed, in perfect order (Cleveland Glossary). Of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. snöggr, smooth, said of wool or hair; MSwed. snugg, short-haired, smooth, trimmed, neat, Swed. snugg, cleanly, neat, genteel; Norweg. snögg, short, trim; Dan. snig (also snig), neat, smart, tidy (Molbech); OFries. snügge, snigge, smooth, neat. Cf. Norw. snugga, to arrange, get ready. β. The orig. sense was 'trimmed' or 'cropped'; cf. prov. E. snag, to trim; South E. snig, to cut or chop off, whence Devon. snig, close and private (i. e. snug); see Halliwell. See Snag. Der. snug-ly, snug-ness.

SO, thus, in such a manner or degree. (E.) ME. so, Chaucer, C. T. 11; Northern sa, Barbour's Bruce (passim); also swa, Chaucer, C. T. 4028 (A 4030), where the Northern dialect is imitated. AS. swa, so; Grein, ii. 497. †Du. zoo; Icel. svá, later svá, svá; Dan. sa; Swed. så; G. so; Goth. swa, so; swa, just as; swa-swa, just as. Teut. types swa*, swō, swa. Cf. Gk. ōs. β. From an oblique case of the Teut. swaz*, Idg. swos*, one's own (a reflexive pronominal base); whence Skt. swa-, one's own self, own, L. suus, one's own. Thus so = 'in one's own way.' See Prellwitz (s. v. swē); Brugmann, i. § 362.

SOAK, to steep in a fluid. (E.) It also means to suck up, imbibe. 'A sponge, that soaks up the king's countenance;' Hamlet, iv. 2. 16. This is the orig. sense; the word is a derivative of to suck. ME. soken, (1) to suck, (2) to soak; 'Sokere, or he that sokythe, sugens;' Prompt. Parv. 'Sokyn yn lycure, as thynge to be made soft, id. From AS. socian, to soak, tr. and intr.; see Bosworth-Toller. Allied to AS. soc, weak grade of sācan, to suck. Cf. AS. āsācan, āsigan, to suck dry, whence the pp. āsocene, āsigene; Grein, i. 43. β. There is also the sb. soc, or gesoc, a sucking, Gen. xxi. 7, 8. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 273. See Suok. Der. soak-er.

SOAM, a horse-load. (Late L. — Gk.) The Western E. equivalent of E. seam, AS. sēam; see Seam (2).

SOAP, a compound of oil or fat with soda or potash, used for washing. (E.) MF. sape, Rob. of Glouc. p. 6, l. 143. [The long o is due to AS. ā, as in stone from AS. stān, &c.] AS. sāpe, soap; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 472, l. 6. †Du. zeep; [Icel. sípa, Dan. såbe, Swed. såpa; borrowed from AS.]; G. seife, OHG. seifa. β. Teut. type sāpōn*, f.; from sāip*, and grade of Teut. sēipan*, to trickle (MHG. sīfen, Low G. sipen, to be moist, (OFries. sīpa); see Seife in Kluge. γ. The L. sāpo (see Pliny, xxvii. 12. 51) was borrowed from the Teutonic, not (as Pliny says) from Celtic. (From the L. acc. sāpōnem came F. savon, Ital. sapone, Span. sabon, &c.) The truly cognate L. word would appear to be sābum, tallow, grease. The W. sehon, Gael. sāpūnn, siabūnn, Irish siabūnn, seem to be borrowed from the L. acc. sāpōnem. Der. soap, verb; soap-y.

SOAR, to fly aloft. (F.—L.) ME. soren. 'As doth an eagle, when him list to sore;' Chaucer, C. T. 10437 (F 123). A term of hawking, and accordingly of F. origin. — F. essorer, 'to expose unto, or lay out in, the weather; also, to mount or soar up;' Cot. Cf. Ital. sorare, 'to soar in the air'; Florio. — Late L. exaurare* (not found), to expose to the air; regularly formed from ex, out; and aura, a breeze, the air. β. The Lat. aura was probably borrowed from Gk. αὔρα, a breeze; it is formed with the suffix -ra, from √AW, to blow. The √AW is allied to √WE, to blow; see Air.

SOB, to sigh convulsively, with tears. (E.) ME. sobben. 'Snewed and sobbed and syked' [sighed]; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 326. Related to AS. siofan, siofan, to lament; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxvi. § 1, lib. iv. pr. 1; from sob*, weak grade of sēd*, variant of Teut. sēp*, to sup, suck in. The word represents the convulsive sucking in of air. β. This is clearly shown by the allied G. saufen, MHG. süffen, süften, OIIG. sūfūn, to sigh, formed from the OHG. sb. sūft, a sigh, sob; this sb. being again related to OIIG. sūfan, to sup, sip, cognate with E. sap; see Sup. So also Icel. sýttir (= sýttir), a sobbing. Der. sob, sb.

SOBER, temperate, sedate, grave. (F.-L.) ME. sobre, Chaucer, C. T. 9407. - F. sobre, 'sober'; Cot. - L. sōbrus, acc. of sōbrus, sober. Compounded of sō, prefix, and -brus, as in-brus, drunken; both possibly related to the rare L. bria, a wine-vessel. The prefix sō, as in sō-cors, signifies apart from, or without; and sōbrus, not drunken, is thus opposed to ebrius. Sō- is related to sē-, which before a vowel appears as sēd-, as in sēd-ito, lit. 'a going apart.' See Se, prefix, and Ebriety. Der. sober-ly, sober-ness; also sobriety, from F. sobriété, 'sobriety', Cot., from L. acc. sōbrietatem.

SOBRIQUET, a nickname, assumed name. (F.-L. and C.) Sometimes spelt soubriquet, but sobriquet is the mod. F. form. Modern, not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. sobriquet, 'a surname, nickname, a quip or cut given, a mock or flow bestowed, a jest broken on a man'; Cot. Another form is soubriquet, also in Cotgrave. β. Etym. disputed and uncertain. Cotgrave also spells the word soubriquet, and Jarré and Scheler note the occurrence of soubriquet in a text of the 14th century with the sense of 'a chuck under the chin.' Here soubz (mod. F. sous) answers to L. subtus, below; and briquet is the Norm. dial. form of F. bracket, brisquet; see Moisy. Hence soubriquet, properly a knock on the breast, hence, a chuck under the chin, and then 'a quip or cut given, a mock or flout, a jest broken on a man,' [finally] 'a nickname.' Cotgrave. 'Percussit super mentonem faciendo dictum le soubriquet'; Act A. D. 1355 in Archives du Nord de la France, iii. 35. 'Donna deux petits coups appelez soubzbriguez des dois de la main soubz le menton'; Act A. D. 1398, ibid. in Ducange, s. v. Barba. In the same way soubarbe, 'the part between the chin and the throat, also a check, twitch, jerk given to a horse with his bridle, endureur une soubarbe', to endure an affront; Cot. If so, the sense is 'chuck under the chin,' hence, an affront, nickname. At the same time, Cotgrave's sobriquet must be due to some popular etymology (prob. from sot, foolish).

SOC, SOGAGE, law-terms. (E.) See Soke.
SOCIABLE, companionable. (F.-L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 188. - F. sociable, 'sociable'; Cot. - L. sociabilis, sociable; formed with suffix -ilis from sociu-re, to accompany. - L. socius, a companion, lit. 'a follower.' - L. base soc, second grade of seq-, appearing in sequi, to follow; all from SEQ*-, to follow; see Sequense. Der. sociably, sociable-ness, sociability. From L. socius is also formed the adj. sociālis, whence E. social, with the adv. social-ly, also social-i-ty, social-ism, social-ist, social-ism. Also sociu-ty, L. acc. societatem. Also dis-sociate, as-sociate.

SOCK, a sort of half stocking, buskin. (L.) ME. socke, Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. AS. soc; 'Soccus, soc'; Voc. 47. 22. - L. soccus, a light shoe, slipper, sock, worn by comic actors, and so taken as the symbol of comedy, as in Milton, L'Allegro, 132. Der. sock-et.
SOCKET, a hollow into which something is inserted. (F.-Du.) 'Soket of a cauldylstykke or other lyke'; Prompt. Parv. MF. soket, King Alisaunder, 4415. - OF. soket, given by Roquefort. MF. as (1) a dimin. of F. soc, a ploughshare, and (2) a dimin. of F. souche, a stump or stock of a tree. β. [Of these, the F. soc is of Celtic origin; cf. W. suck, a (swine's) snout, a ploughshare (Thur-neysen, p. 112), and with this word we have here nothing to do.] But souche appears in the Norman dial. as chouque (see Moisy), and is allied to the Ital. ciocco, a stump or stock of a tree; see Florio. Cf. Walloon sokett, a stump; F. dial. soquette, a stump of dead wood, patois de la Meuse (Labourasse); MF. chouquet, 'a block'; Cot.; OF. chouquet, a support (socket) for an arblast (Godefroy); F. dial. chouquet, a block on which one cuts wood, dimin. of chouque, a stump, patois du pays de Bray (Decorde); Picard choke, a block (Corblet); Walloon chouque, stump of a tree (Sigart). Prob. of Teut. origin; perhaps from MDu. schocke, 'a shock, a cock, or a heape', Hexham. See Bhook (2). ¶ The Du. sok may have caused difficulty; hence Ital. zocco = ciocco. Note 'une souche de fourment', a shock of corn; Supp. to Godefroy.

SOD, turf, a surface of earth covered with growing grass. (E.) 'A sod turf, cespes'; Levins, ed. 1570. Perhaps so called because the turf was used as fuel for boiling (Weigand); or because sodden. Cf. AS. ga-sod, a cooking; sod-en, pp. of sodan, to seethe. That the connexion with the verb to seethe is real is apparent from the cognate terms. - Du. zode, sod, green turf; MDu. zode, 'seething or boiling'; also, 'a sodde or a turf'; Hexham. Also contracted to zoo in both senses; 'zoo, a sod; het water is aan de zoo, the water begins to seethe'; Sewel. Note also MDu. sod, a well (Hexham); so named from the bubbling up of the water, and cognate with AS. sēd, a well, a pit, from the same verb (seethe), - Ælfred. sōd, a well; sode, a cut turf, also boiling, cooking; Dan. dial. sodd, sadd, a sod; OFries. sōda, sōda, sod, turf, allied to sāth, sīd, a well; Low G. sode, sod, allied to sod, a well; G. sode, sod, turf, allied to G. sod, broth, also, a bubbling up as of boiling water. See Seethe, Suds.

SOD, SODDEN; see under Seethe.

SODA, oxide of sodium. (Ital.-L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. - Ital. soda, soda; Mital. soda, 'a kind of fearn ash wherof they make glasses'; Florio. Fem. of Ital. sodo, 'solide, tough, fast, hard, stiff'; Florio. This is a contracted form of Ital. solido, solid; see Solid. So called, apparently, from the firmness or hardness of the products obtained from glass-works; cf. OF. soude, 'saltwort, glasswort', from the L. solida (fem. of solidus), which Scheler supposes must have been the L. name of glass-works. β. Note that the Span. name for soda is sosa, which also means glass-works; but here the etymology is different, the name being given to the plant from its abounding in alkaline salt. Sosa is the fem. of Span. soso, insipid, orig. 'salt'; from L. salsus, salt; see Sauos. Der. sod-inu, a coined word.

SODER, the same as Solder, q. v.

SODOMY, an unnatural crime. (F.-L. - Gk. - Heb.) In Cot. Cf. ME. sodomie, 1. ylgate, Assembly of Gods, 708; also sodomie, Cursor Mundi, l. 27950. - F. sodomie, 'sodomy'; Cot. So called because it was imputed to the inhabitants of Sodom; Gen. xix. 5. - F. Sodome, Sodom. - L. Sodoma. - Gk. Σόδομα. - Heb. Sedom (with initial samek); explained to mean 'burning' in Stanley's Sinai and Palestine, cap. vii; but this is quite uncertain. Censurus gives the sense 'enclosure'.

SOFA, a long seat with stuffed bottom, back, and arms. (Arab.) 'He leaped off from the sofa in which he sat'; Guardian, no. 167 [not 198], Sept. 22, 1713. The story here given is said to be translated from an Arabian MS.; this may be a pretence, but the word is Arabic. - Arab. suffa (f), suffah, 'a sofa, a couch, a place for reclining upon before the doors of Eastern houses, made of wood or stone'; Rich. Diet., p. 936. - Arab. root saffa, to draw up in line, put a seat to a saddle; ibid.

SOFFIT, the under side of an architrave or arch, also a ceiling. (F. - Ital. - L.) F. soffite (Hatzfeld). - Ital. soffitta, a garret, a ceiling (Barretti). Orig. fem. of the pp. suffito, fixed beneath; from suf-, (from L. suf, under), and fitto, pp. of figere, to fix, from L. figere, to fix. Thus it is (practically) a doublet of suffix.

SOFT, easily yielding to pressure, gentle, easy, smooth. (E.) ME. softe, Wyclif, Matt. xi. 8; Chaucer, C. T. 12035 (C 101). AS. sōfte, gen. used as an adv., Grein, ii. 464. The adj. form is commonly sōfte (id. 423), where the ō is further modified to ē. - OSax. siftō, softly, only in the compar. siftr, Heliland, 3302; G. sant, soft; OHG. samfto, adv., softly, lightly, gently; Du. zacht (for zacht*), whence G. sacht. Teut. type samftoz*; from sanjan* (Goth. sanjan), to please. Cf. Olrish sāim, mild, sām, rest; Gk. hēpos, tame, mild; Skt. sāman, mildness. Der. soft-ly, ME. softly (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 4209 (A 4211); soft-ness, Layamon, 25549. Also soft-en, in which the final -en is added by analogy with length-en, &c.; the ME. soften would only have given a later E. verb to soft; cf. softed in Ancrer Riwe, p. 244, l. 27. The right use of soften is intransitive, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 2. 40.

SOHO, a cry of sportsmen, to call attention to the hunted animal. (F.) 'Soko! soko!' Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 3. 189. ME. soko, King Alisaunder, 3712. A better form is sa ho, as in Middleton, Trick to Catch the Old One; A. iv. sc. 4. 'Sohow is [as] moche to say as sahow;' for because that it is short [i. e. easier] to say, we say alwey sahow;' Vencry de Twety, in Reliq. Antiq. i. 154; 'sa, sa, cy, adesto, sahow,' id. 152. - F. ça, 'hither, . . follow hoc, come after, Cot; and ho! interj. The F. ça is from the popular L. ecce hūc, behold! this way! See Hatzfeld.

SOIL (1), ground, mould, country. (F.-L.) ME. soile; spelt soyle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1039. - AF. soil, Year-books of Edw. I (1304-5), p. 53; (1305), p. 9; (allied to OF. soil, suet, MF. suel, the threshold of a door; Cot., from L. solium). - L. solus, a covering for the foot, a sole, sandal, sole of the foot, timber on which wattled walls are built. The Late L. solus also means 'soil, or ground,' by confusion with L. solium, ground, whence F. sol, 'the soil, ground'; Cot. β. We cannot derive E. soil from F. sol, on account of the diphthong; but it makes little difference, since L. solus, sole of the foot, and solus, ground, are closely connected words. γ. The root of L. sol-us, sol-us is uncertain; they may be allied to Sill. Doublets, sole (1), sole (2).

SOIL (1), to defile, contaminate. (F.-L.) ME. soilen, Ancren Riwle, p. 84, l. 23; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 2. The sense is to cover with mire; to take soil, lit. to betake oneself to muddy water, was a term of the chase; see Halliwell. 'To go to soyle' was said of the hart; Book of St. Albans, fol. c. 4, back. — AF. soiler, Walter de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Vocab. i. 171; OF. soillier (12th cent., Littré), F. soillier, 'to soil', Cot.; whence 'se soillier (of a swine), to take soil, or wallow in the mire'; id. — OF. soil, soil; 'soil, or soil de sanglier, the soil of a wild boar, the slough or mire wherein he hath wallowed'; Cot. Cf. MItal. sogliare, 'to sully, defile, or pollute', Florio; also sogliardo (mod. Ital. sugliardo), 'slovenly, sluttish, or hoggish'; id. Diez also cites Prov. soil, mire, suhar, to soil; and soil, a sow, which last is (as he says) plainly derived from L. sucula, a young sow, dimin. of sus, a sow. See SOV. β. Similarly, he explains the F. soil from the L. adj. suillus, belonging to swine, derived from the same sb. — L. sus, a sow; see SOV. Körtling, § 9247. γ. It will be observed that the difference in sense between soil (1) — ground, and soil (2), sb. — mire, is so slight that the words have doubtless frequently been confused, though really from quite different sources. There is yet a third word with the same spelling; see SOIL (3). Der. soil, sb. a spot, stain, a new coinage from the verb; the old sb. soil, a wallowing-place (really the original of the verb), is obsolete. ✠ The AS. soil, mire, is not the orig. of E. soil, but of prov. E. soal, sole, a dirty pool, Kent; E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3. See Sully.

SOIL (3), to feed cattle with green grass, to fatten with feeding. (F.-L.) See Halliwell; the expression 'soiled horse', i.e. a horse high fed upon green food, is in King Lear, iv. 6. 124. [Quite distinct from the words above.] Also spelt soil; Halliwell gives 'soil, to satisfy with food.' — OF. soiler, soiler (Suppl. to Godefroy, s. v. souler); cf. AF. sauler, P. de Thaun, Bestiary, l. 527, later souler, 'to glut, cloy, fill, satiate'; Cot. Mod. F. souler. — AF. saul, satisfied, Vie de St. Auban; OF. saul, adj. (Burguy), later saul, 'full, cloyed, satiated'; Cot. Mod. F. saul. — L. satullum, acc. of satulus, filled with food; a dimin. form from satur, full, satiated, akin to satis, enough. See Sate, Satiate, Satisfy.

SOIREE, an evening party. (F.-L.) Borrowed from French. 'A friendly soiary.' Pickwick Papers, c. 36; spelt soiree in the heading to the chapter. — F. soiree, 'the evening-tide'; Cot.; hence a party given in the evening. Cf. Ital. serata, evening-tide. Formed as a fem. pp. from a (supposed) Late L. verb sērāre*, to become late; from L. sērus, late in the day, whence Ital. sera. F. soir, evening. Cf. Irish sir, W. hir, long.

SOJOURN, to dwell, stay, reside. (F.-L.) ME. soiornen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 3, last line; soiournen, Chaucer, C. T. 4568 (B 148). (Here = j.) — AF. sojournier, Stat. Realm, i. 277 (1336); OF. sojournier, sojournier, to sojourn; also spelt sejournier, sejournier (Burguy). Mod. F. sojournier; cf. Ital. soggiornare. This verb answers to a Late L. type subdiurnare*, composed of L. sub, under, and diurnare, to stay, last long, derived from the adj. diurnus, daily; see Sub- and Diurnal or Journal. Der. sojourn-er; sojourn, sb., K. Lear, i. 1. 48, ME. soiornen, soiorn, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 369, vii. 385. The AF. sb. appears both as sojourn and soiour.

SOKE, SOC, a franchise, land held by socage. (E.) 'Soc, signifies power, authority, or liberty to minister justice and execute laws; also the shire, circuit, or territory, wherein such power is exercised by him that is endowed with such a privilege or liberty.' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. [Blount tightly notes the word as 'Saxon', but under socage gives a wrong derivation from F. soc, a plough-share.] 'Soc and Soc; soc was the power and privilege of hearing and determining causes and disputes, levying of forfeitures and fines, executing laws, and administering justice within a certain precinct; see Ellis, Introduction to Domesday Book, i. 273. Soc or Socen was strictly the right of investigating or seeking, or, as Spelman defines it, Cognitio quam dominus habet in curia sua, de causis litibusque inter vassallos suos exorientibus. It was also the territory or precinct in which the soc and other privileges were exercised.' Gloss. to Thorpe's Diplomatarium, at p. 369 of which we find: 'ic an heom þerfor saca and sōcna' = I grant them thereover the privileges of saca and sōcna. See further in Schmidt, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, ed. 1858, p. 653. 'Sōca, sūte of court; and therof cometh Sokene; but Sokene otherwise is þo to aske lawe in the gretter court'; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 95. β. Etymologically, sac (AS. saca) is the same word as E. sake; the orig. sense is 'contention', hence a law-suit, from AS. sacan, to contend; see Sake. Soken (AS. sōcna, sōcna) is 'an enquiry'; closely connected with mod. E. seek, to investigate, and derived from AS. sēc, and grade of sac, as seen in sēc, pt. t. of the same verb sacan; see Seek. Cf. Goth. sōkna, enquiry; sōkan, to seek; sakan, to contend. Hence Portoken (ward) in London, which Stow explains by 'franchise at the gate.' Der. soc- age, a barbarous law-term, made by adding the F. suffix -age (L. -aticum) to AS. sēc. (The o is long.)

SOLACE, a comfort, relief. (F.-L.) ME. solas, King Ali-saunders, l. 15; Chaucer, C. T. 13712 (B 1972). — OF. solas, solace; Burguy. (Here z = s). — L. solacium, a comfort; as if from an adj. solas*; allied to the verb solari, to console, to comfort. Allied to L. solus, Gk. ἄλος, whole (Bréal, Prellwitz); Skt. sarvata (whole). Der. solace, verb, ME. solacen, P. Plowman, B. xix. 22, from OF. solacier, solacere, to solace (Burguy). And see con-sol.

SOLAN-GOOSE, the name of a bird. (Scand. and E.) The E. goose is an addition; the Lowland-Scotch form is soland, which occurs in Holland's poem of the Houlate (Owlet), about A. D. 1450; l. 700. [Here the d is excrement, as is so common after n; cf. sound from F. son.] — Icel. sula, also haf-sula, a gannet, solan goose (see below); Norweg. sula, havsula, the same (Aasen). The Norweg. hav (Icel. haf) means 'sea.' β. As the Icel. sula is feminine, the definite form is sulan = the gannet; which accounts for the final n in the E. word. Similarly, Dan. sol = sun, but solen = the sun; whence the Shetland word soolen, the sun (Edmonston).

SOLAR, belonging to the sun. (L.) 'The solar and lunar year.' Ralegh, Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). — L. solāris, solar. — L. sol, the sun. — Icel. sól; Goth. sauil; Lithuan. saule; Russ. solntse; W. haul (for saul); Irish sól; Gk. ἥλιος, Homeric ἥλιος, Doric ἥλιος, Cretan ἥλιος (with long a); cf. Skt. sāra (s). Brugmann, i. § 481. Der. sol-stice, q. v.

SOLDER, a cement made of fusible metal, used to unite two metallic substances. (F.-L.) Sometimes spelt soder, and usually pronounced sodder [sod'ur]. Rich. spells it soulder. To soder such gold, there is a proper glue and soder. Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 5. 'I soulder a metal with soulder, le soulder.', Palsgrave. ME. soudere; sb. 'Soldatour, soudere'; Voc. 612. 33. — OF. soudure (14th cent., Littré), later also soudure; a soldering, and particularly the knot of solder which fastens the lead (lead) of a glass window; Cot. Mod. F. soudure, solder; 11amilton. — OF. souder, souder (orig. solder), to solder, consolidate, close or fasten together; Cot. [Hence also ME. souden, scuden, to strengthen; 'anon his leggis and hise feet weren soudid togidre'; Wyclif, Acts, iii. 7.] — L. solidus, to make firm. — L. solidus, solid, firm; see Solid. And see Soldier. Der. solder, verb, formerly soder, as above. ✠ It is usual to derive, conversely, the sb. solder from the verb; this is futile, as it leaves the second syllable entirely unaccounted for. The OF. verb soudure yielded the ME. verb souder, as shown above, which could only have produced a modern E. verb sod or sud. In no case can the E. suffix -er be due to the ending -re of the F. infinitive. The French for what we call solder (sb.) is soudure, and in this we find the obvious origin of the word. The pronunciation of final -re as -er occurs in the common word figure, pronounced [fig'ur], which is likewise from the F. sb. figure, not from a verb.

SOLDIER, one who engages in military service for pay. (F.-L.) The common pronunciation of the word as sodger [sod'jɜ:] is probably old, and may be defended, the l being frequently dropped in this word in old books. [Compare sod as the usual pronunciation of solder; see the word above.] ME. soudiour, Will. of Palerne, 3954; soudur, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 109, l. 14; schauvaldur, soudiour, souldier, Barbour's Bruce, v. 205, and various readings. So called from their receiving soud (i. e. pay). 'He wolde paye them their soudye or wagis. . . [he] hadde gotten many a soudiour.' Reynard the Fox (Caxton's translation), ed. Arber, p. 39. — OF. soldier (Burguy), also soldoier, suidoier; Cot. has soudoyers, 'a soldier, one that fights or serves for pay'. Cf. OF. soudier, 'pay or lendings for soldiers'; id. Also F. solidat, a soldier. β. Of these words, OF. soldier answers to Late L. soldarius, a soldier; cf. 'Soldarius, a soudiour.' Voc. 612. 32. The OF. soudie is from Late L. soldum, pay; and F. solidat = solidatus, pp. of Late L. soldare, to pay. All from Late L. solidus, a piece of money, whence is derived (by loss of the latter part of the word) the OF. sol, 'the French shilling'; Cot., and the mod. F. son. We still use l., s., d. to signify libra, solidi, and denarii, or pounds, shillings, and pence. The orig. sense was 'solid' money. — L. solidus, solid; see Solid. Der. soldier-like, soldier-ship, soldier-y.

SOLE (1), the under side of the foot, bottom of a boot or shoe. (L.) ME. sole. 'Sole of a foot, Plantis; Sole of a schoo, Solas.' Prompt. Parv. AS. sole, pl. solen (for solan). 'Solen, solen'; Voc. 125. 25. — L. sola, the sole of the foot or of a shoe. — L. solum, the ground. See Soil (1). Doublet, soil (1), which is the F. form. Der. sole, verb.

SOLE (2), a kind of flat fish. (F.-L.) ME. sole. 'Sole, fische, Solia.' Prompt. Parv.; cf. AF. soel, Liber Albus, p. 244. — F. sole, 'the sole-fish'; Cot. — L. sola, the sole of the foot, the fish called the sole. The sole of the foot is taken as the type of flatness. See Bole (1).

SOLE (3), alone, only, solitary, single. (F.—L.) ME. sool, Lydgate, Troy-book, bk. i. ch. i. l. 29; AF. sole, f., Liber Albus, p. 219.—OF. sol, mod. F. seul, sole.—L. solum, acc. of solus, alone. Perhaps the same word as OL. sollus, entire, complete in itself (hence alone); Brul. Or allied to L. sō—(in sō-brius) and sē-tē in sē-itio (Walde); see Sober. Der. sol-ity, sole-ness. From L. solus are also sol-ute, solitology, sol-it-ary, sol-it-ude, sol-o.

SOLICISM, impropriety in speaking or writing. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Minshew and Cotgrave.—MF. solotisme, 'a solicism, or incongruity'; Cot.—L. solicismum, acc. of solicismus.—Gk. σολικισμός, sb.—Gk. σολικίζω, to speak incorrectly. —Gk. adj. σολικος, speaking incorrectly, like an inhabitant of Σόλα (Solai) in Cilicia, a place colonised by Athenian emigrants, who soon corrupted the Attic dialect which they at first spoke correctly. Others say it was colonised by Argives and I. lydians from Rhodes, who spoke a corrupt dialect of Greek. See Diogenes Laertius, i. 51; and Smith, Class. Dict. Der. sol-ic-ist, sol-ic-ist-ic-al.

SOLENN, attended with religious ceremony, devout, devotional, serious. (F.—L.) ME. solenpne. 'In the solenpne dai of pask'; Wyclif, Luke, ii. 41. Hence solenpne, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 276 (A 274).—OF. solenpne (Roquefort); the mod. F. has only the derivative solenel.—L. solenem, acc. of solenius, later forms solenis, solenius, as if it meant occurring annually like a religious rite, religious, festive, solemn; from solum, entire, complete, and annus, a year, which becomes -ennus in composition, as in E. bi-ennial, tri-ennial. But the latter part was orig. -ennus, perhaps from amb-, around. β. The OL. solk is cognate with W. holl, entire, Gk. ὅλος (Ion. ὅλος), whole; Skt. sarva (s), all, whole. Brugmann, i. § 417. Der. solen-ly, solen-ness; solen-ize, spelt solenpnyse in Palsgrave; solen-ize-er, solen-iz-at-ion; also solen-iz-ty, ME. solenpnyce, Chaucer, C. T. 2704 (A 2702).

SOLE-FA, to sing the notes of the gamut. (L.) ME. sol-fye, sol-fy; P. Plowman, B. v. 423; Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 292. 'They . . . sol-fa so alayme' = they sol-fa so a-la-mi-re; Skelton, Colin Clout, 107. To sol-fa is to practise singing the scale of notes in the gamut, which contained the notes named ut, re, mi, sol, fa, la, si. These names are of Latin origin; see Gamut. Der. sol-feggio, from Ital. sol-feggio, sb., the singing of the sol-fa or gamut. Also sol-mi-s-at-ion, a word coined from the names of the notes sol and mi.

SOLICIT, to petition, seek to obtain. (F.—L.) ME. soliciten; spelt solycite in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 70, l. 24.—MF. soliciter, 'to solicit'; Cot.—L. solicitare, to agitate, arouse, excite, incite, urge, solicit.—L. solicitus, lit. wholly agitated, aroused, anxious, solicitous.—L. solli-, for sollus, whole, entire; and citus, pp. of cire, to shake, excite, cite; see Solemn and Cite. Der. Solicit-ation, Oth. iv. 2, 202, from MF. solicitation, 'a solicitation'; Cot. Also solicit-or (solicitor in Minshew), substituted for MF. soliciteur, 'a solicitor, or follower of a cause for another,' Cot.; from L. acc. solicitationem. And see Sollicitous. (Spelt soliciter in F.)

SOLICITOUS, very desirous, anxious, eager. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 428. Englished from L. solicitus, better spelt solicitus, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. See Solici. Der. solicitous-ly; solicitude, q.v.

SOLICITUDE, anxious care, trouble. (F.—L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1266 h.—MF. solicitude, 'solicitude, care'; Cot.—L. solicitudinem, acc. of solicitudo (better solicitudo) anxiety.—L. solicitus, solicitous; see Sollicitous.

SOLID, firm, hard, compact, substantial, strong. (F.—L.) ME. solide, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 17, l. 15.—F. solide, 'solid'; Cot.—L. solidum, acc. of solidus, firm, solid. Allied to Gk. ὅλος, whole, entire, and Skt. sarva (s), all, whole; see Solemn. Der. solid-ly, solid-ness. Also solid-ar-ity, 'a word which we owe to the F. Communists, and which signifies a fellowship in gain and loss, in honour and dishonour, . . . a being, so to speak, all in the same bottom,' Trench, Eng. Past and Present; Cotgrave has the adj. solidaire, 'solid, whole, in for [or] liable to the whole.' Also solid-ify, from MF. solidifier, to render solid, solid-ify-at-ion. Also solid-ity, from F. solidité, which from L. acc. soliditatem. From L. solidus are also con-solid-ate, con-sols, solid-er (or sol-er), solid-er-ly, solid-ped. And cf. catolic (from Gk. ὅλος), holo-caust.

SOLILOQUY, a speaking to oneself. (L.) Spelt soliloquie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from L. soliloquium, a talking to oneself, a word formed by St. Augustine; see Aug. Soliloq. ii. 7, near the end.—L. sol-, for sollus, alone; and loqui, to speak; see Sole (3) and Loquacious. Der. soliloqu-ize, a coined word.

SOLIPED, an animal with an unclawed hoof. (F.—L.) 'Solipeds or firm-hoofed animals'; Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, v. vi. c. 6. § 9. A contraction for soliped, which would be a more correct form.—OF. solipède (Godefroy); F. solipède (Hatzfeld).—L. soliped-, stem of solipēs, solid-hoofed, whole-hoofed; Pliny, x. 65; x. 73.—L.

solidi-, for solidus, solid; and pēs, a foot, cognate with E. foot; see Solid and Foot.

SOLITARY, lonely, alone, single. (F.—L.) ME. solitarie, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 7.—AF. solitarie, Langtoft's Chron. i. 176; usually solitaire, as in mod. F.—L. solitarium, acc. of solitarius, solitary. β. Formed as if contracted from solitarius*, from solitū, stem of sollus, loneliness; a sb. formed with suffix -itāt- from soll-, for sollus, alone; see Sole (3). Cf. heredit-ary, milit-ary from the stems heredit-, milit-; also propri-ary, similarly formed from the sb. proprius. Der. solitary-ly, -ness. Also solitaire, from F. solitaire. And see sol-it-ude, sol-o.

SOLITUDE, loneliness. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. solitude, 'solitude'; Cot.—L. solitudo, loneliness.—L. sol-, for sollus, sole; with suffix -itudo. See Sole (3).

SOLO, a musical piece performed by one person. (Ital.—L.) 'Solos and sonatas'; Tatler, no. 222; Sept. 9, 1710.—Ital. solo, alone.—L. solum, acc. of sollus, sole; see Sole (3).

SOLMISATION, a singing of sol-mi.

SOLSTICE, one of the two points in the ecliptic at which the sun is at his greatest distance from the equator; the time when the sun reaches that point. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. solstice, 'the solstice, sun-stand, or stay of the sun'; Cot.—L. solstitium, the solstice; lit. a point (in the ecliptic) at which the sun seems to stand still.—L. sol-, the sun; and stī-tun-*, for statum, supine of sistere, to make to stand still, a reduplicated form from stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand; see Solar and Stand. Der. solstit-al, adj., from MF. solstitial or solsticial (Cot.); F. solsticial.

SOLUBLE, capable of being dissolved. (F.—L.) Spelt soluble and solubil in Levins, ed. 1570.—F. soluble (13th cent., Littre).—L. solubilis, acc. of solabilis, dissolvable. Formed, with suffix -ibilis, from solū-, found in solū-tus, pp. of solvere, to solve, dissolve; see Solve. Der. solubil-ty, a coined word.

SOLUTION, a dissolving, resolving, explanation, discharge. (F.—L.) ME. solution, Gower, C. A. ii. 86; bk. iv. 2515; it was a common term in alchemy.—F. solution, 'a discharge, resolution, dissolution'; Cot.—L. solutio, acc. of solutio, lit. a loosing; cf. solūt-us, pp. of solvere, to loose, resolve, dissolve; see Solve.

SOLVE, to explain, resolve, remove. (L.) Not an early word. In Milton, P. L. vii. 55.—L. solvere, to loosen, relax, solve; pp. solūtus. A compound verb; compounded of so-, allied to se-, apart; and luere, to loosen. For the prefix, see Sober. Luere is from luc-, weak grade of L. luc- to set free, appearing also in Gk. λύειν, to set free, release; see Loose. Brugmann, i. § 121. Der. solv-able, from F. solvable, orig. 'payable,' Cot. Also solv-er, having power to dissolve or pay, from L. soluent, stem of pres. part. of solvere; and hence solv-er-ty. Also solv-er; ab-solve, ab-solute, as-sol; dis-solve, dis-solute; re-solve, re-solute. And see soluble, solution.

SOMBRE, gloomy, dusky. (F.—L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson.—F. sombre, 'close, dark, cloudy, muddy, shady, dusky, gloomy'; Cot. It answers to Span. adj. sombrio, adj., shady, gloomy, from the sb. sombra, shade, dark part of a picture, also a ghost. So also Port. sombrio, adj., from sombra, shade, protection, ghost. And cf. Span. a-sombrar, to frighten, terrify; mod. Prov. sonnombros, dark. β. Diez refers these words to a L. form sub-umbrāre*, to shadow or shade; a conjecture which is supported by the occurrence of Prov. soz-ombrar, to shade (Scheler). There is also an OF. essombre, a dark place (Burguy), which is probably due to a L. form ex-umbrāre*, and this suggests the same form as the original of the present word, a solution which is adopted by Littré. We may conclude that sombre is founded upon the L. umbra, a shadow, with a prefix due either to L. ex or to L. sub. See Körting, § 921. See Umbrage. Der. sombre-ness.

SOMBREIRO, a broad-brimmed hat. (Span.—L.) 'With a great Sombreiro or shadow over their heads'; Hakluyt, Voy. ii. pt. i. p. 258.—Span. sombreiro.—Span. sombra, shade (above).

SOME, a certain number or quantity, moderate in degree. (E.) ME. som, sum; pl. summe, somme, some. 'Summe seedis' = some seeds; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 4. 'Som in his bed, som in the depe see' = one man in his bed, another in the deep sea; Chaucer, C. T. 3033 (A 3031). AS. sum, some one, a certain one, one; pl. sume, some; Grein, ii. 493.—Icel. sumr; Dan. summe, pl.; Swed. somliga, pl. (-some-like); Goth. sums, some one; OHG. sum. β. All from a Teut. type sumoz*, some one, a certain one; from sum-, weak grade of sam-, as in E. same; see Same. The like change from a to u (o) occurs in the suffix -some, which see. Der. some-body, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 121; some-how; some-thing = AS. sum þing; some-time, ME. somtime, Chaucer, C. T. 1245 (A 1243); some-times, formed from some-time by the addition of the adverbial suffix -s, the sign of the gen. sing., not of the nom. pl. (cf. need-s, whil-s, twi-ce, &c.); some-what, ME. somkwat, Ancren Riwle, p. 44. l. 9 = AS. sum hwat; some-where, ME. som-hwar, Ormulum, 6929; some-whether, Titus Andron. iv. 1. 11.

-SOME, suffix. (E.) AS. -sum, as in wyn-sum (lit. love-some), E. win-some. A stronger grade of the same suffix appears in Icel. fríðsamr, peaceful, G. lang-sam, slow. See SOME, above; and see SAME.

SOMERSAULT, SOMERSET, a leap in which a man turns heels over head. (F.—Prov.—L.) Commonly pronounced summerset, where -set is an unaccented form of -sault or -saut. Spelt summersaut in Drayton's Polyolbion, song 6. l. 52; somersault in Palsgrave; somersaut in Harington's Ariosto, xxxv, 68 (Nares); see further in Rich. and Nares.—OF. sombresaut (in 1393, Supp. to Godefroy), MF. sombresaut, 'a sobresault or summersault, an active trick in tumbling'; Cot.; F. sombresaut.—Prov. sobresaut (Hatzfeld); cf. Ital. soprasalto; where sopra = 'above, over, aloft, on high'; and salto = 'a leape, a skip, a jumpe, a bound, a sault'; Florio.—L. supra, above; and saltum, acc. of saltus, a leap, bound, formed like saltus, pp. of salire, to leap. See SUPRA and SALIENT.

SOMNAMBULIST, one who walks in his sleep. (L.; with Gk. suffix.) A coined word; an early example is given in Todd's Johnson, from Bp. Porteus's Sermons, A.D. 1789. The suffix -ist = F. -iste, from L. -ista = Gk. -ιστης; as in baptist.—L. somnus, sleep; and ambul-āre, to walk. See SOMNIFEROUS and AMBULATION. Der. somnambul-ism.

SOMNIFEROUS, causing sleep. (L.) 'Somniferous potions'; Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, pt. i. sect. 2. memb. 1, subsect. 5. Coined by adding suffix -us (properly = F. -eux, from L. -ivus) to L. somnifer, sleep-bringing. = L. somni-, for somnus, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, to bring, cognate with E. BEAR, verb. β. The L. somnus represents an older form suefnos*, cognate with Skt. svapnā, sleep, and allied to sop-or, sleep; = F. SWEET, to sleep; see further under SOPORIFEROUS. Brugmann, i. § 121.

SOMNOLENT, sleepiness. (F.—L.) ME. somnolence, spelt sumpolence, Gower, C. A. ii. 92; bk. iv. 2703.—F. somnolence (Littre); OF. somnolence (Hatzfeld).—L. somnolentia, also somnulentia, sleepiness.—L. somnulentus, sleepy; formed with suffix -lentus (as in tenu-lentus, drunken) from somnu-, sleep, allied to sop-or, sleep; see SOMNIFEROUS, SOPORIFEROUS. Der. somnolent, adj., from F. somnolent, L. somnulentus.

SON, a male child or descendant. (E.) ME. son (properly a dissyllable); Chaucer, C. T. 79; older form sunne, Ancræn Riwle, p. 26, l. 1. AS. sunu, a son; Grein, ii. 406. +Du. zoon; Icel. sunr, son; Dan. søn; Swed. son; G. sohn; Olig. sunu; Goth. sunus. Teut. type sunuz*. Cf. Lithuan. sunus; Russ. syn; Gk. υἱός (for ουἱός*); Skt. śuna-, a son, from Skt. śu-, śu-, to beget, bear, bring forth; cf. OIrish socht, birth. Brugmann, i. § 104, 292. Thus son = one who is begotten, a child. Der. son-in-law, sonship; a coined word.

SONATA, a kind of musical composition. (Ital.—L.) 'An Italian sonata'; Addison, Spectator, no. 179. 'Of a sonata, on his viol'; Prior, Alma, iii. 436.—Ital. sonata, 'a sounding, or fit of mirth'; Florio. Hence used in the technical sense.—L. sonāta, fem. of sonātus, pp. of sonāre, to sound; see SOUND (3), and SONNET.

SONG, that which is sung, a short poem or ballad. (E.) ME. song, Chaucer, C. T. 95. AS. sang; varied to song; Grein, ii. 390. Cf. AS. sang, 2nd grade of singan, to sing; see SING. +Du. zang; Icel. söngur; Swed. sång; Dan. and G. sang; Goth. saggus (= sangus). Cf. Gk. ὕμνη, voice. Der. song-ster, used by Howell, L'Estrange, and Dryden (Todd, no references); from AS. sangstæte (better sangstæte), Voc. 308. 12, as a gloss to L. cantrix; formed with double suffix -ætre from sang, a song; as to the force of the suffix, see SPINSTER. Hence song-ster-ess, Thomson's Summer, 746; a coined word, made by needlessly affixing the F. suffix -esse (L. -issa, from Gk. -ισσα) to the E. sungster, which was orig. used (as shown above) as a feminine sb. Also sing-song, Fuller's Worthies, Berkshire (R.); a reduplicated form.

SONNET, a rimed poem, of fourteen lines. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. 2. 69. See 'Sonnets and Sonettes' by the Earl of Surrey, in Tottell's Miscellany.—F. sonnet, 'a sonnet, or canzonet, a song (most commonly) of 14 verses'; Cot.—Ital. sonetto, 'a sonnet, canzonet'; Florio. Dimin. of sonno, 'a sound, a tune'; Florio.—L. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound; see SOUND (3). Der. sonnet-eer, from Ital. sonettiere, 'a composer of sonnets'; Florio; the suffix -eer (Ital. -iere) is due to L. suffix -arius.

SONOROUS, loud-sounding. (L.) Properly sonórous; it will probably, sooner or later, become sonorous. 'Sonórous metal'; Milton, P. L. i. 540; and in Cotgrave. Doubtless taken directly from the L. sonórus, loud-sounding, by the change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, and numerous other words. (The F. sonoreux, 'sonorous, loud', is in Cotgrave; this would probably have produced an E. form sonórous, the length of the Latin penultimate being lost sight of).—L. sonor (gen. sonóris), sound, noise; allied to sonus, sound; see SOUND (3). Der. sonorously, -ness. The ME. form sonoroux occurs in the Book of St. Albans, fol. d. 3.

SOON, immediately, quickly, readily. (E.) ME. soon (dissyllable); Chaucer, C. T. 13442 (B 1792). AS. sāna, soon; Grein, ii. 465. + OSax. sāna, sāno; also OFries. sān, sōn; OSax. sān; OHG. sān. β. We find also Goth. sunus, soon, at once, immediately, Matt. viii. 3. SOOT, the black deposit due to smoke. (E.) ME. sōt (with long o); King Alisaunder, 6636. AS. sōt, soot; 'Fulgine, soote', Voc. 404. 32; we also find ge-sōtig, adj. sooty (Toller). +Icel. sōt; Swed. sot; Dan. sod (for sot). +Lithuan. sōtis, soot; usually in the pl. form sōdzai; whence the adj. sōdzotas, sooty, and the verb apsōdzinti, to blacken with soot, besmear. β. The Lithuan. form is valuable as showing that the form soot is truly Teutonic; and suggests a derivation from Idg. sūd-, the 3rd grade of sēd-*, to sit, rest upon. See SIT. (Noreen, § 146; Streiberg, § 95.) Der. soot-y, soot-l-ness.

SOOTH, adj., true; sb., truth. (1.) The adjectival sense is the older one. ME. soth (with long o), adj., true; Pricke of Conscience, 7687. Commoner as a sb., meaning 'the true thing', hence 'the truth'; Chaucer, C. T. 847 (A 845). AS. sōð, adj., true (very common); Grein, ii. 460. Hence sōð, neuter sb., a true thing, truth; id. 462. The form sōð stands for sawð*, the u being lost before the th, as in tōð, a tooth, which stands for tanð*. +Icel. sauur (for sawðr*); Swed. sann; Dan. sand. β. All from Teut. type sawthaz*, true; Fick, iii. 318; Idg. type santos*, short for saw-ont-, orig. signifying 'being', or 'that which is', hence that which is real, truth; a present participial form from the sēd-, to be. The same loss of initial e occurs in the L. -sens as found in præ-sens (stem præ-sent-), preserved in E. pre-sent; and again in the Skt. satya-, true (for es-ant-ya*); so also we have G. sind = L. sunt = Skt. santi, they are, all answering to Idg. esanti*. The meaning 'true', 'real', appears already in the Skt. participle sat, a weaker form of sant- (= sant). γ. Hence we conclude that the very interesting word sooth meant orig. no more than 'being', and was at first the present participle of sēd, to be. See ARE, ESSENCE, and SUTTEE. Der. for-sooth, -for a truth, AS. for sōð, as in 'wite þū for sōð' = know thou for a truth, Ælfred, tr. of Hoethius, lib. ii. pr. 2, cap. vii. § 3. Also sooth-fast, true (obsolete), from AS. sōðfest, Grein, ii. 463, where the suffix is the same as in stead-fast and shame-fast (now corrupted to shame-faced). And see sooth-say, and soothe.

SOOTHEE, to please with gentle words or flattery, to flatter, appease. (E.) The orig. sense is 'to assent to as being true', hence to say yes to, to humour by assenting, and generally to humour. 'Sooth, to flatter immoderately, or hold vp one in his talke, and affirme it to be true, which he speaketh'; Baret (1580). 'Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?' Com. of Errors, i. 4. 82. 'Soothing the humour of fantastic wits'; Venus and Adonis, 850. Cf. the expression 'words of sooth', Rich. II. iii. 3. 136. 'I shall sooth it', I must confirm it, Faerie Em. A. iii. sc. 11. ME. sōthien, to confirm, verify; whence isōbeth, confirmed, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 261, l. 8. AS. ge-sōðian (where the prefix ge- makes no difference), to prove to be true, confirm; Dooms of Edward and Guthrum, sect. 6, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 170. Cf. AS. gesōð, a parasite, flatterer, in a gloss (Bosworth).—AS. sōð, true; see SOOTH. Cognate verbs occur in the Icel. sanna, Dan. sande, to verify, confirm.

SOOTHSAÏ, to foretell, tell the truth beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Antony, i. 2. 52. Compounded of sooth and say; see SOOTH and SAY. We find the sb. soothsayer, spelt soð-zigger (in the Okenish dialect) in the Aeneid of Inwytt, p. 256, l. 3 from bottom; spelt sothsaier, Gower, C. A. iii. 164; bk. vi. 2348. We also find the AS. sb. sōðsegen, a true saying, in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 250, l. 11; and the adj. sōðsegol, truth-speaking, Voc. 316. 9. Der. sooth-say-er; sooth-say-ing, Acts, xvi. 16.

SOP, anything soaked or dipped in liquid to be eaten. (E.) ME. sop, soppe; 'a sop in wyn', Chaucer, C. T. 336 (A 334); spelt soppe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 175. AS. soppe*, not found; but we find the strong form sopp (Napier's Glosses, 56. 10); the derived verb soppian, to sop, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 228, last line; and the compound sb. sop-cuppe (written sōp-cuppe), a sop-cup, in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 553, 554; so that the word is certainly English. From Teut. sup-, weak grade of sūpan-, to sup, as seen in AS. sūpan, to sup; see SUP. +Icel. soppa, f., a sop; soppa af vini = a sop in wine; cf. soppin, pp. of sūpa, to sup; cf. also sopp, a sup, sip, mouthful. Cf. MDu. soppe, 'a sop'; Hexham. ¶ Soup is a F. form from the same root, and has been borrowed back again into some Teutonic tongues, as e.g. in the case of G. suppe, soup, broth. Der. sop, verb, spelt soppe in Levins, from AS. soppian, to sop, mentioned above. Also sopp-y, soaking, wet; sops-in-wine (see Nares). Also milk-sop = one who sops milk; see MILKSOP. And see SOUP. SOPHIST, a captious reasoner. (F.—L.—Gk.) Iacon refers to the Sophists; Adv. of Learning, bk. ii. c. xiv. § 6. But the form most in use in old authors was not sophist, but sophister. Frith has sophisme, sophistry, and sophister all in one sentence; Works, p. 44, col. 2. Shak. has sophister, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 191; Palgrave has sophyster. The final -r is needlessly added, just as in philosoph-er, and was due to an OF. form sophistria (sophistria in Godefroy, 2. 689), substituted for the true form sophiste. -F. sophistria, 'a sophister'; Cot. = Late L. sophista. -Gk. sophistria, a cunning or skilful man; also, a Sophist, a teacher of arts and sciences for money; see Liddell and Scott. -Gk. sophistria, to instruct, lit. to make wise. -Gk. sophos, wise. Brugmann, i. § 339. Der. sophist-ry. ME. sophistrie, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, 137, from F. sophistrie, 'sophistry'. Cot. Also sophist-ic, from L. sophisticus, which from Gk. sophistikós; sophist-ic-al, sophist-ic-al-ly; sophist-ic-ate, used in the pp. sophisticated by Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 110, from Late L. sophisticatus, pp. of sophisticare, to corrupt, adulterate; cf. 'sophisticate and counterfeited'; Maundeville, Trav. ch. v. p. 52. Also sophism (used by Frith as above), from F. sophisme, a sophism, fallacy, trick of philosophy; Cot., which from L. sophisma = Gk. sôphisma, a device, captious argument. Also philosophy, q. v.

SOPHY, a (former) title of the Shah of Persia. (Pers. - Arab.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 25; Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 197. -Pers. Safī, used as a title, A.D. 1505-1736; so named from Ismael Safī, the first monarch of this house. -from a private ancestor of that prince, called Safīyād-dīn (the purity of religion), who was contemporary with Tamerlane; 'Rich. Dict. p. 938. -Arab. safī, pure. ¶ Not to be confused with Sufī, a Moslem mystic; from Arab. sūfī, intelligent. See Devic; and Notes on F. Eym., p. 273. But see Yule, who says that Safī was also a Sufī (devotee).

SOPORIFEROUS, causing or inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporiferous medicines.' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 975. Coined by adding the suffix -ous (properly -F. -eus, from L. -ōsus) to L. soporifer, sleep-inducing. -L. soporifer, decl. stem of sopor, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, cognate with E. bear, verb. β. L. sopor is from SWEP, to sleep, appearing in Skt. svap, to sleep, Gk. hwnos, sleep, AS. swefen, a dream; see Brugmann, i. § 551. See soporific and somniferous.

SOPORIFIC, inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporific or anodyne virtues.' Locke, Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 23 (R.). A coined word, as if from L. soporificus; from soporifer, decl. stem of sopor, sleep; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make. See Soporiferous and Facet. And see Somniferous.

SOPRANO, the highest kind of female voice. (Ital. - L.) A musical term. -Ital. soprano, 'sovereign, supreme, also, the treble in music'; Florio. -Late L. superānus, sovereign; see Sovereign. Doublet, supererig.

SORBE, the fruit of the service-tree. (F. - L.) Palgrave has: 'Sorbe, a kynde of frute, [F.] sorbe' = L. sorbum, the fruit of the service-tree; cf. sorbus, the service-tree. See Service-tree.

SORCERY, casting of lots, divination by the assistance of evil spirits, magic. (F. - L.) ME. sorcerie, Chaucer, C. T. 5175 (B755); King Alisaunder, 478. -OF. sorcerie, casting of lots, magic. -OF. sorcier, a sorcerer. -Late L. sorciarius, a teller of fortunes by the casting of lots, a sorcerer; Lat. L. soritiare, to cast lots, used A.D. 1350 (Ducange); cf. L. soriti, to obtain by lot. -L. soriti, decl. stem of sors, a lot; see Sort. Der. sorcerer, Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 49, where the final -er is needlessly repeated, just as in poultier-er, upholster-er; the form sorcer would have sufficed to represent the OF. sorcier mentioned above; cf. ME. sorser (for sorcier), a sorcerer; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1579. Also sorcer-ess, coined as a fem. form of sorcerer by the addition of -ess (F. -esse, Lat. -issa, Gk. -issa) to the short form sorcer as appearing in sorcer-y; the ME. sorcereuse occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 49; bk. vi. 1434; from AF. sorcereuse, French Chron. of London (Camden Soc.), p. 3.

SORDID, dirty, mean, vile. (F. - L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 23. -F. sordide, 'sordid'; Cot. = L. sordidus, vile, mean, orig. dirty. -L. sordis, from sordies, dirt, smuttiness, orig. blackness; allied to Russ. sor, filth. See Brugmann, i. p. 1092. Der. sordid-ly, -ness.

SORE, wounded, tender or susceptible of pain, grieved, severe. (E.) ME. sor (with long o), grievous, Ancren Riwle, p. 208, l. 2; commoner as sore (disyllabic), adverb, Chaucer, C. T. 7961 (E85). AS. sār, painful; Grein, ii. 391; the change from ā to long o being regular, as in stone, hone, from AS. stān, bān. + Du. zere, zore; also as adv. sorely, very much; Icel. sār, sore, aching; Swed. sār; OHG. sār, wounded, painful; cf. OHG. sāro, mod. G. sāhr, sorely, extremely, very; G. ver-sāren, to wound, lit. to make sore. β. All from Teut. type sairuz, sore; Fick, iii. 313. Cf. OIrish sāth, sāth, tribulation. Der. sore, adv. ME. sore, AS. sāre, Grein; sore-ly, sore-ness. Also sore, sb., orig. a neuter sb., and merely the neuter of the adjective, occurring in AS. sār (Grein), cognate with Du. sār, Icel. sār, Swed. sār, Goth. sair, OHG. sār, all used as sbs. Also sorry-y, q. v.

SORRELL (r), a plant allied to the dock. (F. - MIIG.) 'Sorrell, an herbe'; Palgrave. -OF. sorel, 'the herb sorrell or sour-dock'; Cot. Mod. F. sorelle (Littre). So named from its sour taste; formed with the suffix -el (L. -ellus) from MIIG. sār (G. sauer), sour, cognate with E. Sour, q. v. Hence also we find AS. sāre, sorrel, Cockayne's Leechdoms, Gloss. to vol. ii; from AS. sār, sour.

SORREL (s), of a reddish-brown colour. (F. - Teut.) 'Sorrell, colour of an horse, sorrel'; Palgrave. He also gives: 'Sorrell, a yonge bucke'; this is properly a buck of the third year, spelt sorel, l. L. L. iv. 2. 60, and doubtless named from its colour. ME. sorell, Book of St. Albans, fol. c. 4. -OF. sorel, a sorrel horse; Chanson de Roland, 1379. A dimin. form from OF. sor, a sorrel horse, id. 1943; F. saur, adj. 'sorrell of colour, whence harenc saur, a red herring.' Cot. Hence saur, sb. m., 'a sorrell colour, also, a sorrell horse'; id. Cf. Ital. soro, a sorrel horse, also spelt saur; see Diez. -Low G. soor, scar, dried, dried or withered up; Du. soor, 'dry, withered, or sear'; Hexham; cognate with E. sear, adj., q. v. The reference is to the brown colour of withered leaves; cf. Shakespeare's 'the sear, the yellow leaf', Macb. v. 3. 23. The F. harenc saur, explained by Cotgrave as a red herring, meant originally a dried herring; indeed Cot. also gives F. sorer, 'to dry in the smook', formed from Low G. soor. See sores, sorrels; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 429.

SORROW, grief, affliction. (E.) ME. sorwe, Chaucer, C. T. 1221 (A 1219); also sorje, Will. of Shorcham, p. 32, l. 7. AS. sorg, sork, sorrow, anxiety; gen. dat. and acc. sorge (whence ME. sorje, sorwe); Grein, ii. 465. + Du. sorg, care, anxiety; Icel. sorg, care; Dan. and Swed. sorg; G. sorge; Goth. saurga, sorrow, grief; whence saurgan, to grieve. β. All from Teut. type sorgā, l. care, solicitude; Fick, iii. 329. Related to Lithuan. sirgti (l. p. s. perge), to be ill, to suffer; whence sarginti, to take care of a sick person, like G. sorgen, to take care of. And cf. OIrish serg, sickness. γ. It is quite clear that sorrow is entirely unconnected with sore, of which the orig. Teut. type was sairuz, from a SEI (probably 'to wound'); but the two words were so confused in English at an early period that the word sorry owes its present sense to that confusion; see Sorry. Der. sorrow-ful, answering to AS. sorgful, Grein, ii. 466; sorrow-ful-ly, sorrow-ful-ness.

SORRY, sore in mind, afflicted, grieved. (E.) Now regarded as closely connected with sorrow, with which it has no etymological connexion at all, though doubtless the confusion between the words is of old standing. The spelling sorry with two r's is etymologically wrong, and due to the shortening of the o; the o was orig. long; and the true form is sory, which is nothing but the sb. sore with the suffix -y (AS. -ig), formed exactly like stone-y from stone, bone-y from bone, and gore-y from gore (which has not yet been turned into gorry). We find the spelling sarye as late as in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 651, col. Arber, p. 64, l. 18. The orig. sense was wounded, afflicted, and hence miserable, sad, pitiable, as in the expression 'in a sorry plight.' Cf. 'a salt and one [painful] rheum'; Oth. iii. 4. 51. ME. sory (with long o and one r), often with the mod. sense of sorrowful; 'Sori for her synnes.' P. Plowman, B. x. 75. Also spelt sary, Pricke of Conscience, 3468. AS. sārig, sad; 'sārig for his synnum' - sorry for his sins, Grein, ii. 392; sār-lys, sorrow, lit. sorceness, Ælfric's Saints' Lives, vi. 321. Cf. sār-lys, lit. sore-like, used with the same sense of 'sad.' Formed with suffix -ig (as in stān-ig - stone-y) from AS. sār, a sore, neut. sb., due to the adj. sār, sore. See Sore. Cognate words appear in Du. zeerig, full of sores, Swed. ārig, sore; words which preserve the orig. sense. Der. sorri-ly, sorri-ness.

SORT, a lot, class, kind, species, order, manner. (F. - L.) 'Sorte, a state, sorte'; Palgrave. A fem. sb., corresponding to which is the masc. sb. sort, a lot, in Chaucer, C. T. 846 (A 844). -OF. sorte, sb. fem. 'sort, manner, form, fashion, kind, quality, calling'; Cot. Related to F. sort, sb. masc. 'a lot, fate, luck, &c. id. Cf. Ital. sorta, sort, kind, sorte, fate, destiny; F. gives only sorte, 'chance, fate, fortune, also the state, quality, function, calling, kinde, vocation or condition of any man, whence the notion of sort (= kind) easily follows. 'Sort' was frequently used in the sense of a company, assemblage (as in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 5), as lot is in vulgar language; Wedgwood. All the forms are ultimately due to L. sortem, acc. of sors, lot, destiny, chance, condition, state. Probably allied to serere, to connect, and to series, order; see Series. Brugmann, i. § 516 (1). Der. sort, verb, L. L. L. i. 1. 261; a-sort, q. v.; con-sort, q. v. Also sort-er, sb.; sort-ance, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 11; sorcery, q. v.

SORTIE, a sally of troops. (F. - L.) A modern military term, and mere French. -F. sortie, 'an issue, going forth'; Cot. Fem. of sortir, 'issued, gone forth'; id., which is the pp. of sortir, 'to issue, sally'; id. Cf. Span. surtida, a sally, sortie; from Span. surtir, 'to rise, rebound', Minshew, obsolete in this sense. Also Ital. sortita, a sally; from sortire, to make a sally, go out. β. According to Diez and others, Ital. sortire, to sally, is quite a different word from sortire, to elect (the latter being plainly connected with L. sortiri, to obtain by lot); whereas Ital. sortire, to sally, MSpan. surtir, to rise, answer to a L. type surtire*, to rouse or rise up, formed from surrectum, supine of surgere, to rise; see SOURCE. We may further note Ital. sorto, used as the pp. of sorgere, to rise; showing that the contraction of surtire* to sortire presents no difficulty; cf. Span. surtio, pp. of surgir, to rise; and see RESORT.

SOT, a stupid fellow; a drunkard. (E.) ME. sot, in early use; Layamon, 1442; Ancrén Riwle, p. 66, l. 1; in the sense of 'foolish'. We find sot-sip = sot-ship, i.e. folly, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1131; ed. Earle, p. 260, l. 8. Spelt solt, Ælfric, Saints' Lives, 13. 132. The entry 'Sottus, sot', is in an A. S. Glossary of the 11th century; in Voc. 316, 7; also 'Stolidos, sot', in Napier's Glosses, 56. 173. Prob. a true Teut. word, though first appearing in the Late L. sotus, ah. A. D. 800 (Ducange); whence also F. sot. β We also find MDu. sot, 'a fooler or a sot', Hexham; and MHG. sote. γ Franck connects it with Du. zuot-sen, to tattle, to brag, G. schwätzen, to tattle; from sot*, weak grade of sue-*. It is known that Theodulf, bishop of Orleans, punned upon the words Sotus and sotus (Sot and sot), in a letter to Charles the Great; see Ducange, s. v. sotus. δ Distinct from Span. sota, a blockhead, Ital. sozzo, for which see Körting, § 4790. Der. sot-ish, sot-ish-ly, sot-ish-ness.

SOU, a French copper coin, five centimes. (F.-L.) Merely borrowed from F. son; Cotgrave uses son as an E. word. -OF. sol, later sol, 'the son', or French shilling, whereof ten make one of ours; Cot. The value varied. -L. solidus, adj. solid; also, as sb., the name of a coin, still preserved in the familiar symbols l. s. d. (= libra, solidi, denarii). See SOLID and SOLDIER. Der. solidier, q. v. SOUBRETTE, a maid-servant, in French comedy. (F.-Prov. -L.) F. soubrette (see Hatzfeld). -Prov. soubrette, fem. of soubret, affected; allied to sombra, vb. to pass over, leave on one side, also to exceed, surpass. -L. superare, to surpass, surmount. -L. superus, upper; allied to super, above; see SUPER (prefix). Cf. the E. phr. 'a superior person'.

SOUBRIQUET, a nickname; see Sobriquet. SOUCHONG, a kind of tea, (Chinese). Yule (p. 691) explains it from Cantonese sin-chung, for Chin. sin-chung, 'little sort'. Douglas (Dict. of Amoy vernacular) gives it as siu-ching-té, souchong tea; and explains ching as meaning, literally, 'seed'.

SOUGH, a sighing sound, as of wind in trees. (Scand.) Stanyhurst has soughing, sb., tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 631; ed. Arber, p. 63. 'My heart, for fear, gave rough for rough;' Burns, little of Sheriffmuir, l. 7. We also find ME. soughen, Chaucer, C. T. 1081 (A 1979), 2619; better sough, as in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 759, where it has the sense of 'swaying motion'; formed as a sb. from the AS. verb sugian, to sound, resound, make a noise, as in swiged windas - the winds whistled; Grein, ii. 516. [The AS. sb. is swig, with mutation of ō to ē.] (f. OSax. swigian, to rustle (Heliland); Icel. -suga, as in arn-suga, the rustling sound of an eagle's wings. Probably (like sigh, sob) of imitative origin. See BURGE.

SOUL, the seat of life and intellect in man. (E.) ME. soule, Chaucer, C. T. 9010 (E 1134); also saule, Layamon, 27634; gen. sing. soule, Gower, C. A. i. 39; prol. 1052; pl. oulen, Ancrén Riwle, p. 30, l. 16. AS. sāwel, sāwel, sāwel; also sāwel, sāwle; gen. sing. sāwle; Grein, ii. 392. +Du. ziel; Dan. siel; Swed. själ; f. the soul. See Brugmann, i. § 200. Der. soul-ed, high-soul-ed, soul-less.

SOUND (1), adj., whole, perfect, healthy, strong. (E.) ME. sound, Chaucer, C. T. 5570 (B 1150). AS. sound, sound; Grein, ii. 494. +Du. gezond (with prefix ge-); Swed. and Dan. sound; G. gesund (with prefix ge-). By some connected with L. sanus, used with like meanings; see BANA. But it is rather for sundum*, from the weak grade sund-* of Teut. suew-, whence Teut. suewþoz, Goth. swinþis, AS. swiþ, strong. Der. sound-ly, sound-ness.

SOUND (2), a strait of the sea, narrow passage of water. (E.) ME. sound, King Horn, 628, in Ritson's Met. Romances, ii. 117; spelt suund, Cursor Mundi, 621. AS. suund, (1) a swimming, (2) power to swim, (3) a strait of the sea, so called because it could be swum across; Grein, ii. 494. Hence AS. suund-hengest, a 'sound-horse', i.e. a ship; +Icel. Dan., Swed., and G. suund. β From the Teut. type suum-doz*; formed with suffix -doz, from suum-, weak grade of AS. swimman, to swim; see SWIM. Fick, iii. 362. Der. suund, the swimming-bladder of a fish; spelt suunde, Prompt. Parv. p. 466; this is merely another sense of the same word; Shetland suund; MDan. suund; cf. Icel. suund-magi, lit. sound-maw, the swimming-bladder of a fish.

SOUND (3), a noise. (F.-L.) The final d (after n) is extraneous, just as in the vulgar goun for gown, in the nautical use of bound for ME. bowen (ready), and in the obsolete round, to whisper, for roun. ME. suoun, Chaucer, C. T. 4983 (B 563); King Ali-saunders, 772; spelt son, Will. of Palerne, 39. -F. son, 'a sound'; Cot. -L. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound. -Skt. svana-, sound; AS. ge-swin (< suen-), melody. From SWEN, to sound, resound; cf. Skt. svan, to sound; Fick, i. 256. Brugmann, ii. § 519. Der. suound, verb, ME. suoun, Chaucer, C. T. 567 (A 565), from F. sonner, L. sonāre. Also see son-ata, sonn-eti, son-or-ous, per-son, far-son, as-son-ant, con-son-ant, dis-son-ant, re-son-ant, uni-son.

SOUND (4), to measure the depth of water with a plummet, to probe, test, try. (F.-Scand.) 'I suonde, as a schyppe-man suoundeth in the see with his plummet to knowe the depeth of the see, ye pilote.' Palgrave. ME. suonden, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 535. -F. sonder, 'to sound, prove, try, feel, search the depth of'; Cot. -F. sonde, 'a mariner's sounding-plummet', id. β Diez supposes that this answers to a L. form subundare*, to submerge; a similar contraction possibly occurs in the instance of sombre as connected with sub unbrā. If so, the etymology is from L. sub, under; and unda, a wave; see SUB- and UNDULATE. γ But the Span. sonda means, not only a sounding-line, but also a sound or channel; and it is far more likely that the F. sonder was from the sb. sonde, and that this was taken from the Scand. word suund, a narrow strait or channel of water; see SOUND (2). This seems to be corroborated by the following entries in Ælfric's Glossary, pr. in Voc. 182. 34, 35: 'Bolidis, suundgyrd,' and 'Cataprotates, suund-line.' So also: 'Bolidis, suundgyrd in scipe, ððe rāp, i. met-rāp' = a sounding-rod in a ship, or a rope, i.e. a measuring rope; id. 358. 17. Here bolidis represents Gk. bolis (gen. bolidos), a missile, a sounding-lead; and suund-gyrd = sound-yard, i.e. sounding-rod. Similarly suund-line must mean a sounding-line, let down over the prow (κατά πρῶπον). Moreover suund-gyrd is a very old word, as it occurs in the Corpus Gloss. 319 (8th cent.). There is always a probability in favour of a nautical term being of Scand. or E. origin. But it is remarkable that there is no trace of the verb except in French, Span., and Portuguese; so that we may have taken the verb from French; while this again was borrowed from the Scand. suund = AS. suund, a sound. Der. suound-ing.

SOUNDER, a herd of wild swine. (E.) 'Sunderer, a term used by hunters for a company of wild Bores'; Phillips (1658). [Not a single boar, as sometimes erroneously said.] ME. suunder, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1440. AS. sūnor; Orthumb. sūnor, Luke, viii. 32; Omerc. sūnor, Matt. viii. 32 (Rushworth MS.).

SOUR, having an acid taste, bitter, acid. (E.) 'Sour, don't leaven'; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 33. AS. sūr; 'sūr meole' = sour milk, Voc. 129. 1. +Du. zuur; Icel. súrur; Dan. suur; Swed. sur; OHG. sūr; G. sauer. β All from Tent. type sōroz*, sour; Fick, iii. 327. Further related to W. sur, sour; Russa, suroviti, raw, coarse, harsh, rough; Lithuan. surus, salt. Brugmann, i. § 114. Der. sour-ly, sour-ness; sour, verb, Cor. v. 4. 18; sour-ish. Also sorr-ed (1).

SOURCE, rise, origin, spring. (F.-L.) ME. source, Chaucer, C. T. 7925 (E 49); said of the 'rise' of a bird in flight, id. 7320 (D 1938). -OF. source, source, source, source, later source, 'a source', Cot. Here source is the fem. of sors, the old pp. of sordre (mod. F. sourdre), to rise. The OF. sordre is contracted (with intercalated d) from L. surgere, to rise. See SURGE. Der. re-source; and see sortie, re-surrection, source (2).

SOUSE (1), pickle. (F.-L.) 'A soused [pickled] gurnet'; 1 Hen. IV. iv. 2. 13. ME. suouse, suouse. 'Succidum, Anglice saucer'; id. 614. 20. Hence also ME. suouer, another form of saucer; id. 661. 17. In fact, suouse is a mere doublet of sauc. -OF. sauc, later sauc, 'a sauce'; see SAUCE. Der. suouse, verb, to pickle, immerse in brine. 'I suouse fische, I laye it in suouse to preserve it.' Palgrave.

SOUSE (2), SOWSE, to swoop down upon. (F.-L.) 'Spred thy broad wing, and suouse on all mankind'; Pope, Epit. to Satires, Dial. ii. 15. See Shak. K. John, v. 2. 150; Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 8. It was a term of falconry, and orig. applied, not to the downward, but the upward rapid flight of a bird of prey; see Chaucer, C. T. 7520 (D 1938); House of Fame, li. 36; where it is spelt sours. But the r is lost in the Book of St. Albans, fol. d. 1, back, where a hawk is said to take a bird 'at the mount or at the source'. This ME. sours is the same word as the mod. E. sourcer. See SOURCE. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 275. ¶ Quite distinct from Swed. susa, to rustle, G. sausen, &c.

SOUTH, the point of the compass where we see the sun at mid-day. (E.) ME. south, Chaucer, C. T. 4913 (B 493). AS. sūð, Grein, ii. 492; also sūða, sb. masc., the south, southern region; sūðan, adv., from the south; +Du. zuid, south; zuiden, southern (as in Zuider Zee, southern sea); zuiden, the south; zuidr. old form also sunnr., south; sunnan, adv., from the south; cf. subrey, southern island, pl. Subreyjar, Sodor, the Ilcbrides; +Dan. syd, south, sünden, southern; Swed. syd, south, söder, the south, sunnan, the south; OHG. sund, south, mod. G. süd; OHG. sundan, the south, also, from the south, G. süden. β. All from the Teut. base sunt-*; perhaps allied to Sun, q.v. ¶ The loss of n before th is regular in AS.; so that sūd is for sund*. Der. south-east, south-east-ern, south-east-er-ly; south-west, south-west-ern, south-west-er-ly; south-ward (see Toward). Also south-ern, ME. southern, Chaucer, C. T. 17353 (I 42). AS. sūðerne (Grein); cognate with Icel. súðrann and OHG. sundrini; see Northern. Hence south-er-ly, for south-ern-ly. Also southerwood, a kind of wormwood, AS. sūðerne wudu, as coming from southern Europe.

SOUVENIR, a remembrance, memorial. (F.—L.) Modern. — F. souvenir, sb., 'a remembrance'; Cot. It is merely the infim. mood souvenir, 'to remember,' used substantively; cf. Leisure, Pleasure. — L. subuenire, to come up to one's aid, to occur to one's mind. — L. sub, under, near; and uenire, cognate with E. come; see Sub- and Come.

SOVEREIGN, supreme, chief, principal. (F.—L.) The g is well known to be intrusive; as if from the notion that a sovereign must have to do with reigning. We find 'souveraigne power'; Hamlet, ii. 2. 27 (first folio); but the spelling with g does not seem to be much older than about A.D. 1570, when we find soveraygne in Levins. Palsgrave (A. v. 1530) has soveraigne. ME. soverein (with u—v), Chaucer, C. T. 6630 (D 1048). — OF. soverain (Burguy); later soverain, 'sovereign, princely'; Cot. — Late L. acc. super-annum, chief, principal; formed with suffix -annus from L. super, above; see Super-. Der. sovereign, sb., a peculiar use of the adj.; sovereignty, ME. soverainete, Chaucer, C. T. 6620 (D 1038), from OF. soverainete, later soverainete, 'sovereignty,' Cot. See Soprano.

SOV (1), to scatter seed, plant. (E.) ME. sowen, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 3; strong verb, pt. t. sow, id. xiii. 31; pp. sowen, sowun, id. xiii. 19. AS. sōwan, pt. t. sōw, pp. sāwen; Grein, ii. 392. The long ā becomes long o by rule; the pt. t. now in use is sowed, but the correct form is sow (in prov. E.); the like is true for the verb to mow (AS. mōwan). +Du. zaaien; Icel. sá; Dan. saa; Swed. så; OHG. sāwen, G. säen; Goth. saian. β. All from a Teut. root sō-* = Idg. sē-*, to sow. Further related to W. han, to sow; Lithuan. sėti (pres. sing. sėja, I sow); Russ. siaiat(s), to sow; L. serere (pt. t. seui, pp. se-tum); Gk. typon (f. tygō-mu), I scud, throw. The orig. sense of the root was prob. 'to cast.' Brugmann, i. §§ 132, 310. Der. se-d, q.v.; and, from the same root, se-min-al, dis-se-min-ate.

SOV (2), a female pig; an oblong piece of metal in a lump larger than a pig of metal. (F.) ME. sow, Chaucer, C. T. 2021 (A 2019); spelt soze (for soghe), Aynbite of Inwytt, p. 61; sawes, Ancrén Riwle, p. 204. The so is substituted for an older g. AS. suga, contracted form sū; Grein, ii. 492; +Du. zog; Icel. sgr; Dan. so; Swed. sugga, so; OHG. sū; G. sau. Also W. huoch; Irish suig; L. sūs; Gk. tr or ovs; Zend. hu, a boar (Fick, i. 801). All from the sū-*, to produce; as in Skt. sū, to generate, to produce, sūkh, to bring forth; from the prolific nature of the sow. 2. In the sense of 'a large mass of metal,' see explanation under Pig; we find 'sow of lead' in Palsgrave. Der. sow-thistle, sowthistle (Palsgrave); AS. sugehistel, Gloss. to vol. iii. of A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also sail (2). And see suine.

SOWANS, SOWENS, dumfery; made by steeping the husks of oatmeal in water. (C.) 'Sowens, with butter instead of milk to them, is always The Halloween Supper'; Burns, note to last st. of Halloween. Pronounced (sow-enz). — Gael. sioghán, 'the juice of sowens'; Macleod. — Gael. siogh, juice; allied to sūgh, vb., to drain, to suck in. +L. sūgere, to suck; AS. sūcan, to suck; cf. AS. socian, to soak. The sense is 'soakings.'

SOY, a kind of sauce. (Japanese.) 'Japan, from whence the true soy comes.' W. Dampier, A New Voyage, ed. 1699, ii. pt. i. p. 28. And see tr. of Thunberg's Travels, vol. iv. p. 121, ed. 1795 (Todd). 'The Japanese ... prepare with them [the seeds of the Dolichos soja, a kind of bean] the sauce termed soya, which has been corrupted into soy;' English Cyclopædia. The Japanese word is properly shōyu, which is the name for the sauce made from a bean called daidzu. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 277; C. P. G. Scott, Malayan Words, p. 65.

SPA, a place where there is a spring of mineral water. (Belgium.) Called spaw in Johnson's Dict., and in Bailey, ed. 1735. The name, now generally used, is taken from that of Spa, in Belgium, S.W. of Liège, where there is a mineral spring, famous even in the 17th century. 'The spaw in Germany'; Fuller's Worthies, Kent. 'Spaw, Spa, a town in Liège, famous for medicinal waters.' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. 'The Spaw'; Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 376 (1572).

SPACE, room, interval, distance. (F.—L.) ME. space (disyllabic), Assumption of Mary, ed. Lamb, 178; Chaucer, C. T. 35. — F. espace, 'space'; Cot. — L. spatium, a space; lit. 'that which is enlarged'; cf. Skt. spāti, to swell, increase, spāti, enlarged. See Speed. Der. space, verb; space-ious, from F. spacieux (for which Cot. has 'spatieux, spacious'), from L. spatiosus, roomy; space-ious-ly, space-ious-ness. ¶ The prefixed e in F. espace is due to the difficulty of sounding words beginning with sp in French; in English, where there is no such difficulty, the e is dropped.

SPADE (1), an instrument to dig with. (E.) ME. spade (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 555 (A 552); Ancrén Riwle, p. 384, l. 16. AS. spadu; 'Vanga, vel fossorium, spadu'; Voc. 333. 39; later spade, id. 550. 26. Also spadu, id. 106. 19. +Du. spade; Icel. spati; Dan. and Swed. spade; G. spate, spaten; Gk. σπάθη, a broad blade, of wood or metal, a spatula, blade of an oar, blade of a sword, spathe or sheath of a flower (whence L. spatha was borrowed, which further gave rise to F. épée, OF. espee, a sword). Der. spade (at cards); spaddle, the same word as paddle (2), q.v.; spat-u-la, q.v.; spad-ille, spelt spadillio in Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 49, the ace of spades at the game of quadrille, F. spadille, borrowed from Span. espadilla, a small sword, the ace of spades, dimin. of spada, a sword, from L. spatha < Gk. σπάθη. And see epaulet.

SPADE (2), a suit at cards. (Span.—L.—Gk.) The name spade is really a substitution for the Spanish name espada, meaning (1) a sword, (2) a spade at cards; compare the etymology of spadille, given under Spade (1). The Spanish cards have swords for spades; see Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, b. iv. c. 2, § 20; Archaeologia, vii. 135. ¶ Spade (1) and spade (2) are cognate, though one is L., and the other Gk.

SPALPEEN, a mean fellow. (Irish.) 'The poor harvest-men who now pass in troops from Ireland to England are now called spalpeens, with a show of contempt or disrespect'; MS. ab. 1740, in N. and Q. 3 S. viii. 307. And see under Buckeen in Davies, Suppl. Glossary. Sometimes introduced into novels relating to Ireland. — Irish spailpín, a mean fellow, rascal, stroller; from spail, a bean, also pride, self-conceit; +Gael. spailpean, a bean, fop, mean fellow; from spail, pride, self-conceit; cf. spail, verb, to strut, walk affectedly.

SPAN, to measure, extend over, grasp, embrace. (E.) ME. spannen, very rare. 'Thenne the kinge spanes his spere' = then the king grasps his spear; Aynwyt of Arthur, st. xiii. l. 1. AS. spannan (pt. t. spēnn), to bind; gespannan, to bind, connect; Grein, ii. 467, l. 456. +OHG. spannan, to extend, connect, a strong verb, pt. t. spēan; hence G. spannen, weak verb. Further related words appear in the Du. spannen, pt. t. spande (weak), but pp. gespannen (strong), to stretch, span, put horses to; Dan. spænde (for spanne), to stretch, strain, span, buckle; Swed. spinna, to stretch, strain, draw, extend; Icel. spenna (= spannja, a causal form), to span, clasp. β. All from the Teut. verb spannan-, to extend, orig. a reduplicating verb with pt. t. spēsann; Fick, iii. 352. The base SPAN is extended from SPA*, to span, extend; cf. Gk. σπάω, to draw, draw out; Brugmann, ii. § 661. Perhaps allied to Spin. Der. span, sb., a space of about 9 inches, the space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger when the fingers are most extended, also, the stretch of an arch or a space of time, from AS. span (better spann); we find 'span, vel hand-bred' = span, or hand-breadth, in Voc. 158. 11; so also Du. span, Icel. spinn, Dan. spand (for spann), Swed. spann, G. spanne. Hence span-span, Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 2, l. 23 from end; span-counter, a game, 2 Hen. VI. iv. 2. 166. ¶ For span-new, see that word, which is unconnected with the present one.

SPANCEL, a kind of fetter for a horse or cow. (E.) Ray has: 'Spancel, a rope to tie a cow's hinder legs'; 'as a N. Country Word. From ME. spann-en, to tie, fasten; and the equivalent of AS. sāl, ME. sol, prov. E. sole, a rope. The latter vowel is prob. due to AS. sāl-an, vb., to tie (for sāl-ian*), or to Icel. sæl, a rope; cf. prov. E. seal, to bind with a rope; +Du. spanzel, G. spannsel, a spancel. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 277.

SPANDREL, the triangular space included between the arch of a doorway, &c., and a part of a rectangle formed by the outer mouldings over and beside it. (F.—L.) History obscure; an architectural term. Older forms spandure (Halliwell); spandrel (Ogilvie's Dict.). Lit. 'level space.' From OF. explan-er, to flatten, to level. — L. ex, out; and planire, to make flat, from planus, flat; see Plain and Esplanade. The F. sb. was prob. founded on Ital. spianatura, a levelling (Barretti).

SPANGLE, a small plate of shining metal. (E.) ME. spangle, of which the sense seems to have been a lozenge-shaped spangle used to ornament a bridle; see Prompt. Parv., p. 313, note 3, and p. 467, note 1. It is the dimin. of spang, a metal fastening; with suffix -el (which is commonly French, but occasionally English, as in kernel from corn). 'Our plumes, our spangs and all our quaint airy'; Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 377; 'With glittering spangs that did like starres appear,' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 45. AS. spange, a metal clasp or fastening, Grein, ii. 467; also gespung, id. i. 456. †MDu. spange; 'een spange van metal, a thinn pece of mettle, or a spangle'; Hexham; 'een spange-maecher, a buckle-maker or a spangle-maker; id.; Icel. spång, explained by 'spangle', though it seems rather to mean a clasp; G. spange, a brooch, clasp, buckle, ornament. β. Cf. Gk. σπῆγε-οὐρ, to bind tight, pinch in; σπῆγγειν, to bind tight, σπῆγγος, a lace, band.

SPANIEL, a Spanish dog. (F.—Span.—L.) ME. spaniel, Chaucer, C. T. 5849; spelt spannel in five MSS., Group D, 267; spanzele, Voc. 638. 10. Cf. ME. Spannyell, a Spaniard, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iv. 419.—OF. espagnel, 'a spaniel'; Cot.—Span. español, Spanish. —Span. España, Spain.—L. Hispania, Spain. The origin of the name of the country is unknown.

SPANK, to beat or slap. (E.) 'Spank, a hard slap; to move energetically; Spanker, a man or animal very large, or excessively active; Spanking, large, lusty, active; &c.; Halliwell. An E. word, though not found in old authors. †NFries. and Dan. spanke, to strut, to stalk; Low G. spakken, spenkern, to run and spring about quickly. β. From a Teut. base SPAK, significant of quick motion or violent action; cf. EFries. spaken, to split, burst with heat. Der. spank-er, an after-sail in a barque.

SPAN-NEW, entirely new. (Scand.) ME. spannewe, Havelok, 968; Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1665; span-newe, K. Alisander, 4055. (The term is prob. Scand., not E.; otherwise we should rather have expected a form spoon-new or span-new, 'spoon-new', which is the corresponding E. form, as will appear.)—Icel. spánnýr, also spánnýr, span-new; compounded of spánn, a chip, shaving, made by a plane, knife, or axe; and nýr, new, cognate with E. new, q. v. Another sense of Icel. spánn is a spoon; see Spoon.—MHG. spänniue; from MLG. spān, G. span, a chip, splinter, and nüwe or neu, new. β. We also use the phrase spick and span new, which is also of Scand. origin; see the very numerous phrases of this character in Swed. dialects, as given by Kietz, who instances spik-spångende ny, completely new, answering to Swed. till spint och spån ny, with its varying forms spingspångande ny, spittspångande ny, spittspångende ny, and 18 more of the same character. So also Du. spikspeldernieuw, lit. spick-and-spill-new; since speld is a spill or splinter. So also Swed. spillerny, lit. spill-new. So also Dan. spilterny, lit. splinter-new. The Swed. and Du. spik are forms of Spoke; hence spick and span new—spike and chip new. All the terms 'signify fresh from the hands of the workman, fresh cut from the block, chip and splinter new'; Wedgwood.

SPAR (1), a beam, bar, rafter; a general term for yards, gaffs, &c. (E.) ME. sparre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 992 (A 990). The AS. sb. is not found, but the word is doubtless E.; we find the derived verb sparrian, to fasten with a bar, to bolt, as in 'gesparrado dure'—the door being fastened, Matt. vi. 6 (Lindisfarne MS.). †Du. spur; Icel. sparri; Dan. and Swed. sparre; OIHG. sparro; MHG. sparre; G. sparren. Cf. also Gael. and Irish sparr, a spar, joist, beam, rafter (from E.). β. The orig. sense seems to have been stick or pole; perhaps related to Spear, q. v. Der. sparr, verb, to fasten a door, bar it, P. Plowman, B. xix. 162 (footnote).

SPAR (2), a kind of mineral. (E.) An old prov. F. mining-term; spelt sparr in Manlove's Liberties and Customs of the Lead-mines, A. D. 1653, l. 265 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 8). AS. spær, found in the compound spær-stān (spar-stone); 'Creta argentea, spær-stān'; Voc. 146. 23; 'Gipsus, spær-en'; id. 24. 20 (8th cent). Cf. G. sparkalk, plaster. β. The true G. name is spat or spalk; which is a different word. Der. sparr-y.

SPAR (3), to box with the hands, dispute, wrangle. (F.—Teut.) 'To sparre, as cocks do, confutgere;' Levins (1570). It was thus a term in cock-fighting, and orig. used of striking with the spurs, as cocks do.—OF. esparrer, 'to fling or jerk out with the heels, as a horse in high mane'; Cot. Mod. F. esparrer, little used (Littre); which Littre connects with Ital. sparrare, of which one sense is 'to kick'; but this must be a different word from Ital. sparrare (=L. esparrare), to unfurnish, to let off a gun. β. I suppose OF. esparrer to be of Teut. origin; cf. Low G. sparre, sb., a struggling, striving, Bremen Wörterbuch, iv. 945. Cf. G. sich sperrén, to struggle against, resist, oppose. Perhaps allied to Lithuan. spirti, to stamp, kick, strike out with the feet, resist. See Spur, Spurn. Der. sparr-er, sparr-ing.

SPARABLE, a kind of headless nail used for boots. (E.) A contraction of sparrow-bill; the old name. 'And sparrowbills to clout Pau's shoone;' (1629) T. Dekker, London's Tempe (The Song).

SPARE, frugal, scanty, lean. (E.) ME. spar (rare); 'ypoun spare wyse'—in a sparing manner, temperately; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 901. AS. spær, spare, sparing, as a gloss to L. parvus, Liber Scintillarum, p. 52, l. 6; also found in the compounds spær-hynde, sparing, spær-lic, frugal, spærnis, frugality, all in various glosses (Leo); the derived verb spærjan, to spare, is not uncommon; Grein, ii. 467.—Icel. sparr, sparing; Dan. spær in spærsum, thrifty; Swed. spær in spærsum; G. spär in spärlích. Cf. L. parum, little, parcus, sparing, parcere, to spare; which seem to have lost initial s. Der. spare, verb, ME. sparen, Chaucer, C. T. 6919 (D 1337), from AS. sparian (Grein), as above; cognate with Du. and G. sparen, Icel. and Swed. spara, Dan. spare, and perhaps allied to L. parcere. Also spær-nece, spær-rib; spær-ing, spær-ing-ly.

SPARK (1), a small particle of fire. (E.) ME. spark, Havelok, 91. Omerc. spærén, Voc. 46. 8; AS. spærca, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iij. c. 12; cap. xxxv. § 5.—†MDu. spark (Hexham); Low G. spark; Brem. Wört. β. Perhaps so called from the crackling of a fire-brand, which throws out sparks; Icel. sparka, Dan. spärke, to crackle. Cf. Lithuan. spargti, to crackle like burning fir-wood, Gk. σπάρατος, a cracking, crackling. Brugmann, i. § 531. Der. spark-le, a little spark, with dimin. suffix -el for -el (cf. kernel from corn), ME. sparkle, Chaucer, C. T. 13833 (B 2095); also spark-le, verb, ME. sparklen, C. T. 2166 (A 2164).

SPARK (2), a gay young fellow. (Scand.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 25. The same word as prov. E. sprack, lively. ME. sparklich, adv., also spelt sprachliche; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 10, and footnote. —Icel. spærk, lively, sprightly; also spærk. Hence Icel. spærkligr, whence ME. sprachliche, adj.—Swed. dial. spriker, spriks, spriks, cheerful, talkative (Rietz); Norweg. spærk, ardent, cheerful, lively (Aasen). β. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'talkative,' or 'noisy'; cf. Speak, and Spark (1).

SPARROW, a small well-known bird. (E.) ME. sparrowe, Chaucer, C. T. 628 (A 626); sparewe, Wyclif, Matt. x. 29. Omerc. sparwa*; AS. spærwa, Matt. x. 29.—†Icel. sporr (rare); Dan. spurv; Swed. sparf; OHG. sparo (gen. sparwen), also sparu; MHG. spær; whence G. spær-ling, a sparrow, with double dimin. suffix -ling; Goth. sparwa. β. All from Teut. type sparwom*, m., a sparrow; lit. 'a flutterer'; from SPEK*, to quiver, hence, to flutter; see Spar (3). Cf. Lithuan. sparnas, a bird's wing, a fish's fin, the leaf of a folding door (from the movement to and fro). Der. sparrowhawk, ME. spærhauke, P. Plowman, B. vi. 199, AS. spærhafoc, Voc. 132. 26; cf. Icel. spærhauk (where spær is the stem of sporr), Swed. sparfök (from sparf), Dan. spurvök (from spurv).

SPARVER, SPARVIE, the canopy or tester of a bed. (F.) In 1473: 'J sparvor with j pelow' [pillow]; York Wills, iii. 216. See Nares.—OF. espervier, espervier, 'l'ensemble des pièces qui composent le coussin'; Godefroy; but it may mean 'canopy.' Apparently the same as OF. espervier, a sparrowhawk, also 'a sweep-net' (Cot.); hence, a canopy. Cf. Ital. spauriere, 'any kind of hauke; also a sparvise of a bed'; Florio.

SPARSE, thinly scattered. (L.) Modern; yet the verb spars, to scatter, occurs as early as 1536 (see Todd); and Spenser has 'spersed ayre,' F. Q. i. 1. 39.—L. sparsus (for sparg-sus*); pp. of spargere, to scatter, sprinkle.—†SPEK, to sprinkle; an extension of SPEK*, to scatter (Gk. σπείρειν, for σπείρ-ειν*); see Sperm. Der. spars-ly, -ness. Also a-spars, di-spars, inter-spars.

SPASM, a convulsive movement. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Those who have their necks drawn backward . . . with the spasme;' Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 5; ed. 1634, ii. 41 d; ME. spasme, Landfrank, Chirurgie, p. 309, l. 19.—F. spasme, 'the cramp'; Cot.—L. spasmus, acc. of spasmus—(Gk. σπασμός, a spasm, convulsion.—Gk. σπάειν, to draw, pluck.—†SPA, to draw. Der. spasm-ic, formed with suffix -ic from Gk. adj. σπασμώδης, convulsive; spasm-ic-id-ic, spasm-ic-id-ic-ly.

SPAT (1), a blow, a slap. (E.) In Cent. Dict. Of imitative origin; cf. slap, pat.

SPAT (2), the young of shell-fish. (E.) In Cent. Dict. Formed from spat, to eject, the base of spatter; see Spatter. And compare Spot; also Du. spat, a spot, speck, splash.

SPATE, a river-flood. (F.—Teut.) 'While crashing ice, borne on the roaring spate;' Burns, Brigs of Ayr. And see Jamieson. Cf. Irish speid (borrowed from E. spate), a great river-flood. Also spelt speit. G. Douglas has spait, a torrent; cf. Verg. Æn. ii. 496.—AF. espeit*—OF. espoit, a spouting out (Godefroy).—EFries. speiten, speuten, spoiten, speuten, Du. spuiten, to spout; see Spout. SPATS, gaiters. (E.) Shorter for spatterdash; gaiters to keep off the splatterings of mud that are dashed against the wearer; cf. dash-board or splash-board of a carriage.

SPATTER, to besprinkle, spit or throw out upon. (E.) 1. 'Which th' offended taste With spattering noise rejected;' Milton, P. L. x.

567. Here Milton uses it for sputter, the frequentative of Spit (2), q.v. 2. The usual sense is to be-spotted, and it is a frequentative form, with suffix -er, formed from a base spat-; cf. prov. E. spat, to spit; H.Fries. spalten, to burst, fly out, split; +Du. spalten, to throw, spatter, splash. Cf. Gk. σπαρδόν, a sling.

SPATULA, a broad-bladed knife for spreading plasters. (L. — (Gk.) Spelt spatula in Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 7 [not 17], l. 24 from the end. This is F. spatule, as in Cot. — L. spatula, also spatula; dimin. of spatha, an instrument with a broad blade. — Gk. σπάθη, a broad blade, a spatula, a paddle; cognate with E. Spade (1), q.v.

SPAVIN, a swelling near the joints of horses, producing lameness. (F. — Teut.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, i. 3. 12. ME. spaweyne, 'horsys maledy'; Prompt. Parv. — OF. esparvin (13th cent., in Hatzfeldt), MF. esparvain, 'a spavin in the leg of a horse,' Cot. Cf. MItal. spavano, 'a spavin,' Florio; Ital. spavonio; Span. esparvan (1) spavin, (2) a sparrow-hawk; Port. esparavão; mod. F. éparvin.

β. A comparison of the forms (of which MItal. spavano is for spavano) shows that they answer to a Late L. type spavānus*, parallel to Late L. spārvānus, a sparrow-hawk (F. éparvin). And just as spārvānus is formed with suffix -ānus from OIHG. sparus, a sparrow (or is Latinised from OIHG. spārvāri, a sparrow-hawk, which comes to the same thing), so Late L. spavānus* is formed with suffix -ānus from the same base (sparus). The lit. sense is, accordingly, 'sparrow-like,' from the hopping or bird-like motion of a horse afflicted with spavin. The OIHG. sparus is cognate with E. Sparrow, q.v.

¶ Ménage, who is followed by Diez and Littré, gives much the same explanation, but says that the disease is named from the sparrow-hawk (not the sparrow) because the horse lifts up his legs after the manner of sparrow-hawks. It is obvious that the sparrow is much more likely than the sparrow-hawk to have been the subject of a simile, and it is also clear that spārvānus may have been formed from sparus directly. It makes better sense.

SPAWN, the same as Spa, q.v.

SPAWL, spittle. (E.) 'In the spawl her middle finger dips'; Dryden, tr. of Persius, ii. 63. AS. spūld, Elene, 300 (sic in MS.); variant of OMerc. spūhl, Matt. xxvii. 30; AS. spūll, spittle, allied to spūtan, to spit. See Spit (2).

SPAWN, the eggs of fish or frogs. (F. — L.) 'Your multiplying spawn'; Cor. ii. 2. 82. 'Spawnne of a fysshe'; Palsgrave. The verb occurs in Prompt. Parv., p. 467: 'Spawnyng, spanyn, as fyschys, Pisciculo.' Short for spauden*, and certainly (as Wedgwood suggests), from OF. espandre, 'to shed, spill, pour out, to spread, cast, or scatter abroad in great abundance'; Cot. (So also Ital. spandere, to spill, shed, scatter.) β. The etymology is proved by a gloss in Wright's Voc. i. 164; cf. N. and Q. 6 S. v. 465. The AF. phrase 'Soffreit le peysoun en ewe espandure', i. e. let the fish spawn in the water, occurs there; and espandure is glossed by scheden his roune, i. e. shed his roe, in the MS.; though misprinted scheden him frome. From L. ex-pandere; see Expand. Der. spawn-er.

SPAY, to render sterile. (F. — L. — Gk.) See Todd's Johnson. — OF. espeer*, not found; (but of the same form as OF. espeer, to pierce with a sword (Godefroy), from OF. espee (= Ital. spada), a sword]. Hence the OF. espeer* would represent the Late L. spādāre, for spadōnāre, to geld. — L. spad-o (gen. spadōnis), a eunuch. — Gk. σπάδων, a eunuch. — Gk. σπά-ειν, to draw, tear, rend.

SPEAK, to utter words, say, talk. (E.) This word has lost an r, and stands for speak. We can date the loss of the r as having taken place before A.D. 1100. The MSS. of the A. S. Gospels have sometimes sprecan and sometimes specan, so that the letter was frequently dropped as early as the 11th century, though it appears occasionally in the latest of them; the same is true for the sb. spāre or spāc, mod. E. speech (or speech); see John, iv. 26, &c. ME. speken, pt. t. spak, pp. spoken, spoke; Chaucer, C. T. 792, 914 (A 790, 912). AS. sprecan (later specan), pt. t. sprec (later spac), pp. sprecen; Grein, ii. 472, +Du. sprecken; OHG. sprekhan; G. sprechen, pt. t. sprach. β. All from Teut. base SPREK, to speak, of which the orig. sense was merely to make a noise, crackle, cry out, as seen in Icel. spaka, Dan. sprage, to crackle, Dan. sprække, to crack, burst; see Spark (1). Cf. Gk. σπάρα, a cracking, crackling. Cf. Lowland Sc. crack, a talk. Der. speak-er; speak-er-ship; speech, q.v.; spokes-man, q.v.

SPEAR, a long weapon, spiked pole, lance. (E.) ME. spre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 2551 (A 2549). AS. spera, John, xix. 34, +Du. speer; Icel. spjör; Dan. spar; G. speer; OHG. sper. Cf. L. sparus, a small missile weapon, dart, hunting-spear. Perhaps related to spar, a beam (hence, a pole). See Spar (1). Der. spear-man, Acts, xxiii. 23; spear-grass, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 340; spear-mint; spear-woot, AS. sperewort, A. S. Leechdoms, Gloss. to vol. iii.

SPECIAL, particular, distinctive. (F. — L.) ME. special, speciale, Ancren Riwle, p. 56, l. 22. Short for specialis; see Especial; and Species (below). Der. special-ly, special-i-ty, special-ty. Doublet, special.

SPECIES, a group of individuals having common characteristics, subordinate to a genus, a kind. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; the ME. form was spice (see Spice). — L. speciēs, a look, appearance, kind, sort. — L. specere, to look, see. + OHG. spēhōn (G. spähen), to spy. Cf. Skt. spag, spag, to spy. — + SPEK, to see. Brugmann, i. § 551. See Spy. Der. speci-al, q.v. Also specie, money in gold or silver, a remarkable form, evolved as a sing. sb. from the old word species = 'money paid by tale,' as in Phillips, ed. 1706; probably by confusion with the L. ablative speciē, as if paid in specie = paid in visible coin. Also specify, q.v., speci-men, q.v., speci-ous, q.v. Also speci-al (doublet of special); fronti-spice, q.v. Doublet, spice.

SPECIFY, to particularise. (F. — L.) ME. specifien, Gower, C. A. i. 33; prol. 866. — OF. spécifier, 'to specify, particularize'; Cot. — Late L. specificare*, to specify (Ducange); pp. specificatus. — L. adj. specificus, specific, particular. — L. speci-, for speciēs, a kind; and -ficus, i. e. making, from L. facere, to make; see Species and Fact. ¶ It thus appears that specify is a more orig. word, but specify is much the older word in English. Cf. specific, MF. specifique, 'special', Cot., from L. specificus, special, as above; whence specific-al, specific-al-ly, specific-ate, specific-al-ion. And hence specify, verb (as above).

SPECIMEN, a pattern, model. (L.) 'Specimen, an example, proof, trial, or pattern'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. specimen, an example, something shown by way of sample. — L. speci-, for specere, to see; with suffix -men. See Species.

SPECIOUS, showy, plausible. (F. — I.) ME. specious, slightly, beautiful; see Trench, Select Glossary. — MF. specieux, 'specious, fair'; Cot. — L. speciosus, fair to see. — L. speci-, for specere, to behold; with suffix -osus; see Species. Der. specious-ly, -ness.

SPECK, a small spot, blemish. (E.) Speck in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Speckid sheep' i. e. spotted sheep; Wyclif, tr. of Gen. xxx. 32. 'Spekke, clowte, Pictadum', i. e. a patch; Prompt. Parv. AS. specca, a spot, mark, pl. speccan; 'Note, speccan', Voc. 34. 25. Cf. Low G. spaken, to be spotted with wet, spakig, spotted with wet; Brem. Wört. iv. 931; MDu. spickelen, 'to speckle, or to spott', Hexham. β. The MDu. spickelen is obviously the frequentative of MDu. spicken, to spit, and Wedgwood's suggestion that 'the origin lies in the figure of spattering with wet' is prob. correct. Cf. Du. spikkelt, a speckle, spot. Hardly allied to L. pingere, to paint (Frank). Der. speck, verb, Milton, P. L. ii. 420. Also speck-le, a little spot, dimin. form, Spenser, tr. of Virgil's Gnat, 250; cf. Du. spikkelt, 2 speckle. Hence speckle, verb.

SPECTACLE, a sight, show. (F. — L.) ME. spectacle, Wyclif, 1 Cor. iv. 9. — F. spectacle, 'a spectacle'; Cot. — L. spectaculum, a show. Formed with suffixes -cu-lus (< -cu-lus) from L. speci-are, to see. — L. spectum, supine of specere, to see; see Species. Der. spectacles, pl. glasses for assisting the sight, pl. of ME. spectacle, a glass through which to view objects, Chaucer, C. T. 6785 (D 1203); hence spectacle-ed, Cor. ii. 1. 222. And see spectator, spectre, speculate.

SPECTATOR, a beholder. (L.; or F. — L.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 46; shelt spectator, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 27. [Perhaps from F. spectateur, 'a spectator'; Cot.] — L. spectator, a beholder; formed with suffix -tor from speci-are, to behold. — L. spectum, supine of specere, to see; see Spectacle, Spy.

SPECTRE, a ghost. (F. — L.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 430. — F. spectre, 'an image, figure, ghost'; Cot. — L. spectrum, a vision. Formed with suffix -trum from spec-ere, to see; see Spectacle, Spy. Der. spectr-al-ion. Doublet, spectrum, a mod. scientific term, directly from L. spectrum.

SPECULAR, suitable for seeing, having a smooth reflecting surface. (L.) 'This specular mount'; Milton, P. R. iv. 236. — L. specularis, belonging to a mirror. — L. speculum, a mirror. — L. spec-ere, to see; see Spy. ¶ Milton's use of the word is due to L. specula, fem. sb., a watch-tower, a closely allied word. Der. specul-ate, from L. speculatus, pp. of speculari, to behold, from specula, a watch-tower; hence specul-at-ion; Minshew, ed. 1627, from F. speculation, 'speculation', Cot., which from L. acc. speculatiōnem; specul-at-or = L. speculator; specul-at-ive, Minshew, from L. speculativus. We also use specul-um = L. speculum, a mirror.

SPEECH, talk, language. (E.) ME. speche (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 8729 (E 853). For spreche, by loss of r. AS. stfde, later form of stfde; Grein, ii. 471. — AS. stfde, 3rd grade of sprecan, to speak; see Speak. +Du. spraak, from spreken; G. sprache, from sprechen. Der. speech-less, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 164; speech-less-ly, -ness.

SPEED, success, velocity. (E.) The old sense is 'success' or 'help.' ME. sped (with long e); 'iuel sped' = evil speed, ill success, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 310. AS. spēd, haste, success; Grein, ii. 467. Here ē is due to o, by the usual change (as in foot, AS. fōt, pl. fēst, AS. fēt), and spēd is due to a Teut. type spōdiz* + OSax. spōd, success (Icelandic); Du. spēd, speed; OHG. spōt, spōt, success. β. All from Teut. type spōdiz*, speed, success (Fick, iii. 355). Here the -d- is a suffix, answering to Idg. -ti- (cf. Verner's law). Allied to Skt. spā-ti, increase, growth; and spā-ta-a, pp. of spāy, to increase, enlarge; Benfey, p. 1087. γ. The AS. spēd, accordingly, from the AS. strong verb spōwan, to succeed, Grein, ii. 471; and the OHG. spōt is allied to the verb spōn, to succeed, an impersonal weak verb. 8. Further allied to L. spatium, room, spēs, hope, prosper, prosperous, Lithuan. spētās, leisure, opportunity. Brugmann, i. §§ 156, 223 (3, note). Der. speed, verb, AS. spēdan, weak verb, pl. t. spēdde, Grein, ii. 468; speed-y, AS. spēdig, id.; speed-i-ty, speed-i-ness.

SPEIR, to ask. (E.) See SPUR.

SPELICANS, a game played with thin slips of wood. (Du.) Imported from Holland, which is famous for toys. Englished from MDu. spelleken, a small pin (Hexham); formed with the MDu. dimin. suffix -ken (= G. -chen, E. -kin) from MDu. spelle, a pin, splinter of wood, allied to E. Spell (4), q.v.

SPELL (1), a form of magic words, incantation. (E.) ME. spel, dat. spelle, Chaucer, C. T. 13821 (B 2083). AS. spel, spell, a saying, story, narrative; Grein, ii. 469. Icel. spjall, a saying; OHG. speli, a narrative; Goth. spjall, a fable, tale, myth. Teut. type spellom*, n. Don. spjall (2), q.v.; go-spjall, q.v.

SPELL (2), to tell the names of the letters of a word. (F. - Teut.) ME. spellen, 'Syllable letters, Syllabic; Spellynge, Syllabicacio; Spellare [speller], Syllabicator; Prompt. Parv. 'Lere hem litlum and lytlan . . . Ty þei couthe speke and spelle, &c. - teach them by little and little till they couthe pronounce and spell; P. Plowman, B. v. 599, 600. - OF. espeler, to spell, to speak, to join letters or syllables together; Cot. Of Teut. origin. From Du. spellen, to spell; the same as AS. spelian, to relate, declare, tell, speak; MHG. spellen, to relate, Goth. spjellan, to narrate. All these are denominative verbs; thus Du. spellen is from OSax. spel, a word (see Heland, 572); AS. spelian is from AS. spell, a tale; and Goth. spjellan, from spjall, a fable; see Spell (1). ¶ E. spell does not appear to be directly from AS. spelian, but seems rather to have been borrowed from French. Certainly the word was sooner or later confused with the old and prov. E. spjell, in the sense of a splinter of wood, as though to spjell were to point out letters with a splinter of wood. Thus Palsgrave has 'festue to spell with; where festue is F. festu, 'a straw, rush, little stalk or stick' (Cot.), from L. festuca; and Halliwell cites from a Dict. written about A.D. 1500 the entry 'To spjelly, Syllabicacio; agreeing with the form 'spjelder of worde' in Palsgrave; indeed, spjeldren, to spell, occurs in the Ormulum, 16347, 16440. So even in Hexham's MDu. Dict. we have 'spelle, a pin, with a striking resemblance to 'spellen, to spell letters or words.' See Spell (4). Der. spjell-er, spjell-ing, spjell-ing-book.

SPELL (3), a turn of work. (E.) 'To Do a Spell, in sea-language, signifies to do any work by turns, for a short time, and then leave it. A fresh spell, is when fresh men come to work, esp. when the rowers are relieved with another gang; to give a spell, is to be ready to work in such a one's room; Phillips, ed. 1706. Not found in ME., but it is almost certainly due to AS. spelian, to supply another's room, to act or be proxy for (Bosworth). Whelock, in his edition of Ælfred's tr. of Bede, p. 151, quotes the following sentence from a homily: 'Se cnyning is Cristes sylfes speligend' - the king supplies the place of Christ himself. So also the following: 'Næs ðāh Isaac oðleggen, ac se ram hine speldode' - Isaac, however, was not slain himself, but the ram supplied his place, or took his spell; Ælfric's Hom. ed. Thorpe, ii. 62. Cf. AS. gospelia, a vicar, deputy (Toller). β. The AS. spelian is perhaps allied to spjellan, to play, to sport; and the latter is cognate with Du. spelen, G. spielen, to play, act a part; these being denominative verbs, formed from the sb. which appears as Du. spel, G. spiel, OIIG. spil, a game.

SPELL (4), SPILL, a thin slip of wood, splinter, a slip of paper for lighting candles. (E.) This word has been assimilated to the verb to spill, from the use of a slip of wood, in schools of the olden times, to point out letters in a book. See remarks on Spell (2). The true form is rather speld. ME. speld, a splinter; pl. speldes, splinters of a broken spear, Will. of Palerne, 3392; hence the dimin. speldar, a splinter (Palsgrave), speldur, Awyowning of Arthur, xiii. 6. AS. speld, a torch, spill used as a torch (Bosworth). + Du. speld, a pin (cf. spil, the pin of a bobbin, spindle, axis); Icel. speld, speldi, a square tablet, orig. a thin slice of board; spilda, a flake, a slice; Goth. spilda, a writing-tablet; MHG. spelle, a splinter. β. All from the Teut. verb spaldan-* (G. spalten), to cleave; a reduplicating verb, like OHG. spaltan, to cleave, split. Cf. Shetland speld, to split (Edmondston); Skt. spāt (for spāth*), to burst open. See Spelicans, Spill (2). Thus the orig. sense is 'that which is split off, a flake, slice, &c.' Der. spelian, q.v. SPELT, a kind of corn. (L.) Called 'spelt come' in Minshew, ed. 1637. Not found in ME. AS. spelt. 'Faar [i.e. L. far], spelt;' Voc. 273. 20. Cf. Du. spelt; G. speltz, spelt. All from Late L. spelta, spelt (ab. A.D. 400); whence also Ital. spelta, speldia, F. speltre, spelt.

SPELTZER, pewter, zinc. (Low G.) 'Sfelter, a kind of metall, not known to the antients, which the Germans call zinc;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. I cannot find an early example of the word, but it is prob. Tenticion, in any case, and occurs again in Low G. speltzer, pewter, Bremen Wörterbuch; cf. Du. spauter, MDu. spauter, from OF. espautre (Godefroy); which suggests an older form speltre*. It is obviously allied to Ital. peloro, pewter, and to E. spelter. See (in Ducange) Late L. pestum (error for peltrum?) and pestreum. Hexham has 'Pentler, or Spauter, Pewter, or fine Tinne.' Godefroy has OF. peltrier (12th cent.), s.v. pastrer; and note that the earlier forms are without the initial s- or pe-. See Pewter; where correct the note that initial s- has been lost.

SPENCER, a short over-jacket. (F. - L.) Much worn about A.D. 1815; see Notes and Queries, 4 S. x. 356. 'Two noble ears, whom, if I quote, Some folks might call me sinner, The one invented half a coat, The other half a dinner;' Epigram quoted in Taylor, Words and Places. The reference is to Earl Spencer and Earl Sandwich. It thus appears that the spencer was named after the celebrated Earl Spencer, viz. John Charles Spencer, third earl, born 1782, died 1845. See further under Spend.

SPEND, to lay out (money), consume, waste. (L.) ME. spenden, Chaucer, C. T. 302 (A 300). AS. spendan; occurring in the compounds ā-spendan and for-spendan; see examples in Sweet's A.S. Reader. Not an AS. word, but merely borrowed from Late L. spendere, to spend, waste, consume. Cf. Late L. dispendium, dispenda, expense, of which the shorter forms spendium, spensa are also found. We also find Late L. spendibilia monita, spending money, i.e. money for current expenses, occurring as early as A.D. 922 (Ducange). So also Ital. spendere, to spend, spendio, expense, where spendio = L. dispendium. Observe also OF. despendre, 'to dispend, spend, expend, disburse, Cot.; despenser, 'to dispend, spend, id.; despensier, 'a spender, also a cater [caterer], or clerk of a kitchen,' id. β. In exactly the same way, the OF. despensier became ME. spensere or spensere, explained by cellarius in the Prompt. Parv., and now preserved in the proper name Spencer or Spenser, formerly Despenser. Trevisa, tr. of Illyden, iv. 33, translates L. dispensator by spenser. Hence even the buttry or cellar was called a spenser, as being under the control of this officer; 'Spence, botry, or celere,' Prompt. Parv. γ. The L. dispendere is compounded of dis-, apart, and pendere, to weigh; see Dis- and Pendant. ¶ The etymology sometimes given, from L. expendere, is less likely; the s here represents dis, not ex; precisely the same loss occurs in spori for dispori. Der. spend-er, spend-thrift, i.e. one who spends what has been accumulated by thrift, Temp. ii. 1. 24; spencer (above).

SPERM, animal seed, spawn, spermaceti. (F. - L. - Gk.) ME. sperme, Chaucer, C. T. 14015 (B 3199). = F. sperme, 'sperm, seed;' Cot. - L. sperma - Gk. σπέρμα, seed - Gk. σπέρμα (- σπέρμα-ν), to sow; orig. to scatter with a quick motion of the hand. (✓SPER.) And see Sparre. Der. spermat-ic, Gk. σπέρμα-ν-κός, from σπέρμα, stem of σπέρμα; spermat-ic-al. Also sperm-oil, sperm-whale; spermaceti, spelt parmaceti in 1 Hen. IV. i. 3. 58, from L. sperma cēti, sperm of the whale, where cēti is the gen. case of cētus = Gk. κῆτος, a large fish; see Cetaceous. And see spor-ad-ic, spore.

SPEW, SPOUE, to vomit. (E.) ME. spewen, P. Plowman, B. x. 40. AS. sprowan, sprowan, weak verbs; sprowan, strong verb, pt. t. spāw, pp. sprowen; Grein, ii. 470. Cf. MDu. sprowen (Hexham); Icel. spjja, Dan. spjje; Swed. spjje; OIIG. spjjan; G. spieien; Goth. spjewan, + L. spuer; Lithuan. spjauiti; Gk. σπύειν (for σπείν*). β. All from ✓SPIW, to spit forth. Expressive of the sound of spitting out; cf. puke (1), spit (2). Brugmann, i. § 567.

SPHERE, a globe, orb, circuit of motion, province or duty. (F. - L. - Gk.) ME. sphere, Chaucer, C. T. 11592 (F 1280). Later sphere, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 56. - OF. sphere, a sphere (Littré). MF. sphere, 'a sphere;' Cot. - L. sphæra - Gk. σφαῖρα, a ball, globe. β. Gk. σφαῖρα = σφαῖρα* = σφαῖρα*; perhaps 'that which is tossed about;' see Spar (3). Der. spher-ic, Gk. σφαῖρα, like a sphere; spher-ic-al, spher-ic-al-ly, spher-ic-i-ty; spher-o-id, that which is like a sphere, from σφαῖρα, for σφαῖρα, round, and οἶδος, form, shape, appearance (from ✓WEID, to see). Hence spheroid-al.

SPHINX, a monster with a woman's head and the body of a lioness, who destroyed travellers that could not solve her riddles. (L. - Gk.) 'Subtle as Sphinx;' I. L. i. iv. 3. 342. Spelt Sphinx by Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. i. = L. sphinx (gen. sphinxis). = Gk. σφιγξ (gen. σφίγγος), lit. 'the strangler,' because she strangled the travellers who could not solve her riddles; from Gk. σφίγγω, to throttle, strangle. ¶ But most likely, this is merely a popular etymology, and the word is foreign to Greek. In fact, the legend is Egyptian; Herodotus, ii. 175, iv. 79.

SPICE, an aromatic vegetable for seasoning food, a small quantity or sample. (F.—L.) A doublet of species. 'Spice, the earlier form in which we made the word our own, is now limited to certain aromatic drugs, which, as consisting of various kinds, have this name of spices. But spice was once employed as species is now.' Trench, Select Glossary, q.v. 'Species, used by the druggists of the Middle Ages for the four kinds of ingredients in which they traded—saffron, cloves, cinnamon, nutmegs.' Bréal, Semantics. ME. spice. 'Alsteyne sou fro al yuel spice,' Wyclif, i. Thess. v. 22; where the Vulgate has 'ab omni specie mala.' In early use. 'Hope is a swete spice,' Ancrén Riwle, p. 78, last line. = OF. espice, spice; Cot. = L. speciem, acc. of species, a kind, species; in Late Latin, a spice, drug; see SPECIES. Der. spice, verb; spice-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 528 (A 526); spice-er, an old word for spice-seller, answering to the mod. grocer, P. Plowman, B. ii. 225; spice-er-y, from OF. espicerie, 'a spicery, also spices.' Cot. = spice-y, spice-ily, spice-ness.

SPIKE AND SPAN-NEW, quite new. (Scand.) In North's Platarch, p. 213 (K.); Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 4, let. 2 (Jan. 20, 1624). Lit. 'spike and spoon new,' where spike means a point, and spoon a chip; new as a spike or nail just made and a chip just cut off. See further under SPAN-NEW. And see SPIKE and SPOON.

SPIDER, an insect that spins webs. (E.) ME. spider, spelt spidre, Aenbite of Iwlyt, p. 164, l. 6 from bottom. Apparently this is the sense of AS. spider, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 42; with -der for -her; from sin-her*, the loss of n before h being of regular occurrence in AS. As -her (ldg. -ter) is an agential suffix, the sense would be spinner, which is also a name for the spider; see E. D. D. From the verb to spin; see SPIN. + Du. spin, a spider; Dan. spindel (for spinner), a spider, from spinde (for spinne), to spin; Swed. spinnad, a spider, from spinna, to spin; G. spinne, a spider, spinner.

SPIGOT, a pointed piece of wood for stopping a small hole in a cask. (Prov.—L.) ME. spigot, Wyclif, Job, xxiii. 19. Spelt spygote, Voc. 724, 10; spykot, id. 573, 30. A term due to the Bourdeaux wine-trade. Apparently from an Olrov. spigote*; Mistral gives the mod. Prov. espigoun, espigoun, the step of a ladder, the bar of a chair, also a spigot. Evidently derived from Olrov. espiga, mod. Prov. espigo, an ear of corn. All from L. spica, an ear of corn; see SPIKE. Cf. also OF. espigote, a bad ear of corn (Godefroy); Walloon spigot, the peak of a shoe. Also Port. espicho, a spigot; from L. spiculum, a little spike, point, dart, dimin. of spica (above). Torriano gives Ital. spigo, spico, the herb spikenard, also a spigot. ¶ The Irish spicéad, W. spigead, are from L.

SPIKE (1), a sharp point, large nail. (Scand.) 'Iron for spikes,' Bacon, Advice to Sir G. Villiers (K.). 'Spikynge, nayle,' Prompt. Parv. Sommer gives an AS. spicing, a large nail; from A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 200. From Icel. spik, spik, a spike; cf. Low G. spike, a wooden peg (Schambach); Du. spijker, a nail. Thought to be distinct from SPIKE (2), and allied, by gradation, to SPOKE, q.v. Der. spike, verb, spiked, spiky.

SPIKE (2), an ear of corn. (L.) ME. spik, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 180. = L. spica, an ear of corn. Der. spike-nard, q.v.; spig-at, q.v.

SPIKENARD, an aromatic oil or balsam. (Hybrid; F.—L. and F.—L.—Gk.—Pers.) 'Precious oymement spikenard;' Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 3; where the Vulgate has 'alabastrum unguenti nardi spiciati pretiosi.' [Thus spike-nard should rather be spiked nard; it signifies nard furnished with spikes, in allusion to the mode of growth. 'The head of Nardus spreads into certain spikes or ears, whereby it hath a twofold use, both of spike and also of leaf; in which regard it is so famous;' Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xii. c. 12 (in Holland's translation).] However, we borrowed it from OF. spiguenard (Godefroy). = L. spica, an ear of corn; and nardi, gen. of nardus, nard; see NARD. The L. spiciatus, furnished with ears, is derived from spica, an ear of corn; see SPIKE (2).

SPILE, a peg for a vent-hole. (E.) Not in Todd's Johnson; but in many E. dialects; see E. D. D. Cognate with Du. spijl, a spile, bar; Low G. spile, a bar, also a skewer (Schambach); cf. G. spießer, a skewer. Teut. types spi-lī*, spi-lō* (Frank); allied to SPIRE (1). SPLIT (1), a splinter, thin slip of wood. (E.) 'Spills, thin slips of wood or paper, used for lighting candles,' Halliwell. 'The spill of wood;' Holland's tr. of Pliny, bk. viii. c. 16; i. 203. ME. spille; Life of Beket, ed. W. H. Black, 1845, l. 850; 'hit nis not worp a spill' = it is not worth a splinter or chip. The same word as SPILL (4), q.v.

SPLIT (2), to destroy, mar, shed. (Scand.) Often explained by 'spoil,' with which it has no etymological connexion. It stands for spild, the ld having passed into ll by assimilation. ME. spillen, commonly in the sense to destroy or mar; also, intransitively, to perish; see Chaucer, C. T. 6480, 5435 (D 898, B 815); Hamlet, iv. 5. 20. In mod. E., only to shed, pour out, effuse. Cf. AS. spillan, to destroy; Grein, ii. 470; apparently borrowed from Icel. spilla, to destroy; Swed. spilla (Dan. spilde, for spille*), to spill. These are assimilated forms, with ll for ld; as shown by the (native) AS. spildan, to destroy, OSax. spildan. Teut. type speli-ljan*; allied to G. spalten, to split. Cf. Skt. spṛhat, spṛhat, to burst; Brugmann, i. § 530. See SPILL (4). Der. spill-er; spill-ik (= AS. spild), Timon, ii. 2. 169.

SPIN, to draw out into threads, cause to whirl rapidly. (E.) The second sense comes from the rapid motion of the spinning-wheel. The former sense is original. ME. spinnen, strong verb, pt. t. span, pp. sponnen; P. Plowman, B. v. 216. AS. spinnan, pt. t. spann, pp. spunnen; Matt. vi. 28. + Du. spinnen; Icel. and Swed. spinna; Dan. spinde (for spinne); G. spinnen; Goth. spinnan (pt. t. spann). β. All from Teut. base spen-*, to draw out. Allied to Lith. spin-li, to weave; Oslav. pti, to stretch out (span); Miklosich, p. 237. See SPAN, a related word. Der. spin-er; spinning; spin-dle, q.v.; spin-ster, q.v.; spid-er, q.v.

SPINACH, SPINAGE, an esculent vegetable. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.) 'Spinage is a "voiced" form of spinach, as it was formerly written. Spelt spinache in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Spynnage, an herbe, espinares;' Palsgrave. ME. speneche; MS. Hail. 2378, p. 247; in Henslow, p. 113. = OF. espinache, espinaque (also espinoche); Godefroy. [Cf. Ital. spinace, 'the herbe spinage,' Florio; mod. F. épinard (with excrement d), OF. espinares, espiner (Cotgrave).] = Span. espinaca. = Arab. aspanākh, isfanāq; of Pers. origin (Devic). β. But referred, by popular etymology, to L. spina, a thorn, a prickle; because 'the fruit is a small round nut, which is sometimes very prickly;' Eng. Cyclopaedia. See SPINE.

SPINDLE, the pin or stick from which a thread is spun. (E.) The d is excrement, as is so common in English after n; cf. sound, thun-der; and spindle stands for spin-le. 'Spinnel, a spindle; North;' Halliwell. In Walter de Bibbesworth (in Wright's Vocab. i. 157, l. 6) we meet with ME. spinel, where another MS. has spindele. AS. spind; = Fusus, spind, Wright's Voc. I. 82, col. 1; 281, col. 2. Formed, with suffix -le, denoting the agent, from AS. spinnan, to spin; see SPIN. + MDu. spille (Hexham); by assimilation for spinte*; OIG. spinnila, MIG. spinnel; whence G. spindel (with inserted d), as well as G. spille (by assimilation). Der. spindle-shanks, with shanks as thin as a spindle. Spindle-tree (Eaunymus), because used for spindles or thin rods, named in German spindelbaum for a like reason; from its use for making skewers it was formerly called prick-wood, i.e. skewer-wood, or prick-timber; see prickwood and spindle tree in Phillips. Also spindl-y, thin (like a spindle or skewer).

SPINDRIFT, spray blown from the tops of waves by a strong wind. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A variant of spoon-drift (Worcester); and spoon (as in Jallay) is for spoon, before d. Hence it is really spoon-drift, i.e. spume-drift, from L. spuma, foam. See SPOON.

SPINE, a prickle, the backbone of an animal. (F.—L.) 'Roses, their sharp spines being gone;' Two Noble Kinsmen, first line. = MF. espine, 'a thorn, prick, prickle;' Cot.—L. spina, a thorn, prickle; also, the spine, the backbone. Closely allied to L. spica, an ear of corn; see SPIKE (2). ¶ Observe that, in the sense of 'backbone,' the word is Latin, rather than French; from the use of Latin in medical treatises. Der. spin-al; spin-y, spin-i-ness; spin-ous; spin-ose; also spin-et, q.v.; spin-ey, q.v.

SPINET, a kind of musical instrument, like a harpsichord. (F.—Ital.—L.) Obscure. It was so called because struck with a spine or pointed quill. In Phillips, ed. 1706. = MF. espinette, 'a pair of virginals;' Cot.—Ital. spinetta, 'a pair of virginals'; also, a little tap, spigot, or gimblet, a prick, a thorn; cf. Florio. Dimin. of Ital. spina, a thorn. = L. spina, a thorn; see SPIKE.

SPINK, a finch, small bird. (Scand.) Lowland Sc. and prov. E. spink, chiefly used of the goldfinch. ME. spink. 'Hic rostellus, Anglice, spynke;' Voc. 640. 38. = Swed. dial. spink, a field-far, sparrow; gul-spink, a goldfinch (Rietz); Dan. dial. spinke, Norweg. spikke (by assimilation for spinke), a small bird, sparrow, finch. 4 Gk. σπινγος, a finch; cf. σπινγος, to pipe, chirp as a small bird. Also σπινγος, a finch; σπινγος, a small bird. Doublet, finch.

SPINNEY, a kind of thicket. (F.—L.) 'Or shelter'd in Yorkshire spinneys;' Hood, Miss Kilmansegg, Her Accident, st. 700. See SPINET in Nares. ME. spennad, Gawain and Grene Knight, st. 700. = OF. espenei, espinoi, m.; Godefroy, cf. MF. espinye, 'a thicket, grove, or ground full of thorns, a thorny plot;' Cot.—L. spineum, a thicket of thorns. = L. spina, a thorn; see SPINE.

SPINSTER, a woman who spins, an unmarried female. (E.)

Formerly in the sense of a woman who spins. 'She spak to spynners to spynnen it oute;' P. Plowman, B. v. 216. Formed from the verb to spyn (AS. spinnan) by means of the suffix -ster (mod. E. -ster). ¶ This suffix (often imperfectly explained) presents no real difficulty; it is due to the conjunction of the Idg. suffixes -es- and -ter; cf. L. min-ister. β This AS. suffix -ster was used to denote the agent, and was conventionally confined to the feminine gender only, a restriction which was gradually lost sight of, and remains only in the word spinster in mod. English. Traces of the restriction remain, however, in sempster-ess or sempstress, and songster-ess or songstress, where the F. fem. suffix -ess has been superadded to the E. fem. suffix -ster. The restriction was strictly observed in AS., and is retained in Dutch; cf. Du. spin-ster, a spinster, zangster, a female singer (fem. of zanger), bedriegster, a female impostor (fem. of bedrieger), inwoonster, a female inhabitant (fem. of inwoner); &c. γ Examples in AS. are the following: 'Trixtrix, webbaestre, a webster, female weaver, fem. of 'Textor, webba, answering to Chaucer's webbe (Prolog. 364), and the name Webb. 'Citharista, hearp-estre, a female harper, fem. of 'Citharedus, hearpere, a harper; Voc. 190. 6. So also: 'Fidicen, fiðelere; 'Fidicina, fiðelestre; Saltator, hearpere; Saltatrix, hearp-estre; id. 311. 24, 32. A striking example is afforded by AS. uigestere, a prophetess, Luke, ii. 36, the word being almost always used in the masc. form uigeta, a prophet. See further under Spin.

SPIRACLE, a breathing-hole, minute passage for air. (F.—L.) ME. spyracle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, li. 408.—F. spiracle, 'a breathing-hole'; Cot.—L. spiraculum, an air-hole; formed with suffix -culum, from spirare, to breathe; see Spirit.

SPIRE (1), a tapering body, spout, point, steeple. (F.) ME. spire, used of a blade of grass or young shoot just springing out of the ground. 'Thilke spire that in-to a true shulde weke,' Test. of Love, bk. iii. ch. v. l. 9. 'Or as an oak coun of a litle spire;' Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1335; spelt spir, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 180. AS. spir (rare): 'hroðdes spir, a spike (or stalk) of a reed, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 266, l. 10. + Icel. spira, a spar, a stilt; Dan. spire, a germ, spout; Swed. spira, a sceptre, a pistil; G. spiere, a spar; Westphal. spir, a blade of grass. Distinct from Spire (2); but allied to Spire (1), Spile. Der. spire, verb, to germinate, spring up, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 52, spelt spyer in Palsgrave; spir-y, spelt spire in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 592.

SPIRE (2), a coil, wreath. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Amidst his circling spires;' Milton, P. L. ix. 502. [Perhaps directly from L. spira.] β Spire, 'a runnel, round, or circle, a turning or winding compass'; Cot.—L. spira, a coil, twist, wreath.—Gk. σπειρα, a coil, wreath. Kor. σπειρα. From σπειρ, to wind or twist round; whence also Gk. σπείρω, a basket, σπείρω, a rope. Der. spiral, from F. spiral, 'circling'; Cot.—L. spiralis; spiral-ly; spir-y, Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georgic i. l. 334.

SPIRIT, breath; the soul, a ghost, enthusiasm, liveliness, a spirituous liquor. (F.—L.) The lit. sense 'breath,' but the word is hardly to be found with this sense in English. ME. spirit, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 203; pl. spirites, Chaucer, C. T. 1371 (A 1369).—OF. esprit (Littre), later espril, 'the spirit, soul'; Cot.—L. spiritum, acc. of spiritus, breath, spirit.—L. spirare, to breathe. Der. spirit-ed, Hen. V. iii. 5. 21; spirit-ed-ly, -ness; spirited, 2 Hen. IV. l. 1. 70; spirit-stirring, Oth. iii. 3. 352; spirit-wal, from F. spirital, 'spiritual'; Cot. from L. spiritalis, formed with suffix -ilis from spirare, decl. stem of spiritus; spirital-ly; spirital-ly, ME. spiritalite, P. Plowman, B. v. 148; spirital-ly; spirital-ism, spirital-ist; spirital-ous. Also (from L. spirare) a-spire, con-spire, ex-spire (for ex-spire), in-spire, per-spire, re-spire, re-spire, re-spire, re-spire; also dis-spire; and see spira-cle, spighl-ly. Doublet, spire.

SPIRT, the same as Spirit, q. v.

SPIT (1), a pointed piece of wood, skewer, iron prong on which meat is roasted. (E.) ME. spite, spite. 'And spited him thru-out mid an yrene spite;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 207, l. 1213. See also Octavian Imperator, l. 122, in Weber Met. Romances, vol. iii. = AS. spite, a spit; 'Verru, spite;' Voc. 127. 11; later spite, id. 548. 25.—Du. spit; Dan. spit; Swed. spett; MllG. spit, G. spies, a spit. Teut. type spiz*, m. Cf. G. spize, a point, pot. Der. spit, verb, ME. spiten, spiten, as in Rob. of Glouc., above. Also prov. E. spit, the depth a spade goes in digging, about a foot (Halliwell), with reference to the point, i. e. blade of the spade; cf. AS. spitan, to dig, spit-el, a kind of spade, Du. spitten, to dig (lit. to spit); quite distinct from spade.

SPIT (2), to throw out from the mouth. (E.) Spelt spet in Baret (1580). ME. spitten, P. Plowman, B. x. 40; pt. t. spette, Wyclif, John, ix. 6. AS. spitan, Matt. xxvii. 30 (Rushworth MS.); akin to spētan, with the same sense, pt. t. spēta, Mark, xv. 19, John, ix. 6; as if from a Teut. root spēt-*. Apparently allied to Icel. spjta;

Dan. spytte, to spit, to sputter; Swed. spotta; prov. G. spützen (with which cf. G. specken in the same sense); though these are from a Teut. base spul-*, allied to Spout. Perhaps both these Teut. bases are allied to an Idg. root spu-*; whence E. spew. See Brugmann, §§ 279 (1), 299, 507. Der. spit-le, spittell in Palsgrave, formerly spette (Baret), also spatle, spelt spatyl in Palsgrave, spelt spit in Wyclif, John, ix. 6; AS. spit, John, ix. 6; spit-oon, not in Todd's Johnson, an ill-coined word. ¶ Note that spat is not the orig. past tense of spit, but is due to AS. spōta above, used with the same sense as the true pt. t. spit (Meas. for Meas. ii. 1. 86).

SPITCH-COCK, orig. to split a fat eel, and broil it on a skewer. (G.) The pp. spitch-cock-ed occurs in 1651, in T. Cartwright, The Ordinary; in Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, iii. 239. See exx. in Palmer, Folk-Etym., where it occurs also as spits-cocked. Here spit is from MHG. spiz, a spit, as in MHG. spiz-braten, G. spies-braten, meat roasted on a spit; and G. kochen, to cook. It merely means 'spit-cooked'; cf. Du. spit-aal, 'a spitch-eel'; Kalisch.

SPITE, vexation, grudge, ill-will. (F.—L.) ME. spyt; 'boutte spyt more' = without further injury, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1444. It is merely a contraction of ME. despit, mod. E. despite. This is best shown by the phrase in spite of, formerly in despite of, as in Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 132, Much Ado, ii. 1. 398, iii. 2. 68, iii. 4. 89, &c. So also we have spit for dispirit, spend for dispend, ME. spenser for dispenser. And observe ME. spious, Rom. of the Rose, 979, as a form of despious, Chaucer, C. T. 6343 (D 761). See further under Despise. Der. spite, verb, Much Ado, v. 2. 70; spite-ful, Macb. iii. 5. 12, short for despitful, As You Like It, v. 2. 86; spite-ful-ly, -ness.

SPITTLE (1), saliva. (E.) See Spit (2). SPITTLE (2), a hospital. (F.—L.) 'A spittle, hospital, or lazarihouse;' Baret, 1580. ME. spitel. Spitel-voul = hospital civil, i. e. leprosy; Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 8.—OF. ospital (Burguy), the same as OF. hospital, a hospital; see Hospital. ¶ The loss of initial h must have been due to an E. accent on the i; cf. W. yyspity, a spittle (from E.); Icel. spital. Doublet, hospital.

SPLASH, to splash about water or mud, to bespatter. (Low G.) 'To splash, to dash any liquid upon; Splashy, wet, watry;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1731. Coined by prefixing (OF. es- = L. ex, used for emphasis, as in squench (Richardson) for quench), to plash, in the same sense. Plashy wifies, wet under foot; to plash in the dirt; all *plash*d, made wet and dirty; to plash a traveller, to dash or strike up the dirt upon him; 'MS. Lansd. 1033, by Bp. White Kennett, died A. D. 1728. Stanyhurst (1582) has plash for 'a splashing noise;' tr. of Virgil (Æn. i. 115), ed. Arber, p. 21, l. 17. ME. plashes, a pool; Allit. Morte Arthure, 2798. Cf. Low G. plashen, to splash; short for plashes*, as shown under Plash (1), q. v.; cf. MDu. plash, a pool. Der. plash, sb.; plash-y; plash-board, a board (in a vehicle) to keep off splash.

SPLAT, to slope or slant (in architecture); to dislocate a shoulder-bone. (F.—L.) A contraction of display; cf. spit for dispirit, spite for despite, spend for dispend, &c. The sense 'to dislocate' is due to the fact that display formerly meant to carve or cut up a crane or other bird, by disjoining it and so displaying it upon the dish in several pieces. 'Dysplaye that crane;' 'splye that breme;' The Boke of Kerynges, pr. in 1513, repr. in 1867; see The Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 265. In architecture, to display is to open out, hence to slope the side of a window, &c. 'And for to splye out hir leues on brede;' Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 332. 'Her coltre splyed;' her collar displayed; Cot. Myst. p. 242. See further under Display. Der. spit-foot-ed, in Minshew, and in Ford, The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. i. l. 13, i. e. with the foot displayed or turned outward, as if dislocated at the knee-joint; shortened to sply-foot, as in 'sply-foot rhymes,' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 192; sply-mouth, a mouth opened wide in scorn, a grimace, Dryden, tr. of Peristus, act 1, l. 116.

SPLEEN, a non-glandular, highly vascular organ situate in the abdomen, supposed by the ancients to be the seat of anger and ill-humoured melancholy. (L.—Gk.) ME. splen, Gower, C. C. viii. 99; bk. vii. 449.—L. splēn.—Gk. σπλην, the spleen.—Skt. plihān, plihāra, the spleen (with loss of initial h). The true L. word is lien (with loss of initial sp). Brugmann, i. § 549 (c). Der. splen-ic, from L. splēnticus; splen-ic-ic-al, splen-ic-ic-al-ly; splen-ic, from L. splēnicus; splen-it-iv, Hamlet, v. 1. 285; splen-ful, 2 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 128; splen-y, Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 99.

SPLENDOR, SPLENDOR, magnificence, brilliance. (L.; or F.—L.) Spelt splendor in Minshew, ed. 1627. According to Richardson, it is spelt splendour in Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Jane Light, in Underwoods, no. 100, l. 32.—F. splendeur, 'splendor, light'; Cot.—L. splendorem, acc. of splēndere, to shine. [Or directly from L. nom. splendor.] = L. splēndere, to shine. Root unknown. Der. splend-id, Milton, P. L. ii. 252, directly from L. splēndidus; shining, bright; splend-id-ly. Also splend-ent, spelt splendant in Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. viii. st. 84, l. 3, but from L. splendent-, stem of pres. part. of splendēre. And see re-splendent.

SPLINT, the same as Splint, q. v.

SPLUCHAN, a tobacco-pouch. (Gael.) In Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook, st. 14.—Gael. spluchan, a tobacco-pouch; Irish spluchan, a bladder, pouch, purse.

SPLICE, to join two rope-ends by interweaving the strands. (Du.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Like many sea-terms, borrowed from Dutch.—MDu. splicsen, 'to wreath or lace two ends together, as of a rope'; Hexham. So named from the splitting of the rope-ends into separate strands before the splicing is begun; from Du. splicsen, to splice (which is really the older form). Formed by the addition of s to split, weak grade of Du. splicjen, to split, MDu. splicjen (Hexham). See Split. Cf. Dan. spjilde, spjelse, to splice (voiced form of Du. splicsen); spjulte, to split. Cf. Swed. spjissa, to splice; G. spissen, to splice, spjiss, a cleft, spjissen, to split. Der. splice, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706.

SPLINT, SPLENT, a thin piece of split wood. (Scand.) Formerly usually splint. 'A little splint to stave a broken finger'; Baret (1580). 'Splint for an house, laite'; Palsgrave. It also meant a thin steel plate, for armour. Splint, harness for the arme, garde de bras; Palsgrave. ME. splint, lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 63; Morle Arthur, ed. Brock, 2061; answering to OF. espiente, a thin steel plate (Godefroy).—Swed. spjint, a kind of spike; esp. (in nautical language) a forelock, i. e. a flat piece of iron driven through the end of a bolt, to secure it. So also Dan. splint, a splinter; NFries. splint, splenn.—Low G. spintse, a forelock; G. splint, a thin piece of iron or steel, a forelock, perhaps borrowed. Cf. Swed. spjinta, to splinter; ultimately allied to Dan. spjitte, Swed. spjitta, to split. See Split. Der. spjint-er, Beaum. and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill, Act i. sc. 3 (Ismaenia), to split into shivers, a frequentative form (with the usual frequentative suffix -er) from Swed. spjinta, to split, shiver; we actually find the frequentative form in Dan. spjintre, to splutter, Du. spjinteren, to splinter. Also splint-er, sb., a shiver, small piece or chip, Cor. iv. 5, 115, with which Cf. Du. and EFries. splinter, a splinter, splinterig, full of splinters; splint-er-y, adj. Also splint-er-our, armour made with long and narrow overlapping plates.

SPLIT, to cleave lengthwise, to tear asunder, read apart. (Du.) Spelt split in Minshew, ed. 1627; Shak. Winter's Tale, i. 2. 349. [Palsgrave has: 'I splette a fysshe a-souder, Je ouuers'] but this is rather ME. spletten, to lay open, lay flat, as in Palladius on Husbandry, b. ii. l. 123.]—MDu. spjitten, to split; Cf. Dan. spjitte, to split; Swed. dial. spjitta, to disentangle or separate yarn (Rietz). From the weak grade split of the Teut. strong verb spjlatan*, as seen in OFries. spjita, Westphal. spjitan, Du. spjitten, to split; G. spjissen. We also find Dau. spjlit, Du. spjleet, a slit, split, rent, Swed. spjlit, discord (a sense not unknown to English). G. spjisse, a splinter, a shiver, MDu. spjete, 'a split or a cleft' (Hexham). Compare also prov. F. split, to split, Swed. spjicka, to split. Der. split, sb.; also splint, q. v., splice, q. v.

SPLUTTER, to speak hastily and confusedly. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson; and see Halliwell. A by-form of sputter, which is the frequentative, with the usual suffix -er, of sput, to talk fluently, orig. to squirt out; see Sputter and Sput. In the sense 'to talk', the latter word occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 4: 'Pray, sput some French, son.' To splutter is to talk so fast as to be unintelligible. The old Leicest. word spjutter, to sprinkle, used by Drayton (Evans) is similarly formed as the frequentative of Sput. Cf. Low G. spjuttlen, to spout, spurt, sprinkle.

SPOIL, to plunder, pillage. (F.—L.) ME. spoilien, Wyclif, Mark, iii. 27. [The sb. spoil occurs even earlier, in King Alisaunder, 986.]—F. spolier, to spoil, despoil; Cot.—L. spoliare, to strip of spoil, despoil.—L. spoliū, spoil, booty; the skin or hide of an animal stripped off, and hence the dress of a slain warrior stripped from him. Root uncertain. Some have connected it with Gk. σπῆλαιν, spoil. It is probable that spoil has been to some extent confused with despoil, q. v. Cf. Dyspōlyn* or Spōlyn*, Spolio; Prompt. Parv. Der. spoil, sb., ME. spolte, as above; spoli-er; spoli-ation, from F. spoliation, 'a spoiling'; Cot., from L. acc. spoliatiōnem; spoli-ate (rare), from pp. spoliatus.

SPOKE, one of the bars of a wheel, from the nave to the rim. (E.) ME. spoke, Chaucer, C. T. 7839 (D 2257). AS. spēca, pl. spēcas; 'Radii, spēcæ', C. T. 106, 28. [The change from ā to long e is perfectly regular; cf. stān, a stone, bān, a bone.]—Du. speck, a spoke; G. speiche, Olig. speicha. Teut. types spakon*, spaihon*; allied by gradation to spike; see Spike (1). Der. spoke-shave (Palsgrave).

SPOKESMAN, one who speaks in behalf of others. (F.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. l. 152; and in Exod. iv. 16 (A.V.). The form of the word is hardly explicable; we should rather have expected to meet with spēak-s-man, formed by analogy with hunt-s-man, or else with speech-man. As it is, the pp. spoke (for spoken) has been substituted for the infin. spēak; see Speak and Man.

SPOILIATION. (F.—L.) See under Spoil.

SPONDEE, in classical poetry, a foot containing two long syllables. (L.—Gk.) Called spondus in Puteanham, Act of King. Poesie, ed. 1589, pt. ii. c. 3. Ben Jonson has: 'The steadlie spondæes' to translate 'Spondæos stables' in his tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, l. 266. Englished from L. spondæus or spondæus.—Gk. σπονδαίος, in metre, a spondee, so called because slow solemn melodies, chiefly in this metre, were used at σπονδαί.—Gk. σπονδαί, a solemn treaty or truce; pl. of σπονδή, a drink-offering, libation to the gods (such as were made at a treaty).—Gk. σπονδή, 2nd grade of σπίνδν, to pour out, make a libation. Perhaps allied to Sponsor. Brugmann, i. § 143, ii. § 802. Der. spond-a-ic, L. spondicius, Gk. σπονδικός.

SPONGE, the porous framework of an animal, remarkable for sucking up water. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. sponge, Ancren Riwle, p. 262, l. 2.—OF. esponge, 'a sponge'; Cot. Mod. F. éponge.—L. spongia.—Gk. σπγγία, a sponge; another form of σπγγος (Attic σπγγος), a sponge.—L. fungus, a fungus, from its spongy nature. ¶ Also AS. sponge, Matt. xxvii. 48, directly from Latin. Der. sponge, vrb; spong-y, spong-i-ness; also sponge-cake; spunk, q. v. Allied to fungus.

SPONSOR, a surety, godfather or godmother. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. sponsor, a surety, one who promises for another; cf. spons-us, pp. of spondere, to promise. Probably allied to Gk. σπονδαί, a treaty, truce, and σπονδν, to pour a libation, as when making a solemn treaty; see Spondee. Der. sponsor-i-al, sponsorship. And see sponse. Also (from L. spondere) de-spond, re-spond, cor-re-spond.

SPONTANEOUS, voluntary, acting on one's own impulse. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Englished from L. spontāneus, willing; by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. Formed with suffix -āneus from spont-, appearing in the gen. spontis and abl. sponte of a lost sb. sponts*. Sponte is used to mean 'of one's own accord'; and spontis occurs in the phrase sponte sua esse, to be at one's own disposal, to be one's own master. Der. spontaneous-ly; spontane-i-ty, a coined word.

SPONTOON, a half-pike formerly used by officers of infantry. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'You have never a spontoon in the house?' Foote, Mayor of Garrat, i. 1.—F. sponçon, esponçon (Hatzfeldt).—Ital. sponzone, 'a gleave, a iuelin, a partisan'; Florio. It was orig. a blunted weapon.—Ital. sponzare, 'to abate the edge or point of ane weapon'; Florio.—Late L. expunctura*, to blunt a point (Körting).—L. ex, off, away; and punctum, a point. See Ex- and Point.

SPOOL, a reel for winding yarn on. (MDu.) ME. spole, Prompt. Parv. p. 470; also in W. de Libbesworth, in Wright's Voc. i. 157. Imported from the Netherlands, with the Flemish weavers.—MDu. spole (Hexham); Du. spool, a spool, quill; Low G. spole (Bremen Wörterbuch).—Swed. spole, a spool, spoke; Dan. spole; G. spule, a spool, bobbin, quill; Olig. spuolo, spuola. Perhaps allied to Icel. spjöl (base spat-), a rail, a bar.

SPOOM, to run before the wind. (L.) An old sea-term; see examples in Nares. Lit. 'to throw up foam' by running through the water. As Nares remarks, it means to sail steadily rather than swiftly. From spume, foam (L. spūma); see Spume. Corruptly also spoon; spooning before the wind; Capt. Smith, Works, p. 878. Hence spoon-drift > spindrift. See Spin-drift.

SPOON, an instrument for supping liquids. (E.) The orig. sense was simply 'a chip', then a thin slice of wood, lastly a spoon (at first wooden). ME. spoon (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 10916 (F 602). AS. spōn, a chip, a splinter of wood; see examples in Bosworth. In Voc. 149, 30, the L. fomes, a chip for firewood, is glossed by 'geswēuld spoon, vel tynder', i. e. a kindled chip, or tinder.—Du. spaan, a chip, splint; Icel. spänn, spönn, a chip, shaving, spoon; Dan. spaan, a chip; Swed. spån, a chip, splint; G. spahn, Olig. spān, a very thin board, chip, splint, shaving. β. The Teut. type is spēnaz*, a chip. Cf. Gk. σπῆν, a wedge. Der. spoon-bill, a bird; spoon-ful, spelt spoonfull in Minshew, ed. 1627, spoonful in R.; spoon-meal, Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 61. Brugmann, i. § 552.

SPOOR, a trail. (Du.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Introduced from the Cape of Good Hope.—Du. spoor, a spur; also a trace, track, trail. Cf. Low G. spoor, a spoor (Danneil). Allied to Spur and Spur.

SPORADIC, scattered here and there. (Gk.) 'Sporadici Morbi, diseases that are rife in many places'; Phillips, ed. 1706. It thus arose as a medical term. The Late L. sporadicus is merely borrowed from Gk. σποράδικος, scattered.—Gk. σποράδ-, stem of σπαράσσειν, scattered.—Gk. σπορ-, and grade of ansipiv, to sow, to scatter abroad. See Sperm.

SPORE, a minute grain which serves as a seed in ferns, &c. (Gk.) Modern and botanical.—Gk. σπορ, seed-time; also, a seed.—Gk. σπορ-, and grade of ansipiv, to sow. See above.

SPOREAN, a leathern pouch, worn with the kilt. (Gael.—L.—Gk.) In Scott's Rob Roy, c. xxiv.—Gael. sporan, a purse, pouch worn with the kilt; Irish sporan, a purse, a pouch; Mirish sporan; for s-burr* < burs*, from L. bursa, a purse, from Gk. βύρα, a hide; see Purse (Macbain).

SPORT, play, mirth, merriment, jest. (F.—L.) 'Sportis, myrthe'; Palsgrave. Merely a contracted form of disport, desport, by loss of di- or de-; just as we have splay for display, spend for dispend. Strattmann cites sport as occurring in the Coventry Plays, ed. Halliwell, p. 185. Disport is in Chaucer, C. T. 777 (A 775); see further under Disport. Der. sport, verb, spelt sporie (also disport) in Palsgrave; sport-ing; sport-ful, Tw. Nt. v. 373; sport-ful-ly, sport-ful-ness; sport-ive, All's Well, iii. 2, 109, sport-ive-ly, -ness; sport-s-man (coined like hunt-s-man), sport-s-man-ship.

SPOT, a blot, mark made by wet, a discoloured place, small space, stain. (E.) ME. spot, Prompt. Parv.; pl. spottes, P. Plowman, R. xiii. 315. [I suspect that spot in Ancien Riwle, p. 104, note e, is a misprint for sunt.] Prob. a native word; cf. EFries. spot, a spot, MDu. spotten, to spot, stain. Also Norw. spot, a spot, also a small piece of land, Icel. spotti, spottir, a small piece, bit. Perhaps also allied to Swed. spott, spittle, spotta, to spit. (Distinct from G. spott, mockery, derision.) Apparently from Teut. spul-, weaker grade of spulan-, to spout. See Spout. Der. spot, verb, chiefly in the pp. spotted, as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 6, 26, Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35; spott-y, spot-i-ness, spot-less, Rich. II, i. 1, 178, spot-less-ly, spot-less-ness. And see spat-er.

SPOUSE, a husband or wife. (F.—L.) One of the oldest words in the language of F. origin. ME. spuse, fem. sb., O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 13, l. 5; the comp. sb. spūshād, spousehood, also occurs in the 11th century. O. Eng. Hom. i. 143, l. 24, having already acquired an E. suffix. The form is rather fem. than masc. —OF. espous (Burguy), later espoux (spoux), 'a spouse, bridegroom', Cot.; fem. form espouse (posse), 'a spouse, a wife'; id. The former answers to L. sponsum, acc. of sponsus, a betrothed, a bridegroom; the latter to sponsa, fem., a betrothed woman.—L. sponsus, promised, pp. of spondere, to promise; see Sponsor. Der. espous, verb, q.v.; also spons-al, ME. sponsaile, Gower, C. A. i. 181; bk. ii. 642; a doublet of espousal, ME. espousaile, Gower, C. A. ii. 322; bk. v. 581; see under espous.

SPOUT, to throw out a liquid violently, to rush out violently as a liquid from a pipe. (E.) ME. spouten, Chaucer, C. T. 4907 (B 487). Prob. from an AS. form spūtan*, not found. But cf. Du. uit-spuiten, to spout out (with ui = AS. ū, by rule); also Swed. spūta, given by Wideneg as equivalent to Swed. spūta, to squirt, spout, spurt; MDu. spuyten, 'to spout out water', Hexham. Also Icel. spjta, to spit, sputter. The Teut. type is spūtan-, to spit out, with a weaker grade sput-; see Frack. ¶ It is probable that spout is a by-form of spout; compare D. spuit, a spout, squirt, syringe, fire-engine, with Swed. spūta, a squirt, syringe, fire-engine. See Spout. For loss of r after sp, cf. speak. Der. spout, sb., ME. spoule, spelt spoule in Prompt. Parv. And see sputter.

SPRACK, SPRAG, quick, lively. (Scand.) See Spark (2).

SPRAIN, to overstrain the muscles of a joint. (F.—L.) A late word. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it as a sb. The older word with much the same sense is strain; and sprain is related to OF. espreindre just as strain is to OF. estreindre.—OF. espreign-, a stem of espreindre, 'to press, wring, strain, squeeze out, thrust together'; Cot. Mod. F. espreindre = L. esprimere, to press out; whence espreindre is formed by analogy with F. forms from L. verbs in -ingere = L. ex, out; and premere, to press; see Ex- and Press. And cf. Express. Der. sprain, sb.; cf. OF. espreinte, 'a pressig g, straining', Cot., from the pp. espreint.

SPRAT, a small sea-fish. (E.) ME. sprot or sprotte. 'Ilec cipimera, a sprat', in a list of fishes; Voc. 704. 39; also 'Empiperus, sprat'; Voc. 580. 6. AS. sprot (Toller). Cf. AS. sprot, a sprout, twig. 'Du sprat', 'a sprat, a fish'; Hexham. He also gives 'srot', a sprout, or a sprig of a tree, or the young of every thing; which is the same word. 'Sprat', a small fish, considered as the fry of the herring; Wedgwood. Cf. prov. E. sprats, smallwood (Halliwell); lit. sprouts. All from Teut. sprot-* (AS. sprot-), weak grade of spritan-*, to sprout; with the sense of 'fry', or young one. See Spout.

SPRAWL, to toss about the limbs, stretch the body carelessly when lying. (E.) ME. spraulen, Gower, C. A. ii. 5; bk. iv. 111 (footnote); Havelok, 475. AS. spreawlian; Toller cites 'Spreawlige, fapitett.'; Norw. sprala, Dan. spralle, spralde, Swed. dial. spraln, spralla, NFries. sprawle. Perhaps allied to Swed. sprattla, to sprawl; or to Icel. spökla, sprakla, to kick with the feet, to sprawl. If so, a dental or guttural has been lost before L.

SPRAY (1), foam tossed with the wind. (Low G.) 'Commonly written spry. "Winds raise some of the salt with the spry"; Arbuthnot; Johnson's Dict. But no example of the spelling spry is given, and it is not easy to find one. Bailey has spray (1735). From Low G. sprei, a slight drizzle (Schambach); in Coburg, sprei; cf. Bavar. spraen, to drizzle (Schmeller), Thüringen spröhen (Hertel), MHG. spraen, spraewen; allied to G. sprühen, to drizzle, to form spray, Du. sproeien (see Frack).

SPRAY (2), a sprig or small shoot of a tree. (E.) ME. spray, Chaucer, C. T. 13700 (B 1960); Floriz and Blancheflor, ed. Lumby, 275; answering to AS. sprog*, allied to spreac, a shoot, spray; cf. Dan. sprag, a sprig, spray (Molbeck); Swed. dial. spragge, spragg, a spray (Rietz). β. Allied to Icel. sprek, a stick (whence smá-sprek, small sticks, twigs, sprays); AS. spreac, a shoot; 'Sarmenium, spreac'; Voc. 44. 29. Cf. Lithuan. sprogti, to crackle, split, spout or bud as a tree; whence sproga, a rift, a sprig or spray of a tree, sprugas, a knot or eye in a tree. Also Gk. ἀσπράγος, asparagus, of which the orig. sense was perhaps merely 'sprout' or shoot. See Brugmann, i. 523, 531. Doublet, sprig (and perhaps asparagus).

SPREAD, to scatter abroad, stretch, extend, overlay, emit, diffuse. (E.) ME. spreaden, pt. t. spradde, spredd, pp. sprad, sprad, P. Plowman, B. iii. 308; pt. t. spradde, Gower, C. A. i. 182; bk. ii. 684. AS. sprādan, to spread out, extend, a rare word. It occurs as gespread, imper. sing. = extend thou, stretch out, in the Northumb. version of Matt. xii. 13; and the comp. ofer-sprādan, to spread over, is in the Rule of St. Bennet, ed. Schröer, p. 109, l. 7. Du. spreiden, to spread, scatter, strew; Low G. spreiden, spreien, spreien; G. spreien. Teut. type spraiddan-*, a causal form, from the older base SPREID-, to become extended, spread out. Der. spread, sb.; over-spread.

SPREE, a merry frolic. (Scand.?) Modern and colloquial. Sir W. Scott has sprees, St. Ronan's Well, ch. xx. § 11; also sprey, Intro. to Legend of Montrose. Cf. Irish spre, a spark, flash of fire, animation, spirit. Cf. Irish spreac, a spark, life, motion, sprae, strength, vigour, sprightliness, Gael. spraic, vigour, exertion, spraicidh, sprightliness; not Celtic, but from Icel. spræk, lively. See Spry. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 278.

SPRIG, a spray, twig, small shoot of a tree. (E.) ME. sprigge, a rod for beating children, stick; P. Plowman, C. vi. 139 (footnote). Allied to AS. spreac, a spray, twig; Voc. 44. 29. Icel. sprek, a stick; Low G. sprikk, a sprig, twig, esp. a small dry twig or stick; EFries. sprikka, sprik, a stick, twig. Allied to Dan. sprag, a spray (Molbeck); see further under Spray (2).

SPRIGHTLY, SPRITELY, lively. (F.—L.; with E. suffix.) The common spelling sprightly is wrong; gh is a purely E. combination, whereas the present word is French. The mistake was due to the very common false spelling spright, for sprite, a spirit; see Sprite. The suffix -ly is from AS. -lic, like; see Like. Der. spright-li-ness.

SPRING, to bound, leap, jump up, start up or forth, issue. (E.) ME. springen, strong verb, pt. t. sprang, pp. sprungen, sprongen; Chaucer, C. T. 13690 (B 1950). AS. springan, springan; pt. t. sprang, spranc, pp. sprungon. The spelling spring is the usual one, Matt. ix. 26. But we find sprinc = springs, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxv (lib. iii. met. 2). And in Matt. ix. 26, where the AS. version has 'þes hlisa sprang ofer eall þæt land' = this rumour spread abroad over all the land, the Northumbrian version has spranc. Du. springen, pt. t. sprong, pp. sprongen; Icel. springa, to burst, split; Swed. springa; Dan. springe; G. springen. β. All from the Teut. type springan-*, pt. t. sprang, pp. sprungon*. Allied to Gk. σπρίγνυμι, to drive on; Brugmann, i. § 602. (✓SPERGH.) γ. We still say of a cricket-bat that is cracked or split, that it is spring; and cf. Prov. E. (Eastern) sprinke, a crack or flaw (Halliwell), where we even find the original F. final k; also Essex spruck, to crack, split, E. Anglian sprank, a crack; E. D. D. The sense 'to split, burst' is that of Icel. springa. Der. spring, sb., a leap, also the time when young shoots spring or rise out of the ground, also a source of water that wells up, a crack in a mast, &c.; spring-y; spring-bok, a kind of antelope, from Du. bok, a he-goat, a buck; spring-kalt (in horses), Hen. VIII, i. 3. 13; spring-time, As You Like It, v. 3. 20; spring-flood, ME. spring-flood, Chaucer, C. T. 11382 (F 1070); spring-tide; day-spring, off-spring, well-spring. Also springe, a snare that is provided with a flexible rod, called a spring in ME., as in P. Plowman, B. v. 41. And see spring-ly. ¶ To spring a mine is to cause it to burst; cf. Swed. spränga, to cause to burst, causal of spränga, to burst.

SPRINGAL, a youngster. (E.; with F. suffix.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 10. 6. Spelt springall in Minshew; spring-ald in Lewis (1570). From spring, i.e. to be alert; with suffix -ald, of F. origin, from OHG. wald, as in her-ald, &c.

SPRINKLE, to scatter in small drops. (Du. ?) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 13. A better form is spreken, written sprekenly by Palgrave, and sprekenly in the Prompt. Parv. Perhaps borrowed from Du. spreken, to sprinkle. Cf. G. sprehen, to speckle, from MHG. sprehen, a spot, allied to Icel. sprekka, Swed. språkka, a little spot. See Kluge, s. v. spreken (who denies a connexion with spring). It seems to be allied to Skt. pr̥n̥, speckled; see Perch. (2). Brugmann, i. 509 (1). ¶ Distinct from ME. sprengen, to scatter, cast abroad, sprinkle. 'Sprenged ou mid halli water' = sprinkle yourselves with holy water, Ancien Riwcl, p. 16, l. 9. From AS. sprengan, to sprinkle, scatter abroad, Matt. xxv. 24, Exod. xxiv. 8; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 264, l. 15. This sprengan is the causal of AS. springan, to spring, leap abroad, regularly formed by the change of a (in the pt. t. sprang) to e, as if for sprangian*. See Spring. Der. sprinkle, sb., a holy-water sprinkler, see Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 13; sprinkle-er.

SPRINT, to run at full speed; see Sprint (2).
SPRIT, a spar set diagonally to extend a fore-and-aft sail. (E.) The older sense is merely a pole or long rod, and an older spelling is found in ME. spret. 'A spret or an orc' = a spirit or an oar; Will. of Palern, 2754; spelt spreot, King Alisaunder, 858. AS. sprōt, a pole. 'Contus, sprōt.' Voc. 139. 39; cf. 14. 22. 'Trudes, sprōtotes,' in a list of things belonging to a ship; id. 166. 15. The orig. sense is 'a sprout,' or shoot, hence a branch, pole, &c. Allied to AS. sprutan, to sprout, cognate with G. sprossen; see further under Sprout. Du. sprēt, a spirit; MSwed. sprüte; Dan. spryd, sprid. Dor. sprīt-sail, bou-sprīt. Doublet, sprout.

SPRITE, SPRIGHT, a spirit. (F. -L.) The false spelling spright is common, and is still in use in the derived adj. sprightly. Spelt sprite in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 40, 43; but spright, id. i. 2. 2. 'Legions of sprights,' id. i. 1. 38. ME. sprit, sprite, spryte; 'the holy spryte,' Rich. Coer de Lion, 394. -F. esprit, 'the spirit,' Cot. -L. spiritum, acc. of spiritus. It is a doublet of Spirit, q. v. Der. spright-ly or sprightly; spright-ed, haunted, Cymb. ii. 3. 144; spright-ful or spright-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 177; spright-ful-ly, Rich. II, i. 3. 3; spright-ing, Temp. i. 2. 298. Doublet, sprit.

SPROUT, to shoot out germs, burgeon, bud. (F.) Spelt sput in Fitzherbert, Husbandry, § 13, l. 38 (E. D. S.). ME. sputen, Cursor Mundi, 11216; O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 217, l. 23. From AS. sprutan, found in the pp. a-sproten; OFris. spruten, strong verb, pp. spruden, to sprout (Richtofen). -Low G. spruten, to sprout; Du. spruten; G. sprossen, to sprout, pt. t. spross, pp. gesprossen. The cognate Swed. spruta is only used in the sense to spout or squirt out water, and perhaps is the word whence E. sput is derived, by loss of r; see Sput, Sput (1). β. All from a Teut. type sprutan*-, pt. t. sprant*, pp. sprutanaz*. We may also notice that E. sprout as a sb. is related to Du. spruit, Icel. spróti, G. spross, a sprout; cf. also AS. sprot, sprota, a sprout; and that E. sprit, q. v., is allied to the same words. Cf. Goth. sprautū, quickly. Dor. sprout, sb. And see sput, sprit, sprat.

SPRUCE, fine, smart, gaily dressed. (F. -G.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 14; and in Minshew, cl. 1627. 'It was the custom of our ancestors, on special occasions, to dress after the manner of particular countries. The gentlemen who adopted that of Prussia or Spruce seem, from the description of it, to have been arrayed in a style, to which the epithet spruce, according to our modern usage, might have been applied with perfect propriety. Prussian leather (corium Prusitanum) is called in Baret by the familiar name of spruce,' Richardson; see Baret, art. 781. Richardson then quotes from Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 1, § 25, as follows: 'And after them came syr Edward Heward, than Admirall, and wyth hym Syr Thomas Parre, in doublettes of crimson velvet, voydyed lowe on the backe, and before to the cannell-bone, lased on the breastes with chaynes of siluer, and ouer that shorde cokes of crimson saytne, and on their heades hattes after dauncers fashion, with fesauntes fethers in them: They were appareyled after the fashion of Prusia or Spruce.' There may have been special reference to the leather worn; the name of spruce was certainly given to the leather because it came from Prussia. Levins has 'Corium punicatum, Spruce,' col. 182, l. 14. 'Spruce leather, corruptly so called for Prussia leather,' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Spruce leather, graauw leer, Pruyssch leer,' i.e. gray leather, or Prussian leather; Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict., 1749. [E. Müller objects that it is difficult to see why Prussia should always be called Spruce, not Pruce, in this particular instance; but the name, once associated with the leather, would easily remain the same, especially as the etymology may not have been very obvious to all. It is a greater difficulty to know why the s should ever have been prefixed, but it may be attributed to the English fondness for initial s; or it may have arisen from the G.]

das Preussen.] It is sufficient to make sure that Spruce really did mean Prussia, and really was used instead of Pruce. Of this we have positive proof as early as the 14th century. 'And yf ich sente ouer see my seruaut to brugges, Oper in-to prus my prentys' = and if I sent my servant over the sea to Bruges, or sent my apprentice to Prussia; P. Plowman, C. vii. 279; where two MSS. read spruce for prus, and one MS. has pruy-lond = Prussian land, the land of Prussia. In the corresponding passage of P. Plowman, B. xiii. 393, three MSS. have pruslonde, pruy londe, and pruce-lond respectively; but a fourth has pruce-lond. Pruce is the form in Chaucer, C. T. 53 (a well-known passage). β. Further, we find Spruys-chyst (Spruce chest) in Paston Letters, iii. 407, but pruce-kyst in Records of Nottingham, ii. 86; spruce kutche in the Bury Wills (1493), p. 82, but pruce kutche (1448), p. 12. And Prussia is called Sprucia as late as 1614; see Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, iv. 329, 345. γ. We conclude that to dress sprucely was to dress after the Prussian manner; that Spruce was early used in place of Pruce, particularly with reference to Prussian leather; and consequently that spruce is due to (O.F. Pruce, mod. F. Prusse, Prussia. - G. Preussen, Prussia (or from an older form of the same). Dor. spruce-ly, spruce-ness.

SPRUCE-BEER, a kind of beer. (G.; confused with F. and E.) 'Spruce-beer, a kind of physical drink, good for inward bruises'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Spruce-beer, and the beer of Hambur'; Colyn Blowbol's Testament, 332, in Hazlitt, E. Eng. Popular Poetry, i. 106. 'Essence of spruce is obtained from the young shoots of the black spruce fir. . . Spruce beer is brewed from this essence. . . The black beer of Dantzic is similarly made from the young shoots of another variety of fir.' Eng. Cycl., Supp. to Arts and Sciences. 'A decoction of the young shoots of spruce and silver fir was much in use on the shores of the Baltic as a remedy in scorbutic, gonty, and rheumatic complaints. The sprouts from which it was made were called sprossen in German and jopen in Dutch, and the decoction itself sprossen-bier [in German] or jopenbier [in Dutch]. From the first of these is spruce-beer. See Bekc in N. and Q. Aug. 3. 1860. And doubtless the spruce-fir, G. sprossenfichte, takes its name as the fir of which the sprouts are chiefly used for the foregoing purpose, and not from being brought from Prussia, as commonly supposed; Wedgwood. β. The above explanation may be admitted; but with the addition that the reason why the G. word sprossen-bier was turned into spruce-beer in English is precisely because it was commonly known that it came from Prussia; and since sprossen-bier had no sense in English and was not translated into sprouts-beer, it was natural to call it Spruce-beer, i.e. Prussian beer. The facts, that Spruce meant Prussia as early as the 14th century, and that spruce or spruce-leather was already in use to signify Prussian leather, have been proved in the article above; see SPRUCE. Thus spruce-beer for sprossen-bier was no mere corruption, but a deliberate substitution. Accordingly, we find in Evelyn's Sylva, ch. 22, the remark: 'For masts, &c., those [firs] of Prussia which we call Spruce.' γ. With this understanding, we may admit that spruce-beer is one of the very few words in English which are derived immediately from German. - G. sprossenbier, spruce-beer, lit. 'sprouts-beer'; G. sprossenfichte, spruce-fir; sprossensenz, spruce-wine. - G. sprossen, pl. of sprosse, a sprout, cognate with E. sprout; and bier, cognate with E. beer; see Sprout and Beer. Note also Du. joopenbier, 'spruce-beer'; Sewel's Du. Dict. ed. 1754. The word spruce = Prussia, is French, from G. (das Preussen), as shown above.

SPRY, active, nimble, lively. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Given by Halliwell as a Somersetshire word, but general; see F. D. D. Perhaps E. Cf. Swed. dial. spryg, very lively, skittish (as a horse), Kietz; allied to Swed. dial. språg, språk, or språker, spirited, mettlesome. Compare also prov. E. sprag (Halliwell); and sprack, active, a Wiltshire word. See Spre and Spark (2).

SPUD, an instrument for weeding. (Scand.) See E. D. D. It formerly also meant a knife or dagger; see Narcs. ME. spulde, 'cultellus villis'; Prompt. Parv. Prob. from Dan. spyd, MDan. spyd, spud; cognate with Swed. spjut, Icel. spjót, a spear, lance. - G. spiess, a lance. ¶ Distinct from Spit (1).

SPUE, the same as Spew, q. v.

SPUME, foam. (L.) Not common. ME. spume, Gower, C. A. ii. 265; bk. v. 4122. - L. spuma, foam. For spoina*; Brugmann, i. § 791. Allied to Skt. phāna, foam, Russ. piena, foam, AS. fim; see Foam. Der. spoom, verb, q. v.; pum-ice, q. v.; pounce (2), q. v. Doublet, foam.

SPUNK, tinder; hence, a match, spark, spirit, mettle. (C. -L. -Gk.) Also spunk; see examples in Jamieson and Halliwell. 'In spunk or tinder'; Stanyhurst, tr. of Virg. Æn. i. 175; ed. Arber, p. 23. The orig. sense is tinder or touchwood. - Irish spunc, Gael. pong, sponge, tinder, touchwood; applied to touchwood from its spongy nature. - L. spungia, a sponge; hence pumice-stone, or other porous material. - Gk. σπυγία, σπύγγος, a sponge; see Sponge.

SPUR, an instrument on a horseman's heels, for goading on a horse, a small goad. (E.) ME. spure, spore, Chaucer, C. T. 475 (A 473); P. Plowman, B. xviii. 12. AS. spura, spora. 'Calcar, spura;' Voc. 275. 33. Cf. hand-spura, a hand-spur, Beowulf, 986 (Grein). +Du. spoor, a spur; allied to spoor, a track; see SPOR; Icel. spori; Dan. spore; Swed. spore; OHG. spora; MHG. spor; G. sporn. β. All from spor*-, weak grade of Teut. spēr-an*-, to kick. Brugmann, i. § 793 (2). From SPER, to quiver, to jerk, which appears in G. sich sperren, to struggle against; one sense of this root is to kick, jerk out the feet, as in Lithuan. spirti, to resist, to kick out as a horse; cf. Skt. spūṣ, spāṣ, to throb, to struggle. Hence the sense of spur is 'kicker.' γ. A closely allied word occurs in AS. spor, a foot-trace, Du. spoor, Icel. spor, G. spur (see SPOR); whence was formed the verb appearing as AS. spyrjan, Icel. spyrja, G. spüren, to trace a foot-track, to investigate, enquire into, represented by Lowland Sc. spor, to enquire, ask, search out. Der. spure, verb, ME. spuriens, sporien, Layamon, 12354, Romance of Partenay, 4214. Also spur-wheel; and see spoor, spair, spurn.

SPURGE, a class of acrid plants. (F.-L.) 'Spurge, a plant, the juice of which is so hot and corroding that it is called Devil's Milk, which being dropped upon warts eats them away;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. And hence the name. ME. sporge, Prompt. Parv.; spourge, Voc. 645. 15. -AF. spurge, a form given in Voc. 557. 7; more commonly OF. espurge, 'garden spurge'; Cot. -OF. espurger, 'to purge, clear, cleanse, rid of; also, to prune, or pick off the noysome knobs or buds of trees;' Cot. Hence, to destroy warts. -L. expurgare, to expurgate, purge thoroughly. -L. ex, out, thoroughly; and purgare, to purge; see EX- and PURGE.

SPURIOUS, not genuine. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 391. Englished from L. spurius, false, spurious, by the common change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. The orig. sense is 'of illegitimate birth'; perhaps allied to Gk. σπῆρ, seed, offspring, σπείρειν, to sow (Corssen); see SPERM. Der. spuriously, -ness.

SPURN, to reject with disdain. (E.) 'Properly 'a kick against,' hence to kick away, reject disdainfully. ME. spurnen, to kick against, stumble over, Ancræn Riwle, p. 188. 1. 2. 'Spornyng, or Spurnyng, Calcatricio;' Prompt. Parv. AS. spurnan, spurnan, ge-spornan, to kick against; cf. also ai-spornan, Matt. iv. 6, John, xi. 9. A strong verb; pt. t. spearn, pl. spurnen, pp. spornen. +Icel. spærna, pt. t. spærna, to spurn, kick with the feet; L. spurnare, to spurn, despire (a cognate form, not one from which the E. word is borrowed, for the E. verb is a strong one). β. All from the Idg. base spēr*-, to kick against, an extension from SPER, to quiver, jerk, also to kick against; see SPUR and SPAR (3). Der. spurn, sb., Timon, i. 2. 146; Chevy Chase (oldest version), near the end.

SPURRY, the name of a herb. (F.-G.-Late L.) In Cotgrave. -MF. spurré, 'spurry or frank, a Dutch herb, and an excellent fodder for cattle;' Cot. 'By 'Dutch' he prob. means 'German'; we find Du. spurré, 'the herb spurge,' in Hexham; but this can hardly be other than the F. word borrowed. The etymology of the F. word is doubtful, but it may be German, as Cotgrave seems to suggest. We find in German the forms spark, spergel, spörgel, all meaning spurry. -Late L. spurgula; A. D. 1482 (Weigand). It looks as if it might be connected with L. spargere, to scatter.

SPURT (1), SPIRT, to spout, jet out, as water. (E.) 'With tongue three-forked furth spirts fyre;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. ed. Arber, p. 59. The older meaning is to sprout or germinate, to grow fast; as in Hen. V. iii. 5. 8. We even find the sb. spirt, a sprout; 'These nuts . . . have in their mids a little chit or spirt;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, l. xv. c. 22. Cf. 'from Troy blud spirted;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. ed. Arber, p. 35. By the common metaphor of r (as ME. brid for bird) spirt stands for spurt; as in ME. spurtlen; 'þe wiþi þet spruttet ut' = the willow that sprouts or shoots out; Ancræn Riwle, p. 86. AS. spyrktan, spirtten; 'spirtite sœ eorðe grōwende gies' = let the earth shoot out growing grass; Gen. i. 11. A causal verb, allied to the AS. strong verb spyrktan, to sprout; see SPROUT. Cf. prov. E. spirt, to sprout; E. D. D.; and see SPOUT.

SPURT (2), a violent exertion. (Scand.) Used by Stanyhurst in the sense of 'space of time'; as, 'Heere for a spirt linger,' tr. of Virgil, Æn. iii. 453. Not the same word as the above, though perhaps confused with it. -Icel. sprettir, a spurt, spring, bound, run; from the strong verb spretta (pt. t. sprett), to start, to spring; also to spout out water; also to sprout. Cf. Swed. spirtita, to start, startle; prov. E. spirt, to run quickly a short way (E. D. D.). The Teut. base is spērnt* (tt-nt); hence also E. spirt, to run a quick short race; which is the doublet of spurt, vb., to run fast. Cf. Swed. dial. spirtinta, to burst (as a bud); to run fast, to jump. The orig. n of the base SPRENT is also preserved in prov. E. spunt, a convulsive struggle, Warwickshire (Halliwell).

SPUTTER, to keep spouting or jerking out liquid, to speak rapidly and indistinctly. (E.) 'And lick'd their hissing jaws, that sputter'd flame;' Dryden, tr. of Æneid, ii. 279 (H. 211, Lat. text). The frequentative of SPOUT, q.v.; so that the sense is 'to keep on spouting.' From spūt, weaker grade of Teut. spāt-an*-, to spout. Cf. Du. dial. (Groningen) spjūtern, to sputter; Low G. spattern; Norw. spjutra, to spout. ¶ Not to be confused with spatter, which is a different word, and allied to spot.

SPY, to see, discover. (F.-OHG.) Short for espy. ME. spien, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 40, l. 14. [The ME. spie, sb., a spy, occurs in Floriz and Blanchellur, ed. Lumby, l. 332.] The same word as ME. espier, Chaucer, C. T. 4744 (B 324); House of Fame, l. 706. -OF. espier, to espy. -OHG. spehōn, MHG. spehen (mod. G. spähen), to watch, observe closely. -L. specere, to look; Skt. pag, spag, to spy; used to form some tenses of dṛg, to see. -SPER, to see; Brugmann, i. § 551. Der. spy, sb., as above; spy-glass; also (from espy) espi-on-age, espi-al. From L. specere we have specie, species, spec-i-al, espec-i-al, spec-i-men, spec-i-fy, spec-i-ous, spec-u-late; an-specie, con-spec-u-ous, de-spec-ible, fron-ti-specie, per-spec-u-ous, su-spec-i-ous, tran-spec-i-ous; de-specie, de-spice; a-specie, circum-specie, ex-specie, in-specie, intra-specie-ion, per-specie-ive, pro-specie, re-specie, dis-re-specie, ir-re-specie-ive, retro-specie, sub-specie, spec-t-a-cle, spec-t-a-tor, spec-tre, spec-trum; also spite, respite.

SQUAB, 1. to fall plump; 2. a sofa; a young bird. (Scand.) 'Squab, an unfledged bird, the young of an animal before the hair appears (South); a lounge seat, a sofa; also, to squeeze, beat (Devon);' Halliwell. Halliwell also cites from Coles: 'A squob to sit on, pulvinus molliculus;' this is not in the edition of 1684. Squab, a sofa, is in Pope, Imitation of Earl of Dorset, l. 10. Johnson also explains squab as 'unfeathered; fat, thick and stout;' and gives squab, adv., 'with a heavy, sudden fall, plump and flat,' with a quotation from Lestrang's Fables: 'The eagle took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock;' also squab, verb, to fall down plump or flat; cf. prov. E. squap, to strike. In all senses, the word is of Scand. origin. 1. The Swed. dial. svappa, a word imitative of a splash (Rietz), explains Lestrang's squab and the verb 'to fall plump,' hence to knock, beat; cf. G. schwapp, a slap, E. swap, to strike; see SWAP and SQUABBLE. 2. The senses 'fat,' 'unfledged,' and 'soft' (as a sofa) are best explained by Swed. dial. svabb, loose or fat flesh, svabba, a fat woman, svabbig, flabby; from the verb appearing in Norweg. svappa, to tremble, shake (hence, to be flabby). Cf. also Norweg. keppa (pt. t. kvapp), to slip suddenly, shake, shudder, and the ME. quappen, to throb, mentioned under QUAVER, q.v. And note Icel. kvap, jelly, jelly-like things. See, in Rietz, the Swed. dial. str. vb. skumpa (pt. t. skvamp, pp. skvumpen), to shake, agitate; and cf. Swed. svappa, MDan. skvalpe, to shake.

SQUABBLE, to dispute noisily, wrangle. (Scand.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 281. -Swed. dial. skvabbl, a dispute, a squabble (corresponding to a verb skvabbla*, not given); Rietz. Allied to Swed. dial. skvappa, to chide, scold slightly, lit. make a splashing; from the sb. skvapp, a splash, an imitative word from the sound of dabbling in water; Rietz. Cf. Icel. skumpa, to paddle in water. We may also further compare Norweg. svabba, to dabble in water (Aasen), prov. E. swap, a blow, the noise of a fall, to strike swiftly, swab, to splash over, swabble, to squabble, swobble, to swagger in a low manner (East). 'Swabblyng, swabblyng, or swaggyng;' Prompt. Parv. Also G. schwabbeln, to shake fluids about. See SWAP. ¶ The interchange of initial sq and sw is common; Levins writes sqwayne for swain. Der. squabble, sb., squabbl-er.

SQUAD, a small troop. (F.-Ital.-L.) We speak of 'an awkward squad;' -MF. esquadra, esquadre, 'a squadron of footmen;' Cot. -Ital. squadra, 'a squadron;' Florio. See SQUARE. Der. squadron.

SQUADRON, a troop of soldiers, a body of cavalry, number of ships. (F.-Ital.-L.) In Oth. i. 1. 22; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 2. -MF. esquadron, 'a squadron, a troop of soldiers ranged into a square body or battalion,' Cot. -Ital. squadrona, 'a squadron, a troupe or band of men;' Florio. The augmentative form (with suffix -one < L. acc. -ōnem) of Ital. squadra, 'a squadron, also a square, squire, or carpenter's ruler, also a certain part of a company of soldiers of 30 or 25 [25 is a square number], whose chief is a corporal;' id. Doubtless so called, at first, from a formation into squares; see further under SQUARE. And see squad.

SQUALID, filthy, dirty. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. r. 13. -L. squalidus, stiff, rough, dirty, foul. -I. squalire, to be stiff, rough, or parched, to be dirty. Bréal connects it with squai-ma, a shell; but cf. Russ. kal', ordure. Der. squalid-ly, -ness. Also squal-or (rare), from squail-ere.

SQUALL, to cry out violently. (Scand.) 'The raven croaks, the carrion-crow doth squall;' Dryden, Noah's Flood, l. 150 from end. -Icel. skvala, to squeal, bawl out; skval, a squalling; Swed.

squala, to stream, gush out violently; squal, an impetuous running of water; squal-regu, a violent shower of rain (whence E. squall, sb., a lurch of rain); Dan. svaldre, to clamour, bluster; squaller, clamour, noisy talk. Cf. Swed. dial. skvala, skvala, to gush out with a violent noise, to prattle, chatter; Gael. sgal, a loud cry, sound of high wind, sgal, to howl; cf. W. chwala, to babble. β . From a base squal*, expressive of the outburst of water; allied to Teut. base SKAL, to resound, as in G. schallen, Icel. skjalla (pt. t. skall). Der. squall, sb., as above; squally. And see squal.

SQUANDER, to dissipate, waste. (Scand.) Now used only of profuse expenditure, but the orig. sense was to scatter or disperse simply, as still used in prov. E. 'His family are all grown up, and squandered [dispersed] about the country,' Warwicksh. (Halliwell). 'Squandered [scattered] abroad;' Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 22. 'Spaine . . . hath many colonies to supply, which they squandered up and down;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. ix, ed. Arber, p. 45. 'All along the sea they drive and squander the huge Belgian fleet;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, ct. 67. Mr. Wedgwood's solution of this curious word is probably the right one, viz. that it is a nasalised form (as if for squant*) of Northumb. squantter, squantter, to scatter, dissipate, or squander, to act with profusion (Jamieson). This is the same as prov. E. swatter, swather, to throw water about, as geese do in drinking, also, to squander, waste; also as prov. E. swattle, to drink as ducks do water, to waste; see E. D. D. These are frequentatives from Dan. squatte, to splash, spurt; figuratively, to dissipate, squander; cf. squat, sb., a splash. So also Swed. squätra, to squander, lavish one's money (Widgren); frequentative of squitta, to squirt (id.); Swed. dial. skvätta, a strong verb (pt. t. skvätt, supine skvättid), to squirt. Note also Icel. skvæta, to squirt out water, properly of the sound of water thrown out of a jug, skvættir, a gush of water poured out. The d appears in MDu. swadden, 'to dabble in the water as a goose or duck'; Hexham; and in Swed. dial. skvadra, verb, used of the noise of water gushing violently out of a hole (Kietz). The word is now used metaphorically, but the orig. sense was merely to splash water about somewhat noisily. The Icel. skvæta is for skvænta* (Noreen); and may even be allied to Gk. skwēvō, to pour out. A somewhat similar word is E. scatter. Der. squander-er.

SQUARE, having four equal sides and angles. (F.-L.) ME. square (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1078 (A 1076); Cursor Mundi, 19843.-OF. esquarré, 'square, or squared'; Cot.; esquarre, sb., a square, or squareness. The sb. is the same as Ital. quadrato, 'a quadrone, also a square, squire, or carpenter's ruler'; cf. Ital. quadrare, 'to square', id. All formed from a Late L. verb quadrare*, not found, but a mere intensive of L. quadrare, to square, make four-cornered, by prefixing the prep. ex. The verb quadrare is from quadrus, four-cornered, related to quattuor, four, cognate with E. four. See EX-, QUARRY, QUADRANT, and FOUR. Der. square, sb., square, verb, square-ly, -ness. Also squire (2), q.v., squadr, squadr-on.

SQUASH, to crush, to squeeze flat. (F.-L.) α . No doubt commonly regarded as an intensive form of quash; the prefix answering to OF. es- = L. ex-. Cf. OF. esquasser, to break in pieces; from es- (L. ex), intensive prefix, and quasser, casser, to break; see QUASH. β . But it commonly keeps the sense of ME. squachen, Barlaam and Josaphat, l. 663, pr. in Altenglische Legenden, ed. Horstmann, p. 224.-OF. esquacher, to crush (Roquefort, who gives a quotation); also spelt eschacher, 'to squash, beat, batter, or crush flat'; Cot. Mod. F. eschacher. This answers to Span. acachar, agachar, only used reflexively, in the sense to squat, to crouch (Diez). The F. eschacher answers to a Late L. type co-act-icere*, to press together (Körting, § 227). The prefix es- = L. ex-, extremely; hence es-echacher is 'to press extremely', crush flat, squash.-L. ex-; and coact-us, pp. of coagere (= co-agere), lit. to drive together; see EX-, COGENT; also CON- and AGENT. And see SQUAT, a closely allied word. Der. squash, sb., a soft, unripe peasecod, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 166.

SQUAT, to cower, sit down upon the hams. (F.-L.) 'To squat as a hare doth'; Minshew, ed. 1627. Here squat is to lie flat, as if pressed tightly down; and the old sense of squat is, occasionally, to press down, crush, much like the sense of SQUASH, which is a closely related word. [This is well exemplified in Spanish; see below.] 'His grief defied squating,' where the L. text has premit; Stanbury, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. 209. ME. squatten, to press or crush flat. 'The foundements of hillis ben togidir snyeten and squat' = the foundations of the hills are smitten together and crushed; Wyclif, 2 Kings, xxii. 8. 'Squat sal he hevendes' = he shall crush the heads (L. compassabilis capitis), Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. cix. (or cx.) 6. This explains prov. E. squat, to make flat, and squat, adj., flat. It is important also to note that squat is used in the same sense as squat; indeed, in the Glossary to the Exmoor Scolding, the word squat is explained by 'to gnat down'; which shows that the s- in squat is a prefix.-OF. equatir, to flatten, crush (Roquefort).-OF. es-, from L. ex-, extremely; and quatre, to press down, hence, reflexively, to press oneself down, to squat, cower. 'Ele se quatit deles lun de pilers' = she squatted down beside one of the pillars; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 282, l. 16. The corresponding word is Span. acachar, agachar, whence acacharse, 'to crouch, lie squat' (Meadows), agacharse, 'to stoop, couch, squat, cower' (id.). Minshew's M. Span. Dict. has: 'agachar, to squat as a hare or conic.' Without the prefix, we find Span. coacho, gacho, bent, bent downward, lit. pressed down; Ital. quatto, 'squat, hush, close, still, lurking' (Florio), quattare, 'to squat, to hush, to lie close' (id.). Diez shows that OF. quatre and Ital. quatto are due to L. coact-us, pressed close together (whence also F. se cacher, to squat, cacher, to hide). Thus the etymology of squat is from L. ex-, coact-us, together, and act-us, pp. of agere, to drive. See EX-, CON-, and AGENT; and see SQUASH. Der. squat-er. β . Any connexion of squat with Dan. squatte, to splash, is entirely out of the question; the E. word related to Dan. squatte is SQUANDER, q.v.

SQUAW, a female, woman. (N. Amer. Indian.) It occurs in J. Mather, Remarkable Providences (1684); repr. by Olfert, p. 33. Squaw, a female, woman, in the language of the Indian tribes of the Algonquin family.-Massachusetts sqaw, sqhqua; Narragansett squidus; Cree iskwew; Delaware ochqueu and qhqueu; used also in compound words (as the names of animals) in the sense of female; Webster; and Cent. Dict.

SQUEAK, to utter a shrill sharp cry. (Scand.) In Hamlet, i. 1. 116. 'The squeaking, or screeching of a rat'; Iaret (1880).-MSwed. squaka, to squeak (Ihre); Swed. squäka, to croak; cf. Norweg. skvaka, to cackle (Aasen); Icel. skvækka, to give a sound, as of water shaken in a bottle, skak, a noise. And cf. Swed. spåla, to squeal. Allied to SQUEAL, QUACK, CAWKE; expressive of the sound made. So also G. quaken, to quack; quäken, quäken, to squeak. Der. squeak, sb.

SQUEAL, to utter a shrill prolonged sound. (Scand.) In Jul. Cæs. ii. 2. 24. ME. squelen, Cursor Mundi, l. 1344.-MSwed. squæla, to squeal (Ihre); Swed. squæla, to squeal; Norweg. skvælla, to squeal (Aasen). Used as a frequentative of squeak; the sense is 'to keep on squeaking'; see SQUEAK. η Notwithstanding the close similarity, squall is not quite the same word, though the words are now confused. Both, however, are expressive of continuous sounds. See SQUALL. Der. squæla, sb.

SQUEAMISH, scrupulously fastidious, over-nice. (F.) 'To be squeamish, or nice, Delicias facere'; Iaret (1880). ME. skeymous, steymous. 'Skeymous, or skeymouse, Abominativus'; Prompt. Parv., p. 482; also written quermous, p. 419. Squaimous, in Chaucer, C. T., A 3337, means fastidious, sparing, infrequent, with occasional violent exceptions; see l. 3805 (A 3807). 'Squaymose, verecundus'; Catholicon Anglicum (1483); squaymvs, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vii. 461; squeymous, Lay le Freine, 62. In a version of the Te Deum from a 14th-century primer given by Maskell (Mon. Rit. ii. 12) we have 'Thou were not skeymos of the maidens wombe'; see Notes and Queries, 4 S. iii. 181.-AF. eskeimous* (with AF. ei for F. oi), spelt escomous in Bozon, Contes Moralises, p. 158, with the sense of 'sparing in eating, fastidious, nice as to food.' Of unknown origin. It might answer, as to form, to a Late L. type schēmātōus*, or schēmōus* (since L. e gave AF. ei, F. oi; Schwan, §§ 39, 299); from Late L. schēma, fashion, manner; from Gk. σχῆμα, a scheme, figure, mien, air, fashion; the sense being 'full of airs or affectations.' See SCHEME. Der. squeamish-ly, -ness.

SQUEEZE, to crush or press tightly, to crowd. (E.) 'To squeeze, or thrust together'; Iaret (1880). The initial s is prefixed for emphasis, being due to the OF. ex- < L. ex-, an intensive prefix; to squeeze = to queeze out. Late ME. queisen; 'queyse out the jus' = squeeze out the juice, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 302. It answers, in form, to Omerc. cuisan, for AS. cuisan, to squeeze, crush, generally written cuisan, and used in the compound ðeucysan, to crush to pieces, squeeze to death, Alfric's Homilies, l. 60; ii. 26, 166, 294, 510. Also cuisan; in Luke, xx. 18, where the earlier version has ðeucysat (for ðeucysad), the latter has ðeucysat (for ðeucysad). β . Cognate with Low G. quosen (Brem. Wörterbuch). From a Teut. root kruwen*. Der. squeeze, sb.

SQUIB, (1) a paper tube, filled with combustibles, like a small rocket; also (2) a lampoon. (Scand.) 1. 'Can he tie squibs' their tails, and fire the truth out?' Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, v. 2. 6. 'A squibbe, a ball or dart of fire'; Minshew, ed. 1627. Spenser has it in the curious sense of 'paltry fellow,' as a term of disdain; Mother Hubbard's Tale, 571. Squibs were sometimes fastened slightly to a rope, so as to run along like a rocket; 'The squib's run to the end of the line, and now for the cracker' [explosion]; Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act v. sc. 1. 'Hung up by the heels like meteors, with squibs in their tails; 'Ben Jonson, News from the New World (and Herald). β. Squib is a voiced form of squip, and prov. E. squib, to squirt, answers to Norw. skipa, to squirt (Ross). It seems to be allied to swip, a word significant of swift smooth motion. Cf. ME. skippen, swippen, to move swiftly, fly, sweep, dash; 'the squyppend water' = the dashing or sweeping water, Anturs of Arthur (in Three Met. Romances), st. v. 'When the saul fra the body swippes' i.e. flies; Prick of Conscience, l. 2196. 'Tharfor þai swippe [dant] þurgh purgatory, Als a foul [bird] that flies smertly' i. l. 3322. 'Swippe forð' = hurried away, snatched away, Ancrén Kiwe, p. 228, l. 4. Swip is from Icel. swipa, to flash, dart, of a sudden but noiseless motion; swipr, a swift movement, twinkling, glimpse; Norweg. swipa, to run swiftly (Aasen); cf. also Dan. swippe, to whisk, to run (Iarsen). The Teut. base SWIP was also used to express the swift or sweeping motion of a whip; as in AS. swipe, a whip (John, ii. 15). Du. swiepen, a whip, G. schwippe, a whip-lash. Note also Dan. swippe, to crack a whip, swip, an instant, i. et swip, in a trice, Swed. dial. swipa, swiepa, to sweep, swing, lash with a whip. γ. All from Teut. base SWEIP, to move with a turning motion, move swiftly, sweep along (Fick, iii. 365); see further under Swift. Cf. swyfter, agilis in Prompt. Parv. 2. A squib also means a political lampoon; but it was formerly applied, not to the lampoon itself, but to the writer of it. 'The squibs are those who, in the common phrase of the world, are call'd libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers; their fireworks are made up in paper;' Tatler, no. 88; Nov. 1, 1709. It has been noted above that Spenser uses squib as a term of derision. 3. The sense of child's squirt is directly from Norw. skipa, to squirt (above).

SQUID, a kind of cuttlefish. (Scand.) So named from its squirting out sepia; cf. prov. E. squiddle, to squirt. A voiced form, with d for Scand. t; allied to Swed. dial. spitta, strong verb, to squirt; Icel. spetta, to squirt out. (Teut. base skwet*.)

SQUILL, a genus of bulbous plants allied to the onion. (F.-L.-Gk.) ME. squlle. 'Squille, herba, Ceyna maris, bulbous; Prompt. Parv.-MF. squlle, 'the squill, sea-onion; also a prawn, shrimp;' Cot.-L. squlla, also scilla, a sea-onion, sea-leek; a kind of prawn. = Gk. σquilla, a squill; cf. σquillo, a squill.

SQUINANCY, the old spelling of Quinsey, q.v.
SQUINT, to look askew. (E?) Palsgrave has 'a-squynye, en lorgnant;' p. 831. The earliest quotation is the following: 'Biholdeð o luf and asquint' = looks leftwards and askew; Ancrén Kiwe, p. 212, l. 4. Apparently due to asquint (above), with loss of a; see Asquint in N. E. D. It is improbable that it is a native word, but it is difficult to say how we came by it. It seems to be allied to askance; see Askance in N. E. D. β. Cf. Dan. på skæns, askant; Swed. dial. på sköns, askant; Low G. schien, schien, obliquely; Du. schuin, oblique, wry, schuinen, to slope; schuinite, obliquity; in de schuinite, askant; EFries. schûn, oblique, schûnite, obliquity.

SQUIRE (1), the same as Esquire, q.v. (F.-L.) It occurs, spell squire, as early as in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 360. Doublet, esquire.

SQUIRE (2), a square, a carpenter's rule. (F.-L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 474. ME. squire, Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, 325. = OF. esquire, MF. esquiere, 'a rule, or square;' Cot. Mod. F. esquiere. Merely another form of OF. esquarre, a square; see Square. Doublet, square, sb.

SQUIRREL, a nimble, reddish-brown, rodent animal. (F.-L.-Gk.) ME. squirrel (with one r), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 2777. Also scurel. 'Ille scurellus, a scurrelle;' Voc. 759. 29. = OF. escurel, escurel (Godefroy); spell escurien in Cotgrave. Mod. F. écureuil. = Late L. sciurellus (as above), also sciurus (Ducauge). For 'sciurellus,' sciuriolus, diminutives of sciurus, a squirrel. = Gk. σκίουρος, a squirrel; lit. 'shadow-tail,' from his bushy tail. = Gk. σκῆν, for σκία, a shadow, and οὐρά, a tail. But this explanation of the Gk. word is prob. due to popular etymology. The AF. form was esquirel; Liber Albus, pp. 225, 231.

SQUIRT, to jet, throw or jerk out water. (E) 'I squyrte with a squyrte, an instrument;' Palsgrave. The prov. E. swirt, to squirt, is the same word, with sw for sq; we even find bilagget wot swirring = dirtied with squirting, in Walter de Bibbesworth, Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 1. Cf. Low G. swirfjen, to squirt; orig. an extension of swieren, to whirl, turn about quickly, G. schwirren; see Swarm. So also EFries. kwirfjen, to squirt out, to dart about, from kwirt, turning quickly about; see Whir. Der. squirt, sb., in Palsgrave.

STAB, to pierce with a sharp instrument. (Scand.) 'I stabbe in with a dagger or any other sharpe wepyn;' Palsgrave. ME. stabbe, sb.; 'Stabbe, or wounde of smytynge, Stigma;' Prompt. Parv. Apparently from Swed. dial. stabe, a thick stick or stump; Icel. stabi, a stub, stump, allied to staf, a staff; Dan. dial. stabb, a short peg. Cf. Irish stobaim, I stab; Gael. stob, to thrust or fix a stake in the ground, to stab, thrust, from stob, a stake, a pointed iron or stick, a stab or stump. This Gael. stob is similarly borrowed from Icel. stobi, a stub; see Staff, Stub. Der. stab, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 63.

STABLE (1), a stall or building for horses. (F.-L.) ME. stable, King Alisaunder, 778. = OF. estable, 'a stable;' Cot. Mod. F. étale. = L. stabilum, a standing-place, abode, stall, stable. Idg. type stakh-lom*; cf. AS. staf-ol, a foundation, support, position. See Stall. Brugmann, § 483 (9), 573. Formed with suffix -h (u) (h < dh), from the weak grade of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q.v. Der. stable, verb, stabil-.

STABLE (2), firm, steady. (F.-L.) ME. stable, Rob. of Glouc., p. 54, l. 1245. = OF. estable, stable (Burguy). = L. stabilis, acc. of stabilis, stable, standing firmly; formed with suffix -bilis from the weak grade of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q.v. Idg. type stakhlie*. Der. stabil-y; stable-ness, Mach. iv. 3. 92; stabil-ty, spell stabilitye, Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 38, coined from L. stabilitas, firmness. Also stabilish, ME. stabilisen, Chaucer, C. T. 2997 (A 2995), the same word as estabilish, q.v.

STACK, a large pile of wood, hay, corn, &c. (Scand.) ME. stac, stak. 'Stacke or heep, Agger;' Prompt. Parv. Stac in Havelock, 814, is prob. merely our stack. [Stacke, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Luxuria (Tyrrhitt), is an error for stank; see Group I, 841.] = Icel. stakkr, a stack of hay; cf. Icel. stakka, a stump, as in our chimney-stack, and in stak, a columnar isolated rock; Swed. stak, a rick, heap, stack; Dan. stak. β. The Teut. type is staknoz* (Noreen). The sense is 'a pile,' that which is set up; the allied E. word is Stake, q.v. Cf. Russ. stog, a heap, a hay-rick. Der. stak, verb, as in Swed. staka, Dan. stakke, to stack; stack-yard, answering to Icel. stak-garðr, a stack-garth (garth being the Norse form of yard); also hay-stack, corn-stack.

STAFF, a large piece of wood, stick, prop, pole, cudgel. (E.) ME. staf, pl. staves (where u = v). 'Vlyk a staf;' Chaucer, C. T. 594 (A 592). 'Two staves;' P. Plowman, B. v. 28. AS. staf, pl. stafas, Exod. xxi. 19, John, vii. 15. The pl. stafas also meant letters of the alphabet; this meaning seems to have originated staves as a musical term. + Du. staf; Icel. staf, a staff, also a written letter (see Icel. Dict.); Dan. staf, stav; Swed. staf; G. stab; Goth. stafs, a letter; hence, an element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. β. The word is allied to O. Church Slav. stoborŭ, a pillar, lith. stobrys, a stump of a tree; from an Idg. root STEBH, whence Skt. stambh, to make firm, set fast. Cf. EFries. staf, unmoved. See Stub, Stab. Der. disstaff (for dis-staff), q.v. Doublet, stave, sb., q.v.
STAG, a male deer. (Scand.) Late AS. stagg, from Norse; as in 'regalem feram, quam Angli staggon appellant;' Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 429. The word was also applied to the male of other animals. Stagge, cerurus; Levins. 'Staggander [= steep-gander, male gander], anser;' id. Lowland Sc. stag, a young horse; prov. E. stag, a gander, a wren, a cock-turkey. = Icel. steggr, steggi, a he-bird, a drake, a tom-cat. Teut. type stagoz*. Not allied to Icel. stiga. Der. stag-hound.

STAGE, a platform, theatre; place of rest on a journey, the distance between two such resting-places. (F.-L.) ME. stage, Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, 255; King Alisaunder, 7684. = OF. estage, 'a story, stage, loft, or height of a house; also a lodging, dwelling-house;' Cot. Mod. F. étage; Ital. staggio, a prop; Prov. estage, a dwelling-place (Bartsch). Formed as if from a L. type staiacum* (not found), a dwelling-place; allied to L. stat-um, supine of stare, to stand, with suffix -ium. See Stable (1). Stand. Der. stage-coach, a coach that runs from stage to stage; stage-player; stage-in, a scaffolding.

STAGGER, to reel from side to side, vacillate; also, to cause to reel, to cause to hesitate. (Scand.) 'I stagger, I stande not stedfast;' Palsgrave. Stagger is a weakened form of staker (spelt stakker in Palsgrave), ME. stakeren. 'She rist her up, and stakereth heer and there;' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 2687. = Icel. stakra, to push, to stagger; frequentative of staka, to punt, to push, also, to stagger; cf. Norw. stakra, staka, to stagger; Swed. dial. stagra; Dan. dial. stagle, stagger. Perhaps staka, to push, is allied to Swed. stake, a stake; see Stake. Cf. Dan. stage, to punt with a pole, from stage, a pole, a stake. Thus the orig. sense was 'to keep pushing about,' to cause to vacillate or reel; the intransitive sense, to reel, is later. + MDu. staggeren, to stagger as a drunken man (Hexham); frequent. of staken, staken, to stop or dam up (with stakes), to set stakes, also 'to leave or give over work,' id. In this latter view, to stagger might mean 'to be always coming to a stop,' or 'often to stick fast.' Either way, the etymology is the same. Der. stagers, s. pl., vertigo, Cymb. v. f. 234.

STAGNATE, to cease to flow. (L.) A late word; stagnate and stagnant are in Phillips, ed. 1706. L. stagnatus, pp. of stagnare, to be still, cease to flow, to form a still pool. = L. stagnum, a pool, a tank. See Stank. Der. stagnat-ion; also stagnant, from L. stagnant-, stem of pres. pt. of stagnare. Also stanch, q.v.

STAID, steadily, grave, sober. (F.-M.Du.) It may be observed that the resemblance to steady is accidental, though both words are ultimately from the same root, and so have a similar sense. Staid stands for stay'd, pp. of stay, to make steady; and the actual spelling stay'd is by no means uncommon. 'The strongest man of th' empire, Nay, the most stay'd . . . The most true;' Ben Jonson, and Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 6. 11. 'The fruits of his stay'd faith;' Dryden, Polyolbion, song 24 (K.). Spencer even makes the word dissyllabic; 'Held on his course with stay'd steadfastness;' F. Q. ii. 12. 29. See Stay (1). Der. staid-ly, staid-ness.

STAIN, to tinge, dye, colour, sully. (F.-L.) An abbreviation of distain, like sport for disport, spend for dispend. ME. stainen, Gower, C. A. i. 255, bk. ii. 1963; short for distainen, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 255. —OF. destain, a stem of destaindre, 'to distain, to dead or take away the colour of;' Cot. 'I stainye a thyng, I destainye,' Palgrave. Thus the orig. sense was 'to spoil the colour of,' or dim; as used by Chaucer. —L. dis-, away; and tingere, to dye. See Dis- and Tingo. Der. stain, sb.; stain-less, 'Iv. Nt. i. 5. 278.

STAIR, a step for ascending by. (E.) Usually in the plural. [The phrase 'a pair of stairs' - a set of stairs; the old sense of pair being a set of equal things; see Pair.] ME. stair, staire, stayer. 'Ne steyers to stey [mount] on;' Trest of Love, l. 1. 44. 'He is je staire' - high is the stair; Ancren Riwle, p. 284, l. 8; the pl. stair occurs in the line above. AS. stiger, a stair, step; 'Ascension, stiger;' Voc. 126, 99. [The g passes into s as usual, and just as AS. dag became day, so AS. stiger became stayer, steyer, stair.] The lit. sense is 'a step to climb by,' a mounter; formed (with mutation of a to e) from stæg, and grade of stigan, to climb. +Du. stieger, a stair; allied to stegel, a stirrup, steg, a narrow bridge; all from stigen, to mount. Cf. also Icel. stigi, stagi, a step, ladder (whence prov. E. stee, a ladder), stiger, a path, foot-way (originally uphill path), from stiga, to mount; Swed. stige, a round of a ladder, steg, a ladder, from stiga, to mount; Dan. stige, a ladder, sti, a path, from stige, to mount; G. stieg, a path, from steigen, to mount. B. All from Teut. str. vb. steigan*-, to climb, pt. t. staig*, pp. stigan*oz; from Idg. STRIGH-*, to climb, ascend, whence also Skt. stigh, to ascend, Gk. στρίγειν, to ascend, march, go, Goth. steigan, to ascend; also E. stilt, q.v., stirrup, q.v. Der. stair-case; stair-work, Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 75.

STAITHIE, a landing-place. (E.) A provincial word; also spelt staith, staik (Halliwell). AS. staeg, a bank, shore (Grein); also AS. stæð, Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 147, l. 5. Cf. Icel. stöð, a harbour, roadstead; MDu. stade, a haven. Allied to Stead, q.v.

STAKE, a post, strong stick, pale. (E.) ME. stake, Chaucer, C. T. 2620 (A 2618). AS. staca, a stake, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. cap. 5; also a sharply pointed pin, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 230, l. 14. The latter sense is important, as pointing to the etymology. From the Teut. base stak*, and grade of the strong verb stakan*-, to pierce, stick into. See Stick (1). Thus, the orig. sense is 'a piercer,' the suffix -a marking the agent, as in AS. hunt-a, a hunter; hence a pin, a sharply pointed stick. +MDu. stake, staek, 'a stake or a pale, a pile driven into water, a stake for which one playeth;' Hexham (Du. staak). Cf. steken, to stab, put, stick, prick, sting; id. +Icel. staki, a stake, punt-pole; Dan. stake, a stake; Swed. stake, a stake, a candle-stick. And cf. G. stachel, a prick, sting, goad. B. The sense of a sum of money to be played for may be borrowed from Dutch, being found in MDutch, as above. It occurs in Wint. Tale, i. 2. 218; and the phr. at stake or at the stake occurs five times in Shak. (Schmidt). In this sense, a stake is that which is 'put' or pledged; cf. MDu. henselven in schuld steken, 'to runne himself into debt;' Hexham. ¶ A closely allied word is stuck, a pile, a thing stuck up; see Stuck.

STALACTITE, an inverted cone of carbonate of lime, hanging like an icicle in some caverns. (F.-Gk.) Modern. Hyron (wrongly) has stalact-ites (4 syllables); The Island, iv. 7. 23. —F. stalactite (A.D. 1752). So called because formed by the dripping of water. Formed, with suffix -ite (Gk. -της), from σταλακτῖς, trickling; cf. σταλακτῖς (base σταλακτῖδ), that which drops, —Gk. σταλακτῖς (= σταλακτῖς), to drop, drip; lengthened form of σταλακτῖς, to drip. See Stalagmite.

STALAGMITE, a cone of carbonate of lime on the floor of a cavern formed by dripping water. (F.-Gk.) Modern. —F. stalagmite. Formed with suffix -ite (Gk. -της), from σταλαγμα, a drop; from σταλακτῖς (= σταλακτῖς), to drip. See Stalactite.

STALE (1), too long kept, tainted, vapid, trite. (F.-Teut.) 1. Stale is also used as a sb., in the sense of urine. Palgrave gives it in this sense; and see escol in Cotgrave. Marcs do not stop to stale; see Holland's Pliny, i. 222. —OF. estaler, to make water (in Godefroy, s.v. estaler (2), but wrongly explained). Of Teut. origin.

Cf. EFries. and Low G. stallen, Swed. stalla, to put into a stall, also to stale (as cattle and horses); Dan. stalde, to stale (as a horse), also to stall-feed. From Stall, sb. 2. Stale, adj., is in Chaucer, C. T. 13694 (B 1954), as applied to ale. We may explain stale, adj., as 'too long exposed for sale,' as in the case of provisions left unsold; cf. ME. estaler, 'to display, lay open wares on stalls' (Cot.), from estall, 'the stall of a shop, or booth, any place where wares are laid and shewed to be sold.' But since this F. estal is merely borrowed from the Teutonic word stall, it comes to be much the same thing. Cf. MDu. stal, stale; stel-bier, stale beer; stel-pisse, urine (Hexham); Du. stal, a stall. See Körting, §§ 9014, 9015. ¶ Wedgwood, following Schmeller, explains stale, sb., from stopping the horse to let him stale; and cites Swed. ställa en hest, to stop a horse. But here again, the Swed. ställa is derived from Swed. stall, orig. a stopping-place; while 'to stale' is Swed. ställa. Der. stale, verb, Antony, ii. 2. 240; stale-ness, Per. v. 1. 58.

STALE (2), a decoy, snare. (E.) 'Still as he went, he crafty stales did lay;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. Note AF. estale, a decoy-bird (Bozon). Adapted from AS. stal, as in stal-bræn, a decoy reinder, allied to ME. stale, theft; hence stealth, deceit, slyness, or a trap; it occurs in Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 9, l. 24. Compare the phrase cumen bi stale - to come by stealth, to surprise; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 249, l. 20. From AS. stalu, theft, Matt. xv. 19. —Teut. stall, and grade of stelan*-, as in AS. stelan, to steal; see Steal.

STALE (3), STREAL, a handle. (E.) Chiefly applied to the long handle of a rake, hoe, &c.; spelt Stale in Halliwell. Stale also means a round of a ladder, or a stalk (jd.). ME. stale. 'A ladel . . . with a long stale' (2 MSS. have stale); P. Plowman, C. xii. 279. From AS. stela, stala, stola; the dat. pl. stalum (in another MS. stelum) occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 154, in the sense of 'stalks.' +Du. stale, a stalk, stem, handle. [G. stiel, MFG. stiel, a handle, seem distinct.] Allied to stall and stall; the stale being the handle whereby the tool is firmly held. Cf. further Gk. στράλις, a stake to which nets are fastened, στράλιον, στράλιον, a handle or helve of an ax. See Stalk. Der. stalk (1) and (2), q.v.

STALK (1), a stem. (E.) ME. stalk, of which one sense is the stem or side-piece of a ladder. 'To climben by the ronges [rungs] and the stalkes;' Chaucer, C. T. 3625. A dimin. form, with suffix -ke, of ME. stale, stale, a handle, AS. stela, stala, a stalk; see Stale (3). [Icel. stálkr, a stalk, goes with (i. stiel). Cf. also Gk. στράλιον, a trunk, stem (of a tree), allied to στράλιον, a handle. Der. stalk (2), q.v.]

STALK (2), to stride, walk with slow steps. (E.) ME. stalken, to walk cautiously. 'Stalkeden til fully;' Will. of Palerne, 2728. 'With dredful foot [timid step] then stalketh Palamoun;' Chaucer, C. T. 1481 (A 1479). AS. stalcen, to go warily; stalcen, a stalking. These forms are in Toller, with references for bestalcian and stalcen; Sommer gives the forms stalcen and stalcen. +Dan. stalk, to stalk. Cf. AS. stale, lofty, high (Grein). The notion is that of walking with lifted feet, so as to go noiselessly; the word is prob. connected with Stilt, q.v., and with Stalk (1) above. Halliwell has Stalk, the leg of a bird; stalk, to go slowly with, a quotation from Gower, C. A. i. 187; also stilt, the handle of a plough, which (like stalk) is an extension of Stalk; see Stale (3). We may explain stalk, verb, as to walk on lengthened legs or stalks, to go on tiptoe or noiselessly. Der. stalk-er; stalk-ing-horse, a horse for stalking game, explained in Dictionarium Rusticum, 1726, quoted at length in Halliwell.

STALL, a standing-place for cattle, shed, division of a stable, a table on which things are exposed for sale, a seat in a choir or theatre. (E.) All the senses are from the notion of a fixed or settled place or station. Indeed, station is from the same root. ME. stal; dat. stalle, Chaucer, C. T. 8083 (F 207). AS. stean, steall, a place, station, stall; Grein, ii. 480; also stael, id. 477. +Du. stal; Icel. stallr, a stall, pedestal, shelf; cf. stalli, an altar. Dan. stald (for stall), a stable; Swed. stal; G. stall; O.H.G. stall, Teut. type stall-*, perhaps for stad-*loc; cf. E. stead, Gk. σταδῖον, a stall; L. stadium (for stad-*lon). See Stead. Brugmann, i. § 593 (4). Der. stall-er, from MF. stallage, 'stallage,' Cot., where estall, a stall, is borrowed from Teutonic, and the suffix -er answers to L. -aticum. Also stall, verb, Rich. III. i. 3. 206; stall-ed, fattened in a stall. Prov. xv. 17, from Swed. stalla, Dan. stalle, to stall-feed, feed in a stall. Also stall-feed, verb; stall-fed, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. xiv. 161. Also stall-i-on, q.v. Doublet, stable.

STALLION, an entire horse. (F.-OHG.) Spelt stallion in Levins, with excrement d; stallion in Palgrave, with excrement t. ME. stalon, Voc. 638. 3; Gower, C. A. iii. 280; bk. viii. 160. —OF. estalon, 'a stallion for mares;' Cot. Mod. F. stallion; cf. Ital. stallone, a stallion, also a stable-man, ostler. So called because kept in a stall and not made to work; Diez cites equus ad stallum from the Laws of the Visigoths.—OHG. stal, a stall, stable; cognate with E. Stall (above). β. The ī may have been suggested by the Ital. stallione, given by Torriano as a variant of stallone, and explained by 'a horse long kept in the stable without being ridden or used; also, a stallion.'

STALWART, sturdy, stout, brave. (E.) A corruption of ME. stalworth, Will. of Palerne, 1950; Pricke of Conscience, 689; Havelock, 904. The intermediate form stalward occurs in Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iii. 439 (note). It is noticeable that e sometimes appears after the l; as in stelewurde, O. Eng. Hom. i. 25, l. 12; stelewurde, Juliana, p. 45, l. 11; stelewurde, St. Margaret, p. 15, l. 3 from bottom. AS. stalwyrðe (plural), A. S. Chron. an. 896. β. In the A. S. Chron. it is applied to ships, and means 'serviceable'; we are told that the men of London went to fetch the ships, and they broke up all they could not remove, whilst those that were serviceable (stalwyrðe) they brought to London. Sievers shows that the e was long (A. S. Grammar, § 202); and stīl- is contracted from stapil-, just as ge-stīlan is for ge-stapol-an, and stīlian for stapolian. The AS. stapol means 'foundation,' and stapolwyrðe means 'firm.' Cf. AS. stapol-fast, steadfast. For the latter part of the word, see WORTH, WORTHY.

STAMEN, one of the male organs of a flower. (L.) The lit. sense is 'thread.' A botanical term. [The pl. stamina, lit. threads, fibres, is used in E. (almost as a sing. sb.) to denote firm texture, and hence strength or robustness.]—L. stāmen (pl. stamina), the warp in an upright loom, a thread. līt 'that which stands up;' formed with suffix -men from stāre, to stand; see STAND. Cf. Gk. στῆμα, a stamen; also lōvōs, a warp, from the same root. Der. stamin or tammy.

STAMIN, TAMINE, TAMINY, TAMIS, TAMMY, a kind of stuff. (F.—L.) The correct form is stamin or stamine; Palsgrave has stamyne; the other forms are corruptions, with loss of initial s, as in tank (for stank). ME. stamin, Ancren Riwle, p. 418, l. 20.—OF. estamine, 'the stuff tammy'; Cot.—L. stāmineus, consisting of threads.—L. stāmin, decl. stem of stāmen, a thread, stamen; see STAMEN.

STAMMER, to stutter, to falter in speech. (E.) ME. stameren, in Kellicote Antiquae, i. 65; Arthur and Merlin, 2864 (Stratmann). AS. stamrian (for stamrian), to stammer, The Shrine, p. 42. Formed as a verb from AS. stamer or stamur, adj., stammering. 'Balbus, stamer,' Voc. 161. 37; 'Balbus, stamur,' id. 314. 38; stamor, id. 275. 20. The suffix -er, -ur, or -al is adjectival, expressive of 'fitness or disposition for the act or state denoted by the theme;' cf. bil-or, bitter, from bitan, to bite; March, A. S. Grammar, § 242. Thus stamer signifies 'disposed to come to a stand-still,' such being the sense of the base stām, which is an extension of the √STA, to stand; cf. prov. E. stam, to amaze, confound, related by gradation to G. stamm, dumb, stāmu, stameren, stamelen, to stammer; Icel. stamur, stammering; stamma, stame, to stammer; Dan. stamme, to stammer; Swed. stamma (the same); G. stammern, stammeln (the same), from OHG. stam, adj., stammering; Goth. stammis, adj. stammering, Mark, vii. 32. Der. stammer-er.

STAMP, to strike the foot firmly down, tread heavily and violently, to pound, impress, coin. (E.) ME. stampen, Chaucer, C. T. 12473 (C 538). 'And stamped heom in a mortar;' King Alisaunder, 332. AS. stampan, for stampan*; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 378, l. 18. stāmu, stampan; Icel. stappa (for stampa*, by assimilation); Swed. stampa; Dan. stampe; G. stampfen (whence OF. estampier, F. estamper); cf. G. stampf, OHG. stamph, a pestle for pounding, stāmu, stāmu, stāmu. Der. stamp, sb., Cor. ii. 2. 111; stamp-er; also stamp-ede, q.v.

STAMPEDE, a panic, sudden flight. (Span.—Teut.) 'Stampede, a sudden fright seizing upon large bodies of cattle or horses, ... leading them to run for many miles; hence, any sudden flight in consequence of a panic;' Webster. The e represents the sound of Span. i—Span. (and Port.) estampido, 'a crash, the sound of anything bursting or falling; Neuman. Formed as if from a verb estampir*, akin to estampar, to stamp. The reference appears to be to the sound caused by the blows of a pestle upon a mortar. The Span. estampar is of Teut. origin; see STAMP.

STANCE, a station, site; see STANZA.

STANCH, STAUNCH, to stop the flowing of blood. (F.—L.) ME. stauchen, to satisfy (hunger), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 3; d. iii. met. 3; to quench (flame), Gower, C. A. i. 15; prol. 345.—OF. estancher, 'to stanch, stop an issue of blood, to slake or quench hunger, thirst, &c.'; Cot. Cf. Walloon stanchi (Remacle), Span. estancar, to stop, check.—Late L. stancāre, to stop the flow of blood. The Late L. stancāre is a variant of a Late L. type stancāre*, from L. stagnāre, also used in the same sense of to stop the flow of blood (Ducange). See STAGNATE. Kötting (§ 9009), suggests that the sense may have been influenced by G. stange, a bar. Der. stanch or staunch, adj., firm, sound, spelt stanche in Palsgrave (p. 325); Phillips (ed. 1706) gives stanch, 'substantial, solid, good, sound'; this is derived from the verb, which Baret (1580) explains by 'to stanch, or stanch blood, ... also to stanch, to confirm, to make more strong;' it was suggested by the F. pp. estancher, 'stanché, stopped, stayed' (Cot.), or (as a nautical term) by OF. estanche, water-tight (Supp. to Godefroy), mod. F. étanche; cf. Span. estanco, water-tight, not leaky, said of a ship. Hence stanch-ly or staunch-ly: stanch-ness or staunch-ness. Also stanch-less, Macb. iv. 3. 78.

STANCHION, a support, an upright beam used as a support, a bar. (F.—L.) 'Stanchions (in a ship), certain pieces of timber which, being like pillars, support and strengthen those call'd waste-trees;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt stanchon, stanchon in Palsgrave.—ONorth F. estanchon, Norm. dial. étanchon; MF. estanchon, estanchon, 'a prop, stay'; Cot. MF. estanchon (mod. F. étanchon) is not derived from OF. estancher, to stanch, also used (by confusion) in the sense 'to prop'; but is a dimin. of OF. estance, a situation, condition (Burguy), also used, according to Godefroy, in the sense of stanchion.—Late L. stantia, a house, chamber (Ducange); lit. 'that which stands firm.'—L. stant, stem of pres. part. of stāre, to stand, cognate with F. STAND. See STANZA.

STAND, to be stationary or still, to rest, endure, remain, be firm, &c. (E.) ME. standen, pt. t. stood, stod, pp. standen, standen. The pp. standen is in Chaucer, C. T. 9368 (E 1494); and in the Earl of Tolouse, l. 322, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii. AS. standan, standan, pt. t. stād, pl. stādun, pp. standen; Grein, l. 475. stād, stād; Goth. standan, pt. t. stōh. Cf. Du. staan, pt. t. stond; G. stehen, pt. t. stand; Swed. stå, pt. t. stod. Teut. type stāndan*, pt. t. stōh*; base stāh*, stād*, the n being orig. characteristic of the present tense. Allied to L. stāre; Gk. στῆναι (I stood); Russ. стоять (to stand); Skt. sthā, to stand. All from Idg. √STA, to stand; one of the most prolific roots. See STATE. Der. stand, sb., Merch. Ven. v. 77; stand-er, Troil. iii. 3. 84; stand-er-by (the same as by-stand-er), Troil. iv. 5. 190; stand-ing, Wint. Tale, l. 2. 431; stand-ing-bed, Merry Wives, iv. 5. 7; stand-ish (for stand-ish), a staidish dish for pen and ink, Pope, On receiving from Lady Shirley a Staidish and two Pens; spelt standish in Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, ed. Ellis, p. 92. Also stand-ing, with-stand. Also (from L. stāre) stable (1), sta-ble (2), sta-bl-ish, e-sta-bl-ish, stage, stead, sta-men, con-sta-ble, sta-le (1); ar-re-sist, con-tra-sist, ob-sta-ble, ob-sta-ble, re-sit (2); (from suffix stā-nm) state, stā-men, stā-ion, stā-ist, stā-ne, stā-ute, estate, ar-mi-stā, con-stā-ute, de-stā-ute, in-stā-ute, inter-stā-ute, pro-stā-ute, re-in-stā-ute, re-stā-ut-ion, sol-stā-ute, sub-stā-ute, super-stā-ut-ion; (from pres. part. base stānt) circum-stānce, con-stānt, d-stānt, ex-stānt (for ex-stānt), in-stānt, in-stānt-an-e-ous, in-stānt-er, stānz-a, sub-stānce, sub-stānt-ive. Also (from L. stāre, causal of stāre) a-stānt, con-stānt, de-stānt, ex-stānt (for ex-stānt), in-stānt, per-stānt, re-stānt, sub-stānt. Words of Gk. origin are sta-l-ice, apo-sta-sy, ec-sta-sy, meta-sta-sis, sy-st-em.

STANDARD, an ensign, flag, model, rule, standing tree. (F.—L.) ME. standard, in early use; it occurs in the A. S. Chronicle, an. 1138, with reference to the battle of the Standord—OF. estandard, 'a standard, a kind of ensign for horsemen used in old time; also the measure ... which we call the Standard'; Cot. But also spelt estendard, Supp. to Godefroy, in the sense of 'flag, ensign.' The two forms represent two different ideas; but they were early confused; see Standardum in Ducange. 1. The former refers rather to the pole on which the flag was borne; and was formed with suffix -art (= G. -hart, suffix, the same word as hart, adj., cognate with E. hard, Brachet, Introd. § 196) from OHG. stand-an, to stand, now only used in the contracted form stehen. This OHG. standan is cognate with E. STAND, q.v. 2. The OF. estandard (also in Cotgrave) is from OF. estendre < L. extendere, to extend; see EXTEND. This is supported by the Ital. form standardo and the Prov. estandard-z (Bartsch). On the other hand, we have E. standard, Span. estandarte; and the E. standard of value and standard-tree certainly owe their senses to the verb to stand. So also MDu. staendart, 'a standard, or a great ensign, a pillar or a column, a mill-post; Hexham.

STANG, a pole, stake. (Scand.) Spelt stangus in Levens (with added -us, as in tongue). ME. stange, Gawain and Green Knight, 1614. [Rather from Scand. than from AS. steng (Grein).]—Icel. stǫng (gen. stangar), a pole, stake; Dan. stang; Swed. stäng, stāng; G. stange. From the 2nd grade of the verb sting; see STING. Cf. Icel. stanga, to goad.

STANK, a pool, a tank. (F.—L.) A doublet of tank, of which it is a fuller form. Once a common word; see Halliwell. ME. stank; spelt stanc, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1018; see Spec. of English, pt. ii. p. 162, l. 1018.—OF. estanc (Supp. to Godefroy), also estang, 'a great pond, pool, or standing water;' Cot. Cf.

Walloon stank, Prov. estane, Span. estanque, Port. tanque. Indirectly from L. stagnum, a pool of stagnant or standing water; affected by the vb. stagnare, to stand stagnant, for which see Stanh. See Stagnate, Stanch, Tank. Der. stagnate, stanch, stanchion. Doublet, tank.

STANNARY, relating to tin-mines. (L.) 'The Stannary courts in Devonshire and Cornwall.' Blackstone, Comment. b. iii. c. 6 (R.). 'Stannaries in Cornwall.' Minshew, ed. 1627. — Late L. stannaria, a tin-mine (Ducange). — L. stannum, tin; also, an alloy of silver and lead; (which seems to be the older sense, Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 16. β. Also spelt stagnum, whence stagnus, adj.; and it is thought to be another sense of L. stagnum, a pool, applied perhaps to a mass of fused metal. Cf. Ital. stagno, a pool. See Stank. Cf. Corn. stann, Bret. stann, Irish stann, Gael. stann, Manx stainney; all from L. stannum, tin. And see Tin.

STANZA, a division of a poem. (Ital.—L.) Used by Drayton in his Pref. to the Barons' Wars. We find stanza (mod. edit. stanza) and stanza (now stanza) in Shak. As You Like It, ii. 5. 18, L. L. v. 2. 107; Minshew has stanza, ed. 1627. 'Staffe in our vulgare poeie.' Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, ed. 1589, b. ii. c. 2. — Ital. stanza, Mital. stanza, 'a lodging, chamber, dwelling, also a stanza or staffe of verses or songs.' Florio. So named from the step or halt at the end of it. — Late L. stantia, an abode. — L. stant-, stem of pres. part. of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q.v. And see Stanchion. Doublet, stanza, a station, sit; OF. estance < L. stantia.

STAPLE (1), a loop of iron for holding a pin or bolt. (E.) ME. stapel, stapil; spelt stapille in the Prompt. Parv.; stapil, stapil in Cursor Mundi, 8288; stapel, a prop or support for a bed, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 201. AS. stapul. 'Patrons, stapul.' Voc. 126. 8. (Here patrons = a defence; the gloss occurs amongst others having reference to parts of a house.) The orig. sense is a prop, support, something that furnishes a firm hold, and it is derived from the base stap-* of the AS. strong verb stapian, to step, to tread firmly. Cf. E. stamp; and see Step. And see Staple (2). — Du. stapel, a staple, stocks, a pile, allied to stapfen, to step; MDu. stapel, 'the foot or trevet whereupon anything rests'; Hexham; Dan. stapel, a hinge, a pile; Swed. stapel, a pile, heap, stocks, staple or emporium; cf. stappla, to stumble (frequentative form); G. stapfel, a step of ladder, a step; provincially, a staple or emporium; stapel, a pile, heap, staple or emporium, stocks, a stake; cf. stapfen, stapfen, to step, to strut.

STAPLE (2), a chief commodity, principal production of a country. (K.—Low G.) 'A curious change has come over this word; we should now say, Cotton is the great staple, i.e. the established merchandise of Manchester; our ancestors would have reversed this and said, Manchester is the great staple, or established mart, of cotton.' Trench, Select Glossary. 'Staple significeth this or that towne, or cite, whether [whether] the Merchants of England by common order or commandement did carrie their woolses, wool felts, cloathes, leade, and tinne, and such like commodities of our land, for the utterance of them by the great' [wholesale]; Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. staple, a market; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, viii. 488, 471. — OF. and MF. estaple, later estape, 'a staple, a mart or general market, a publicke store-house, &c.' Cot. Mod. F. estape. — Low G. stapel, a heap, esp. one arranged in order, a store-house of certain wares in a town, where they are laid in order; whence such wares were called stapel-wares; Brem. Wörterbuch, q.v. This is the same word as Staple (1), the meanings of which are very various; it has the sense of 'heap' in Du., Dan., Swed., and G., though not in English; showing that this particular use of the word was derived through the French. Prob. the word came into use, in the special sense, in the Netherlands, where were the great commercial cities. ¶ It is clear that the F. word was of Low G., not High G. origin. The word stapel, in mod. G., is clearly borrowed from Low G., the true G. form being stapfel. As E. Müller well remarks, the successive senses were prop, foundation or support, stand for laying things on, heap, heaped wares, store-house. The one sense of 'firmness' or 'fixedness' runs through all these.

STAR, a heavenly body, not including the sun and moon. (E.) ME. sterre, Chaucer, C. T. 2063 (A 2061). AS. stearra; Grein, ii. 482. — Du. ster (in composition, sterre); OHG. sterra. (There are also forms with final -n: starna, viz. Icel. stjarna, Swed. stjerna, Dan. stjerne, Goth. stairno, G. stern.) — L. stella (for ster-la*, a dimin. form; the L. astrum is borrowed from Gk.); Gk. doxip, gen. doxip-on, with prosthetic α; Corn. and Bret. sternen; W. seren (for stern*); Skt. stāra (for stāra*). Original sense uncertain; though some connect it with Skt. stāra, to spread, hence, to sprinkle (light); Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. ii. 237 (8th ed.). Cf. Brugmann, i. § 473 (2). Der. star, verb; star-fish, star-gazer, star-light; star-vell, star-vy; day-star, lode-star. And see aster, stellar.

STARBOARD, the right side of a ship, looking forward. (E.) Spelt starboard in Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. sterboard, Morte Arthur, 745; starboard, id. 3665. AS. storbord, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1, where it is opposed to bachbord, i.e. larboard; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. There is no doubt that starboard = sterboard, and that the steersman stood on the right side of the vessel to steer; in the first instance, he used a paddle, not a helm. The Icel. stjórn means steering, and the phr. á stjórna, lit. at the helm (or steering-paddle), means on the right or starboard side. Thus the derivation is from AS. stior, a rudder (whence also stior-mann, a steersman) and bord, a board, also the side of a ship; see Steer and Board. — Du. stuurboard, from stuur, helm, and board, board, also border, edge; Icel. stjórnborði, starboard, from stjórn, steering, and borð, a board, side of a ship; cf. borði, a border; Dan. stjorbord, from stjyr, steering, and bord; Swed. stjorbord (the same).

STARCHE, a gummy substance for stiffening cloth. (E.) 'Starcke for kycherys,' i.e. starch for kerchiefs; Prompt. Parv. So named because starch or stiff; starch being properly an adjective, representing ME. starch, strong, O. E. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 156, l. 11. AS. sterce, adj., from stercan, to strengthen, stiffen; which appears in sterceferð, strengthened in mind (Grein, ii. 480). The vb. stercan (for starc-ian*) is regularly formed from OMerc. starc*, AS. stearc, rigid; see Stark. Cf. G. stärke, (1) strength, (2) starch; from stark, strong. Der. starch, adj. in the sense of 'formal,' due rather to starch, sb., than to ME. starch; rare; see an example in Todd's Johnson; hence starchily, formally, and starchiness; also starch-y. Also starch, verb, to stiffen with starch, as in 'starched beard,' Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, A. iv. sc. 4 (Carlo).

STARE (1), to gaze fixedly. (E.) ME. staren, Chaucer, C. T. 13627 (B 1887). AS. starian, to stare; Grein, ii. 477. A weak verb, from a Teut. type staraz*, adj., fixed; appearing in AS. star-blind, quite blind; cf. G. starr (for star-ros*), stiff, inflexible, fixed, staring; cf. Icel. stara, to stare; Low G. and Du. staren, OHG. stāren, to stare. Prob. allied to Gk. στέρεος, στερεός, firm. ¶ Hence to stare is also 'to be stiff,' as in 'makest . . . my hair to stare,' Jul. Caesar, iv. 3. 280. Der. stare, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 95. And see sterile, stereoscope.

STARE (2), to shine, glitter. (E.) ME. staren, (E.) Staryn, or schynyn, and glyderyn, Niece, rutilo; Prompt. Parv. 'Staryn, or schynyn, as gaye thyngys, Rutilans, rutilus'; id. We still speak of staring, i.e. very bright, colours. The same word as Stare (1). The Prompt. Parv. also has: 'Staryn withe brode eyne, Patentibus oculis respiciere.' From the notion of staring with fixed eyes we pass to that of the effect of the stare on the beholder, the sensation of the staring look. See Stare (1). ¶ No original connexion with star, of which the ME. form was sterra.

STARKE (3), a startling; see Starling.
STARK, rigid, stiff; gross, absolute, entire. (E.) 'Stiff and stark,' Romeo, iv. 1. 103. ME. stark, stiff, strong, Chaucer, C. T. 9332 (F 1458). AS. stearc (for starc*), strong, stiff; Grein, ii. 481. — Du. stark; Icel. stærk; Dan. stærk; Swed. and G. stark. β. In most of these languages, the usual sense is 'strong'; but the original sense may very well have been rigid or stiff, as in English; cf. Goth. gastaurkniuh, lit. becomes dried up, used to translate Gk. ἐπισπένδω in Mark, ix. 18; and Lithuan. stregti, to stiffen, to freeze, become rigid; also Russ. strogii, severe, Pers. sturg, big, strong. The Idg. form of the root is STREK, extended from STER*, to be fixed; cf. Gk. στερεός, firm, MDu. sterren, 'to be stiff or stubborn,' Hexham. See Stare (1). Der. stark-ly, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 70; stark-ness. Also stark, adv., wholly, as in stark mad. Also starch, q.v. But not stark-naked, q.v.

STARK-NAKED, quite naked. (E.) In Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 274; spelt stark-naked, Palsgrave, p. 842. This phrase is doubtless now used as if compounded of stark, wholly, and naked, just as in the case of stark mad, Com. of Err. ii. 1. 59, v. 281; but it is remarkable that the history of the expression proves that it had a very different origin, as regards the former part of the word. It is an ingenious substitution for stark-naked, lit. tail-naked, i.e. with the hinder parts exposed. Starnaked occurs in The Castell of Love, ed. Weymouth, l. 431; also in the Ancien Riwe, pp. 148, 260, where the editor prints stern-naked, stern-naked, though the MS. must have stark-naked, stark-naked, since stark is never spelt stern. The same remark applies to stern-naked in St. Marharette, p. 5, l. 19, where the editor tells us (at p. 109) that the MS. may be read either way. In St. Juliana, pp. 16, 17, we have stark-naked in both MSS. β. The former element is, in fact, the ME. stark, a tail, Havelok, 2823, from AS. stearc, a tail, Exod. iv. 4. It is still preserved in E. radstari, i.e. red tail, as the name of a bird. †Du. sterl, a tail; Icel. stertr; Dan. stjert; Swed. stjört; G. sterz. Cf. Gk. στροπῆν, a spike. ¶ The phrase was early misunderstood; see Trevisa, iii. 97, where we have strijt blynde = wholly blind, with the various readings stari blynde and stark blynde; here stari-blynde is really nonsense. There is also stareblind, Owl and Nightingale, l. 241, AS. stareblind, Voc. 45, 22; but this answers to Dan. stareblind, from stare, a cataract in the eye. We may also note prov. G. stervoll (lit. tail-fall), wholly drunk, cited by Schmeller, Bayr. Dialect. 785, l. 48.

STARLING, the name of a bird. (E.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, i. 3. 224. ME. sterlyng, Voc. 640, 7; formed (with double dimin. suffix -ling) from ME. stare, a starling, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 348. AS. star, a starling. 'Turdus, star;' Voc. 132, 8; 'Sturnus, star;' id. 48, 16. It also means a sparrow, Matt. x. 29 (I. ind. MS.). We also find the forms starn, stearn, meaning 'a tern.' 'Beatica, stearn;' Voc. 8, 36; 'Stronus [stornus?], starn;' id. 132, 7. †Icel. starr, stari; Dan. star; Swed. stare; G. staar. Cf. L. sturnus, a starling. See Tern.

START, to move suddenly, to wince, to rouse suddenly. (E.) ME. sterien, Chaucer, C. T. 1046 (A 1044). We also find start, sb., a start, quick movement, Chaucer, C. T. 1. 1708; Havelok, 1873. The verb does not appear in AS, but we find the pt. stirtle, Havelok, 873; spelt storte, storte in Layamon, 2395t. We may call it an I- word; the AS. form may have been stiran* (for stiri-jan*); from a Teut. base stern*. Strätmann cites an Icel. sterla, but I cannot find it; there are traces of it in Icel. sterlauma, a man who walks proudly and stiffly, and Icel. uppsjártr, an upstart, both given in Ætelson. β. Allied words are Du. sterren, to precipitate, plunge, spill, fall, rush; Dan. sterre, to fall, precipitate, hurl; Swed. stärta, to cast down, ruin, fall dead; G. stürzen, to hurl, precipitate, ruin, overturn. Note also Swed. dial. stjörta, to run wildly about (Rietz); Low G. sterren, to flee; MDu. sterren, to flee, to run away. The G. stürzen is derived from the sb. sturz, a sudden fall, tumble, precipice, waterfall, from a Teut. base stern*; cf. Norw. sterren, adj., striving against. But the further history is obscure. Dor. start, sb., ME. sterl, as above; start-er; start-up, an upstart, Minch. A.D. 1. 3. 69; up-start, q. v. Also start-er, the frequentative form, ME. sterlen, to stumble along. Debate of Body and Soul, l. 120, pr. in Altengl. Sprachproben, ed. Mätzner, i. 94, and in Mapes' Poems, ed. Wright, p. 335; from AS. stærthan, to stumble.

STARVE, to die of hunger or cold, to kill with hunger or cold. (E.) Orig. intransitive, and used in the general sense of 'to die,' without reference to the means. ME. steruen (with u = v), strong verb; pt. starf, Chaucer, C. T. 935 (A 933), pp. stornen, or istornen, id. 2016 (A 2014). AS. stearfan, to die, pt. starf, pp. storf; 'starf' of hunger, died of hunger, A. S. Chron. an. 1124. Hence was formed the AS. weak verb sterfan, to kill, weak vb., appearing in the pp. asterfed, Matt. xv. 13 (Rushworth gloss.). The mod. F. has confused the two forms, mixing them both weak. †Du. sterven, pt. stierf, stierf; G. sterben, pt. starb. Teut. type sterban-, pt. starb. Dor. starue-ling, with double dimin. suffix, expressive of contempt, i. Hen. IV, ii. 1. 96. Also staru-ation, a hybrid form, but now common, used by Mr. Dundas, the first Viscount Melville, in an American debate in 1775. 'That it then jarred strangely on English ears is evident from the nickname Starvation Dundas, which in consequence he obtained.' See Letters of H. Walpole and Mann, vol. ii. p. 396, quoted in N. and Q. no. 225; Trench, Eng. Past and Present.

STATE, a standing, position, condition, an estate, province, rank, dignity, pomp. (F.-L.) See Trench, Scl. Glossary. ME. stat, Ancren Riwle, p. 204.—OF. estat, 'estate, case, nature,' Cot.-L. statum, acc. of stare, condition.—L. statum, supine of stare, to stand; cognate with E. stand; see Stand. From stāta*, to stand. Der. state, verb (late); stat-ed, stat-ed-ly, state-mind (a coined word); state-paper, state-room, &c.; state-s-man, coined like hunt-s-man, sports-man; state-man-like, state-man-ship. Also state-ly, ME. estatlich, C. T. 140, a hybrid compound; state-li ness. And see stat-ion, stat-ist, stat-ure, stat-ute. Doublets, estate, stat-us.

STATICS, the science that treats of the properties of bodies at rest. (Gk.) Spelt statics in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed as a pl. from the adj. static. 'The statick aphorisms of Sanctorius;' Sir F. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. iv. c. 7. § 2.—Gk. στατικός, at a standstill; ἡ στατική (sc. ἐπιστήμη), statics.—Gk. στατός, placed, standing, verbal adj. from στα-, weak grade of the root of στῆναι, I stand.—stāta*, to stand; see Stand. Der. hydro-statics.

STATION, a standing, post, assigned place, situation, rank. (F.-L.) ME. station, Gower, C. A. iii. 91; bk. vii. 204.—F. station, 'a station'; Cot.-L. stationem, acc. of statio, a standing still.—L. statum, supine of stare, to stand; see State. Der. station-ary, from MF. stationnaire (Cot.), L. adj. stationarius. Also station-er, a bookseller, Minshew (1627), spelt stationer in Palsgrave, but orig. merely one who had a station or stand in a market-place for the sale of books; see Trench, Select Glossary; hence station-er.

STATIST, a statesman, politician. (F.-L.; with Gk. suffix.) So in Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 33. 'A hybrid word, coined from the sb. state by adding -ist (F. -iste < L. -ista < Gk. -ιστής). See State. Der. stat-ist-ic, i. e. relating to the condition of a state or people; whence statistic (like state-s from statice).

STATUE, an upright image. (F.-L.) Sometimes statuē (trissyllabic), in which case it is generally printed statua in mod. edd. of Shakespeare, as if from L. statua directly. But Cotgrave writes statue for the ME. form. However, statua occurs in Bacon, Essays 27, 37, 45. ME. statue, Chaucer, C. T. 14165 (B 3349).—OF. statuē, a statue; Cot.-L. statua, a standing image.—L. statua, decl. stem of statua, a standing, position; see State. Der. statu-ary, from MF. statuaire, 'a statuary, stone-cutter,' Scot., from L. statuarius, a maker of statues (Pliny); statu-ette, from Ital. statuetta, dimin. of statua; statu-esque, formed with the F. suffix -esque = Ital. -esco < L. -iscus.

STATURE, height. (F.-L.) Used with special reference to the upright posture of a human being. ME. statour, Chaucer, C. T. 8133 (E 257).—F. stature, 'stature,' Cot.-L. statūra, an upright posture, height, growth.—L. stat-um, supine of stare, to stand; see State.

STATUS, condition, rank. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson.—L. status, condition; see State. Doublets, statuē, statuē.

STATUTE, an ordinance. (F.-L.) ME. statute, Gower, C. A. i. 217; bk. ii. 174. —F. statut; Cot.-L. statutum, a statute; neuter of statuere, pp. of statuere, to set, establish.—L. statu-, decl. stem of statua, statue; see State. Der. statu-able, a coined word; statu-able-y; statu-ory, a coined word. Here belong also con-stitute, de-stitute, in-stitute, pro-stitute, sub-stitute; re-stitute, re-stitution.

STANCH, adj. and verb; see Stanch.

STAVE, one of the pieces of a cask, a part of a piece of music, a stanza. (E.) 1. Merely another form of staff, due to the dat. sing. stave (= stave). Owl and Night, 1165, and the pl. staves (= staves). Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 48. Perhaps the special sense is rather Scandinavian. F. Cf. Icel. stafr, a staff, also a stave; Dan. stav, a staff, stave, a stave. 2. A stanza was formerly called a staff, as forming a part of a poem; prob. suggested by the older use of AS. stafr, Icel. stafr, G. buchstab, in the sense of a letter or written character. Cf. Icel. stafr, a stave in a song; Goth. stafr, a letter, element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. 'Staffe in our vulgare poesie I know not why it should be so called, unless it be for that we understand it for a bearer or supporter of a song or ballad.' Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, b. ii. c. 2. See Staff. Der. stave, verb, usually to stave in, to break into a cask, or to stave off, to ward off as with a staff; the verb readily puts v for f, as in strove from strove, live from life. Doublet, staff.

STAVESACK, a species of larkspur; Delphinium staphisagria. (F.-L.-Gk.) Marlowe has stavesaker; Dr. Faustus, i. 4; see Nares. Englished from MF. staphisagria, 'stavesaker, lic-bane'; Cot.-L. staphisagria.—Gk. σταφύς ὄππος; where σταφύς is the fem. of σταφύς, wild, from σταφύς, a field (E. acre); and ὄππος is for ὄππος, raisins.

STAY (1), to remain, abide, wait, protract, delay. (F.-MDu.) 'Steyn [= steyen], stoppyn, styntyn, or cesyn of gate, Restito, obsto;' Prompt. Parv. The pt. stayd occurs in London Lickpenny, st. 2.—OF. estayer, 'to protract, shore, stay, underset'; Cot. Mod. F. estayer.—OF. estayer, sb. fem., 'a prop, stay, supporter, shore, buttress.' This is mod. F. étau, a prop; used as a masc. sb., by confusion with the nautical term étai; see Stay (2). Thus the orig. use was to support, whence the senses to hold, retain, delay, abide, were easily deduced. β. The OF. estayer is from MDu. stade, or staeve, 'a prop or a stay'; Hexham. It also gives stay, 'stay, or leisure'; geen staeve hebben, 'to have no time or leisure.' So also mod. Du. stade, in the phr. te stade komen, to come in due time (lit. 'to the right place').—†OHG. stata, a fit place or time, opportunity. These words are closely allied to Du. stad, a town; Dan. stad, a town; Swed. stad, a town; G. stadt, a town, statt, a place, stead; Goth. statahs, a place, stead. Also to E. staithe and stead; see Stead. γ. The loss of medial d is common in Dutch, and occurs in many words; e.g. broer for broeder, a brother (Sewel), teer for teder or teeder, tender (id.). Der. stay, sb., spelt stave in Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 130 (R.), from OF. estayer, as above; this is really a more orig. word in F., though perhaps later introduced into English. Also staid, q. v.; for stayd = stayed, pp. Also stay-s, pl., lit. supports; it is remarkable that botice is also, properly, a plural form.

STAY (2), as a nautical term, a large rope supporting a mast. (E.) Rare in old books. Cotgrave uses it to translate MF. estay, which is the same word, the F. word being of Teut. origin. ME. stay, 'one forsteye, one couple of baksteye'; Riley, Memorials of London, p. 370 (1373). AS. stag, a stay; in a list of the parts of a ship in Voc. 288. 26. The change from AS. stæg to E. stay is just the same as that from AS. stæg to E. stay; +Du. stæg; Icel. stæn, and Swed. stæg; G. stæg. Perhaps from Teut. stah-* Idg. stah-* to resist; see Steel. It is difficult to say whether this E. stay is a survival of AS. stæg, or is from OF. estage, a prop; see Stay (1). Der. stay-stall.

STEAD, a place, position, place which another person had or might have; (E.) ME. stede, in the general sense of place. 'In twenty steds - in twenty places; Havocloek, 1846. AS. stede, a place; Grein, ii. 478. Closely allied to AS. stād, stā, a farm; closely allied to Du. stede, stee, a place; MDu. stede, a farm; closely allied to Du. stad, stede, a town; Dan. sted, a place, stadi, a place; Dan. and Swed. stad, a town; Dan. sted, a place; G. stadt, stätt, a town, place; OIIG. stāt; Goth. stahs, a stand, place. Cf. I. statio, a station; Gk. stadiōn; Skt. stādhī, a standing, residence, abode, state. All allied to Stand, q. v. Der. stead fast, q. v., stead-y, q. v., home-stead, q. v.; bed-stead, and stay (1), stake, station.

STEADFAST, STEDFAST, firm in its place, firm, constant, resolute. (E.) ME. stedfast, appearing as a trisyllable in Gower, C. A. iii. 115; bk. vii. 906; and in the Ormulum, l. 1597. AS. stedfast, firm in one's place, steadfast; Battle of Maldon, 127, 249; see Sweet's A. S. Reader - AS. stede, a place; and fast, fast. See Stead and Fast. +MDu. stedfast, 'steadfast', Hexham; from MDu. stede, a farm (orig. a place), and vast, fast; Icel. staðfast, from staðr, a stand, and fast, fast; 1. van. staðfast.

STEADY, firm, fixed, stable. (E.) Spelt stedy in Palsgrave. A new formation from ME. sted-y, a stead; with suffix -y (AS. -ig); suggested by stead-fast. The AS. word is stæðig, steady, appearing in unsteadig, unsteady, giddy, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 480, last line. Cf. MDu. stediġh, 'continual, firm'; Hexham; from stede, a stand, a stead. Also Icel. stæðig, steady, stable, from staðr, a place; Dan. stædig, steady, from stæde, a stall, stæd, a town, orig. a place; Swed. stædig, from stæd, a place; G. stättig, continual, from statt, a place. Der. stead-y, -ness. Also steady, verb.

STEAK, a slice of meat, esp. beef, ready for cooking. (Scand.) ME. stake; spelt steyke in Prompt. Parv. - Icel. stæk, a steak; so called from its being roasted, which was formerly done by placing it upon a wooden peg before the fire; cf. Icel. stækja, to roast, esp. on a spit or peg; cf. stikka, to be roasted or scorched. In the words stækja, stikka, the 'e' and 'i' indicate a lost strong verb. The weak grade of this lost strong verb appears in the AS. stican, to stick; see Stick (1). And cf. Icel. stika, a stick, stika, to drive piles. A steak is a piece of meat, stuck on a stick to be roasted. +Swed. stiek, roast meat; steka, to roast; cf. stiek, a stab, prick, stikka, to stick, stab; Dan. stæg (for stæk*), a roast; ad vendes stæg, to turn the spit; stæg, to roast; cf. stik, a stab, stikke, to pierce; stikke a stick. Der. beef-steak; whence F. bifteck.

STEAL, to take away by theft, to thieve. (E.) ME. stelen, Chaucer, C. T. 564 (A 562); pt. t. stal, id. 3993 (A 3995); pp. stolen. AS. stelan, pt. t. stæl, pl. stælon, pp. stolen; John, x. 10-4. Du. stelen; Icel. stela; Dan. stjæle; Swed. stjåla; G. stehlen; OHG. stelan; Goth. stelan. Teut. type stelan*, pt. t. stal*, pp. stulanoz*. β. Connexion with Gk. strepōn, I am deprived of, strepōn, I deprive, is doubtful, but is accepted by some. Der. steal-th, ME. stälpe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 197, l. 4057; cf. Icel. staldur, Swed. stöld, theft. Hence stealth-y, stealthy, -ness. Also steal (2).

STEAM, vapour. (E.) ME. stern, which also meant a flame or blaze. 'Stem, or lowce of fyre, Flamma; Stern, of hotte lycure, Vapor;' Prompt. Parv. [In Havocloek, 591, stem is a ray of light, described as resembling a sun-beam. 'Two stemynge eyes' - two flaming eyes; Sir T. Wiat, Sat. i. 53.] AS. stean, a vapour, smell, smoke; Grein, ii. 480. +Du. stoom, steam. Teut. type stawan*, m.; as if from a base stew-*. Root unknown. Cf. it be allied to Stove? Der. steam, verb, ME. stemen, Chaucer, C. T. 202, AS. stēman, as in be-stēman, Grein, i. 94; steam-boat, -engine; steam-er, steam-y.

STEARINE, STEARIN, one of the ingredients of animal fats. (F.-Gk.) Modern; F. stéarine; formed with suffix -ine, from Gk. stear, tallow, hardened fat. Allied to Gk. στῆναι, to stand, be firm. Brugmann, ii. § 82. See Stasis.

STEATITE, soap-stone, a variety of talc. (F.-Gk.) Modern; F. stéatite; formed with suffix -ite (Gk. -ίτης) from Gk. στῆναι, as in στῆναι, gen. of στῆναι, fat (above).

STEED, a horse, esp. a spirited horse. (E.) ME. stede, Chaucer, C. T. 13831 (B 2093); Havocloek, 1673. AS. stēda, masc., a stud-horse, stallion, war-horse; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 210, l. 14; also gestād-hors, used as convertible with stēda in Ælfric's tr. of Bede, l. ii. c. 13, where it is also opposed to myre, a mare, as being of a different gender. Cf. AS. stādmyr, a stud-mare, Laws of Ælfric (political), § 16, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 71. β. By the usual vowel change from ē to æ (as in fīd, a foot, pl. fēt, feet, and in a great number of instances), stēda (for stēd-jon-*) is derived from stēd, a stud; with the addition of the masc. nom. suffix -a (from -jon). Thus stēd-a = 'studder', i. e. stud-horse or stallion, for breeding foals. See Stud (1). Allied to G. stute, a mare, Icel. stēdda, a mare, stēðestr, a stallion, stēðmarr, a stud-mare or brood-mare.

STEEL, iron combined with carbon, for tools, swords, &c. (E.) ME. steel, Chaucer, C. T. 10300 (E 2426). Also spelt stiel, Gower, C. A. vi. 1814; style, Sir Ferunbrun, 4433. OMerc. stelli; Epinal Gloss. 49; AS. stēla, Grein, ii. 490; and in the compounds stēl-eg, stēl-edged, and stēl-en, made of steel; Grein, ii. 490. The OMerc. stelli is for stēhli*, from stēhli*; see below. +Du. staal; Icel. stāl; Dan. staal; Swed. stål; G. stahl, contracted from OIIG. stahal.

β. The OHG. form furnishes the clue to the etymology; all the forms are due to Teut. types stahlo-, stahli-, formed from the Teut. base STAH, answering to an Idg. base STAK, to be firm or still, appearing in Skt. stak, to resist, Zend stak-ra, strong (Horn, § 714), and esp. in OPruss. pamu-stakla, steel for kindling fire. Thus the long vowel in steel is due to loss of h before l. Der. steel, verb, from AS. stēlan, to steel; cf. Icel. stala, to steel (derived from stāl by the usual vowel-change); G. stählen (from stahl).

STEELYARD (1), a meeting-place, in London, for German merchants from the Hanse towns. (E.) 'Next to this lane [Cosin Lane], on the east, is the Steelyard, as they term it, a place for merchants of Almayne [Germany], that use to bring hither . . . steels, and other profitable merchandises.' Stow's Chronicle, ed. Thoms, p. 67; see the whole passage. The Steelyard was a factory for the Hanse Merchants, and was in Dowgate ward. That the English really called this place the steel-yard appears from a document dated 1394, in which it is Latinised as Curia Calthis (= Chalthis); see N. and Q. 10 S. vi. 413. In 1475 it is called the Stilehofe, otherwise called the Stileyard. Here stile is a ME. variant of steel; see above. 'The merchants of the stilyarde' are mentioned in Fabian's Chron., an. 1527-8. And see Stilyard in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

β. But it is explained, in the Bremen Wörterbuch, that the Low G. name was Staal-hof, for which 'steel-yard' was a mistaken substitution; hof being correctly translated by 'yard'. The mistake obviously arose from the fact that both Low G. staal and MDu. staal had a double meaning, viz. (1) steel, and (2), sample, pattern; and the latter was really meant. Both Low G. staal, a sample, and MDu. staal, a sample, are from OF. estaler, to display wares on a stall (OF. estad). - Du. stal, G. stall, a stall; see Stall. γ. Cf. Du. staal-hof, 'pattern-office, where the samples of cloth were stamped.' Calisch.

STEELYARD (2), a kind of balance, with unequal arm. (F.) The form is due to a popular etymology from steel and yard, as if 'a bar of steel'. But, as a fact, it was merely shortened from stilyard-beam, meaning the 'beam' or balance used in the Steelyard (as explained above). Hence the word yard, oddly enough, does not refer to the shape of the balance, but to the place wherein it was used; so that it is derived from yart (1), not from yard (2). 'The beam of le Manzes Hangis, called the Stillyard Beame;' Letters and Papers Foreign and Domestic, Henry VIII, vol. v. p. 104, col. 2; see N. and Q. 10 S. vi. 331. Later shortened to stillyard; Cotgrave, s. v. Crochet, calls it 'a Roman beame or stilleere;' Phillips (1706) has stiller; and Torriano, s. v. stadera, has 'a pair of stillyards.' Hence prov. F. stiller, stilyard.

STEENBOK, a S. African antelope. (Du.) Du. steenbok, lit. 'rock-goat.' - Du. stern, stone, rock; and bok, he-goat. See Stone and Buck (1).

STEEP (1), precipitous. (E.) ME. step, steap. 'Theo path . . . was narwe and steep;' King Alisaunder, 7041. AS. stæp, steep, high, lofty; Grein, ii. 481. Cf. Icel. steyptr, steep, rising high. Both AS. stæp and Icel. steyptr are from a common Teut. base stap-*.

β. The Icel. steyptr is allied to steypa, to overthrow, cast down, lit. to make to stoop, causal of the rare verb stūpa, to stoop, which is the same word as Swed. stupa, (1) to fall, (2) to tilt. Cf. Swed. stupande, sloping, stupning, a leaning forward; whence it appears that steep is allied to stoop, and meant, originally, tilted forward, sloping down. So also Norweg. steipa, to fall, tumble headlong, stup, a steep cliff. See Stoop (1), and Stooup. Der. steep-ly, -ness; steep-le, q. v.; steep-y, Timon, l. i. 74; steep (2).

STEEP (2), to dip or soak in a liquid. (Scand.) ME. stepen. 'Stepyn ya water or other licure, Infundio, illiqueo;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt stepa, Palladius, b. ii. l. 281. - Icel. steypa, to make to stoop, overturn, to pour out liquids, to cast metals; causal of stupa, to stoop; see Stoop, and see Steep (1). So also Swed. stupa, to cast (metals), to steep, to sink; stupa horn, 'to steep barley in water' (Wälgren); Dan. støbe, to cast, mould (metals), to steep (corn), støb, the dressing of grain, steeped corn. The succession of senses is: to make to stoop or overturn, to pour out or cast metals, to pour water over grain.

STEEPLE, a pointed tower of a church or building. (E.) ME. stepele, Rob. of Gloucester, p. 528, l. 10860. AS. stýpel, a lofty tower, Luke, xlii, 4; the Hattin MS. has stýpel. So called from its 'steepness', i.e. loftiness or height; from AS. stýp, lofty, high, mod. E. steep. The vowel-change from ea to Merc. ē, Wessex ie, later y, is regular; see Steep (1). Also spelt stýpel; OE. Texts, p. 616. Der. steepel-chase, modern, not in Todd's Johnson.

STEER (1), a young ox. (E.) ME. steer, Chaucer, C. T. 2151 (A 2149). AS. stior: 'Juvenens, vel vitula, stior'; Voc. 120. 28. + Du. and G. stier, a bull; Icel. stjör; Goth. stīr. Teut. type steuroz*, m. Another Teut. type is steuroz*, from Idg. steuros*; as in Icel. hjör, Swed. tjur, Dan. tyr, a steer; allied (by gradation) to L. taurus, Gk. ταῦρος, from Idg. steuros*. β. The orig. sense is 'full-grown' or 'large', as in Skt. sthāla (for sthāra), great, large, powerful, sthāra, a man, sthāri, a pack-horse; cf. Zend staora, Pers. sūtār, a beast of burden. Brugmann, i. §§ 196, 230; Horn, § 720. γ. We even find the allied adj. in Teutonic, viz. AS. stār, large, Icel. stjör, Dan. and Swed. stör; Idg. type sthar-os*, large. Thus a steer is a firm, full-grown animal, esp. a young bull. See also Steer (2). Der. stīr-k, a young bullock or heifer (Jamieson), AS. stīric, Luke, xv, 23, formed with dimin. suffix -ic, and consequent vowel-change from eo to y.

STEER (2), to direct, guide, govern. (E.) MF. stieren, P. Mowman, B. viii. 47. AS. stearan, stýran, to direct, steer, Grein, ii. 481, 491, + Du. sturen; Icel. stýra; Dan. styre; Swed. stýra; G. steuern, O.H.G. stīrjan, stīran; Goth. stīrjan, to establish, confirm. β. All from the Teut. weak verb steur-jan*, to steer (orig. to strengthen, confirm, hence, hold fast, direct). This is a denominative verb, from the sb. of which the base is steur*, a rudder (lit. that which holds fast). This sb. is now obsolete in E., but appears in Chaucer as stere, C. T. 4868 (B 448); AS. stior, Du. stuur, a rudder, Icel. stýri, a rudder, Dan. styr, steering, G. steuer, a rudder, O.H.G. stīura, a prop, a staff, a paddle or rudder. It is still retained in E. in the comp. star-board, i.e. steer-board, AS. stior-bord (rudder-side of a ship). γ. Closely allied to this sb. is Icel. stárr, a post, stake, Gk. στράπος, an upright pole or stake, Norcen, § 143; Brugmann, i. § 108. The Teut. sb. meant, accordingly, a pole to punt with or a paddle to keep the ship's course right, then a rudder; whence the verb to steer, to use a stake or paddle, to use a helm. Der. steerage, Komcoe, i. 4. 112, with F. suffix; steer-sman, Milton, P. L. ix. 513, formed like hunt-sman, sport-sman; also star-board, q.v., stern, q.v. And see Store.

STELLAR, belonging to the stars. (L.) 'Stellar virtue,' Milton, P. L. iv. 671. — L. stellaris, stellas, i.e. a star; short for stella*, a contracted diction, from the same source as E. star; see Star. Der. (from stella) stell-ate, stell-ate, stell-ul-ar, from the dimin. stellula, a little star. Also stell-ify, obsolete; see Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 78.

STEM (1), the trunk or stalk of a tree or herb, a little branch. (E.) ME. stem, a trunk of a tree, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 296, l. 8. AS. stafa, stefa, stemma, (1) a stem of a tree, (2) the stem or prow of a vessel, (3) a stem or race of people, Grein, ii. 479. [The change from fa to nu is regular; so also AS. klāfmaesse is now Lammias.] We also find a weak form stefa, stafna, a stem or prow of a ship (Grein). Both these forms are apparently allied to AS. staf, a staff; a stem of a tree is the staff or stock, or support of it; the stem of a vessel is the upright post in front of it. See further under Staff. + Du. stam, a trunk, stem, stock; stevan, prow; Icel. stafa, later stann, the stem of a vessel (from staf, a staff), also written stefni, stennu, also stofn, stomn, the stem of a tree; Dan. stamme, the trunk of a tree; stavn, the prow of a vessel; Swed. stam, trunk; staf, prow; framstam, fore-stem, prow, bakstam, back-stem; G. stamm, a trunk; stevan or vorder steven, the stem, prow-post; cf. hinter steven, stern-post.

STEM (2), the prow of a vessel. (E.) Spelt stam in Morte Arthure, l. 3604; but this is rather the Sland. form; the pl. stemmes is in Baret (1580). It is precisely the same word as when we speak of the stem of a tree; see further under Stem (1). ¶ As the orig. signification was merely 'post,' there was no particular reason (beyond usage) why it should have been used more of the prow-post than of the stern-post; accordingly, the Icel. stafa sometimes means 'prow,' and sometimes 'stern,' and in G. the distinction is made by saying vorder steven (fore-stem) for stem or prow-post, and hinter steven (hind-stem) for stern or stern-post.

STEM (3), to check, stop, resist. (E.) Stem*, verb, to oppose (a current), to press forward through; to stem the waves, 3 Hen. VI. ii. 6. 36; stemming it, J. Caesar, i. 2. 109; Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Cf. Icel. stemma, to dam up; Dan. stemme, to stem; G. stemmen, to dam up water. Teut. type stemjan*; a verb derived (by vowel-change of a to e) from a base stam*, with the idea of 'obstruction; see Stammer.

STENCH, a bad smell. (E.) ME. stench, Rob. of Glouc. p. 405, l. 8354. AS. stenc, dat. stence, a strong smell, common in the sense of sweet smell or fragrance; Grein, ii. 479. — AS. stanc, and grade of stinean, to smell, to stink; see Stink. [Stench from stink, like drunch from drink.] + G. ge-stank, a stench (from stinken).

STENCILL, to paint or colour in figures by means of a stencilling-plate. (F.—L.) In Webster; he defines a stencil (as a stencilling-plate is sometimes called) as 'a thin plate of metal, leather or other material, used in painting or marking; the pattern is cut out of the plate, which is then laid flat on the surface to be marked, and the colour brushed over it.' Various guesses have been made at the etymology of this word, all worthless. I think it probable that to stencil is from OF. estenceler, to sparkle, also to cover with stars, to adorn with bright colours (Godefroy), MF. estinceller, 'to sparkle, . . . to powder, or set thick with sparkles;' Cot. It was an old term in heraldry. Littré gives a quotation of the 15th century; 'L'aurmoire estoit tute par dedans de fin or estincellee' = the box (?) was all (covered) within with fine gold scattered in stars. This peculiar kind of ornamentation (star-work) is precisely what stencilling must first have been used for, and it is used for it still. Since the pattern is cut quite through the plate, it must all be in separate pieces, so that no better device can be used than that which, to quote Cotgrave, is set thick with sparkles. Cf. 'With his sterns [stars] of gold, stanneld on-stray,' i.e. stencilled at random; Autens of Arthure, st. 31. — OF. estencelle, a spark; in Walter de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Vocab. i. 171. — L. type stencilia*, mistaken form of L. scintilla, a spark. See Scintillation; also Tinsel. ¶ The note to Autens of Arthure, st. 31, quotes from the Wardrobe accounts of Edw. III: 'harnesium de bokeram albo, extencellato cum argento,' i.e. starred with silver.

STENOGRAPHY, short-hand writing. (Gk.) Not a very new word; spelt stenographie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined from Gk. steno, for στενός, narrow, close; and -graphie, writing (as occurring in orthographie, orthography), from γράφω, to write. Der. stenograph-er, stenographic-ic, ic-al, ic-ally.

STENTORIAN, extremely loud. (Gk.) See Ben Jonson, Staple of News, very near the end; and Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he rightly explains it with reference to the voice of Stentor. — Gk. Στενῶρ, Stentor, a Greek at Troy, famous for his loud voice, Homer, Iliad, v. 785. — Gk. στεν-ειν, to groan, make a noise; with suffix -ω of the agent, as in L. amo-tor, a lover. — /STEN, to make a noise; cf. Skt. sten, to sound, to thunder. Cf. E. stun. Stentor = stunner.

STEP, a pace, degree, round of a ladder, foot-print. (E.) ME. steppe, in the sense of foot-step, Wyaime and Gawin, 2889, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. i; Maundeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81. Omerc. stepe (Sweet); AS. stepe, a pace, Jos. x. 12. — AS. steppan, to go, advance, a strong verb with a weak infinitive, pt. t. stōp, pp. stapen. The pt. t. stōp occurs frequently; see Grein, ii. 476. β. The orig. sense is 'to set the foot down firmly'; from a Teut. base STAP; see further under Stamp, which is merely the nasalised form. Allied to Du. stap, G. stapfe, a footprint, footstep. Der. foot-step; door-step; stepp-ing-stone, in Wright's Voc. i. 159, where it is miswritten spring-stone, by an obvious error.

STEPCHILD, one who stands in the relation of child through the marriage of a parent. (E.) The pl. step-children occurs in Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. xciii. 6. Stepmuder is in Gower, C. A. i. 104; bk. i. 1844. AS. stōpchild, Exod. xxii. 22; John, xiv. 18, q.v. For cild, see Child. β. The prefix stōp- occurs also in stōpbearn, a stepbairn, stōpfader, stepfather, stōpmuder, stepmother, stōpsun, stepson, and stōpdoktor, stepdaughter; see Voc. 9. 10; 34. 27; 22. 23; 88. 20. γ. The sense of stōp is 'orphaned,' or 'deprived of its parent'; so that it was first used in the compounds stepchild, stepbairn, stepson, stepdaughter, and afterwards extended, naturally enough, so as to form the compounds stepfather, stepmother, to denote the father or mother of the child who had lost one of its first parents. Thus the Lat. 'Fiant filii ejus orfani' is translated in the Vespasian Psalter by 'sien bearn his *stōp*aple'; Ps. cviii. 9, ed. Sweet. 'Asiāpnes, orbatio,' occurs in a gloss (Bosworth). δ. The Teut. type is stēpōz*, adj., with the sense of 'orphaned' or 'deprived'; the root is unknown; Fick, iii. 347. We only know that it is wholly unconnected with step above; it may, however, be related to Stoop (1), q.v. + Du. stiefkind; so also stiefzoon, stiefdochter, stiefvader, stiefmoeder; Icel. stíjðarn, a step-bairn; so also stíjðin, -dóttir, -fáðir, -móðir; Dan. stiefbarn, a corrupt form; Swed. stíjðarn; G. stiefkind; so also stiefsohn, -tochter, -vater, -mutter; cf. O.H.G. stíjð; G. stief, and O.H.G. stíjðan, to deprive of parents, also to deprive of children. See also Stoop (1).

STEPPE, a large plain. (Russ.) In Webster. Perhaps in Mills. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 69, such being the reading of the first quarto; most edd. have steep. — Russ. stepe (with final e mute), a waste, heath, steppes.

STEREOSCOPE, an optical instrument for giving an appearance of solidity. (Gk.) Modern. First constructed in 1838. Coined from Gk. stereos, stiff, hard, firm, solid; and skopos, to behold. β. Gk. stereus is cognate with G. starr, stiff, and perhaps with Skt. sthiras, firm; and skopos is allied to skopos, I look round; see Stare (1) and Scoope or Sceptio. Der. stereoscopic, -ical, -ically.

STEREOTYPE, a solid plate for printing. (Gk.) 'Stereo' type was invented (not the thing, but the word) by Didot not very long since; Trench, Eng. Past and Present, 4th ed. 1859. — Gk. stereós, for stereós, hard, stiff; and type. See Stereoscope and Type. Der. stereotype, verb.

STERILE, unfruitful, barren. (F.—L.) Spelt steril in Levins. — MF. sterile, 'sterile'; Cot.—L. sterilem, acc. of sterilis, barren. From the base STER appearing in Gk. stereós, stereós, hard, stiff, firm, sterile; cf. G. starr, rigid; for which see Stare (1). Cf. also Gk. stereia (for stereia*), a barren cow; Goth. stairō, a barren woman. Brugmann, i. § 338. A sterile soil is a hard, stony, unproductive one. Der. steril-ity, from F. sterilié, 'sterility'; Cot. from L. acc. sterilitatem.

STERLING, genuine, applied to money. (F.) ME. starling, sterling, Chaucer, C. T. 12841 (C 907); P. Plowman, R. xv. 342; Rob. of Glouc. p. 294, l. 5949. In all these passages it is a sh. meaning 'a sterling coin, a coin of true weight.' Thus Rob. of Glouc. speaks of 'Four pousend pound of sterlinges.' Of E. origin; the MHG. sterline, cited by Stratmann, is borrowed from it. First applied to the E. penny, then to standard current coin in general. Wedgwood cites from Duncane a statute of Edw. I, in which we meet with 'Denarius Anglie, qui vocatur sterlingus'; also a Charter of Hen. III, where we have 'In centum maris bonorum novorum et legalium sterlingorum, tredecim solidi, et 4 sterling pro qualibet marca computatis.' That is, a mark is 13s. and 4d., a sterling being here a penny. β. Wedgwood adds: 'The hypothesis most generally approved is that the coin is named from the Easterlings or North Germans, who were the first moneyers in England. Walter de Pinchbeck, a monk of Bury in the time of Edw. I, says: "sed moneta Anglie fertur dicta fuisse a nominibus opificum, ut Floreni a nominibus Florentiorum, ita Sterlingi a nominibus Esterlingorum nomina sua contraxerunt, qui hujusmodi monetam in Anglia primitus compoiebant.'" This notable passage proves only that the name Esterlingi, as applied to a people, goes back to the 14th century; and it is difficult to prove that it is much older. γ. But Duncane quotes from a document dated 1184, which has: 'in Anglia unum sterlingum persolvitur.' Indeed, the E. sterling is even older than this, as Wace (d. ab. 1180) has: 'por ses estrlins recoovir.' Roman de Rou, 6873. 8. The word appears to be native English; there are two theories as to its origin. (1) From AS. sterling*, 'little star', with reference to a very small star on some early coins, as, e. g. on some of Will. II; or (2) from AS. starling, a starling (Clarke Hall), ME. sterling (Voc. 640, 7, 761, 28; Cursor Mundi, 1780), dimin. of AS. star, ME. ster (Voc. 542, 45), a starling; see Starling. Duncane quotes from Lyndwode to the effect that the reference may be to the four birds conspicuous on most coins of Edward the Confessor.

STERN (1), severe, harsh, austere. (F.) ME. stern, Wyclif, Luke, xix. 21, 22; also sturne, Rob. of Glouc. p. 27, l. 628. AS. myrne, stern, Grein, ii. 492; where we also find sturn-mid, of stern mind, stern-minded, sturnian, to be severe. [The AS. y often becomes ME. u, as in AS. weyrn, ME. worm; a worm; AS. fyrn, ME. furs or firs, furze. Certainly stern should rather be spelt sturn; it has been assimilated to the word below. Still we find the AS. y becoming mod. e in kernel < AS. cyrnæl.] Teut. type sturnjanz*. Perhaps allied to OHG. sturnia, to be astonished, sturni, stupor. β. The suffix -n is adjectival (Idg. -no-), as in L. aflicto-nus; the base sturn seems to be the weak grade of the base STER, as seen in Gk. stereós, solid, stiff. Cf. Goth. staurran, to murmur against, G. stürzig, morose, stubborn, starr, stiff, rigid; Du. staursch, stern; Icel. stara, to mope. See Stare (1). The idea of sternness is closely allied to those of stiffness and austerity of manner. Der. stern-ly, -ness.

STERN (2), the hinder part of a vessel. (Scand.) ME. sterne, P. Plowman, B. viii. 35, footnote; other MSS. have stere, stere, stjere, meaning a rudder. Spelt stjerne, a rudder, id. A. ix. 30. — Icel. stjörna, a steering, steering; hence the phr. stjía við stjörnu, to sit at the helm; whence sterna became recognised as a name for the hinder part of the vessel. Extended from stjör (occurring in stjóri, a steerer, ruler), which answers to ME. stere, a rudder. See Steer (2). Compare Icel. stjörnbordi with E. starboard (= stear-board). Thus sterna is allied to steer, in the obsolete sense of 'rudder.' Der. stern- most; stern-sheets, where sheet had once (I suppose) the nautical sense of 'rope.'

STERNUTATION, sneezing. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9, l. 1. — L. sternutatio, acc. of sternutatio, a sneezing. — L. sternuere, to sneeze, frequent. of sternere, to sneeze. Allied to Gk. strepnuos, to sneeze. β. The bases ster-, strep-, seem to be from an imitative base stern-*, expressive of sneezing. Der. sternutal-or-y.

STERTOROUS, snoring. (L.) Modern. Coined (as if from L. stertoriosis*) from stertere, to snore. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Sternutation. Der. stertorous-ly.

STETHOSCOPE, the tube used in auscultation, as applied to the chest. (Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Modern; lit. 'chest-examiner.' Coined from Gk. stethos, for stethos, the chest; and skopos, to consider, examine. β. The Gk. stethos is allied to Skt. stana-s, the female breast, a nipple. Cf. Gk. sternivon = stethos (Hesychius). For -scope, see Scoope or Sceptio. Der. stethoscopic.

STEVEDORE, one whose occupation it is to load and unload vessels in port. (Span.—J.) Webster has stevedore, which is a well-known word in the mercantile world, and stew, verb, to stow, as cotton or wool in a vessel's hold. The word is Spanish, Spain being a wool-producing country and once largely engaged in sea-traffic. — Span. estivador, 'a packer of wool at shearing'; Neuman. It may also mean a stower of cargo, as will be seen. Formed with suffix -dor (< L. acc. -dorem) from estiva-r, to stow, to lay up cargo in the hold, to compress wool. — I. stipare, to crowd together, press together; allied to Stiff. The verb appears also in Ital. stivare, to press close, Port. estivar, to trim a ship. There is also a verbal sb., viz. Ital. stiva, ballast of a ship, Span. estiva, the stowage of goods in a ship's hold, MF. estive, 'the loading or lading of a ship'; Cot. From the same root are stip-end, stip-ul-at-ion, con-stip-ate, co-stive.

STEW (1), to boil slowly with little moisture. (F.—Teut.) ME. stewen. 'Stuwn, or stuyn mete, Stupho; Stuwn or bathyn, or stuyn in a stu, Balneo.' Prompt. Parv. The older sense was to bathe; and the verb was formed from the old sb. stew in the sense of bath or hot-house (as it was called), which was chiefly used in the pl. sb. with the low sense of brothel-house. See Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 277 (242 in the translation). The old spelling of the pl. sb. was stues, stuwes, stewes, stuyes, stuyes, P. Plowman, B. vi. 72, A. vii. 65, all variously Anglicised forms of OF. estuve, of which Cotgrave explains the pl. estuves by 'stews, also stoves or hot-houses.' [Cf. Ital. stufa, Port. and Span. estufa, a stove, a hot-house; mod. F. étuve.] β. Of Teut. origin. The OHG. form is stupa, a hot room for a bath; the mod. G. stube merely means a room in general. The corresponding F. word is Stove, q. v. We may particularly note MDu. stove, 'a stowe, a hot-house, or a baine' [bath], een stove om te baden, 'a stow to bathe in'; Hexham. The stews in Southwark were chiefly filled with Flemish women. Der. stew, sb., in the sense of stewed meat; this is merely a derivative from the verb. The pl. sb. stews is treated of above; cf. 'The bathes and the stews bothe,' Gower, C. A. iii. 291; bk. viii. 484.

STEW (2), a fish-pond. (Du.) ME. stewer, Chaucer, C. T. A. 350. — MDu. stouwen, to drive forward; Du. stouwen, stouwen, to stow; cf. Low G. stan, a dam, stauen, to keep water back. Allied to Stow.

STEWARD, one who superintends another's estate or farm. (E.) ME. steward, Havelok, 666; Ancren Riwle, p. 386, l. 5 from bottom. AS. stigward, in a will (Toller); also steward, Voc. 223, 7; spell stward, A. S. Chron. an. 1093, and an. 1120. 'Economus, steward,' Voc. 129, 13; also in Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 579, l. 12. The full form of the word was stigward, lit. a stygward; from AS. stig-o, a sty, and ward, a guardian, warder, keeper. The orig. sense was one who looked after the domestic animals, and gave them their food; hence, one who provides for his master's table, and generally, one who superintends household affairs for another. See Sty and Ward.

β. For the change of sound, cf. the name Seward, formerly Steward, Macb. iii. 6, 31. The Icel. stjörvar, gen. assigned as the origin of E. steward, occurs but rarely; the Icel. Dict. gives but one reference, and adds the remark that it is 'from the English.' γ. Grein (li. 484) draws especial attention to the parallel form stignia, also stignia, in the same sense of steward, the suffix being the AS. wita, a wise man, one who is skilled. Der. steward-ship, Luke, xvi. 2; steward-ess, with F. suffix.

STICK (1), to stab, pierce, thrust in, to fasten by piercing; to adhere. (E.) The orig. sense is to stab or pierce (cf. sting), hence to fasten into a thing by thrusting it in; hence, the intransitive use, to be thrust into a thing and there remain, to cling or adhere, to be set fast, stop, hesitate, &c. Two verbs are confused in mod. E., viz. (1) stick, to pierce, and (2) stick, to be fixed in. 1. STRONG FORM. ME. steken, strong verb, to pierce, fix, pt. t. stak, Rom. of the Rose, 458; pp. steken, stiken, stoken (see Stratmann), also stoke, Gower, C. A. 1. 60, bk. i. 538; which = mod. F. stick. This answers to AS. stecan*, not found; pt. t. stac*, pp. stacen*; a strong verb, which does not appear in AS, though found both in OFries. staka, and in OSaxon, where we find the pt. t. stak, Heliand, 5707. And compare Sting. Cognate words are Low G. steken, to pierce, stick, pt. t. stak, pp. steken; and G. stechen, to sting, pierce, stick, stab, pt. t. stach, pp. gestochen. Teut. type stekon*, pt. t. stak*, pp. stakanon*; transferred to the e-series from the older type stekan*, pt. t. stak*, pp. stakanon*. Cf. Goth. staks, a mark, stigma; staks, a point, a moment of time. B. The latter strong verb is from the Idg. STEIGW*, to pierce (Brugmann, i. § 633); whence Gk. stigein (= stigein), to prick, L. instigare, to instigate, Skt. stigma, sharp, stij, to be sharp, stigeja, to sharpen; see Stigma, Instigate, Sting. 2. WEAK FORM. ME. sticien, to be infixed, to stick into, cling to, adhere; a weak verb; also used in a trans. sense. 'And anon he stykede faste' = he stuck fast, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1246; pt. p. stykede, Chaucer, C. T. 1565. AS. stician, pt. t. sticode, both trans. and intrans. Grein, ii. 482. Cognate words are Icel. stika, to drive piles, Dan. stikke, to stab, Swed. sticka, to stab, sting, prick, G. stechen, to stick, set, plant, fix, also, to stick fast, remain. Thus the sense of 'stick fast' appears in G. as well as in E., but G. restricts the strong form stechen to the orig. sense, whilst stechen has both senses. Der. stick (2), q. v.; stick-y, spelt sticke in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 583, stickiness, stick-le-back, q. v.; stick, q. v.; and see sting, stang, stake, stake. From the same root are di-sting-uish, di-stinct, exting-uish, ex-tinct, in-stinct, pre-stige, in-stig-ate, sti-mu-late, style (1), stig-ma.

STICK (3), a staff, small branch of a tree. (F.) ME. stikke, Chaucer, C. T. 16733 (G 1265). AS. sticca, a stick, also a peg or nail, Judges, iv. 21, 22. So called from its piercing or sticking into anything; the orig. sense was 'peg', then any small bit of a branch of a tree. 'Se teldiceca sticode þurh his heafod' = the tent-peg stuck through his head, Judges, iv. 22. Icel. stika, a stick; EFries. stikke, stik, allied to Du. stek, G. stechen, a stick. See Stick (1), Steak, and Stake. Der. stick-le-back. And see stick. Also single-stick; see under quarterstaff.

STICKLEBACK, a small fish. (E.) So called from the stickles or prickles on its back; cf. thornback. ME. stykbylak, Reliq. Antiquae, i. 85. Corruptly sticklebæg, Walton's Angler, p. i. c. 5 (R.); and still more corruptly sticklebæ (Halliwell). In the Prompt. Parv., and in Voc. 610, 30, there is mention of a fish called a stikling or stikelyng. The sb. stikel or stickle is from AS. sticel, a prick, sting, used of the sting of a gnat in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 6, cap. xvi. § 2. — AS. stician, to stick; just as prickle is from prician, to prick. See Stick (1) and Stitch. The suffix -el denotes the instrument; it is not (in this case) a diminutive, as is often imagined; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 228. For back, see Back. Cf. Du. stekelvish, a stickleback; MDu. stikkel, 'a prick or a sting'; Hexham; also EFries. stikel, a thorn.

STICKLER, (formerly) one who parts combatants or settles disputes between men fighting. (E.) Nearly obsolete; once common; see Halliwell, Nares, and Trench, Select Glossary. 'Like sticklers of the war'; Dryden, Oliver Cromwell, 41. Now only used in the sense of a man who insists on etiquette or persists in an opinion. See Troil. v. 8. 18. The verb to stickle meant to part combatants, act as umpire. 'I stykyl between wrastlers, or any folkas that prove mastries [try conclusions] to see that none do other wronge, or I parte folkas that be redy to fyght'; Palsgrave. It is common to explain this word (with profound disregard for the l in it) by saying that the umpire must have parted combatants by means of sticks, or else that the umpire arbitrated between men who fought with single-sticks. Both assertions are mere inventions; and a stickle is not a stick at all, but a prick. If this were the etymology, the word would mean 'one who uses prickles'. B. It is probable that stickle represents the once common ME. stighelen or stighliten, to dispose, order, arrange, govern, subdue, &c. It was commonly used of a steward, who disposed of and arranged everything, and acted as a master of the ceremonies; see Will. of Palerne, 1199, 2899, 3281, 3841, 5379; Destruction of Troy, 117, 1997, 2193, 3282; Gawain and Grene Knight, 2137; &c. 'When þay com to be coorte, keepte wern þay fyve, stygylt with þe steward, stand þe halle'; Ælfric. Poems, B. 90. 'To stygyle the people' = to keep order among the people; P. Plowm. Crede, 315; and cf. P. Plowm. C. xvi. 40. We also find stikkill (without o), York Myst. (glossary); and the sb. is stiler in the Cov. Myst. p. 23. Y. This ME. stighelen is the frequentative of AS. stihlan, stihlan. 'Willem weoldle and stihle Engeland' = William ruled and governed England, A. S. Chron. an. 1086 (Thorpe renders it by 'held despotic sway'). — MDu. stichten, 'to build, edifice, bound, breed or make (a contention), impose or make (a lawe)'; Hexham; mod. Du. stichten, to found, institute, establish, excite, edify. Further allied to Dan. stifte, to found, institute, establish; stifte forlig = to reconcile, stifte frad = to make peace (just exactly to stickle); Swed. stifta, also stikta, similarly used; G. stiften, to found, institute, cause, excite; Freundschaft stiften = to make friendship. Cf. also Icel. stift (from stifti*-), a foundation, base. Kluge derives stih-, stif-, from a Teut. base stihw* (= Idg. stig*), to build, found; cf. OSax. stihlan, to build.

STIFF, rigid, obstinate, formal. (E.) The vowel was once long; and remains so in North E. stive, muscular, and in the derivative stiffe. ME. stif, Chaucer, C. T. 7849 (D 2267); the superl. is spelt stuyest, stuyest, stuyest, stuyest, P. Plowman, C. vii. 43. AS. stif, stiff (Toller); this form is verified by the derivatives stifian and stifian. 'Heora hand stufedon' = their hands became stiff; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 598, l. 11. 'Obriescio, ie stife', Voc. 118. 20. 4. Du. stif, stiff, hard, rigid, firm; Dan. stiv; Swed. stif; Low G. stif (Dannell); Westphal. stif. [The G. stif is supposed to be borrowed from Low G.] B. Allied to Lithuan. stiprus, strong, stipti, to be stiff, L. stipes, a stem, trunk of a tree, stipare, to pack tight; stipulus, firm. See Stipulation. Der. stiffly, stiffness, stiffen (Swed. stifna, Dan. stivne), Hen. V. iii. 1. 7, stiff-necked, Acts, vii. 51; stifle.

STIFFLE, to suffocate. (Scand.) 'Stifil, Stifle, suffocare', Levins. 'Smored [smothered] and stifled'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 68 f. — Icel. stifla, to dam up, prop. used of water; hence, to block up, choke; Norweg. stivla, to stop, hem in, check, lit. 'to stiffen'; cf. stivra, to stiffen; both are frequent forms of stiva (Dan. stive), to stiffen. [Cf. also ME. stiuven, to stiffen, Will. of Ælmerne, 3033; Swed. stifva, Du. stipven; G. stiefen, to stiffen.] All these words are derived from the adj. appearing as AS. stif, stif; the vowel of which was once long, and is still so in prov. E. Halliwell gives 'Stive, strong, muscular, North'; which is nothing but ME. stiffe, an occasional spelling of stiff; see Stiff. The loss of the adj. 'stiff' in Icel. is remarkable, as it is preserved in Swed., Dan., and Norwegian; the Oldcel. form was stif, cited by E. Müller. ¶ We cannot derive stifle from the verb stive, to pack close, the change from v to f being contrary to rule; but it is very probable that stifle has been frequently confused with stive, which, though it properly means to pack close, came to have much the same sense, as in prov. E. stivy, close, stifling (Worcestershire). Stive is a F. word, from OF. estiver < L. stipare, to compress, pack tight, as explained under Stevadore. Note that F. stif and L. stipare are closely related words, from the same root.

STIGMATISE, to brand with infamy, defame publicly. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) 'Stigmatized with a hot iron'; Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 470 (R.). [Shak. has stigmatic, naturally deformed, 2 Hen. VI., v. 1. 215; stigmatical, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 22.] — F. stigmatiser, in Cotgrave stigmatizer, 'to brand, burn, or mark with a red hot iron, to defame publicly'. — Late L. stigmatizare, to mark; see Higden, ii. 146. — Gk. stigmatizein, to mark or brand. — Gk. stigmaton, base of stigma, a prick, mark, brand. From the base stigm-, as in stigma (= stigm-), to prick. From Idg. STEIGW*, to prick; whence also E. stick; see Stick (1). Der. (from Gk. stigmaton) stigmat-ic, stigmat-ical. We also use now stigma, sb., from Gk. stigma.

STILE (1), a step or set of steps for climbing over a fence or hedge. (E.) ME. stile, style, Chaucer, C. T. 10420 (F 106). AS. stigel, a stile; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 146, l. 6. Formed with suffix -el, denoting the means or instrument, from stig-, weak grade of AS. stigan, to climb, mount. See Sty (1). The AS. stigel first became stigel, and then stille; so also AS. sigul became mod. E. climb. +OHG. stigila, a stile (obsolete), from OHG. stigan, to climb; MDu. stichel (Hexham). And cf. Shetland stiggy, a stile (Edmonston); from the same root.

STILE (2), the correct spelling of Style, q. v.

STILETTO, a small dagger. (Ital. — L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627; Heywood, Eng. Traveller, A. 1. sc. 2. — Ital. stiletto, 'a little poynard'; Florio. Dimin. of stilo, stilo, now a glomion, formerly a dagger (Florio). — L. stilius, acc. of stilius, a style; see Style (1).

STILL (1), motionless, calm, silent. (E.) ME. stille, Chaucer, C. T. 11782 (F 1472). AS. stille, still. Grein, ii. 484. Allied to AS. stilian, verb, to rest, be still; id.; lit. 'to remain in a still or place'; a sense well shown by the adv. still = continually. Teut. type stelfoz*; allied to AS. stellan, to place. From Teut. base stal*-, as in AS. steal, stal, a place, station, stall; see Stall. — Du. stil, still, stillon, to be still; stellen, to place, from stal, a stall; stille, still, hushed, stille, to still, also, to set, post, station, put in place, allied to stadd (formerly stall), a stall; Swed. stilla, still, stilla, to quiet, allied to stall; G. stille, still, stille, to still; stellen, to place, from stall. The sense of still is 'brought to a still or resting-place'. Der. still, adv., ME. stille, silently, Havelok, 2997, from AS. stille (Grein); this adverb has preserved the sense of 'continually' or 'abidingly'; and has come to mean always, ever, as in the strange compound still-vexed = always vexed. Temp. i. 2. 229. Also still, verb, AS, stulan, adj., ME. stillech (= still-like), Layamon, 2374; stily, adv.; still-ness; still-born, 2 Hen. IV, i. 3. 64; still-stand, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 64; stand-still.

STILL (2), to distil, to trickle down. (L.; or F. -L.) In some cases, still represents l. stillare, to fall in drops; as, e.g., in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 7. 35. Cf. 'stille hem in a stillatory', Medical Works of the 14th Century, ed. Henslow, p. 117. But it is more often a mere contraction for distill, just as sport is for disport, spend for dispend, and spite for despite. Thus Tusser writes: 'The knowledge of stilling is one pretie feat; May's Husbandry, st. 33; where stilling plainly stands for distilling. See Distill. Der. still, sb., an apparatus for distilling, equivalent to ME. stillatorie, in the same sense; Chaucer, C. T. 10648 (G 580), answering to a Late L. stillatōrium, from stillare. And see di-still, in-still.

STILT, a support of wood with a foot-rest, for lengthening the stride in walking. (Scand.) ME. stelte. Stylte, calepodium, ligupodium; Prompt. Parv. -Swed. styta, Dan. stelt; cf. Norweg. styttar, a stilt, Dan. stelt, to walk on stilts, also to stalk, walk slowly. We also find Swed. dial. styla, a prop (Rietz); +Du. stelt, a stilt; Westphal. stelte; G. stelte, a stilt; OHG. stelza, a prop, a crutch-b. We may particularly note Iow. St. stult, a crutch; this, like Swed. styta, is from the Scand. base stelt, as in Swed. dial. stulta, to stagger about, S. Swed. stulta, the same (Möller). γ. I suppose this form to have arisen from the addition of -t- to the base stult, as seen in Swed. dial. stult-a, stult-a, to stagger about. Cf. OHG. stulla, (pt. t. stulta), to come to a halt, to stop, allied to OHG. stulla, a moment (whence Ital. tra-stulla, 'a pastime, quietness', Florio). From the weak grade stull* of a lost Teut. strong verb stullan*, pt. t. stall*, pp. stallanz*; Grimm, Gram. ii. 57. Prob. the AS. stelan, to be amazed, hesitate (come to a stand), is closely allied. β. We can then explain Du. stelt, G. stelte, as allied to G. gestalt, shape, form, allied to OHG. stellan, to place, fix, cause to halt (pt. gestalt). Der. stilt-ed.

STIMULATE, to instigate. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sb. stimulation is in Minshew, ed. 1627.] -L. stimulatus, pp. of stimulare, to prick forward. -L. stimulus, a goad; perhaps for stimulus*, from stig-mulus*; and formed with suffixes -mulo-, from stig-*, weak grade of stigei-*W, to stick, to prick; see Stick (1). Der. stimulat-ion, from F. stimulation, 'a pricking forward', Cot.; stimulat-ive; stimulant, from L. stimulans, base of pres. part. of stimulare. We also now use L. stimulus as an E. word.

STING, to prick severely, pain acutely. (E.) ME. stingen, strong verb; pt. t. stang, stung; pp. stungen, stongen; Chaucer, C. T. 1081 (A 1079). AS. stingan, pt. t. stang, pp. stungen; Grein, ii. 484. +Dan. stuge; Swed. stinga; Icel. stinga, pt. t. stakk (for stang*), pp. stunginn. Cf. Goth. stengan* (for stingan*), to push out, put out, Malt. v. 29. Teut. type stengan-, pt. t. stang, pp. stunganz*. Perhaps allied, ultimately, to Stick (1); cf. prov. E. stang, a pole, with E. stake. See Stang, Stake. Der. sting, sb., AS., Dan., and Swed. sting. Also sting-y, q.v.

STINGY, mean, avaricious. (E.) Pronounced (stini). 'Stingy, niggardly; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A stingy, narrow-hearted fellow; I'Estrange (Todd). It is the same word as prov. E. stingy [pronounced stini], common in Norfolk in the sense of 'nipping, unkindly,' and esp. used of a cold East wind. Forby defines it: (1) cross, ill-humoured, (2) churlish, biting, as applied to the state of the air. See Stingy in Ray's Glossary (F. D. S. B. 16), and my notes upon it, esp. at p. xix; see also E. 1. 1. 1. It is merely the adj. formed from sting, sb., by the addition of -y, and means (1) stinging, keen, (2) churlish; by an easy transition of sense, which is exactly paralleled by the Swed. sticken, pettish, waspish, fretful, from sticka to sting. Cf. MDan. stinge, adj., contrary to. β. The sounding of g as j causes no difficulty, as it is still common in Wiltshire, where a bee's sting is called a stinge [stini]; cf. also Shropsh. stinge, a grudge; as 'I owd him a stinge'. See Sting. Der. sting-i-ly, -ness.

STINK, to smell strongly. (F.) ME. stinken, strong verb; pt. t. stank, stouk; Chaucer, C. T. 14535 (B 3807); pp. stouken, AS. stincan, pt. t. stanc, stanc; pp. stuncen, Grein, ii. 484. This verb not only means to stink, or to be fragrant, but has the singular sense of to rise as dust or vapour. 'Dust stonc 16 heofonum' = dust rose up to heaven. +Du. stinken; Icel. stikkva, pt. t. stikk (for stink*), pp. stokinn (for stokinn*), to spring up, take to flight; the pp. stokinn means bedabbed, sprinkled; Dan. stinke; Swed. stinka; G. stinken. Cf. Goth. stiggwan (= stingwan*), to strike, smite, thrust; whence histuggha, a cause of offence, 2 Cor. vi. 3. The form of the Teut. base is stengy*. Possibly allied to L. stingere, as in ex-stingere, to thrust out; and if so, allied further to stigei-*W, to pierce, as in L. in-stigare, to instigate. ¶ There are difficulties as to the sense; and it is not certain that the Icel. and Goth. forms belong here. If not, then the connexion with L. stingere fails. As to the possible connexion with Gk. στυγνός, rancid, see Prellwitz. Der. stink, sb., stink-pot; also stunch, q.v.

STINT, to limit, restrain. (E.) Properly 'to shorten,' or 'curtail.' ME. stinten, stynten, gen. in the sense to stop, cause to cease, P. Plowman, B. i. 120; also, intransitively, to pause, id. v. 585. Allied to ME. stenten, to cease; Chaucer, C. T. 905 (A 903). AS. stintan, to make dull, Voc. 35. 28; for stintan (= L. contundere), in a gloss (Bosworth). [Also gestentan, to warn, perhaps to restrain, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 6. 1. 24.] The proper sense is rather 'to make dull,' as it is a causal verb, formed (by vowel-change from u to y) from the adj. stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, Malt. v. 22; cf. stuntsche, folly, Mark, vii. 22. +Icel. styta (by assimilation for stynta*), to shorten, from the adj. stuttur (for stuntur*), short, stunted; Swed. dial. stynta, to shorten, from stunt, small, short (Rietz); Norweg. styttla, stutta, to shorten, tuck up the clothes, from stunt, small, short (Aasen); cf. Dan. dial. stynte, to crop. β. The E. word comes nearer to the sense of the Icel. word; the AS. stunt is used metaphorically, in the sense of 'short of wit.' However, to stint is certainly formed from stunt by vowel-change; see further under Stunted.

STIPEND, a salary, settled pay. (L.) 'Yearly stipendes;' Ascham, Toxophilus, b. ii. ed. Arber, p. 130. -L. stipendium, a tax, impost, tribute, stipend. For stip-pendium* or stipi-pendium*, a payment of money; from stip- or stipi-, base of stips, small coin or a contribution in small coin, and -pendium, a payment, from pendere, to weigh out, to pay. For pendere, see Pendant. Der. stipendi-ary, from L. stipendiarius, receiving pay.

STIPPLE, to engrave by means of dots. (Du.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he calls it a modern term in art. -Du. stippen, to speckle, cover with dots. -Du. stipfel, a speckle, dimin. of stip, a point. Hexham gives stip, stuf, or stipkelken, 'a point, or a small point'; also stippen, 'to point, or to fix'; stippen or sticken mei de naelde, 'to stitch with the needle,' stip-naelde, 'a stitching-needle.' Allied to Low G. stippen, to drip as raindrops (Danneil); stippen, to speckle; G. stipfen, to stitch, G. stift, a peg, pin.

STIPULATION, a contract, agreement. (F. -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The verb to stipulate is prob. later, but is used by Cotgrave to translate F. stipuler.] -F. stipulation, 'a stipulation, a covenant'; Cot. -L. stipulatio, acc. of stipulatio, a covenant, bargain. -L. stipulāri, to settle an agreement, bargain; lit. to make fast. -OL. stipulus, fast, firm; stipulum* apud veteres frumum appellabatur; Justinian Institutions, iii. 15 (Lewis). Allied to stipes, a post; and to E. stiff. Der. (from L. stipulatus, pp. of stipulāri) stipulate, verb. ¶ The story about stipula, a straw, noticed in Trichin, Study of Words, is needless; stipulate simply keeps the sense of the root. It may be noted that L. stipula = E. stubble.

STIR, to rouse, instigate, move about. (F.) ME. stieren, sturen (and even steren, but properly always with one r), Chaucer, C. T. 12280, 16745 (C 346, G 1278). AS. stýran, to move, to stir, Gen. vii. 21, ix. 3; Grein, ii. 491. [Various forms are given in Ettmüller, which seem to have been altered and accented in order to bring the word into connexion with stee; but its true connexion is rather with sturm. Grun. keeps stýran, to stir, and stýran, stýran, to stir, quite distinct.] Allied to Icel. stýrr, a stir, disturbance, Du. stören, to disturb, interrupt, vex, Swed. störa, G. stören, to disturb, OHG. stæren, stören, to scatter, destroy, disturb. Teut. types stúrjan-, stúrjan- (Franck). See Storm. Der. stur-geon; and see sturm.

STIRK, dimin. of Steer (1), q.v.
STIRRUP, a ring or hoop suspended from a saddle. (E.) For stýr-rope, i.e. a rope to climb by; the orig. stirrup was a looped rope for mounting into the saddle. Spelt stirrup in Palgrave. ME. stirup, Chaucer, C. T. 7247 (111665). AS. stirap. 'Scannell, stirap,' Voc. 120. 2; fuller form stigrap, id. 332. 11. -AS. stig, weak grade of stigan, to climb, mount; and ráp, a rope. See Stile (1) or Sty (1), and Rope. +MDu. stegel-reep, or steegh-reep, 'a stir-rope-leather,' Ilexham. [This is another use of the word; that which we now call stirrup is called in Du. stijbeugel, i.e. 'the little bow or loop whereby to mount'.] Similarly formed from Du. stijgen, to mount, and reep, a rope. Also Icel. stýr-reip, from stiga and reip; G. stiegreif, a stirrup, from stiegen and reip; cf. stiegbügel, a stirrup.

STITCH, a pain in the side, a passing through stuff of a needle and thread. (E.) The sense of 'pain in the side, lit. pricking sensation,' is old. ME. stiche. 'Stiche, pynne on þe syde; Prompt. Parv. AS. stier, a pricking sensation; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 370. § 10. -AS. stician, to prick, pierce; see Stick (1). So also G. stich, a prick, stitch, from stechen, to prick; also stichen, to stitch, from the same. Der. stitch, verb; also stich-wort, a herb good for the stitch, spelt sichworte in Palgrave; stitch-er, stich-er-y, Cor. i. 3. 75.
STITEL, an anvil. (Scand.) 'Vulcan's stith; Hamlet, iii. 2. 89;

some add. have stikky. ME. stikh, Chaucer, C. T. 2028 (A 2026); Havelok, 1877. = Icel. stedi, an anvil. Allied to stadr, a place, i.e. fixed stand; and so named from its firmness. = Swed. stád, an anvil; MDu. stiet. From the same root as stead, q.v. Der. stik-y, also used with the sense of anvil, like ME. stithi, Cursor Mundl, 3337.

STIVER, a Dutch penny. (Du.) In Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 2, 1641. Also in Arber's Eng. Garner, iii. 404 (ab. 1594). = Du. stiver, formerly stuyver, 'a stiver, a Low-Country piece of coin, of the value of an English penny'; Hexham. = Hence G. stüber, a stiver. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'bit' or small piece. Franck connects it with Low G. stunf, stumpy; Icel. stúfr, a stump, stíffa, to cut off.

STOAT, an animal of the weasel kind. (E.) Stoat, a stallion-horse, also, a kind of rat; Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. Spelt stote, Phillips, 1706; Levins, 1570. Cf. prov. E. stoot (Suffolk); stot (Hants.), a weasel (E. D. D.). ME. stot, a young bull, a young horse (E. D. D.). ME. stot, in the Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 218, l. 14, a scribe says to the woman taken in adultery: 'Therefore come forth, thou stynkyng stot!' and in l. 19: 'To save such stotys, it xal [shall] not be.' Here the sense is probably stoot. The ME. stot means (1) a stoat, (2) a horse or stallion, (3) a bullock; see Chaucer, C. T. 617 (A 615); and my note to P. Plowman, C. xxii, 267. The reason is that the word is a general name for a male animal, and not confined to any one kind; the word stag is in the same case, meaning a hart, a gander, and a drake; see Stag. The pl. stottes, stallions, occurs in the Owl and Nightingale, 495; AS. stotias, 'equi viles' (Napier). Allied to Icel. stútr, a bull; Swed. stut, a bull, also a hard blow with a rod; Dan. stut, a bullock; Swed. dial. stut, (1) a young ox, (2) a young man; Norweg. stut, (1) a bullock, (2) an ox-horn. From stut-, weak grade allied to Teut. stautan-, to push, strike. Cf. Du. stooten, to push, thrust, whence Du. stooter, sb., a thruster, also a stallion, stootig, adj., butting, goring; Swed. stota, to push, Dan. støde, G. stossen (strong verb), Goth. stautan, to strike. See Stutter.

STOCCADO, STOCCATA, a thrust in fencing. (Ital. - Teut.) Stoccardo, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 234. Stoccala, Romeo, iii. 1. 77. Stoccardo is an accommodated form, prob. from MF. estocade, with the same sense, with a final a to imitate Spanish; cf. Shakespeare's barri-cade with E. barriade. [The true Span. form was estocada, 'a stocada or thrust with a weapon.' Minshew.] Stoccala is the better form. = Ital. stocata, 'a foyne, a thrust, a stoccardo given in fence'; Florio. Formed as if from a fem. pp. of a verb stoccare*, which is made from the sb. stocco, 'a truncheon, a tack, a short sword, an arming sword'; Florio. = G. stock, a stick, staff, trunk, stump; cognate with E. Stock, q.v. And see Stoke. Cf. MDu. stock, 'a stock-rapier'; Hexham.

STOCK, a post, stump, stem, &c. (E.) In all its senses, it is the same word. The sense is 'a stump'; hence a post, trunk, stem (metaphorically a race or family), a fixed store or fund, capital, cattle, trunk or butt-end of a gun; the pl. stocks signify a place where a criminal is set fast, or a frame for holding ships fast, or public capital. See Trench, Study of Words, which partly follows Horne Tooke's Divisions of Parley, pt. ii. c. 4. ME. stok, trunk of a tree, Pricke of Conscience, 676; pl. stokkes, the stocks, P. Plowman, B. iv. 108. AS. stock, a post, trunk; Deut. xxviii. 36, 64. = Du. stok, stick, handle, stocks; MDu. stock; whence MDu. stockhuys, a stock-dove, stockvisch, stock-fish; stockhuuse, 'a rose so called beyond the sea', i.e. stocks; Hexham; Icel. stokkr, trunk, log, stocks, stocks for ships; Dan. stok, a stick; Swed. stock, a beam, log; G. stock; OIIG. stock. Teut. type stukko*, m. The orig. sense may have been 'stump of a cut tree'; cf. AS. stycce, G. stück, a bit, fragment; also Low G. stuke, a stump, Norw. staaka, to strike, hack. Some connect it with Skt. tuj, to strike; just as Icel. stauta, to push, is allied to Skt. tud, to strike. Der. stock, verb, ME. stokken, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iii. l. 380; stock-broker; stock-dove, Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 429; stock-exchange, stock-holder, stock-jobbing; stock-fish (prob. from Du. stockvisch), Prompt. Parv., and Temp. iii. 2. 79; stock-isk, i.e. log-like, Merch. Ven. v. 81; stock-still, i.e. still as a post (cf. MDu. stock-stille, 'stone-still, or immovable', Hexham); stock, a flower, called stocke-gyllifer (stock-gilliflowers) in Palsgrave; stock-ing, q.v., stoke, q.v. Also stocce-ado, stocce-ata.

STOCKADE, a breast-work formed of stakes stuck in the ground. (Span. - Teut.) A modern word; it occurs in Mason's Eng. Garden, b. ii. l. 293, spelt stockade (A.D. 1777). The pl. stockadoes occurs ab. 1602; see Arber, Eng. Garner, vii. 175. A mistaken form, due to association with stock. = Span. estacada, 'a place palisadoed, or hemm'd in with stakes'; see Don Quixote, pt. ii. c. 66 (Pinela). = Span. estaca, a stake. = MDu. stake, a stake; see Stake. See Notes on E. Etym. p. 283.

STOCKING, a close covering for the foot and leg. (E.) 'A stocking, or paire of stockings;' Minshew, ed. 1647. Formerly called stocks: 'Our knit silke stockings, and Spanish leather shoes;' Gascoigne, Steele Glas, l. 375. 'He rose to draw on his strait stockings, and, as the devil would, he hit vpon the letter, bare it away in the heele of his stocke,' &c.; Hollinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1532 (R.). 'Un bas de chausses, a stocking, or nether-stock;' Cot. He also has: 'Un bas de manches, a half-sleeve' which we may compare with 'Manche Lombarde, a stock-sleeve, or fashion of halfe sleeve'; id. = G. Stoek, the clothing of the legs and lower part of the body formerly consisted of a single garment, called hose, in F. chausses. It was afterwards cut in two at the knees, leaving two pieces of dress, viz. knee-breeches, or, as they were then called, upper-stocks, or in F. haut de chausses, and the netherstocks or stockings, in F. bas de chausses, and then simply bas. In these terms, the element stock is to be understood in the sense of stump or trunk, the part of a body left when the limbs are cut off. In the same way G. stumpf, a stocking, properly signifies a stump; Wedgwood. Similarly, a stock-sleeve is a truncated sleeve, a half-sleeve. = Y. To this I may add that stock-ing is a dimin. form; the nether-stock being the smaller portion of the cut hose; it was sometimes called stock simply, but also nether-stock or stock-ing (= little stock); and the last name has alone survived. See Stoek.

STOIC, a disciple of Zeno. (L. - Gk.) Spelt Stoick, Milton, P. R. iv. 280; cf. Stoa, id. 253. From L. Stoicus = Gk. Στωικός, a Stoic; lit. belonging to a colonnade, because Zeno taught under a colonnade at Athens, named the Stoicé (στωαίη). = Gk. στοά (Ionic στοῶ, Attic στοά), a colonnade, place enclosed by pillars. The Ionic στοά is for stovf-yā*; allied to στυλός, a pillar. See Style (2). Der. stoic-ally, stoicism.

STOKER, one who tends a fire. (Du.) We have now coined the verb to stoke, but only the sb. appears in Phillips, Bailey, &c. 'Stoker, one that looks after a fire and some other concerns in a brew-house'; Phillips, ed. 1706. The word is Dutch, and came in as a term in brewing. = Du. stoker, 'a kindler, or a setter on fire'; Hexham. = Du. stoken, 'to make or kindle a fire, to instigate, or to stirre up'; id. [This is the same word as OF. estoguer, ME. stoken, to stab; see Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 2546 (Six-text), altered in Tyrwhitt to stike, l. 2548.] Allied to MDu. stock, a stick, stock, also a stock-rapier (stabbing rapier); no doubt from the use by the stoker of a stock (thick stick) to stir the fire with and arrange the logs. The MDu. stock (Du. stok) is cognate with E. Stock, q.v. Der. stoke, in the mod. sense (as distinct from ME. stoken, to stab, which is from OF. estoguer).

STOLE, a long robe, a long scarf for a priest. (L. - Gk.) In very early use. AS. stole; = Stola, stole; Voc. 327, 23. = L. stola. = Gk. στολή, equipment, a robe, a stole. = Gk. στολ-, 2nd grade of στύλας, to equip, lit. to set in order.

STOLID, dull, heavy, stupid. (L.) A late word. 'Stolid, foolish'; Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. = L. stolidus, firm, stock-like; hence, dull, stupid. Prob. allied to L. stul-tus, foolish; see Stultify. And see Stout. Der. stolid-ty, coined from L. stoliditas.

STOMACH, a more or less sac-like portion of the body, wherein food is digested. (P. - L. - Gk.) ME. stomak, Prompt. Parv. [Now accommodated to the Gk. spelling.] = F. estomac, spelt estomach in Cotgrave. = L. stomachum, acc. of stomachus. = Gk. στόμαχος, a mouth, opening, the gullet, the stomach; dimin. of στόμα, the mouth. Brugmann, l. § 421 (5). Der. stomach, verb, to resent, Antony, iii. 4. 12, from the use of stomach in the sense of anger, i Hen. VI, iv. 1. 141; stomach-er, an ornament for the breast, Wiit. Tale, iv. 4. 226; Paston Letters, iii. 325; stomach-ic.

STONE, a hard mass of mineral matter, piece of rock, a gem. (E.) ME. ston, stoon, Chaucer, C. T. 7997 (E 121). AS. stān (common); the change from ā to long o is usual, as in bān, a bone, bār, a boar. = Du. steen; Icel. steinn; Dan. and Swed. sten; G. stein; Goth. stains. = B. All from Teut. type stainaz*, m. Cf. Russ. stiana, a wall; Gk. στία, a stone, pebble. Curtius, l. 264. Der. stone, verb; stone-blind, as blind as a stone; stone-bow, used for shooting stones, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 51; stone-chat, a chattering bird; stone-crop, Baret (1580), ME. ston-croffe, Voc. 712, 35; stone-culter, K. Lear, ii. 2. 63; stone-fruit; stone-sill, K. John, iv. 1. 77; stone-ware; stone's east or stone's throw, the distance to which a stone can be cast or thrown; ston-y, AS. stānig; ston-y-heart-ed, i Hen. IV, ii. 2. 28. Also stan-ial, q.v.

STOOK, a number of corn-sheaves; usually twelve. (Scand.) Also stouk, in Prov. E.; see E. D. D. Spelt stouke in Cathol. Anglicum (1483); q.v. = Swed. dial. stuke, a shock of sheaves; Dan. dial. stuke (Kok); = Low G. stuke, a heap, a shock. Allied to E. Stake, Stook, q.v. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 284.

STOOL, a seat without a back. (E.) ME. stool, Prompt. Parv.;

clat. stole, P. Plowman, B. v. 394. AS. stól, a seat, a throne; Grein, ii. 485. †Du. stool, a chair, seat, stool; Icel. stóll; Dan. and Swed. stol, a chair; Goth. stols, a seat; G. stuhl, OIIG. stool, stual. Teut. type stólaz, m. Teut. stól = Ildg. stól. From √STA, to stand, stand firm. Brugmann, i. § 191; Streitberg, § 153 (5). Cf. Stand, Stand. Der. stool-ball, a game played with a ball and one or two stools, Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2; see stool-ball in Halliwell. STOOP (1), to bend the body, lean forward, condescend. (E.) ME. stoupen, Wyclif, John, xx. 5. AS. stūpan, Alfred, tr. of Orosius, b. vi. c. 24. § 1. †MDn. stuppen, 'to hove'; Hexham; Icel. stupa (obsolete); Swed. stupa, to fall, to tilt; cf. stupande, sloping, stupning, a leaning forward. β. From a Teut. base stūp*, apparently meaning to lean forward; see steep (1) and steep (2), the latter of which is the causal of stoop. And perhaps the step in step-child is from the same root. Der. steep (1); steep (2).

STOOP (2), a beaker; see Stoup.

STOOP, to obstruct, hinder, restrain, intercept, to cease. (L.) ME. stoppen, Ancrén Riwle, p. 72, l. 19. AS. stoppan, in the comp. for-stoppan, to stop up; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 42. So also Du. stoppen, to fill, stuff, stop; Swed. stoppa, to fill, stuff, cram, stop up; Dan. stoppe, to fill, stuff, cram, &c.; G. stopfen; OSax. stoppan, Ps. 57. 5. Not a Teut. word, but the same as Ital. stoppare, to stop up with tow, Late L. stuppare, to stop up with tow, also used in the general sense of cram, stop. β. All from L. stupa, stupae, the coarse part of flax, hard, oakum, tow; cognate with Gk. στύρα, στύρα, with the same sense. Hence also E. Stuff. Der. stop, sb., K. John, iv. 2. 239; stop-cock; stop-peg (with F. suffix), stop-fer; also stop-je, ME. stoppl, Prompt. Parv. (with E. suffix, signifying the instrument). Doublets, estop, to impede, bar, a law term, borrowed from AF. estoper (mod. F. stopper), from Late L. stuppare, as above; also stiff, verb.

STORAX, a resinous gum. (L. - Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 25, heading. = L. storax, styrax. = Gk. στύρα, a sweet-smelling gum produced by the tree called styrax; Herodotus, iii. 107.

STORE, provision, abundance, stock. (F. - L.) ME. store, stor, Chaucer, C. T. 600 (A 598); Kob. of Glouc. p. 395, l. 8138; the derived verb storen occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 13412, later text. 'Store, or purveyance, Staurum'; Prompt. Parv. = OF. estor, store, provisions (Godefroy). = Late L. staurum, the same as instaurum, store. = L. instaurare, to construct, build, restore, renew; Late L. instaurare, to provide necessities. Cf. OF. estorer, 'to build, make, edifice; also to store'; Cot. = L. in prep. as prefix; and staurare*, to set up, place, found also in the comp. restaurare, to restore. β. This form staurare*, orig. 'to erect,' is due to a lost adj. staurus*, allied to Skt. stāvāra = fixed, stable, and Gk. στῆναι, an upright pole or stake, orig. 'upright.' See Steer (2). Brugmann, i. § 198. Der. store, verb, ME. storen, OF. estorer, as above; store-age, with F. suffix -age < L. -itium; store-house; also re-store, q. v.; stor-y (2), q. v.

STORK, a wading bird. (E.) ME. stork, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 361. AS. storc, Voc. 133. 7. †Du. stork; Icel. storkr; Dan. and Swed. stork; G. storch, OHG. storch, stork. β. Root uncertain; but almost certainly the same word as Gk. στῆναι, a large bird (vulture, swan); Fick, iii. 346; which Fick considers as allied to E. stark, as if the orig. sense were 'the strong one.' Cf. Pers. suturg, large. See Stark. Der. stork's-bill, a kind of geranium, from the shape of the bill.

STORM, a violent commotion, tempest. (E.) ME. storm, Chaucer, C. T. 1982 (A 1980). AS. storm, Grein, ii. 485. †Icel. stormr; Du. Swed., Dan., storm; G. sturm. Teut. type stur-maz*, m. Allied to stir, q. v. We also find Gael. and Irish stóirm, Bret. stourm, a storm (borrowed forms). Der. storm, verb, AS. stymian, with vowel-change; storm-y, stormi-ness.

STORY (1), a history, narrative. (F. - L. - Gk.) ME. storie, Chaucer, C. T. 1203, 15503 (A 1201, G 35); Havclok, 1641; Ancrén Riwle, p. 154, l. 24. = AF. storie (Bartsch); OF. estoire, a history, a tale; F. histoire, history. = L. historia. = Gk. ιστορία, history; see History. Der. story-tell, i. e. painted with stories, representing tales, Milton, Il Pens. 159; cf. MF. historié, 'beautified with story-work', Cot. Doublet, history.

STORY (2), the height of one floor in a building, a set of rooms at one level. (F. - L.) Bacon, in his Essay 45 (On Building), speaks of 'the first story,' 'the under story,' 'the second story,' &c. 'A floor [floor] or storie;' R. Eden, First Three Books on America (1536); ed. Arber, p. 257. In Rob. of Gloucester, p. 181, l. 3756 (footnote), the word stories seems to mean 'buildings'; but other MSS. have a verb here. Orig. 'a thing built'; it represents OF. estorie, a thing built. Estorie*, built, made, erected, edified; also furnished, stored; β. Cot. This is the pp. of estorer, to build, to store; see Store. ¶ Wedgwood adds: 'I cannot find that estorie was ever used in the sense of E. story.' This is prob. right; the sense in E. seems to have been at first simply a thing built, a building; the restriction of the word to one floor only is peculiar to English. Just in the same way, a floor is properly only a boarded (or other) covering of the ground, but was used, by an easy extension of meaning, as synonymous with story. Cf. Picard chambre storée, a furnished room (Corbillet). There can be little doubt as to the derivation. Der. clear-story or clere-story, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 479, a story lighted with windows, as distinct from the blind-story, as the triforium was sometimes called (Lee, Gloss. of Liturgical Terms (Oxford), Glossary, p. 57).

STOT, (1) a stallion; (2) a bullock. (E.) See Stoat.

STOUP, STOOP, a vessel or flagon. (Scand.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 68. ME. stope. 'Hee cupa, a stope'; Voc. 728. 28. Lowl. Sc. stoup, Dunbar, ed. Small, p. 161. = Icel. stoup, a knobby lump, also a stoup, beaker, cup. †Du. stoup; Low G. stoup; AS. stēap, a beaker, cup; MHG. stouf, G. stouf, a cup. [Or else, from the MDu. stoup.] The Teut. base is stēap*; cf. Icel. stēypa, to cast metals, pour out, &c. See Steep (1) and Stoop. ¶ The Latinised form stupa occurs in 1390, in the Earl of Derby's Accounts (Camden Soc.), p. 9, l. 23. This looks more like the Du. form. For the form stoup, cf. E. loose < Icel. laus.

STOUT, bold, strong, robust. (F. - O) Low G. (E.) ME. stout, Chaucer, C. T. 547 (A 545). = OF. estout, stout, furious, also rash, stupid (Burguy). = MDu. stolt, stout, 'stout, bolde, rash'; Hexham. Low G. stolt, the same; cognate with G. stolz, proud. β. Perhaps a Teut. word; or else early borrowed from L. stultus, foolish. It answers better, in sense, to L. stolidus, firm. Der. stout, sb., a strong kind of beer; stout-ly, -ness.

STOVE, a hot-house, an apparatus for warming a room. (E.) 'This word has much narrowed its meaning; [a] bath, hot-house . . . was a stove once'; Trench, Select Glossary. 'A stove, or hot-house'; Minshew, ed. 1627. AS. stufa; β. Balneum, stufa, Voc. 8. 33. †MDu. stove, 'a stewe, a hot-house, or a baines'; Hexham; Low G. stove, stave, the same; Icel. stufa, stufa, a bathing-room with a stove, a room; G. stube, a room; OIIG. stupa, a heated room. β. Root unknown; supposed to be a Teut. word, but even this is doubtful. Cf. Ital. stufa, Span. estufa, F. étuve. See Stew. ¶ Perhaps lost in ME. and re-introduced from Dutch.

STOVER, fodder for cattle. (F. - I. ?) In Shak. Temp. iv. 63. ME. stouer (with v = n), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2606. = OF. estover, estovoir, necessities, provisions; orig. the infin. mood of a verb which was used impersonally with the sense 'it is necessary'; Burguy, Diez. On the difficult etymology see Diez, who refers it to L. studere, to study, endeavour, desire; see Student. Or perhaps from L. est opus, there is need (Tobler).

STOW, to arrange, pack away. (E.) ME. stowen, Allit. Poems, B 113. Lit. 'to put in a place'; cf. ME. stowe, a place, Layamon, 1174. AS. stōwgan, Voc. 43. 12. From AS. stōw, a place, Mark, i. 45; OFries. stō, a place. We also find Icel. stō, in the comp. eldstō, a fire-place, hearth. Cognate with Lithuan. stowa, the place in which one stands; from stōlt, to stand. β. All from the √STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. stow-age, with F. suffix, 'ymb. i. 6. 192; whence Low L. stowagium, Earl of Derby's Accounts (1394); Camden Soc. p. 155, l. 32. Also be-stow, q. v.

STRADDLE, to stand or walk with the legs wide apart. (E.) In Baret, ed. 1580. Spelt striddil and striddle in Levins, ed. 1570. The frequentative of stride, used in place of striddle. See Stride. Cf. prov. E. striddle, to straddle; Halliwell.

STRAGGLE, to stray, ramble away. (Scand.) Formerly stragle, with one G, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. x. l. 158; and in Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Baret (1580). Palgrave has stragler, sb. Cf. Norw. stragla, to walk unsteadily and with difficulty; frequent. of MDan. strage, to rove, wander. Allied to strackle; cf. prov. E. strackling, a loose wild fellow (North); strackle-brained, dissolute, thoughtless; Halliwell. Apparently the frequentative of ME. straken, to go, proceed, roam; 'Pey ouer lond strakeþ' = they roam over the land; P. Plowman's Creed, l. 82; and cf. Cursor Mundi, l. 1845, Trin. MS. 'To strake about, circumire'; MS. Devonsh. Gloss., cited in Halliwell. Cf. also prov. E. strag, a vagabond; Icel. strákr, a vagabond. ¶ Not allied to stray. Der. straggle, verb.

STRAIGHT, direct, upright. (E.) Spelt straght in Palgrave. It is identical with ME. streit, the pp. of stræchen, to stretch. 'Sithe thi flesche, lord, was first percyoned And, for our sake, laide streit in stalle.' Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 252, l. 46. AS. streht, pp. of streccan, to stretch; see Stretch. 2. The adverbial use is early; 'William streit went hem to'; Will. of Palerne, l. 3328; spelt straght, Gower, C. A. iii. 36; bk. vi. 1030. Der. straight-ly, straight-ness; straight-forward, -ly; straight-way = in a straight way, directly, spelt straghtway, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 63; straight-en, verb, a late coinage. ¶ Distinct from strait.

STRAIN (1), to stretch tight, draw with force, overtask, constrain, filter. (F.—L.) ME. streinen, Chaucer, C. T. 9627 (E 1753). —OF. estrain, estrain, a stem of estraindre, estraindre, MF. estraindre, 'to strain, wring hard'; Cot.—L. stringere, to draw tight; pt. t. strinxit, pp. strictus. See Stringent. Der. strain, sb., strain-er; con-strain, dis-strain, re-strain; and see strait, stringent, strict.

STRAIN (2), a race, stock, breed. (L.) 'The nobility of thy strain'; Shak. J. Caesar, v. 1. 59. ME. streene; Chaucer, C. T. E 157. AS. strion, gain, produce, whence, in ME, lineage, progeny, as in Layamon, 2737; whence strisan, strisan, to beget. Cf. OHG. strinan, to acquire.

STRAIT, strict, narrow, rigid. (F.—L.) ME. streit, Chaucer, C. T. 174; Layamon, 22270.—AF. estrait, Bozon, p. 124; OF. estroit, 'strait, narrow, close, strict'; Cot. Mod. F. étroit.—L. strictum, acc. of strictus, strict, strait. See Strict. Der. strait, sb., used to translate MF. estroit, sb., in Cotgrave; strait-ly, -ness; strait-laced; strait-en, a coined word, Luke, xii. 50. Doublet, strict.

STRAND (1), the beach of the sea or of a lake. (E.) ME. strand, often stound, Chaucer, C. T. 5245 (B 825). AS. strand, Matt. xiii. 48. +Du. strand; Icel. strand (gen. strandar), margin, edge; Dan., Swed., and G. strand. Root unknown. Der. strand, verb; cf. Du. stranden, 'to arrive on the sea-shore', Hexham.

STRAND (2), one of the smaller strings that compose a rope. (F.—OHG.) Strand, in sea-language, the twist of a rope; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. The L is excrement, as commonly in E. after a final. Spelt strain, Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 108.—ONorman F. estran, a strand; Wace, Rom. de Brut, 11486; see Moisy.—OHG. streno (G. strähne), a cord. Cf. MDu. strene, a string (Kilian); Du. stren, 'a skain', Sewel. Parallel to Du. striem, OIlg. strimo, a stripe.

STRANGE, foreign, odd. (F.—L.) ME. strange, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 379; Chaucer, C. T. i. 13.—OF. estrangere, 'strange'; Cot. Mod. F. étranger; Span. estrño, Ital. estrano, estraneo.—L. extraneum, acc. of extraneus, foreign; lit. 'that which is without'.—L. extri, without, outside; see Extra. Der. strange-ly, -ness; strange-er, from OF. estrangier, 'a stranger', Cot. Also estrangere, q.v. Doublet, extraneus.

STRANGLE, to choke. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. stranglen, Havelok, 640.—OF. estrangler, 'to strangle, choke'; Cot.—L. strangulare, to throttle, choke.—Gk. σπαργαλίζω, to strangle; also σπαργαλίζω,—Gk. σπαργαλίζω, a halter.—Gk. σπαργαλίζω, twisted. Allied to Striot; and see below. Der. strangle-er; strangulation, from F. strangulation, 'a strangling', Cot. from L. acc. strangulatio.

STRANGURY, extreme difficulty in discharging urine. (L.—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, The Fox, A. ii. sc. 1.—L. stranguria.—Gk. σπαργαλίζω, retention of the urine, when it falls by drops.—Gk. σπαργαλίζω, base of σπαργαλίζω, that which oozes out, a drop; and σπαργαλίζω, urine. The Gk. σπαργαλίζω is allied to σπαργαλίζω, twisted, compressed. See Strangle and Urine.

STRAP, a narrow strip of leather. (L.) Frequently called a strop in prov. E., and this is the better form. ME. strobe, a noose, loop; 'a rydyng-knotte or a strope', Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 33. 'A thounge, . . a strope, or a loupe', Elyot, 1559; cited in Halliwell. AS. stropp. 'Struppus, strop, vel irlwibbe'; Voc. 181. 42.—L. struppus, a strap, thong, fillet. From the same L. word are borrowed Du. strop, a halter, F. strobe, &c. Doublet, strop.

STRAPPADO, a species of torture. (Ital.—Teut.) In 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 262. The word has been turned into a Spanish-looking form, but it is rather Italian. In exactly the same way, the Ital. stoccata also appears as stoccado; see Stocco.—Ital. strappata, a pulling, wringing; the strappado.—Ital. strappare, to pull, wring.—High-German (Swiss) straffen, to pull tight, allied to G. straff, tight (Dief.). From Low G. or Du.; cf. Du. straffen, to punish, from straf, severe. Cf. EFrics. straben, to be stiff; strabbig, strappig, severe.

STRATAGEM, an artifice, esp. in war. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt stratageme, Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 37.—MF. stratageme, 'a stratagem'; Cot.—I. stratēgēma.—Gk. στρατήγιον, the device or act of a general.—Gk. στρατήγιος, a general, leader of an army.—Gk. στρατός, an army; and ἀγός, to lead. β. The Gk. στρατός means properly an encamped army, from its being spread out over ground, and is allied to Gk. στρώω, I spread out, and I. sternere. See Stratum. The Gk. ἀγός is cognate with L. agere; see Agent. Der. stratēg-ia, from Gk. στρατήγιος, generalship, from στρατός, a general; stratēg-ia, Gk. στρατήγιος; stratēg-ia, -ly; stratēg-ist.

STRATH, a flat valley. (C.) In Leslie, Hist. Scotland (1595); p. 12. Common in Scot. place-names, as Strath-spy, valley of the Spey.—Gael. srath, a flat valley, low-lying country beside a river; Irish srath, sratha, fields beside a river, bottom of a valley; W. ysrad. Allied to Stratum.

STRATUM, a layer, esp. of earth or rock. (L.) In Thomson, Autumn, 745.—L. strātum, that which is laid flat or spread out, neut. of stratus, pp. of sternere. Allied to Gk. στέγνυμι, I spread out; Skt. stṛ, to spread.—✓STER, to scatter, spread out. Der. strati-fication, strati-fy, coined words. And see street, con-strat-ion, pro-strate, strat-eg-ia, also strew, straw.

STRAW, a stalk of corn when thrashed. (E.) ME. straw, Chaucer, C. T. 11007 (F 695); also stre, stres, id. 2920 (A 2918). AS. strew, strow; see Toller; it also occurs in strewberige, a strawberry, Voc. 298. 11, and in the derivative strew-ian, strew-ian, to strew, as below. +Du. strow; Icel. strá; Dan. straa; Swed. strå; G. stroh, OHG. strow, straw. Allied to Goth. straujan, to strew. From Teut. base strāw* (cf. Lat. pt. t. strāui), extended from ✓STER, to spread out, scatter. Der. straw-y; strew, verb, q.v.; straw-berry, AS. strewberige, as above, from its propagation (or strewing) by runners. See Stratum.

STRAY, to wander, rove, err. (F.—L.) ME. straim; the derivative a-strayed, pp., is in Gower, C. A. ii. 132; bk. v. 145; and see the Prompt. Parv.—OF. estrai, to stray. See Dief., who compares Prov. estradi, one who roves about the streets or ways, one who strays, from Prov. estrada, a street; also OF. estree, a street. This is confirmed by MItal. stradiotto, 'a wanderer, gadder, traweller, earth-planer, a highwaie-keeper, Florio; from Ital. strada, a street. β. Thus the lit. sense is 'to rove the streets.' All from L. strāta, a street; see Street. Cf. mod. F. batteur d'estrade, a loiterer (Hamilton). Der. stray, sb., oddly spelt streyus, strayne, in P. Plowm. B. prol. 94. C. i. 92, old form also estray (Blount, Nomolexicon), AF. estray (Britton), from OF. estrai, to stray, as above.

STREAK, a line or long mark on a differently coloured ground. (Scand.) ME. streak, Prompt. Parv.; prob. of Scand. or Low G. origin.—Swed. streak, MSwed. strek, a stroke, streak, line; Norw. strek, streek (cf. EFrics. strek, Du. streek); Dan. strek. From Teut. stri*, weak grade of strikan*, to strike; see Strike. β. We also find the (native) ME. strike, a stroke, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 7; AS. strien (cognate with G. streich, Goth. striks, a stroke with the pen); from stri*, weak grade of Teut. strikan*; see Strike. Further allied to L. striga, a line, furrow, and to L. stringere; see Stringent. ¶ It may be noted that ME. striken sometimes means to go or come forward, to proceed, advance; see Gloss. to Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, and P. Plowman, B. prol. 183. A streak is properly a stroke made by sweeping anything along. Der. streak, verb, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 257; streak-y.

STREAM, a current or flow. (E.) ME. stream, Chaucer, C. T. 466, 3893 (A 464, 3895). AS. strēm, Grein, ii. 488.—Du. stroom; Icel. straumr; Swed. and Dan. ström; G. strom; OHG. struom, struom. β. All from the Teut. type strau-moz*, m. The word means 'that which flows', from the Teut. base STREU, to flow. The Idg. root is ✓SREU, to flow; cf. Skt. srū, to flow, Gk. ῥέω (for ῥέω), to flow, Irish srúin, a stream. The t seems to have been inserted, for greater ease of pronunciation, not only in Teutonic, but in Slavonic; cf. Russ. strúia, a stream. See Rheum. Brugmann, i. §§ 462, 816. From the same root we have rheum, rhythm, ruminate, catarrh. Der. stream, verb, ME. streamen, streamen, Ancrén Riwle, p. 188, note c; stream-er, Hen. V, iii. chor. 6; stream-l-et, a double diminutive; stream-y.

STREET, a paved way, a road in a town. (L.) ME. strete, Wyclif, Matt. xii. 19. AS. strēt, Grein, ii. 487.—L. strāta, for strāta uia, a paved way; strāta is fem. of strātus, pp. of sternere, to strew, scatter, pave.—✓STER, to spread out; see Stratum. ¶ The G. strass is likewise borrowed from Latin; so also Ital. strada, &c. Der. stray, q.v.

STRENGTH, might. (E.) ME. strengthe, Chaucer, C. T. 84. AS. strengþu, Grein, ii. 487; for strang-i-ðu*.—AS. strang, strong; see Strong. Der. strengþ-en.

STRENUOUS, vigorous, active, zealous. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from L. strenuus, vigorous, active. Allied to Gk. σπρής, strong, σπρής, to make firm, σπρής, firm; see Stereoskope. Der. strenuous-ly, -ness.

STRESS, strain, force, pressure. (F.—L.) 1. Used in the sense of distress, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 321, last line. 'Stresse, or wed take [pledge taken] by strengthe and vyolence, Vadimonium'; Prompt. Parv. Here stresse is obviously short for ME. destresse, in the sense 'distress for rent'; and stresse may sometimes be taken as a short form of distress; see Distress. 2. 'Stresse, or streytinge, Constrictio'; Prompt. Parv. 'I stresse, I straight one of his liberty or thrust his body to gyther, I estroyse'; Palsgrave. This is from OF. estrecier (later estrecier, estraisier), 'to straiten, pinch, contract, bring into a narrow compass'; Cot. This answers to a Folk-L. type strictiure*, not found, a derivative of strictus, drawn together; see Striot. We may regard stress as due, in general, to this verb, or else to *di-strictiure: it comes to much the same thing. ¶ The loss of the initial d- occurs also in sport, splay, spend, &c.; and is therefore merely what we should expect.

STRETCH, to draw out, extend. (E.) ME. stretchen, Chaucer, C. T. 15937 (F 469); pt. t. straichte, id. 2918 (A 2916); pp. straught or straigh, whence mod. E. straight. AS. strecan, John, xxi. 18; pt. t. strehte, Matt. xxi. 8; pp. streht. Formed as a causal verb from AS. strec, strec, strong, violent, of which the pl. streches occurs in Matt. xi. 12, and the form strec, severe, in Gregory's Past. Care, c. xvii (heading), ed. Sweet, p. 107. The sense of stretch is, accordingly, to make stiff or hard, as in tightening a cord. +Du. strekken; Dan. strække, to stretch; stræk, a stretch; Swed. sträcka; G. strecken, from streck, adj., tight, straight; cf. stracks, straightway, immediately. Cf. also L. stringere, to draw tight, which is related; Gk. σπάρυος, twisted tight. Other nearly related words are string and strain; also strain, strail, stringer, strangle, strict. Der. stretch, stretched, stretching.

STREW, STRAW, to spread, scatter loosely. (E.) Spelt straw, Matt. xxi. 8. ME. strawen, strewen, Chaucer, C. T. 10927 (F 613). AS. strewian, strewian, Matt. xxi. 8; Mark, xi. 8; strewu, straw; see Straw. +Du. strooien, to scatter; allied to stroot, strooten. Cf. Icel. strá, Swed. strå, Dan. strø, (i. strewen, to strew; also Goth. straujan, to strew (pt. t. struudiu). The last of these is from a Teut. base strāu*, extended from STER*, to strew, spread; as in L. ster-nere (pt. t. strūni); Gk. στέρε-v-vu, I spread; Skt. str, to spread. See Stratum. Brugmann, i. § 70. Der. bestrew.

STRIATED, streaked, marked with streaks. (L.) Scientific and modern. — L. striatus, pp. of striare, to furrow or channel. — L. stria, a furrow, channel, groove. +G. strieme, a stripe.

STRICKEN, advanced (in years); see Strike.

STRICT, strict, exact, severe, accurate. (L.) In Meas. for Mens. i. 3. 19. — L. strictus, pp. of stringere, to tighten, draw together; see Stringent. Der. strictly, -ness; strict-ure, from L. strictūra, verbal sb. allied to strict-us, pp. of stringere. Der. stress. Doublet, strait, adj.

STRIDE, to walk with long steps. (E.) ME. striden, Cursor Mundi, 10235; Layamon, 17982; pt. t. strade, Wvaine and Gawin, 3193, in Ritson's Met. Rom. vol. i.; cf. bestrode, bestrode, in Chaucer, C. T. 12831 (B 2093). AS. stridan, to stride; rare, but in Epinal Glos. 1086; the pt. t. be-strid is in Ælfric's Hom. ii. 136. Pt. t. strid, pp. striden, as shown by mod. E. strade, and the derivative striddle, cited under Straddle. β. That the word should have meant both to strive and to stride is curious; but is certified by the cognate Low G. striden (pt. t. streden, pp. streden), meaning (1) to strive, (2) to stride; with the still more remarkable derivative be-striden, also meaning (1) to combat, (2) to bestride, as in da Peerd bestriden, to bestride the horse; Bremen Wörterbuch, pp. 1063, 1064. [Precisely the same double meaning reappears in Low G. streuen, (1) to strive, (2) to stride, and the sb. streue, (1) a striving, (2) a stride. Hexham notes MDu. streuen, 'to force or to strive, to walk together'; which points to the meaning of stride as originating from the contention of two men who, in walking side by side, strive to outpace one another, and so take long steps.] γ. Other cognate words are Du. striden (pt. t. stred, pp. gestreden), G. streiten (pt. t. stritt, pp. gestritten), Dan. stride (pt. t. stred), only in the sense to strive, to combat; cf. also the weak verbs, Icel. stríða, Swed. strida, to strive. Teut. type stredan-, pt. t. stred, pp. stridanaz*. Cf. Skt. stridh, to assail. Der. straddle, q. v.; stride, sb.; a-stride, adv., King Alisannder, 4445; be-stride.

STRIDENT, grating, harsh. (L.) Dryden has: 'And stridor of her wings.' tr. of Virgil, iii. 1258. Chapman has: 'grasshoppers are stridentious;' tr. of Homer's Iliad, iii. commentary, note 2. Strident seems to be modern. — L. strident-, stem of pres. pt. of stridere, also stridere, to creak, rattle, grate; of imitative origin. Cf. Gk. στρίγειν, to creak. Der. stridor, sb., from L. stridor, a creaking; strid-ulous, adj., from L. strid-ulus, creaking, harsh.

STRIFE, contention, dispute, contest. (F.—Scand.) In early use; Layamon, 24066, later text; Ancien Riwle, p. 200, last line but one. — OF. estrief, 'strife, debate.' Cot.—Icel. stríð, strife, contention; by the change of th to f, as in Shakespeare's fill-horse for thill-horse; stríð, to strive; weak verb allied to Du. stryden, to strive, AS. stridan, to stride; see Stride (above). — OSax. and OFries. strid, strife; Du. stríð; Dan. and Swed. strid; G. streit; OHG. strit. Der. strive, q. v.

STRIGIL, a flesh-scrapers. (L.) L. strigilis; allied to stringere, to graze; see Strike.

STRIKE, to hit, dash, stamp, coin, give a blow to. (E.) ME. striken, orig. to proceed, advance, esp. with a smooth motion, to flow; hence used of smooth swift motion, to strike with a rod or sword. 'Ase strem þat striketh stille' = like a stream that flows gently; Spec. of Epp., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 48, l. 21. 'Strek into a studie' = fell into a study; Will. of Palermo, 4038. 'A mous . . . Stroke forth sternly' = a mouse advanced boldly; P. Plowman, prol. 183. Strong verb, pt. t. struck, strok, strook, mod. E. struck; pp. striken, later stricken, mod. E. struck. The phr. 'stricken in years' = advanced in years; Luke, i. 7. AS. strician, to go, proceed, advance, pt. t. stríc, pp. strícen. 'Rodor stríck ymbtán' = the firmament goes round, i. e. revolves; Grein, ii. 489. +Du. strijken, to smooth, rub, stroke, spread, strike; G. streichen, pt. t. stríck, pp. gestrichen, to stroke, rub, smooth, spread, strike. β. Teut. type strikan-, pt. t. striak, pp. strikanaz*. Cf. Goth. striks, a stroke, dash with a pen, cognate with L. striga, a row, a furrow. [We also find Icel. stríka, pt. t. strauk, pp. strokina, to stroke, rub, wipe, to strike, flog; Swed. stryka, to stroke, wipe, strike, rove; Dan. strøge, the same; from a related type strekun-* (with a different gradation).] γ. The Idg. root is STREIG, related to L. stringere, which is equivalent to AS. strican, when used in the sense to graze, or touch slightly with a swift motion. But L. stringere, to draw tight, seems to be a different word; see Stringent. Der. striker, striking; also stroke, q. v.; streak, q. v. Also strike, sb., the name of a measure, orig. an instrument with a straight edge for levelling (striking off) a measure of grain; ME. stri, Liber Albus, p. 243.

STRING, thin cord. (E.) ME. string, streng, Chaucer, C. T. 7649 (B 2067). AS. streng, John, ii. 15. From its being strongly or tightly twisted; allied to AS. strang, strong, violent. +Du. streng; cf. streng, adj., severe, rigid; Icel. strenger, string; strangr, strong; Dan. strang, Swed. strång, G. strang, string. († Gk. σπάρυδα), a halter; from σπάρυος, hard twisted. See Strong. Der. string, verb, properly a weak verb, being formed from the sb., but the pp. strung also occurs. L. L. L. iv. 3. 343. formed by analogy with flung from fling, and sung from sing. And Dryden has the pt. t. strung, Epist. to J. Dryden, l. 89. Also string-ed; string-y; bow-string; heart-string.

STRINGENT, urgent, strict. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — L. stringent-, stem of pres. part. of stringere, to draw tight, compress, urge, &c.; pp. strictus. From the Idg. root STREIG, to draw or twist tight. See Strong. Der. stringent-y, stringency; and see strict, strait, a-stringing, a-stringion, strain, con-strain, dis-strain, re-strain, stress, dis-stress.

STRIP, to tear off, skin, render bare, deprive, plunder. (E.) ME. stripen, strepen, Chaucer, C. T. 1008, 8739 (A 1006, E 863); pt. t. strepte, spelt struple, Juliana, p. 63, l. 16; pp. strept, spelt stripped, Ancien Riwle, p. 148, note g. AS. striepan, striþpan, in comp. bestriþpan, to plunder, A. S. Chron. an. 1065. +Du. stroopen, to plunder, strip; EFries. stroopen; MDu. stroopen, 'to flea [flay] t. skin, or to pill.' Hexham; OIIG. strongen. Teut. type straupjan-; from strauþ, and grade of the strong verb straupjan-*; for which cf. Norw. strápa, to grip, to throttle (pt. t. strauþ). Der. The sb. strip, a piece, is often understood as being 'a piece stripped off'; but it seems to belong rather to stripe (below).

STRIPE, a streak, a blow with a whip. (Du.) Not a very old word, and apparently borrowed from Dutch; prob. because connected with the trade of weaving. ME. stripe, l'rompt. Parv.—MDu. stripe, as in strijp-keeld, 'a parti-coloured sute,' Hexham; cf. Du. streef, a stripe, streak. +Norw. strija, Dan. stribe, a stripe, streak; Low G. stripe, a stripe, strip; stripen, to stripe; stripped Tug, striped cloth; G. streifen, MHG. streif, a stripe, streak, strip. Cf. also OIrish striab, a stripe. ¶ Similarly E. streak is connected with E. strike; from the mark of a blow. Der. stripe, verb. Also strip, which is rather a variant of stripe than allied to strip, vb. Cf. Low G. stripe, (1) a stripe, (2) a strip of cloth; Prov. E. stripe, a strip; stripe, a stream, of which stripped (noted under Stripling) is a diminutive.

STRIPLING, a youth, lad. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 144. 'He is but an youngling, A stalworthy stripling.' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courie, 345. Also ME. striplinge, Mandeville, Trav. ch. 27, p. 278. A double dimin. from stripe; the sense is 'one as thin as a stripe,' a growing lad not yet filled out. Cf. 'you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case;' i Hen. IV, ii. 4. 273. Similarly a stripper is a very narrow stream; 'a little brooke or stripper.' Holinshed's Descr. of Scotland, c. 10. § 2. See Stripe. STRIVE, to struggle, contend. (F.—Scand.) ME. striven, a weak verb, pt. t. stríued, Will. of Palermo, 4099. Made into a strong verb, with pt. t. strof, Chaucer, C. T. 1040 (A 1038)—mod. E. strove, pp. striven; by analogy with drive (drive, driven). — OF. estriver, 'to strive,' Cot.—OF. estrief, strife. See Strife.

STROKE (1), a blow. (E.) ME. strok, strook, Chaucer, C. T. 1709. From AS. stríc, and grade of strican, to strike; with the usual change of a to long o. See Strike. So also G. streich, a stroke, from G. strecken, to stroke, to whip.

STROKE (2), to rub gently. (E.) ME. stroken, Chaucer, C. T. 10479 (F 165). AS. strician, to stroke; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10. A causal verb; from strāc, 2nd grade of AS. strāc to go, pass swiftly over, mod. E. strike. See Strike. So also G. strācheln, to stroke, from strāchen, to rub, strike.

STROLL, to rove, wander. (F.—Teut.) A late word. 'When strollers durst presume to pick your purse'; Dryden, 5th prol. to Univ. of Oxford, l. 33. 'Knowing that rest, quiet, and sleep, with lesser meat, will sooner feed any creature than your meat with liberty to run and strolle about'; Blith's Husbandry, 1652; cited by Wedgwood. Formed by prefixing s- (for OF. es-, L. ex) to troll, in the sense to range, rove. Colgrave has MF. troller (F. trôler), 'to trowle, range, or hunt out of order, of hounds; cf. Norm. dial. troller, to wander; dial. of Verdun troller, trailer, to rove; Guernsey tireulais (= estireulais), adj., idle, vagabond (Métivier); Picard troleuse, a wandering woman (Corbier); see Troll. Schmeller gives the forms strālen, stroten, to stroll, as Bavarian; and Wedgwood quotes Swiss strālen, strolchen, to rove about. Ross has Norw. strolle, to go about wilfully and idly. Der. stroll, sb.; stroll-er.

STRONG, forcible, vigorous, energetic. (E.) ME. strong, Chaucer, C. T. 2137 (A 2135), &c. 'Strong and stark'; Havelok, 608. AS. strang, strong; Grein, ii. 485; +Du. streng; Icel. strangr; Dan. streg; Swed. sträng; OIHG. strang, strangi, G. streg, strict. β. All from Teut. types strangaz*, strangioz*, adj., strong. Cf. Gk. σπάργος, tightly twisted, whence σπάργαν, a halter (E. string), and L. stringere, in the sense 'to draw tight'; hence the identity in meaning between L. strictus and G. streg. Der. strong-ly, strong-hold; string, q.v.; strong-th, q.v.; strength-en. Related words are stringen, strain, strict, strait, stretch, straight, stringle, &c.

STROP, a piece of leather, &c. for sharpening razors. (L.) Merely the old form of strap; from L. strappus; see Strap.

STROPHE, part of a song, poem, or dance. (Gk.) Formerly used also as a rhetorical term; 'Strophes, wilyly deceits, subtilties in arguing, conversions, or turnings'; Houlst's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Gk. στροφή, a turning, twist, tick; esp. the turning of the chorus, dancing to one side of the orchestra; hence, the strain sung during this evolution; the strophē, to which the antistrophe answers.—Gk. στροφή, 2nd grade of στροφή, to turn. Der. anti-strophe, apo-strophe, cata-strophe, epi-strophe.

STROW, the same as Strew, vb., q.v.

STRUCTURE, a building, construction, arrangement. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. structure, 'a structure'; Cot.—L. structūra, a building; allied to structus, pp. of struere, to build, orig. to heap together, arrange. From the base STREU, allied to Goth. straujan, G. streuen, to strew, lay; allied to STER, to spread out. Der. (from struere) con-strue, con-struct, de-strue, de-struction, in-struct, in-stru-ment, mis-con-strue, ob-strue, super-structure.

STRUGGLE, to make great bodily efforts. (Scand.) MF. stroglēn, Chaucer, C. T. 10248 (E 2374). Palsgrave not only gives: 'I stroglēn with my bodye'; but also: 'I stroglēn, I murmur with wordes secretly, je grommelle.' The latter, however, is merely a metaphorical sense, i.e. to oppose with words instead of deeds. ME. stroglēn is a frequentative verb formed from the Scand. base strug-, appearing in Swed. dial. strug, contention, strife, dispute; Kletz notes that druga i strug, to draw with difficulty, is used of horses. Related words are Swed. dial. strug, revengeful, Norw. stru, refractory, Dan. dial. struende, reluctantly. β. The Idg. form of the root is STREUGH; or with loss of s, TREUGH; the latter appears in Icel. þruga, Swed. truga, to force, compel, AS. þrycean, to force, G. drucken, to print; and in Efric. triggeleu, to struggle against, as a restive horse; cf. MDa. truggelen, Du. trogelen, to beg persistently. Der. struggle, sb.

STRUM, to thrum on a piano. (Scand.) 'The strum-strum [a musical instrument] is made like a cittern'; Dampier's Voyages, an. 1684; see A New Voyage (1699), l. 17. The word is imitative, and made by prefixing s- (F. es-, from L. ex), intensive prefix, to the imitative word trum, variant of thrum, as in Low G. trummen, Du. trommen, to drum. Cf. Norw. strumla, to rumble, rattle. See Thrum and Drum. So also s-plash for plash.

STRUMPET, a prostitute. (F.—L.; or F.—Teut.) ME. strumpet, P. Plowman, C. xv. 42; also spelt strumpet, Polit. Songs, p. 153 (temp. Edw. II). 1. If the m in this word be an E. addition, it is a strengthened form of strup-et*, in which the -et is a F. dimin. suffix; and the derivation is from OF. strupe, noted by Roquefort as a variant of OF. stupre, concubinage.—L. stuprum, dishonour, violation. β. The curious position of the r causes no difficulty, as there must have been a Late L. form stuprāre*, used convertibly with L. stuprāre. This is clear from Ital. stuprare, variant of stuprare, Span. estuprar, variant of estuprar, to ravish, and from the OF. strupe quoted above. Perhaps the E. word was formed directly from an OF. strupāre*, from Late L. stuprāre* = stuprāre, fem. of the pp. of stuprare. The verb stuprare is from the sb. stuprum.

γ. We find also Irish and Gael. striopack, a strumpet; this is to be referred to the same Late L. strupāre*. The history is unknown. 2. The form of the word answers better to MDa. strampe, Low G. strump, a stocking (but there is no connexion); or to Norw. strumpen, adj., stumbling (Ross), Low G. strumpen, strumpeln, to stumble; strumpelig, staggering, tottering in gait; MDa. strampelen, 'to stagger, to trip, or to reel'; Hexham. We might perhaps then explain strumpet as 'one who trips', or makes a false step. The above words are allied to G. strampeln, to kick. It is remarkable that the prov. E. (Hants.) strumpet means a fat, hearty child, esp. a baby; where the sense 'little kicker' is appropriate. A Germanic origin seems probable.

STRUT (1), to walk about pompously. (Scand.) ME. strouten, to spread out, swell out. 'His here [hair] strouted as a faine large and brode'; Chaucer, C. T. 3315. 'Strouten, or bocyn owt [to boss out, swell out]', Turgere. Prompt. Parv. In Havelok, 1779, to stroute is to make a disturbance or to brag.—Dan. strutte, strude, to strut, Swed. dial. strutta, to walk with a jolting step (Rietz). The Norw. strut means a spout that sticks out, a nozzle; the Icel. strútr is a sort of hood sticking out like a horn; the Swed. strut is a cone-shaped piece of paper, such as grocers put sugar in. The orig. notion of strut seems to be 'to stick out stiffly'; cf. prov. E. strut, rigid. Note further Low G. strútr, rigid, stiff, G. straus, a tuft, bunch, strutzen, to be puffed up, to strut. The prov. E. strunt, to strut (Halliwell), is a nasalised form of strut. Der. strut, sb.

STRUT (2), a support for a rafter, &c. (Scand.) 'Strut, with carpenters, the brace which is framed into the ring-piece and principal rafters'; Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. The orig. sense is a stiff piece of wood; cf. Low G. strut, rigid; prov. E. strut, rigid. It is, accordingly, closely allied to Strut (1).

STRECHNINE, a violent poison. (Gk.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ine (F. -ine, L. -inus) from Gk. στέχνην, nightshade, poison.

STUB, the stump of a tree left after it is cut down. (E.) 'Old stocks and stubs of trees'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 34. ME. stubble, Chaucer, C. T. 1980 (A 1978). AS. stýbb, stubb (Toller); spelt stubb in Birch, Cart. Saxon. i. 316, iii. 353; Efric. stubble. From a base stuf*-4 Du. stobbe; Icel. stúbb, stúbbur; Dan. stubb, Swed. stubble. β. Allied to Icel. stúfr, a stump; and Gk. στέρον, a stub, stump; Skt. stupa-s, m., a heap. Allied to Stump. Der. stubb, verb, to root out stubs; stubb-j, stubb-ed, stubb-ed-ness; and see stubb-orn, stump.

STUBBLE, the stalks of cut corn. (F.—L.) ME. stobil, Wyclif, Job, xiii. 25; Chaucer has stubbil-goos, C. T. 4351.—OF. estouble, 'stubble'; Cot.; also estuble (Littré, s. v. stuble).—Late L. stupula, stupa, stubble, a variant of L. stupula, stubble, due to the influence of Low G. stoppel, stubble (Lübben); Du. and Efric. stoppel, cognate with MHG. stufel, OHG. stufila, stubble.

STUBBORN, obstinate, persistent. (E.) ME. stoburn, also stiborn. 'Styburne, or stoburne, Austerus, ferox.' Prompt. Parv.; stiborn, Chaucer, C. T. 6038 (D 456). Cf. styburnesse, sb., Prompt. Parv. As the AS. y is represented in later English both by i and u (as in AS. cýssan = E. kiss, AS. fýra = E. furze) we at once refer stiborn or stoburn to AS. stýbb, a stub, with the sense of stub-like, hence immovable, stiff, steady, &c. β. The suffix -orn is to be regarded as adjectival, and stands for -or, the -n being merely added afterwards, by taking stoborn-ness as stoburn-ness; or being the same adj. suffix as in AS. bil-or, L. bil-er. We should thus have, from AS. stýb, an adj. stýbor* = stub-like, stubborn, and the sb. stýbornes*. γ. This is verified by the forms in Palsgrave; he gives the adj. as stoburne, but the sb. as stubburnesse and stubblesse, the latter of which could have arisen from an AS. form stýbol*, with suffix -ol as in was-ol, vigilant. ¶ The suffix -ern in north-ern admits of a different explanation. Der. stubburn-ly, -ness.

STUCCO, a kind of plaster. (Ital.—OHG.) In Pope, Imit. of Horace, ii. 192.—Ital. stucco, 'glutted, gorged... dried, stiffe, or hardened; also, a kind of stuffe or matter to build statue or image-work with, made of paper, sand, and lyme, with other mixtures; the imagerie-work at Nonesuch in England in the inner court is built of such'; Florio.—OHG. stuccchi, a crust; Graff, vi. 631 (Dlex), the same as G. stuck, AS. stýcce, a piece (hence, a patch). Allied to Stook.

STUD (1), a collection of breeding-horses and mares. (E.) ME. stod, Gower, C. A. iii. 204; bk. vii. 3345; cf. stud-mare, a stud-mare, Ancien Riwele, p. 316, l. 15. AS. stōd, a stud; spelt stod, Voc. 119. 39; stōd, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 574, l. 20. 4-Icel. stōð; Dan. stod; G. gestüt; MHG. stuw. Cf. Russ. stado, a herd or drove; Lith. stodas, a drove of horses. β. All from Teut. base stō-d-*; the orig. sense is 'an establishment,' as we should call it; derived from STAN. Der. stud-horse; also steed, q.v.

STUD (s), a nail with a large head, large rivet, double-headed button. (E.) A stud is also a stout post; 'the upright in a lath and plaster wall,' Halliwell. Also, a stiff projection, a boss, &c. ME. stode; L. bulia is glossed 'a stode'; also 'nodus in cingulo,' Voc. 623. 3; 'stode, or stake,' Palus; Voc. 600. 4. AS. studu, a post, Alfred, tr. of Bede, l. iii. c. 10; written stūm in one MS. Dan. stod, in the sense of stub, stump; Swed. stod, a prop, post; Icel. stod, a post; whence stōdja, to prop; G. stütze, a prop. β. The Teut. base is stui-, weak grade of stew-, Idg. STEU; cf. Gk. στῦλος, a pillar, στῦλος, a stake, Skt. stūhi, a post; Gk. στῦν-ειν, to erect. Der. stud, verb; studd-ed, Shak. Venus, 37.

STUDENT, a scholar, learner. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 38. = L. student-, stem of pres. part. of studere, to be eager about, to study. β. Some have thought that studere is allied to Gk. σπουδεν, to hasten, to be eager about; but this is very doubtful, though the senses of L. studium and Gk. σπουδή are curiously similar; see Curtius, ii. 360. See Study.

STUDY, application to a subject, careful attention, with the wish to learn. (F.—L.) ME. studie, Will. of Palerne, 2981, 4038, 4056. = AF. estudie; OF. estudie, later estude, mod. F. étude, study (Littre). = L. studium, eagerness, zeal, application, study. Der. study, verb, ME. studien, Chaucer, C. T. 184; studi-ed; studi-ous, from F. studieux, 'studious,' from L. studiosus; studi-ous-ly, -ness. Also studio, Ital. studio, study, also a school, from L. studium.

STUFF, materials, household furniture. (F.—L.) 1. See Luke, xvii. 31 (A.V.). 'The said treasure and stuffe'; Fabian's Chron. c. 123, § 2. ME. stuf; 'Stuff, for a chapman'; Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 166. = OF. estoffe; 'stuffe, matter'; Cot. [Mod. F. stoffe; Ital. stoffa; Span. estofa, quilted stuff; Walloon stoff (Rémacle)]. Derived from L. stūpa, stūppa, the coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow (used as material for stuffing things or for stopping them up); but, instead of being derived directly, the pronunciation of the L. word was Germanised before it passed into French. See Diez. Hence also G. stoff, stuff; but English retains the L. p in the verb to stop; see Stop. 2. The sense of the L. word is better shown by the verb to stuff, i.e. to cram. Skelton has the pp. stuffed, Bowge of Court, 180; pres. t. stuffeth, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vii. 401. = OF. estoffer, 'to stuffe, to inake with stuffe, to furnish or store with all necessities'; Cot. This answers to G. stopfen, to fill, to stuff, to quilt (note the Span. estofa, quilted stuff, above), which is a Germanised pronunciation of Late L. stūpāre, stūppāre, to stop up with tow, to cram, to stop; see Stop. 3. We also use E. stuffy in the sense of 'close, stifling'; this sense is due to OF. estoffer, 'to stifle, smother, choke, stop the breath', Cot. Mod. F. estoffer. The etymology of this last word is disputed; Diez derives it from OF. es- (<L. ex-) prefix, and Gk. νῆσος, smoke, mist, cloud, which certainly appears in Span. tsfo, warm vapour from the earth. Scheler disputes this view, and supposes OF. estoffer to be all one with OF. estoffer; which seems reasonable. In E., we talk of 'stopping the breath' with the notion of suffocating. Littre says that the spelling estoffer is in Diez's favour, because the F. word for stop is étouper, with p, not f; but this is invalidated by his own derivation of F. stoffe from L. stūpa. In E., we seem to regard all the senses of stuff as belonging to but one word; 'I stuffe one up, I stoppe his breathe'; Palsgrave. See Körting, §§ 3538, 9136.

STULTIFY, to cause to seem foolish. (L.) A mod. word; coined (as if with F. suffix -fy, F. -fier) from a L. form stultificare*, to make foolish, = L. stultus, for stultus, foolish; and -ficare, for facere, to make. β. The L. stultus is closely allied to stolidus, with the like sense of fixed, immovable; hence, stupid, dull, foolish. See Stolid. Der. stultific-at-ion, also a coined word.

STUMBLE, to strike the feet against obstacles, to trip in walking. (Scand.) ME. stumblen, Wright's Voc. l. 143, l. 20; stamblica, Chaucer, C. T. 2615 (A 2613). The b is excrement, as usual after m, and the better form is stomelen, or stumlen. In the Prompt. Parv. pp. 476, 481, we have stomelyn, stumelmy, with the sbs. stomelare or stomelare, and stomelunge or stumlungy. The form stomeren also occurs, in the same sense, in Reliquie Antiquæ, ii. 211 (Stratmann). β. The forms stomelen, stomeren (stumlen, stumren), are frequentatives from a base stum-, which is a weak grade allied to the base stam-, as seen in Goth. stamma, stammering, and E. stammer. The word seems to be of Scand. origin. = Dan. dial. stumle, Icel. stumra, to stumble; Norweg. stumra, the same (Asen); cf. Swed. dial. stambla, stambla, stambla, stambla, to stumble, to falter, go with uncertain steps (Rietz). γ. Thus the word is related to stammer, with reference to hesitation of the step instead of the speech; cf. F. falter, which expresses both. Cf. OSax., Mid. Dan., OHG. stum, mute. See Stammer. ¶ The G. stammeln, to mutilate, is not the same thing, though it is an allied word; it means to reduce to a stump, from G. stummel, a stump, dimin. of a word not now found in G., but represented by Norweg. stumme, a stump, allied to G. stamm, a stock, trunk; we are thus led back to the base of stew (1). Der. stumble, sb., stumbler, stumbli-ung-block, 1 Cor. i. 23.

STUMPE, the stock of a tree, after it is cut down, a stub. (Scand.) ME. stumpe, Prompt. Parv.; stompe, Joseph of Arimathea, 681. Not found in AS. = Icel. stumpur, Swed. and Dan. stump, a stump, end, bit. = EFries. stump; MDu. stompe, Du. stomp; G. stumpf, a stump, trunk, stem. Allied to G. stumpf, blunt, stumpy; Du. stomp, blunt, dull; Skt. stambha-s, m., a post. Allied to Stamp and Staple and Stub. Der. stump, verb, to put down one's stumps, in cricket.

STUN, to make a loud din, to amaze with a blow. (E.) ME. stonien, Romance of Partenay, 2940; stounien, Gawwry and Greue Knight, 301. AS. stunian, to make a din, resound, Grein, ii. 490. Cf. AS. gestun (the prefix ge- making no difference), a din, Grein, i. 459. Cf. pt. t. ā-sten (rugtebam) in the Blickling Glosses. = Icel. stynja, to groan; stynr, a groan; G. stöhnen, to groan. From Teut. stun-*, weak grade of Idg. STEN, as in Lithuan. stėnėti, Russ. stenat', Gk. στῆναι, to groan, Skt. stan, to sound, to thunder. Brugmann, i. § 818 (2). See Stentorian.

STUNTED, hindered in growth. (Scand.) 'Like stunted hide-bound trees'; Pope, Misc. Poems, Mæcer, l. 11. Allied to the AS. adj. stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, hence, metaphorically, short of wit; also, not well grown; but this sense seems to be Scandinavian. The proper form of the verb is stint, made from stunt by vowel-change; see Stint. Cf. Icel. stuttr (for stuntur* by assimilation), short, stunted; MSwed. stunt, cut short (Hreife); showing that the peculiar sense is rather Scand. than E. See E. D. I.

STUPEFY, to deaden the perception, deprive of sensibility. (F.—L.) Less correctly stuify. Spenser has stupified, F. Q. v. 3. 17. = F. stupéfier, to stupefy, found in the 16th cent., but omitted by Cotgrave (Littre). This verb is due to the F. stūp, stūpifait, formed from L. stupēfactus, stupefied; there being no such L. word as stupēficāre, but only stupēfacere, and even the latter is rarely found except in the pp. and in the pass. form. = L. stupē-, allied to stūfere, to be amazed; and facere (pp. factus), to make. See Stupendous and Fact. Der. stupēfact-ion, from F. stupéfaction, from L. acc. stupēfactionem; also stupēfact-ive.

STUPENDOUS, amazing. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 351. Englished from L. stupendus, amazing, to be wondered at, fut. pass. part. of stupere, to be amazed, to be struck still with amazement. Note Skt. stubbh, stumbh, to stupefy (Keuley). Der. stupendous-ly, -ness; also stup-or, sb., Phillips, ed. 1766, from L. stupor, sb., amazement; and see stup-id, stupēfact-ion.

STUPID, insensible, senseless, dull. (F.—L.) In Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 409. = F. stupide, 'stupid'; Cot. = L. stupidus, senseless. = L. stupere, to be amazed; see Stupendous. Der. stupid-ly, stupid-ness; also stupid-i-ty, from F. stupidité, 'stupidity', Cot., from L. acc. stupiditatem.

STURDY, resolute, stout, firm. (F.—Teut.?) The sense of the word has suffered considerable change; it seems to have been influenced by some notion of relationship with stout, with which it is not connected. The true sense is rash or reckless. ME. sturdy, inconsiderate, Chaucer, C. T. 8574 (E 698); sturdy, stourdy, Roh. of Glouc. p. 157, l. 3287; stourdy, p. 186, l. 3842. = OF. estourdi, 'dulled, amazed, astonished . . . heedless, inconsiderate, unadvised, . . . rash, reckless, or careless'; Cot. Pp. of estourdir, 'to astound, amaze'; id. Mod. F. estourdir; Span. aturdir, Ital. stordire, to stun, amaze, surprise. β. Of unknown origin; Körting mentions the suggestion of a derivation from OHG. sturz (for sturjan*), to overthrow, a verb allied to OHG. sturz, a fall; Du. storten, to spill, shed, hurl down, ruin. This is allied to E. startle, to astound. See Start. Cf. ME. sturt, impetuosity. Der. sturdy-ly, -ness.

STURGEON, a large fish. (F.—OHG.) ME. sturgion, Havelok, 753. = OF. esturgeon, esturgeon, 'a sturgeon'; Cot.; Low L. sturionem, acc. of sturio, a sturgeon. β. Of Teut. origin; the lit. sense is 'stirrer,' from its habits. 'From the quality of floundering at the bottom it has received its name; which comes from the G. verb stören, signifying to wallow in the mud'; E. tr. of Buffon, pub. at London, 1792. = OHG. sturo, sturio, MHG. stür, G. stör, a sturgeon; cf. OHG. stören, to spread, stir, G. stören, to trouble, disturb, rake, rummage, poke about. So also Swed. and Dan. stör, a sturgeon; Swed. störa, to stir. This etymology is favoured by the AS. form of the word, viz. styrja, a sturgeon, also spelt styriga, Voc. 16. 13; 261. 31. This word seems to mean 'stirrer,' from AS. styrjan, to stir, agitate; see Stir. The AS. styrja is the oldest known name of the fish; it occurs in the Epinal Glos., no. 809.

STUTTER, to stammer. (E.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. It is the frequentative of stut, which was once commonly used in the same sensc. 'Her fellow did stammer and stut;' Elynour Rummyng, l. 339. 'I stutte, I can nat speake my wordes redely;' Palsgrave. ME. stoten; the F. styl ne bue is glossed 'bote he stote'—unless he stutter; Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 6. Cf. EFries. stuttern, to stutter; Du. stuteren. From Tent. stut-, weak grade of Tent. root stet-, cf. Du. stuten, to stop. The second grade stut- occurs in Icel. staula, to beat, strike, also, to read stuteringly; Swed. studa, to strike, push, hit against; Dan. støde, to push, jolt, jog, trip against, stumble on; G. stossen, to strike; Goth. staulan, to strike. β . Thus the orig. sense of stut is to strike, strike against, trip; and stutter = to keep on tripping up. From $\sqrt{\text{STEU}}$, to strike; whence also L. tundere, to beat (pt. t. tu-tud-i), Skt. tud, to strike, the initial s being lost in Skt. and L. See Brugmann, i. § 818 (2). Der. stutter-er, stutter-ing. From the same root are con-tuse, ob-tuse; also stout, q. v., stol.

STY (1), an enclosure for swine. (L.) ME. stie, stye, Chaucer, C. T. 7411 (D 1829). Sti, Ancien Riwle, p. 128, l. 1. AS. stigo, a sty. In a glossary printed in Voc. 271, we find: 'Incipit de subus', followed by 'Vistrina, stigo;' where a sty is doubtless meant. Older form stiga, a pen for cattle; Voc. 7. 35. + Icel. stia, sti, a sty, a kennel; svinsti, a swine-sty; stia, to pen; Dan. sti, a path, also, a sty, pen; Swed. stia, 'a sty, cabin to keep hogs or geese in; whence gässia (a goose-pen), svinstia (a swine-sty)'; Widesgren; MSwed. stia, stiga (thre); Swed. dial. sti, steg, a pen for swine, goats, or sheep (Rietz). Rietz also cites Du. swijn-stijger, + G. steige, a stair, steps, stile, stair-case; also a hen-roost, chicken-coop; OHG. stiga, a pen for small cattle. β . Tent. types stiga*, stigen, a pen for cattle; Pick, i. 348. Thre notes that the word was used to mean a pen for any kind of domestic animal; and its application to pigs is prob. later than its other uses. The reason for the name is not clear, though it may have been from the ladder-like arrangement of the laths of a hen-coop, or the use of laths or sticks placed in rows; cf. Gk. στρογχο below. Just as Ettmüller derives AS. stige from stigan, to climb, so Rietz derives Swed. stia from stiga, to climb, and Pick (iii. 348) derives G. steige from G. stegen, to climb. γ . The verb to sty, ME. stigen, to climb, was once common in E., but is now obsolete; the forms of it are AS. stigan, Du. stijen, Icel. stiga, Swed. stiga, Dan. sti, G. stegen, Goth. stegan, and it is a strong verb. Further cognate with Gk. στρογχο, to climb, to go; from the second grade is the sb. στρογχο, a row, a file of soldiers, also (in Xenophon) a row of poles with hunting-nets into which the game was driven (i. e. a pen or sty). — $\sqrt{\text{STEGWI}}$, to climb; Pick, i. 826; Brugmann, i. § 632. Der. (from same root) sty (2), stille (1), stirrup, stair, acro-stir, di-stick, ve-stige.

STY (2), a small inflamed tumour on the edge of the eye-lid. (L.) The AS. name was stigend. This is shown by the entry 'Ordeolus, stigen' in Voc. 114. 10; where ordeolus = L. ordeolus, a sty in the eye. This stigen was orig. the pres. part. of stigan, to climb, rise, and signifies 'rising,' i. e. swelling up. For the verb stigan, see STY (1). β . We also meet with styanse, or a pimple in the eye; Prompt. Parv.; 'the styanse, syccosis,' Levins, ed. 1570 (which is a very late example); also 'Styony, disease growyng within the eye-lidles, syccosis,' Huloet (cited in Wheatley's ed. of Levins). Cf. prov. E. stian, styan, a sty; also stiony, which seems to have been resolved into sty-on-eye in some dialects; see E. D. D. γ . Cognate words are Low G. stiege, stiger, a sty in the eye, from stigen, to rise; EFries. stiger; Norweg. stig, stige, sty, also called stighöyna (where höyna = a jastrule) from the verb stiga, to rise.

STYLE (1), a pointed tool for engraving or writing, mode of writing, manner of expression, way, mode. (F.—L.) ME. stille, Chaucer, C. T. 10419 (F 105), where it rhimes with stille in the sense of way over a hedge.—MF. stille, style, 'a stile, form or manner of indicting, the pin of a pair of writing tables;' Cot.—L. stilus, an iron-pointed peg used for writing on wax tablets; also, a manner of writing. Perhaps allied to L. stil-mulus. α . The spelling style is false; it ought to be stille. The mistake is due to the common error of writing the L. word as stylus. This error was due to some late writers who imagined that the Gk. στυλος, a pillar, must be the original of L. stilus. β . But note, that when the E. style is used, as it sometimes is, in botany or dialling, it then represents the Gk. στυλος; see STYLE (2). Der. style, verb, styl-ish, -ly, -ness.

STYLE (2), in botany, the middle part of a pistil of a flower. (Gk.) 1. Style, or stylus, among herbalists, that middle bunching out part of the flower of a plant, which sticks to the fruit or seed; Phillips, ed. 1706.—Gk. στυλος, a pillar, a long upright body like a pillar; cf. Skt. sthūpā, a pillar, post; from $\sqrt{\text{STEU}}$, to erect; cf. Gk. στειν, to erect. Not connected with L. stilus, as is often imagined. 2. Another sense may be noted; 'in dialling, style is a line whose shadow on the plane of the dial shows the true hour-line, and it is the upper edge of the gnomon, cock, or needle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Here style orig. meant the gnomon itself, and answers rather to Gk. στυλος than to L. stilus. Some difficulty has resulted from the needless confusion of these two unrelated words. Der. styl-ar, pertaining to the pin of a dial.

STYPTIC, astringent, that stops bleeding. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt styptic in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 13, and in Cotgrave. MF. styptik, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 98, l. 16.—F. styptique, 'styptic', Cot.—L. stypticus = Gk. στυπτικός, astringent.—Gk. στυφειν, to contract, draw together, also, to be astringent; allied to στυφιν, contraction; and prob. to E. Stop.

SUASION, advice. (F.—L.) In Sir T. More's Works, p. 157 A, l. 5.—F. suasion, 'persuasion,' Cot.—L. suasione, acc. of suasio, persuasion; allied to L. suavis, pp. of suadere, to persuade; allied to L. suavis (for suad-vis*), sweet. See SUAVER. Der. suas-ive, a coined word; suas-ive-ly, suav-ish-ness; see also dis-suade, per-suade.

SUAVER, pleasant, agreeable. (F.—L.) Not common; the derived word suavity is in earlier use in Cotgrave.—F. suave, 'sweet, pleasant,' Cot.—L. suavis, sweet; for suav-vis*, and allied to E. Sweet, q. v. Brugmann, i. § 187. Der. suav-ity, from F. suavité, 'suavity,' Cot., from L. acc. suavitatem.

SUB, a common prefix. (L.; or F.—L.) L. sub-, prefix (whence F. sub-; L. sub, prep., under. The L. super-, above, is certainly a comparative form from sub (orig. sup*), and corresponds, in some measure, to Skt. upari, above. As to the connexion of super with upari there can be no doubt, but the prefixed s in L. super is difficult; perhaps it resulted from a prefixed ex, prep.; cf. Gk. ἐξ-εμπε; Brugmann, i. § 761. Certainly L. super is allied to E. over. See further under Over. β . Sub, It is true, means generally below, under; but, like the Gk. ὑπό (hypo), it is used in the sense of 'from below,' and thus may seem to have two meanings diametrically opposed to each other, below and upward. Submittere means to place below, to lay down, to submit; sublevaré, to lift from below, to raise up. Summus, a superl. of sub, hypotus (hypotus), a superl. of hypo (hypo), do not mean the lowest, but the highest; Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 310, ed. 1875. And see Hypo, Hyper. γ . Sub-, prefix, becomes suc- before e following, suf- before f, sug- before g, sum- before m, sup- before p (though sup is rather the orig. form), sur- before r. And see Sub-. Der. sub-ter, prefix; sub-er, prefix; sub-ra, prefix; sur-, prefix (French); and see sum, supreme, soprano, superior, sup-luc. Doublet, hypo-, prefix.

SUBACID, somewhat acid. (L.) Richardson gives an example from Arbuthnot, Of Aliments, c. 3. —L. subacidus, somewhat acid, lit. 'under acid.' See Sub- and Acid.

SUBALTERN, subordinate, inferior to another. (F.—L.) 'Sub-alterni magistratus et officii of the crown;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. iii. (K.). 'Subalterne, vnder another;' Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. subalterne, adj., 'subalterne, secondary;' Cot.—L. subalternus, subordinate.—L. sub, under, and alter, another; with adj. suffix -us (Idg. -no). See Sub- and Alter. Der. subaltern, sb., a subordinate; for sub-altern officer.

SUBAQUEOUS, under water. (L.) In Pennant's Brit. Zoology, on swallows (K.). A coined word: from L. sub, under, and aquas, water; see Sub- and Aquatic. The true L. word is subaquaneus.

SUBDIVIDE, to divide again into smaller parts. (L.) 'Sub-divided into verses;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (K.).—L. subdividere, lit. to divide under. See Sub- and Divide. Der. subdivision.

SUBDUE, to reduce, conquer, tame, soften. (F.—L.) In Palsgrave; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 962 A, l. 4. The ME. form was soduen, and this was afterwards altered to subduen for the greater clearness, by analogy with the numerous words beginning with sub-. We find 'schal be sodued' in Trevisa, iii. 123, l. 7, where two other MSS. have sodued, sudewide, but Caxton's (later) edition has subdued. See also the same, ii. 153, 407; iii. 19; &c. The pt. t. sodu-ed was adapted from AF. subdui*, occurring in the pl. subduz (= subduts), 'subdued;' Lat. Ream, i. 339 (A. D. 1353).—Late L. subdutus*, for L. subditus, subdued, pp. of subdere, to subdue, subjugate.—L. sub, under; -dere, to put, from the weak grade of $\sqrt{\text{DH}}$, to put. α . For the form subdutus*, cf. Late L. perduto* (Ital. perduto, F. perdu), and such Ital. past participles as end-ito (from end-ere), ved-uto (from ved-ere), ten-uto, sap-uto, dev-uto, &c. β . It is impossible to derive subdue from L. subducere, with an alien sense. Der. subduer, subdu-al, subdu-able.

SUB-EDITOR, from Sub- and Editor.

SUBJACENT, lying beneath. (L.) In Royle's Works, vol. i. p. 177 (K.).—L. subiacent, stem of pres. part. of subiacere, to lie under.—L. sub, under; and iaceré, to lie. Iaceré is allied to iaceré, to cast, throw. See Sub- and Jet (1); and see Subject.

SUBJECT, laid or situate under, under the power of another, liable, disposed, subservient. (F.—L.) The spelling has been brought nearer to Latin, but the word was taken from French. The OF. word was also, at one time, re-spelt, to bring it nearer to Latin. ME. suget, adj., Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 1; suget, subget, sh., Chaucer, C. T. 8358 (E 482).—OF. suget (Hatzfeld), later subiect, 'a subject, vassall; Cot. Mod. F. sujet. — L. subiectus, subject; pp. of subicere, to place under, put under, subject. — L. sub, under; and iacere, to cast, throw, put. See Sub- and Jet (1). Der. subject, sb., ME. subget, as above; subject, verb, spell subiecte in Palsgrave; subject-ion, ME. subiectioun, Chaucer, C. T. 14384 (B 3650), from OF. subiection, 'subjection', Cot., from L. acc. subiectiōnem; subject-ive, from L. subiectivus; subject-ive-ness; subject-ive-ly, a late coinage. SUBJOIN, to join on at the end, annex, affix. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — MF. subjoignre (subjoignre), a stem of MF. subjoindre, to subjoin; Cot.—L. subiungere, to subjoin. See Sub- and Join. And see subjoin-ive.

SUBJUGATE, to bring under the yoke. (L.) In Palsgrave. — L. subiugatus, pp. of subiugare, to bring under the yoke. — L. sub, under; and iugum, a yoke, cognate with F. yoke, and allied to iungere, to join (above); see Sub- and Yoke. Der. subjugat-or, from L. subjugator; subjugat-ion, from F. subjugation, 'a subduing,' Cot., from L. acc. subiugationem, not used.

SUBJUNCTIVE, denoting that mood of a verb which expresses contingency. (L.) Spelt subiunctive, Minshew, ed. 1627; Palsgrave, p. 280. — L. subiunctivus, subjunctive, lit. joining on at the end, from its use in dependent clauses. — L. subiunctus, pp. of subiungere, to subjoin; see Subjoin.

SUBLEASE, an under-lease. (F.—L.; with L. prefix.) From Sub- and Lease.

SUBLET, to let, as a tenant, to another. (Hybrid; L. and E.) From Sub- and Let (1).

SUBLIME, lofty, majestic. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 8. 30. [As a term of alchemy, the verb to sublime is much older; Chaucer has subliming, C. T. 16238 (G 770); also sublimatorie, id. 16261 (G 793); these are rather taken directly from L. sublimare and sublimatorium than through the F., as it was usual to write on alchemy in Latin.] — F. sublime, 'sublime,' Cot.—L. sublimis, lofty, raised on high. β. A difficult word; prob. it means passing under the lintel or cross-piece of a door, hence reaching up to the lintel, tall, high; if so, the part -imis is connected with timen, a lintel, or a threshold. See Brugmann, ii. § 12 (stems in -u-). See Sub- and Limit. Der. sublime-ly; sublimi-ty, from F. sublimité, 'sublimity,' Cot., from L. acc. sublimitatem. Also sublime, verb, in alchemy — L. sublimare, lit. to elevate; sublime-ate, verb and sb., sublim-at-ion, sublim-at-or-y.

SUBLUNAR, under the moon, earthly. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 777. Coined from Sub- and Lunar. Der. sublunar-y, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. para. 7.

SUBMARINE, under or in the sea. (Hybrid; L. and F.—L.) Rich. gives a quotation from Boyle's Works, vol. iii. p. 342. It occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is said to have been used by Bacon. Coined from Sub- and Marine.

SUBMERGE, to plunge under water, overflow with water. (F.—L.) In Shak. Antony, ii. 5. 94. — F. submerger, 'to submerge,' Cot.—L. submergere (pp. submersus); see Sub- and Merge. Der. submerge-ence; submers-ion, from F. submersion, 'a submersion,' Cot., from L. acc. submersiōnem; also submerge, from the pp. submersus; submers-ed.

SUBMIT, to refer to the judgment of another, yield, surrender. (L.) 'I submit myselfe, Je me submets,' Palsgrave. 'Ye been submitted,' Chaucer, C. T. 14455 (B 35). It may have been taken from F. in the first instance, but, if so, was early conformed to the L. spelling. — L. submittere, to let down, submit, bow to. — L. sub, under, down; and mittere, to send (pp. missus). See Sub- and Missile. Der. submiss-ion, AF. submission, MF. submission, 'submission,' Cot., from L. acc. submissiōnem; submiss-ive-ly, -ness; submiss, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 51, from L. pp. submissus.

SUBORDINATE, lower in order or rank. (L.) 'Inferior and subordinate sorts,' Cowley, Essay 6, Of Greatness (R.). 'His next subordinate,' Milton, P. L. v. 671. Coined from Late L. subordinatus, pp. of subordinare, coined from sub ordinem, under the order or rank. Ordinem is the acc. of ordo, order, rank. See Sub- and Order. Der. subordinate, as sb., subordinate-ly; subordinat-ion, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. para. 8; whence in subordinat-ion.

SUBORN, to procure privately, instigate secretly, to cause to commit perjury. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 34. Sir T. More has subornation, Works, p. 211 h. — F. suborner, 'to suborn,' Cot.—L. subornare, to furnish or supply in an underhand way or secretly. — L. sub, under, secretly; and ornare, to furnish, adorn. See Sub- and Ornament. Der. suborner; subornat-ion, from F. subornation, 'a subornation,' Cot.

SUBPOENA, a writ commanding a person to attend in court under a penalty. (L.) Explained in Minshew, ed. 1627; and much older. — L. sub poena, under a penalty. — L. sub, under; and poena, abl. of pœna, a pain or penalty. See Sub- and Pain. Der. sub-poena, verb, to serve a subpoena.

SUBSCRIBE, to write underneath, to sign one's name to. (L.) 'And subscribed their names vnder these,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 3 h. 'My lre subscribed,' Will of Hen. V.; Royal Wills, p. 238. — L. subscribere, to write under, sign one's name to. — L. sub, under; and scribere, to write. See Sub- and Scribe. Der. sub-scriber; subscript, from the pp. subscriptus; subscript-ion, from MF. subscriptiō, 'a subscription or subscribing,' Cot., from L. acc. subscriptiōnem. SUBSECTION, an under-section, subdivision of a subject. (Hybrid; L. and F.—L.) From Sub- and Section.

SUBSEQUENT, following after. (L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 334, and Milton, Samson, 325. — L. subsequent, stem of pres. part. of subsequi, to follow close after. — L. sub, under, close after; and sequi, to follow. See Sub- and Sequel. Der. subsequent-ly.

SUBSERVE, to serve subordinately. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 57. Englished from L. subservire, to serve under a person. — L. sub, under; and servire, to serve; to serve. — L. subservi-ent, from L. subservient, stem of pres. part. of subservire; subservient-ly, subservience.

SUBSIDE, to settle down. (L.) Dryden has subsides, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. 212; Phillips, ed. 1706, has subsides, subsidence. — L. subsiderē, to settle down. — L. sub, under; and siderē, to settle, allied to sedere, to sit, which latter is cognate with E. sit. For si-dere*, where si- is the weak grade of the root SED, to sit. See Sub- and Sit. Der. subsidi-ence, from L. subsidentia, a settling down. And see subsidi-.

SUBSIDY, assistance, aid in money. (F.—L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 25; 3 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 45. ME. subsidiē, The Crowned King, l. 36, in App. to P. Plowman, C-text, p. 525; the date of the poem is A.D. 1415. — AF. subsidiē (in Codefroy); though the usual F. form is subsidiē as in Cotgrave and Palsgrave. — L. subsidiū, a body of troops in reserve, aid, assistance. The lit. sense is 'that which sits [remains] behind or in reserve,' from L. sub, under, behind, and siderē, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Sub- and Sit; and see Subside. Cf. L. præ-sidium, ob-sidium, from the same verb. Der. subsidi-ary, from L. subsidiarius, belonging to a reserve; subsidi-ise, a coined verb.

SUBSIST, to live, continue. (F.—L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 6. 73. — F. subsister, 'to subsist, abide,' Cot.—L. subsistere, to stand still, stay, abide. — L. sub, under, but here used with very slight force; and sistere, orig. to set, make to stand, but also used in the sense to stand. Sistere is the causal of stare, to stand (cf. Gk. στῆναι, for el-σῆναι*); and stare is from STĀ*, to stand (cf. Sub- and Stand. Der. subsist-ence, from F. subsistence, 'subsistence, continuance,' Cot., from L. subsistentia; subsist-ent, from the stem of the pres. part. of subsistere.

SUBSOIL, the under-soil. (Hybrid; L. and F.—L.) From Sub- and Soil.

SUBSTANCE, essential part, matter, body. (F.—L.) ME. substance, substance, Chaucer, C. T. 14809 (H 3993). — F. substance, 'substance,' Cot.—L. substantia, essence, material, substance. — L. substant, stem of pres. part. of substare, to be present, exist, lit. to stand beneath. — L. sub, beneath; and stare, to stand, from STĀ*, to stand. See Sub- and Stand. Der. substanti-al, ME. substantial, Gower, C. A. iii. 92; bk. vii. 236; from F. substantial, from L. adj. substantialis; substanti-al-ly; substanti-ate, a coined word. Also substanti-ive, ME. substantif, P. Plowman, C. iv. 345, from F. substantif (Littre), from L. substantivus, self-existent, that which denotes existence, used of the 'substantive' verb esse, and afterwards extended, as a grammatical term, to nouns substantive as distinct from nouns adjective.

SUBSTITUTE, one person put in place of another. (F.—L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'This pope may be deposed, and another substitute in his room,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1427 f. Hence used as a verb. 'They dyd also substitute other,' id. p. 821 d. — F. substitut, 'a substitute,' Cot.—L. substitutus, one substituted; pp. of substituere, to lay under, put in stead of. — L. sub, under, in place of; and statuere, to place, pp. statutus; see Sub- and Statute. Der. substitute, verb, as above; substitut-ion, Gower, C. A. iii. 178, bk. vii. 2769, F. substitution (Cot.), from L. acc. substitutiōnem.

SUBSTRATUM, an under stratum. (L.) L. substrātum, neut. of substrātus, pp. of substernere, to spread under. See Sub- and Stratum.

SUBTEND, to extend under or be opposite to. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives subtended and subtense as mathematical terms; subtense is in Blount, ed. 1674. — L. subtendere (pp. subtensus), to stretch beneath. — L. sub, under; and tendere, to stretch; see Sub- and Tend. Der. subtense, from pp. subtensus. And see hypotenuse.

SUTTER, under, secretly. (L.) Formed from L. sub, under, by help of the suffix -ter, which is properly a comparative suffix, as in in-ter; see Inter-, Other.

SUBTERFUGE, an evasion, artifice to escape censure. (F. — L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII., ed. Lumby, p. 182, l. 18. — F. subterfuge, 'a subterfuge, a shift;' Cot. — Late L. subterfugium, a subterfuge (Ducange). — L. subterfugere, to escape secretly. — L. subter, secretly; and fugere, to flee; see Subter- and Fugitive.

SUBTERRANEAN, SUBTERRANEOUS, underground. (L.) Both forms are in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount, ed. 1674, has subterrany and subterraneous. Bacon has subterrany, Nat. Hist. § 603. Both are formed from L. subterrāneus, underground; the former by adding -an (= L. -ānus) after -e, the latter by changing -us to -ous. = L. sub, under; and terr-a, the earth; with suffix -ān-ous. See Sub- and Terrace.

SUBTLE, fine, rare, insinuating, sly, artful. (F. — L.) Pronounced [sɒt·l̩]. The word was formerly spelt without l, but this was sometimes inserted to bring it nearer to the L. form. We also meet with the spellings subtil, subtile. ME. soitil, soitil, Chaucer, C. T. 1056, 2051; the Six-text edition has the spellings soitil, soitil, subtile, soitil, soitil, Group A, 1054, 2049. — OF. suitil, soutil (Burguy), later subtil, 'subtill', Cot. — L. subtilis, acc. of subtilis, fine, thin, slender, precise, accurate, subtle. β. It is gen. thought that the orig. sense of subtilis was 'finely woven' v. cf. sub, beneath (— closely ?), and tila, a web. See Sub- and Toll (2). Der. subtily-s (sometimes subtily-ly), subtleness (sometimes subtile-ness); also subtily- or subtily-ty, ME. soitelle, soetile, P. Plowman, C. xv. 76, from OF. soitellē (Littré), also subtillē, from L. acc. subtīlītem. ¶ Note that the pronunciation without b agrees with the orig. ME. form.

SUBTRACT, to take away a part from the whole. (L.) In ME. subtraen, 1629; substracten, pp. of substraken, to draw away underneath, to subtract. L. sub, and trahere, (pp. tractus), to draw. See Sub- and Trac. Der. subtraction-ion (as if from F. subtractionem*, not used), from L. acc. subtractionē; subtractive-ive; also substraken, in Minshew, a number to be subtracted, from L. subtrahend-us, fut. pass. part. of subtrahere.

SUBURB, SUBURBS, the confines of a city. (F.—L.) Commonly used in the pl. form. 'The suburbs of the town'; Fabyan's Chron. c. 219; Chaucer, C. T., G 657.—AF. suburbe, Stat. Realm, i. 97 (1285).—L. suburbium, the suburb of a town.—L. sub, under (here, near), and urb-, decl. stem of urbs, a town, city; see Sub- and Urban. Der. suburban- from L. suburbānus.

SUBVENTION. a subsidy, a pecuniary grant in aid. (F.—L.)
In Coltrave. —F. subvention, 'subvention, help, aid; also, a subsidy'; Cot.—L. subventio, acc. of subventio, assistance; cf. subventus, pp. of subvenire, to come to one's aid, assist, relieve, succour.—L. sub, under (by way of help); venire, to come. See Sub- and Venture.
Venture. Der. We also find subvene, vb., from subvenire; and the adi. subvent-itious.

SUBVERT, to overthrow, ruin, corrupt. (F.-L.; or L.) ME. subuerten, Wyclif, Titus, iii. 11. = F. subverser, 'to subvert'; Cot. = L. subuerti (pp. subversus), to turn upside down, overthrow; lit. to turn from beneath. = L. sub, from under; and uertere, to turn. See Sub- and Verse. Der. subvers-ion, AF. subversion, Stat. Realm, i. 300, F. subversion, 'a subversion,' Cot., from L. acc. subuersiōnem; subvers-ive.

SUCCEED, to follow next in order, take the place of, to prosper. (F.—L.) Better spell succede. ME. succeden, Chaucer, C. T. 8508 (E 632).—F. succéder, 'to succeed'; Cot.—L. succedere (pp. succensus), to go beneath or under, follow after.—L. suc- (for sub before c), under; and cedere, to go; see Sub- and Cede. Der. success, an issue or result, whether good or bad (now chiefly only of a good result), as in 'good or ill success', Ascham, Schoolmaster, pt. i, ed. Arber, p. 35, from MF. succes, 'success', Cot., from L. succensus, acc. of succensus, result, event; success-ful, success-ful-ly. Also successor-or, ME. successour, Rob. of Glouc. p. 507. l. 10440. F. successeur, from L. acc. successorum, one who succeeds; success-ion, F. succession, 'succession', Cot., from L. acc. successiōnem; success-ion-al; success-ive, F. successif, 'successive', from L. successivus; success-ive-ly. Also succed-an-e-ous, explained by Phillips, ed. 1706, as 'succeeding, or coming in the room of another', from L. succedānus, that which supplies the place of another: succed-an-e-um, sb. neut. of succedānus.

SUCCINCT, concise. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = L. succinctus, prepared, short, small, contracted; pp. of succingers, to gird below, tuck up, gird up, furnish. = L. suc- (for sub before c), under, below; and cingere, to gird; see Sub- and Cincture. Der. succinct-ly, succinct-ness.

SUCCORY, chicory. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Of cykorie or suckorie,' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 8. Minshew gives succory, cichory, and chicory. Succory is a corruption of cichory, now usually called chicory: see CHICORY.

SUCCOUR, to assist, relieve. (F.—I.) MF. soconren, Will. of Palerne, 1186. = OF. succurre, soscorre (Burguy), MF. seounrir, as in Cotgrave; this change to e is no improvement. = L. succurrere, succurrere, to run under, run up to, run to the aid of, aid, succour. L. sub, under, up to; and currere, to run; see Sub- and Current. Der. succur-, er. Also succurr, sb., M.E. succurs, Ancrén Rīwle, p. 244, l. 9. Of OF. socors, later seconds, as in Cotgrave, from L. subsecursus, succursus, pp. of succurrere. ¶ The spelling is prob. due to that of the AF. succour, sb., in Langtoft's Chron. l. 302, also spelt socours, l. 16; and not from AF. sucure, vb., as used in the Vie de St. Auban.

SUCCUBA, a wanton female demon. (L.) In Baum. and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, v. 2 (Norandine).—L. succuba.—L. succubare, to lie under.—L. suc- (for sub), under; cubare, to lie down. See Sub- and Covey. Der. succubus, a masc. form; Webster, Westward Ho. iv. 2.

SUCCULENT, juicy. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. succulent, 'succulent'; Cot.—L. succulentus, succulentus, full of juice; formed with suffix -lentus from succu-s, sūcu-s, juice (the gen. is succi, but there is a collateral form with u-stem, found in the gen. pl. succum). Allied to E. Suck.

SUCCUMB, to yield. (L.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 459.—L. succumbere, to lie or fall under, yield.—L. suc- (for sub before e), under; and cumbere*, to lie, a nasalised form allied to cubāre, to lie. See Sub- and Incubus, Incumbent, Covey.

SUCH, of a like kind. (E.) ME. sunde, swile, swiuch, swiuch, with numerous other forms, for which see Strattmann. W. find sunde, swile in Layamon, 31885, 1375; swiuch, Reliquiae Antiquae i. 131; swiuch, such, Chaucer, C. T. 3; (see Six-text). It will thus be seen that the orig. l was lost, and the final e palatalized to ch. The forms suunde, swile are from AS, swyle, swile, swile, such, Grein, ii. 513; Osax. swiuch; OFries. selic, selth, sulik, sulich, such, Du. zulic; Icel. siulik; Dan. slig; Swed. slig; MSwed. sluch (Ihre); G. solch; OHG. soflich; Goth. swaleiks. β. The Goth. swaleiks is simply compounded of swa, so, and leiks, like; and all the Teut. forms admit of a similar explanation. Thus such is for so-like, of which it is a corruption. See So and Like and cf. Which.

SUCK to draw in with the mouth, imbibe, esp. milk. (Ē.) ME. souken, Chaucer, C. T. 8326 (E 450); esp. a strong verb, with pt. t. sek or sec, Ancr. Riwle, p. 330, l. 6, pp. i-soke (for i-poken), Trevisa, lib. 267, l. 12. AS. sūcan, strong verb, pt. t. sūne, pp. socen; Grein, ii. 402; Deut. xxxii. 13; Luke, xi. 27. [There is also a form sūgan, and there is a double form of the Teut. base, viz. SEUK and SEUG. Of the former, we find examples in AS. sūcan, E. suck, cognate with L. sugere. Of the latter, we have examples in AS. sūgan, Icel. sjuga, sūga (pt. t. saug, pp. sogiun), Dan. suge, Swed. suga, G. saugen, OHG (sūgan); which is the prevailing type in Teutonic.] We find also W. sugno, to suck, sug, juell; Irish sughairin, I suck in, sug, juice; Gael. sug, to suck, sug, juice; cf. L. sūcus, succus, juice. β. The Idg. root of E. suck is SUG. See Brugmann, i. § 112. The word succulent is from Duct. suck, sucker, sb. suck-ling, l. 3, 44, a frequentative form with the usual suffix -ing; suck-ling, ME. sokling or sokeling, spelt sokelynge in Prompt. Parv., with dmling suffix -ing from the form sokel = one who sucks, where the -el is the suffix of the agent (so that it is hardly a parallel form to duck-ling, which is merely a double diction, from duck). Also honey-suckle, q.v.; suck-tion, q.v.; suck, q.v.

SUCTION, the act or power of sucking. (F.—L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 191.—F. suction, 'a sucking'; Cot. Formed, as if from L. suctio*: cf. suctus, pp. of sūgere, to suck: see Suck.

SUDATORY, a sweating bath. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Rare. Rich. gives an example from Holyday, Juvenal, p. 224. — L. sūdātōrium, a sweating-bath; neut. of sūdātōrius, serving for sweating. — L. sūdātōri, decl. stem of sūdātōr, a sweater. — L. sūdāre, to sweat, allied to E. Sweat, q. v.; with suffix -tor of the agent. See SUDORIFIC.

SUDDEN, unexpected, abrupt, hasty. (F.-L.) ME. sodain, sodaine, soden, Chaucer, C. T. 4841 (B 421); sodeneiliche, suddenly, King Alisaunder, 3568. - OF. sodain, suddin, mod. F. soudain, soudaine. Cf. Prov. sopmante, suddenly (Bartsch); Ital. subitaneo (also subitaneo). - Late L. subitānus*, for L. subiūtiūsus, suddenly; extended from subitus, sudden, lit. 'that which has come stealthily', orig. pp. of subire, to go or come stealthily. - L. sub, under, stealthily; and ire, to go, from *√*EL, to go. See Sub- and Itinerant. Der. sudden-ly, -ness.

SUDORIFIC, causing sweat. (F.—L.) 'Sudorifick herbs;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 706.—F. sudorifique, causing sweat, Cot.—L. sūdōrificus, the same.—L. sūdōri-, decl. stem of sūdor, sweat; and -ficus, making, from facere, to make. See SWEAT and FACT. Der. sudorific, sb.: and see sudatory.

SUDS, boiling water mixed with soap. (E.) 'Sprinkled With uds and dish-water;' Beaum. and Fletcher. Wit without Money.

A. iii. sc. 1. Suds means 'things sodden;' and is formed as a pl. from sud, derived from Teut. sud-, the weak grade of Teut. seutau-, to seethe; see Seethe. Hence Gascoigne uses suddles metaphorically, in the sense of 'worthless things'; see Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, ii. 310, l. 9. In the suds-in the middle of a wash, is a proverbial expression for being in a sulky temper; cf. prov. E. suddled, flooded. Cf. MDu. zode, a seething, boiling, fexham; Icel. sud, water in which meat has been sodden; and see Sod.

SUE, to prosecute at law. (F.—L.) The orig. sense is merely to follow; it was technically used as a law-term. Spelt seue in Palsgrave. ME. suen, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19, 22; also sewen, swen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 21; swen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 208, l. 5. —OF. su- (as in pr. pl. su-ent, pra. pt. su-ant), a stem of OF. sivir, suivir, suivre (Godefroy, with several other forms), mod. F. suivre, to follow. Cf. Prov. segre, segur (Bartsch), Ital. seguire, to follow. —Late L. sequere, to follow, substituted for L. sequi, to follow; see the changes traced in Brachet. See Sequene. Der. en-sue, q.v., pur-sue; suit, suite, q.v.

SUET, the fat of an animal about the kidneys. (F.—L.) ME. suet. 'Sueté [where w-u-], suet (due sillab), of flesche or fysche or oþer lyke, Liquamen, sumen.' Prompt. Parv. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from OF. seu, Norman sieu, Walloon seu (Littré), mod. F. sui, suet, fat. Cf. Span. sobo; Ital. sevo, 'tallow, fat, sevet', Florio. —L. sebum, also seum, tallow, suet, grease. Prob. allied to L. sapo, soap; see Soap.

SUFFER, to undergo, endure, permit. (F.—L.) ME. suffreu, suffren, in early use; Chaucer, C. T. 11089 (F 777); Layamon, 24854 (later text). —OF. suffrir, suffrir, mod. F. souffrir. —Folk-L. sufferire*, for L. sufferre, to undergo, endure. —L. suf- (for sub before f), under; and ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. See Sub- and Bear (1). Der. suffer-er, suffer-ing; suffer-able; also suffer-ance or suff-erance, ME. suffrance, Chaucer, C. T. 11100 (F 788), OF. suffrance, later souffrance, 'sufferance', Cot., from Late L. suffrentia (Duange).

SUFFICE, to be enough. (F.—L.) ME. suffisen, Chaucer, C. T. 9908 (E 2034). —F. suffire, occurring in suffis-ant, stem of pres. part. of suffire, to suffice; cf. ME. suffisance, sufficiency, Chaucer, C. T. 492 (A 490), from F. suffisance, sufficiency. —L. sufficere, lit. to make or put under, hence to substitute, provide, supply, suffice. —L. suf- (for sub before f), and facere, to make; see Sub- and Fact. Der. suffici-ent, Merch. Ven. i. 3, 17, from L. suffici-ent, stem of pres. part. of sufficere; suffici-ent-ly; suffici-ency, Meas. for Meas. i. 1, 8.

SUFFIX, a letter or syllable added to a word. (L.) Modern; used in philology. —L. suffixus, pp. of suffigere, to fasten on beneath. —L. suf- (for sub before f), and figere, to fix; see Sub- and Fix. Der. suffix, verb.

SUFFOCATE, to smother. (L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'May he be suffocate,' 2 Hen. VI. i. 124. —L. suffocatus, pp. of suffocare, to choke. Lit. 'to put something under the gullet, to throttle.' —L. suf- (for sub- before f), and facere, stem of facere, s. pl. the gullet, throat. 'The same change from uu to o occurs in foecale, a neck-cloth.' [Perhaps allied to Skt. bhūkā, a hole, the head of a fountain. Der. suffocant-ia, from F. suffocation, 'suffocation', Cot., from L. acc. suffocationem.

SUFFRAGE, a vote, united prayer. (F.—L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 2, 142; Caxton, Siege of Troy, fol. 511, l. 10; suffragys, pl., Monk of Evesham (ab. 1482), c. 44, ed. Arber, p. 92. —F. suffrage, 'a suffrage, voice'; Cot. —L. suffragium, a vote, voice, suffrage. Suffragium has been ingeniously explained as 'a broken piece', such as a pot-herd, &c., whereby the ancients recorded their votes (Vanick, Bréal). If this be right, suf- is the usual prefix (= sub), and -fragium is connected with frangere, to break, cognate with E. Break. Cf. L. nauf-fragium, a ship-wreck. β. But Walde connects it with L. frag-or, noise, din, i. e. outcry; and further, with AS. spriç, E. speech; see Speech. Der. suffrag-an, ME. suffragan, Trevisa, ii. 115, l. 9, from F. suffragant, 'a suffragan, or suffragan, a bishop's deputy', Cot., from L. suffragant-, stem of pres. part. of suffragari, to vote for, support, assist; but suffragan may also represent the Late L. suffraganeus, a suffragan bishop.

SUFFUSE, to overspread or cover, as with a fluid. (L.) 'Her suffused eyes,' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7, 10. —L. suffusus, pp. of suffundere, to pour beneath, diffuse beneath or upon. —L. suf- (for sub before f), and fundere, to pour; see Sub- and Fuse. Der. suffusion, from F. suffusion, 'a suffusion, or pouring upon', Cot., from L. acc. suffusionem.

SUFI, a Moslem mystic; see under Sophy.

SUGAR, a sweet substance, esp. that obtained from a kind of cane. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.—Skt.) ME. sugre, Chaucer, C. T.

10928 (F 614); in P. Plowman, B. v. 122, two MSS. read suere, of which sugre is a 'voiced' form. —F. sucre, 'sugar'; Cot. —Span. azucar, sugar. —Arab. sakkar, sokkar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 357, Freytag's Arab. Dict. ii. 334; whence, by prefixing the article al, the form asokkar, accounting for the prefixed a in the Span. form. —Pers. shakar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 385. —Skt. çarkarā, gravel, a soil abounding in stony fragments, clayed or candied sugar; Benfey, p. 936. Prob. allied to Gk. σάκχαρις, a pebble on the sea-shore. β. From the Pāli form sakkarā are derived Gk. σάκχαρις, σάκχαρον, and L. saccharum. It is a mistake to derive F. sucre (as Brachet does) from L. saccharum directly. See Saccharine. Der. sugar, verb, Palsgrave; sugar-y, sugar-cane, sugar-candy (see candy); sugar-loaf, Paston Letters, iii. 37.

SUGGEST, to introduce indirectly, hint. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 1, 101, iii. 4, 75. —L. suggestus, pp. of suggere, to carry or lay under, furnish, supply, suggest. —L. sug- (for sub before g), and gerere, to carry; see Sub- and Jest. Der. suggest-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 14727 (B 3607), from F. suggestion, 'a suggestion', from L. acc. suggestinē; suggest-ive, a coined word; suggest-ive-ly.

SUICIDE, self-murder; one who dies by his own hand. (F.—L.) The word was really coined in England, but on a F. model. See note at the end of the article. In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14 (R.); in the latter sense. Rich. gives a quotation for it, in the former sense, from a tr. of Montesquieu, The Spirit of Laws, b. xiv. c. 13; the first F. translation appeared in 1749, immediately after its appearance in France. Littré says that suicide is in Richelet's Dict. in 1759, and is said to have been first used in French by Desfontaines not much earlier (1738). As remarked under Homicide, the same form has two senses, and two sources. 1. F. suicide, a coined word, from L. sui, of oneself, gen. case of se, self; and -cidium, a slaying (as in homi-cidium), from cadere, to slay. 2. F. suicide, coined from L. sui, of oneself, and -cida, a slayer (as in homi-cida), from cadere, to slay. Der. suicid-ial, -ly. ¶ Trench, in his English Past and Present, observes that Phillips notices the word, as a monstrous formation, in 1671, long before its appearance in French; and it is given by Blount, ed. 1674. It seems to have been suggested by the queer words suist, a selfish man, and suicism, selfishness, which had been coined at an earlier date, and were used by Whitlock in an essay entitled The Grand Schismatic, or Suist Anatomised; cf. his Zootomia, 1654. The word is clumsy enough, but we may rightly claim it. Littré's objection, that the form of the word is plainly French, is of no force. We had the words homicide, patri-cide, matr-cide, fratr-cide, already in use; and sui-cide was coined by analogy with these, which accounts for the whole matter simply enough. It may be added that, though the translator of Montesquieu uses the word, the original has only l'homicide de soi-même.

SUIT, an action at law, a petition, a set, as of clothes. (F.—L.) ME. suite, Chaucer, C. T. 2875 (A 2873). —F. suite (also suite in Cotgrave), 'a chase, pursuit, suit against, also the train, attendants, or followers of a great person'; Cot. —Late L. type sequita*, variant of secta (L. secūta), a following, a sect (whence the sense of suite or train); in Late L. extended to mean a suit at law, a series, order, set, a suit of clothes, &c.; see Duange. From the base of sequ-i, to follow, as noted under Seot, q.v. Cf. 'secta vestium', a suit of clothes; Ilier Allus, p. 29. 'Sex cochliaria eiusdem sectae', six spoons of the same set; York Wills, iii. 3 (1395). Der. suit, verb, to clothe, As You Like It, i. 3, 118, also to lit, adapt, agree, accord, id. ii. 7, 81, Macb. ii. 1, 60; 'to suit is to agree together, as things made on a common plan', Wedgwood. Also suit-or, L. L. L. ii. 34; suit-able, Timon, iii. 6, 92, suit-able-ness. Doublets, suite, q.v., seet, sept, set (2).

SUITE, a train of followers. (F.—L.) 'With fifty in their suite to his defence'; Sidney (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). —F. suite; see further under Suit, of which suite is a doublet.

SULCATED, furrowed, grooved. (L.) 'Sulcate, to cast up in furrows, to till'; Blount, ed. 1674. Chiefly scientific. —L. sulcatus, pp. of sulcare, to furrow. —L. sulcus, a furrow. † Gk. ὄλκος, a furrow, from ἔλκεν, to draw along; cf. AS. sulh, a plough.

SULKY, obstinate, silently sullen. (E.) The word is rare in old books, and the Dictionaries omit it, till we come to Todd's Johnson, where 'the sulkiness of my disposition' is quoted from a letter of Gray to Dr. Clarke, A. D. 1760. It is an incorrect form, and should rather be sulken; it arose from misdividing the sb. sulken-ness as sulken-ness, by analogy with happi-ness from happy, &c. The sb. appears as a-sulkenness, i. e. sloth, O. Eng. Hom. i. 83, l. 25; and is not uncommon in AS., which also has the true old form of the adj. = AS. solcen, orig. slothful, remiss; in the comp. āsolcen, slothful, remiss, lazy, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 306, l. 11, p. 340, last line; also ii. 220, l. 23, where it means 'disgusted'. The sb. āsolcen-ness is quite a common word; see Ælf. Hom. i. 602, l. 8, ii. 46, l. 11, ii. 218, l. 22, ii. 220, l. 21; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 240, l. 12; the sense comes very near to that of mod. E. sullenness. 'Acciditque, vel tedious, asolens;' Voc. 190, 14. Another trace of AS. solen occurs in the comp. broden, used as a pp., with the sense of 'stupefied'; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 35, ed. Sweet, p. 238, l. 3.

β. We further know that solen was the pp. of a strong verb solan (pt. t. selle, pp. solen), appearing in the comp. asolcan (pt. t. asale, pp. asolcan), for which Leo refers to Alfr. Hom. ii. 592, the reference, unluckily, being wrong. We find the verb again, spelt asolcan, in Cædmon, ed. Grein, 2167; see Grein, l. 41. γ. There is even a cognate OHG. g word, viz. the verb arsolan, Graff, vi. 216, where the prefix ar- = AS. æ-. Thus the Teut. type is solk-, from a base solk-, answering to an Idg. base SELG-. δ. It is remarkable that the Skt. śj means 'to let loose, abandon,' and the pp. śjāta is 'abandoned,' which comes very near the sense of AS. solen. Der. solk-, really for solk-, as explained above.

¶ Etym. solk-, gives a form asolcan, but the MS. has asolcan, Liber Scint. § 10, p. 79, l. 5; also asolcan, id. § 24, p. 98, l. 1. SULLEN, gloomily angry, morose. (F.—L.) ME. solaín, solaín, orig. merely 'solitary,' then 'hating company,' or morose, as explained in the Prompt. Parv. 'Soleyn of maner, or he that lovyth no company, Solitaryus.' Pr. Parv. A mess of meat for one person was also called solayne, as explained on the same page. 'By hymself as a solayne,' i.e. a lonely person, P. Ploymann, B. xii. 205. In the Rom. of the Rose, 3896, solaín means 'sullen,' but in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 982, and Parl. of Foules, 607, it means 'solitary' or 'lonely.'—OF. solaín, lonely, solitary, of which the only trace I find is in Roquefort, where solaín is explained as 'a portion served out to a religious person,' a pittance, doubtless a portion for one; so also in Ducange, s.v. solaín (5). E. Müller and Mahn cite Prov. solan, solitary. These Romance forms presuppose a Late L. soltānus*, solitary, but it does not occur; however, it is a mere extension from L. soltus, sole, alone; see Sole. Cf. OF. soltain, solitary (thurguy), which answers, similarly, to a Late L. soltānus*. Der. sullen-ly, -ness.

SULLY, to tarnish, spot, make dirty. (F.—L.) Shak. has sullied, Sommet 15; also the infinitive form sully; Merry Wives, ii. 1. 102. [We also find the ME. solved, soiled, Cursor Mundi, l. 22491, spelt sultawed in 1608 (Nares). From ME. soltuen, spelt soltuyn, soltuyn in Prompt. Parv., to soil, blemish; from AS. solan, g., d., and acc. of sola, f., mire, by-form of AS. sol, mire (below). And also ME. sultien; whence sultich = sultiieth, Owl and Nightingale, 1238; pp. sulted = sullied, P. Ploymann's Creed, 752, Ancien Riwle, p. 396, l. 1. AS. sylan, to sully, defile with dirt or mud. 'Sio sugu bi wile sylan on hire sole after ðenn bi hio ðwægen bið' = the sow will wallow [lit. sully herself] in her mire after she is washed; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, c. liv, p. 419, l. 27. This form is from AS. sol, mire, mud, for which see the quotation above.—Swed. sula, to blemish; Dan. sile, to blemish, sile, sül, mire; Goth. hisauljan, to sully, render impure; G. sühlen, to sully, sich herum sühlen, to wallow, from sukle, slough, mire, MII.G. sol, mire. Cf. Norw. saula, mire.] β. Nevertheless, the modern verb to sully is a doublet of the earlier verb to soil.—MF. souiller, 'to soil, slurr, dirty, smutch; se souiller, (of a swine) to wallow in the mire;' Cot.—OF. souil, for which see Soil (2). Doublet, soil (2).

SULPHUR, brimstone. (L.) [ME. soulfre (an OF. form, cf. F. soufre); Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 418.] In Spenser, F. Q. i. 5, 31. A term in alchemy, from L. sulphur, also spelt sulfur. Der. sulphur-, from L. sulphureus or sulfureus, adj.; sulphur-ous, from F. sulphureux, 'sulphurous,' Cot., from L. adj. sulphureus or sulfureus; also the coined words sulphur-ic, sulphur-et, sulphur-ett-et, and sulphate (used for sulphur-ate*).

SULTAN, an Eastern ruler, head of the Ottoman empire. (F.—Arab.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1, 26.—F. sultan, 'a sultan or souldan,' Cot.—Arab. sultān, victorious, also a ruler, prince; cf. sultat, dominion; Rich. Diet. pp. 843, 844. β. The word occurs early in the ME. form soudan, Chaucer, C. T. 4597 (B 177); this is from OF. soudan, souldan, both in Cotgrave, which are derived from the same Arab. word. Der. sultan-ess, with F. suffix; sultan-a, Dryden, Kind Keeper, i. 1, from Ital. sultana, fem. of sultano, a sultan, from Arab. sultān.

SULTRY, SWEATRY, very hot and oppressive. (E.) Sultry and sweatry, both in Phillips, ed. 1706, are the same word; the latter being the fuller and older form. Shak. has sultry, Hamlet, v. 2. 101; also sweatry = caused to exude by heat, Macb. iv. 1. 8. The sw has passed into u; cf. so from AS. swā, and mod. E. sword, where the sw is entirely lost. The -y (—AS. -ig) is an adjectival suffix, and sultry is short for sulter-y, formed from the verb to sulter. Sultery is from sulteryng, or swonyng, Sincopa, Prompt. Parv., where the sense is 'a swooning with heat.' Sultery for hete, or febrilness, or other cawsy, or swowyn, Exalto, sincopizo, id. p. 481. β. Again, sulter is a frequent. form (with the usual suffix -er) from ME. suelten, to die, also to swoon away or faint. 'Swove or suelte' = swoon or faint, P. Ploymann, B. v. 154. From AS. sueltan, to die, Grein, ii. 505.—Icel. svelta, to die, starve (pt. t. svalt, pl. sultu, pp. sultinn; Dan. sulte; Swed. svalta; Goth. sulttan, to die. Cf. Icel. sultr, Dan. sult, hunger, famine; from the weak grade susult* > sult*. Also OHG. schwulzen, to burn, to be consumed by fire or love. γ. All from Teut. base suel-, to die; prob. an extension of the base suel-, to burn, glow, be hot, from which the E. word has undoubtedly received its present sense; this appears in AS. swelan, to burn, ME. suelen, suelen, prov. E. sueal, to waste away under the action of fire, allied to G. schwelen, to burn slowly, schwül, sultry, with the extended forms OHG. swilzen, heat, swilzōn, to burn slowly; Lith. swilti, to shine, burn. Der. sultri-ness.

SUM, the amount, whole of a thing, substance, total, summary, fulness. (F.—L.) ME. somme, Chaucer, C. T. 115, 17 (F 1225).—AF. summe, a sum, Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson; F. somme, 'a summe of money,' Cot.—L. summa, sum, chief part, amount; orig. fem. of summus, highest, chief, principal. Summus stands for sup-, uppermost, superl. form from sup, old form of sub (cf. sup-er); the sense of 'under' and 'over' are curiously mixed; see Sub.—Allied to Gk. sum-, highest, with a different suffix. Brugmann, i. § 762. Der. sum, verb, ME. summen, Trevisa, iii. 261, l. 15. F. summer, from L. summāre; summ-ation, from F. summation, 'the summing of money,' Cot., due to L. summāre; summ-ar-y, sb., answering to F. sommaire, 'a summary,' Cot., from L. summārium, a summary, epitome, which presupposes an adj. summārius*; summary, adj., answering to F. sommaire, adj., 'summary,' Cot.; summ-ar-i-ly, summ-ar-i-ness; summ-ar-ise, a coined word. Also summi-ti, q. v. And see supreme, sovereign, soprano.

SUMACH, a tree. (F.—Span.—Arab.) Sumack or Sumack, a kind of rank-smelling shrub that bears a black berry made use of by curriers to dress their leather; Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt sumack, sumake, sumaque in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a similar definition. ME. sumac, Laufrank, Curigrie, p. 218, l. 19.—F. sumac, formerly spelt sumack; Littré.—Span. zumac.—Arab. sumāq, a species of shrub; Rich. Diet. p. 847. Another Arab. name is samāqil (id.); this will account for another F. form sumail, noticed by Littré.

SUMMER (1), the warmest season of the year. (E.) ME. sumer, summer (with one m), Chaucer, C. T. 396 (A 394). AF. summer, summer, Matt. xxiv. 32.—Du. zomer; Icel. sumar; Dan. sommer; Swed. sommar; G. summer; OHG. sumar. β. From a Teut. type sum-rus*, m. (Frank); connected with Irish and Welsh ham, W. haf, summer (the initial h standing, as usual, for g), Skt. samā, a year, Zend hama, summer. Brugmann, i. § 436. Der. summer, verb, to pass the summer, Isaiah, xviii. 6; summer-house, Amos, iii. 15.

SUMMER (2), a beam. (F.—Low L.—Gk.) See Summer.

SUMMERSET, the same as Somersault, q. v. SUMMIT, highest point, top. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 4. 70, iii. 3. 18; K. Lear, iv. 6. 57. Caxton has summete, Godfrey of Bolyne, p. 251, l. 21.—F. sommet, 'the top,' Cot. Dimin., with suffix -et, of OF. som, the top, esp. of a hill; see Burguy, Littré.—L. summus, highest point, neut. of summus, highest; see Sum.

SUMMON, to cite to appear, call with authority. (F.—L.) The examples in the Glossary to Layamon, s.v. summen, show that two distinct words were early confused, viz. AS. summan, summan, to collect together (a derivative verb from suman, together, from sum, together) and OF. sonomer, sonomer, mod. F. semonder. But since summons, sb., and summoner are both F. words, and the word summon properly belongs to the law-courts, we need only here consider the F. form. We find let somony = caused to attend, in Rob. of Glouc. p. 377, l. 7739; and the word sonne in Chaucer, C. T. 6943 (D 1361), clearly refers to the mod. E. sense of summon, though its form would suit the AS. summan, equally well.—OF. sonomer (Roquefort), in which form it is rare, having been corrupted to sonomer or semonder. Cotgrave gives F. semonder, to bid, invite, summon, warn, cite. Littré gives an 11th-cent. example of the form sumoner; and Roquefort gives an excellent example in which the OF. sonomer is used with the orig. sense of 'to admonish,' the word semonoit being used to translate L. admonet; Dial. de Saint Grégoire, liv. 2, chap. 5. Cf. Prov. semoner, to summon, a common word (Bartsch).—L. summonēre, to remind privately.—L. sum- (for sub before m); and monēre, to advise; see Sub- and Monition. Der. summon-er, ME. sonpnowr, Chaucer, C. T. 625 (represented by mod. E. Sumner as a proper name), also sonomour, P. Ploymann, B. iii. 123 (footnote), from the AF. sumenour, Laws of Will. I. 47; MF. semonneur, 'a summoner, citer, apparitor,' Cot. Also summon-er, ME. sonomous, Allit. Morte Arthure, 91, from the AF. sonomous, f. Stat. Realm, i. 29 (1295), MF. semonce, 'a warning, citation, summons,' Cot.; Littré explains that the F. semonce, formerly semonce (or semonce), is the fem. of semons (semons), the pp. of semonder (or moudre, to summon. Cf. Prov. somonsa, a summons, cited by Littré; we also find Prov. somosa, somesta used in the same sense. Thus the s at the end of summons is not due to the L. summones, as some have supposed.

SUMPTAN, a blow-pipe. (Malay.) Malay sumptan. — Malay sumpti (also menyumpit), to blow; with suffix -an.

SUMPTER, a horse for carrying burdens, a pack-horse. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) Two forms of the word were once in use, viz. ME. somer, King Alisaunder, 890, and sumpter, id. 6023. The former, once the commoner form, is now lost; but it is necessary to explain it first. 1. From OF. somier, sommier (hurgy), a pack-horse; formed, with suffix -ier of the agent, from OF. somme, sone, sauve, sume, a pack, burden. [Cotgrave gives OF. sommier, 'a sumpter-horse, also the piece of timber called a sumpter.'] — Late L. salma, corrupt form of sagma, a pack, burden; whence sagmarius, salmarius, a pack-horse (> F. sommier). — Gk. σάγμα, a pack-saddle. — Gk. σάτρεν (= σάγ-ρεν, fut. σάσθω), to pack, put a burden on a horse, fasten on a load, orig. to fasten. Allied to Gk. σάγν, housings, σάγος, a soldier's cloak. 2. The etymology of sumpter is similar; it orig. meant, not the horse, but the horse's driver; and such is the sense in King Alisaunder, 6023, where the sumpters are reckoned among the squires and guides belonging to an army. Hence, also, the mod. F. sumpter-horse, i. e. a baggage-carrier's horse, the addition of horse being necessary to the sense, whereas the ME. somer was used alone, in the same sense. Sumpter is, accordingly, from OF. sommeter, a packhorse-driver (Rouffort). This answers to a Low L. σagalmaris, not found, but formed from the Gk. σάγμαρ, the true stem of σάγμα, just as sagmarius is formed from σάγμα. 3. The E. word summer, noticed by Cotgrave (above) as meaning 'a beam,' is with notice. It occurs in Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 696, and is given in Halliwell; being so called from its bearing a great burden or weight; cf. Norman dial. sommier, a summer (Duméril). Hence also the E. breast-summer (gen. pronounced breassomer), defined in Webster as 'a summer or beam placed breast-wise to support a superincumbent wall.' Note that summer in K. Lear, ii. 4. 219, does not mean 'a packhorse,' but a packhorse-driver.

SUMPTUARY, relating to expenses. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate E. somptuair. It is rather Englished from L. sumptuarius, belonging to expenses, than borrowed from French. Formed, with suffix -arius, from sumptus, decl. stem of sumptus, expense, cost; see Sumptuous.

SUMPTUOUS, expensive, costly. (F. — L.) 'Sumptuous expenses of the meaner people;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 28. — F. sumptueux, 'sumptuous,' Cot. — L. sumptuosus, costly. — L. sumptus, decl. stem of sumptus, expense, cost. — L. sumptus, pp. of sumere, to take, spend, consume. — F. sumere (> sup-ere) is a derivative of emere, to buy, orig. to take. Brugmann, i. § 240. See Sum and Example. Der. sumptuosus, -ness.

SUN, the celestial body which is the source of light and heat. (E.) ME. sonne, two syllables, 'haucer,' C. T. 7. AS. sunne, a fem. sb., Exod. xvi. 21, xvii. 12 (common). — In. zon, fem. sb.; Icel. sunna, fem., only in poetry, the common word being sól; G. sonne, fem., OHG. sunna; Goth. sunna, masc., sunō, fem. — F. The Teut. type is sunnon*, fem. Here -non is a suffix (as in Teut. ster-non*, a star); and the base sun-* is the weak grade of a root suen-, which is prob. allied to the root sū-, sū-*, 'to shine,' whence Goth. sau-il, L. sū-, the sun, Icel. sū-, the sun. See Solar. Der. sun, verb; sun-beam, AS. sunnebeām; sun-burnt; sun-rise, spelt sonne rise in Palgrave; sun-set, spelt sonne sette in Palgrave, ONorthumb. sun-set, Matt. xxiv. 27 (Indisfame MS.). Also Sun-day, AS. sunuau dag, 'lit. day of the sun,' where sunuau is the gen. case. Other compounds are sun-fish, flower, shine, stroke, sun-y, sun-less, sun-ward; and see south.

SUNDER, to part, divide. (E.) ME. sundren, Ancrén Riwe, p. 270, last line. AS. sundrian, gesundrian, Grein, i. 459; also sundrian, in comp. āsundrian, Matt. x. 35; lit. 'to put asunder.' — AS. sundor, adv., asunder, Grein, ii. 495. — Icel. sundra, to sunder, from sundr, adv., asunder; Dan. søndre, to sunder, from sønder, adv.; Swed. sundra, from sönder, adv.; G. sundern, from sönder, adv., separate. And cf. Goth. sundrā, adv., separately; Du. zunder, conj., but. — F. All allied to Gk. δ-ερε (for sunter*), without, Skt. san-utar, aside, far from (Macdonell); so that -der in sun-der, adv., is a suffix. Further allied to OIrish sain, separate, L. sin-, without. Brugmann, i. § 500. Der. a-sunder, q. v.; sundr-y, adj., separate, hence several, divers, ME. sundry, sundry, Chaucer, C. T. 4601 (B 181), from AS. sundrig, Luke, iv. 40, for sunderig*, and formed with suffix -ig (mod. E. -y) from sundor, adv., as above.

SUP, to imbibe, as a liquid, gradually; also, to eat a supper. (E.) Once a strong verb; the short u is prob. due to association with supper, q. v. ME. suppen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 96, v. 220. AS. sūpan (strong verb, pt. t. sēap, pl. sūpan, pp. sopen), Ælfrelt, tr. of Gregory's

SUPER-, prefix, above. (L.) Super, above, prep.; orig. a comparative form of sup*, orig. form of sub; see Sub-. Orig. a locative case of superus, adj., upper (for superus*, where -s is a weak form of ex); whence Superior. — Gk. ὑπέρ, above; orig. a locative case of ὑπερος, upper, comparative from ὑπός (E. hypo-). — F. Hyper-, Hypo-; allied to Skt. upari, above, locative of Vedic upara-, compar. of upa, near, close to, under. See Over. Der. superior, supreme, in-super-able; super-b, super-nal. Doublet, hyper-, prefix. And see supra-, prefix.

SUPERABOUND, to be more than enough. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave; and Howell, Famil. Letters, b. iv. let. 39, § 3. — F. superabonder, 'to superabound,' Cot. — L. superabundare, to be very abundant. — L. super and abundare; see Super and Abound. Der. superabundantia, from F. superabundantia, 'superabundance,' Cot. — L. superabundantia; also superabundant, adj., from the stem of the L. pres. part., superabundant-ly.

SUPERADD, to add over and above. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and earlier, see Richardson. — L. superaddere; see Super and Add. Der. superadd-ition (not in Cotgrave).

SUPERANNUATE, to disqualify by length of years. (L.) Bacon has superannate = to live beyond the year, used of annual plants; Nat. Hist. § 448. This is cited by Richardson, who misspells it. Howell has 'superannuated virgin.' Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 12; A. D. 1619. Mount, ed. 1674, has both superannate and superannuate. An ill-coined word, prob. suggested by annu-, annuity; Bacon's superannate is countenanced by Late L. superannatus, that has lived beyond a year; hence F. suranné, 'to pass or exceed the compass of a year; also, to wax very old;' Cot. Thus superannate is for superannate; coined from super, above, and annus, a year. See Super and Annual. Der. superannation.

SUPERB, proud, magnificent. (F. — L.) Quite a late word; in Prior, Alma, c. i. l. 383. — F. superbe, 'proud.' Cot. — L. superbum, acc. of superbus, proud. — F. 1st. 'one who thinks himself (or is) above others,' for super-fu-os*, 'being above,' from super, above, and fu-, as in L. fu-i, I was. Brugmann, ii. § 4. See Super, Der. superb-ly.

SUPERCARGO, an officer in a merchant-ship. (L.; and Span. — C.) 'Supercargo, a person employed by the owners of a ship to go a voyage, to oversee the cargo, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Partially translated from Span. sobrecargo, a supercargo, by substituting L. super for Span. sobre, which is the Span. form of the same word. See Super and Cargo.

SUPEREROGATION, doing more than duty requires. (L.) 'Works of supererogation;' Articles of Religion, Art. 14 (1562). From Late L. supererogatio, that which is done beyond what is due. — L. supererogare, to pay out beyond what is expected. — L. super, above, beyond; erogare, to ask, rogare, to ask. The L. erogare = to lay out, expend money (lit. to ask out, require). See Super, E-, and Rogation.

SUPEREXCELLENT, very excellent. (L.; and F. — L.) Used by Spenser in a postscript to a letter to G. Harvey (R.). — L. super, above; and MF. excellens; see Super and Excellent.

SUPERFICIAL, the surface of a thing. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. superficie and surface. — L. superficius, upper face, surface. — L. super, above; and facies, a face; see Super and Face. Der. superficial, in Lydgate, Assembly of the Gods, l. 538, from F. superficiel, 'superficial,' Cot. from L. superficius; superficial-ly, -ness; also superficial-i-ty, spelt superficiety in Palgrave, from MF. superficialté, recorded by Palgrave. Doublet, surface.

SUPERFINE, extremely fine. (L.; and F. — L.) 'Many inventions are so superfine;' Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 500; also in Steel Glas, &c., ed. Arber, p. 31. Coined from super and fine; see Super and Fine (1).

SUPERFLUOUS, excessive. (L.) 'A superfluous abundance;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 1. [Palsgrave gives superflus as an E. word, from F. superflus, superfluous.] Englished from L. superfluous, overflowing. — L. super, over, and fluere, to flow; see Super- and Fluant. Der. superfluously; superfluity, ME. superfluit, Gower, C. A. ii. 201, bk. v. 2217, from F. superfluité, 'superfluity,' Cot., from L. acc. superfluitatem.

SUPERHUMAN, more than human. (L.; and F.-L.) Spelt superhumane in Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Super- and Human.

SUPERIMPOSE, SUPERINCUMBENT, SUPERINDUCE; see Super- and Impose, Incumbent, Induce.

SUPERINTENDENT, an overseer. (F.-L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — MF. superintendent, 'a superintendent;' Cot. — L. superintendens, stem of pres. part. of superintendere, to superintend. — L. super, over, above; and intendere, to attend to, apply the mind. See Super- and Intend. [The verb superintend is directly from the Latin.] Der. superintendence, from MF. superintendence, 'a superintendency;' Cot.

SUPERIOR, higher in rank, &c. (F.-L.) Now spelt so as to resemble Latin; spelt superiour in Palsgrave; superior in Caxton, Golden Legend, Adam; § 6. — MF. superieur, 'superiour;' Cot. — L. superiorem, acc. of superior, higher, comp. of superus, high, which is itself an old comp. form from sub + orig. sup*. Hence super-ior is a double comparative; see Super- and Sub-. Der. superiority, from MF. superiorit, 'superiority,' Cot., from Late L. acc. superioritatem.

SUPERLATIVE, superior, extreme, supreme. (F.-L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Palsgrave, p. xxviii. — F. superlatif, 'superlative;' Cot. — L. superlativus, superlative, as a gram. term. — L. superlatus, excessive; with suffix -ius, lit. 'carried beyond,' exaggerated. — L. super, beyond; and latus, carried, or borne. Latus < latus*; see Super- and Tolerate. Der. superlative-ly.

SUPERNATURAL, miraculous. (F.-L.) In Mach. i. 3. 130; and in Palsgrave. — MF. supernatural, 'supernatural;' Cot. See Super- and Natural. Der. supernatural-ly.

SUPERSEDE, to displace by something else, to come in place of something else. (F.-L.) The word has much changed its meaning, both in L. and E. Supersede in old authors means to desist, forbear, stay proceedings, &c. Thus Rich. quotes from the State Trials, 19 Hen. VIII. an. 1528: 'He [Hen. VIII.] desired the bishop of Paris to certify Francis, that if the Pope would supersede from executing his sentence, until he had indifferent [impartial] judges sent who might hear the business, he would also supersede from the execution of what he was deliberated to do in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman see.' 'Supersede, to suspend, demur, put off or stop an affair or proceeding, to countermand;' Phillips. Thus, the sense was to stay a proceeding, whence, by an easy transition, to substitute some other proceeding for it. A writ of supersedeas is, in some cases, a writ to stay proceedings, and is mentioned in P. Mowman, C. iii. 187, or which see my note. — OF. superseder, superseder (mod. F. superséder), 'to succceed, leave off, give over;' Cot. — L. supersedere, pp. supersessus, lit. sit upon, above; to preside over, to forbear, refrain, desist from. — L. super, above; and sedere, cognate with E. sit. See Super- and Sit. Der. supersession, from MF. supersession, 'a superseding, giving over, the suspension of an account upon the accountant's humble suit;' Cot. — L. supersessio*, acc. of supersessio*, not used, but regularly formed like supersessus, pp. of supersedere. Doublet, surcease, q. v.

SUPERSTITION, excessiveness in religious worship or belief. (F.-L.) Skelton has superstitions, s. pl., Philip Sparrow, l. 1350; he adj. superstition occurs in Acts, xvii. 22, in the Bible of 1551; and in the A. V.; also, spelt superstitions, in Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, st. iii. How the bishop Amphiarx, &c. — F. superstition, 'superstition;' Cot. — L. superstitium, acc. of superstitio, a standing still over or near a thing, amazement, wonder, dread, religious scruple. —

L. superstit, stem of superstes, one who stands near, a witness. — L. super, near, above; and statum, supine of stare, to stand, which is cognate with E. stand. See Super- and Stand. Der. superstitious, as above, from F. superstitieux, 'superstitious;' Cot., from L. adj. superstitiosus; superstitious-ly.

SUPERSTRUCTURE, the upper part of a building. (L.) 'In some places, as in Amsterdam, the foundation costs more than the superstructure;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 2. let. 15, May 1, 1622. From Super- and Structure.

SUPERVENE, to occur or happen in consequence of, to occur, happen. (L.) 'Supervening follies;' Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 12 (R.). — L. supervenire, to come upon or over, to come upon, to follow; pp. superventus. — L. super, over, upon, near; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Super- and Venture or Come. Der. supervent-ion, regularly formed like the pp. superventus.

SUPERVISE, to inspect, oversee. (L.) In Shak. L. L. iv. 2. 135. — L. super, above; and visere, to survey, formed from visum, supine of videre, to see. See Super- and Visit or Vision. Der. superwise, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 23: superwis-or, Oth. iii. 3. 395 (First Quarto): superwis-ion, ibid. (Folio editions). — L. supervisus, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 23: superwis-or, Oth. iii. 3. 395 (First Quarto): superwis-ion, ibid. (Folio editions).

SUPINE, lying on one's back, lazy. (L.) Sir T. Browne has supinity, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 5, § 3. 'Supine felicity;' Dryden, Astræa, 107. As a term in grammar; Palsgrave, p. xxviii. — L. supinus, backward, lying on one's back; extended, with suffix -us, from sup*, orig. form of sub, under, below; hence, downward. Cf. sup-er, from the same source. So also Gk. ὑπέρω, bent backwards, backward, lying on one's back, from ὑπό, under. See Sub-. Der. supine, sb., as a grammatical term, L. supinum, of which the applied sense is not very obvious (perhaps positive, absolute, like Gk. ὑπέρω, absolute, as applied to verbal forms); supine-ly, supine-ness; also supin-ity, as above, prob. obsolete.

SUPPER, a meal at the close of a day. (F.-L.) ME. supper, supper; spelt supper, Havelok, 1762. — OF. supper, supper, later couper, 'a supper;' Cot. It is the infim. mood used as a substantive, exactly as in the case of dinner. — OF. supper, supper, later couper, to sup, to eat a meal of bread sopped in gravy, &c. [Cf. OF. soûpe, soûpe, later coupe, 'a sop, a piece of bread in broth, also pottage or broth, wherein there is store of sops or snippets,' Cot.] — Low G. supen, to sup or sip up; Icel. sápa, Swed. supa, to sup; cognate with E. Sup, q. v.

SUPPLANT, to take the place of, displace, undermine. (F.-L.) ME. supplant, Gower, C. A. i. 239, bk. ii. 2369. — F. supplanter, 'to supplant, root or trip up;' Cot. — L. supplanter, to put something under the sole of the foot, to trip up the heels, overthrow. — L. sup (sub); and planta, the sole of the foot, also a plant. See Sub- and Plant. Der. supplant-er, spelt supplantour, in Gower, C. A. i. 261, bk. ii. 3024.

SUPPLE, pliant, lithe, fawning. (F.-L.) ME. soûple, Chaucer, C. T. 203; Rob. of Glouc. p. 223, l. 4577. — F. soûple, spelt soûple in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'supple, limber, tender, pliant.' — L. supplicem, acc. of supplex, in the old orig. sense of 'bending under,' hence submissive, which is the usual sense in Latin. The OF. soupler, vb., also kept the orig. sense, though the classical L. supplicare only means to beseech; hence Cotgrave has 'sowpleit, bent or bowed underneath, subject unto.' ¶ The formation of soûple from supplicem is precisely like that of E. double from duplicem, treble from triplicem, simple from simplicem. — Y. The L. supplex is from sup (sub) and the base plie, as seen in plie-ure, to fold. See Sub- and Ply; also Supplacate. Der. supple-ness.

SUPPLEMENT, that which supplies, an addition. (F.-L.) In Skelton, Carl. of Lauril, 415. — F. supplément, 'a supplement;' Cot. — L. supplementum, a supplement, filling up. — L. supple-re, to fill up; with suffix -mentum. — L. sup (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Supply. Der. supplemental, supplement-ary.

SUPPLIANT, entreating earnestly. (F.-L.) In Rich. II, v. 3. 75. — F. suppliant, 'suppliant;' Cot.; pres. pt. of supplier, 'humbly to pray,' id. — L. supplicare, to supplicate; see Supplacate. Doublet, supplicant.

SUPPLICATE, to entreat. (L.) In Blount, ed. 1674; it seems to be quite a late word, though supplication, spelt supplication, is in Gower, C. A. iii. 348, bk. viii. 2184, and supplicant in Shak. Complaint, 276. — L. supplicatus, pp. of supplicare, to supplicate. — L. supplic, stem of supplex, bending under or down, hence beseeching, suppliant; see Supple. Der. supplic-ant, from the stem of the pres. pt. of supplicare; supplicat-ory; supplication (as above), from F. supplication, 'a supplication,' Cot., from L. acc. supplicationem. Also supplic-er, q. v.

SUPPLY, to fill up a deficiency. (F.-L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 1. 38. Levins (1570) spells it supploy, and Huloet has suppluy; Palsgrave has suppluy. — OF. supplier; F. supplier, 'to supply';

Cot. = L. suppare, to fill up. — L. sup- (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Sub- and Plenary. Der. supply, sb., Hamlet, ii. 2. 241; and see supple-ment.

SUPPORT, to endure, sustain. (F.—L.) ME. supporten, Wyclif, 2 Cor. xi. 1. — F. supporter, 'to support'; Cot. = L. supportare, to carry, bring, or convey to a place; in Late L., to endure, sustain. — L. sup- (sub), near; and portare, to carry; see Sub- and Port (1). Der. support, sb., ME. support, Gower, C. A. iii. 193, bk. vii. 3207, from F. support, 'a support'; Cot.; support-er, support-able, support-ably.

SUPPOSE, to assume as true, imagine. (F.—L. and Gk.) ME. supposen, Chaucer, C. T. 6368 (D 786). — F. supposer, 'to suppose, to put, lay, or set under, to suborn, forge; also to suppose, imagine'; Cot. = F. sup-, prefix <L. sup- (sub), prefix, under; and F. poser, to place, put. Thus the orig. sense is 'to lay under, put under,' hence to substitute, forge, counterfeit; all of which are senses of L. supponere.

β. The F. poser is not from L. ponere, but from Gk., though it (with all its compounds) took up the senses of L. ponere. See further under Pos; and note Cotgrave's use of the verb to suppone, now obsolete. Der. suppos-er, suppos-able; but not supposition, q.v.

SUPPOSITION, an assumption, thing supposed. (F.—L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 18. — F. supposition, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th cent. (Littre). — L. suppositio, acc. of suppositio, properly 'a substitution,' but extended in meaning according to the extension of meaning of the verb supponere (pp. suppositus) from which it is derived. — L. sup- (sub), under, near; and ponere, to place; see Sub- and Position. Der. suppositi-iv-, spurious, substituted, from L. suppositivus, formed with suffix -iv- as from supposit-, stem of pp. of supponere, of which one sense was 'to substitute.' Also supposit-iv-, as in 'suppositories' are used where the patient is weak; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5, from L. suppositivus, that which is placed underneath. (See note on Suppose.)

SUPPRESS, to crush, keep in, retain, conceal. (L.) The instance of suppressed, cited by Rich. from Tydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii, The Answer of Ethioeles, is not to the point; it is clearly an error for surprised. For the verb suppress, see Palsgrave. — L. suppress-, pp. of supprimere, to press under, suppress. — L. sup- (sub), under; and primere, to press; see Sub- and Press. Der. suppress-er, L. suppressor; suppression, printed suppression in Sir T. More, p. 250 f, from F. suppression, 'suppression,' Cot., from L. acc. suppressionem. Also suppress-ive, a coined word.

SUPRAMUNDANE, situate above the world. (L.) 'Supra-mundane deities'; Waterland, Works, i. 86 (R.); and in Blount, ed. 1674. A coined word; from Supra- and Mundane. ¶ Similarly formed is supralapsarian, antecedent to the fall, from suprā, above, and laps-us, acc. of laps-us, a fall; with suffix -arian; see Lapse.

SUPREME, greatest, most excellent. (F.—L.) Accented supreme, Cor. iii. 1. 110; usually suprême, K. John, iii. 1. 155. — F. supreme, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre); now written suprême. — L. supremus, supreme, highest. Formed with superl. suffix -us from super-, an adverb allied to L. super, above. Brugmann, ii. § 75. See Super-. Der. supremely, also suprem-acy, K. John, iii. 1. 156 (cf. F. suprême, Littre, not in Cotgrave), a word arbitrarily formed on the model of primacy (OF. primacie, Late L. primatia) from primatus.

SUR- (1), prefix. (L.) For sub- before r following; see Sub-. Only in sur-reptitious and sur-rogate.

SUR- (2), prefix. (F.—L.) F. sur, prep., contr. from L. super, upon, above. Exx. sur-cause, sur-charge, sur-face, &c.

SURCEASE, to cease, to cause to cease. (F.—L.) It is obvious, from the usual spelling, that this word is popularly supposed to be allied to cease, with which it has no etymological connexion. It is a corruption of surcis or suraise, and is etymologically allied to supercede. It was very likely misunderstood from the first, yet Fabyan spells the word with a s for c, correctly. 'By whiche reason the kyngdome of Mercia suraised, that had continued from their firste kyng; 'Fabyan, Chron. c. 171, § 4. 'To suraise and leve off' [leave off]; Paston Letters, i. 390. β. But the verb is really due to the sb. surcease, a delay, cessation, which was in use as a law-term, and prob. of some antiquity in this use, though I do not know where to find an early E. example. It occurs in Shak. Macb. i. 7. 4, and (according to Richardson) in Bacon, Of Church Controversies; Nares cites an example from Danett's tr. of Comines (published in 1596 and 1600). — AF. suraise, a surcease. 'Ki le cri orat e suraisa, la surais eures li rei amand'; in Latin, 'qui clamore audito, iniqui supercederit, de suraisa erga regem emendet'; Laws of Will. I. § 50; F. surais, masc., suraise, fem., 'surceased, intermitted'; Cot. Littre quotes 'pendant ce surais' = during this delay, from Ségur, Hist. de Nap. x. 2. Surais is the pp. of AF. surseer (pr. pl. subj. surseis-ent), Stat. Realm, i. 49, 300; MF. surseoir, 'to surcease, pause, intermit, leave off, give over, delay or stay for a time,' Cot. — L. supercedere, to preside over, also to forbear, refrain, desist from, omit; see Supercede. The word also appears in F. as superceder, spelt also superceder in Cotgrave, and explained by 'to surcease, leave off, give over.' This shows that not only was surcease wrongly connected in the popular mind with cease, but that, even in F., superceder was similarly connected with L. cedere, from which cease is derived. Der. surcease, sb., really the older word, as shown above.

SURCHARGE, an over-load. (F.—L.) 'A surcharge, or greater charge'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 228. — AF. surcharge, Year-books of Edw. I. 1304-5, p. 45; F. surcharge, 'a surcharge, or a new charge'; Cot. = F. sur, from L. super, over; and charge, a load; see Sur- (2) and Charge. Der. surcharge, vb., from F. surcharger, 'to surcharge'; Cot.

SURCINGLE, a girth for a horse, a girdle. (F.—L.) 'Surcenglys and crowsers' [cropsers]; Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. vii. ch. 16; leaf 119, back. — OF. sourceingle, surcingle (Godefroy), MF. sursangle, 'a surcingle, or long girth'; Cot. = F. sur-, above; and OF. cingle, 'a girth,' Cot. = L. super, above; and cingula, a belt. See Sur- and Shingles.

SURCOAT, an outer garment. (F.—L. and G.) ME. surcoat, Chaucer, C. T. A 617. — AF. surcoat, Liber Custumarum, p. 226. See Sur- (2) and Coat.

SURD, inexpressible by a rational number or having no rational root. (L.) Cotgrave translates nombre surd by 'a surd number.' A term in mathematics, equivalent to irrational, in the math. sense. — L. surdus, deaf; hence, deaf to reason, irrational. The word is frequently applied to colours, when it means dim, indistinct, dull; thus surdus color = a dim colour, Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xxviii. c. 5. So likewise L. surdus = to be dirty. See Sordid, Brugmann, i. § 362. Der. surd, adj., irrational; absurd, q.v.

SURE, certain, secure. (F.—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. ME. sur, Will. of Palerne, 973; sur, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 203, 3. — OF. sur, seür, oldest form seür (Hugron); mod. F. sûr. — L. securus, secure, sure; see Secure. Der. sure, adv., sure-ly; sure-ty, ME. seurte, Will. of Palerne, 1463, also seurte, Chaucer, C. T. 4663 (B 243), from OF. seürte, seuriet, from L. acc. securitatem. Hence sure-ty, sure-ty, Prov. xl. 15. Doublets, secure, sicker.

SURF, the foam made by the rush of waves on the shore. (F.) This is a difficult word, being disguised by a false spelling; the r is unoriginal, just as in the word hoarse, which is similarly disguised. The spelling surf is in Defoe, Robinson Crusoe, ed. 1719, pt. i, in the description of the making of the raft. 'My Raft was now strong enough . . . my next care was . . . how to preserve what I laid upon it from the Surf of the Sea.' But the earlier spelling is suffe, with the sense of 'rush,' in a remarkable passage in Hakluyt's Voyages, ed. 1598, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 227, where we are told that certain small rafts are carried to the shore by the force of the in-rushing wave; 'the Suffe of the Sea setteth her [the raft's] lading dry on land.' So also: 'so neere the shore, that the counter-suffe of the sea would rebound against the shippes side'; id. iii. 848. β. This suffe is, I believe, a phonetic spelling of the word usually spelt sough, i.e. 'rush' or 'rushing noise'; see sough of the sea in Jamieson, who also spells it souff and souch. And see sough, souff, suff, in E. D. 1. The word sough has lost a w after the s; the Middle-English spelling is sough or swow, in the sense of 'rush,' or 'rushing sound.' 'For swough of his dyntee' = for the rushing sound of his blows; Morie Arthure, 1127. But it was particularly used of the swaying or rushing of the sea; with the swough of the sea = with the swaying motion [surf] of the sea; id. 759. Halliwell notes prov. E. swowe, 'to make a noise, as water does in rushing down a precipice; also, to foam or boil up,' &c. Cf. swowynge of watyre, rushing of water, accompanied by noise; Morie Arthure, 931. γ. The ME. verb swowen or swogen answers to AS. swogan, to make a rushing noise, &c., treated of under Swoon, q.v. The derived sb. in AS. took the form swög (with vowel-change from ō to ē), and this word answers in force, though not in form, to E. sough. Hence a secondary form swogan, with much the same sense as the primary verb swigau. In Luke, xxi. 25, we might almost translate swig by surf; 'for gedrödnese säs swiges and þja' = for confusion of the sound [surf] of the sea and waves; L. pre confusione sonitus maris. In Ælfric's Hom. i. 566, l. 7, we have: 'com sēo sās færlīce swēgende,' which Thorpe translates by 'the sea came suddenly sounding;' but it rather means rushing in, as appears by the context. In Ælfric's Hom. i. 562, l. 14, we read that a spring or well of water 'swēge ū;' i.e. rushed out, or gushed forth, rather than 'sounded out,' as Thorpe translates it. 8. There is thus plenty of authority for the use of ME. rough with the sense of 'rush' or 'noisy gush,' which will well explain both Hakluyt's suffe and mod. F. surf. I believe this will be found to be the right explanation. 9. We may connect surf with Norweg. sog in some of its senses, viz. (1) a noise, tumult, rushing sound; and (2) a current in a river, the inclination of a river-bed, where the stream is swift, i.e. a rapid. [This is distinct from Norweg. sog in the sense of 'sucking.'] 10. The usual explanation of surf from F. surfut [L. super-fluctus], 'the rising of billow upon billow, or the interchanged swelling of several waves,' as in Cotgrave, is unlikely; for (1) it interprets f as equivalent to a whole word, viz. F. flot, and (2) it is contradicted by the form suffe, which involves no r at all.

SURFACE, the upper face of anything. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. surface, 'the surface, the superficies;' Cot. Not directly derived from L. superficies, but compounded of F. sur (from L. super, above), and face (from L. facies, acc. of facies, the face); see SUR (2) and FACE. However, it exactly corresponds to L. superficies, which is compounded in like manner of super and facies. Hence the words are doublets. Doublet, superficies.

SURFET, excess in eating and drinking. (F.—L.) ME. surfet, P. Mowman, A. vii. 252; surfaif, id. B. vi. 267.—AF. surfet, a surfeit, A. Nominal, ed. Skeat, l. 343; OF. surfoif, excess (Burguy); orig. pp. of surfoire, later surfaire, 'to overprise, to hold at an overripe rate;' Cot.—OF. sor, F. sur, from L. super, above; and F. fait (pp. of faire), from L. factus (pp. of facere), to make, hence, to hold, deem. See SUR (2) and FACE. Der. surfeit, verb, spelt suffit in Palsgrave; surfet-ing, sb.

SURGE, the swell of waves; a billow. (F.—L.) The orig. sense was 'a rising' or 'rise, or source.' All great rivers are gurgled and assemble of divers surges and springs of water; Blemers, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 1. (R.). 'Wynodes and sources;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, bk. ii. c. 14. 'Thus with a surge of teares bedewde;' Turlerwey, The Louer to his carefull bed. 'Surge of the see, naque;' Palsgrave. Coined from OF. stem surgere, as in sourgeant, pres. pt. of sourdre, to rise.—L. urgere, to rise. Cf. MF. sourgein, 'the spring of a fountain, or the rising, boiling, or sprouting out of water in a spring.' Cot., which is likewise derived from the same L. verb. The proper F. sb. is source, E. source; see SOURCE.

β. The L. urgere makes p. t. urgere, showing that it is contracted from urgere; from L. sur (for sub before r), and regere, to rule, direct; thus the orig. sense was 'to direct or take one's way from under,' hence to rise up. See SUB and REGENT. Der. surge, verb, surgy. Also (from urgere) in-surgere, re-surgere-ion, source, re-source, sortie.

SURGEON, a chirurgeon, one who cures diseases by operating upon the patient. (F.—L.—Gk.) A very early contraction of chirurgion. MF. urgieu, P. Mowman, B. xx. 208; urgien, urgien, id. C. xiii. 310, 313; spelt chirurgia, Rob. of Glouc. p. 566, l. 11925.—OF. urgien (Godefroy); variant of chirurgia, urgien, a surgeon; see Lütke, s.v. chirurgia; the AF. forms urgien, urgien, urgien, urgien, all occur in Langtoft, Chron. ii. 104, 158; and urgien is in Britton, i. 34.—OF. chirurgia, later chirurgie, surgery; with suffix -en <L. -anus. See further under BURGERY.

SURGERY, the art practised by a surgeon, operation on a patient. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. surgerie, Chaucer, C. T. 415 (A 413). A variation of OF. chirurgia, urgie, later form chirurgie, surgery. We have, in fact, turned chirurgy or urgie into surgery; perhaps through a form urgien-ry; for the spelling urgien occurs as a reading in P. Mowman, B. xvi. 106.—Late L. chirurgia—Gk. χειρουργία, a working with the hands, handicraft, skill with the hands.—Gk. χέρον, from χέρον, the hand; and εργον, to work, allied to E. work; see CHIRURGEON and WORK. Der. surgeon, short for chirurgien, old form of chirurgion. Der. surge-al, short for chirurgial, formed with suffix -al (F. -al, L. -ialis) from Late I. chirurgia-us, an extended form of chirurgus—Gk. χειρουργός, working with the hand, skilful; hence surge-al-ly.

SURLIN, the upper part of a loin of beef. (F.—L.) Frequently spelt surlain, owing to a fable that the loin of beef was knighted 'by one of our kings in a fit of good humour;' see Johnson. The 'king' was naturally imagined to be the merry monarch Charles II, though Richardson says (on no authority) that it was 'so entitled by King James the First.' Both stories are discredited by the use of the orig. F. word surlonge in the fourteenth century; see Littre. Indeed, Wedgwood cites 'A surlain beef, vii. d.' from an account of expenses of the Ironmongers' Company, temp. Henry VI; with a reference to the Athenæum, Dec. 28, 1867 (p. 902). Cotgrave explains MF. haut coste by 'a surlain.'—F. surlonge, 'a surlain,' Hamilton; see Littre for its use in the 14th cent.—F. sur, from L. super, above, upon; and longe, a loin; see SUPER and LOIN.

SURLY, morose, uncivil. (E.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 3. 42; &c. 'The orig. meaning [or rather, the meaning due to popular etymology] seems to have been sir-like, magisterial, arrogant. "For shepherds, said he, there doen leade As Lordes done other-where . . . Sike syrlie shepherds han we none;" Spenser, Sheph. Kal. July, 185-203. Ital. signoreggiare, to have the mastery, to domineer; signoreggiavole, magisterial, haughty, stately, surl; Altieri. Faire du grobis, to be proud or surly, to take much state upon him; Cotgrave:—Wedgwood. I give the quotation from Cotgrave slightly altered to the form in which it stands in ed. 1660. As to the spelling, it is remarkable that while Spenser has syrlie, the Glosses to the Sheph. Kal. by E. K. has 'surl, stately and providle.' Drant (1566) has 'His surl corps in rtyche array;' tr. of Horace, Sat. 3. Minshew has surlie. Cotgrave has: 'Sourcilieux, . . . surl, or proud of countenance.' It answers to prov. E. sourlike, ill-tempered, cross, surl, lit. 'sour-like' (E. D. D.); and the n has been shortened before rl, as in burly from an AS. form bur-līc*; see BURLY. Cf. prov. E. sour, ill-tempered, surl, cross (E. D. D.); and Baret has 'sourre, morose.' See SOUR. Cf. G. sner, sour, sury; MSwed. surl (the same); Swed., Dan. syrlig, sourish. And note ME. surdagh, sour dough; Voc. 663. 22. Der. surl-ly, surl-ness.

SURMISE, an imagination, suspicion, guess. (F.—L.) Levins has surmise both as sb. and vb.; so has Baret (1580). Caxton has: 'xxxm li. that he had surmyned on hym to have stolen;' Golden Legend, Th. Becket, § 4. Halliwell gives the obs. verb surmit, with an example.—OF. surmise, an accusation, charge (Roquefort); properly fem. of surmis, pp. of surmettre, to charge, accuse, lit. 'to put upon,' hence to lay to one's charge, make one to be suspected of.—F. sur, from L. super, upon, above; and F. mettre, to put, from L. mittere, to send; see SUPER and MISSION. Der. surmise, verb; surmisal, Milton, Church Government, ii. Int.

SURMOUNT, to surpass. (F.—L.) MF. surmonnen, spelt sarmonnen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 8, l. 19.—F. surmonier, 'to surmount;' Cot. From SUR (2) and MOUNT (2). Der. surmount-able, in-surmount-able.

SURNAME, a name added to the Christian name. (Hybrid; F.—L.; and E.) In Trevisa, iii. 265, l. 10. See Treuch, Study of Words. A partial translation of ME. surnom, spelt surnoun in Chron. of Eng. 982 (in Ritson, Met. Romances, ii. p. 311), from F. surnom, 'a surname;' Cot.—F. sur, from L. super, over, above; and L. name. See SUPER and NAME; and see NOUN. So also Span. sobrenombre, Ital. soprannome. Der. surname, verb.

SURPASS, to go beyond, excel. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 58.—F. surpasser, 'to surpass,' Cot. From SUR (2) and PASS. Der. surpass-ing, surpass-able, un-surpass-able.

SURPLICE, a white garment worn by the clergy. (F.—L.) Spelt surplis, surflys, in Chaucer, C. T., A 323.—F. surplis, 'a surplis;' Cot.—Late L. superpellicium, a surplice.—L. super, above; and pellicium, neut. of pellicus, pellicus, made of skins; see SUPER and PELLAS. Cf. 'surplice, superpellicium;' Prompt. Parv. So also Span. sobrepellice.

SURPLUS, overplus, excess of what is required. (F.—L.) ME. surplus, Gower, C. A. iii. 24; bk. vi. 682.—F. surplus, 'a surplussage, overplus;' Cot.—L. super, above; and plus, more; see SUPER and PLURAL. Der. surplus-age, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 18; 1-ydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. Of a tame tiger, &c.; see Richardson.

SURPRISE, a taking unawares. (F.—L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, v. 5. 131. The verb (though from the F. sb.) occurs earlier, Rom. of the Rose, 3235.—OF. surprise, surprise (Burguy), MF. surprins, 'a surprisall, or sudden taking;' Cot. Properly fem. of surpris, surpris (surpris in Cot.), pp. of sorprendre, surprendre, 'to surprise, to take napping,' Cot.—F. sur, from L. super, above, upon; and prendre, from L. prehendere, to take; see SUPER and PREHENSILE. Cf. Ital. sorprendere, to surprise. Der. surprise, verb, surprisal (in Cotgrave, as above), surpris-ing, -ing-ly.

SURREBUTTER; see SURREJOINDER.

SURREJOINDER, a rejoinder upon, or in answer to, a rejoinder. (F.—L.) 'The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a surrejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a surrebut;' Blackstone, Comment., b. iii. c. 20 (R.). And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The prefix is F. sur, upon, hence, in answer to; see SUR (2) and REJOIN. And see REBUT.

SURRENDER, to render up, resign, yield. (F.—L.) 'I surrender ie surrends;' Palsgrave.—OF. surrendre, to deliver up into the hands of justice, Roquefort, Palsgrave; not in Cotgrave. — F. sur, upon, up; and rendre, to render; see Sur- (3) and Render. Der. surrender, sb., Hamlet, l. 2. 23.

SURREPTITIOUS, done by stealth or fraud. (F.—L.) 'A soden surreptitious delyte.' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1278 (miscalled 1276) g. — L. surreptitius, better surrepticius, stolen, done stealthily. — L. surreptum, supine of surripere, to pilfer, purloin. — L. sur- (for sub before r), under, secretly; and rapere, to seize. See Sur- (1) and Rapid. Der. surreptitious-ly.

SURROGATE, a substitute, deputy of an ecclesiastical judge. (L.) In Mount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. surrogatus, pp. of surrogare, to substitute, elect in place of another. — L. sur- (for sub before r), under, in place of; and rogare, to ask, elect. See Sur- (1) and Rogation.

SURROUND, to encompass. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Altered in sense by association with round; but the orig. sense was 'to overflow.' 'The waters more abounded, And . . . all abroad surrounded;' Marlowe, tr. of Ovid, bk. iii. Elegy 6. 'Oultracouler, to surround or overflow;' Cot. Orig. surround (with one r): 'by the crease of waters dyers londes and tenementes in grete quantite ben surrounded and destroyed;' Stat. of Hen. VII (1489); pr. by Caxton, fol. c. 7. — OF. sourrouder, sorouder, surrouder, to overflow (Godefroy). — L. super, over; and uolare, to flow, from unda, a wave. So also red-ound, ab-ound, from OF. red-ouder, ab-ouder. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 286.

SURTOUT, an overcoat, close frock-coat. (F.—L.) In Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 250. 'Surtout, a great upper coat;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Worn over all. — F. sur tout, over all. — L. super totum, over the whole; see Super- and Total.

SURVEILLANCE, inspection. (F.—L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. surveillance, superintendence; Hamilton. — F. surveillant, pres. part. of surveiller, to superintend. — F. sur, from L. super, over; and veiller, from L. uigilare, to watch; see Sur- (2) and Vigil. F. veillance < L. uigilantia.

SURVEY, to look over, inspect. (F.—L.) 'To survey, or oversee;' Minshew, ed. 1627. The obs. sb. surveyance, surveyance, is in Chaucer, C. T. 12029 (C 95). — AF. surveiier, Liber Albus, 512. — F. sur, over; and OF. veier, veier, later veoir, 'to see;' Cot. — L. super, over; and videre, to see; see Super- and Vision. And see Supervisee. Der. survey, sb., All's Well, v. 3. 16; survey-or (surveyors in Prompt. Parv.), AF. surveiier, Stat. Reale, l. 289 (1340), survey-or-ship.

SURVIVE, to overlive, outlive. (F.—L.) Spelt survive in Palsgrave. — F. survivre, 'to survive;' Cot. — L. supervivere, to outlive. — L. super, above; and vivere, to live; see Super- and Vital. Der. survival, a coined word, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Olys. b. i. 638; survival, Hamlet, l. 2. 90; survival-or-ship.

SUP-, prefix. (L.) L. sus-, prefix; for supra, an extended form of super, old form of sub, under; so also Gk. ὑπέρ, aloft, ὑπέρ-or, height, from ὑπέρ; see Sub-. Der. sus-ceptible, sus-pend, sus-pect, sus-tain.

SUSCEPTIBLE, readily receiving anything, impressible. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — F. susceptible, 'susceptible, capable;' Cot. — L. susceptibilis, ready to undertake. — L. sus-cepti-, for susceptus, pp. of suscipere, to undertake; with suffix -ibilis. — L. sus-, for supra, extension of super, orig. form of sub, under; and capere, to take; see Sus- and Captive. Der. susceptibility, a coined word; susceptive, from L. susceptivus, capable of receiving or admitting.

SUSPECT, to mistrust, conjecture. (F.—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. The word was orig. a pp., as in Chaucer, where it is used adjectivally, with the sense of 'suspicious,' C. T. 8417 (E 541). — F. suspect, 'suspected, mistrusted;' Cot. — L. suspectus, pp. of suspiciere, to look under, look up to, admire, also to mistrust. — L. sus-, for super, extension of super, orig. form of sub, under; and specere, to look; see Sub- and Spy. Der. suspect-ion, ME. suspicion, K. Alexander, 453; OF. suspeccion (Burguy), later suspicion, 'suspicion' Cot. (mod. F. suspicion), from L. suspiciōem, acc. of suspicio, suspicion; hence suspicio-ion, ME. suspicion, Chaucer, C. T. 8416 (E 540); suspicio-ion-ly, -ness. Observe that the old spellings suspicion, suspicion, have been modified so as to accord more closely with the L. originals.

SUSPEND, to hang beneath or from, to make to depend on, delay. (F.—L.) ME. suspenden, Rob. of Glouc., p. 563, l. 11818. — F. suspendre, 'to suspend;' Cot. — L. suspendere (pp. suspensus), to hang up, suspend. — L. sus-, for supra, extension of super, orig. form of sub, under; and pendere, to hang; see Sus- and Pendant. Der. suspend-or. Also suspense, properly an adj. or pp., as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 34, from F. suspens, 'doubtful, uncertain;' Cot., from L. pp. suspensus, suspended, wavering, hesitating; suspension-ion, from F. suspension, 'a suspension or suspending;' Cot., from L. acc. suspensio, suspension; suspension-or-y, from MF. suspensioire, 'hanging, suspensory, in suspense;' Cot.; suspension-or-y, sh., a hanging bandage, &c.

SUSPICION; see under Suspect.

SUSTAIN, to hold up, bear, support. (F.—L.) ME. susteynen, susteynen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 111, l. 2412. — AF. sustein-, a stem of OF. sustēin, sustēin, spelt sustēin in Cot.; mod. F. soutenir. — L. sustinere, to uphold. — L. sus-, for supra, extension of super, orig. form of sub, up; and tenere, to hold; see Sus- and Tenable. Der. sustain-er, sustain-able; also sustenance, ME. sustenance, Rob. of Glouc., p. 41, l. 975, from OF. sustenance, spelt sustenance in Cotgrave, from L. sustentantia; also sustent-ai-ion, Bacon, Essay 58, from L. acc. sustentantium, maintenance, from sustentare, frequent. form of sustinere (pp. sustentus).

BUTLER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 116. — Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually soetelaar; in Hexham soetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from soetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victuall;' Hexham.

SUTLER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 116. — Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually soetelaar; in Hexham soetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from soetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victuall;' Hexham. SUTTER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 116. — Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually soetelaar; in Hexham soetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from soetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victuall;' Hexham. SUTTER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 116. — Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually soetelaar; in Hexham soetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from soetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victuall;' Hexham.

SUTTER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 116. — Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually soetelaar; in Hexham soetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from soetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victuall;' Hexham. SUTTER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from soetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victuall;' Hexham.

SUTURE, a seam. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. suture, 'a suture or seam;' Cot. — L. sūtra, a suture; cf. sūta, pp. of sūto, to sew; cognate with E. sew.

SUZERAIN, a feudal lord. (F.—L.) Not in Johnson; used by Scott, Quentin Durward, ch. 35. — F. suzerain, 'sovereign, yet subaltern, superior, but not supreme;' Cot. A coined word; made from F. sus (L. sūsum or sursum, above), in the same way as sovereign is made from L. super; it corresponds to a Late L. type sūserānus*, for sūserānus*. SUZERAIN, a feudal lord. (F.—L.) Not in Johnson; used by Scott, Quentin Durward, ch. 35. — F. suzerain, 'sovereign, yet subaltern, superior, but not supreme;' Cot. A coined word; made from F. sus (L. sūsum or sursum, above), in the same way as sovereign is made from L. super; it corresponds to a Late L. type sūserānus*, for sūserānus*. SUZERAIN, a feudal lord. (F.—L.) Not in Johnson; used by Scott, Quentin Durward, ch. 35. — F. suzerain, 'sovereign, yet subaltern, superior, but not supreme;' Cot. A coined word; made from F. sus (L. sūsum or sursum, above), in the same way as sovereign is made from L. super; it corresponds to a Late L. type sūserānus*, for sūserānus*.

SWAB, to clean the deck of a vessel. (Du.) Shak. has swabber, Temp. ii. 2. 48; whence the verb to swab has been evolved. The sb. is borrowed directly from Du. zuabber, 'a swabber, the drudge of a ship;' Sewel. Cf. Du. zuabberen, to swab, do dirty work. — Swed. swabb, a fire-brush, swabla, to swab; Dan. svæbe, to swab; G. schwabber, a swabber, schwabber-stock, a mop-stick; schwabbern, to swab. Cf. also Norw. svabba, to splash about, Pomeran. svabbeln, to splash about; Low G. swappen, to shake about (said of liquids; Dannel); G. schwabbeln, to shake to and fro. Allied to Lith. švāp-ti, to rock; Slovenian svāp-ti, to totter (Miklosich, p. 330). Of imitative origin. Cf. ME. quappen, to palpitate; E. swap, swash. Der. swabb-er.

SWADDLE, to swathe an infant. (E.) 'I swaddell a chyld;' Palsgrave. Also spelt swaddell, swadde in Levins. Swaddell stands for swathel, and means to wrap in a swathel or swaddling-band. ME. swadband, a swaddling-band; spelt swadband, swadling-band, swapeling-bande in Cursor Mundi, 1343; whence the pp. swaddell, swathel = swaddled, id. 11236. — AS. swadell, a swaddling-band, spelt swadell in the Corpus Gloss, 833. The sense is 'that which swathes;' formed with suffix -el, -il (ldg. -lo-), representing the agent, from the verb to swathe; see Swathe. Der. swaddling-band; swaddling-clothes, Luke, ii. 7.

SWAGGER, to hector, to be boisterous. (Scand.) In Shaks. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79. 'To swagger in gait is to walk in an affected manner, swaying from one side to the other;' Wedgwood. It is the frequentative of swag, now almost disused. 'I swagge, as a fatte persons belly swaggeth as he goth;' Palsgrave. 'Swag, to hang loose and heavy, to sag, to swing about;' Halliwell. — Norweg. vagg (Ross), allied to svaga, to sway; Aasen. Cf. Icel. svagga, to cause to sway; Norw. vagg (Ross), Dan. sugg, a fat, thumping fellow (Larsen). Allied to Sway. Der. swagger-er.

SWAIN, a young man, peasant. (Scand.) ME. swain, Chaucer, C. T. 4025 (A 4027); swain, Havelok, 273. [The form is Scand., not E.; the AS. form was swān, Grein, ii. 500, which would have given a mod. E. swone, like stone from stān. We do, indeed, find swain in the A.S. Chron. an. 1128, but this is borrowed from Scand.] = Icel. swinn, a boy, lad, servant; Dan. svend, a swain, journeyman, servant; Swed. sven, a young man, a page; + Low G. swenen, a swineherd, Hannover (Brem. Würt.); O.H.G. swin, a servant. β. The Teut. type is swainaz*; which may (formally) be allied by gradation to AS. swin, a swine, with the sense of 'swine-herd'; as in Low G. swenen. But if it be allied to Lith. swaine, a sister-in-law, it is from another source. Der. boat-swain, cox-swain.

SWALLOW (1), a migratory bird. (E.) ME. swallowe, Prompt. Parv.; Chaucer, C. T. 3258. AS. swalewa, a swallow; Voc. 132. 28. + Du. swaluw; Icel. swala, for swalewa*, gen. swölur; Dan. swale; Swed. swala; G. schwalbe; O.H.G. swalawa. β. The Teut. type is swalwōn*, f. Cf. E.Fries. swälke, Low G. swaalke, a swallow. The prob. sense is 'tosser about,' or 'mover to and fro;' allied to Gk. σαλεύειν, to shake, to move to and fro, to toss like a ship at sea; σάλος, the tossing rolling swell of the sea. See Swell. Fick, i. 842. Cf. M.Du. swalpen, 'to flote, to toss, beat against with waves,' swalpe, a tossing, swalcke, a swallow; Hexham.

SWALLOW (2), to absorb, ingest, receive into the stomach. (E.) ME. swolowen, swolwen, Chaucer, C. T. 16985 (H 36); also swolthen, Juliana, p. 74, l. 4; swolthen, Ormulun, 10224 (written swolthen in the MS.). Thus the final w stands for an older guttural. It is a secondary form, modified from the AS. strong verb swelgan, to swallow, pt. t. swelg, pp. swolgen; Grein, ii. 505. + Du. swelgen; Icel. swelgja, pt. t. swalg, pp. swolginn; also as a weak verb; Dan. swelge; Swed. swälja; G. schwelgen, to eat or drink immoderately. The strong and weak forms are confused. The strong verb is of the Teut. type swelgan*; pt. t. swalg*, pp. swulganoz*. Der. ground-swall, q. v.

SWAMP, wet spongy land, boggy ground. (E.) Not found in old books. Swamp*, Swomp, a bog or marshy place, in Virginia or New England; Phillips, ed. 1706. This points to its being a prov. E. word. According to Rich., it occurs in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685. Prob. a native word. + Du. zwamp, a swamp (Calisch). With a change to a weak grade, we have prov. E. swimp (for swump*), a puddle, G. sumpf, a swamp (whence Du. somp). We also find prov. E. swank, swang, a swamp; Norw. and Swed. dial. swank. Connexion with Dan. and Swed. svamp, a sponge, fungus, AS. swamm, G. schwamm, Goth. swammis, sponge, is not clear. Cf. Gk. σπομφός, spongy. Der. swamp, v., swamp-y, swamp-i-ness.

SWAN, a large bird. (E.) ME. swan, Chaucer, C. T. 206. AS. swan, Grein, ii. 500. + Du. zwaan; Icel. svanr; Dan. svane; Swed. svan; G. schwan. The Teut. types are swanaz*, swanon-*. The form suggests connexion with Skt. swan, to resound, sound, sing; cf. l. sonire, to sound. 'Argutos . . olores,' Vergil, Ecl. ix. 36.

SWAN-HOPPING, taking up swans to mark them. (E.) A mistaken form of swan-apping (Halliwell). Swans, esp. on the Thames, are annually taken up for the purpose of marking them by certain nicks made upon their bills. That the old word was really apping is shown by a tract dated 1570, printed in Hone's Every-day Book, vol. ii. col. 958-962. In sect. 8 there is mention of 'the apping-daies.' In sect. 15—'the swan-herdes . . shall vp no swannes,' &c. In sect. 14—'that no person take up any cignet unmarked,' and in sect. 28—'the maister of the swannes is to have for every white swanne and gray apping, a penny.'

SWAP, to strike. (E.) ME. swappen; 'Swap of his heed' = strike off his head; Chaucer, C. T. 15834 (G 366). 'Beoifs to him swapte' = Beoofs went swiftly to him; Layamon, 26775 (later text). An E. word. + E.Fries. swappen, to strike noisily, from swap, the sound of a blow; + prov. G. (dial. of Thüringen, by L. Hertel) schwappen, to make swinging movements, to cut; G. schwapp, schwappes, Low G. swaps, interj. slap, smack! crack! said of a blow. Imitative; cf. E. slap, whap, prov. E. swack, a blow. Cf. SWOOP.

SWARD, green turf, grassy surface of land. (E.) It formerly meant also skin or covering; the green-sward is the turf surface of the land; the prov. E. sward-pork is bacon cured in large slitches or flakes (Halliwell, Forby). 'Swardes, or swordes of flesh, Coriana; Swardes of be-erpe, turffing, or sward of erth, Cespes,' Prompt. Parv. pp. 482, 506. AS. swærd, skin; Voc. 265. 9. + Du. zwaard, skin of bacon; Icel. svörðr, skin, hide of the walrus, sword or surface of the earth; jarðar-svörðr, earth-sword, grasvörðr, grass-sword; Dan. flekkswar, flesh-sword, skin of bacon; grasvæver, green-sward; G. schwerte, rind, bark, skin, outside-plank. β. The Teut. type perhaps is swarduz*, with the sense of 'rind.' Root unknown. Der. sward-ed, green-sward.

SWARM, a cluster of bees or insects. (E.) ME. swarm, Chaucer, C. T. 15398 (B 4582); AS. swarm (Bosworth). + Du. zuurm; Icel.

svarmr; Dan. sværm; Swed. svärm; G. schwarm; MHG. swarm. β. Teut. type swarmoz*, where -moz is a noun-suffix, as in bloo-m, doo-m. The sense is 'that which hums,' from the buzzing made by a swarm of bees. Cf. Lithuan. surma, a pipe or rife, from the sound it makes; Russ. свистелъ, a pipe, G. schwirren, to buzz, white, surren, to hum, buzz. = SWIRE, to hum, buzz; whence Skt. svr, to sound, svara, a sound, voice; l. ssuruss, a hum, whisper. Brugmann, i. § 375 (8). Der. swarm, verb, AS. swierman, swyrmān, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 384, l. 21. And see swear.

SWARTH, SWARTHY, black, tawny. (E.) The proper form is swart; thence a less correct form swarth was made, occurring in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. xix. l. 343; and hence swarth-y (= swart-y) by the help of suffix -y (AS. -ig) occasionally added to adjectives (as in murk-y). Shak. has swarth, Titus, ii. 3. 72; swarthy, Two Gent. ii. 6. 26; swarty, Titus, ii. 3. 72, in the quarto editions. ME. swart, spelt swart in Robt. of Glouc., p. 490, l. 10049. AS. swearth, black; Grein, ii. 507. + Du. zwart; Icel. svartir; Dan. sort; Swed. svart; G. schwarz; O.H.G. swarz, swarz; Goth. swarts. β. The Teut. type is swartoz*; allied to l. sordes, dirt, sordidus, dirty, and prob. to l. surdus, dim-coloured. The Norse god Surt, i. e. Swart, is the god of fire; this suggests a connexion with Skt. svar, the sun. Perhaps swart meant 'blackened by fire.' Der. swarth-y or swart-y, as above; swarth-ly, swarth-i-ness. And see serene, solar.

SWASH, to strike with force. (E.) 'Thy swashing blow,' Romeo, i. 1. 70. Swashing is also swaggering, and a swasher is a swaggerer, a bully; As You Like It, i. 3. 122, Hen. V. iii. 2. 30. Of imitative origin; cf. Swed. dial. svasska, to make a 'squashing' or 'swashing' noise, as when one walks with water in the shoes (Rietz). β. By the interchange of ks and sk (as in prov. E. axe = to ask), svasska stands for svak-sa*, an extension from a base SWAK. Norweg. svakka, to make a noise like water under the feet; Ansen, Cf. prov. E. swack, a blow or fall, swacking, crushing, huge; swag, the noise of a heavy fall (Halliwell). Der. swash-buckler, in Fuller, Worthies of England, iii. 347 (Cent. Diet.); one who strikes his buckler with a swashing blow, hence, a noisy ruffian.

SWATH, a row of mown grass. (E.) ME. swathe. 'A mede . . . In swathes swuppen down' = a meadow, mown (lit. swept) down in swaths; Allit. Morte Arthure, 2508. 'Cam him no fieres swathe ner' = no track (or trace) of fire came near him; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 3786. AS. swæth, swaðu, a track, trace, Grein, ii. 500, 501. E.Fries. swad, + Du. zwaard, a swathe; also zwaard, zwade, 'a swath, a row of grass mowed down'; Sewel; G. schwad, a row of mown grass. β. The sense 'row of mown grass' is the orig. one, whence that of track or foot-track easily follows. This appears by comparing Low G. swad, a swath, with swade, a scythe; see Brem. Wörterbuch, pt. iv. 1107, where the E.Friesic swade, swae, swah, a scythe, is also cited. γ. The earliest meaning may have been a 'shred' or 'slice'; cf. Norw. swada, vb. act. and neut., to shred or slice off, to flake off. See Du. zwaard in Franck.

SWATHE, to bind in swaddling-cloths, to bandage. (E.) Shak. has swath, (1) that which the mower cuts down with one sweep of the scythe, Troil. v. 5, 25; (2) a swaddling cloth, Timon, iv. 3. 252; also swathing-clothes, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 112; swathing-clouts, Hamlet, ii. 2. 401; enswathed, Complaint, 49. ME. swathen, pt. t. swathed, Cursor Mundi, 11236. From a base swað-; whence also AS. swæðinn, in comp. beswæðian, to enwrap, John, xix. 40 (Lindisfarne MS.); A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 18, l. 8; and AS. swæð-el, swað-il, a swaddling band; see SWADDLE. ¶ Perhaps (see Swath) the AS. swað-u meant orig. a shred; hence (1) as much grass as is mown at once, (2) a shred of cloth used as a bandage. Der. swadd-le (for swath-le).

SWAY, to swing, incline to one side, influence, rule over. (E.) ME. swayen, Gawan and Green Knight, 1429; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 151. It also means to go, walk, come, Allit. Poems, B. 788, C. 429; spelt swaye, id. C. 72, 236. Cf. Swed. svaja, to jerk; Dan. svaie, to swing to and fro, to sway; Du. zwaaien, to sway, swing; E.Fries. swaaien, Low G. swaiein. β. All from the Teut. base SWAG, to sway, swing, well preserved in Norweg. svaga, to sway, swing, reel, stagger (Aasen). Allied to SWAGGER; and perhaps even to SWING. Der. sway, sb., Jul. Caesar, i. 3. 3, ME. swaigh, Chaucer, C. T. 4716 (B 296).

SWEAL, to singe, scorch slightly. (E.) See under Sultry. SWEAR, to affirm to be true, to affirm with an oath, to use oaths freely. (E.) ME. sweren, strong verb, pt. t. swor, swoor, Robt. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 776; pp. sworen, sworn, Havelok, 439. AS. swerian, pt. t. swör, pp. sworen, to swear, Grein, ii. 506. We also find AS. swerian, with the simple sense of speak or declare, conjugated as a weak verb, particularly in the comp. andswerian, to declare in return, to answer. The orig. sense was simply to speak aloud, declare. + Du. sweren, pt. t. zwoor, pp. gezworen; Icel. sverja, pt. t. ör, pp.

swarinn; Dan. swarge; Swed. swarga; G. schwären. And cf. Goth. swaran, Icel. swara, Dan. sware, Swed. swara, to answer, reply. β. All from SWER*, to hum, buzz, make a sound; whence also Skt. śr, to sound, to praise, swara, sound, a voice, tone, accent, I. śusurra, a humming, and I. swarm; see SWARM. Brugmann, i. § 121. Der. swear-ug, for sworu; an-swer.

SWEAT, moisture from the skin. (E.) ME. swout (Tyrwhitt prints swete), Chaucer, C. T. 16046 (G 578); whence the verb sweten, id. 16047 (G 579). AS. swēat, Grein, ii. 501. (By the usual change from ā to long o, AS. swēat became ME. swoot, and should have been swote in mod. E.; but the word has been altered in order to make the sb. accord with the derived verb, viz. AS. swōtan, ME. swēten, mod. E. sweat, with the ea shortened to the sound of e in let (ME. liten < AS. litan). The spelling swet would, consequently, be better than swat, and would also be phonetic.) β-Du. zweet; Icel. svēiti; Dan. svet; Swed. svett; G. schweiss; OHG. swēiz. β. The Teut. stem is swaito-*, sweat, cognate with Skt. swēda-, sweat; from Teut. base SWET*, to sweat, of which we find (weak-grade) traces in Icel. sviit, swat, G. schwitzen. This answers to Idg. SWEID*, to sweat, whence Skt. svīd, to sweat, L. sudor (for sudōr*), swat, Gk. hī-pūs, sweat, W. chwys, sweat. Brugmann, i. § 331 c. Der. swed, verb, AS. swētan, as above; swent-y, swet-i-ness; and see sud-ar-i-f-c.

SWEEP, to brush, strike with a long stroke, pass rapidly over. (E.) ME. swepen, Chaucer, C. T. 16049 (G 936); pt. sweped, Pricke of Conscience, 4947. A weak secondary verb from the base swēp-*, as in swiþþ, 3rd p. s. pres. t. of AS. swēpan, to sweep, a strong verb with pt. t. swēþ, Grein, ii. 500. Cf. ge-swēpa, pl. sweepings, Voc. 464, 20. [This AS. swēpan is represented in mod. E. by the verb to SWOOP, q.v.] Cf. also OFries. swēpa, to sweep; OFries. swēfen (pt. t. swēf-de), to swing, swing, vibrate. Also MSwed. swēpa, Swed. sopa, Icel. sipa. From Teut. base swaiþ*, and grade of Teut. root swēp*. See SWIPE. Cf. Icel. swēpa, to sweep along, a wk. vb., from an old verb swipa (pt. t. swēp); also OHG. swēfan (pt. t. swēf), whence G. schweifen, to rove, stray, sweep; along. Brugmann, i. § 701. Der. swēp, sb., Timon, i. 2, 137; sweep-er, chimney-sweep-er (often used in the forms sweep, chimney-sweep, cf. AS. hunta, ME. hunte, a hunter); sweep-ings; sweep-stake, the same as swoop-stake, sweeping off all the stakes at once, Hamlet, iv. 5, 142, whence sweep-stakes, sb., the whole money staked at a horse-race that can be won or swept up at once.

SWEET, pleasing to the senses, esp. to the taste. (E.) ME. swete, Chaucer, C. T. 3206; with the by-forms swote, sote, id. 3205. AS. swēte, Grein, ii. 506; OSax. swēti; Du. zoet; Icel. sætr, sætr; Dan. sød; Swed. söt; G. süss; OHG. swēzi; Goth. sait. β. The AS. e is a modified i; cf. the ö in Dan. sød, Swed. söt. The AS. swēte is for swētiz*, adj.; where swēn* is the 2nd grade of swal-, answering to Idg. SWAD, to please, to taste nice, whence also Skt. swād, swād, to taste, to eat, to please, swānu, sweet, Gk. hōs, sweet, I. suīnuis (for suānuis*), pleasant, suādere, to persuade. Der. sweet-ly, sweet-ness; sweet-bread, the pancreas of an animal, so called because sweet and resembling bread; sweet-briar, Milton, I. Allegro, 47; sweets, pl. sb., Cor. iii. 1, 157; sweet-ish, sweet-ish-ness; sweet-en, to make sweet, Rich. II. ii. 3, 13; sweet-en-er, sweet-en-ing; sweet-ing, formed with a dimin. suffix -ing, a term of endearment, Oth. ii. 3, 25, also a kind of sweet apple, Romeo, ii. 4, 83; sweet-foo, sweet-fool; sweet-william, Bacon, Essay 46, § 6 (from the name William). Also sweet-meat, lit. sweet food, chiefly in the pl., ME. swete mete, Hecurysoun, Test. of Crescide, l. 420; see MEAT. And see sweet-heart, below.

SWEETHEART, a lover or mistress. (E.) Used as a term of endearment. The derivation is simply from sweet and heart; it is not an absurd hybrid word with the F. suffix -ard (= OHG. -hart), as has been supposed. Crescide calls Troilus her 'dere herte' and her 'swete herte' both; Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1181-1183. Again, he calls her my swete herte dere, id. iii. 1210; and in the last line of bk. iii we read: 'Is with Crescide his own herte swet.' Further examples are needless, but may easily be found in the same poem and elsewhere.

SWELL, to grow larger, expand, rise into waves, heave, bulge out. (E.) ME. swellen, strong verb, pt. t. swal, Chaucer, C. T. 6549 (D 967), pp. swollen, id. 8826 (E 950). AS. swellan, pt. t. swall, pp. swollen, Exod. ix. 10; Grein, ii. 505; β-Du. zwellen, pt. t. zwall, pp. gezwollen; Icel. swella, pt. t. swal, pp. sollinn; Swed. swälla; G. schwellen. β. All from Teut. type swellan-*, pt. t. swall, pp. swallauz*. Cf. Goth. uf-swalleins, a swelling up. Brugmann, i. § 903. Perhaps allied to Gk. swellēv, to toss, wave. Der. swell, sb., Antony, iii. 2, 49; swell-ing. Also swell, q.v., ground-sill.

SWEATER, to be faint with heat, also, to cause to exude by excess of heat. (E.) See further under Sultry.

SWERVE, to depart from a right line, turn aside. (E.) Palsgrave has swarue. ME. sweruen (swerwen), Gower, C. A. iii. 7, 92; bk. vi. 168, bk. vii. 232. Once a strong verb, with pt. t. swarf, swerf (Stratmann). AS. swerfan, to rub, to file, to polish, pt. t. swearf, pp. sworfen, Grein, ii. 509; whence the sb. geswearf, geswerf, filings, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 336, note 15; β-Du. zwerven, to swerve, wander, rove, riot, revel; OSax. swerban, pt. t. swarf, to wipe; OFries. swerwa, to rove; Icel. swerfa, to file; pt. t. swarf, pp. sworfan; Goth. bi-swairhan, to wipe, af-swairban, to wipe off. β. Teut. type swerba-, to wipe, pt. t. swarþ, pp. swarbanz*. Cf. OFries. swerwen, to wander, Swed. swarfa, to turn; also prov. E. swarve in the sense of 'to climb a tree devoid of side-boughs,' by swarming up it.

SWIFT, extremely rapid. (E.) ME. swift, Chaucer, C. T. 190. AS. swift, Grein, ii. 513. From swif-, weak grade of AS. swifan, to move quickly, with suffixed -i (Idg. -tos, participial). Cf. Icel. svifa, to rove, turn, sweep; OHG. swēbin, to move or turn quickly. Teut. base swiþ*. Cf. Teut. base swēp*; see Sweep. Der. swift, sb., swift-ly, -ness. And see swivel.

SWILL, to wash dishes; to drink greedily. (E.) The proper sense is to wash dishes. ME. swillen, swilen; 'dishes swilen' = wash dishes, Havelok, 919. AS. swilian, to wash, in the Lambeth Psalter, l. vi. 6 (Bosworth). Der. swill, hog's-wash, whence: swill-ing-tub, Skelton, Elinor Rummyng, 173. Hence the verb to swill, to drink like a pig, as in 'the boar that . . . swills your warm blood like wash,' Rich. III. v. 2, 9; there is no reason for connecting swill with swallow, as is sometimes done. Hence swill-er.

SWIM (1), to move to and fro on or in water, to float. (E.) ME. swimman, Chaucer, C. T. 3575. AS. swimman, pt. t. swamun, swoman, Grein, ii. 515; β-Du. zweemmen; Icel. svimma, pt. t. svamni, pp. svumnit; Dan. svimme; Swed. simma; G. schwimmen, pt. t. schwamun. β. All from Teut. type swemman-, pt. t. swamun, pp. swummanoz*. Der. swim, sb., swim-m, swim-ming, swim-ming-ly.

SWIM (2), to be dizzy. (E.) 'My head swims' = my head is dizzy. The verb is from the ME. swime, sb., dizziness, vertigo, a swoon; spelt swyme, swime, Cursor Mundi, 14201; swym, Allit. Morte Arthure, 4246. AS. swima, a swoon, swimming in the head, Grein, ii. 515; whence āswimian, verb, to fail, be queneled, and āswiðman, verb, to wander, id. i. 43, 44; β-Du. zwinen, OFries. swim, a swoon; cf. Icel. svimi, a swimming in the head; whence swima, verb, to wander about; Dan. swimle, to be giddy, swimmel, giddiness, besime, to swoon; Swed. swimma, to be dizzy. β. The AS. swima probably stands for swi-ma; the base is swi-* (Tent. swi-*), whence also OHG. swiuan, to decrease, disappear; to which are allied Swed. swindal, dizziness, G. schwindel, dizziness, schwinden, to disappear, dwindle, decay, fail, schwindtsucht, consumption; Swed. fur-swinnat, to disappear, Icel. swina, to subside (said of a swelling). The primary sense is that of failing, giving way. Der. swin-dler, q.v.

SWINDLER, a cheat. (G.) 'The dignity of the British merchant is sunk in the scandalous appellation of a swindler;' V. Knox, Essay 8 (first appeared in 1778); cited in R. One of our few loan-words from High-German. = G. schwindler, an extravagant projector, a swindler. = G. schwindeln, to be dizzy, to act thoughtlessly, to cheat. = G. schwindel, dizziness. = G. schwinden, to decay, sink, vanish, fail; cognate with AS. swindan (pt. t. swand), to languish. See Swim (2). Der. swindle, verb and sb., evolved from the sb. swindler rather than borrowed from G.

SWINE, a sow, pig; pigs. (E.) ME. swin, with long i, pl. swin (unchanged). 'He sleep as a swyn' (riming with wyn, wine); Chaucer, C. T. 5165 (B 745). 'A flocke of many swyne;' Wyclif, Matt. viii. 30. AS. swin, pl. swiu, Grein, ii. 515. The AS. swin is a neuter sb. with a long eu, and therefore unchanged in the plural, by rule. β-Du. zwijn, a swine, hog; Icel. swin, pl. swin, neuter sb.; Dan. svin, neut. pl. svin; Swed. svin, neut. t. G. schwein, OHG. swin; Goth. swēin, neut. Teut. type swinon*, neut. Cf. Russ. svin (c) ya, a swine, dimin. svinka, a pig, svinoi, adj., belonging to swine, svinnia, pork. β. Fick conjectures that the form was orig. adjectival, like that of I. sinus, belonging to swine, an adj. noted by Varro (Vauček, p. 1048); this adj. is regularly formed from su, a sow. See Sow (2). Brugmann, i. § 95. Der. swin-ish, -ly, -ness; swine-herd, ME. swynne-herd, Prompt. Parv.; swine-cote, ME. swynne-kote, id.; swine-sty, ME. swynstys, id., spelt swynstys, Pricke of Conscience, 9002.

SWING, to sway or move to and fro. (E.) ME. swingen, strong verb, pt. t. swang, swang, pp. swungen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1058 (or 1059), Havelok, 226. AS. swingan, pt. t. swang, pp. swungen, to scourge, also, to fly, flutter, flap with the wings; Grein, ii. 515; β-Swed. swinga, to swing, to whirl; Dan. swinge, to swing, whirl; G. schwingen, to swing, soar, brandish; also, to swing or beat flax; pt. t. schwung. Cf. also Goth. afswungujan, to cause to doubt or despair. β. All from Teut. base swengw-, Idg. sweng. Der. swing, sb.; swinge, q.v.; swingie, q.v.

SWINGE, to beat, whip. (E.) In Shaks. Two Gent. ii. 1. 88, &c. ME. swengeu, to beat; see Prompt. Parv. AS. swengan, to shake, toss; cf. sweng, a stroke, blow; see Bosworth. AS. swengan is the causal form of swingen, to swing, to flourish a whip, to beat. See Swing.

SWINGLE, a staff for beating flax. (MDu.) 'To swingle, to beat, a term among flax-dressers'; Phillips. The verb is ME. swingelen, Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 197; formed from the sb. swingle. In Wright's Voc. i. 156, near the bottom, we find swingle, sb., swingelot, sb., and the phrase 'to swingle thi flax.' From MDu. swingelen, or swingen, 'to beat flax'; Hexham. Cf. Du. zingelen, a scouring; Laws of Inc. § 48, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 133; from AS. swing-an, to beat, to swing. A swingle is 'a swinger, a beater; and swingle, verb, is 'to use a swingle.' See Swing. Der. swingle, verb. Also swingle-tree, q.v.

SWINGLETREE, the bar that swings at the heels of the horses when drawing a harrow, &c. (L.) See Halliwell. Also applied to the swinging bar to which traces are fastened when a horse draws a coach. [Corruptly called single-tree, whence the term double-tree has arisen, to keep it company. 'A single-tree is fixed upon each end of another cross-piece called the double-tree, when 2 horses draw abreast,' Haldeman (in Webster).] ME. swingle-tree, spelt swingletre in Fitzherbert, On Husbandry, § 15 (E.D.S.). The word tree here means a piece of timber, as in axle-tree. The word swingle means 'a swinger', a thing that swings; so named from the swinging motion, which all must have observed who have sat behind horses drawing a coach. See Swingle, Swing.

SWINK, to toil; to be soiled. (E.) Once an extremely common word; Milton has 'swink'd hedger'—hedger overcome with toil, Comus, 293. ME. swinken, pt. t. swaak, Havelok, 788; pp. swunken, Ormulum, 6103. AS. swincan, pt. t. swanc, pp. swuncen, to toil, labour, work hard. This form, so curiously like AS. swingan, pt. t. swaag, pp. swungen, is perhaps a parallel form to it. Cf. Du. zuuk, a swing, a turn; G. schwanken, to totter, stagger, falter.

SWIPE, to strike with a sweeping stroke. (L.) Cf. prov. E. swipple, the striking part of a flail. The i has prob. been lengthened; cf. ME. swipe, swip, a stroke, Layamon, 7648; swippen, vb., to swipe, strike, Layamon, 878. AS. swipian, swippan, to beat (Grein); swipe, a whip. From swip-, weak grade of Teut. swipan-; see Sweep. Cf. Icel. swipa, to whip; swipa, a whip.

SWIRL, to whirl in an eddy. (Scand.) 'Swirl', a whirling wavy motion, East? Halliwell. A prov. E. word, now used by good writers, as C. Kingsley, E. B. Browning, &c.; see Webster and Worcester.—Norweg. swirle, to wave round, swing, whirl (Aasen), frequent, of swerra (Dan. swirle), to whirl, turn round, orig. to make a humming noise. Cf. Swed. swirra, to murmur; G. schwirren, to whirl; Skt. sur, to sound. Formed from the Idg. root SWER, to hum, just as whirl is from whir; see further under Swarm.

SWITCH, a small flexible twig. (Du.—G.) In Romeo, ii. 4. 73; Dr. Schmidt notes that old editions have suits for the pl. switches. Not found in ME., and perhaps borrowed from Du. in the 16th cent. Switch or swich is a palatalised form of swick.—MDu. swick, 'a scourge, a switch, or a whip'; Hexham. It also means a wooden vent-peg (Hexham); Low G. swikk, zwick, a twig, a vent-peg. Not a Low G. word, but borrowed from High G.—Bavarian zwick, the lash of a whip, or a stroke with the same; variant of G. zwecke, a tack, a small wooden peg; Bavar. zweck, a splinter, a tapering piece of wood. From MHG. zwec, a nail, bolt, peg, esp. a peg in the centre of a target, called in E. the prick or the pin, which explains why G. zweck means 'an aim.' Further allied to G. zwicken, to pinch, to tweak; which is allied to E. twick; see Kluge. The fact that the MDu. s in this word answers to High G. z—Low G. t, is pointed out by Frack. No other E. word has initial s from t. Cf. Icel. swigi, a switch, seems to be unrelated. Der. switch, verb.

SWIVEL, a ring or link that turns round on a pin or neck. (E.) Spelt swivell in Minshew, ed. 1627. Not found in ME.; it corresponds to an AS. form swifel*, not found, but regularly formed, with the suffix -el of the agent, from the weak grade (swif) of AS. swifan, to move quickly, revolve; for which see Swift. Related words are Icel. swifa, to swing or spin in a circle, like a top, swifa, a swinging round, from swifa, to ramble, to turn. The sense is 'that which readily revolves.' Cf. Brugmann, i. § 818 (2).

SWOON, to faint. (E.) ME. swouwen, Chaucer, C. T. 5478 (B 1058); also swouhenen, King Alisaunder, 587; also swouwenen (Stratmann). A comparison of the forms shows, as Stratmann points out, that the standard ME. form is swounen*, the n being represented either by gh, w, or u; and this is a mere extension of a form swouen*, with the same sense. The n is the same formative element as is seen in Goth. verbs ending in -nan; cf. E. awaken from awake, &c. β. The form swouen* appears, slightly altered, as swouwen (with w for u), to swoon, P. Plowman, B. v. 154, xiv. 326; also as swouken, swouhen, to sigh deeply, Romans of Parthenay, 1944, 2890. This is a weak verb, slightly allied to the ME. strong verb swouen, to make a loud or deep sound, to sigh deeply, droop, swoon, pt. t. swep, pp. swouwen or swouwen. 'Sykande ho *swue*ge doun' = sighing, she drooped down; Gawain and Green Knight, 1796. 'Adun he fecol swoue' = down she fell in a swoon, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 428. From AS. swigan, to move or sweep along noisily, to sigh, to sigh, orig. used esp. of the wind. 'Swigað windas' = the winds sigh, Grein, ii. 516; cf. swigen, pp. choked, Alfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, § 52, ed. Sweet, p. 411, l. 17. Mr. Cockayne points out that the form geswouung, a swooning, occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 176, l. 13; and that in Ælfred's Hom. ii. 356, we find: 'Se lug . . . geswougen betwux ðam ofslegenum'—he lay in a swoon amongst the slain. Here AS. geswigen > ME. swouwen, as cited above. This AS. swigan is represented by mod. E. Sough, q.v. It will thus be seen that the final n is a mere formative element, and unoriginal. Cf. Low G. swigen, to sigh, swigenen, to sigh, also to swoon; Brem. Wört. Der. swouen, sb. Also swouen-d, with excrement d, and swoun-d, with loss of w. Palsgrave has 'I swounde,' i.e. I swoon.

SWOOP, to sweep along, to descend with a swift motion, like a bird of prey. (E.) Shaks. has swoop, sb., Macb. iv. 3. 219. ME. swopen, usually in the sense to sweep. In Chaucer, C. T. 16404, where Tyrwhitt prints swope, the Corpus MS. has swope (Group G, l. 936); two lines lower, in place of yswooped, the Lichfield MS. has yswoopen. The ME. swopen was orig. a strong verb, with pt. t. swep, and pp. yswoopen (as above). AS. swipian, to sweep along, rush; also, to sweep; a strong verb, pt. t. swip, pp. swipen; Grein, ii. 500. 'Swipadum windum'—with swooping (rushing) winds; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iii. 16, ed. Smith, p. 542, l. 37. 'Swift wind swipeð' = a swift wind swoops; Ælfred, tr. of Æthelstan, met. vii (b. ii. met. 4). (The AS. ā became ME. open ā, but this became close o under the influence of the w.) Icel. swipa, to sweep, swoop; cf. swip, pt. t. of an obsolete strong verb swipa; swipian, pp. of the same. Also Icel. swipa, weak verb, to sweep. And cf. G. schweifen, to rove, ramble; Goth. swipian, in the comp. midja-swipian, a deluge, Luke, xvii. 27. β. The AS. swipian answers to a Teut. swipan-, from the Teut. root swip-, for which see Swipe. Der. swoop, sb.; also swep, q.v.; and see swift, swivel.

SWORD, an offensive weapon with a long blade. (E.) ME. sward, Chaucer, C. T. A. 1700. AS. sweord, Matt. xxvi. 47. + Du. zwaard; Icel. sverð; Dan. sverd; Swed. svärd; G. schwert. The Teut. type is sweordm*, neut. Of unknown origin. Der. sword-cane, fish-stick; sword-sman, formed like hunt-sman, sport-sman; sword-sman-ship.

SYBARITE, an effeminate person. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674; he also has the adj. Sybaritical, dainty, effeminate.—L. Sybarita.—Gk. Συβαριτης, a Sybarite, an inhabitant of Sybaris, a luxurious liver, voluptuary; because the inhabitants of this town were noted for voluptuousness. The town was named from the river Sybaris (Gk. Συβαρις), on which it was situated. This river flows through the district of Lower Italy formerly called Lucania. Der. Sybaritic, Sybaritic-al.

SYCAMINE, the name of a tree. (L.—Gk.—Heb.?) In Luke, xvii. 6 (A.V.).—L. sycaminus.—Gk. σικαμινος; Luke, xvii. 6. It is gen. believed to be the mulberry-tree, and distinct from the sycamore; Thomson, in The Land and the Book, pt. i. c. 1, thinks the trees were one and the same. β. That the word has been confused with sycamore is obvious, but the suffix -ine (-nos) is difficult to explain. Thomson's explanation is worth notice; he supposes it to be nothing more than a Gk. adaptation of the Heb. plural. The Heb. name for the sycamore is shiqmah, with the plural forms shiqmāth and shiqmim; from the latter of these the Gk. σικαμινος may easily have been formed, by partial confusion with Gk. σικαμωπος, a sycamore; see Sycamore.

SYCAMORE, the name of a tree. (L.—Gk.—Heb.?) The trees so called in Europe and America are different from the Oriental sycamore (Ficus sycamorus). The spelling should rather be sycamore; Cotgrave gives sycamore both as an E. and a F. spelling. Spelt sicamore in Wyclif, Luke, xix. 4.—L. sycamoros.—Gk. σικαμωπος, as if it meant 'fig-mulberry' tree. As if from Gk. σικαμω, decl. stem of σικαμω, a fig; and ωπος, a mulberry, blackberry; but it seems to have been a popular adaptation of Heb. shiqmah, sycamore. See Sycamine.

SYCOPHANT, a servile flatterer. (L.—Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary; he shows that it was formerly also used to mean 'an informer.' 'That sycophants are counted illy guests'; Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 207. Cotgrave gives the F. form as sycophant.—L. sycophanta, an informer, tale-bearer, flatterer, sycophant.—Gk.

σποκαφάνης, lit. 'a fig-shower,' said to mean one who informs against persons exporting figs from Attica, or plundering sacred fig-trees; hence, a common informer, slanderer, also, a false adviser. 'The lit. signification is not found in any ancient writer, and is perhaps altogether an invention'; Liddell and Scott. That is, the early history of the word is lost, but this does not affect its obvious (perhaps only a popular) etymology. — Gk. σποκα-, decl. stem of σποκα, a fig; and -φάνης, lit. a shower (appearing also in τεροφάνης, one who shows or teaches religious rites), from φαίνω, to show. See Sycamore and Phantom. Der. σποκαφάν-ic, -ic-al, -ism; σποκαφάν-ic.

SYLLABLE, part of a word, uttered by a single effort of voice. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. sillabe, Chaucer, C. T. 10415 (F 101). — OF. sillabe (Littre), later syllabe and syllable, with an inserted unoriginal l. — L. syllaba. — Gk. σύλλαβη, lit. 'that which holds together,' hence a syllable, so much of a word as forms a single sound. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before following λ), together; and λαβ-, base of λαμβάνω, to take, seize (aorist infim. λαβέν). See Syn and Cataleptio. Der. syllab-ic, from Gk. σύλλαβος, adj.; syllab-ic-al, syllab-i-fy. Also syllabus, a compendium, from Late L. syllabus, a list, syllabus (White), from Late Gk. σύλλαβος, allied to σύλλαβη.

SYLLOGISM, a reasoning from premises, a process in formal logic. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. silogisme, Gower, C. A. iii. 366; bk. viii. 2708. — OF. silogisme (Littre), later sillogisme, spelt sylogisme in Cotgrave. — L. sylogismus, acc. of sylogismus. — Gk. σύλλογισμός, a reckoning all together, reckoning up, reasoning, syllogism. — Gk. σύνλογος, I reckon together, sum up, reason. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before λ following), together; and λόγος, I reckon, from λόγος, a word, reason, reasoning. See Syn and Logic. Der. sylogise, spelt sylogise in Lydgate, Assembly of the Gods, 19. From σύνλογος; sylogis-ic, from L. sylogisticus < Gk. σύνλογιστικός; sylogis-ic-al, -ly.

SYLPH, an imaginary being inhabiting the air. (F.—Gk.) 'Ye sylphs and sylphids'; Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 73; and see Pope's Introduction to that poem (A.D. 1712). Pope tells us that he took the account of the Kosicruan philosophy and theory of spirits from a French book called Le Comte de Cabalis. — F. symphe, the name given to one of the pretended genii of the air; Hatzfeld quotes les sylphs from a work of the 16th or 17th century. — Gk. σάληφ, used by Aristotle, Hist. Anim. 8, 17, 8, to signify a kind of beetle or grub. β. It is usually supposed that this word suggested the name syph, which is used by Paracelsus. The other names of genii are gnomes, salamanders, and nymphs, dwelling in the earth, fire, and water respectively; and as all these names are Greek, it is likely that syph was meant to be Greek also. The spelling with y causes no difficulty, and is, indeed, an additional sign that the word is meant to be Greek. It is not uncommon to find y (called in F. y Grec) used in words derived from Gk., not only where it represents Gk. υ, but even (mistakenly) where it represents Gk. υ; thus syphon occurs instead of siphon both in F. and E. γ. Littre (followed by Hatzfeld) accounts for the word quite differently. He says that F. symphe is a Gaulish (Celtic) word signifying genius, and that it is found in various inscriptions as sulfi, syph, syphi, or, in the feminine, as sulvea, sulveia (which are, of course, Latinised and plural forms); he cites 'Sulfiis suis qui nostram curam agunt,' Orel. Helvet. 117. And he supposes that Paracelsus revived these names. Scheler, on the contrary, has no doubt that the word is Greek. Der. syph-id, from F. syphide, a false form, but only explicable on the supposition that the word syph was thought to be Gk., and declined as if the nom. was σάληφ (stem σάληφ).

SYLVAN, a common mis-spelling of Silvan, q. v.

SYMBOL, a sign, emblem, figurative representation. (F.—L.—Gk.) See French, Select Glossary. In Shak. Oth. ii. 3, 350. — F. symbole, 'a token,' &c.; Cot. — L. symbolum. — Gk. σύμβολον, a token, pledge, a sign by which one infers a thing. — Gk. συνβάλλω (aor. infim. συνβαλέν), to throw together, bring together, compare, infer. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before β), together; and βάλλω, to throw. See Syn. — Der. symbol-ic, from Gk. συνβολικός, adj.; symbol-ic-al, -ly; symbol-ise, from F. symboliser, spelt symbolizer in Cot., and explained by 'to symbolize'; symbol-is-er; symbol-ism, symbol-ist.

SYMMETRY, due proportion, harmony. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt simmetria in Minshew, cl. 1627. — F. symmetrie, 'simmetry,' Cot. — L. symmetria. — Gk. συμμετρία, due proportion. — Gk. σύνμετρος, adj., measured with, of like measure with. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before μ), together; and μετρον, a measure. See Syn and Metro. Der. symmet-ic-al, a coined word; symmet-ic-al-ly; symmet-ise, a coined word.

SYMPATHY, a feeling with another, like feeling. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spenser has sympathie and sympathize, Hymn in Honour of Beattie, li. 199 and 192. — F. sympathie, 'sympathy,' Cot. — L. sympathia. — Gk. συνπάθεια, like feeling, fellow-feeling. — Gk. συνπαθής, adj., of like feelings. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before π), together; and πάθ-, base of πάσχω, aor. infim. of πάσχω, to suffer, experience, feel. See Syn and Pathos. Der. sympath-ic-ic, a coined word, suggested by pathetic; sympath-ic-ic-al, -ly; sympath-ize, from F. sympathiser, 'to sympathize,' Cot.; sympath-is-er.

SYMPHONY, concert, union, harmony of sound. (F.—L.—Gk.) There was a musical instrument called a symphony, ME. simphonie or symphonie; see my note to Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 1005. And see Wyclif, Luke, xv. 25. — F. symphonie, 'harmony,' Cot. — L. symphonia, Luke, xv. 25. (Vulgate). — Gk. συνφωνία, music, Luke, xv. 25. — Gk. σύνφωνος, agreeing in sound, harmonious. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before φ), together; and φωνή, to sound, φωνή, sound. See Syn and Phonetic. Der. symphon-ic; symphon-ist, a chorister, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

SYMPOSIUM, a merry feast. (L.—Gk.) Blount, Gloss., ed. 1674, has symposias, 'a feast-master,' and symposiagues, 'books treating of feasts.' Symposium is in Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie, p. 57. — L. symposium. — Gk. συνάσιον, a drinking-party, banquet. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before π), together; and the base σιω, to drink, appearing in pt. t. σιω-αω, I drank, aor. έσιω-α, I drank, and in the sb. σιω-σις, drink. See Syn and Potable.

SYMPTOM, an indication of disease, an indication. (F.—L.—Gk.) Properly a medical term. In Cotgrave, to translate MF. symptome. — L. symptōma. — Gk. σύμπτωμα, anything that has befallen one, a casualty, usu. in a bad sense. — Gk. συνπίπτειν, pt. t. σύν-πέ-πτακα, to fall together, to fall in with, meet with. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before π), together, with; and πίπτω (πί-πτεω) to fall, from ΠΕΤΕΙ, to fall. See Syn and Asymptote. Der. symptom-ic, Gk. συνπτωματικός, adj., from συνπτωματ-, stem of σύνπτω-μα; symptom-ic-al, -ly.

SYN-, prefix, together. (L.—Gk.; or F.—L.—Gk.) A Latinised spelling of Gk. σύν, together. Cf. Gk. σύν, together; a form not clearly explained. β. The prefix σύν becomes σύν- (-yl-) before l, sym- (sym-) before m, p, ph, and ps (sy-) before s or z; as in sylogism, symbol, symmetry, sympathy, symphony, system, syzygy.

SYNAERESIS, the taking of two vowels together, whereby they coalesce into a diphthong. (L.—Gk.) A grammatical term. Spelt syneresis in Minshew. — L. synaeresis. — Gk. συναίρεσις, lit. a taking together. — Gk. σύν, together; and αίρεσις, a taking, from αίρω, to take. See Syn and Heresy. Cf. Diæresis.

SYNAGOGUE, a congregation of Jews. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. synagoge, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 23. — F. synagogue, 'a synagogue,' Cot. — L. synagoga. — Gk. συναγωγή, a bringing together, assembly, congregation. — Gk. σύν, together; and άγωγή (-άγω-αγ-ή), a bringing, from άγω, to bring, drive; a reduplicated form, from άγ-άγω, to drive.

SYNALOPHA, a coalescence of two syllables into one. (L.—Gk.) A grammatical term; in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. synalopha. — Gk. συναλοφή, lit. a melting together. — Gk. σύν, together; and άλοιφή, to anoint with oil, to daub, blot out, efface, whence άλοιφή, fat. The Gk. άλοιφή is allied to άλιν-ος, fat; cf. Skt. lip, to besmear, anoint.

SYNCHRONISM, concurrence in time. (Gk.) Blount, ed. 1674, says the word is used by Sir W. Raleigh. — Gk. συνγχρονισμός, agreement of time. — Gk. σύνγχρον-ος, contemporaneous; with suffix -ισμος, from -ίζω. — Gk. σύν-γ (written for σύν before χ), together; and χρόνος, time. See Syn and Chronicle. Der. synchronous, adapted from Gk. σύνγχρονος, adj.

SYNCOPATE, to contract a word. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. syncopatus, pp. of syncopare, of which the usual sense is 'to swoon.' — L. syncopē, syncopa, a swooning; also syncopa as a 'gram. term.' — Gk. συνκοπή, a cutting short, syncope in grammar, a loss of strength, a swoon. — Gk. σύν- (written for σύν before κ), together; and κοπ-, base of κόπτω, to cut. See Syn and Apocope. Der. syncopal-ion, a musical term, which Blount says is in Playford's Introd. to Music, p. 28. Also syncopa, as a grammat. term, also a swoon, spelt syncepin (acc.), Lanfrank, p. 205, from L. syncopē < Gk. συνκοπή, as above.

SYNDIC, a government official, one who assists in the transaction of business. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt syndick in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. syndic, 'a syndick, censor, controller of manners,' Cot. — L. syndicus. — Gk. σύνδικος, adj., helping in a court of justice; as sb., a syndic. — Gk. σύν, with; and δική, justice. The orig. sense of δική is a showing, hence a course, custom, use, justice; from δύκ-, weak grade of δύκω, to show. See Syn and Diction. Der. syndic-ate, a coined word.

SYNECDOCHE, a figure of speech whereby a part is put for the whole. (L.—Gk.) Spelt synecdoche in Minshew, ed. 1627; but synecdoche, Caxton, Golden Legend, The Resurrection, § 1. — L. synecdochē. — Gk. συνεκδοχή, lit. a receiving together. — Gk. συνεκδέχομαι, I join in receiving. — Gk. σύν, together; and εκδέχομαι, I receive, compounded of in, out, and δέχομαι (Ionic δέκωμαι), I receive, from δέκω to take. See Syn-, Ex-.

SYNOD, a meeting, ecclesiastical council. (F.—L.—Gk.) Synodes and counsays; 'Sir T. More, Works, p. 406 h. = F. synode, 'a synod'; Cot.—L. synodum, acc. of synodus, Gk. σύνδωρος, a meeting, lit. a coming together.—Gk. σύν, together; and δός, a way, here, a coming, from δύω (cf. SEI), to go. See Method. Der. synod-ic, from Gk. συνδωτικός, adj.; synod-ic-al, synod-ic-al-ly.

SYNONYM, a word having the same sense with another. (F.—L.—Gk.) The form is French; in old books it was usual to write synonymia, which, by a curious blunder, was taken to be a fem. sing. instead of a neut. pl., doubtless because the L. synonymia was only used in the plural; and, indeed, the sing. is seldom required, since we can only speak of synonyms when we are considering more words than one. Synonymia is used as a sing. by Cotgrave and Blount. = F. synonymie, 'a synonymia, a word having the same signification which another hath'; Cot.—L. synonymia, neut. pl. synonyms; from the adj. συνώνυμος, synonymous. = Gk. συνώνυμος, of like meaning or like name. = Gk. σύν, with; and ὄνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; see Syn- and Name. Der. synonymous, Englished from L. adj. synonymus, as above; synonymously; synonym-ly, L. synonymia, from Gk. συνωνυμία, likeness of name.

SYNOPSIS, a general view of a subject. (L.—Gk.) Spelt sinopsis in Minshew, ed. 1677. = L. synopsis, = Gk. σύνopsis, a seeing all together; = Gk. σύν, together; and opsis, a seeing, sight; cf. opsis, fut. from base ω-, to see. See Syn- and Optic. Der. synop-ic, from Gk. adj. συνωπτικός, seeing all together; synop-ic-al, -ly.

SYNTAX, the arrangement of words in sentences. (L.—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, b. ii. c. 1; spelt syntaxis in Minshew, ed. 1677. = L. syntaxis, = Gk. σύνταξις, an arrangement, arranging. = Gk. σύν, together; and τάξις, order, from τάσσω (for τάσ-ω*), to arrange. See Syn- and Tactics. Der. syntact-ic-al, due to Gk. συντακτικός, adj., put in order; syntact-ic-al-ly.

SYNTHESIS, composition, combination. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, s.v. Synthetical. = L. synthesis, = Gk. σύνθεσις, a putting together. = Gk. σύν, together; and θεσις, a putting; see Syn- and Thesis. Der. synthet-ic-al, due to Gk. adj. συνθετικός, skilled in putting together, from συνθετός, a putter together, where θε- is the weak grade of θη-, to put, and -της is the suffix denoting the agent (ldg. -ia); synthet-ic-al-ly.

SYPHON, SYREN, inferior spellings of Siphon, Siren, q.v. See the F. spelling siphon, also siphon.

SYRINGE, a tube with a piston, for ejecting fluids. (F.—L.—Gk.) The g was prob. once hard, not as j; Cot., however, already has syringe. = MF. syringue, 'a siringe, a squirt'; Cot.—L. syringem, acc. of syrinx, a reed, pipe, tube. = Gk. σύνριξ, a reed, pipe, tube, shepherd's pipe, whistle. From the Gk. base σύν-, to perforate; with suffix -ριξ as in φύριγ-ριξ, πλάσ-ριξ. Brugmann, l. § 230. Der. syring-a, a flowering shrub so named because the stems were used for the manufacture of Turkish pipes; see Eng. Cycl., s.v. Syringia.

SYRUP, SIRUP, a kind of sweetened drink. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Spicerie, sawces, and sirups;' Fryth's Works, p. 99, col. 1. = MF. syrup, 'sirrop'; Cot. Mod. F. sirup; OF. yserop (Littre). = MSpan. sarop, a medicinal drink (Span. jorope); the OF. yserop is due to a Span. form axarope, where a represents al, the Arab. article. = Arab. sharīb, sharāb, wine or any beverage, syrup; lit. a beverage; Rich. Dict. p. 886. = Arab. root shariba, he drank; id. p. 887. See Sherbet.

SYSTEM, method. (L.—Gk.) It is not an old word in F., and seems to have been borrowed from Latin directly. Spelt systeme in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = L. systema. = Gk. συστήμα (stem συστημα-), a complex whole, put together; a system. = Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and the base στη-, to stand; with suffix -μα (ldg. -ment). The base στη- occurs in στήνα, to stand; from στῆναι, to stand; see Stand. Der. system-at-ic, from Gk. adj. συστηματικός, adj., formed from συστημα-, stem of συστήμα; system-at-ic-al, -ly; system-at-ise, a coined word system-at-ise.

SYSTOLE, contraction of the heart, shortening of a syllable. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Englished (with y for v) from Gk. συστολή, a contracting, drawing together. = Gk. συστολ-, and grade of συστάλλω, to draw together, contract. = Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and στάλλω, to equip, set in order. See Syn- and Stole.

SYZYGY, conjunction. (Gk.) A modern term in astronomy. = Gk. σύνζυγία, union, conjunction. = Gk. σύνζυγος, conjoined. = Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and ζύν-, weak grade of ζύνγωμι, I join (cf. ζύνω, a yoke), from the Y EUG, to join. See Syn- and Yoke; and compare Conjunction.

TA-TE

TAB, a small flap or strip, usually attached at one end. (E.) Prob. allied to tape; cf. AS. taepe, a tape, fillet. See Tape.

TABARD, a sleeveless coat, formerly worn by ploughmen, noblemen, and heralds, now by heralds only. (F.—L.?) ME. tabard, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 280, l. 2; Chaucer, C. T. 543 (A 541). = OF. tabart, tabard; see a quotation in Roquefort with the spelling tabart; mod. F. tabard (Hamilton, omitted in Littre). Ducange gives an OF. form tribart. Cf. Span. and Port. tabardo; Ital. tabarra. The last form (like MF. tabarre in Cotgrave) has lost a final d or t. [The W. tabar is borrowed from English.] We also find a MHG. tafar, taphari; and even a mod. Gk. ταψάρον. β. Etym. unknown; Diez suggests L. tañi-, stem of tapēre, hangings, painted cloths; but this is unlikely. Cf. Mital. and L. trabes, a robe of state.

TABBY, a kind of waved silk. (F.—Span.—Arab.) Chiefly retained in the expression 'a tabby cat,' i.e. a cat brindled or diversified in colour, like the markings on tabby. 'Tabby, a kind of waved silk;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tabis, in use in the 15th century (Littre); also OF. atabis, Godefroy. = Span. tahí, a silken stuff; Low L. (or rather Ospan.) atabi, where at was supposed (but wrongly) to represent the Arab. article al, and so came to be dropped. Cf. 'j panno Atabby' (mispr. Acabby); Earl of Derby's Expeditions, Camden Soc., p. 283, l. 24. = Arab. atābi, a kind of rich undulated silk; Rich. Dict. p. 992. See Devic, who calls it an Arab. word (Rich. marks it Pers.). He adds that it was the name of a quarter of Bagdad where this silk was made (Defrére, Journal Asiatique, Jan. 1862, p. 94); and that this quarter took its name from prince Attab, great-grandson of Omeiyar (Dozy, Gloss, p. 343). ¶ Hence perhaps tabin-et, spelt tabinet in Webster, and explained, as 'a more delicate kind of tabby'; from Ital. tabino, tabine, tabby (Torriano). But Trench, Eng. Past and Present, tells us that it was named from M. Tabinet, a French Protestant refugee, who introduced the making of tabinet in Dublin; for which statement he adduces no reference or authority. Cf. tabine, in 'Cloth of tissue or tabine,' Middleton, Anything for a Quiet Life, ii. 2 (C.D.).

TABERNACLE, a tent used as a temple, a tent. (F.—L.) MF. tabernacle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 20, l. 466. = F. tabernacle, 'a tabernacle'; Cot.—L. tabernaculum, double dimn. of taberna, a hut, shed; see Tavern.

TABID, wasted by disease. (F.—L.) Rare; in Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tabide, consuming, wasting; Cot.—L. tabidus, wasting away, decaying, languishing. = L. tābēs, a wasting away; tābris, to waste away, languish. Allied to Gk. θήνω, in the same sense; and to E. thaw. See Thaw. Der. tabe-fy, to cause to melt, Blount's Gloss, from MF. tabifier, to waste (Cot.), due to L. tābēfacerē, to cause to melt.

TABLE, a smooth board, usually supported on legs. (F.—L.) ME. table, Chaucer, C. T. 355 (A 353). = F. table. = L. tabula, a plank, flat board, table. Der. table-, pl. sb., a kind of game like backgammon, played on flat boards, Rob. of Glouc. p. 192, l. 3965; table, verb, Cymb. i. 4. 6; table-book, Hamlet, ii. 2. 136; table-talk, Merch. Ven. iii. 5. 93; table-land, land flat like a table; table-et, Cymb. v. 4. 109, from F. tablette, 'a little table'; Cot., dimn. of F. table. Also tabul-ar, tabul-ate, from L. tabula. Also tabul-ase, borrowed from F. tabulae, dimn. of table. Also taffer-el, q.v.; en table-ture.

TABOO, TABU, to forbid approach to, forbid the use of. (Polynesian.) 'Taboo, a political prohibition and religious consecration interdiction, formerly of great force among the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific; hence, a total prohibition of intercourse with, or approach to anything'; Webster. 'South-Sea-Isle taboo'; Tennyson, Princess, iii. 261. Kotzebue mentions the 'Tabu, or interdiction'; New Voyage round the World, 1830, li. 178. The E. pron. of New Zealand (Maori) tapu, consecrated or forbidden; pron. tambu in the Solomon Isles. See E. K. Morris, Austral. Dict.

TABOUR, TABOR, a small drum. (F.—Span.—Arab.) ME. tabour, Havelok, 2329. = OF. and MF. tabour, 'a drum, a tabor'; Cot. Mod. F. tambour; Littre gives the spellings tabor, 11th cent.; tabour, 13th to 16th century. Cf. Prov. tabor, tambor (cited by Littre); Span. tambor, MSpan. atambor (Minshew); Ital. tamburo. The t word was most likely borrowed from Span. tambor, also called atambor, where the prefix a- stands for the Arab. def. art., showing that the word was borrowed from the Moors. = Arab. tambūr, 'a kind of lute or guitar with a long neck, and six brass strings, also a drum'; Rich. Dict., p. 976. He gives it also as a Pers. word, and Devic seems to think that the word was borrowed from Persian. The initial letter is the 19th of the Pers. alphabet, sometimes written kh, not the ordinary t. On the same page of Rich. Dict. we also find Pers. fambuk, a trumpet, clarion, bagpipe, fambat, a small drum; also Arab. fab, a drum, a tambourine, Pers. fabak, a small drum, p. 604. Also Pers. fabir (with the ordinary f), a drum, kettle-drum, a large pipe, flute, or hautboy, p. 365; fabirak, a drum, tambour, tambourine, a drum beaten to scare away birds, p. 364. See the account in Devic, who considers the form fambir as derived from Pers. fabir; and the form fabirak to be dimin. of Pers. fabir, a form not found. β. It will be observed that the sense comprises various instruments that make a din, and we may note Port. atabale, a kettle-drum, from a for at, the Arab. article, and Pers. fambal, a drum. All the above words contain a base tab, which we may regard, with Mr. Wedgwood, as being of imitative origin, like the English dob-dub and tap. This is rendered likely by the occurrence of Arab. fahbat, the sound made by the dashing of waterfalls; Rich. Dict. 963; cf. Arab. fahbat, a drummer, ibid. Der. labor-er, Temp. iii. 2. 160; labour-ine, Antony, iv. 8. 37, from F. labourin, 'a little drum'; labour-et, Hp. Hall, Sat. iv. 1. 78, a dimin. form; shortened to tabret, Gen. xxxi. 27. And see inimbourin.

TABULAR, TABULATE: see Table.

TACHE (1), a fastening. (F.—Teut.) In Exod. xvi. 6. 'A tache, a buckle, a clasp, a bracelet, Spyiter;' Baret, s. v. Claspe. A palatalised form of tack; cf. beauch for benech, church for kirch, &c.; esp. the derived words attach, de-tack. Minshew, ed. 1627, gives: 'To tack, or tack.' ME. tache, Voc. 564. 2. We find AF. taches, pl., pegs, Var-books of Edw. I., 1304-5, p. 53.—OF. tache, a nail, fastening (Godefroy).—EFries. (Low G.) tack, a point, prick, thorn, allied to tak, takke, a pointed thing, a twig; Low G. takk, a pointed thing. See Tack.

TACHE (2), a blot, blemish; see Tetohy.

TACIT, silent. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 430. No doubt directly from L., though Cot. gives F. tacite, 'silent'—L. tacitus, silent.—L. tacite, to be silent. Cognate with Goth. thakem, to be silent, Icel. þega, Swed. tiga, to be silent. Der. taciturn, from F. taciturnus, 'taciturn'; Cot.; from L. taciturnitas, Troilus, iv. 2. 75, from F. taciturnitas, 'taciturnity'; Cot.; from L. taciturnitas. Also re-tacite. TACK, a small nail, a fastening; to fasten. (F.—Teut.) ME. takke. Takke, or botun, Fibula? Prompt. Parv., where we also find: 'Takken, or festyns to gedur, or some-whatsoyn to gedur.' The sb. is spelt tak, legends of Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 145, l. 419. [The Irish tack, a peg, pin, nail, fastening; Gael. tacaid, a tack, peg, stab; Breton tack, a nail, tack, to fasten with a nail, are borrowed words.]—O. North F. taque (OF. tack), a fastening, nail (Godefroy); a peg, clothes-peg (Moisy, s. v. taque).—EFries. and Dau. takke, Low G. takk, a time, a pointed thing; Westphal. tack, a tack; G. zacke, a tooth, time, prong, twig. Allied to EFries. tak, a twig, a bough, Du. tak, a twig. β. The nautical use of tack is from the same source. 'In nautical language a tack is the rope which draws forward the lower corner of a square sail, and fastens it to the windward side of the ship in sailing transversely to the wind, the ship being on the starboard or larboard tack according as it presents its right or left side to the wind; the ship is said to tack when it turns towards the wind, and changes the tack on which it is sailing.' Wedgwood. See Taohe (1) and Zigzag. Cf. to tack, to set slightly, fasten slightly. Der. tacke, q. v.; and see tack-le. Also tack-et, a small nail (Levins).

TACKLE, equipment, implements, gear, tools. (Low G.) ME. takel, Chaucer, C. T. 106; (Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 88; takil, the tackle of a ship, Gower, C. A. iii., bk. viii. 470.—Low G. takel, tackle; takelin, to equip; MDu. tackelen, the tackling of ships, tackel, 'munition, riggings'; Hexham; Du. takel, tackle, takelen, to rig; whence Swed. and MSwed. tackel, tackle of a ship (Hnc), tackla, to rig; Dan. takkel, tackle, takle, to rig. β. The suffix -el is used to form substantives from verbs, as in E. sett-le, sb., a thing to sit on, from sit, stopp-le from stop, shou-le from shoe, skull-le from skool, gird-le from gird, and denotes the implement. Tackel is that which takes or grasps, holding the masts, &c. firmly in their places; from Icel. taka, MSwed. taka (mod. Swed. taga), to take, seize, grasp, hold, which had a much stronger sense than the mod. E. take; cf. Icel. tak, a grasp in wrestling, taka, a seizing, capture; and observe the wide application of tackle in the sense of implements or gear. Cf. MDu. tackel, 'a rope to draw a boat'; Hexham. γ. Often derived from W. tact, an instrument, tool, tackle; but the W. word was borrowed from E. Der. tack-ling, Rich. III. iv. 4. 233.

TACT, peculiar skill, delicate handling. (L.) Modern; Webster gives examples from Macaulay. Todd says: 'Tact, touch, an old word, long disused, but of late revived in the secondary senses of touch, as a mastery or eminent effort, and the power of exciting the affections.' He then cites a passage containing 'sense of tact,

i. e. touch, from Ross, Arcana Microcosmi (1652), p. 66.—L. tactus, touch.—L. tactus, pp. of tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tact-able, that may be touched, Massinger, Parl. of Love, ii. 1. 8, a coined word, made to rhyme with tractable; tact-ile, from L. tactilis, tangible; tact-ion, a touching, Blount.

TACTICS, the art of arranging or manœuvring forces. (Gk.) 'And teaches all the tactics;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1 (Lickfinger).—Gk. taktikós, sb. pl., military tactics.—Gk. taktikós, adj., fit for arranging, belonging to tactics.—Gk. taktikós, ordered, arranged; verbal adj. from taktikós (< ták-yein), to arrange, order. Of uncertain origin; Curtius, ii. 328. The base is either TAK, Fick, i. 588; or TAG; (Prellwitz). Der. tactic, adj., from Gk. taktikós; tactic-i-an, a coined word.

TADPOLE, a young frog in its first stage, having a tail. (E.) 'Young frogs, . . . while they be tadpoles and have little wriggling tails'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 10. ME. tadpole, Voc. 766. 20; tadpols, 569. 7. Called bull-head in Cotgrave; he has: 'Chabot, the little fish called a gull, bull-head, or miller's thumb; also the little water-vermine called a bull-head.' Also: 'Tesard, the pollard, or chevin fish, also the little black water-vermine called a bull-head.' Observe that F. chabot is from L. caput, a head (cf. L. capito, a fish with a large head); that tesard is from OF. teste, a head; that chevin is from F. chef, a head; and that bull-head contains the E. head; the striking feature about the tadpole is that it appears nearly all head, with a little tail attached which is afterwards dropped. See Wedgwood, who addresses also E. dial. poll-head, Lowl. Sc. pow-head, a tadpole (which merely repeat the notion of head), E. dial. potwiggle, polywig, a tadpole, with which we may compare wiggle or woggle, to wag the tail. β. Hence tad-pole—toad-poll, the toad that seems all poll; see Toad and Poll. The former part from AS. tād-igol, a toad, with loss of suffix, and shortening of ā before igol.

TAEI, a Chinese weight, about 1½ oz.; the chief (Chinese money of account, Malay). Called liang in Chinese; see Yule. A Malay word.—Malay takil, a certain weight.

TÆNIA, fillet, a tape-worm. (L.—Gk.) L. tænia,—Gk. tænia, a band, fillet, strip.—Gk. tænia, to stretch. Allied to Thin. TAFEREL, TAFERAIL, the upper part of the stern of a ship. (Du.—L.) 'Tafferel, the uppermost part, frame, or rail of a ship behind, over the poop'; Phillips, ed. 1706.—Du. tafferel, a panel, a picture; Hexham explains it by 'a painter's table or board', and adds the dimin. tafferelken, 'a tablet, or a small board'. The tafferail is so called because it is flat like a table on the top, and sometimes ornamented with carved work; cf. G. täfel, boarded work, flooring, wainscoting. β. The Du. taffer-el stands for täf-el*, a dim. from Du. tafel, a table; just as G. täfel is from G. tafel, a table. The Du. and G. tafel are not to be considered as Teut. words; the MHG. form is tavle, Ollig, tavla, borrowed from L. tabula, a table. See Table. γ. The spelling tafferail is prob. due to confusion with E. rail.

TAFFETA, TAFETY, a thin glossy silk stuff, with a wavy lustre. (F.—Ital.—Pers.) 'Tafeta, a manner of sylke, taffeta;' Palsgrave. ME. taffeta, Chaucer, C. T. 442 (A. 440). Taffeta occurs in 1324; Wardrobe Act. 18 Edw. II. 24. 17; Q. K.; see N. and Q. 8. i. 129.—F. taffeta, 'taffeta'; Cot.—Ital. taffeta, 'taffeta'; Florio.—Pers. tāftak, 'twisted, woven, a kind of silk-cloth, taffeta'; Rich. Dict. p. 365.—Pers. tāftan, to twist, to spin, curl, &c.; see Horn, § 272. See Tapestry.

TAG, a point of metal at the end of a lace, anything tacked on at the end of a thing. (Scand.) 'An arlet or tag of a poynt'; Baret, ed. 1580. 'Are all thy points so void of Reasons tags?' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 61. 'A point' was a tagged lace; cf. 'Tag of a poynt, Ferretum'; Levins.—Swed. tagg, a prickle, point, tooth; Norw. tagge, a tooth, cog, + Pomeran. tagg, a point, tack; Low G. takk, a point, tooth. β. The Low G. takk is the same word as E. tack, a small nail, and G. zacke, a tooth, time, prong. See Tack, Taohe. Der. tag, verb; tag-rag, used by Stanyhurst (tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, p. 21) to mean 'to small pieces', but usual in the sense of 'every appendage and shred', a shortened form of tag and rag, as in 'they all came in, both tagge and ragge'; Spenser, State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 662, col. 2. So also tag and rag, Whitgift's Works, i. 315 (Parker Soc.). So also tag-rag and bobtail, where bobtail—short or hunchy tail, from bob, a bunch; see Bob.

TAIL (1), the end of the back-bone of an animal, a hairy appendage, appendage. (E.) ME. tail, tay, Chaucer, C. T. 3876 (A. 3878). AS. taeg, taga, a tail, Grein, ii. 523.—Icel. taegl, Swed. tagel, hair of the tail or mane; Goth. taeg, hair, Mark, i. 6; G. tagel, a tail. β. Root uncertain; it has been compared with Skt. daçā, the fringe of a garment. Der. tail-piece, a piece or small drawing at the tail or end of a chapter or book. Also tail-ed, Rich. Coer de Lion, l. 1868.

TAIL (2), the term applied to an estate which is limited to certain heirs. (F.—L.) Better spelt taille. 'This limitation, or taille, is either general or special'; Cowel, in Todd's Johnson; see the whole article. —F. taille, 'a cutting,' &c.; Cot.; see Tally.

TAILOR, one who cuts out and makes cloth garments. (F.—L.) Properly 'a cutter.' ME. tailor, taylor, Rob. of Glouc. p. 313. l. 6394.—OF. tailleur, later tailleur, 'a cutter.' Cot.—F. tailleur, to cut; cf. F. taille, an incision, a slitting.—Late L. tailēre, to cut; cf. taila, a thin rod, stick, also a cutting, slip, layer (an agricultural word). See Diez, who cites from Nonius, 4. 473; 'talens scissiones lignorum vel praescimina Varro dicit de re rust. lib. I.; nam etiam nunc rustica voce intertallare dicitur dividere vel excindere ramum.' This verb intertallare is preserved in the Span. entretallar, to slash. Der. tailor-ing. And see tail, de-tail, en-tail, re-tail.

TAINT, a tinge, dye, stain, blemish. (F.—L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 3. 124. Cf. ME. taint, tainy, a disease in hawks; Rook of St. Albans, fol. b 2, back.—F. teint; MF. teinter, 'a tincture, die, stain'; Cot.—F. teint, pp. of teindre, 'to stain', id.—L. tingere; see Tinge. Der. taint, vb., Komco, i. 4. 76. ¶ Perhaps confused with ataint, from tangere.

TAKE, to lay hold of, seize, grasp, get. (Scand.) ME. taken, pt. t. tok, pp. taken, Chaucer, C. T. 572 (A 570); pp. takē, id. 2649 (A 2647). Late AS. taken, A. S. Chron. an. 1127. Not a true AS. word, but borrowed from Norse.—Icel. taka, pt. t. tók, pp. tökinn, to lay hold of, seize, grasp (a very common word); Swed. taga, MSwed. taka; Dan. tage.—Goth. tēkan, pt. t. taitōk, pp. tēkans, to touch. Der. take-ing, take-ing-l. Allied words are tack, tache, tag, tack-le, attach, at-tuck, de-tack.

TALC, a mineral occurring in thin flakes. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Oil of talc.' Ben Jonson, Epigram to the Small-pox; Underwoods, ii. 11. And see Narces, F. talc (Cot.).—Span. talco.—Arab. talq, 'talc, mica'; Rich. Dict. p. 974.

TALE, a number, reckoning, narrative. (E.) ME. tale; see Chaucer, Cant. Tales. AS. tael, a number, tales, a narrative; Grein, ii. 521.—Du. taal, language, tongue, speech; Icel. tal, talk, a tale; taln, a number, a speech; Dan. tale, speech; Swed. tal, speech, number; G. zahl, number; OllG. zala. It is probable that Goth. unials, uninstructed, taljan, to instruct, are related words. Der. tal-bear-ing, tal-bear-er, tell-tale (Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave has 'a tale-bearer or tell-tale'); tal-tell-er, P. Mowman, B. xx. 297. Also tell, q.v., talk, q.v.

TALENT, a weight or sum of money, natural gift or ability, inclination. (F.—L.—Gk.) See Trench, Study of Words, and Select Glossary. We derive the sense of ability from the parable in Matt. xxv. our talents being gifts of God. The ME. talent occurs in the sense of will or inclination, from the figure of the inclination or tilting of a balance. ME. talent; whence mal-talent, ill-will, Rom. of the Rose, 273, 330; and see Wyllif, Matt. xxv. 15; King Alisaunder, 1280.—F. talent, 'a talent in money; also will, desire, an earnest humour unto'; Cot.—L. talentum.—Gk. τάλαντον, a balance; a weight, weight or sum of money, talent. Named from the notion of lifting and weighing; allied to τάλας (stem talav-), bearing, enduring, L. tol-ere, to lift, sustain, Skt. tal, to lift, weigh, talana, lifting, talā, a balance, weight. All from √TEL, to lift. See Tolerate. Der. talent-ed, endowed with talent, added by Todd to Johnson, with the remark that the word is old; he gives a quotation from Archbp. Abbot, in Rushworth's Collections, p. 449; which book first appeared between 1659 and 1701, and treats of matters from 1618–1648; see an excellent note on talented in Modern English, by F. Hall, p. 70. Brugmann, i. § 580.

TALISMAN, a spell. (Span.—Arab.—Gk.) 'In magic, talisman, and cabal'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 530. The F. is also talisman, but is a later word; both F. and E. words were prob. taken directly from Spanish.—Span. talisman, a magical character; also a doctor of the Mohammedan law, in which sense Littré notes its use in French also.—Arab. ṭīlsmān, properly the pl. of ṭīlsm, or ṭīlsmā, 'a talisman or magical image, upon which, under a certain horoscope, are engraved mystical characters, as charms against enchantment'; Rich. Dict. p. 974.—Gk. τέλεσμα, a payment; used in Late Gk. to mean initiation or mystery (Devic); cf. τέλεσμός, an accomplishment or completion.—Gk. τέλειος, to accomplish, fulfil, complete, end; also, to pay.—Gk. τέλος, end, completion; also, initiation into a mystery; whence the sense of the derived sb. τέλεισμα. Der. talisman-ic.

TALK, to discourse. (E.) ME. talken, Wyclif, Luke, xxiv. 15; and much earlier, in St. Marbaret, p. 13, Ancren Riwle, p. 422. Cf. EFries. talken, to talk; talke, a short tale. We may note that the Ifarl. MS. actually has talken in Chaucer, C. T., where the Six-text (A 772) has talen in all the MSS. And we may compare the Low G. taalk, (1) a jackdaw, (2) a talkative woman. β. Apparently extended (like wal-k, q.v.) from AS. tal-, as in tal-u, a tale, tal-ian, to account, with suffix -k, which seems to give a frequentative force. Cf. Icel. tal-a, Swed. tal-a, Dan. tal-e, to talk. See Tale. So also AS. tam-ian, to tame (Napier); from tam, tame. Der. talk-er; talk-at-ive, a strangely coined word, spelt talenteife in The Craft of Lovers, st. 4, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341. Hence talk-at-ive-ly, nes.

TALL, high in stature, lofty. (E. or C.) Two distinct words appear with this spelling: (1) tall, in the sense of 'serviceable,' or 'valiant,' which is obsolescent; and (2) tall, in the sense of 'high in stature.' 1. The former is English; see Trench, Select Glossary. ME. tal, 'Tal, or semely, Decens, elegans.' Prompt. Parv. 'So humble and talle;' Chaucer, Compl. of Mars, l. 38, where the sense appears to be 'obedient or docile, or obsequious.' In old plays it means 'valiant, fine, bold, great;' Halliwell. In the Plowman's Tale, st. 3, untall seems to mean 'poorly clad.' Allied to AS. ge-tal, quick, prompt; AS. -tal, as in lēof-tal, friendly. Also to OHG. gi-zal, quick; and further, to Goth. tal, only used in the comp. un-tals, indocile, uninstructed. Note also the forms un-tala, un-tale, bad, used to gloss mal in the Northumb. Gospels, Matt. xxvii. 23. 2. Perhaps, in the sense of 'lofty,' the word may be Celtic. We find tal, tall, high, both in W. and Cornish; Williams instances tal carn, the high rock, in St. Allen. It is remarkable that the Irish talla means 'meet, fit, proper, just.' Further light is desired as to this difficult word. Der. tall-ness.

TALLAGE, a tribute; see Tally.

TALLOW, fat of animals melted. (E.) ME. talgh, Reliquie Antiq. i. 53; talwz, Eng. Gilds, p. 359. l. 11; talwgh, Rich. Coer de Lion, 1552. Cf. EFries. talig, talig, tallow.—MDu. talgh, talch, tallow, Hexham, mod. Dn. tal, Low G. tal; Dan. and Swed. talg; Icel. tölgr, also tölgr, tölk. The G. talg is borrowed from Low G. β. There is an AS. telg, telg, telg, a stain, dye, but its connexion with tallow is very doubtful. If tallow meant 'hardened' fat, cf. Goth. talvus, steadfast, firm. See Stearine.

TALLY, a stick cut or notched so as to match another stick, used for keeping accounts; an exact match. (F.—L.) ME. taille, Chaucer, C. T. 572 (A 570); whence tailles, verb, to score on a tally, P. Mowman, B. v. 429.—F. taille, 'a notch, nick, incision, notching, nicking'; also, a tally, or score kept on a piece of wood; Cot.—F. tailleur, to cut.—Late L. tailēre, to cut; cf. I. tailen, a slip of wood; see Tailor. It is probable that the final -y in tally-y is due to the frequent use of the F. pp. taille, 'cut, nicked, notched,' as applied to the piece of wood scored, in place of the sb. taille. The final -y in lev-y, jur-y, pun-y is likewise due to the F. pp. suffix. Der. tally, verb; tally-shop. Also tallage, a tribute; ME. taylage, Chaucer, The Former Age, 54; OF. tailage (Godefroy); from F. tailleur, to cut, 'also, to levy tributes on,' Cot. And see en-tail, de-tail, tail-or.

TALMUD, the body of Hebrew laws, with comments. (Chaldee.) See Talmud in Index to Parker Society. Spelt talmud, thalnud in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; talmud in Minshew, ed. 1627; thalnud in Cotgrave.—Chaldee talmūd, instruction, doctrine; cf. Heb. talmod, a disciple, scholar, from lāmad, to learn, lāmad, to teach.

TALON, the claw of a bird of prey. (F.—L.) Spelt talant in Palsgrave (with excrement after n). He gives: 'Talant of a byrde, the hynder clawe, talon.' Thus the talon was particularly used of the bird's hind claw. MF. talon, Allit. Romance of Alexander, 5454; taloun, Mandeville's Travels, in Spec. of Early English, part II., p. 174. l. 130.—F. falon, 'a heel'; Cot.—Late L. talōnem, acc. of talō, a heel.—L. talus, heel.

TAMANDUA, an anteater. (Brazil.) From Guarani tamān-dwā (where d is nasal); see Granada, Vocabulario Rioplatense.

TAMARIND, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (F.—Span.—Arab. and Pers.) Spelt tamarinde in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 6.—MF. tamarind, 'a small, soft, and dark-red Indian date'; Cot. Also tamarinde, 'the Indian date-tree'; id.—Span. tamarindo. (Cf. Ital. tamarindo; Florio gives the Ital. pl. tamarindis, and Minshew the Span. pl. tamarindos, without mention of the sing. form.)—Arab. tamr, a ripe date, a dry or preserved date, and Hind, India; whence tamr ul Hind, a tamarind, lit. date of India; Rich. Dict. pp. 446, 1691. The Arab. tamr is allied to Heb. tāmār, a palm-tree, occurring in the Bible as Tamar, a proper name. The word Hind is borrowed from Persian (which turns initial s into h), and is derived from Skt. sindhu, the river Indus; see Indigo.

TAMARISK, the name of a tree. (L.) Spelt tamariske in Minshew, ed. 1627. Cf. MF. tamaris, 'tamarisk,' in Cot.; but the E. word keeps the k.—L. tamariscus, also tamaris, tamaricē, a tamarisk. (The Gk. name is πύργος.) Hardly a L. word; perhaps due to, or connected with Skt. tamālakā-s, tamāla-s, a tree with a dark bark; allied to tamas, darkness; Fick, i. 593. See Dim.

TAMBOUR, a small drum-like circular frame, for embroidering.

(F. - Span. - Arab. - Pers.). In Todd's Johnson. - F. tambour, a drum, a tambour; broder au tambour, to do tambour-work; Hamilton. See further under Tabour. Der. tambour-ine, spelt tamburin in Spenser, Shep. Calendar, June, l. 59, from F. tambourin, a tabor (Hamilton), dimin. of F. tambour.

TAME, subdued, made gentle, domesticated. (E.) ME. tame, Wyclif, Mark, v. 4. AS. tam, Matt. xxi. 5; whence tamien, vb., to tame, in Elfric's Colloquy (section on the Fowler), in Voc. p. 95. +Du. tam; Icel. tamr; Swed. and Dan. tam; G. zähm. Cf. Goth. gatanjan, to tame; a causal verb. ß. All from Tent. type tamoz, tame. Allied to Skt. dam, to be tame, also to tame, Gk. δαμνέω, L. domāre, to tame. Der. tame, vb.; tame-ly, -ness; tam-er, tam-able; also (from same root) daunt, q.v., in-dom-it-able.

TAMMY, the same as Stamin, q.v. See Tamine in Nares. TAMPER, to meddle, practise upon, play with. (F. - L.) 'You have been tampering, any time these three days Thus to disgrace me;' Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, iv. 2 (Jacomo). The same word as temper, but used in a bad sense; to temper is to moderate, allay by influence, but is here made to mean to interfere with, to influence in a bad way. Prob. Southern F. Mistral gives tampéra as the Limousin form of mod. Prov. tempera, vb., to temper. Godefroy has tampurure as a variant of OF. tempreure, moderation. See Temper. Doublet, temper.

TAMPION, a kind of plug. (F. - Teut.) 'Tampyon for a gon [gun], tampon;' Palsgrave. - F. tampion, a bung or stopple; Cot. A nasalised form of tapon, 'a bung or stopple;' id. Formed with suffix -on (L. -inē) from OF. tampe, tape, a bung. Cotgr. gives the Picard vb. taper (or tapper), 'to bung, or stop with a bung.' - Du. tap, 'a bung or a stopple;' Ilexham; Low G. tappe, a tap, bung. See Tap (2).

TAN, oak-bark or other bark used for converting hides into leather. (F. - G.) The sb. is, etymologically, the orig. word, but is rarely seen in books; Levins has only tan as a verb. Rich. quotes 'skinner in tan-tubs' from Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 104. The ME. tannen, verb, to tan, occurs in Eng. Gilds, p. 358, l. 16, and the sb. tanner is common, as in P. Plowman, C. i. 223, &c. - F. tan, 'the bark of a young oak, wherever leather is tanned;' Cot. Cf. Bret. tann, an oak, occasionally used (but rarely) with the sense of tan; Legonidec. - G. tanne, a fir-tree; the names of oak and fir seem to have been confused; the OHG. tanna meant both 'fir' and 'oak' (Klinge). A High G. form; cf. Du. denn, a fir-tree, MDu. dan, 'ables,' in Mone, Quellen, p. 302; Low G. danne, a fir-tree (Lübben). Cf. Skt. dhanva, a bow. Der. tan, verb, as above; tann-er; tann-ery, from F. tannerie, 'tanning,' also a tan-house; Cot. Also tann-ic, a coined word; tann-in; F. tanin (Hamilton), a coined word; tan-ling, one scorched by the sun, Cymb. iv. 4. 29. Also tann-y, q.v. Also tan, to beat; Norm. dial. tanner la peau, to tan one's skin; Dubois.

TANDEM, applied to two horses harnessed one before the other instead of side by side. (L.) So called because harnessed at length, by a pun upon the word in university slang Latin. - L. tandem, at length. - L. tam, so, so far; and suffix -dem, allied to -dam in qui-dam.

TANG (1), a strong or offensive taste, esp. of something extraneous. (Scand.) 'It is said of the best oyl that it hath no tast, that is, no tang, but the natural gust of oyl therein;' Fuller, Worthies, England (K.). ME. tang, a sting; Cath. Angl. (1483). See Tang (2). So also ME. tongge, 'sharpness of lycure in tastynge;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. MDu. tanger, 'sharpe, or tart upon the tongue; tangere kaese, tart or biting cleese;' Ilexham. The lit. sense of tanger is 'plucking;' from Du. tang, a pair of tongs, piners, nippers; cognate with E. tangs. See E. D. D. Cf. MlG. zanger, sharp, sharp-tasted; AS. ge-tangan, to press hard upon (pt. l. ge-tang).

TANG (2), the part of a knife which goes into the haft, the tongue of a buckle, the prong of a fork. (Scand.) See Halliwell; who cites: 'A tange of a knyfe, piramus;' see Cath. Angl. (1483). It also means a bee's sting. Pugio, a tange; 'Voc. 703. 27. 'Tongge of a bee, Aculeus; Tongge of a knyfe, Piramus;' Prompt. Parv. - Icel. tangi, a spit or projection of land; the pointed end by which the blade of a knife is driven into the handle, allied to töng (gen. tangar), a smith's tongs; tengja, to fasten. So called because it is the part nipped and held fast by the handle; so the tongue of a buckle (corrupted from tang of a buckle) nips and holds fast the strap; the bee's sting nips or stings. The form tong in the Prompt. Parv. answers to the sing. of E. tongs. See Tonga.

TANG (3), to make a shrill sound. (E.) Shak. has it both as sb. and verb. 'A tongue with a tang,' i.e. with a shrill sound, Temp. II. 2. 52. 'Let thy tongue tang,' i.e. ring out; Tw. Nt. II. 5. 163, III. 4. 78. An imitative word, allied to ting, whence the frequentative tinkle; also to tink, whence the frequent. tinkle. Cf. Prov. E. ting-tang, the saints-bell; tingle-tangle, a small bell, which occurs in Randolph's Amintas (1640); Halliwell. So also MDu. tinge-tangen, to tinkle; Ilexham. Cf. MF. tantan (= tang-tang), 'the bell that hangs about the neck of a cow;' Cot. See Tingle, Tinker, Twang.

TANG (4), sea-weed; see Tangle.

TANGENT, a line which meets a circle, and, being produced, does not cut it. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - L. tangent, touching, stem of pres. part. of tangere (base tag-), to touch; pp. tactus. +Gk. base tag-, to touch, seen in terayder, taking. Der. tangent-i-al, in the direction of the tangent, Tatler, no. 433. tangent-y; also (from pp. tactus) tact. And see tang-ible, task, taste, tan. Also attain, attainder, attaint, con-tact, con-tagion, con-taminate, con-tiguous, con-tingent, entire, in-terger, redintegration.

TANGIBLE, perceptible by the touch, that can be realised. (F. - L.) In Cotgrave. - F. tangible, 'tangible;' Cot. - L. tangibilis, touchable; formed with suffix -ibilis from tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tangibil-y, tangibil-ly.

TANGLE, to interweave, knit together confusedly, ensnare. (Scand.) 'I tangell thynges so together that they can nat well be parted asonder, fembrouille;' Palsgrave. Levins has the comp. entangle. To tangle is 'to keep twisting together like sea-weed;' a frequentative verb from tang, sb. (also tangle, sb.), sea-weed, a Northern word. Cf. tangle, a stalk of sea-weed; in Leslie's Hist. of Scotland, i. 62 (1596); S. T. S.). - Dan. tang, Swed. täng, Icel. jang, kelp or bladder-wrack, a kind of sea-weed; whence the idea of confused heap. We also find the dimin. Icel. jöngull, sea-weed; Norw. tongul, a tangle-stalk. Cf. Norman dialect tangon (a Norse word), explained by Métiévi as Fucus flagelliformis. (The G. tang, sea-weed, was borrowed from Scand., for it begins with t, not d.) All from Tent. base tang-*; see Tight. ß. We also find tangle in the sense of sea-weed (Halliwell); and the verb to tangle may have been made directly from it. It makes no great difference; cf. Icel. jöngull, as above; Norw. tengel, a stalk of sea-weed. Der. tangle, sb., which seems to be a later word than the verb, Milton, P. L. ix. 632; en-tangle, q.v.

TANIST, a presumptive heir to a prince. (Irish.) Spelt tanisth in Spenser, View of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611. - Irish tanaisie, the presumptive or apparent heir to a prince. - Olrish tanaisie, second in rank. See Macbain. Der. tanist-ry, a coined word, to signify the custom of electing a tanist; also in Spenser, as above.

TANK, a large cistern. (Port. - L.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 66; and at p. 43 in another edition (Todd). Also in Dryden, Don Sebastian, II. 2. The same word as Stank, q.v. The form tank is Portuguese, which is the only Romance language that drops the initial s. - Port. tanque, a tank, pond; the same word as Span. estanque, OF. estanc, Prov. estanc, stanc, a pond, dam of water; from Port. and Span. estancare, to stanch, stop. - Late L. stancare, to stanch. Ultimately from L. stagnum, a pool; see Stank, Stanh, Stagnant. ¶ See Tank in Yule.

TANKARD, a large vessel for holding drink. (F. - Teut.) ME. tankard, used to translate L. amphora, Voc. 563. 28; also in Lydgate, Ballad of Jack Hare, st. 2; and in Prompt. Parv. - MF. tanguard, 'a tankard, in Kabeleis;' Cot. Cf. MDu. tancheert, 'a wooden [wooden] tankard,' Ilexham; with F. suffix -ard. The word was really, at some time, French. [Irish tancaird must have been borrowed from E.] Prob. from Swed. stänka, 'a large wooden can' (Wiedegren), 'a tankard' (Öman); with F. suffix -ard. The Swed. stänka is a dimin. of stänna, stänka, a vat (Rictz); note the aa in Norw. taankar (also taankar), an oil-can. Cf. also Westphal. stänke, stänne, a vessel broader at the bottom (Woeeste); Low G. stänke (corruptly, stänne), the same; whence E. standard, a tankard, a standing bowl. 'Frolic my lords, and let the standards walk;' Greene, A Looking-glass, ed. Dyce, p. 141. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 290. All from the vb. to stand.

TANSY, a tall plant, with small yellow flowers. (F. - Late L. - Gk.) ME. tansye, a tansy-bed; 'Hoc tansetum, tansye,' Voc. 712. 33. 'Tansy, an herbe, tanaisie,' Palsgrave. - OF. tanaisie, as in Palsgrave, later tanaisie, 'the herb tansy;' Cot. Other forms are OF. athanaisie, Cot.; MlIt. atanasia, 'the herb tansy,' Florio; Port. atanasia, athanasia. [Late L. tanacetum (spelt tanacetum above) means properly 'a bed of tansy;' as remarked in Prior, Popular Names of British Plants.] The OF. athanaisie, MlIt. atanasia, and Port. atanasia, athanasia, answer to a L. form athanasia, which is only the Gk. ἀθανασία, immortality, in Latin spelling. ß. Prior says that athanasia was 'the name under which it was sold in the shops in Lyte's time.' The plant is bitter and aromatic, and was (and is) used in medicine, whence, probably, the name. Prior thinks there is a reference to 'Lucian's Dialogues of the Gods, no. iv, where Jupiter, speaking of Ganymede, says to Mercury, ἀγάγε αὐτόν, ὁ ἑρμῆς, καὶ μὴν τῆς ἀθανασίας ἐρεῖ οὐλοχόουσα ἡμῖν, take him away, and when he has drunk of immortality, bring him back as cupbearer to us: the dēavacia here has been misunderstood, like ἀμύποια in other passages, for some special plant.' Cf. Mital. atanato, 'the rose campion,' Florio; lit. 'the immortal.' γ. The Gk. dēavacia is allied to dēavatos, immortal; from dē, negative prefix, and avēin, 2. or of bragaveu, to die. See Lyte's Dodoes, bk. i. c. 10.

TANTALISE, to tease or torment, by offering something that is just out of reach and is kept so. (Gk.) 'What greater plague can hell itself devise, Than to be willing thus to tantalize?' Answer to Ben Jonson's Ode (Come leave the lashed Stage), by T. Randolph, st. 3; printed in Jonson's Works, after the play of The New Inn. Formed with the suffix -ise (F. -iser, L. -izare, Gk. -izein) from the proper name Tantalus, Gk. Τάνταλος, in allusion to his story. The fable was that he was placed up to his chin in water, which fled from his lips whenever he desired to drink. This myth perhaps relates to the sun, which evaporates water, but remains, as it were, unsated. Allied to ταρταλέειν, to sway to and fro, and to τάλα-αρος, see Talent. Der. tantal-ism (with F. suffix -isme < L. -isma < Gk. -ισμα), Beam, and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, act ii. sc. 2, l. 10, to end.

TANTAMOUNT, amounting to as much, equal. (F. — L.) Rich. points out, by 2 quotations from Bp. Taylor, Episcopacy Asserted, §§ 9 and 31, that it was first used as a verb; which agrees with the fact that amount was properly at first a verb. It meant 'to amount to as much.' — AF. tant amunter, to amount to as much, Yearbooks of Edw. I., 1292-3, p. 31; cf. F. tant, so much, as much; and E. Amount, q. v. β. The F. tant is from L. tantum, neut. of tantus, so great; formed from pronominal base to-, he, the, so as to answer to quantus, from the base quo-, who. See The.

TAP (1), to strike or knock gently. (F. — Teut.) ME. tappen, to tap; the imperative appears as tap (for tap), Ancien Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; cf. tappe, sb., a tap, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2357. — F. taper, tapper, 'to tap, strike, hit, bob, clap.' Cot. Of Teut. origin; Low G. (and G.) tappen, to grope, to fumble, EFries. tappen, to tap, tap, a light blow. So also Icel. tapna, to tap. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Knss. topate, to stamp with the foot; Malay tahak, to beat out corn, tapuk, to slap, pat, dab (Marsden's Dict. pp. 69, 77); Arab. tabi, a drum; E. dub-a-dub, noise of a drum, E. dab, a pat. Der. tap, sb. And see Tip (2).

TAP (2), a short pipe through which liquor is drawn from a cask, a plug to stop a hole in a cask. (E.) ME. tappe, Chaucer, C. T. 3890. AS. tæppa, a tap (Toller); whence tappere, one who taps casks; 'Caupo, tabernarius, tappere,' Voc. 555. 15. AS. tæppa, sb., whence tappen, verb; Icel. tappi, sb., tappa, vb.; Dan. tap, sb., tappe, vb.; Swed. tapp, a tap, handful, wisp, whence tappa, vb.; G. zapfen, sb. and vb.; OIIG. zapfo, sb. β. Teut. type tappan-* The Swed. tapp means a wisp, handful, and G. zapfen is bung, stopple. Prob. the orig. idea (as Wedgwood suggests) was a bunch of some material to stop a hole with, a tuft of something. We may connect it, as Fick does, with F. top, G. zoff; the G. zoff means a top of a tree, a wett or tuft of hair, a 'pig-tail'; and the Icel. toppr means, first of all, a tuft or lock of hair. Der. tap, vb., Merry Wives, i. 3. 11; tap-room; tap-root, a root like a tap, i. e. conical, cf. G. zapfen, a tap, cone of a fir, zapfenwurzel, a tap-root. Also tappster, ME. tapstere, Chaucer, C. T. 241, AS. tæppstere, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zuytzen, p. 36, l. 13, a fem. form of AS. tæppere, a tapper, as above; for the suffix -ster, see Spinster. Also tampion, q. v. And see Tip (1).

TAPE, a narrow band or fillet of woven work, used for strings, &c. (L. — Gk.) ME. tape, Chaucer, C. T. 3241; also tappe. 'Hec tenca, tappe,' in a list of ornaments, Voc. 555. 15. AS. tæppe, a tape, fillet. 'Tenia, tæppan vel dol-smelltas, where tæppan is a pl. form; Voc. 107. 33. The orig. sense may have been 'a strip of stuff'; it is closely allied to AS. tæppet, a tippet, ME. tæpet, a piece of tapestry; and the use of the pl. tæppan is suggestive of strips of stuff or cloth. Not an E. word, but borrowed from L. tapēte, cloth, hangings, tapestry, a word borrowed from Greek. See Tapestry. Tippet. In like manner we find OIIG. tepih, teppi (mod. G. teppich) tapestry, with the same sense as OIIG. tepid, from the same L. word. Der. tape-worm.

TAPER (1), a small wax-candle. (L.) ME. taper, Rob. of Glouc., p. 456, l. 9350. AS. taper, taper; Voc. 267. 12; 202. 35. Cf. Irish taper, a taper; W. tampwr, a taper, torch.

TAPER (2), long and slender. (E.) 'Her taper fingers,' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. bk. i. l. 676. Here the fingers are likened to tapers or small wax-candles; and the word is nothing but a substitution for taper-like. This appears more clearly from the use of taper-wise, i. e. in the form of a taper, in Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16: 'the French box [box-tree] . . . growth taper-wise, sharp pointed in the top, and runneth vp to more than ordinarie height.' As wax tapers were sometimes made smaller towards the top, the word taper meant growing smaller towards the top, not truly cylindrical; whence the adj. tapering with the sense of taper-like, and finally the verb to taper. Note also 'tapering top' in Pitt, tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. v. l. 489 of L. text. Der. taper-ing, taper, vb.

TAPESTRY, a kind of carpet-work, with wrought figures, esp. used for decorating walls. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'A faire and pleasant lodging, hangd with richel Arceae or tapestry;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 2. § 3. Lydgate has tapeury; Minor Poems, p. 6. Tapestry is a contraction of tapisserie; Palsgrave gives: 'Tappysserie worke, tapisserie.' — F. tapisserie, 'tapistry.' Cot. — F. tapisser, 'to furnish with tapistry.' id. — F. tapis, 'tapistry hangings; id. (Cf. Span. tapis, tapestry, tapete, small floor-carpet; Ital. tappeto, a carpet, tappazzare, to hang with tapistry; tappazzeria, tapestry.) — Late L. tapētium, tapestry (Körting); cf. tapēte, cloth, hangings. — Gk. ταπήτριον, dimin. of τάπη, a carpet, woollen rug. Cf. Pers. tabastak, a fringed carpet or cushion, Rich. Dict., p. 362; tābidan, to spin; tāstak, taffeta; see Taffeta. Ilorn, § 372. Thus the Gk. word is prob. of Pers. origin. See also Tape, Tippet. Der. We say 'on the tapis;' from F. tapis, carpet.

TAPIOCA, the glutinous and granular substance obtained from the roots of the Cassava plant of Brazil. (Port. — Brazilian.) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'The fecula or flour [of the cassava] . . . is termed mouchaco in Brazil. . . . When it is prepared by drying on hot plates, it becomes granular, and is called tapioca;' Eng. Cyclopædia, art. Tapioca. — Port. tapioca. — Brazilian tapioka; 'the Tupi-Guarani [Brazilian] name of the poisonous juice which issues from the root of the manioc [cassava] when pressed.' Littré. [He refers to Burton, ii. 39, who follows The Voyage to Brazil of the Prince de Wied-Newwied, i. 116.] β. The Tupi (native Brazilian) tipi-aka means 'dregs squeezed out;' from tipi, 'residue, dregs,' and the verbal root og, ak, to take by force, pull, pull, hence also to squeeze (Cavalanti). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 340.

TAPIR, an animal with a short proboscis, found in S. America. (Brazilian.) Called the tapir or anta in a tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, i. 250; where the animal is said to be a native of Brazil, Paraguay, and Guiana. — Brazilian tapiira, tappira, a tapir. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 340.

TAR, a resinous substance of a dark colour, obtained from pine-trees. (E.) ME. tarre, Prompt. l'arr.; spelt tarre, P. Ploverman, C. x. 262. AS. tearu, tar; the dat. tearu occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 132, l. 5; also spelt teru in a gloss (Bosworth); also tyru, Gen. vi. 14; Exod. ii. 3. We also find the comp. scip-tearu, tearu, -lara, -tera, ship-tar (Toller). — Du. teer; Icel. tjara; Dan. tjære; Swed. tjåra. And cf. G. theer, prob. borrowed from Low G. tär or Du. teer. [We find also Irish teer, borrowed from E.; as the word is certainly Teutonic.] β. We also find Icel. tyri, tyrfi, a resinous fir-tree; whence tyrvitr, tyrvitr, with the sense of 'tar-wood.' Allied to Lithuan. darwa, derwa, resinous wood, particularly the resinous parts of the fir-tree that easily burn (Nesselmann); and this is allied to Russ. drevo, a tree, dervo, a tree, wood, timber, W. derw, an oak-tree, and E. Tree, q. v. γ. Thus the orig. sense was simply 'tree' or 'wood,' esp. resinous wood, as most in request for firing; hence the resin or tar itself. Der. tarr-y; also tar-pauling, q. v.

TAR (2), a sailor; in Swift's Poems, To the Earl of Peterborough, st. 11. It is simply short for Tarpauling, q. v.

TARANTELLA, the name of a dance. (Ital.) Both Ital. tarantella, the dance, and Ital. tarantola, a tarantula or large spider, derive their names from Taranto, a town in S. Italy (L. Tarentum).

TARAXACUM, the dandelion. (Arab.) 'Taraxacum or Taraxacon, the herb dandelion or sow-thistle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The common dandelion is Leontodon taraxacum. The etymology of this strange word is given by Devic, Supp. to Littré. He shows that it is not Greek, but Arabic or Persian. We find Pers. farhshaghūn, wild endive; Rich. Dict. p. 967; but Devic says he can only find, in Kazi, the statement that 'the farshaghūn is like succory, but more efficacious,' where he thinks we evidently ought to read farshaghūn, and to explain it by dandelion or wild succory. In Gerard of Cremona he finds Arab. taraxacon, explained as a kind of succory; and a chapter on taraxacon in a Latin edition of Avicenna, Basle, 1563, p. 312.

TARBOOSH, a round cap much worn by Arabs and Turks. (Arab. — Pers.) Arab. farbūsh, a kind of red cap (Devic). Devic takes it to be of Pers. origin. — Pers. sar-pūsh, a head-dress; properly, for women. — Pers. sar, head; pūsh, a cover; see Rich. Dict., pp. 349, 818, 822.

TARDY, slow, sluggish, late. (F. — L.) In Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 51. — F. tardif, 'tardy.' Cot. Cf. Ital. tardivo, tardy. These forms correspond to Late L. tardius*, formed with suffix -ius from L. tardus, slow. Der. tardily, -ness; (from L. tardus) re-tard.

TARE (1), a plant like the vetch. (E.) ME. tare, Chaucer, C. T.

3998 (A 4000); pl. taris, i.e. daniel, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 25. Palsgrave has: 'taare, a corne lyke a pease, lupins'; also: 'taresyche [= tare-vetch], a corne, lupyn'. The mod. E. tare is, in fact, short for tare-vetch, lit. 'wheat-vetch', or 'daniel-vetch'. +MDu. terwe, Du. tarwe, Low G. tarwe, wheat. Cf. Lithuan. dirwa, a corn-field, Skt. dāruvā, a kind of grass. See Notes on E. Elym, p. 291.

TARE (2), an allowance made for the weight of the package in which goods are contained, or for other detriment. (F.—Span.—Arab.) A mercantile term; explained in Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tare, 'loss, diminution, . . . waste in merchandise by the exchange or use thereof'; Cot.—Span. tara, tare, allowance in weight. (Cf. Ital. and Port. tara, the same.)—Arab. farha (given by Devic); from farh, throwing, casting, flinging. Richardson, Pers. Dict. p. 967, gives Arab. farh, tarrah, thrown away, from farh. The orig. sense is 'that which is thrown away', hence loss, detriment. From the Arab. root taraha, he threw prostrate, threw down; Rich., as above.

TARGET, a small shield, buckler, a mark to fire at. (F.—Scand.) The mark to fire at is named from its resemblance to a round shield. It is remarkable that the g is hard; indeed, the pl. is spelt targattes in Ascham, Tuxophilus, bk. i. ed. Arber, p. 69, l. 28; and we find targate in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. i. c. 18, § 2. This may be accounted for by derivation from OF. targete, a small shield (Godefroy); dimin. of OF. targete, as in Cot. [The mod. F. targete is from OF. targete (with g—h); but cf. mod. Prov. targete, dimin. of targo, OProv. targo.] We also had targe as a F. word, Kob. of Glouc., p. 361, l. 7462; and see Chaucer, C. T. 473 (A 471). The dimin. suffix -el is the usual F. dimin. so common in E.—Icel. targa, a target, small round shield; OIlg. zarga, a frame, side of a vessel, wall; G. zarge, a frame, case, side, border. Cf. also AS. targe, a round shield, pl. targus, A. 19, 970; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 516. [We find also F. targe, 'a kind of target or shield'; Cot.; Port. tarja, an escutcheon on a target, a border; Span. tarja, a shield; Ital. targa, a buckler; words which Diez explains to be of Teut. origin.] The Irish and Gael. targaid, a target, shield, must have been taken from ME. targat; cf. Rhys, Lect. ii. ¶ Among the words of Teut. origin Diez includes the Port. and Span. adarga; the Port. adarga is a short square target, and the Span. adarga is explained by Minshen to be 'a short and light target or buckler, which the Africans and Spaniards do use.' But this word is plainly Moorish, the a being for al, the Arab. article, and the etymology is from Arab. darga(t), daraga(t), 'a shield or buckler of solid leather'; Rich. Dict., p. 664. Note the Late L. adarea, a shield (1099) in Ducange; and the Late L. tarcheta, a target (1443). It is remarkable that Cotgrave explains F. targe as 'a kind of target or shield, almost square, and much in use along the Spanish coast, lying over against Africa, from whence it seems the fashion of it came.' He seems to be thinking only of the Moorish square shield; but the OF. targe is as old as the 11th cent., and the AS. targe as old as the 10th; so that the Teut. and Moorish words would seem to be distinct. But if the AS. targe can be of Moorish origin, the G. zarge is prob. unrelated.

TARGUM, a Chaldee paraphrase of the Old Testament. (Chaldee.) See Targums in Index to Parker Society. In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The Targum or paraphrase of Jonathan'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 1, § 4.—Chaldee targum, an interpretation; from targem, to interpret (Webster). Cf. Arab. targuman, an interpreter; for which see Dragoman.

TARIFF, a list or table of duties upon merchandise. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Tariff, a table made to show . . . any multiple or product . . . a proportional table . . . a book of rates agreed upon for duties'; &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706.—MF. tariffe, 'arithmetick, or the casting of accompts'; Cot.—Span. tarifa, a list of prices, book of rates.—Arab. tarīf, giving information, notification (because a tariff does this); Rich. Dict. p. 416.—Arab. tarf, knowing, knowledge; from Arab. root tarafa, he knew; Rich. Dict. p. 1003. See further in Devic, Synx to Littre.

TARLATANE, a kind of thin muslin. (F.) F. tarlatane, formerly spelt tarlatane, in 1723 (Jatizled). Of unknown origin.

TARN, a small lake, a pool. (Scand.) In Levins. ME. terne, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ll. 1041.—Icel. þjörn (gen. þjarnar), a tarn, pool; Swed. dial. þjörn, tärn, a tarn, pool without inlet or outlet (Rietz); Norweg. þjörn, tärn, kjörn, tjörn, kjörn, a tarn (Aasen). Cf. Skt. dara-, a cavity.

TARNISH, to soil, diminish the lustre of, to dim. (F.—OHG.) Also to grow dim, as in Dryden, Alsatian and Achitophel, 249; this appears to be the orig. sense in E.—F. terniss-, stem of pres. part. of se ternir, 'to wax pale, wan, discoloured, to lose its former lustre'; Cot. Cf. terni, pp. 'wan, discoloured, whose lustre is lost'; id.—MHG. ternen, OHG. ternan, to obscure, darken; cf. ternhut, tarnhappe, a hat or cap which rendered the wearer invisible. From OHG. turni, secret (whence F. terne, dim). +AS. derman, dyrman, to hide, Gen. xlv. 1; causal verb from derne, dyrne, hidden, secret, Grein, i. 214; and this adj. is cognate with OSax. dermi, OFries. derm, hidden, secret. See Dern.

TARPAULING, TARPULIN, a cover of coarse canvas, tarred to keep out wet. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Tarpauling is in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. It was once oddly used to denote also a sailor, whence our modern tar, in the same sense, rather than from an extension of tar to mean a man daubed with tar; though it makes little ultimate difference. 'Tarpauling, or Tarpaulin, a piece of canvass tar'd all over, to lay upon the deck of a ship, to keep the rain from soaking through; also a general name for a common seaman, because usually clothed in such canvass'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; Phillips, ed. 1706. And see Trench, Select Gloss., who gives two quotations for tarpaulin—sailor, viz. from Smollett, Rod. Random, vol. i. c. 3, and Turkish Spy, letter 2. The pl. tarpaulins occurs in Lady Alimouy, Act iii. sc. 1; in Hazlitt's Old Plays, xiv. 325 (1659). Compounded of tar and palling. β. A palling is a covering, from pall, verb, to cover, which from pall, sb., l. palla; see Pall. 'Come, thick night, And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell'; Mach. i. 5. 52. 'Pauling, a covering for a cart or waggon, Lincolnshire'; Halliwell.

TARRAGON, the name of a plant. (Span.—Arab.—Gk.) 'Tarragon, a certain hearbe, good to be eaten in sallads with lettuce'; Baret (1580); Tarragon in Levins.—Span. taragona (Diez); usually taragonin; Minshen also gives the form taragoncin, which he explains by 'an herbe called dragons.' [Hence also F. targon, 'the herb tarragon'; Cot.]—Arab. tarkhin, 'dragon-wort'; Rich. Dict. p. 389.—Gk. δρακύν, a dragon; see Dragon. See Devic, s.v. estrugon. Thus the strange form tarragon is nothing but dragon in a form changed by passing through an Oriental language, and decked in Spanish with a Latin suffix (viz. -tin). The botanical name is Artemisia dracunculoides, where dracunculoides is a double dimin. from L. acc. dracuncul.

TARRE, to incite, set on. (F.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 37. ME. tarien, terien, to provoke; see Tarry (below).

TARRY, to linger, loiter, delay. (E.) The present form is due to ME. tarien, to irritate, provoke, worry, vex; later, to hinder, delay; affected by ME. targen, to delay. The mod. sense goes with the latter form. 1. ME. tarien, terien, to irritate, vex, provoke. 'I wol nat tarien you, for it is pryme'; Chaucer, C. T. 10387 (F 72), where it may fairly be explained by 'delay.' In the Prompt. Parv. we have: 'terryn, or longe abydyn, Moror, pigritor'; but also 'terryn, or ertyn, Irito'. AS. targen, to vex; a rare word. Trevisa has terry, to provoke, annoy; Tr. of Higden, v. 355. 'Tredad þec and tergd and heora torn wrecas'—they will tread on thee and vex thee and wreak their anger; Guthlac, l. 259. Usually targan. +MDu. tergen, 'to vex' (Hexham); Low G. targen, tarren, to provoke. So also prov. G. zerzen, Dan. terge, to irritate; answering to a Teut. type targjan-*; to which Russ. dargan(e), to pluck, pull, draw, may be related. 2. ME. targen, to delay, tarry. 'That time thought the king to targe no longer'; Alexander, fragment A, l. 211, þu. with Will. of Palerne.—OF. targer, to tarry, delay; allied to tarder, with the same sense; Cot.—Late L. tardicare, an extension of L. tardare (= F. tarder), to delay.—L. tardus, slow; see Tardy.

TART (1), acid, sour, sharp, severe. (F.) 'Very tart vinegar'; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 22, § 11. Spelt tarte also in Palsgrave. 'Pondre-marchant tart'—a sharp (tart) kind of flavouring powder; Chaucer, C. T. 381 (A 383). AS. terrt, tart, sharp, severe; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 344, l. 4 from bottom; ii. 590, l. 4 from bottom. Perhaps lit. 'tearing', just as bitter is from the notion of biting.—AS. tar* (ter), þ. t. of teran, to tear; see Teat (1). Der. tart-ly, -ness.

TART (2), a small pie. (F.—L.) ME. tarte; pl. tartes, Rom. of Rose, 7041.—OF. tarte, 'a tart'; Cot. Perhaps so called from the paste being twisted together; it seems to be the same word as F. tourte, a tart, OF. forte, a kind of bread; whence the dimin. forms torcel, a cake (Rouquette), torcean, a pancake (Cotgrave). Godefroy gives also OF. tarfean, a little tart, with the same sense as torcean. [So also Ital. tarvera, 'a tart', Florio, torla, a pie, tart, Span. torla, a round cake; Du. tarst, Dan. tarle, G. torle, not Teutonic words.]—L. torla, fem. of torlus, twisted, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. Der. tart-lat, from F. tarlelette, 'a little tart'; Cot.

TARTAN, a woollen stuff, chequered, much worn in the Highlands of Scotland. (F.—L.—Tatar.) In Jamieson; spelt tartane in 1474; also deu tartane; at first all of one colour; the chequered patterns are comparatively modern. Spelt tartan in 1488. Borrowed from French. At first applied to various cloths from the East, and also to fine silk; see my note to Piers Plowman, C. xvii. 299.—AF. tarlayen; as in 'an vestment de blak tartalayn'; Will. of Lady Clare (1355), in Royal Wills, p. 31.—Late L. Tartanus*, by-form of Tartarus, as in 'de pannis Tartenis,' Liber Custumarum, p. 209. β. More commonly Tartarius (OF. Tartarin), Tatar [Tartar] cloth; a general term for various Eastern cloths, including such as came through Tartary from China; see Marco Polo, ed. Yule. Cf. 'the third [standard] was of yellowe tartene,' Hall's Chron., Hen. VII, an. 1. § 3. 'Corteyens of grene tartene,' in 1453; Cambridge Antiq. Soc., vol. iv. p. 357; 'autler clothes of grene tartene,' ibid. 'Blue tartourne,' Cambridge Churchwardens' Accounts, ed. J. F. Foster, p. 7 (1504). 'Hec linostema, tarteryne,' Voc. 655. 6. γ. The form tartar is from OF. Tartaire, Late L. Tartaria; with the same meaning. All from the name of the country; see TARTAR (2).

TARTAR (1), an acid salt which forms on the sides of casks containing wine; a concretion which forms on the teeth. (F.—Low L.—Arab.) This is one of the terms due to the alchemists. Called sal tartre in Chaucer, C. T. 16278 (G 810); and simply tartre, id. 16281 (G 813). —F. tartre, 'tartar, or argill, the lees or dregs that stick to the sides of wine-vessels, hard and dry like a crust'; Cot.—Low L. tartarum (perhaps confused with Tartarus, whence the mod. E. spelling tartar). —Arab. durd, 'dregs, sediment, the tartar of wine, the mother of oil'; Rich. Dict. p. 662; where it is marked as a Pers. word, though, according to Devic, of Arab. origin. Rich. also gives Pers. dardi, Arab. durd, 'sediment, dregs'; p. 663. Note also Arab. dard, a shedding of the teeth, dard, a toothless woman; which Devic explains with reference to the tartar on teeth. Der. tartar-ic, tartar-ous.

TARTAR (2), a native of Tartary. (Tatar.) Chiefly used in the phr. 'to catch a Tartar,' to be caught in one's own trap. 'The phrase is prob. owing to some particular story,' Todd's Johnson, with the following quotation. 'In this defeat they lost about 5000 men, besides those that were taken prisoners;—so that, instead of catching the Tartar, they were caught themselves.' Life of the Duke of Tyrocmel, 1689. 'Tartar, a native of Tartary, . . . the people of which are of a savage disposition: whence the proverbial expression to catch a Tartar, i. e. to meet with one's match, to be disappointed, balked, or cowed'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Shak. has 'the Tartar's bow,' Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 101. Sir J. Mandeville professed to have travelled in Tartary; see prol. to his Travels. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present, where he explains that the true spelling is Tatar, but the spelling Tartar was adopted from a false etymology, because their multitudes were supposed to have proceeded out of Tartarus or hell.—Pers. Tūtār, 'a Tartar, or Scythian'; Rich. Dict. p. 357; a word of Tartar origin.

TARTAR (3), Tartarus, hell. (I.—Gk.) 'To the gates of Tartar,' Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 225.—L. Tartarus.—(Gk. Tátrapos, Tartarus, the infernal regions; apparently conceived to be a place of extreme cold. Cf. Gk. trapos (εἶναι), to shiver with cold. Der. tartar-eous, 'the black Tartarus cold'; Milton, P. L. vii. 238; tartar-e-an, id. ii. 69.

TASK, a set amount of work imposed upon one, work. (F.—L.) Lit. a tax. ME. task, taske, Cursor Mundi, 5872.—ONorth F. tasque, Norm. dial. tasque, OF. tasche, 'a task'; Cot. Mod. F. tasche.—Late L. tasca, a tax; the same word as taxa, a tax. (For a similar metathesis cf. E. ask with prov. F. ax).—L. taxare, to rate, value; see TAX. Der. task, vb., task-er, sb.; 'to task the tasker,' L. L. i. ii. 20; task-master, Milton, Sonnet i. 14. Doublet, tax.

TASSEL (1), a hanging ornament consisting of a bunch of silk or other material. (F.—L.) ME. tassel, a fastening of a mantle, consisting of a cord ending in a tassel, Cursor Mundi, 4389. Cf. 'a Mantle of Istate, . . . with strings dependant, and tasselled,' Guilleim, Display of Heraldry (1604), p. 271; a wood-cut on p. 272 shows the tassel, ornamented with strings and dots, that divide it into squares like the ace on a die.—OF. tassel, a fastening, clasp; mod. F. tasceau, only in the sense of bracket. We also find Late L. tassellus, used in the Prompt. Parv. as equivalent to E. tassel. The OF. tassel also meant a piece of square stuff, used by ladies as an ornament; see Godefroy. Cf. Ital. tassello, a collar of a cloak, a square.—L. taxillus, acc. of taxillus, a small die; dimin. of tilus, a knuckle-bone, also a die orig. made of the knuckle-bone of an animal. We may conclude that the tassel was a sort of button made of a piece of squared bone, and afterwards of other materials. β. The curious form taxillus shows that tilus is a contraction for taxilus*; origin unknown. Taxillus may have been confused with 1. tessella, dimin. of tessera, a die; cf. the entry: 'Tessera, tasol,' Epinal Gloss, 998. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 292. Der. tassell-ed, ME. tasselled, Chaucer, C. T. 3251.

TASSEL (2), the male of the goshawk. In Shak. Romeo, ii. 2. 160. The same as TERCEL, q.v.

TASTE, to handle, to try, to try or perceive by the touch of the tongue or palate, to eat a little of, to experience. (F.—L.) The sense of feel or handle is obsolete, but the ME. tasten meant both to feel and to taste. 'I rede thee lat thyñ hand upon it falle, And taste it wel, and ston thou shalt it finde,' Chaucer, C. T. 15970 (G 502). 'Every thyng Himself schewith in tasting,' King Alisaundre, 4042. —OF. taster, 'to taste or take an assay of; also, to handle, feel, touch'; Cot. Mod. F. tater; Ital. tastare, 'to taste, to assaie, to feel, to grope, to try, to prove, to touch'; Florio. We find also Late L. tasta, a tent or probe for wounds; whence Ital. tasta, 'a tent that is put into a sore or wound, also a taste, a proof, a tryall, a feeling, a touch'; Florio. β. The Late L. tasta is short for taxila*, and prob. points, as Diez says, to a Late L. verb taxiāre*, not found, but a mere iterative of L. taxāre, to feel, to handle (Gellius). This taxiāre (< taxiāre*) is an intensive form of tangere (pp. tactus), to touch; see TAX, Tangent. Hence the orig. sense of taste was to keep on touching, to feel carefully. Der. taste, sb., ME. taste, Gower, C. A. iii. 32; bk. vi. 925; tast-er, tast-able, taste-ful, taste-ful-ly; taste-ful-ness, taste-less, -less-ly, -less-ness; tast-y, tast-i-ly.

TAT, to make trimming. (Scand.) North E. ta, to entangle. Cf. MSwed. tidde, Dan. dial. ta; Norw. taatt, a thread, a strand of a rope, whence Norw. taetta, to interweave. Also Icel. tátta, Swed. tát, Dan. ta, a filament; G. docht, a wick.

TATTER, a shred, loose hanging rag. (Scand.) 'Tear a passion to tatters,' Hamlet, iii. 2. 11; spelt toilers in quarto edd. So also toilers in Ford, Sun's Darling, i. 1, and Soug; and see toilred in Nares. It is remarkable that the derived word tattered occurs earlier, spelt tatered, P. Ploverman's Crede, 1537, where it means 'jagged'; tatird, ragged, Pricke of Conscience, 1537.—Icel. tóttur, pl. tóttar, better spelt tóttur, pl. tóttar; the pl. signifies tatters, rags; Norw. tolra, pl. tolror, toltrur, also toltra, toltrur, pl. toltrar, toltrur, tatters, rags.—Low G. taltern, tatters, rags; to taltern ritten, to tear to tatters; taltrig, tattered; Ekfrids. talte, a rag. β. It will be seen that an l has been lost; and this is why the Icel. word should be spelt with double t, for tóttur—túttur*, by assimilation. Hence tatter stands for talter*; the assimilation of lt to tt being due to Scand. influence. I suppose talter to be closely allied to tolter = to wag, vacillate, shake about; and that tatter meant orig. a shaking rag, a fluttering strip. At any rate, tolter is in the like case as regards letter-change, since it stands for tolter. See TOTTER. ¶ We find also AS. taltec, teltic, a rag; the relationship of which is not clear. Der. talter-ed, as above; talter-damnation, Massinger, Virgin Martyr, iii. 3 (Hircine); see my Notes on E. Etym., p. 292.

TATTLE, to talk idly, prattle. (E.) In Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 11. 'Every tattling fable'; Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 724. ME. tolelen, variant of laleren, to tattle, Prompt. Parv.; pp. 498, 487. We may consider it E.; it is closely allied to tittle, to tell tales, talk idly, which is equivalent to ME. titeren, whence titerere (also titelere), a tatter, teller of tales, P. Ploverman, B. xx. 297. The verbs tatt-le, titt-le, and ME. tal-eren, ti-eren, are all frequentatives, from a base TAT, expressive of the sound of talking or repeating the syllables ta ta ta (Wedgwood). Allied words are Du. laleren, to stammer, MDu. laleren, 'to speak with a shrill noise, or to sound tarantulara with a trumpet,' Hexham; Low G. taleln, to gabble as a goose, to tattle; titteltateln, to tittle-tattle, tütteler, a tattler; taat-goos, a gabbling goose, chatterer; tüttelüttel, an interjection, the noise of a child's trumpet; and even Ital. tattamella, chat, prattle, tattamelare, to prattle, which clearly show the imitative origin of the word. Allied to TITTER, q.v. Der. tattle, sb., tittle-tattle, sb. and vb., see Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248; tiddle-ladle (Fluellen's pronunciation), Hen. V. iv. 1. 71. And see twadd-le (formerly twattle).

TATTOO (1), the beat of drum recalling soldiers to their quarters. (Du.) 'If they hear but the tattoo,' Prior, Alma, c. i. 454. 'Tattoo, Tappoo (also Tappow), the beat of drum at night for all soldiers to repair to their tents in a field, or to their quarters; also called The Retreat,' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To beat the tappow, de Aftogt slaan,' Sewel, Eng.-Du. Dict., 1754. A later edition (in 1766) has: de tappow slaan, 'to beat the tap-tow.' 'The tappow is used in garrisons and quarters by the beat of the drum'; Silas Taylor, On Gavelkind, ed. 1663, p. 74.—Du. tappoe, tattoo (Calisch); whence de tappoe slaan, to beat the tattoo.—Du. tap, a tap; and toe, put to, shut, closed. The sense is 'the tap is closed'; cf. Du. Is de deur toe = is the door closed? doe het boek toe = shut the book; haal' venster toe = shut the window (Sewel). Hexham has de slaen, to shut, conclude. The tattoo was thus the signal for closing the taps of the public-houses. β. So also G. zapfenstreich, the tattoo (lit. tap-stroke), where zapfen is a tap of a cask; and Low G. tappenslag, the tattoo (lit. a tap-shutting). Cf. Low G. tappen to slaan = to close a tap, an expression used proverbially in the phrase Wi wilt den Tappen to slaan = we will shut the tap, put the tap to, i. e. we will talk no more of this matter. This last expression clearly shows that 'a tap-to' was a conclusion, a time for shutting-up. ¶ I do not think that Span. tattata, the sound of a drum, has anything to do with the present matter.

TATTOO (2), to mark the skin with figures, by pricking in colouring matter. (Tahitian.) 'They have a custom . . . which they call tattooing. They prick the skin so as just not to fetch blood,' &c.; Cook, First Voyage, b. i. c. 17; id. ib. b. iii. c. 9 (K.). Cook is speaking of the inhabitants of Tahiti. — Tahitian tattoo, signifying tattoo-marks on the human skin; derived from ta, a mark, design; see Litté, who refers us to Berchon, Recherches sur le Tatouage. See E. Morris, Australasian Diet.; Notes on E. Ety., p. 293.

TAUNT, to scoff, mock, tease. (F.—L.) 'I taunte one, I check hym, je fardé,' Palsgrave. 'Smacco, . . . a check or tant in a word or deede; Florio. The old sense had less of mockery in it, and sometimes meant merely to tease. 'For a proper wit had she, . . . sometime taunting without displeasure and not without disport.' Sir T. More, Works, p. 57 b. Perhaps the vb. is due to the sb. 'Which liberal taunte that most gentill emperour toke in so good part,' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 5. § 17. 'Gave me a taunte, and sayde I was to blame,' Skelton, Bowge of Courte, 70. a. The verb answers in form, but hardly in sense, to OF. tanter (Burguy), occasional form of tenter, to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay, attempt; also to suggest, provoke, or move unto evil; Cot. From L. tentare, to try, prove, test, attack, assail, agitate, disquiet, &c. See Tempt. β. We may rather, perhaps, look upon the sb. as the original; it may have arisen from the phrase tant pour tant, i.e. tit for tat. This occurs in: 'Geuyng unto the same tant pour tant, or one for another,' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegmes, Diogenes, § 68. Cf. also: 'Mery conceipted and full of pretie tauntes,' id., Philippus, § 29. If this is right, taunt arose from F. tant, so much.—L. tantum, neut. of tantus, so much. Cf. ME. taunt, as much as (F. autant). N. E. D. Godfrey has OF. taute donner, to give such great blows.

Der. taunt-er, taunt-ing-ly.
TAURUS, the bull; the 2nd zodiacal sign. (L.) In Chaucer, on the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 8, l. 2.—L. taurus, a bull.—Gk. tauros, a bull.—AS. stéor, a young ox, a steer; see Steer (1). Der. taur-ine, from L. taurinus, adj., belonging to bulls.

TAUT, tight, firm. (E.) ME. logt, tucht. 'Made it loght,' i.e. made it sure. Allit. Poems, A. 522. 'With bely stíf and loght,' as any labour; Chaucer, C. T., D 267. It seems to be the weak pp. of ME. tozen, to pull, tow, tug; so that the orig. sense was 'pulled tight.' See Tow (1). See Notes on E. Ety., p. 294.

TAUTOLOGY, needless repetition, in the same words. (L.—Gk.) 'With ungratefull tautologies,' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (K.). —L. tautologia (White).—Gk. tautología, a saying over again of the same thing.—Gk. tautólos, repeating what has been said.—Gk. tautó, contracted from tautó, or tautó, the same; and tautos, speaking, allied to laeos, to speak, for which see Legend. Der. tautolog-ic, tautolog-ic-al, -ly; tautolog-ise.

TAVERN, an inn, house for accommodating travellers and selling liquors. (F.—L.) ME. tauerne (with v=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 195, l. 4024.—F. tuverne, a tavern; Cot.—L. taberna, a hut, orig. a hut made of boards, a shed, booth, tavern. Usually said to be allied to L. tabula, a plank, board; see Table. But Walde takes it to stand for taberna from trabs, a beam; see Trav.

TAW (1), TEW, to prepare skins, so as to dress them into leather, to curry, to toil. (E.) Spelt taw and teaw; Levins. Palsgrave has both 'I taw leather' and 'I teaw leather.' ME. taewen, to prepare leather. Prompt. Parv.; taewen, Ormulum, 15908. AS. taewian, to prepare, dress, get ready, also to maltreat. 'See deoful cow taewide,' i.e. the devil maltreated you; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 486, l. 4 from bottom. 'To yrmle getaewide,' reduced to poverty; S. Veronica, p. 34, l. 18. Cf. getaew, implements, Grein, i. 462.—Du. taewen, to curry leather; Ollig. zowaw, to make, prepare; Goth. ga-taewian, to appoint, taewian, to do, cause. See Tool. Der. taewer, ME. taewer, taewer, Wyclif, Deeds, ix. 43, early version, where the later version has currier, i.e. currier; cf. bou-yeer, law-yeer.

TAW (2), game at marbles. (Gk.) 'A game of marbles not unlike our modern taw;' The Tatler, no. 112, Dec. 27, 1709. In the United States, taw means 'a line or mark from which the players begin a game of marbles.' Webster. A similar mark is also called a tee. 'The easiest way of marking an exact spot on the ground is to draw the letter T, which defines the point where a stroke meets a cross-stroke. The T is named tee in English, and tau in Greek. Hence 'tan and chuck-farthing' in Additions to Nares. See Notes on E. Ety., p. 294.

TAWDRY, showy, but without taste, gaudy. (E.) 'A taudrie lace;' Spenser, Shep. Kal., April, 135; 'A taudrie lace,' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 252; 'A taudrie-lace,' Beaumont and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv. sc. 1 (Amarillis). 'Seynt Audrie's lace, cordon' Palsgrave. Thus it was first used in the phr. taudrie lace—a rustic necklace; explained in Skinner (following Dr. Hickeys) as being a necklace bought at St. Audry's fair, held in the Isle of Ely (and elsewhere) on St. Audry's day, Oct. 17. (See Palsgrave, as above.)

Wedgwood doubts the ancient celebrity of this fair (which I do not), and accepts in preference the alternative account in Nares, that St. Audry died of a swelling in the throat, which she considered as a particular judgment, for having been in her youth much addicted to wearing fine necklaces; see Nich. Harpsfield, Hist. Eccl. Anglicana, Sæc. Sept. p. 86; Brady, Clavis Calendaria, Oct. 17. β. In any case, Taudry is a contraction from St. Audry; and Audry is a corruption of Etheldrida, the famous saint who founded Ely Cathedral. γ. Again, Etheldrida is the Latinised form of the AS. name Eþelþryð; see Sweet, O. F. Texts, p. 638. From AS. ēþel, noble; and þryð or þryð, strength. The latter element is allied to the OHG. word which appears in the name Gertrude. See Thraüth in Schade. In the Latin text of Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 3, it is spelt Aedilþryd. See Notes on E. Ety., p. 295.

TAWNY, a yellowish brown. (F.—Teut.) Merely another spelling of tanny, i.e. resembling that which is tanned by the sun, sun-burnt. By heraldic writers it is spelt tenny or tenné. 'Tawny . . . in blazon, is known by the name of tenné,' Guillim, Display of Heraldry, sect. i. cap. 3. ME. tanny. 'Tunny coloure, or tawny,' Prompt. Parv. 'Unum gonn de tawny,' Excerpta Historica, p. 24 (1375).—F. tanné, tawny. 'Cot. It is the pp. of F. tanner, tanner, to tan.—F. tan, (tan); see Tan. Der. tawny-ness. Doublet, tenné or tenny.

TAX, a rate imposed on property, anything imposed, a task. (F.—L.) ME. tax, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 151, l. 4 (temp. Edw. II).—F. taxe, a taxation; Cot.—F. taxer, to tax, rate, assess; Cot.—L. taxire, to handle; also to rate, value, appraise; whence Late L. taxa, a rating, a taxation. For taxigire from tax, the base of tangere, to touch; see Tangent, Tact. Der. tax, verb, F. taxer; tax-able, tax-able-ty; tax-at-ion, from F. taxation, a taxation, from L. acc. taxationem. Doublet, task.

TAXIDERMY, the art of preparing and stuffing the skins of animals. (Gk.) Modern; coined from Gk. taxis, decl. stem of taxō, order, arrangement; and derma, a skin. β. Taxidermy (< taxis-dermy) is from taxiderm (< taxis-derm), to arrange; see Tacton. Gk. derma, a skin, is that which is torn or flayed off; formed with suffix -ma from derp-iv, to flay, cognate with E. tear; see Tear (1). Der. taxiderm-ist.

TAZZA, a cup, bowl. (Ital.—Arab.—Pers.) Ital. tazza, a cup, bowl (F. tasse). Arab. fass, fassa(t), a cup, basin; Rich. Dict., p. 970. Derived by Deriv. from Pers. tasi, a cup; Rich. gives Pers. tashi, a basin; p. 403. So Horn, § 389. Cf. also Pers. tis, a cup; p. 355.

TEA, an infusion made from the dried leaves of the tea-tree, a shrub found in China and Japan. (Chinese.) Formerly pronounced tay (tel), just as sea was called say; it rimes with obey, Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 8, and with away, id. l. 62. 'I did send for a cup of tee (a China drink) of which I never had drank before;' Pepys, Diary, Sept. 28, 1660. Also spelt cha in Mount's Gloss, ed. 1674, with a reference to Hist. of China, fol. 19; also chau, Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687 (K.). 'That excellent . . . China drink called by the Chinese techa, by other nations Tay, alias tee,' The Gazette, Sept. 9, 1658; qu. in N. and Q. 8 S. v. 266. Prof. Douglas writes: 'The L. word tea is derived from the Amoy pronunciation of the name of the plant, which is te. In the other parts of the empire it is called ch'a, ts'a, &c.; see Williams, Chinese Dict., p. 5. Cf. te, tea; Chinese Dict. of the Amoy Vernacular, by Rev. C. Douglas, 1873, p. 481. This accounts for the old spelling cha, and for the Ital. cia, tea. Cf. F. thé, G. thee, pronounced as tea was in Pope's time. So also Malay teh, tea; Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 97. Der. tea-saddy; see Caddy.

TEACH, to impart knowledge, show how to do. (E.) ME. techen, weak verb, pt. i. taught (properly dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 499 (A 497); pp. taught, AS. tecan, teccan, to show, teach, pt. i. tehte, pp. teht, teht; Grein, ii. 522. Formed (with change of a to e before j, as in teit, taikjan*) from tac (Teut. taik-*) base of AS. tecan, a token. From DEIK*, to show; cf. G. zeigen, to show; see further under Taken. Der. teach-able, teach-able-ness, teach-er.

TEAK, an E. Indian and African tree, with very hard wood. (Malayalam.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson.—Malayalam teku, the teak tree; Tamil teku; H. II. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 516. The best teak is from the mountains of the Malabar Ghauts; also found on the Comorandell coast; Eng. Cycl.

TEAL, a web-footed water-fowl. (E.) Teale; Levins. ME. tele, Prompt. Parv.; Squire of Low Degree, l. 320, in Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. iii. p. 158; used to translate OF. cercele in Walter de Bibbesworth, pr. in Wright's Voc. i. 151, l. 12; i. 165, l. 15. This takes us back to the close of the 13th cent., and the word is prob. E.; certain? Low German, in any case.—Du. teling, teling, a generation, production, also, teal; derived from telen, to breed, produce; i.e. if teling is the same word in both senses. MDu. teelingh, a teal (Killian). Cf. MDu. teelen, to propagate, to till; Low G. teling, a progeny, telen, to breed. The AS. base would be tæli-*; see Du. taling in Franck. Perhaps connected with the verb to till; see Till (1).

Der. atteal, a kind of teal, N. E. D.; Prof. Newton, Dict. of Birds, cites a 'Scandinavian' form atteling-and; s. v. Teal.

TEAM, a family; a set; a number of animals harnessed in a row. (E.) Mē, tem, team, team; a team [of] four geit oxen. P. Plowman. B. xix. 257; tem = a family, Robb. of Glouc. p. 261, l. 524. AS. tēam, a family, offspring, Genesis, 1613; Grein, ii. 526. 4. Du. team, the rein of a bridle; the same word, from the notion of guiding; Icel. taurm, a rein; Low G. toom, a progeny, team, also, a rein; Dan. tømme, Swed. töm, a rein; G. zaum, a bridle, MIIG. zomm. Text. type tau-moz*, for taug-moz* (Noreen); from tauk*, and graded teuk-an*, to draw, lead. See Tow (1). From Idg. DEUK*, DEUK*, to draw, lead, 4. LG. In the sense of team of horses, AS. form is ge-tōm, LG. tōm, team, team; q. Also team-ster (Webster, not in Johnson), with suffix -ster, for which see Splinter.

TEAPOY, a small tripod table. (Hybrid; Hind. and Pers.) Also tepoz, tinpoz (1844); see Yule. — Hind. tin, three (Forbes); and Pers. pāi, foot (Palmer).

TBAE (1), to rend, lacerate. (F.) Mk. teren, strong erib, pt. t. teran, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 472; pj. teren, id. 782. As. teran, pt. t. (ter, pj. teren, Grein, ii. 525-6) Goth. ga-tairan, to break, destroy, pt. t. ga-tar; Lithuan. dirti, to flay; Gk. bēpan, to flay; Russ.
teret'se, to tear; cf. dīra, a rent, a hole; Zend dār, to cut; Pers. dāran, to tear; Skt. dūrnya, to tear; F. W. dar-n, a fragment. Derivatives of type teran*, pt. t. tar*, pj. tarozon. Idg. /DEK/, to burst, tear, etc. type teran: G. zeken, Low German, to rend, lacerate, to consume, to devour from (cf. Burgundian, l. 299); D. tären, to tear, shatter; (Goth. gatauroz) Chevy Chase, l. 134, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat,
v. 75. Also [ar] (1); and (from same root) teraz, taxi-dar-m.

TEAR (tear), a drop of the fluid from the eyes. (E.) ME. tere, Chaucer, C. T. 8960 (E 1084). AS. tear, tær, Grein, li. 536; also tengor; ONorthumb. teher, †tecl, †tel; Dan. tear, tear; Swed. tår; Gothl. taḡr; OHG. zahar, pl. zaheri, whence G. zähre. β. All from a Teut. base tak-r*, †lg. dak-r*. Further allied to OL. lacrima, usually lacrima, lacrima (whence F. larme), a tear; Gk. δακρυ, δακρυον, δακρυμα, a tear; W. dagr, a tear; OIrish déar. Brugmann, i. § 178. Dox. tear-ful, 3 Hen. VI. v. 4; 8; tear-ful-y, tear-ful-ness; tear-less. And see train-oil.

TEASE, to comb or card wool, scratch or raise the nap of cloth; to vex, plague. (E.) ME. tesen, Cathol. Anglicum; also taisen, of which the ppl. taised is in Gwaelm and the Grene Knight, 1169. But the more common form is tosen or tousen. 'They touse and pulle': Gower, C. A. i. 17; ProL 400. 'Tosyn, or tose wull' [tease wool]; Prompt. Parv. We also find to-tosen, to tease or pull to pieces, Owl and Nightingale, l. 70. AS. tēsan, to pluck, pull, Alfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 170, l. 13. The ME. tosen would answer to a by-form tāsan*, not recorded. +MDu. tesen, to pluck; wolle tesen, 'to pluck wool', Hexham; Dan. tesse, tasse, to tease wool; Bavarian zaisen, to tease wool, Selmlinger; he also cites MIIG. zeisen, to tease, a strong verb, with pt. t. zien, ppl. gezaisen. β. The form of the base is Teut. teis*. DER. teas-rl, G. Y.

TEASEL, a plant with large heads covered with crooked awns which are used for teasing cloth. (E.) ME. tesel, Voc. 559. 7; also tesel, P. Plowman, B. xv. 446. AS. tēsel, tēsel, a tesel, A. S. Leechdoms, l. 282, note 26. Formed with suffix -i (-il-) from tēs-an, to tease; the sense is 'an instrument to tease with.' See Tease.

TĒAT, the nipple of the female breast. (F.—Low G.) [Also called titi, which is the native word.] ME. tete; Chaucer, C. T. 3704; also tite. Cf. tette, in Boscage, and E. tittie, in Corriis. — OF. tete, tette, tētē, tētū. — Lat. teta. — Low G. titt, MDn. tittē, tent.; Hesh. tittē, G. zitzē. [Cf. also Span. teta, Ital. tetta, words of Teut. origin.] Also W. dīd, didi, a tent. These words have much the appearance of being reduplicated from a base Tī (dgd, Dī). Besides these, there is a second form represented by GK. rītēr, rītērō; of these the GK. kūrē, rītērō, has been explained from √HRI, to suck; cf. Skt. kūrē to suck, Goth. daddjan, to suckle. See Tī (2).

TEAZLE, the same as Teasel, q.v.
TECHNICAL, artificial, pertaining to the arts. (Gk.; with L. suffix.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Formed with suffix -al (< L. -ālis), from Gk. texnō-ōs, belonging to the arts.—Gk. texnōn, art; allied to τέκτων, a carpenter.—TEK, to prepare, get ready; cf. Skt. taṣṭi, to prepare, form, cut wood, taṣṭhān, a carpenter; see TEXT. Der. technical-ly, technical-ly; techno-logy, with suffix -y. Gk. λόγος, from λέγειν, to speak. Also (from the same source) archi-techn, pyro-technic; and see text, text-ure.

TECHY, the same as Tetchy, q.v.
TED, to spread new-mown grass. (Scand.) 'I teede hey, I tourne it afore it is made in cockes;' Palsgrave. 'To tedde and make hay;'

Fitzherbert, Book of Husbandry, § 25. 'Gras . . . untaddeid'; Wydil's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 301. teel. teſja (pp. tadder), to spread manure; from taß, manure. Cf. Icel. taða, hay grown in a well-manured field, a home-field; töðu-verk, making hay in the in-field. Also Norw. teſja, to spread manure; from tad, manure; Aensn. So also Swed. dial. täda, vrb., from tad. \rightarrow Bavarian zetten, to strew, to let fall in a scattered way, Schmeidler, p. 159; cf. G. verzetzen, to scatter, to disperse. \rightarrow teſja, to sow, to scatter, to sow, to scatter, derived from OHG zāta, allied to zota (modern G. zaten, rag) see Schade. β . All these words can be derived from a sb. of which the Teut. base is tad-*. Cf. Gk. δαρ-ζωμυ, I distribute. Cf. Tod.

TEDIOUS, tiresome, from length or slowness, irksome. (L.) Spelt tedyouse in Palsgrave. Coined immediately from L. tædiōsus, irksome. = L. tædium, irksomeness. = L. tædet, it irks one. Der. tedious-ly, -ness. We also use tedium, the sb.

TEE, a mark, a starting-point. (E.) From the use of a T to mark an exact spot. Cf. tee-totum; and see Taw (2).

TEEM (1), to bring forth, bear, or be fruitful; be pregnant, full, or prolific. (E. 'Hyndre [her] of teming;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 644 g. ME. temen, to produce, Ancræn Riwle, p. 220, l. 15. Obviously from ME. teme, a team, a progeny; see TEAM. The AS. verb is tieman, tyman, to team, Gen. xxx. 9; formed (with the usual vowel-change from ea to i, later y) from AS. TEAM, a team, a progeny. Teut. type taumjan-, vb., from tanmōn, sb.

TEEM (2), to think fit. (OLow G.) Rare, and obsolete; but Shak. has the comp. teem, to be explained presently. I could teeme it [think fit] to rend thee in pieces; Gifford's Dialogue on Witheas, A.D. 1603. 'Alas, man, I could teem it to go'; id. See both quotations in full, in Mallivell, s.v. Teem—Low G. tämen, temen, to fit; also, to allow; as, 'Ik tēmet sijn een goed Glas Wien', he allows himself a good glass of wine; 'allied to betamen, to be fit, and to tämen, to tame; Erics. temen, to find fitting, to allow oneself. B. Related words are easily found, viz. in Goth. gætämia, fully, from the strong verb gaiman (pt. t. gafam), to suit, agree with; Ltkv. v. 36; Tu, lamen, 'to be comely, convenient, or seemly'; Hefham tamelich, or tamigh, 'comely, convenient, id.; whence betamelich, 'it is convenient, requisite, meet, or fitting'; id.: mod, betamelich, to besem, G. ziemen, to be fit; ziemlich, passable, lit. suitable; OHG, zeman, to fit, closely related to zeman, zanjam, lit. to ally. Allied to Tame, q.v. 2. We can now explain betem in Shaks. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 131; Hamlet, 2. 1. 14. It means to make or consider as fitting, hence to permit, allow; a slightly forced use of the word. In Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, A.D. 1587, we have 'could he not betem' = he did not think fit, would not deign; the L. text has dignatur, Metam. x. 158. Spenser uses it still more loosely: 'So would I . . . Beteme to thee this word' = permit, grant, allow you the use of this word; F. O. ii. 8. 10.

TEEM (3), to empty, pour out. (Scand.) See Halliwell. — Ice-læma, to empty, from tómr, empty; Dan. tømme, to empty, from tom, empty; Swed. tömma, from tom; see Toom.

TEEN, vexation, grief (TE). In Shakh. Temp. 1.2.64; &c. ME. tene, Chaucer, C. T. 3108 (A 3106). AS. tiona, accusation, injury, vexation, Grein, II. 528. — AS. tion, contracted from tihan, to accuse: see Grein, II. 532, s.v. tihan. [To be distinguished from tion (= tiohan), to draw.] — Goth. gateihan, to tell, announce, make known; to, to point out (as distinct from gatiuhan, to lead); G. zeihen, to accuse (as distinct from ziehen, to draw) + L. dicere, to make known. — — — DEIK, to show. See Tōken. © The successive senses of TEEN, to know. See TOKEN. ¶ The successive senses of teen are making known, public accusation, reproach, injury, vexation. We have indication and inditement from the same root. The word teen also occurs as Old Saxon tiono, injury: Icel. tiðn, loss.

TEETOTAL = TEETOTAL, total abstinence. (Cf. total with E. prefix te- and suffix -total.) teetotal is a total abstinence from all spirits and liquors; the orig. name was total abstinence. The adj. teetotal is an emphasized form of total, made on the principle of reduplication, just as we have L. te-tigi as the perfect of tangere. The word "originated with Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, who, contending for the principle at a temperance meeting about 1833, asserted that "nothing but te-te-total will do." The word was immediately adopted. He died 37 Oct., 1846. These facts are taken from the Stamwich Teetotaler, edited by Joseph Livesey, of Preston (an originator of the movement in August, 1833). Jan. 1867: Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Teetotum. ¹ Teetotal may have been suggested by teetotum. In N. and Q. 5, v. 18, it is asserted that teetotal was in use, as an intensive of total, before 1832.

TESTOTUM, TOTUM, a spinning toy. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. I had a testotum (about A. D. 1840) with four sides only, marked P (Put down), N (Nothing), H (Half), T (Take all). These were very common, and the letters decided whether one was to put into the pool or to take the stakes. (Strutt gives the same account, in his Sports and Pastimes. bk. iv. c. 4. § 6.) I suppose that these letters took the place of others with Latin explanations, such as P (Pone), N (Nih), D (Dimidium), T (Totum). The toy was named, accordingly, from the most interesting mark upon it; and was called either a totum or a T-totum. Ash's Dict., ed. 1775, has: 'Totum, from the Latin, a kind of die that turns round, so called because the appearance of one lucky side [that marked T] entitles the player that turned it to the whole stake.' 'Totum, a whirl-bone, a kind of die that is turned about,' Phillips, ed. 1796. Dunbar alludes to this game: 'He plays with totum, and I with nichil;' Works, ed. Small, p. 106, l. 74. Tetelutums are now made with the thickest part polygonal, not square, which entirely destroys the original notion of them; and they are marked with numbers instead of letters. — L. tōtum, the whole (stake); neut. of tatus; see Total.

TEG, a young sheep of the first year, a ewe. (Scand.) Pl. teggys; Skelton, Against Garmesche, 31. Cf. Swed. tacka, a ewe (Widgren, lhr).

TEGUMENT, a covering. (L.) Rare; commoner in deriv. in-tegumentum. In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, § 5. — L. tegumentum (also tegumentum, tegumentum), a covering. — L. tegere (for stegere*), to cover. — Gk. στῆγειν, to cover. — STEGER, to cover; whence also Skt. stāgh, to cover, Lithuan. stēgi, to thatch; Orlish teck, W. ty, a house. Brugmann, ii. § 632. And see Thatch. Der. in-tegumentum; also (from tectus, pp. of tegere), de-lect, pro-lect; and see tile, toga, thatch, deck.

TEIL-TREE, a linden tree. (F.—L.; and K.) 'A teil-tree;' Isaiah, vi. 13 (A.V.). — OF, teil, the bark of a lime-tree (Roquefort); cf. mod. F. tille, bast. [The added word tree is E.] — L. tilia, a lime-tree; also, the inner bark of a lime-tree. — Irish teile.

TEIND, a tithe. (Scand.) A Lowl. Sc. form. 'Bot tak his teind;' Sir D. Lyndesay, The Monarchie, bk. iii. 4690. — Icel. tiund, a tenth, tithe. — Icel. tiu, teu; see Ten.

TELEGRAPH, an apparatus for giving signals at a distance, or conveying information rapidly. (Gk.) Modern; in Richardson's Dict. M. Chappé's telegraph was first used in France in 1793; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Coined from Gk. τῆλε, afar off; and γράφειν, to write. The Gk. τῆλε, τῆλε, afar, from an adj. form τῆλος*, not in use. (Gk. γράφειν is cognate with Carve. Der. tele-graphic, tele-graphy, tele-graphist. Also tele-gram, a short coined expression for 'telegraphic message,' from τῆλεμα, a letter of the alphabet, a written character. So also tele-phone; from Gk. φωνή, voice, sound.

TELESCOPE, an optical instrument for viewing objects at a distance. (Gk.) Galileo's telescopes were first made in 1609. Milton alludes to the telescope, P. R. iv. 42. Coined from Gk. τῆλε, afar; and σκοπεῖν, to behold; see Telescope and Scoope. Der. tele-scope. So also tele-pathic, sympathy at a distance; from Gk. πάθος, from πάσθω, suffering, feeling.

TELL, to count, narrate, discern, inform. (F.) ME. tellen, pt. t. told, pp. told; often in the sense 'to count,' as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 92. 'Shal telle tales twye;' Chaucer, C. T. 794 (A 792). AS. tellan, to count, narrate; pt. t. tealde, pp. teald; Grein, ii. 534. A weak verb, formed from the sb. taln, a tale, number; so that tellan is for taljan*, with mutation of a to e. See Tale. — Du. tellen, from tal, sb.; Icel. telja, from tala, sb.; Dan. tælle, from tal; Swed. tälja, from tal; G. zählen, from zahl. Der. tell-er; tell-tale, Merch. Ven. v. 123.

TELLURIC, belonging to the earth. (L.) Rare, and scientific. Coined with suffix -ic (L. -eus), from L. tellūri, decl. stem of tellus, earth. Allied to Irish talamh, Orlish talam, earth, Skt. talā-m, surface. Der. telluri-um, a rare metal, discovered in 1782 (Haydn).

TEMERITY, rashness. (F.—L.) Spelt temeritie in Minshew, ed. 1623. — MF. temerité, 'temerity,' Cot. — L. temeritatem, acc. of temeritūs, rashness, — L. temeri for temerus*, rash, only used in the adv. temere, rashly. The orig. sense of temere is 'in the dark,' hence blindly, rashly; cf. Skt. tamas, dimness, darkness, gloom.

TEMPER, to moderate, modify, control, qualify, bring to a proper degree of hardness. (L.) ME. temperien, temperen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 72, l. 1684; Gower, C. A. i. 266; bk. ii. 3178. AS. temperian, for which see Toller. — L. temperare, to apportion, moderate, regulate, qualify; allied to temperi or temperi, adv., seasonably, and to tempus, lit. season, time. See Temporal. (Perhaps modified by MF. temperer, to temper; also from L. temperare). Brugmann, ii. § 132. Der. temper, sb., Oth. v. 2, 253, Merch. Ven. i. 2, 20 (see Trench, Study of Words, and cf. L. temperis, a tempering, right admixture); temper-ance, ME. temperance, Wyclif, Col. iii. 12, from F. temperance = L. temperantia; temper-ate, Wyclif, i Tim. iii. 3, from L. temperatus, pp. of temperare; temper-ate-ly, temper-ate-ness; temper-at-ure, from F. temperatura, 'a temper, temperature,' Cot. from L. temperātūra, due to temperare; temper-a-ment, in Trench, Select Glossary, from L. temperamentum. Also dis-temper, q. v., at-temper. Doublet, tamper.

TEMPEST, bad weather, violent storm, great commotion. (F.—L.) ME. tempest, Rob. of Glouc. p. 50, l. 1151. — OF. tempeste, 'a tempest, storm, bluster;' Cot. Mod. F. tempête. — Late L. tempestas, not found (though tempestus, adj., and tempestare, verb, both appear); for L. tempestis, season, fit time, weather, good weather; also bad weather, storm; allied to tempus, season, time; see Temporal. Brugmann, ii. § 102, 132. Der. tempest, verb, Milton, P. L. vii. 412, from MF. tempester, 'to storm;' Cot. Also tempest-u-ous, 1 Hen. VI., v. 5, 5, from MF. tempestu-ose, 'tempestuous,' Cot., from L. tempestuosus; tempestuous-ly, -ness.

TEMPLE (1), a fane, edifice in honour of a deity or for religious worship. (L.) ME. temple, Chaucer, C. T. 10167, 10169 (F. 2293, 2295). AS. templ, templ (common), John, ii. 20. — L. templum, a temple. Formed (with excrement p after m) from an older form tem-lum* (Walde). — Gk. τέμενος, a sacred enclosure, piece of ground cut off and set apart for religious purposes; allied to Gk. τέμνω (fut. τέμω), to cut. Der. templ-ar, one of a religious order for the protection of the temple and Holy Sepulchre, founded in 1118, suppressed in 1312 (Haydn), ME. temple, P. Plowman, B. xv. 509, from Late L. templarius (Ducauge). Also templet, a pattern or model indicating the outline of a balustrade, &c., from F. templet, the same (Littre), dimin. of F. temple, in the same sense, from L. templum, a small timber, the same word as templum, a temple. Also con-templ-ate, q. v.

TEMPLE (2), the flat portion of either side of the head above the cheek-bone. (F.—L.) Gen. used in the plural. ME. temples, pl., Voc. 636. 16. Gower has temples, C. A. iii. 370; bk. viii. l. 2819. — OF. temples, 'the temples;' Cot.; Norm. dial. temples; Mod. F. temple, sing. Formed, with the common change from r to l, from L. templum, pl., the temples. Der. temp-or-al, adj., from F. temporal, 'of or in the temples,' Cot., from L. temporalis, (1) temporal, (2) belonging to the temples.

TEMPORAL (1), pertaining to this world only, worldly, secular. (F.—L.) ME. temporal, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21. — OF. temporal, usually temporel, 'temporal;' Cot. — L. temporalis, temporal. — L. tempor, for tempus, season, time, opportunity. Der. temp-or-ly; temp-or-i-ly, spelt temporalitē, Sir T. More, Works, p. 232 e, from Late L. temporalitās, revenues of the church (Ducauge). Also temp-or-ry, Meas. for Mens. v. 145 (where it seems to mean respecting things not spiritual), from L. temporarius, lasting for a time; temp-or-i-ly, temp-or-i-ness. Also temp-or-ise, Much Ado, i. 1. 276, from F. temporiser, 'to temporise it, to observe the time,' Cot.; temp-or-is-er, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 302. Also con-temp-or-an-ous, con-temp-or-ry, ex-tempore. And see temp, tempst, tense (1).

TEMPORAL (2), for which see Temple (2).

TEMPT, to put to trial, test, entice to evil. (F.—L.) ME. tempten, Ancrer Kivle, p. 178. — OF. tempter, later teuter, 'to tempt, prove, try, sound, provoke unto evil;' Cot. — L. temptare, occasional spelling of tentare, to handle, touch, feel, try the strength of, assail, tempt. Frequentative of tendere, to stretch (pp. tensus); Bréal. [But temptare may have been written as tentare by error; if so, the words are unconnected.] Der. tempt-er, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3; tempt-r-ess, Ford, The Broken Heart, v. 1, from MF. tempteresse, 'a tempteress, a woman that tempts,' Cot.; tempt-ing-ly; tempt-at-ion, ME. temptacion, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 41, from OF. temptation, usually temptacion, 'a temptation,' Cot., from L. acc. temptatiōnem. Also at-tempt. Doublet, test (2), vb.

TEMULENT, drunken. (L.) Rare. — L. temulentus, drunken. Allied to temētum, intoxicating drink. See Abstemious. Cf. Skt. tāmya, to be exhausted.

TEN, twice five. (E.) ME. ten, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 1. OMerc. tēn; AS. tien, tyn. Usually tyn, Matt. xxv. 1. — Du. tien; Icel. tiu, ten, tigr, a decade; Dan. ti; Swed. tio; Goth. taihun; G. zehn, OllG. zehān. — L. decem (whence F. dix, Ital. dieci, Span. diez); Gk. deka; Lithuan. dešimtis; Russ. desiat (cf.); W. deg; Irish and Gael. deich; Pers. dah (Palmer's Diet. col. 278); Skt. daśa. B. All from Tent. type dekwn*; Idg. type dekwn*. Brugmann, ii. § 174. Origin unknown. Der. ten-fold, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 135, l. 19 (see Fold); ten-th, ME. tenþe, Will. of Palerne, 4715, also tenþe, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 219, l. 17; also tende, Ormulum, 2715, due to a confusion of AS. tēdon, tenth, with Icel. tíund, tenth; the true E. word is tike, q. v. Hence tenth-ly. From the same base we have decim-al, decim-ate, duo-decim-al, deca-de, deca-gon, deca-hedron, deca-logue, deca-syllabic, decem-ry, decennal, do-deca-hedron, dime. ¶ The suffix -teen, ME. -tenē (disyllabic), answers to OMerc. -tine, AS. -tine, -tine, as in eakht-tine, eighteen, Judg. iii. 14; formed by adding the pl. suffix -e to tēn or tyn, ten. Hence thir-teen (AS. þrīotyn); four-teen (AS. fower-tyn); fif-teen (AS. fif-tyn); six-teen (AS. six-tyn); seven-teen (AS. seofon-tyn); eight-teen, miswritten for eight-ten (AS. eakht-tyn); nine-teen (AS. nigon-tyn). ¶ The suffix -ty, ME. -ty =

AS. -tig, as in tuwen-tig (AS. tuwēn-tig), &c. This suffix appears also in Icel. sex-tigir, sex-tugr, sex-tögr, sixty, and in Goth. saihtigis, G. sech-zig, sixty, &c.; all from a Teut. base tegn-*, allied to Ten.

TENABLE, that can be held, kept, or defended. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 248.—F. tenable, 'holdable'; Cot. Coined from F. tenir, to hold.—I. tenere, to hold, keep, retain, reach, orig. to stretch or extend, a sense retained in per-tinere, to extend through to.—TEN, to stretch, extend; see Thin. Cf. Gk. τείνω (for teiv-yeiv*), to stretch, Skt. tan, to stretch. Der. (from L. tenēre) abs-tain, abs-tin-ence, ap-per-tain, ap-pur-ten-ance, attempt, con-tain, con-tent, con-tin-ent, con-tin-ue, count-ten-ance, de-tain, de-tent-ion, dis-con-tin-ue, dis-con-tent, dis-conn-ten-ance, enter-tain, im-per-tin-ent, in-con-tin-ent, lien-ten-ant, main-tain, main-ten-ance, mal-con-tent, ob-tain, per-tain, per-tin-ac-i-ous, per-tin-ent, pur-ten-ance, rein, re-tain, re-tent-ion, re-tin-ue, sus-tain, sus-ten-ance, sus-tent-at-ion; and see ten-ac-i-ous, ten-ac-i-ty, ten-ant, tend (with its derivatives), tend-er, tend-on, ten-drit, ten-e-ment, ten-et, ten-on, ten-or, tent (2), ten-u-ity, ex-ten-s-ate, ten-ure, tempt, tent-acle, tent-at-ive. And see tone.

TENACIOUS, holding fast, stubborn. (L.) 'So tenacious of his bite'; Howell, Famil. Letters, b. ii. let. 2, July 3, 1635. Coined as if from L. tenaciōnis, from tenaci, decl. stem of tenax, holding fast.—I. tenēre, to hold. See Tenable. Der. tenacious-ly, -ness.

TENACITY, the quality of sticking fast to. (F.—L.) Spelt tenacitē in Minshew, ed. 1627.—MF. tenacitē, 'tenacity'; Cot.—L. tenacitatem, acc. of tenacitās—L. tenaci, decl. stem of tenax; see Tenacious.

TENANT, one who holds land under another. (F.—L.) ME. tenant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Laugtoft, p. 19, l. 10.—F. tenant, holding; pres. part. of tenir, to hold; see Tenable. Der. tenant-y, bp. Hall, Satires, b. iv. sat. 2, l. 25 from end; tenant-able, tenant-less, tenant-ry (a coined word). Also lieu-tenant, q. v. And see tenement.

TENCH, a fish of the carp kind. (F.—L.) ME. tenche, Prompt. Parv.—OF. tenche, 'a trench'; Cot. Mod. F. tanche—L. tinca, a trench. Cf. Gascon tenco, a trench.

TEND (1), to aim at, or move towards, to incline, bend, to contribute to a purpose. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 170.—F. tendre, 'to tend, bend'; Cot.—L. tendere, to stretch, extend, direct, tender. Allied to tenere, to hold; see Tenable. From TEN, to stretch; see Thin. Brugmann, ii. § 696 (3). Der. tend-ency, formed by adding -y to the obsolete sb. tendence, signifying 'inclination', for which see Richardson; and the sb. tendence was coined from I. tendent, stem of the pres. part. of tendere. Also tense (2); tend-er (2). Also (from I. tendere, yp. tensus and tensus), at-tend, tend (2), at-tend-ion, con-ex-tend, con-tend, dis-tend, ex-tend, ex-tens-ion, ex-tend, in-tend, in-tend, in-tend, ob-tend, ob-tens-ible, ob-tent-at-ion, por-tend, pre-tend, pro-tend, sub-tend, super-in-tend; and see tense (2), tense-ile, tend-er (3), tend-on, tent (1), tent-er, toise. Doublet, tender (2).

TEND (2), to attend, take care of. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 83, Much Ado, i. 3. 17. Coined by dropping the initial a of OF. attendre, to wait, attend. It is, in fact, short for Attend, q. v. Der. tend-ing, sb. (for attending), Macb. i. 5. 36; tend-ance (for attendance), Timon, i. 1. 57. And see tender (3).

TENDER (1), soft, delicate, fragile, weak, feeble, compassionate. (F.—L.) ME. tendre, Ancrer Riwle, p. 112, l. 11.—F. tendre, 'tender'; Cot. Formed (with excrement d after n) from L. tenuis, acc. of tener, tender; orig. thin, fine, allied to tenuis, thin.—TEN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. tender-ly, -ness; tender-heart-ed, Rich. II, iii. 3. 160; tender-hest-ed, K. Lear, ii. 4. 176 (Folio edd.), where hest=heft, a handle; so that tender-hest-ed=tender-handled, tender-hilted, gentle to the touch, impassible; see Haft. Also tender, vb., to regard fondly, cherish, Rich. II, i. 1. 32, and in Palgrave; a word which seems to be more or less confused with tender (2), q. v. Hence tend-er, sb., regard, care, K. Lear, i. 4. 230. And see tend-er.

TENDER (2), to offer, proffer for acceptance, show. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 5.—F. tendre, 'to tend, bend, . . . spread, or display', also, to tender or offer unto'; Cot.—L. tendere, to stretch, &c. See Tend (1), of which tender is a later form, retaining the r of the F. infinitive; cf. attaindre=F. atteindre. Der. tender, sb., an offer, proposal. Doublet, tend (1).

TENDER (3), a small vessel that attends a larger one with stores; a carriage carrying coals, attached to a locomotive engine. (F.—L.) 'A fireship and three tenders'; Dampier's Voyages, a. 1685 (R.). Merely short for attender=attendant or subsidiary vessel; see Tend (2).

TENDON, a hard strong cord by which a muscle is attached to a bone. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. tendon, 'a tendon, or tie of a muscle'; Cot. Cf. Span. tendon, Port. tendão, Ital. tendino, a tendon.

From a Late L. type tendo*, with gen. case both tendōnis and tenidnis; formed from L. tendere, to stretch, from its contractile force. See Tend (1). Der. tendin-ous (R.), from F. tendineux, 'of a tendon'; Cot.

TENDRILL, the slender clasper of a plant, whereby it clings to a support. (F.—L.) Spelt tendrill in Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Drant, tr. of Horace, Bk. ii. Sat. 4, fol. G 8, back (1566). In Milton, P. L. iv. 307. Shortened from MF. tendrillous, s. pl. 'tendrills, little gristles'; Cot. Or from an OF. tendrille* or tendrille*, not recorded. Cot. also gives F. tendron, 'a tender fellow, a cartilage, or gristle; also a tendrell, or the tender branch or sprig of a plant.' All these forms are from F. tendre, tender; see Tender (1). So also Ital. tenerume, a tendrill, from tenero, tender. ¶ Not from tenēre, to hold, nor from tendere, to stretch.

TENEBOUS, TENEBRIOUS, gloomy, dark. (F.—L.) Tenebrous is in Cotgrave, and in Hawes, History of Grand Amour (1555), ch. 3 (Todd). 'Tenebrious light' is in Young, Night Thoughts, Night 9, l. 966. The latter is a false form.—F. tenebreux, 'tenebrous'; Cot.—L. tenebrōsus, gloomy.—L. tenebrā, s. pl., darkness. Allied to Skt. tamisra, darkness, tamas, gloom; TEM, to choke. Brugmann, i. § 514, 3, 590.

TENEMENT, a holding, a dwelling inhabited by a tenant. (F.—L.) ME. tenement, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 34, last line.—F. tenement, 'a tenement, inheritance'; &c.; Cot.—Late L. tenementum, a holding, fief; Ducange.—I. tenēre, to hold; see Tenable and Tenant. Der. tenement-al, adj.

TENET, a principle which a person holds or maintains. (L.) 'The tenet must be this'; Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. viii. (R.).—I. tenet, he holds; 3 p. s. pres. tense of tenēre, to hold; see Tenable. Cf. audet, habitat, exit, and other similar formations.

TENNIS, a game in which a ball is driven against a wall (or over a cord) by rackets, and kept continually in motion. (F.—L.) First mentioned in Gower's Balade to King Henry IV, st. 43, l. 295; printed in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1532, fol. 377, col. 2; ed. 1561, fol. 332, col. 1, where it is spelt tennis; but the Trerham MS. has tenetiz. Other spellings are tenetiz, tenyze. 'Teneyz, pley, Teniludus, manipulator, tennisia. Teneyz-pleyer, Teniludus'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt tenyze, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 27, § 7. 'Tenysball, pelote: Tenys-play, jeu de la paulme'; Palgrave. Turberville has a poem 'to his friend P., Of Courtling, Trauailing, and Tenys'. It is spelt tenes in 1494; Excerpta Historica, p. 98. B. The AF. tenetiz, F. tenet (<L. tenētis, 2 p. pl. indic. of tenēre, to hold) was also used for L. tenēre, 2 p. pl. imperative; with the sense 'take this'; and we may conjecture that it was used by the player who served, like our 'play!'. ¶ This seems the only possible explanation of the form tenetiz, which was accented on the end syllable, as the rhythm shows:—Of the tenetiz to winne or lese a chace. The word (as a sb.) is AF., not OF. In N. and Q. 9 S. ix. 27, is the following note. 'M. Jusserand quotes from Lusus Puerilis, Paris, 1555, and deduces that the exceipe of Cordier and the exceipe of Frasmus were the Latin version[s] of the french tenet, an exclamatory used in commencing play.' The AF. tenet, 'take or receive this', is addressed to one person only in the Chanson de Roland, 387. TENNY, the colour of orange, in heraldry. (F.—G.) Also spelt tenney, tenney; see Butell's Heraldry—OF. tenni, variant of tane, tanné, tawny, tan-coloured (Godefroy). The same word as Tawny, q. v.

TENON, the end of a piece of wood inserted into the socket or mortice of another, to hold the two together. (F.—L.) In Levins. ME. tenoun, tenoun; Prompt. Parv.—F. tenon, 'a tenon; the end of a rafter put into a mortise; tenons, pl. the vice-nails wherewith the barrel of a piece is fastened unto the stock; also the (leather) handles of a target'; Cot. All these senses involve the notion of holding fast. Formed, with suffix -on (L. acc. -ōnem), from ten-ir, to hold.—L. tenēre; see Tenable.

TENOR, the general course of a thought or saying, purport; the highest kind of adult male voice. (F.—L.) ME. tenour. 'Tenour, Tenor'; Prompt. Parv. 'Another letter . . . of a more bitter tenour'; King Alisaunder, 2977. 'Many . . . ordenauncis were made, wherof the tenoure is sette out in the ende of this boke'; Fabyan's Chron. an. 1257, ed. Ellis, p. 343. 'Tenour, a parte in pricke-song, tenour'; Palgrave.—F. teneur, 'the tenor part in music; the tenor, content, stuffe, or substance of a matter'; Cot.—L. tenōrem, acc. of tenor, a holding on, uninterrupted course, tenor, sense or tenor of a law, tone, accent.—L. tenēre, to hold; see Tenable. ¶ The old (and proper etymological) spelling is tenour, like honour, colour, &c. The tenor in music (Ital. tenore) is due to the notion of holding or continuing the dominant note (Scheler).

TENSE (1), the form of a verb used to indicate the time and state of the action. (F.—L.) In Levins. Spelt tence and tense by Palsgrave, On the Verb. Shoreham has tense, in the sense of 'time'; p. 39. In Chaucer, C. T. 16343 (G 875), the expression 'that futur tense' ought to be explained rather as 'that future tense' than 'that future time'; see my note on the line. — F. tense, time, season; OF. tens (Burguy). — L. tempus, time; also a tense of a verb; see Temporal.

TENSE (2), tightly strained, rigid. (L.) 'Her forehead was tense'; Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. 28, § 1. — L. tensus, stretched, pp. of tendere; see Tend (1). Der. tense-ly, -ness; tension, in Phillips, ed. 1706, from L. tensionem, acc. of tensio, a stretching; tensor, in Phillips, used as a variant of extensor; tens-ile, in Blount, ed. 1674, a coined word; tens-ily, a coined word. Also in-tense, soise.

TENT (1), a pavilion, a portable shelter of canvas stretched out with ropes. (F. — L.) ME. tente, Rob. of Glouc., p. 203, l. 4156. — F. tente, 'a tent or pavilion'; Cot. — Late L. tenta, a tent; Ducange. Properly fem. of tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Obviously suggested by L. tentorium, a tent, a derivative from the same verb. Der. tent-ed, Oth. i. 3. 85.

TENT (2), a roll of lint used to dilate a wound. (F. — L.) See Nares. Properly a probe; the verb to tent is used for to probe, Hamlet, ii. 2. 636. ME. tente, 'Tente of a wounde or a soore, Tent'; Prompt. Parv. — F. tente, 'a tent for a wound'; Cot. Due to the L. verb tentare, to handle, touch, feel, test; cf. F. tenter, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay'; Cot. See Tempt. Cf. Span. tiento, a probe, tiento, a touch. Der. tent, verb, as above.

TENT (3), a kind of wine. (Span. — L.) 'Tent or Tent-wine, is a kind of Alicante, . . . and is a general name for all wines in Spain except white; from the Span. vino tinto, i.e. a deep red wine'; Blount, ed. 1674. — Span. vino tinto, red wine; tinto, deep-coloured, said of wine. — L. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to dye; see Tinge.

TENT (4), care, heed. (F. — L.) 'Took tent'; Burns, Death and Doctor Hornbock, st. 3. Short for attent or attention; see Attend. Der. tent, verb.

TENTACLE, a feeler of an insect. (L.) Modern. Englished from Late L. tentaculum, which is also a coined word, formed from tentare, to feel; see Tempt. Cf. L. spiraculum, from spirare. Der. tentacul-ar.

TENTATIVE, experimental. (L.) 'Falsehood, though it be but tentative'; Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. xx. cont. 3, § 21. — L. tentatīvus, trying, tentative. — L. tentāsus, pp. of tentare, to try; see Tempt.

TENTER, a frame for stretching cloth by means of hooks. (F. — L.) Properly tenture; but a verb tent was coined, and from it a sb. tenter, which took the place of tenture. The verb occurs in P. Plowman, b. xv. 447; or rather the pp. tynted, suggested by L. tentus. ME. tenture. 'Tenture, Tentoure, for cloth, Tensorium, extensorium, tentura'; Prompt. Parv. 'Tentur for clothe, tend, tende; Tenterhoke, houc; Palsgrave. — F. tenture, 'a stretching, spreading, extending'; Cot. — L. tentāra, a stretching; cf. tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Der. tenter-hook, tenterhoke in Palsgrave, a hook orig. used for stretching cloth.

TENUITY, slenderness, thinness, rarity. (F. — L.) Spelt tenuite in Minshew, ed. 1627. — MF. tenuité, 'tenuity, thinness'; Cot. — L. tenuitatem, acc. of tenuitas, thinness. — L. tenuis, thin. — TEN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. (from L. tenuis) ex-tenu-ate.

TENURE, a holding of a teneement. (F. — L.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 108. — F. tenure, 'a tenure, a hold or estate in land'; Cot. — Late L. tenūra (in common use); Ducange. — L. tenere, to hold; see Tenable.

TEOCALLI, a Mexican temple. (Mexican.) Mex. teocalli. — Mex. teotl, a god (which loses tl in composition); and calli, a house.

TEPID, moderately warm. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 417. — L. tepidus, warm. — L. tepere, to be warm. — TEP, to be warm, to glow; whence Skt. tap, to be warm, to warm, to shine, tapas, fire; Russ. topiti(e), to heat; Irish té, hot. Der. tepid-ly, from MF. tepidité, 'luke-warmness'; Cot., as if from L. acc. tepiditatem; tepid-ness.

TERAPHIM, idols, images, or household gods, consulted as oracles. (Heb.) See Judges, xvii. 5, xviii. 14; Hosea, iii. 4 (A.V.). — Heb. teraphim, s. pl., images connected with magical rites.

TERCE, the same as Tierce, q. v.

TERCEL, the male of any kind of hawk. (F. — L.) Corruptly spelt tassel, Romeo, ii. 2. 160; rightly tercel, Troilus, iii. 2. 56. See Tassel in Nares. ME. tercel; 'the tercel egle'; Chaucer, Assembly of Fowls, 393. Also tercellet, a dimin. form; Chaucer, C. T. 10818 (F 504). — OF. tercel, tercel (Godefroy), whence MF. dimin. tercellet, 'the tassel, or male of any kind of hawk, so termed because he is, commonly, a third part less than the female'; Cot. Cf. Ital. terzolo (now spelt terzolo), 'a tassell-gentle of a hawk'; Florio. Derived (with dimin. suffix -el) from OF. tiers, terce, third; just as Ital. terzolo is from Ital. terzo, third. — L. tertius, third; see Tierce and Three. ¶ Burguy gives a different reason, viz. that, in popular opinion, every third bird hatched was a male; he refers to Raynourd's Provincial Dict., v. 412. Either way, the etymology is the same.

TEREBINTH, the turpentine-tree. (L. — Gk.) Teribinth; in Spenser, Shep. Kal., July, 86. — L. terebinthus. — Gk. terebinthos, the turpentine-tree. Der. turpentine.

TEREDO, a wood-worm. (L. — Gk.) L. terido. — Gk. terebinthos, a wood-worm; so named from boring into wood. — Gk. terp, base of terpion (for ter-yon*), to bore. See Trite, Termite.

TERGIVERSATION, a subterfuge, fickleness of conduct. (F. — L.) In Colgrave. — F. tergiversation, 'tergiversation, a flinching, withdrawing'; Cot. Lit. a turning of one's back. — L. tergiversationem, acc. of tergiversatio, a subterfuge. — L. tergiversari, to turn one's back, decline, refuse, shuffle, shift. — L. tergi, for tergum, the back; and versari, to turn oneself about, pass, of versare, to turn about, frequentative of vertere (pp. versus), to turn; see Verse.

TERM, a limited period, a word or expression. (F. — L.) ME. terme, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 316, l. 21. — F. terme, 'a term, time, or day; also, a term, word, speech'; Cot. — L. terminum, acc. of terminus, a boundary-line, bound, limit (whence also Ital. termini, termino, Span. termino). Cf. OL. terminos, with the same sense; Gk. terpsa, a limit. — TER, to pass over, cross, fulfil; cf. Skt. tārāya, to cause to pass over. Der. term, vb. Temp. v. 15; and see termination. Also (from L. terminus) termin-al, adj., from L. terminālis; con-termin-ous, de-termini, ex-termin-ate, pre-de-termini. And (from the same root) en-ter; thrum (1).

TERMAGANT, a boisterous, noisy woman. (F. — Ital. — L.) ME. Termagant, Termagant, Chaucer, C. T. 13739 (B 2000). Termagant was one of the idols whom (in the medieval romances) the Saracens are supposed to worship; see King of Tars, in Risson's Metrical Romances, ii. 174-182; Lybeaus Disconus, in the same, ii. 55. See Nares, who explains that the personage of Termagant was introduced into the old moralities, and represented as of a violent character. In Ram Alley, we have the expression: 'that swears, God bless us, like a very termagant'; Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, x. 322; and see Hamlet, iii. 2. 15. So also: 'this hot termagant scold'; 1 Hen. IV, v. 4. 114. It has now subsided into the signification of a scolding woman. 'So must all our tavern termagans be used, or they'll trepan you'; Lady Alimony, Act i. sc. 4 (1659). The name is a corruption of OF. Teruagant, Teruogon, or Teruagan; spelt Teruagant in Layamon's Brut, l. 5353, where he is a Roman (I) god; and Teruagan in the Chanson de Roland, l. 611, where it signifies a Saracen idol. — Ital. Trivigante, the same, Ariosto, xii. 59 (see Nares, s. v. Trivigante); more correctly, Trivigante. It has been suggested that Trivigante or Teruagante is the moon, wandering under the three names of Selene (or Luna) in heaven, Artemis (or Diana) in earth, and Persephone (Proserpine) in the lower world. Cf. de trivis as an epithet of Diana. — L. ter, thrice, or tri, thrice; and wagant, stem of pres. part. of wagari, to wander. See Ternary and Triform, and Vagabond. ¶ See also my note to the line in Chaucer and Tyrwhitt's note; Risson, Met. Rom. iii. 260; Quarterly Review, xxi. 515; Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction; Trench, Select Glossary; &c. Perhaps Ital. Trivigante is of Eastern origin.

TERMINATION, end, limit, result. (F. — L.) In Much Ado, ii. 1. 256, where it is used with the sense of term, i.e. word or expression. — F. termination, 'a determining, limiting'; Cot. — L. terminatiōnem, acc. of terminatio, a bounding, fixing, determining. — L. terminare, to limit. — L. terminus, a bound, limit; see Term. Der. terminatiō-nal. Also (from L. terminare) termin-able, termin-able, termin-at-ive, terminat-ive-ly. We also use L. terminus, sb., as an E. word; Marlowe, Dr. Faustus, A. ii. sc. 2.

TERMITE, a white ant. (F. — L.) F. termite, used in 1812 (Hazlitt). — L. termitem, acc. of termes, more commonly termes, a wood-worm. Allied to terido, a wood-worm; from the same root. See Teredo.

TERN, an aquatic fowl. (Scand.) Not in the old dictionaries. I find it in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792; and it was, doubtless, in much earlier use. — Dan. terne, terne, a tern; Swed. tärna; Icel. þerna, a tern, occurring in the local name þerney (tern-island), near Reikjavik in Iceland. Widegren's Swed. Dict. (ed. 1788) has tärna, 'tern'. β. It is remarkable that Dan. terne, Swed. tärna, Icel. þerna, also mean a hand-maid, maid-servant; cf. G. dirne; but the words are unrelated (see dirne in Kluge). ¶ The scientific L. name Sterna was taken from E. stern, a name for the black tern used by Turner (1544). 'The field is Azure, a Cheuron betweene three Sternes', the said birds being figured in the accompanying wood-cut; Guillim, Display of Heraldry, ed. 1664, p. 216. Evidently from AS. stearn; 'Beacita, vel sturnus, stearn', in a list of birds, Voc. 131, 11; 'Beacita, stearn'; Corpus Gloss., 284. The forms stern, stare (for staring), and L. sturnus, are related; and so also (with loss of initial s) Icel. þerna, Dan. terne, Swed. tärna. The form tern is Scand., because the cognate E. form would be thern* or stern. Cf. Norfolk starn, a tern; E. D. D.

TERNARY, proceeding by, or consisting of threes. (L.) 'A senary, and a ternary'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 662 (R.) = L. ternarius, consisting of threes. — L. terni, pl., by threes. Allied to ter, thrice, and to tris, three; the latter being cognate with E. thrice. See Three. Der. (tern-ale), tern-ale, arranged in threes, a coined word.

TERRA-COTTA, a kind of hard pottery. (Ital.—L.) From Ital. terra cotta, baked (lit. cooked) earth. — L. terra, earth (see Terrace); cotta, fem. of cactus, cooked, pp. of coquere, to cook; see Cook.

TERRACE, a raised level bank of earth, elevated flat space. (F.—Ital.—L.) Frequently spelt terras, as in Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 21; here ar is put for er, as in parson for person, Clark for clerk; &c. — MF. terrace, F. terrasse, 'a plat, platform, hillock of earth, a terrace, or high and open gallery.' Cot. — Ital. terracia, terrazza, 'a terrace.' Florio. Formed with suffix -acia, usually with an augmentative force. From Ital. terra, earth. — L. terra, earth. β. L. terra stands for an older form terra*, and signifies dry ground or land, as opposed to sea. Allied to Gk. trapēsis (Attic trapēsis), a stand or frame for drying things upon, any broad flat surface; trapēsis, to become dry, dry up. Also to Irish trí, land, trímen, main land, trím, dry; W. trí, land; Gael. trí, land (whence ceanntrí, headland, land's end, Cantire). Cf. also L. terrare, to parch. — √ TERS, to be dry; whence Skt. trish, to thirst, Goth. thaurus, dry, G. diirr, dry. See Thirst and Torrid. Brugmann, i. § 881. Der. terra-cotta, q.v. Also terre-aqueous, consisting of land and water; see Aqueous. And see terr-ant, terr-one, terr-estri-al, terr-er, terr-it-or-y. Also fumi-tory, in-ter, medi-terr-ane-an, ter-metric.

TERREREN, TUREEN, a large dish or vessel, esp. for soup. (F.—L.) Both spellings are poor; it should rather be terrine; tureen is the commoner, and the worse, spelling. So called because orig. made of earthenware. Spelt tureen, Goldsmith, The Haunch of Venison; terrine in Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. terrine, 'an earthen pan'; Cot. Formed, as if from a L. adj. terrinius*, earthen, from terra, earth; see Terrace.

TERRENE, earthly. (L.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 13. 153. — L. terrēnus, earthly. — L. terra, earth; see Terrace.

TERRERTRIAL, earthly. (L.) Spelt terrestrial, Skelton, Of the Death of Edw. IV. l. 15. Coined by adding -al (L. -ilis) to L. terrestri, decl. stem of terrestris, earthly. — L. terra, earth + with suffix -stri; see Terrace.

TERRIBLE, awful, dreadful. (F.—L.) Spelt terrible in Palsgrave. — F. terrible, 'terrible'; Cot. — L. terribilis, causing terror. — L. terrere, to terrify; with suffix -ibilis. Allied to L. terror, terror; see Terror. Der. terribly, terrible-ness.

TERRIER, a kind of dog; also a register of landed property. (F.—L.) In both senses, the word has the same etymology.

1. ME. terriere, terryere, hownd, Terrarius; Prompt. Parv. The dog was so called because it pursues rabbits, &c., into their burrows. Terrier is short for terrier-dog, i.e. burrow-dog. — F. terrier, as in chien terrier, 'a terrier'; Cot. — Late L. terrarius, belonging to earth. — L. terra, earth. Cf. MF. terrier, 'the hole, berry, or earth of a conny or fox, also, a little hillock'; Cot. — Late L. terrarium, a little hillock; hence, a mound thrown up in making a burrow, a burrow. 2. A legal term; spelt terrar in Blount's Nomolexicon; terrere, Bury Wills, p. 78 (1478). — F. papier terrier, 'the court-roll or catalogue of all the names of a lord's tenants,' &c.; Cot. — Late L. terrarius, as in terrarius liber, a book in which landed property is described. Formed with suffix -arius from L. terra, as above. See Terrace.

TERRIFIC, terrible, inspiring dread. (L.) Spelt terrific, Milton, P. L. vii. 497. — F. terrificus, causing terror. — L. terri-, appearing in terri-tus, pp. of terrere, to frighten; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make; see Terror and Fact. Der. terrific-ly. Also terryfy, formed as if from a F. terrifier* (given in Littre as a new coinage), from L. terrificare, to terrify.

TERRINE, the same as Terréen, q.v.

TERRITORY, domain, extent of land round a city. (F.—L.) In As You Like It, iii. 1. 8; terrytorie in Caxton, Siege of Troy, li. 68, back. Adapted from F. territoire, 'a territory'; Cot. — L. territorium, a domain, the land round a town. Formed from L. terra, land; as if from a sb. with decl. stem territōri-, which may be explained as possessor of land. See Terrace. Der. territori-al, adj.

TERROR, dread, great fear. (F.—L.) Formerly written terror, All's Well, ii. 3. 4 (first folio); but also terror, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 10; ii. 1. 4 (id.). ME. terrour, Libell of E. Policy, l. 935. — F. terreur, 'terror'; Cot. — L. tremor, acc. of terror, dread. Allied to terrere, to frighten, to scare; orig. to tremble. β. Terrēre stands for terrere* (like terra for tersa*): cognate with Skt. tras, to tremble, be afraid, whence trāsa-, terror; Gk. tréō (for tréō-ew*), to tremble; Lithuan. triszti, to tremble, Russ. triazit(s), to shake, shiver. Allied to Tremble. Brugmann, ii. § 657. Der. terror-ism. And (from same root) terri-ble, terri-fic, de-ter.

TERSE, concise, compact, neat. (L.) 'So terse and elegant were his conceits and expressions'; Fuller, Worthies, Devonshire (R.). Used also in the sense of smooth: 'many stones also, . . . although terse and smooth'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 4. § 3. — L. tersus, wiped off, clean, neat, pure, nice, terse. Tersus is pp. of tergere, also tergere, to wipe, rub off, wipe dry, polish a stone (whence Sir T. Browne's use of terse). Der. terse-ly, ness.

TERTIAN, occurring every third day. (F.—L.) Chiefly in the phr. tertian fever or tertian ague. 'A fever tertiane'; Chaucer, C. T. 14965 (B 4149). — F. tertiane, 'a tertian ague'; Cot. — L. tertiana, a tertian fever; fem. of tertianus, tertian, belonging to the third. — L. tertius, third. — L. ter, thrice; tris, three, cognate with E. Three, q.v. And see Teroce.

TERTIARY, of the third formation. (L.) Modern. — L. tertianus, properly containing a third part; but accepted to mean belonging to the third. — L. tertius, third; with suffix -arius; see Tertian.

TESSELATE, to form into squares or lay with checker-work. (L.) Chiefly used in the pp. tesellated, which is given in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. 'Tesselated worke'; Knolles, Hist. of the Turks, 1603 (Nares). — L. tessellatus, furnished with small square stones, checkered. — L. tessella, a small squared piece of stone, a little cube, dimin. of testera, a squared piece, squared block, most commonly in the sense of a die for playing with. β. Root uncertain; sometimes referred to Gk. trapezoides, four, from its square shape; but such a borrowing is very unlikely, and a testera was cubical, having six sides.

TEST, a pot in which metals are tried, a critical examination, trial, proof. (F.—L.) The test was a vessel used in alchemy, and also in testing gold. 'Test, is a broad instrument made of maribone ashes, hooped about with iron, on which refiners do fine, refine, and part silver and gold from other metals, or as we use to say, put them to the test or trial'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. ME. test, Chaucer, C. T. 16286 (G 818). — OF. test, mod. F. têt, a test, in chemistry and metallurgy (Hamilton). Cf. OF. testa, sometimes used in the sense of skull, from its likeness to a potsherd; mod. F. tête. It is probable that OF. test and teste were sometimes confused; they merely differ in gender; otherwise, they are the same word. Test answers to a L. testā, testum, an earthen pot (Lewis); whilst teste answers to Late L. testa, used to denote a certain vessel in treatises on alchemy; a vessel called a testa is figured in Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 326. In Italian we find the same words, viz. testo, (the test of silver or gold, a kind of melting-pot that goldsmiths use, Florio; also testa, 'a head, pate, . . . a test, an earthen pot or galle-cup, burnt tile or brick, a piece of a broken bone, a shard of a pot or tile β. All allied to L. testa, a brick, a piece of baked earthenware, pitcher, also a potsherd, piece of bone, shell of a fish, skull. Some make it an abbreviation of testa*, i.e. dried or baked, with reference to clay or earthenware; allied to terra (< tersa*), dry ground. — √ TERS, to be dry; see Terrace. Or perhaps cognate with Pers. tash, a bason; see Tazza. Der. test, verb; cf. 'tested gold', Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 149. Also test-acc-e-ous, test-er, test-y, q.v.

TESTACEOUS, having a hard shell. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from L. testaceus, consisting of tiles, having a shell, testaceous. — L. testa, a piece of dried clay, tile, brick. See Test.

TESTAMENT, a solemn declaration in writing, a will, part of the bible. (F.—L.) ME. testament, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 20, l. 9; Ancrer Riwle, p. 388. — F. testament, 'a testament or will'; Cot. — L. testamentum, a thing declared, last will. — L. testā-ri, to be a witness, depose to, testify; with suffix -mentum. — L. testis, a witness. Root uncertain. Der. testament-ary; in test-ale, q.v.; test-at-or, Heb. ix. 16, from L. testātor, one who makes a will; testat-ix, L. testātrix, fem. form of testātor. And see testify, testimony. (From L. testis at test, con-test, de-test, pro-test.)

TESTER, a sixpence; a flat canopy over a bed or pulpit. (F.—L.) 1. The sense 'sixpence' is obsolete, except as corrupted to tizzy; see Shak. 2 Henry IV. iii. 2. 206. The tester was so called from the head upon it; it is a short form of testerna, as in Latimer's Sermons, 1584, fol. 94 (Todd). Again, testern is, apparently, a corruption of teston (sometimes testoon), which was a brass coin covered with silver, first struck in the reign of Hen. VIII. The name was given to shillings and sixpences, and Latimer got into trouble by referring to the newly coined shilling or teston; see Latimer, Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 85, where it is spelt testoon. In 1560 the teston of 6d. was reduced to 4d. The name teston was given to the new coins of Louis XII. of France because they bore the head of that prince; but Ruding observes that the name must have been applied to the E. coin by mere caprice, as all money of this country bore the head of the sovereign; J. H. Wheatley, note to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 2. 104, where teston occurs. — F. teston, 'a testoon, a piece of silver coin worth xvijd. sterling; Cot. — OF. teste, a head; mod. F. tête. — L. testa, of which one sense was 'skull'; see further under Test. 2. Testar for a beddie; Palgrave. [Allied to ME. testar, a head-piece, helmet, Chaucer, C. T. 2501 (A 2499).] Cf. Tester of a bed; Prompt. Parv. — OF. testra, tester of a bed (Godefroy); cf. MF. testiere, 'any kind of head-piece; Cot. — OF. teste, a head; as above.

TESTICLE, a gland in males, secreting seminal fluid. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. testicule, 'a testicle; Cot. — L. testiculum, acc. of testis, dimin. of testis, a testicle.

TESTIFY, to bear witness, protest or declare. (F. — L.) ME. testifen, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 172. — F. testifier, 'to testify; Cot. — L. testificari, to bear witness. — L. testi, decl. stem of testis, a witness; and -fic-, for facere, to make; see Testament and Fact. Der. testifier.

TESTIMONY, evidence, witness. (L.) In K. Lear, i. 2. 88. Englished from L. testimonium, evidence. — L. testi, decl. stem of testis, a witness; see Testament. The suffix -monium = Idg. -monyo-. Cf. The F. word is témoin, OF. tesmoing. Der. testimoni-al, in Minaieu, from F. testimonial, 'a testimonial; Cot.; from L. testimonialis, adj.

TESTY, heady, fretful. (F. — L.) In Palgrave; and in Jul. Cæsar, iv. 3. 46. — ME. testif, Chaucer, C. T. A 4004. — OF. testif (not found); allied to MF. testu, 'testy, heady, headstrong; Cot. — OF. teste, the head; mod. F. tête. See Test. Der. testi-ly, testi-ness, Cymb. iv. 1. 23.

TETANUS, a disease characterised by rigid spasms. (L. — Gk.) Late L. tetanus. — Gk. tetanos, a strain, convulsive spasm; allied to tetanus, adj., stretched. Keelupplied for tenes (with prefix tet-) allied to tetivus (for tetivus), to stretch. — ✓TEN, to stretch. See Thin.

TECHY, TECHY, touchy, fretful, peevish. (F. — Low G.) In Kich, III. iv. 4. 168; Trail, i. 1. 99; Rom. i. 3. 32. The sense of techy (better tecky) is full of teches or teches, i.e. bad habits, freaks, whims, vices. The adj. is formed from ME. teches or tache, a habit, esp. a bad habit, vice, freak, caprice, behaviour. 'Teche, teche, teche, or manner of comynge; Mos. condicio; Prompt. Parv. 'A chylid teches in playe, mores pueri inter ludendum; Horman, Vulgaria; cited by Way. 'Offritie, crafty and deceptfull teches'; Elyot's Diet. 'Of the maners, teches, and condicions of houndes'; MS. Sloane 3501, c. xi; cited by Way. 'Peisires teches' — the father's habits; P. Plowman, B. ix. 146. 'Techeches, vices; Aeyenbite of Inwyt, p. 32, l. 15. — OF. tache, 'a spot, stain, blemish; also, a reproach, disgrace, blut into a man's good name; Cot. Also spelt tniche, teche, teque, tek, a natural quality, disposition, esp. a bad disposition, vice, ill habit, defect, stain (Barry). Mod. F. tache, only in the sense of stain, mark. [Cf. Ital. taccia, a notch, cut, defect, stain, Port. and Span. tacha, a defect, flaw, crack, small nail or tack.] Of Low G. origin. See Tache (2) and Taok. Cf. at-tach and de-tach, from the same source. We even find the F. form tache, a spot, stain; Whitgift's Works, ii. 84 (Parker Soc.). Now corrupted to touch-y, from the notion of being sensitive to the touch. This is a mere adaptation, not an original expression; see Touchy. (The double form in OF., viz. tache, teche, causes difficulty and doubt; two or more sources may have been confused together. See Körtig, §§ 9331, 9346, 9420.)

TETHER, a rope or chain for tying up a beast. (E.) Formerly written tether. 'Live within thy tether, i.e. within your income's bounds; Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 10, st. 9 (sidenote). 'Tethered cattle'; id. sect. 16, st. 33 (E. D. S. p. 42). ME. teder; 'Hoc ligatorium, a teidre'; Wright's Voc. i. 234, col. 2. Not found earlier than the 15th century. The corresponding AS. form would be tæder*, as shown by OFries. tæder, tæder, NFries. tjudder, tjüder, EFries. tæder; cf. also Mid. Du. twyer, 'a line, a shackle, or rope to tie beasts in a pasture'; Hexham. β. We might explain the AS. tæder* as standing for tæh-der*; from the base tæh = G. zieh, to draw; cf. Goth. ziuhan, to pull, cognate with L. duc-ere. If this be right, the original sense was 'puller'; from its restraint. Cf. OHG. zætor, MlG. zieter, a thill, shaft (of a cart). γ. We also find Icel. tjæder, a tether, Low G. tider, tier, a tether, Norw. tjæder (Aasen), Swed. tjæder, Dan. tjæder; all similarly formed. See Tie. The suffix -der answers to Gk. -τρον, L. -trum, and denotes the agent. Cf. Bahler, p. 147; Brugmann, ii. § 61. Der. tether, verb.

τετρα-, for τετρα-, prefix allied to tetrapes, Attic form of τίσσας, four, which is cognate with E. Four, q. v.; and γωνία, an angle, corner, allied to Gk. γων, a knee, cognate with E. Knee. Cf. L. prefix quadri-, similarly related to quator, four. Der. tetragon-al, adj., as above.

TETRAHEDRON, a pyramid, a solid figure contained by four equilateral triangles. (Gk.) Spelt tetrahedron and tetrahedron in Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. τετρα-, prefix allied to τίσσας, four; and -εδρον, from ἐδρα, a base, which from ἔδω, cognate with E. sit. See Tetragon; and see Four and Sit. Der. tetrahed-al, adj.

TETRARCH, a governor of a fourth part of a province. (L. — Gk.) ME. tetrark (ill spelt tetrak), Wyclif, Luke, ix. 7. — L. tetrarcha, Luke, ix. 7. — Gk. τετραρχος, a tetrarch. — Gk. τετρα-, prefix allied to τίσσας, four; and ἀρχ-ειν, to be first. Cf. Skt. arh, to be worthy. See Tetragon; also Four and Arch. Der. tetrarch-ate; tetrarch-y, Gk. τετραρχία.

TETRASYLLABLE, a word of four syllables. (F. — L. — Gk.) A coined word, from MF. tetrasyllabe, 'of four syllables; Cot. — Late L. tetrasyllabus (not in Ducange). — Gk. τετρασύνδακτος, of four syllables. — Gk. τετρα-, prefix allied to τίσσας, four; and σύνδακτος, a syllable. See Tetragon; also Four and Syllable. Der. tetrasyllabic.

TETTER, a cutaneous disease. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 71; and in Baret (1580). ME. teter, Trevisa, ii. 61. 'Hec serpiulo, a tetter'; Voc. 791, 14. AS. tefer. 'Impetigo, teter'; Voc. 26, 12. Cf. G. zittermal, a tetter, ring-worm, scurvy; OHG. zitaroch (Bavar. zitteroch). Allied to L. derbissus, scabby; Skt. dadru, a tetter.

TEUTONIC, pertaining to the Teutons or ancient Germans. (L. — Teut.) Spelt Teutonic in Blount, ed. 1674. — L. Teutonicus, adj., formed from Teutones, the Teutons, a people of the nation; 'The word Teutones means no more than 'men of the nation' or 'the people', being formed with L. suffix -ones (pl.) from teutō*, pre-Teutonic form of Goth. thiuda, a people, nation; cf. Irish tuath, a people. See further under Dutch. Brugmann, i. § 218.

TEW, to taw, to scourge. (E.) A variant of Taw, q. v.

TEXT, the original words of an author; a passage of scripture. (F. — L.) ME. text, Chaucer, C. T. 17185 (II 236). — F. texte, 'a text, the original words or subject of a book; Cot. — L. textum, that which is woven, a fabric, also the style of an author; hence, a text. Orig. neut. of texis, pp. of texere, to weave. — Skt. taksh, to cut wood, prepare, form. Further allied to Technical, q. v. Der. text-book; text-hand, a large hand in writing, suitable for the text of a book; as distinct from the notes; text-al. — ME. textual, Chaucer, C. T. 17184 (II 235), from F. textual, 'of, or in, a text; Cot. coined as if from a Late *L. textuālis, adj.; textu-alis, textu-al-ist. And see text-ile, text-ure below. From the same root are technic-al, q. v.; con-text, pre-text. Also sub-ile, tail (2), tissue; and cf. toxiology.

TEXTILE, woven, that can be woven. (L.) 'The warp and the woof of textile'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. 846. — L. textilis, woven, textile. — L. textus, woven, pp. of texere; see Text. See also texture, tissue.

TEXTURE, anything woven, a web, disposition of the parts. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. texture, 'a texture, contexture, web; Cot. — L. textūra, a web; cf. textus, pp. of texere, to weave; see Text. And see textile above.

TH

TH. This is a distinct letter from t, and ought to have a distinct symbol. Formerly, we find AS. þ and ð used (indiscriminately) to denote both the sounds now represented by th; in Middle-English, þ soon went out of use (it occurs in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris), whilst th and th were both used by the scribes. The letter þ was assimilated in shape to y, till at last both were written alike; hence ȝ, ȝ (really th, thaf) are not unfrequently pronounced by modern Englishmen like ye and yat; it is needless to remark that ȝ man was never pronounced as ye man in the middle ages.

For greater distinctness, the symbol ð will be used for AS. words (and th for ME. words) corresponding to mod. F. words with the 'voiced' th, as in thou; and the symbol þ for AS. and ME. words corresponding to mod. F. words with the 'voiceless' th, as in thin. It is useful to note these three facts following. 1. When th is initial, it is always voiceless, except in two sets of words, (a) words etymologically connected with that; and (b) words etymologically connected with thou. 2. When th is in the middle of a word or is final, it is almost always 'voiced' when the letter e follows, and not otherwise; cf. breath, with breath. A remarkable exception occurs in smooth. 3. No word beginning with th (except thurible, the base of which is Greek) is of Latin origin; most of them are E., but some (easily known) are Greek; thummim is Hebrew. In the G. thaler (below), the th is sounded as t.

THALER, a dollar. (G.) G. thaler, a dollar; see Dollar.

THAN, a conjunction placed, after the comparative of an adjective or adverb, between things compared. (E.) Frequently written then in old books; extremely common in Shakespeare (1st folio). ME. thanne, thonne, thenne; also than, thon, then. AS. ðonne, than; 'better ðonne ðæt reaf' = better than the garment; Matt. vi. 25. Closely allied to the demonstr. pronoun; see That. See March, A. S. Grammar, § 252. +Du. dan, than, then; Goth. than, then, whn, allied to the demonstr. pron. with neut. thata; G. dann, then, denn, for, then, than, allied to der. Cf. L. tum, then; -tud in L. is -tud. ¶ The same word as then; but differentiated by usage.

THANE, a dignitary among the English. (E.) In Macb. i. 2. 45. ME. þein, Havelok, 2466. AS. þegen, þegn, often þen (by contraction), a thane; Grein, ii. 578. +Icel. þegn; G. degen, a warrior. Teut. type thegnaz*. m. Allied to Gk. τεῦχος, a child, which is from τεκ- as in τεκ-ειν, and aorist infin. of τεκνεν, to beget. (✓TEK.) Brugmann, ii. § 66.

THANK, an expression of good will; commonly used in the pl. thanks. (E.) Chaucer uses it in the sing. number. 'And haue a þank'; C. T. 614 (A 612). So also Gower: 'Although I may no þank deserve'; C. A. i. 66; bk. i. 738. AS. þanc, often also þonc, thought, grace or favour, content, thanks. The primary sense of 'thought' shows that it is closely allied to Think, q.v. The verb þancian, to thank (Mark, viii. 6), is a derivative from the sb. +Du. dank, sb., whence danken, vb.; Icel. þökk (<þink), gen. þakkar, whence þakka, vb.; Dan. tak, sb., whence takke, vb.; cf. tanke, a thought, inde; Swed. tack, sb., whence tacka, vb.; Goth. þagks (for þanks*), thank, Luke, xvii. 9, where the s is the usual suffix of the nom. sing.; i.e. þagkjan, to think; G. dank, sb., whence danken, verb. Teut. type thankoz*, m.; from thank*, and grade of thenkan-*, to think; see Think. Der. thank, verb, as above; thank-ful, AS. þancful, spelt ðoneful and glossed 'gratiosus', Voc. 191. 15; thank-ful-ly, thank-ful-ness; thank-less, Cor. iv. 5. 76, thank-less-ly, thank-less-ness, thank-offer-ing, thank-worthy, 1 Pet. ii. 19. Also thanks-giving, i.e. a giving of thanks, L.L. i. 193; thanks-giver.

THAT, demonstr. and rel. pronoun and conjunction. (E.) ME. that. AS. ðæt, orig. neut. of demonstrative pronoun, frequently used as neut. of the def. article, which is merely a peculiar use of the demonstr. pronoun. [The masc. sē, and fem. seo, are from a different base; see She.] In late MSS., we meet with a corresponding masc. form ðe, as in 'he hearpere' = the harper, Alfred, tr. of Roethius, c. xxxv. § 6, lib. iii. met. 12, where the Cotton MS. has 'se hearpere'. Also with a corresponding late fem. form ðeo, as in 'ðā ðeo sáwul hebban seal' - which the soul is to have; Adrianus and Rithuus, in Ettmüller's A. S. Selections, p. 40, l. 43. The neut. ðæt is from the Teut. pronominal base THA = Idg. TO, meaning 'he' or 'that'. The suffix -i in that is merely the mark of the neut. gender, as in wha-i from who, i-i (formerly hi-i) from he; it answers to L. -i as seen in is-i, qu-i, ill-i. β. From Idg. TO are Skt. tat, it, that, and numerous cases, such as tam, him (acc. masc.); tām, her (acc. fem.); it, they, &c. Also Gk. tó, neut. of def. art., and the gen. τοῦ, τῆς, dat. τῷ, τῇ, acc. τὸν, τὴν, τό, &c. Also the latter part of L. is-i, is-ta, is-tud. So also Lithuan. tas, m., ta, f., tai, n., that; Russ. to, masc., ta, fem., to, neut., that; Du. de, masc. and fem., the; dat, conj., that; Icel. þat, neut., the; Dan. den, masc. and fem., det, neut.; cf. Swed. den, masc. and fem., det, neut.; cf. G. der, masc., die, fem., das, neut., the; dass, conj., that; Goth. thata, neut. of def. article.

For the purposes of E. etymology it is necessary to give the AS. def. art. in full. It is as follows: if we put sē and seo (the usual forms) in place of ðe, ðeo. SING. NOM. sē, sēo, ðæt; GEN. ðæs, ðære, ðæs; DAT. ðam, ðære, ðam; ACC. ðam, ðære, ðam; INSTRUMENTAL, ðy (for all genders). PLUR. NOM. AND ACC. ðe; GEN. ðara; DAT. ðam. ¶ Allied words all begin with 'voiced' th; as there, than, then, the (1), the (2), they, their, them; thence, thither; these, those, thus.

THATCH, a covering for a roof. (E.) A palatalised form of thak. Cf. prov. F. thack, a thatch, thacker, a thatcher; ME. þak, Prompt. Parv. AS. þac (dat. þæc), thatch, Grein, ii. 564; whence þaccan (for þac-ian*), to thatch, cover, Grein, ii. 577. +Du. dak, sb., whence deken, verb (whence E. deek is borrowed); Icel. þak, sb., þekja, v.; Dan. tag, sb., takke, v.; Swed. tak, sb., täkke, v.; G. dach, s., decken, v. β. Teut. type þak-om*, neut. From þak*, and grade of þak, þak to cover = Idg. TEGw*, STEGw; cf. Gk. τέγος, variant of τέρεος, a roof. From the same root we have Skt. stagh, to cover, Gk. στέγειν, to cover, L. tegere, to cover, Lithuan. stęgti, to cover, Olrish teck, Irish teaght, a house, Gael. teach, tigh, a house, Gael. a tigh, within (i.e. under cover), W. tŷ, a house. Der. thatch, vb., as above; thatcher, spelt thacker, Pilkington's Works, p. 381 (Parker Soc.). Also (from L. tegere) teg-ument, tile. Also (from Du. decken) deck. Brugmann, i. § 632.

THAUMATURGY, magic. (Gk.) Cf. F. thaumaturgie (1878); Hatzfeld. = Gk. θαυματουργία, a working of wonders. = Gk. θαύμα-, stem of θαύμα, a wonder, marvel; and εργ-ω, a work, cognate with E. Work, q.v.

THAW, to melt, as ice, to grow warm after frost. (E.) Prov. E. thow, rhyming with snow. ME. þawen, in comp. of þowed, pp. thawed away, Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 53. Spelt þowyn, Prompt. Parv. AS. þawian; 'se wind tō-wyrp and þawad' = the [south] wind disperses and thaws; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 17, last line. A weak verb. +Du. dooijen, to thaw; cf. dooi, thaw; Icel. þeyja, to thaw; þú, a thaw, thawed ground; cf. þeyr, a thaw; Dan. tøe, to thaw; tå, a thaw; Swed. tåa, to thaw; tå, a thaw. Cf. MHG. downen, G. verdauen, to concoct, digest. β. Prob. allied to L. tibēs, a melting, tābescere, to dissolve, Gk. τρίβω, to melt; Skt. trīya-, water; W. tawdd, melted, toddi, to melt. ¶ In no way connected with deu.

THE (1), def. article. (E.) ME. the. AS. he, substituted in Late AS. for sē, the nom. masc. of the def. article; the m. sē, f. seo, being replaced by m. ðe, f. ðeo, by the influence of neut. ðæt, and the forms of the oblique cases. Thus we find he hearpere - the harper; see quotation under That. The real use of AS. ðe was as an indeclinable relative pronoun, in extremely common use for all genders and cases; see several hundred examples in Grein, ii. 573-577. See further under That.

THE (2), in what degree, in that degree. (F.) When we say 'the more, the merrier' we mean 'in what degree they are more numerous, in that degree are they merrier.' This is not the usual def. article, but the instrumental case of it. ME. the, as in 'neuer the bet' = none the better, Chaucer, C. T. 7533 (D 1951). AS. ðy, ði, as in ðy bet = the better; see numerous examples in Grein, ii. 568. This is the instrumental case of the def. article, and means 'on that account' or 'on what account,' or 'in that degree' or 'in what degree.' Common in the phrase for ðy, on that account; cf. for hwy, on what account. See That; and see Why. +Goth. thē, instrumental case of def. article; Icel. því, þí, dat. (or inst.) case of þat. Cf. Skt. tēnā, instr. case of tad, sometimes used with the sense of 'therefore'; Benfey, p. 349, s.v. tad, sect. iv.

THEATRE, a place for dramatic representations. (F.-L.-Gk.) ME. theatre, Chaucer, C. T. 1887 (A 1885); spelt teatre, Wyclif, Deeds (AS), xix. 31. = MF. theatre, 'a theatre'; Cot. = L. theātrum. = Gk. θεάτρον, a place for seeing shows, &c.; formed with suffix -τρον (agential) from θεά-ομαι, I see. Cf. θία, a view, sight, spectacle; see Prellwitz. Der. theatrical, adj., theatrical-ly; theatrical-s, s. pl.; amphitheatre. And see theism, theor-y.

THEE (1), acc. of Thou, pers. pron., which see.

THEE (2), to prosper, flourish, thrive. (E.) Obsolete; ME. þeon, usually þe or þee, Chaucer, C. T. 7789 (D 2207). 'Theen, or thryvyn, Vigeo'; Prompt. Parv. AS. þion, þion (for þihan*), pt. t. þāh, þeah, pp. þigen, þogen, also ge-þungen, to thrive. +Goth. theihan, to thrive, increase, advance; Du. gedijen, to thrive, prosper, succeed; G. gedeihn, OHG. dikan, to increase, thrive. Another allied form is OSax. ge-þengian, to fulfil. The old AS. pp. geþungen shows that the AS. þihan* resulted from an earlier form þinkan*; from the Teut. root þinx*, þenx*, answering to Idg. TENK*; which appears in Lith. tenka, it suffices; whence also Olrish tocad, prosperity, W. tynged, luck; cf. Lith. tekti, to suffice (pres. t. tenkti, I have enough). Brugmann, i. § 421 (3). See Tight.

THEFT, the act of stealing, stealing. (E.) ME. þefte, Chaucer, C. T. 4393 (A 4395). Theft is for thēstik, as being easier to pronounce. AS. þiefte, þeafte, þyfte (with f sound as v, and ð voiced), theft; Laws of Æne, §§ 7 and 46; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 106, 130. Formed with suffix -(i)-ðe (Idg. -iā) from AS. þeof, þiof, or þef, a thief, or from þeofian, to steal; see Theist. +OFries. thinfthe, theft; cf. thiaf, a thief; Icel. þyft, sometimes þyft; cf. þyftir, a thief.

THEIR, belonging to them. (Scand.) The word their belongs to the Northern dialect rather than the Southern, and is rather a Scand. than an AS. form. Chaucer uses here or here in this sense (<AS. hira, of them); C. T. 32. ME. thair, Pricke of Conscience, 52, 1862, &c.; thar, Barbour, Bruce, i. 22, 23; þeþre, Ormulum, 127. The word was orig. not a possess. pron., but a gen. plural; moreover, it was not orig. the gen. pl. of he (he), but of the def. article. = Icel. þeirra, Olcel. þeirra, of them; used as gen. pl. of hann, hon, þat (he, she, it), by confusion; it was really the gen. pl. of the def. article, as shown by the AS. forms. (The use of that for it is a Scand. peculiarity, very common in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambs.) +AS. ðarra, also ðara, gen. pl. of def. art.; see Grein, ii. 565; G. der, gen.

pl. of def. art. ; Goth. thizz, fem. thizn, gen. pl. of sa, so, thata. See further under They and That. Der. their-s, Temp. i. 1. 58; spelt þeȝress, Ormulum, 2506; cf. Dan. deres, Swed. deras, theirs; formed by analogy with our-s, your-s.

THEISM, belief in the existence of a God. (Gk.) 'All religion and theism.' Pref. to Cadworth, Intellectual System (R.). Coined, with suffix -ism (Gk. -ισμος), from Gk. θεός, a god. Prob. for θεα-ός; cf. Olrish deus, God (Stokes-Field, p. 151); also Gk. θεο-φάτος, spoken by a god. See Prelwitz. ¶ Not related to L. deus. Dor. the-ist (from Gk. θεός); the-ist-ic, the-ist-i-cal; a-the-ist, q.v.; apo-the-os-is, q.v. And see theo-cra-cy, theo-nau-tic, theo-log-ic, the-urg-y.

THEME, objective case of They, q.v. Der. them-selves.
THEME, a subject for discussion. (F.—I.—L.) ME. teme, P. Plowman, B. iii. 95, v. 61, vi. 23. At a later period spelt them, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 434.—OF. teme, MF. theme, ‘a thcam, Cot.—L. thema.—Gk. théma, that which is laid down, the subject of an argument.—Gk. base θε-, to place, weak grade of θη-, as in τίθημι, I place.—√DIE, to place, put; whence Skt. dhā to put; &c. See Thesis.

THEN, at that time, afterward, therefore. (E.) Frequently spelt than in old books, as in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 200 (First folio); it times with began, Lucrece, 1440. Orig. the same word as than, but afterwards differentiated. ME. thenne, P. Plowman, A. i. 56; thanne, B. i. 58. AS. ðænne; also ðanne, ðonne, then, than; Grein, ii. 623. 624. See Than.

HENEO, hē-neo, from that place or time. (E.) ME. theneu (disyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 1930 (B 510); whence (by contraction) thens, 'then', often then in order to represent that the h was voiced, less, and not sounded as s. Older forms thonne, thence, thanne. Owl and Nightingale, 132, 508, 1734; also thanne, Rob. of Glouc., 377, l. 743: thanne is a shorter form of thanneu (cf. thence, 377, l. 743). thanne is n. AS. þanon, þanone, þence, also þananan, þanonun (þence, Grein, ii, 506, 561. It thus appears that the fullest form was þananone, which became successively þanene, þanne, þence, and (by addition of s) þenness, thens, thence. S was added because -s was a favourite ME. adverbial suffix, orig. due to the genitive suffix of sbis. Again, þa-nan, þa-nan-ne, is from the Teut. base THIA = Idg. TH₁, he, that; see That. March (A. S. Grammar, § 252) explains nan, -nane, as an oblique case of the (repeated) adj. þunig, -na, with the orig. sense of 'belonging to'; cf. l. super-na, belonging (super) above, whence the ablative adverb super-na from above. He remarks that belonging to and coming from are near akin, but the lost case-ending inclines the sense to from. 'The Goth. in-nana, within, ut-ana, without, kind-ana, behind, do not have the plain sense from'. Pott suggests comparison with a preposition (Lettsch no, from). I here belong fast-ana, from the east; aft-ana, aft; frarr-ana, from far; &c.' Compare also Hence, Whence. +Gk. δενθεν, OHG. dannana, thence; from G. base da-. Der. thence-forth, thence-forward, not in early use.

THEOCRACY, the government of a state immediately by God; the state so governed. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = Gk. θεοκρατία, the rule of God; Josephus, Against Apion, ii. 16 (Trench, Study of Words). Formed (by analogy with demo-cracy, aristo-cracy, &c.), from Gk. θεός, for θεός, a god; and -κρατία, -κρατία is in δημο-κρατία, δημο-κρατία, i. e. government, power, from κράτος, strong, allied to E. hard. See Theism and Hard; and see Democracy. Der. theocratic, theocrat, theocrat.

THEODOLITE, an instrument used in surveying for observing angles and distances. (Gk.) In Blount, ed. 1674. Certainly of Gk. origin. The original theodolite was not quite like the present one. Hopton, in his Topographical Glass, (1611) defines it as 'an instrument consisting of a planisphere and an alhidade, i. e. a revolving rule with sights, and spells it Theodolitus; N. and Q. 35. iv. 51. In Pantometria, by T. Digges, 1571, ch. 27 of book i. is headed 'The composition of the instrument called Theodolitus, and begins: 'It is but a circle divided into 360 grades or degrees, &c. Prof. Adams informs me that the method of subdividing the degrees of the circle was known to the Greeks, and is well explained in Rathbone's Surveying, ed. 1616. Also spelt theodolt, theodolt, theodolli; the last occurs in 1784; N. and Q. 9. vii. 412. It seems to be taken (we know not why) from the OF. Theodoli, Theodoliet, the name of a treatise, lit. 'a work by Theodulus. Godefroy quotes 'Cathomet, Theodoliet, bien gloses, i. e. a work by Cato, a work by Theodulus, well glossed (1408). It was usual to add -et in this manner; thus Esop-et meant a work by Esop, viz. his 'Fables'. One Theodoliet, viz. the Veloga Theoduli, is mentioned by Rabalais (I. xiv) when Gargantua was instructed in Latin literature, he read 'Donat, le Facet, Theodoliet, &c. This Veloga Theoduli was a poem in Latin hexameters, containing a dispute between Truth and Falsehood. But it is more likely that the reference in this instance is to a mathematician named Theodulus.

sec N. and Q. 3 S. vii. 337, 428, &c. The name Theodulus meant 'servant of God;' from theo-, for θεός, God; and δούλος, a servant. For the suffix -et, cf. Pamphlet.

THEOGONY, the part of mythology which taught of the origin of the gods. (1.-Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The theogony in Hesiod;' Selden, Illustrations to Dryden's Polyolbion, song 11 (R.). Englished from L. theogonia.—Gk. θεογονία, the origin of the gods; the title of a poem by Hesiod.—Gk. θεο-, θεός, a god; and -γονία, origin, from γεν-, and grade of the Gk. base γεν-, to beget, from γεν-, to beget. Cf. Gk. γένος, race, ἐγγόνιον, I became. See Theism and Genus. Der. theogonist, a writer on theogony.

THEOLOGY, the science which treats of the relations between God and man. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. theologie, Chaucer, Persones Tale, 3rd pt. of Penitence (Group I, 1043).—MF. theologie, 'theology'; Cot.—L. theologia.—Gk. θεολογια, a speaking about God.—Gk. θεολογος, adj., speaking about God.—Gk. θεος, for θεός, a god; and λογ-, and grade of λέγειν, to speak. See THEISM and LOGIC. DER. theologi-c, theologi-c-al, theologi-c-al-ly; theolog-is-e, ist; theologi-an.

THEORBO, a kind of lute. (Ital.) Formerly also theorba; theorbo in Drayton, Polyolbion, song iv. 363. = Ital. tiarba; the th being due to the occasional F. spelling théorbe, for tiôrbe. Named after its inventor (Zambaldi).

THEOREM. a proposition to be proved. (L. -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'More theoremes'; Marston, What You Will, A. iv. sc. i. -L. thēōrēma, -Gk. θεώρημα, a spectacle; hence, a subject for contemplation, principle, theorem. Formed with suffix -μα (-μα-) from θεωρεῖν, to look at, behold, view. -Gk. θεωρεῖν, a spectator. -Gk. θεῶν-μαι, θεάω-μαι, I see; with suffix -πος (ldg. -ρα-). See Theatre.
And see Theory.

THEORY, an exposition, speculation. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt theorie in Minshew. [The ME. word was therike, as in Chaucer. On the Astrolobe, prol. 59; Gower, C. a. iii. 86; bk. vii. 61. This is F. theorique, sb. fem.—L. theōrica, adj. fem., the sb. art., being understood. See Nares.]—MF. theorie, 'theory'; Cat. l. theōria.—Gk. θεωρία, a beholding, contemplation, speculation.—Gk. θεωρῶς, a spectator; see Theorem. Der. theor-ise, theor-ist; also theor-et-ic, Gk. θεωρητικός, adj.; theor-et-ical, -ly.

THERAPEUTIC, pertaining to the healing art. (F.—L.—Gk. Spelt Therapeutik, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and see Sir Th. Browne Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 26.—MF. therapeutique, 'curing, healing, etc.'—L. therapeuticus, fem. sing. of adj. therapeuticus, 'healing'; the sb. ars, art, being understood.—Gk. θεραπευτικός, inclined to take care of, tending.—Gk. θεραπευτής, one who waits on a great man, one who attends to anything.—Gk. θεραπεύω, to wait on, attend, serve.—Gk. θεράπω, stem of θεράω, a rare sb., for which the more usual form θεράπω, a servant, is used. The stem θεράω—means, literally, one who supports or assists; from base θερά—ldg. DIERK, to support; cf. Skt. dhr, to bear, maintain, support, dharitri, a supporter. Der. therapeuticus—s. dl.

THERE (1), in that place. (E.) ME. ther, Chaucer, C. T. 43; written thar in Barbour's Bruce. AS. ðær, ðer, Grein, ii. 564; better written ðær, ðer, with long vowel. The base is Teut. Tha = Idg. TO, he, that; see That. March, A. S. Gram. § 252, explains the suffix -r as the locative case of the comparative suffix -ro-; cf. Skt. upa-rī, Gk. ὕπερ, L. super-r, Goth. ufar-, AS. ofer-, E. over-, f. Du. o-ver, f. Icel. fár; Dan. and Swed. der; Goth. thar; cf. GA., OHG. där. Cf. Here and Where.

THÉRE- (2), as a prefix. (E.) In there-fore, there-by, &c. It will suffice to explain there-fore. This is ME. there-fore, with final -e, as in Ormulum, 2431, where we find: 'therefor 3e33d3 330 þiss word.' For AS. ðær-, see above. For the prep. for (allied to for), see Grein, li. 320. It thus appears that the final e in therefore is not wrong, but therefore and therefor are equivalent. β. Similar compounds are there-about or (with added adverbial suffix -a) there-about-s, there-after, there-at, there-by, there-from, there-in, there-of, there-on, there-through, there-to, there-unto, there-upon, there-with. The construction with ðær before a preposition occurs even in AS. 'When a thing is referred to, ðær is generally substituted for hit with a prep., the prep. being joined on to the ðær; e. g., on hit becomes ðær on; Carlon hit ðæt of heorðum stāne, gesetton his ðær on sigora Wendend e they cut it (the tomb) out of the bright rock, they placed in it the Lord of victories; Sweet, A. S. Grammar, 2nd ed. n. xci.

THERMOMETER, an instrument for measuring the variations of temperature. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Evelyn's Diary, July 13, 1654. First invented about 1507 (Haydn). Coin'd from Gk. θερμo, for θερμυς, hot, warm; and μετρον, a measure, a measurer, for which see Metre. β. The Gk. θερμυς is allied to L. formis, warm, and to Skt. gharma, heat. Der. thermometr-ic, -ic, -ic-ally; and see iso-therm-ic.

THESAURUS, a treasury of knowledge, esp. a dictionary. (L.-Gk.) A doublet of Treasure, q. v.

THESE, pl. of This, q. v. ME. these, these, a new pl. of this. The old pl. (AS. þis) has become the mod. E. those. See Those.

THESES, a statement laid down to be argued about, an essay on a theme. (L.-Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—L. thesis.—Gk. θεσις, a proposition, statement, thing laid down. For θεσις, allied to θεσις, placed, verbal adj. from the base θε-, weaker form of θη-, as in τι-θη-μ, I put, place. See Theme. Der. anti-thesis, auto-thesis, epi-thesis, hypo-thesis, meta-thesis, para-thesis, paren-thesis, pro-thesis, pro-thesis, syn-thesis. From the same root are apo-the-cary, apo-the-ma, epi-the-t, the-me, theo-au-rus, treasure.

THEURGY, supernatural agency. (L.-Gk.) Rare. A name applied to a kind of magic said to be performed by the operation of gods and demons. Rich. gives an example from Hallywell's Melan-pronvea (1682), p. 51. Englished from L. theurgia, Latinised form of Gk. θεουργία, divine work, magic.—Gk. θεο-, for θεός, a god; and εργον, work, cognate with E. work. See Theism and Work. Der. theurgic, theurgi-cal.

THEWS, pl. sb., sinews, strength, habits, manners. (E.) Thews and limbs; Jul. Cass. l. 3. 81; cf. Hamlet. l. 3. 12. ME. þeues, i. e. habits, manners, Chaucer, C. T. 9416 (E 1542). 'Alle gode þeues, all good virtues; Ancrer Kniwe, p. 240, l. 16. The sing. þeawe (dat. case) occurs in Layamon, l. 1361, with the sense of sinew or strength; on which Sir F. Madden remarks: 'This is the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities. Cf. Scotch thowles, feeble.' In other passages it occurs in the pl. þeawes, þeues, II. 2147, 6899, 7161, with the usual sense of mental qualities. Of course, as in all metaphorical expressions, the sense of 'bodily strength' is the orig. one, and that of 'mental excellence' is secondary. AS. þeaw, habit, custom, behaviour; the pl. þeawas signifies manners; Grein, II. 584.—OSax. thau, custom, habit.—OHG. dau, discipline. β. The Teut. base is thaw-, allied to Skt. tavas, strong; ta, to be strong. The sense of bulk, strength, survives in Scotch thowless, thowless, thowless, for which Jamieson gives a wrong etymology (from AS. þeow, a servant). The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are due to a misapprehension of the facts. From the Idg. √TEU, to be strong; see Thigh, Tumid.

THEY, used as pl. of he, she, it. (Scand.) The word they (in ME.) is chiefly found in the Northern dialect; Barbour uses nom. thai, gen. thair, dat. and acc. thaim or tham, where Chaucer uses nom. they, C. T. 18, gen. here, hise, hir, id. 588 (A 580), dat. and acc. hem, id. 18. The Ormulum has þey, þeyre, þeyre, þeyre, þeyre, dat. and acc. them. Of these forms, hem survives only in the mod. prov. E. 'em, as in 'I saw 'em go'; whilst the gen. here is lost. Again, here and hem (AS. hira or heora, heom or him) are the true forms, properly used as the pl. of he, from the same base; whilst they, them, their are really cases of the pl. of the def. article. β. The use is Scand., not E.; the AS. usage confines these forms to the def. article, but Icelandic usage allows them to be used for the personal pronoun.—Icel. þeir, nom.; þeirra, gen.; þeim, dat.; used to mean they, them, as the pl. of hann, hon, he, she. The extension of the use of dat. them to its use as an accusative is precisely parallel to that of him, properly a dat. form only. The Icel. acc. is þá, but Danish and Swedish confuse dat. and acc. together. Cf. Dan. and Swed. de, they; dem (dat. and acc.). thenn. Also Dan. deres, their, theirs; Swed. deras, their, theirs.—AS. þā, nom.; þāra, þāra, gen.; þām, þām, dat.; Grein, II. 568. [The AS. acc. was þā, like the nom.; cf. prov. E. 'I saw they horses', i. e. those horses.] These forms þā, þāra, þām, are cases of the plural of the def. art. 'from Teut. THA = Idg. T⁰, pronom. base of the 3rd person. See That. ¶ This explains they, them, their; they was orig. only the gen. pl., just like our, your. Theirs occurs as þeyrre, in the Ormulum, 2506, and may be compared with Dan. deres, Swed. deras, theirs.

THICK, dense, compact, closely set. (E.) ME. þikke, Chaucer, C. T. 1058 (A 1056). AS. þicce thick, Grein, II. 590.—OSax. thikki; Du. dik; Icel. þykk; Dan. tyk; Swed. tyk, tyck; G. dick, OHG. dicchi. β. The Teut. type is thikwuz* (Kluge). Further allied to Gael. and Irish tiugh, thick, fat, dense, W. teu, thick, plump; from Celtic type teus*. Further connexions doubtful. Der. thick-ly, thick-ness, AS. þicnes, Mark, iv. 5; thick-ish, thick-en, Macb. iii. 2. 50, properly intransitive, like Goth. verbs in -nan, formed by analogy with other verbs in -en, or borrowed from Icel. þykkna, to become thick (cf. AS. þiccian, to make thick, Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 220); thick-et, L. I. l. iv. 2. 60, AS. þiccet, of which the pl. þiccetū occurs in Pa. xxviii. (xxix.) 8 to translate L. condensa; thick-head-ed; thick-shin, sb., Mids. Nr. dr. iii. 2. 13.

THIEF, one who steals. (E.) Pl. thieves. ME. þief, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 55; pl. þeues, id. Mark, xv. 27. AS. þeof, pl. þeofas, Grein, II. 588.—Du. dief; Icel. þjóf; Dan. tyv; Swed. tyf; G. dieb, OHG. diub; Goth. thiubs. β. All from Teut. type thiefuz*; perhaps related to Lithuan. tufti, to squat or crouch down (i. e. to hide oneself); see Kluge. Der. thief, q. v.; thieve, AS. ge-þiofan, Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 133; thiev-ish, Romeo, iv. 1. 79; thiev-er-y, Timon, iv. 3. 438, a coined word (with F. suffix -erie).

THIGH, the thick upper part of the leg. (E.) ME. þih, Layamon, 26071; þeig, Trevisa, iv. 185; but the guttural is often dropped, and a common form is þi or þy, Prompt. Parv., or þe, Havelok, 1950. AS. þioh, or þeo, Grein, II. 588.—Du. di; Icel. þigh, rump; OHG. deoh, diok. β. The Teut. type is thekom*, n. The orig. sense is 'the fat, thick, plump part'; cf. Icel. þjó, the rump. Closely allied to Lithuan. taukas, fat of animals, tuktis, to become fat, tukintis, to fatten; Russ. tyt, fat of animals, tuchit(e), to fatten. From an Idg. base TEUK, extension of √TEU, to increase, be strong, swell; see Thews, Thumb, Tumid.

THILL, the shaft of a cart. (E.) 'Thill, the beam or draught-tree of a cart or waggon, upon which the yoke hangs; Thiller or Thill-horse, the horse that is put under the thill'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Hence fill-horse, for thill-horse, Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 100; fill for thill, Troil. iii. 2. 48. ME. þille. 'Thytle, of a carte, Temo; Thyll-horse, Veredus; Prompt. Parv. AS. þille, glossed by tabulam, Voc. 282, 2, where the sense seems to be 'board' or 'trencher'; þille meant a thin slip of wood, whether used for a thill or for a wooden platter. We also find: 'Tabulatorium, wāþ-þyling,' id. 147, 31; also: 'Aren, breda þiling, vel flor on to þersenne,' i. e. a thilling of boards, or floor to thrash on, id. 14.—Icel. þilla, a plank, planking, esp. in a ship, a bench for rowers, þilla; Swed. tilja, a plank, floor; MIIG. dille, OHG. dilla, thili, G. diele, a board, plank; Du. deel, a plank. Teut. types theljon-, L. thelom, n. Allied to OIrish talam, earth, L. tellus, earth, Lith. tile, a little plank in the bottom of a boat, Skt. tala-m, bottom, floor, surface. See Deal (2). Der. thill-horse, as above.

THIMBLE, a metal cover for the finger, used in sewing. (E.) Though now worn on the finger, similar protections were once worn on the thumb, and the name was given accordingly. ME. þimbl. 'Thymbyl, Theca' Prompt. Parv. Formed (with exsecrable b, as in thumb itself) from AS. þymel, a thumb-stall; A. S. Leechdoms, II. 150, l. 6. Teut. type thāniloz*. Formed with suffix -(ō)lo-, indicative of the agent, or in this case of the protector, from AS. þuma, a thumb; see Thumb. Thimble = thumb-er; formed by vowel-change.

THIN, extended, slender, lean, fine. (E.) ME. þinne, Chaucer, C. T. 9556 (E 1684); þunne, Ancrer Kniwe, p. 144, l. 13. AS. þynne, Grein, II. 613.—Du. dun; Icel. þunnur; Dan. tynd (for tynn*); Swed. tunn; G. dünn; OIrish duinn—W. tenen; Gael. and Irish tana; Russ. tonkii; L. tenus; Gk. rasad, slim; Skt. tana-, thin; Pers. tanak, slender (Horn, § 397). β. All from the sense 'out-stretched', as in Gk. rasad, from √TEN, to stretch; cf. Skt. tan, to stretch, Goth. uf-thanzjan, AS. þenzian, to stretch on, L. tendere. Der. thin-ly, thin-ness; thin-ish; thin, verb. From the same root are ten-nity, at-ten-uate, ex-ten-uate; ten-ide, q. v.; ten(1), q. v.

THINE, thy, poss. pron. belonging to 'thee'. (E.) ME. thin, with long i, and without final e; gen. thines, dat. thine, nom. and acc. pl. thine; by loss of n, we also have ME. thi—mod. E. thy. The n was commonly retained before a vowel; 'This was thin ooth, and min also certeyn'; Chaucer, C. T. 1141 (A 1139). 'To me, that am thy cosin and thy brother,' id. 1133 (A 1131). AS. ðin, poss. pron., declined like an adjective; derived from ðin, gen. case of þu, thou; see Thou.—Icel. þinn, þin, þitt, poss. pron.; from þin, gen. of þú, Dan. and Swed. din, poss. pron.; G. dein, from deiner, gen. of du; Goth. thina, from thaina, gen. of thu. Der. thy-self (= thine self), lit. 'self of thee'.

THING, an inanimate object. (E.) ME. þing, Chaucer, C. T. 13865 (B 2127). AS. þing, a thing; also, a cause, sake, office, reason, council; also written þing, þing, Grein, II. 592.—Du. ding; Icel. þing, a thing; also, an assembly, meeting, council; Dan. and Swed. ting, a thing; also, an assize; G. ding, ding, OHG. dinc. Teut. type thingom*, n. Prob. allied to Goth. thins, season, time (hence, time for meeting). And further, to AS. þing, pt. t. þiuk, to prosper, succeed, thrive. See Thoe (2). Der. any-thing, ME. any þing; no-thing, ME. no þing; also hus-tings, q. v.

THINK, to exercise the mind, judge, consider, suppose, opine, opine. (E.) ME. þenken, to think, suppose, also þenchen, as in Chaucer, C. T. 3253. Orig. distinct from the imper. verb. þinken, explained under Me-thinks; but confusion between the two was easy and common. Thus, in P. Plowman, A. vi. 90, we have I þenke, written I þinke in the parallel passage, B. v. 600. [The pt. t. of both verbs often appears as þought, pp. þought. Strictly, the pt. t. of think should have become thought, and of me-thinks should have become me-thught, but the spellings oght and oght are confused in modern E. under the form ought.] AS. þencan, þencan, to think, pt. t. þihte;

Grein, ii. 579. A weak verb, allied to þanc, sb., (1) a thought, (2) a thank; see Thank. + Icel. þekja, old pt. þátti, to perceive, know; Dan. tænke; Swed. tänka; G. denken, pt. dachte. + Goth. thagjan (= thanjan), pt. thákta. Tent. type thanjan*; from thank*, and grade of root thenk*, Idg. teng*; whence also (O.L.) tongere, to think (from the 2nd grade tong*). See Thank. Der. thought, sb., q. v. Also be-think, vb. Allied to thank.

THIRD, the ordinal of the number three. (E.) For third. ME. þridde, Chaucer, C. T. 12770 (C 836); spelt þirde, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 49. AS. þrida, third; Grein, ii. 499. — AS. þreo, þri, three; see Three. + Du. derde; Icel. þridi; Dan. trede; Swed. trede; G. dritte; Goth. thridja. + W. tryde, trydydd; Gael. and Irish treas; Russ. treiti; Lithuan. trėcias; L. tertius; Gk. τρίτος; Skt. tritiya. Der. third-ly; and see riding.

THIRL, to pierce. (E.) See Thril.

THIRST, dryness, eager desire for drink, eager desire. (E.) ME. þurst, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 366; various readings þurst, þrist, þrest. AS. þurst, Grein, ii. 611; also þyrst, first, id. 613; whence þyrstan, verb, id. 614. + Du. dorst, whence dorsten, verb; Icel. þorsti, whence þyrsta, vb.; Dan. tørst, whence tørste, vb.; Swed. törst, whence törsta, vb.; G. durst, whence dürsten; Goth. þaurstei, sb. β. The Goth. thaurstei (= thurst), as from the Goth. weak stem thaur-, as seen in *-thaur-*ans, pp. of (ga)thairsan (pt. t. thars), to be dry (with Goth. ai for Teut. e); the suffix -tei = f. The Teut. thers-*an, vb., is cognate with Gk. τρίπο-αβαι, to become dry, τρίπο-αβαι, to dry up, wipe up, L. torrere (for torsire*), to parch, terra (for tersa*), dry ground; cf. Skt. trśh, to thirst; trśha-, thirst. (✓TEKS). Allied to Terrace and Torrid. Der. thirst, vb., as above; thirst-y, AS. þurstig, Grein, ii. 611; thirst-ly, thirst-iness. And (from the same root) terrace, torr-id, test, toast, tur-en.

THIRTEEN, three and ten. (E.) ME. þrettene, P. Plowman, B. v. 214. AS. þriete, þrieteig, Grein, ii. 599. — AS. þreo, three; and ten, þyn, ten; with pl. suffix -en. See Three and Ten. + Du. derien; Icel. þrettun; Dan. tretten; Swed. tretton; G. dreizehn. All similar compounds. Der. thirteen-th, AS. þrieteotha (Grein), Icel. þrettandi; but the n, dropped in AS., has been restored.

THIRTY, three times ten. (E.) ME. þriti, Wyclif, Luke, iii. 23; þretty, þirty, Prompt. Parv., p. 492. AS. þritig, þritig, Grein, ii. 601; the change of long i to short i caused the doubling of the t. — AS. þri, variant of þreo, three; and -tig, suffix denoting 'ten'; see further under Three and Ten. + Du. derzig; Icel. þritíu; Dan. trede; Swed. treitio; G. dreissig. All similar compounds. Der. thirti-eth, AS. þritigoba.

THIS, demonstr. pron. denoting a thing near at hand. (E.) 1. SINGULAR FORM. ME. this, Chaucer, C. T. 1576 (A 1574); older form thes, Ancien Riwle, p. 170, l. 12. AS. ðes, masc.; ðeos, fem.; ðin, neuter; see Grein, ii. 581. + Du. deze; Icel. þessi, masc. and fem.; þetta, neuter; G. dieser; MHG. dieser; OHG. deser. β. This is most likely an emphatic form, due to suffixing an emphatic particle to the pronominal base THA. 2. PLURAL FORMS. The mod. E. pl. form is these; those being only used as the plural of that. This distinction is unoriginal; both these and those are varying forms of the plural of this, as will at once appear by observing the numerous examples supplied by Strattmann. β. The ME. word for 'those' was tho or thoo, due to AS. þu, nom. pl. of the def. article; in accordance with this idiom, we still have the common prov. E. 'they horses' = those horses; it will be easily seen that the restriction of the form those (with o) to its modern use was due to the influence of this older word tho. For examples of tho = those, see Wyclif, Matt. iii. 1, xiii. 17. γ. It remains to give examples of the ME. pl. forms of this. Layamon has þus, þes, þes, þes, þus, ll. 476, 1028, 2219, 3816; alle þus = all these, Alymbe of lawy, p. 10, l. 17; þos word = these words, Owl and Nightingale, 139; þese wordes = these words, P. Plowman, B. prol. 184; þese wordes = these words, id. C. l. 198. Cf. AS. ðis, ðes, these, pl. of ðes, this, Grein, ii. 581. Of these forms, ðis became those, while ðes assisted in forming these; we also find ME. this-e, i. e. this, with the pl. suffix -e.

THISTLE, a prickly plant. (E.) ME. þistil, spelt thystille in Prompt. Parv.; where we also find nouchstille = so-w-thistle. AS. þistel; 'Cardi' þu's þistel, Voc. 11. 13. + Du. distel; Icel. þistill; Dan. tidel; Swed. tistel; G. distel; OHG. distil, distula. β. The i was once long, as in some E. and G. dialects; cf. Somerset. daash-l, a thistle, Effries, distal. Tent. types þistilaz*, þistilā*. f. Perhaps allied to Goth. at-thinsan, to pull towards one; from its catching the clothes of the passer-by. Cf. Tonsil. Der. thist-ly.

THITHER, to that place. (E.) ME. thider (cf. ME. fader, moder for mod. E. father, mother); Chaucer, C. T. 1265 (A 1263). AS. ðider, ðyder, thither; Grein, ii. 590. Cf. Icel. þáðra, there; Goth. thakthra, thence. Skt. atira, there, thither. Formed from Teut. THA = Idg. TO, demonstr. pronom. base, for which see That;

with a suffix like L. -tro in ut-tro. Compare Hither and Whither. Der. thither-ward, AS. þiderward, Grein, ii. 591.

THOLE (1), THOWL, a pin or peg in the side of a boat to keep the oars in place. (E.) Commonly called a thole-pin, though the addition of pin is needless. ME. thol, tol. β. Tholle, carte-pyane, or tol-pyu, Cavilla; Prompt. Parv. β. Tholle, a cart-pyane; a grave. AS. þol; Scalmsus, thol, Corpus gloss., 180c (8th cent.). + Du. dol, a thowl; Sewel; Icel. þollr, a fir-tree, a young fir, also a tree in general, as ask-þollr, ash-tree, alm-þollr, elm-tree; also a wooden peg, the thole of a row-boat. Cf. Icel. þoll (gen. þollar), a young fir-tree; Dan. tol, a stopple, stopper, thole, pin; Swed. tall, a pine-tree; Swed. dial. tall, the same (Kietz); Swed. tall, a thole. And cf. Norweg. tall, toll, a fir-tree, esp. a young fir-tree; toll, a thole (Aasen). β. Teut. base thul-, weak grade allied to hal-, as in pal-lar, gen. of Icel. þoll (above); and perhaps to thel-*; see Thill. Der. thole-pin.

THOLE (2), to endure, suffer. (E.) In Levins. Obsolete in books, but a good word; it still occurs in prov. E. 'He that has a good crop may thole some thistles'; North-Country Proverb, in Brockett. ME. þollen, þolten, Chaucer, C. T. 7128 (D 1546). AS. þolian, to suffer, endure, tolerate; Grein, ii. 594. + Icel. þola, the same; Dan. taale; Swed. tdla; MHG. gölen, gölen, thulan. β. All from a Teut. base hul-, weak grade of Idg. TEL-, to bear; allied to Skt. tol, to lift, Gk. τράνω, to suffer; L. tolle, tolerare; see further under Tolerate.

THONG, a strip or strap of leather. (E.) Spelt thuang in Levins. For thung; the w is now lost. ME. þung, Wyclif, John, i. 27; we also find þung, þong, Kob. of Glouc. p. 116, l. 2497. AS. þuang; in sevi-þuang = shoe-thong, John, i. 27. The change from u to o before n is common, as song < AS. sang; strong < AS. strang. + Icel. þungur, a thong, latchet; esp. of a shoe. From þuang*, whence grade of Teut. þueng-*, to constrain. The verb from which it is derived will be found under Twinge, q. v.

THORAX, the chest of the body. (L. = Gk.) A medical term. In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount gives the adj. thoracique = L. thorax (gen. thoracis), the breast, chest, a breast-plate. — Gk. θώραξ (gen. θώρακος), a breast-plate; also, the part of the body covered by the breast-plate. β. The orig. sense is 'protector' or 'defender'; the Gk. θώραξ answers to Skt. dhāra-, a trunk or box for keeping clothes, lit. a protector or preserver; ✓DHKE, to bear, hold; see Firm. Der. thoraci-, from the decl. stem thoraci-.

THORN, a spine, sharp woody spine on the stem of a plant, a spiny plant. (E.) ME. þorn, Wyclif, Matt. xvii. 29. AS. þo-n, Matt. xxvii. 29. + Du. doorn; Icel. þorn; Dan. tjørn; Swed. törne; G. dorn; Goth. thaurnus. And cf. Russ. trn, the black-thorn, trn, thorns; Polish tarn, a thorn. Also Skt. trna-, a grass-blade. Tent. type þurnuz*, m. from the base TIHRN = Idg. ✓TER, to hurt, pierce, so that the sense is 'piercer'. See further under Trito. Der. thorny, cf. AS. þornik, thorny, Voc. 139.18; thorn-lex. Also thorn-back, the name of a fish which has spines on its back, ME. þornebacke, Havelok, 759.

THOROUGH, going through and through, complete, entire. (E.) It is merely a later form of the prep. through, which was spelt þow as early as in Havelok, 631, and þuruk in the Ancien Riwle, p. 92, l. 17. Shak. has through as a prep., Merry Wives, iv. 5. 32. Midl. Nt. dr. ii. l. 3 (where the folios and quarto have through); also as an adv., 'It pierced me through', Pericles, iv. 3. 35; and even as an adj., L. L. l. ii. 235. The use of it as an adj. probably arose from the use of throughly or thoroughly as an adv. in place of the adverbial use of through or thorough. Cf. 'the feast was thoroughly ended'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 18. We find through as a sb. in the sense of 'passage', J. Bradford's Works, i. 303 (Parker Society). The old sense of through is still preserved in through-fare, i. e. through fare. See Through. Der. through-ly, through-ness; through-bred, through-going, through-paced. Also through-bass, which prob. means through-bass, the bass being marked throughout by figures placed below the notes; and through-fare, i. e. through-fare, Cymb. i. 2. 11, Milton, P. L. x. 393.

THORP, THORPE, a village. (E.) Best spelt thorp. In Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xii. st. 32. ME. þorp, Chaucer, C. T. 8075 (E 109). AS. þorp, as a place-name, A. S. Chron. an. 962. It means a village. + Du. dorp, a village; Icel. þorp; Dan. torp, a hamlet; Swed. torp, a little farm, cottage; G. dorf; Goth. þaurp, a field, Nehem. v. 16. β. The Teut. type is þurfo-*. Allied to Lithuan. traba, a building, house. Also Irish trabha, 'a farmed village' [meaning, I suppose, a village round a farm], a tribe, family, clan; Gael. trabhair, a pl. (used collectively), houses; W. traf, a home-stead, hamlet, town; Idg. type trebo-*. Brugmann, i. § 553.

THOSE, now used as the pl. of that, but etymologically one of the forms of the pl. of this. (E.) See This.

THOU, the second pers. pronoun. (F.) MF. thou. AS. þū. + Icel. þú; Goth. þu; Dan., Swed., and G. du; (lost in Dutch); Irish and Gael. tu; W. ti; Russ. tui; L. tu; Gk. σύ, σύ; Pers. tū; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 152; Skt. tvam (nom. case). Brugmann, ii. § 440. Der. thine, q. v., often shortened to thy.

THOUGH, on that condition, even if, notwithstanding. (Scand.) It would be better to spell it thogh, in closer accordance with the pronunciation; but it seems to have become a fashion in E. always to write ough for ogh, and not to suffer ogh to appear. ME. thogh, Chaucer, C. T. 727 (A 729); the Ellesmere MS. has thogh, the Camb. MS. has thow, and the Petworth MS. has oo; the rest, thogh, thoughe. [Older spellings, given by Stratmann, are peh, paih, peah, peh, peh, peh, peuh, puh, pei, peiz, peizh, where some of the forms, as peh, peh, peh, peiz, peizh are from AS. ðeah, ðeah, ðeah, ðeah, ðeah.] The later ME. thogh answers to Icel. þó + 1st du. thogh, yet, but; Dan. dog; Swed. dog; G. doch, OHG. doch; Goth. thauh. β. All from the Teut. type thaw-h*, in which -h is an enclitic, answering to L. que, id, quæ. Thaw-* is probably related to the Skt. ut, 'but'. In the D. and G. doch, the short o is due to loss of emphasis. Der. al-thogh, q. v.

THOUGHT the act or result of thinking, an idea, opinion, notion. (F.) Better spelt thoght; the introduction of n is due to the prevalence of forms with ough. M.E. þoght, þoȝt; the pl. þoghtis is in Wyclif, I Cor. iii. 20. A.S. þōht, also gēþōht, as in Luke, ii. 35. Lit. 'a thing thought of, or thought upon'; cf. A.S. gēþōht or þōht, þōtt, thought; to think; Grein, ii. 579. See THINK & FEEL. þōtt, thought; to think; to þrekja, to know, pl. t. þätti, the pp. not being used; G. ge-dacht, cf. gedacht, pp. denken, to think; Goth. thāhtuns, thought, allied to thuekanjan, to seem, and thagjan, to think; where thugk- (= think-) is the weak grade of thagk- (= think-). Der. thought, full, M.E. þohtful, Ormulum, 3423; thought-ful-ly, thought-ful-ness; thought-less, less-ly, less-ness.

THOUSAND, tasand, tausend. (E.) Moe. þousand, Chaucer, C. T. 1956 (A 1954). AS. þāsend, Grein, ii. 611; þu. duizend; Icel. þúsund; also þúsund, þúsundrót; Dan. tusind; Swed. tusen (for-tusend); G. tausend; Goth. thūsundi. We also find Lithuan. tušantis, a thousand; Russ. tušacha, a thousand. β. The word is not yet explained; in Icel. þúsund, the syllable hund = AS. hund, a hundred, and is due to popular etymology; which may, however, prove to be correct. See the long discussion of Goth. thūsundi in Schade, OIG. Dictionary. It is suggested that the sense was 'great hundred'; the prefix þu- being allied to Skt. tasav, strong; Streitberg, § 129 (5). Cf. also OPruss. tušimtons, a thousand. DER. thousand-th, a late word, formed by analogy with four-th, &c.; thousand-fold, Moe. þusendfold, St. Katherine, 2323.

THOWAL, the same as Thole (1), q.v.
THERRAL, a slave. (Scand.) ME. þral, Chaucer, C. T. 12123 (C 189). (ONorthumb. þræl, Mark, x. 44; not an AS. word, but borrowed from Norse. -Icel. þrall, a thrall, serf; þrall; Dan. træl; Swed. träl. Teut. type þhrāilōz*, m. (base þhrāi-*); and allied to OIIG. drigil, drigil, a slave, a thrall; lit. 'a runner', i.e. one who runs on messages. Formed from the Teut. base THREGE, to run, whence also Goth. þrargian, AS. þrægan, to TIRE. Cf. AS. þrag, þrah, a running, course. Further connexions uncertain; perhaps allied to L. trahere, to draw, or to Celto-L. vertraga, a greyhound; see Fœuterer. The Gk. þrōs-eir, to run, is of uncertain origin. Der. þrāl-drum, ME. þraldrum, Layamon, 29156; from Icel. þrældrum, thrall-drum; the Icel. suffix -dǫmr being the same as the AS. suffix -dūm.

THRASH, THRĚSH, to beat out grain from the straw. (E.) The spelling with ě is the older. ME. preschen, preschen, Chaucer, C. T. 538 (A 536). For perschen, by metathesis of r. AS. þerscan, þerscan. Grein, ii. 881. A strong verb, pt. t. þærsc, pp. þorscan. The ME. pp. preschen occurs in the Örmulum, l. 1530; and idorschen in the Ancien Krieger, p. 186, l. 18+MDu. trāschen (Hexham); Du. dorschen; Iccl. pruška; Dan. terse; Swed. träschen; G. dräschen; Goth. thriskan, pt. t. thrisk, pp. thriskuns. β. All from Teut. type threskan-, pt. t. thrisk, pp. thriskunaz*; to beat noisily. Allied to Lithuan. tarščėti, to rattle, clap; trąščėti, to rattle, make a cracking noise; Russ. treskati, to burst, crack, crackle, trěsk, a crash. From an Idg. base tresk-*, to crack, burst, crackle; then to strike, thrash. Pick cites OSlavonic troška, Lat. 'fulmen'; which suggests the rattling of thunder; whence, perhaps, the noise of the fall. DER. thresh-er or thresh-er, ME. þreschare, Prompt. Parv.; thresh-ing or thresh-ing; threshing-floor or threshing-floor, Rith, iii. 2. Also thresh-old, q.v.

THRASONICAL, vain-glorious. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 14; As You Like It, v. 2. 34. A coined word, as if with suffix -al (L. -ālis) from a L. adj. Thrasōnīcus*; but the adj. really in use was Thrasōniānus, whence MF. Thrasōnien, ‘boasting, Thraso-like;’ Cot. Formed, with suffix -cus (or -ānus), from Thrasōni-.

decl. stem of Thraso, the name of a bragging soldier in Terence's Eunuchus. Evidently coined from Gk. thras-ús, bold, spirited. — ✓DHERS, to be bold; cf. Skt. dharsha-, arrogance, dhṛsh, to be bold; see Dare (1).

THRAVE, a number of sheaves of wheat. (Scand.) See Nares. Generally 12 or 24 sheaves. The pl. thraves = clusters or handfuls of rushes, is in Chapman, Geit. Uslur, i. 1 (Bassoli). ME. prave; preve, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 55. The late AS. pl. preus occurs in Birch, Cart. Saxon. iii. 367. = Icel. prefi, a thrave, number of sheaves; Dan. trave, a score of sheaves; Swed. trafve, a pile of wood. Cf. Swed. dial. trave, a thrave; trafve, 24 or 30 sheaves in a shock (F. Möller); NFries. trav.

THREAD, a thin twisted line or cord, filament. (E.) ME. þread, þrid, Chaucer, C. T. 14393 (P 3665). The e was once long on the Elsecmere and Hengwrt MSS. have the spelling þrad. AS. þræd, a thread; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxix. § 1 (b. iii. pr. 5). Lit. "that which is twisted." AS. þrīwum, to twist, also to throw; see THROW. +Du. draad, thread; cf. draaijen, to twist, turn; Icel. þrír; Dan. tråd; Swed. tråd; G. draht, draht, wire, thread; O.H.G. draht, wire. Tent. type þræd-daz; cf. Gk. πρή-α, a boring through, a hole. Der. thread, verb, Rich. II, v. 5, 17; thread-y, i.e. thread-like. Also thread-bare, so bare that the component threads of the garment can be traced, ME. þredbare (þredbare in the Hengwrt MS.), Chaucer, C. T. 262 (A 260). Doublet, thrid.

THREAT, a menace. (E.) ME. pret; the dat. prete occurs in The Owl and Nightingale, l. 58; hence the verb þreatan, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 754; also the verb þreathen, Wyclif, Mark, i. 25. [The latter is mod. E. threaten.] AS. þreāt, i. a crowd, crush, or throng of people, which is the usual meaning, Grein, i. 598; also (2) a great pressure, calamity, trouble, and hence, a threat, rebuke, Grein, ii. 598, l. 1. The orig. sense was a push as of a crowd, hence pressure put upon any one. Cf. AS. þreāt, pt. t. of the strong verb þreotan, appearing only in the impersonal comp. þreotan, to afflict, vex, lit. to press extremely, urge. + Icel. þrjótta, pt. t. þraut, pp. þrotinn, to fail, lack, come short; used impersonally. (The orig. sense was perhaps to urge, trouble, whence the BS. þraut, a hard task, struggle); Goth. þhrītan, only in the comp. usþhrītan, to use despotically, trouble, vex greatly; OHG. drīzan, in the comp. andriozan, MHG. drīdzien, impers. verb, to tire, vex; also appearing in G. verdriessen (pt. i. verdrüss), to vex, trouble. Þ. Hence AS. þreāt, a crowd, a Teut. þrō, þrōm, m., in Teut. þhrōm, and grōw, þhrōtan*, to crowd. Allred, in L. trādere, to push, shove, urged, urge, press upon (cf. trādere, a pole to push with); also Teut. trūditi(s), to make a man work, to trouble, disturb, vex. (✓TREUD, to push, urge). Der. threat, verb, K. John, iii. l. 347. ME. þreten (as above), AS. þreātium (weak verb), Grein, ii. 598 also threat-en, ME. þretenen (as above), AS. þreātian; threat-en ing-ly. From the same base, abv-truse, de-trude, ex-trude in-trude, ob-trude, pro-trude. Cf. thrust.

THREE, tri, two and one. (E.) ME. þre, Wyclif, Matt. xviii. 20 AS. þreo, Matt. xviii. 20; other forms þre, þri, þr̥, Grein, li. 599a. +Du. drie; Icel. þrír (fem. þrjár, neut. þrjú); Dan. tre; Swed. tre; Goth. threis; G. drei, +Irish, gáel, and W. tri; Russ. tri; L. tres; neut. tria; Gk. treis, neut. τρία; Lithuan. trys (stem tri); Skt. masc. nom. pl. trayas. 1dg. masc. nom. pl. treys*. Brugmann li. § 167. Dre, three-fold, AS. þrifeald, þrifeald, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius c. xxxiii. § (b) iii. met. q.; three-score, Much Ado, i. 1. 201; also thri-ty, q. v.; and see thir-d, thir-teen, thir-ly. From the same source are tri-ard, tri-angle, tri-munity, tri-pos, &c. See TRI. Also thrice, ter-eel, ter-i-ian, ter-i-i-ar-y.

THRENODY, a lament, song of lamentation. (Gk.) Shak. even ventures upon threnē, Phœnix, l. 49. Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674 has both threnē and threnody. Englished from Gk. θρήνη, lamenting.—Gk. θρήν-ος, a wailing, lamenting, sound of wailing funeral dirge (cf. θρή-μαι, I cry aloud); and πῶς, an ode, from deisō, to sing. See Drone (1) and Ode.

THRESH, the same as Thrash, q.v.
THRESHOLD, a piece of wood or stone under the door or at the entrance of a house. (E.) The word is to be divided thresh-ald, where -ald was (by popular etymology) supposed to stand for wald (wood). (Shak. has ald = wold, K. Lear, iii. 4. 125.) ME. preshold, preshold, Chaucer, C. T. 3. 382; preskeshold, P. Plowman, B. v. 357; priswald, Voc. 667. 14. AS. persceld, Deut. vi. 9 (where the w does not appear; later form perscwald, as in 'Limen, perscwald,' Voc. 280. 15). Supposed to mean 'the piece of wood which is beaten' by the feet of those who enter the house, the thresh-wood. — AS. persc-an, to thresh, thrash; and wald, wæld, a wood, hence a piece of wood. β. But this was a popular etymology; Kling Affers has persceld simply; tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 77. l. 22. This form represents Teut. presko-lo-* (Slevers); cf. OHG. drisc-lo-si, a threshold. Here brisko* is from Teut. breshan*, to thrash; but -ðlo- represents the Idg. suffix -tro-. See my Principles of Eng. Etymology, i. § 228 (h). The Icel. þreskjöldr, a threshold, is spelt in various ways: cf. Swed. tröskel.

THRICE, three times. (E.) The final -ce is fur; it is a mere device for showing that the final sound is voiceless, i.e. sounded as s and not as z. So also the pl. of mouse is written mice; &c. Thrice stands for thris, contracted form of ME. þrice or þryce, a word which was formerly dissyllabic: 'And þryce with his speris cler-inges' Chaucer, C. T. 2956 (A. 2954). B. Again, þrice was In OE. þrice was dissyllabic, the suffix -ce of gen. þrice being an older form þrice, also dissyllabic; the words þrice and þryce originating in a similar manner. The form þrice is in Layamon, 17432, earlier text; and þrice in the same, 26066, later text.—A.S. þrīwum, thrice, Exod. xxiii. 14; Grein, ii. 601.—A.S. þri, thrice. See Three.

THRID, a thread. (E.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 278. The same as Thread, q. v. Der. thrid, verb, Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 495.

THRIFT, frugality. (Scand.) ME. þrift, Chaucer, C. T. 16893. = Icel. þrift, thrift, where the t is added to the stem; we also find þrif, thriving condition, prosperity. = Icel. þrif-, weak grade, as seen in þrif-inn, pp. of þrifa, only used in the reflex. þrifask, to thrive; see Thrive. Cf. Dan. triv-else, prosperity, with a different suffix. The suffix -t is from the Idg. suffix -t-. Cf. thrift.

THIRILL, THIRIL, to pierce. (F.) Spenser uses thril in the metaphorical sense, to pierce with an arrow; F. Q. iii. 5. 20, iv. 7. 31; hence the metaphorical use, as in F. Q. iv. 1. 49. Thril is an older spelling of the same word. * Thrylun, thrylun, or peercyn, Penetro, terebro, perfuro; Prompt. Parv. ME. Jirlen, Chauver, C. T. 7212 (A 2710); Jrullen, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 330; Jurulen, Ancruen Kivle, p. 392, l. 2. AS. þyrilan, to pierce through, þeort þyrilan, Exod. xxi. 6, Levit. xxv. 10. Again, þyrilan is a shorter form for þyrilan; we find the sb. þyrel-un, a piercing, in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxi, ed. Sweet, p. 153, last line, and the verb durh-þyrelan, to pierce through (through-thril), two lines further on. The verb þyrelan is a causal verb, from the b. þyrel, a hole (caused by boring), Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxix. 11 (b. iii. pr. 11). þ. Lastly, þyrel is also found as an adj., with the sense of bored or pierced. * Gif monnes bið bið þyrel 'various reading þyrl' = if a man's thigh be pierced; Laws of Ælfred, 62, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 96. This is equivalent to the cognate MHC. durehel, pierced, an adj. derived from dureh, prep., to pierce; similarly, þyrel and þyrl for þyrelun (from þurh-un), (with the usual vowel change from u to y) from AS. þyrlun, through. þ. We thus see that AS. þyrl meant 'going through', and hence, 'hole'; whence the verb was formed. See Through. þ. Irish thair, through. ¶ The Du. drillen is from dril (MHn. drille), a hole; and drille must have been a derivative from the old form of Du. door, through; cf. OSaxon thurh, through. Der. thrill, sb., a late word; thril-ing, pres. part. as adj. Also nos-tril, q.v. Doublet, drill (from Dutch).

THRIVE, to prosper, flourish, be successful. (Scand. Mjö.
thrivann (with +v), Chaucer, C. T. 3677 (A 3675); Iavellou, 285.
Ornnulum, 10868. A strong verb; pp. thriven, thruf. Ornnulum, 2182, grasp, Rob. of Glouc. p. 11, l. 40; pp. thriven, thruf, act. thrifa, act. thrifan, to grasp, grip, seize; hence thrifun suffixed Icel. thrifa, lit. to grasp for oneself, to thrive; cf. thrifun suffixed Icel. Diet. that thrifun is not connected with thrifa, because the transition from 'seizing oneself' to 'thriving' is easy, and, as both are strong verbs, conjugated alike, it is hardly possible to separate them. Cf. Norw.
triva, to seize, trivast, to thrive; and Widgegen has Swed. trifva, iron, thrifty, active, diligent, coinciding with the Icel. pp. thrifinn, iron, thrifty; and even Icel. thrifinn also means 'thrifty'. The pt. t. is thrifir, and the pp. thriffin hence the sb. thrif, prosperity and E. thrif; cf. Dan. trive, reflex. verb, to thrive; whence trivende, prosperity; Swed. trifvas, reflex. verb, to thrive; cf. triefnad, prosperity.
Der. thriving-ly; thrif-t, q.v.; thrify, thrife; Chaucer, C. T.
22095 (H 1165); thrift-i-ly, thrift-i-ness; thrift-less, thrift-less-ly, thrift-lessness.

THROAT. the forepart of the neck with the gullet and windpipe, the gullet. (E.) ME. prote, Ancræn Kiriwle, p. 216, l. 1; AS. prote, throat, Alfrid, tr. of Boethius, c. xxij, § 1 (bk. iij. p. 4); also prota, prota; 'Guttur, prota,' Voc. 157. 41; 'Guttur, prota, id. 306. 13; OHG. druza, MII.G. druzza, the throat; whence G. drossel, throat, throttle. β. Referred in Ettmüller to AS. protan (pp. proten), to press; a verb treated of s.v. Threat. But it is more likely that an initial s has been lost, and that AS. prote is allied to Du. stroet, the throat, MId. stroot, stroet, 'the throat or the gullet,' Hexham, stroots, 'the wesen [weasand] or the wind-pipe,' id. So also OFries. strotdolla=AS. protdolla, the gullet or windpipe; and cf. Ital. strozza, the gullet, a word of Teut. origin. We must therefore refer it to a Teut. base strut-*, and a connexion with E. strut is possible. The reference may be to the 'prominence' or swelling in the throat below the chin. Cf. Icel. þrotti, a swelling; þrútna, to swell. See Thropple. Der. thrott-le, the wind-pipe, dimin. of throat; thrott-le, verb, to press on the windpipe, ME. þrotlen, Destruction of Troy, 12752. Also thropple, q.v.

THROB, to beat forcibly, as the heart. (E.) ME. probben, rare. With probbant herte = with throbbing heart; P. Plowman, A. xii. 48. The word must be either E. or Scand., as it begins with þ; but it appears neither in AS. nor in the Scand. languages. We must call it E. þ. Allied to Russ. trepēt(e), palpitation, throbbing, trembling, fear; trepētal(e), to throbb, palpitate with joy; and prob. to trepāt(e), to beat hump, also to knock softly. Also to L. trepidus; see Trepidation. Dor. throbb, sb. Spenser. Shen. Kal. May, 208.

THROE, pang, pang, agony. (Scand.) MK. prove. Thronoe, Erumpina; Prompt. Parv. And see proves, pl., pangs. O. E. Thromies, ed. Morris, ii. 181, l. 2.—Icel. þróa, a throe, pang, longing; Norw. traa, longing, tran, to long for; MSwed. trå, longing, trå, to long for, to pine away (Swed. tråna). Cf. O.H.G. drôa, burden, suffering, drœn, drœn, to suffer; A.S. þrœwian, to suffer. Base thruw-*, from līg, root thre-*; cf. l. trux, fierce. See Truculent. Cf. also Icel. þrœg and þrœngun, brevity to long for.

TRONE, a royal seat, chair of state. (F.-I.-Gk.) Now conformed to the Gk. spelling. ME. trone, yclif, Matt. v. 34.—OF. trone (13th cent.), spelt throne in Cot.; mod. F. trône.—I. thrōnum, acc. of thrōnos, Matt. v. 34.—Gk. θρόνος, a seat, chair; lit. a support.—✓DIECK, to hold, support; whence also Gk. θράνος, a bench. Ion. θρόνος, a stool.

THRONG, thron, a crowd; a crowd of people. (E.) ME. þrong, Allit. Poems, ed. Ch. H. Baskin, 1335; þrong, "Pricks of Conscience, 476d. AS. geþrong, a throng, Gloss., 473; and where the common prefix ge- makes no difference. — AS. þrang, a throng; of the strong vb. þringan, to crowd, to press (pp. þrungun). Mark. v. 24; + Du. drang, a crowd, from dringen, to crowd; Iccl. þring, a throng; G. drang, a throng, from drang, and crowd of dringen (pp. drungen), to crowd, press. Cf. Dan. trang, Swed. trång, adj., pressed close, tight, prov. E. throng, adj., busy; Goth. threihan (pp. threihuns) to throng, press around (suf. thrinhan*). β. All from the Teut. strong verb threngan*, to throng, from Idg. root trenk*; whence Lithuan. trėmėti, to jolt, to push, trankamas, a tumult; and even L. truncus, maimed, mutilated. Brugmann, l. § 144 (†). Dor. throng, verb, ME. þrongen, Morté THROPPLE, THRAPPLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt thropple by Johnson, who gives it as a Lowland Sc. word; better throple, see Halliwell and Jamieson. Halliwell gives also throple, o throatle; a derived scuse. Throple is usually said to be a corruption of AS. protibolla, the wind-pipe, also the gullet; which requires rather violent treatment to reduce it to the required form. The AS. protibolla survived for a long time; Palgrave gives: Threðgole or throtæbole, nen de gorge, gosier. The usual sense of AS. bolla is 'bowl'; see Throat and Bowl (2). Bole.

THROSTLE, the song-thrush. (E.) ME. brustel, Chaucer, C. T. 12703 (B 1903). 'Mavis' is glossed by a 'throstel-koek' in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Voc. i. 164, l. 1. AS. prostle; Merula, prostle, Voc. 286, 20; spelt proste (by loss of t), id. 132, 25. — MITIG. trostel. Teut. type: thrustlā*, fem.; *ldog. type tørzd-lā. Allied to L. turdus, a thrush; also to brist, bristar (gen. brastor), Swed. and Norw. traste, a thrush (from brast*, and grade of a Teut. root brast-*); cf. OPruss. trezde, a thrush. Also, with initial s, Lith. trozdins, m., strazda, f., a thrush. See further under Thrush (1). Throstle* has a variant throshel, ME. thrusshil, Prompt. Parv. Brugmann, i. § 518 (2), 882.

THRATTLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) See Throat.
THROUGH, from beginning to end, from one side to the other, from end to end. (E.) For the form through, see Thorough.
*ME. þurn, þursh, Ancræn Riwle, p. 93, li. 13, 17. Other forms are þurn, þurn, þursh, þursh, þurn, þurn þorn; &c.; see Strattmann. Also þurk, Kelliquin Aubisque, 102, by metathesis of r; and hence mod. E. through. AS. þurn, pret. adv., through, Grein, i. 607, to; ONorthumb. þer, Matt. xxvii. 18 (Lindisfarne MS.). +Duor. G. durch, OHG. durh, duruk. Teut. type *þurk. Allied to Goth. thairh (for *þerk), through. B. the Goth. thairk, a hole, prob. connected with thairh; and the AS. þyrel, a hole, is a derivative from þurk, through; as shown under Thrill. The fundamental notion is that of boring or piercing; and we may refer through to the ✓TER, to bore, as in L. terere, to bore, Gk. teripau (for *terp-yeu). See Trite. Cf. through with Irish trá, beyond, over, through, tri, through, tair, beyond; *L. tr-*ans, across; sk. tras, through, over. Brugmann, i. § 527. Der. throughly, thoroughly (see Thorough); through-out, ME. þurrukut, Ancræn Riwle, p. 212, l. 23, with which cf. G. durchaus, a similar compound, and see Throw.*

THROW, to cast, to hurl. (E.) One sense of the word was to twist or wind silk or thread; hence throwster, a silk-winder; 'Throw-star, devideesse de soye;' Palsgrave. The orig. sense was to turn, twist, whirl; hence a turner's lathe is still called a throw (Halliwell). ME. þrowen, pt. t. þrew, P. Plozman, B. xx. 163; pp. þrowen, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24 (earlier version), now contracted to throwen. AS. þrāwan, to twist, whirl, hurl; pt. t. þrēow, pp. þrāwen; a verb which, strangely enough, is rare. 'Contorqueo, ic samod þrāwe,' i. e. I twist together, occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 155, l. 16. The pt. t. þrēow = turned itself, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 510, l. 8. Leo quotes, from various glossaries: 'ge-þrāwan, torquere; ā-þrāwan, crispare; ed-þrāwan, to twist double; þrāwing-spīn, a throwing (or winding) spindle.' The orig. sense is still preserved in the derived word throw-stick = that which is twisted. β. Allied to G. drehen, OIlg. driyan, to turn, whirl, Du. draaijen, to turn, twist, whirl; all from Teut. base þrā-* = Idg. base tēr-*, as in Gk. τρή-ρός, bored through, τρή-μα, a hole, τρή-σω, fut. of τρή-σαι, to bore through. 'The grade ter* occurs in L. ter-ere, Gk. τέπειν (for tēp-yein*), to bore. (✓TER). DER. throw, sb., throw-er; and see throw-d.

THROW (1), the tufted end of a weaver's thread; coarse yarn. (E.) See Thrum in Nares. In Shak. Mid. N. Dr. v. 291. ME. þrum. 'Thrumm, of a clothe, Filamen; Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc liliu, a throni;' Voc. 728. 17. AS. þrum, found in tunge-þrum, a ligament of the tongue; A. S. Leechdoms, l. p. lxxiv. l. 9; p. lxx. l. 9. Allied to Icel. þrumar (gen. þrumar), the edge, verge, brim of a thing (hence the rough edge of a web); Norweg. tröm, trām, trum, edge, brim (Aasen); Swed. id. trömm, trum, tröm, a stump, the end of a log (Rietz); MDu. drom, or drom-garen (thrum-yarn), 'thred on the shuttle of a weaver;' Hexham; Du. dreum; G. trumm, end, drum, stump, of a tree. β. Allied to Gk. τέρ-μα, end, L. ter-minus, end, limit; see Term. DER. thrumm-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 80.

THRUM (2), to strum, play noisy music. (Scand.) 'This single thrumming of a fiddle;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, l. 1 (Jaques). = Icel. þruma, to rattle, to thunder; cf. þrumr, an alarm, a noise; Dan. tromme, a drum; Swed. tramma, to beat, to drum. See Trumpet and Drum.

THRUSH (1), a small singing-bird. (E.) ME. þrusche. 'Boþe þe þrusche and þe þruscele' = both the thrush and thrushel, Will. of Palerme, 80. AS. þrysc, spelt þrysc in Voc. 286. 23; þrysc, id. 260. 30. + OIlg. drōsa, a thrush; whence G. drosel. β. The AS. word answers to the Teut. type þruskjōn-*, f. Allied to Throstle, q. v.

THRUSH (2), a disease marked by small ulcerations in the mouth; (Scand.) 'Thrush, a disease in the mouth, esp. of young children; Phillips, ed. 1706. The form shows that the word is English or Norse, as it begins with th. From ONorse þruskr*, thrush; whence MDan. torsk, Dan. trüske, the thrush on the tongue; Swed. torsk, Swed. id. tröske (Rietz); Norw. trask, trask, tröske, thrush (Ross). Prob. the same as Norw. trask, variant of frask, frusk, a frog; frusk, the thrush. In the same way, Gk. βράπαξ and L. rāna meant (1) a frog, (2) a disease of the tongue (Falk).

THRUST, to push forcibly. (Scand.) ME. þrusten, but more commonly þristen, as in Havelock, 2019, and sometimes þresten, as in Chaucer, C. T. 2614 (A 2612). The form thrust is properly of Scand. origin. = Icel. þrýsta, to thrust, compress, press, force, compel; Norw. þrýsta, to thrust. The Teut. base is þrúst-, perhaps for þrúst-; prob. allied to Icel. þrast, a struggle, and to L. trūd-ere, to thrust, to push. See Threat. DER. thrust, sb., Oth. v. 1. 24.

THUD, a dull sound resulting from a blow. (E.) In Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 8. Also used by G. Douglas and others (Jamieson); and see Notes and Queries, 4 S. i. 34, 115, 163, 231, 275. Allied to AS. þyðdan, to strike, push.

TEUG, an assassin. (Hindustani.) Modern. = Hind. thug, thug (with cerebral th), a cheat, knave, impostor, a robber who strangles travellers; Marathi thak, thug, the same; II. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms; p. 517. And see Yule.

THUMB, the short, thick finger of the hand. (E.) ME. pombe, Chaucer, C. T. 565 (A 563); formed with excrement b (after m) from the earlier pūme, Ancrer Riwle, p. 18, l. 14. AS. þūma, the thumb; 'Pollex, þūma,' Voc. 40. 22. + Du. duim; Swed. tumme; OHG. þūmo, G. daumen. Cf. Icel. þumall, the thumb of a glove; Dan. tommel-finger, thumb. β. Teut. type thū-mon-*, m., thumb, lit. 'the thick finger;' Fick, iii. 135. From Teut. base THEU = TEU*, to swell, grow large; see Tumid. Cf. Tuber. DER. thumb-kin, a dimin. of thumb, but used as equivalent to thumb-screw, an instrument of torture for compressing the thumb (Welster); thumb-ring; Hen. IV. ii. 4. 365; also thumb-le, q. v.

THUMMIN, perfection. (Heb.) We have urim and thummin, Exod. xxviii. 30, Ezra, ii. 63, &c. The literal sense of these difficult words is, probably, 'fires (or lights) and perfections,' but the Heb.

pl. need not be exactly kept to in English; 'light and perfection' would probably be the best E. equivalent; Smith, Dict. of the Bible. = Heb. thummim, pl. of thm, perfection, truth (with initial tau). = Heb. root thm, to be perfect. See Urim.

THUMP, to beat heavily. (E.) In Rich. III, v. 3. 334; and in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 10. 'Thomp! thomp!' Bale, Kynges Johan, p. 53 (C. S.). An imitative word; from the sound of a blow. Cf. EFries. dump, a thump; also Icel. dumpa, to thump, Swed. dial. dampa, to thump, dumpa, to make a noise. Of imitative origin. DER. thump, sb., thumper.

THUNDER, the loud noise accompanying lightning. (E.) For thuner; the d after n is excrement. ME. þoner, Iwain and Gawain, l. 370, in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 16; more commonly þunder or þunder, Chaucer, C. T. 494, 6314 (A 492, D 732). AS. þunor, thunder, Grein, ii. 606. Allied to AS. þunian, to rattle, thunder; Grein, ii. 606. Cf. AS. ge-þun, a loud noise, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. donder; Icel. þorr (for þunr), Thor, the god of thunder; with which cf. Dan. torden, Swed. torden, thunder; G. donner, OHG. thunar, thunder. β. All from Teut. base thun-, to thunder (Fick, iii. 130) = Idg. thun-. We have further allied words in L. tonāre, to thunder, tonitru, thunder, Skt. tan, to sound; from Idg. TEN-, to sound, by-form of STEN-, to thunder, make a noise, appearing in Skt. stan, to sound, sigh, thunder, stanita-, thunder, stanana-, sound, groaning, Gk. στέν-ειν, to groan, Lithuan. stenėti, to groan, Russ. stenat(e), stonat(e), to groan, moan; see Stun and Stentor. DER. thunder, verb, AS. þunrian, Grein; thunder-bolt, Temp. ii. 2. 38 (see Bolt); thunder-stone, J. Cæc. i. 3. 49; thunder-stroke, Temp. ii. 1. 204; thunder-struck, Milton, P. L. vi. 858; thunder-day, q. v. P. L. x. 702; thunder-er, id. P. L. vi. 491. Also Thurs-day, q. v. See Brugmann, l. § 818(2).

THURIBLE, a censer for burning frankincense. (L. = Gk.) 'A pot of manna, or thurible;' Jp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2 (K.). I'hillips, ed. 1706, has only the L. form thūribulum. Englished from L. thūribulum, also spelt thūribulum, a vessel for holding frankincense. = L. thūri-, thūri-, decl. stem of thūs or tūs, frankincense; with suffix -bulum, as in fundibulum (from fundere). This sb. thūs is not a true L. word, but borrowed from Gk. θύ-ος, incense. = Gk. θύ-ειν, to offer part of a meal to the gods, by burning it, to sacrifice. Cf. Skt. thūma, smoke; I. fūma, smoke, which is the native L. word from the same root as Gk. θύ-ος. = DHIEU*, to shake, blow, fan a flame. See Fume. DER. (from L. thūri-), thuri-fer, one who carries incense; where the suffix -fer = bearing, from ferre, to bear. From the same root as thyme and fume.

THURSDAY, the fifth day of the week. (Scand.) The day of the god of thunder, the Scand. Thor. ME. þurs-day, Ancrer Riwle, p. 40, l. 7; þorsday, þoresday, þursday, P. Plozman, l. xvi. 140, and footnotes; (spelt þurses-day, Lynamon, 13929). = AS. þūres dag, Thursday. = AS. þūres, gen. of þūr, Thor; and dag, day. Borrowed from Icel. þursdag, Thursday; from þurs, gen. case of þorr, Thor, thunder; dag, a day. So also are compounded Du. Donnerdag, Swed. and Dan. Torsdag, G. Donnerstag and the (native) AS. þūres dag. All are translations of L. diēs Iovis, Jupiter's day. See Sweet, Hist. E. Sounds, § 878. And see Thunder.

THUS, in this manner. (E.) ME. thus, Chaucer, C. T. 1880 (A 1878). AS. þus, thus, so, Grein, ii. 611. + OFries. and OSax. thus, thus; Du. du. Of obscure origin; prob. allied to That; and perhaps to Ths.

THWACK, WHACK, to beat severely. (E.) In Levens, and in Shak. Cor. iv. 8. 189. 'If it be a thwack' [blow]; Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 2 (1aspet). Tusser has thwack as a verb; Husbandry, § 18, st. 3 (E. D. S.). Prob. of imitative origin. Cf. Icel. þjokka, to thwack, thump; þjaka, the same; prov. G. wackeln, to cudgel. β. For the change from thwack to whack, see Whittle. ¶ It does not agree, in form or sense, with M. thakken, to stroke, as in: 'When Nicholas had doon thus eury del, And thakked her about the lendes wel;' Chaucer, C. T. 3304; AS. þaccian, to stroke, said of stroking a horse; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 41, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10.

THWAITE, a clearing. (Scand.) Common in place-names, in Cumberland, as in Esthwaite, Leigberthwaite, &c.; see Taylor's Words and Places, c. 8; Gent. Mag. Nov. 1856, p. 530. In N. and Q. 3 S. x. 68, an example of thwaite is given, as occurring in the 16th century. = Icel. þveit, a paddock, &c., orig. a 'cutting', i. e. a clearing in a wood. As if from þveit*, and grade of a strong verb þvita*, to cut; not found, but the same word as AS. þwitan, to cut; for which see Whittle (1). Cf. Norw. tvæt, a cut, also a small clear space (Aasen); prov. Sw. tvæt, a chip, tvæta, a suffix in place-names (Rietz); Dan. id. tvæd. And see Dolt.

THWART, transversely, transverse. (Scand.) Properly an adv., as used by Spenser: 'Yet whether thwairt or flatly it did lyte' [light, alight]; F. Q. vi. 6. 30. He also has it as a prep.: 'thwart her horse' = across her horse, F. Q. iii. 7. 43. The ME. use shows clearly that the word was used adverbially, esp. in certain phrases, and then as an adj.; the verbal use was the latest of all. ME. puert, puert. 'Andlong, nouth our-puert' = endlong, not across; Havellok, 282a. 'Overthwart and endlong' = across and endlong, Chaucer, C. T. 1993; puertouer, Arcene Kivle, p. 82, l. 12; puert ouer þe ilond, Trevisa, v. 225; 'His herte þo wurð puert' = his heart then became perverse, Genesis and Exodus, 3099. The word is of Scand. origin, as it is only thus that the final -t can be explained. The AS. for 'perverse' is þueorh, Grein, ii. 612, cognate with which is Icel. þuert, masc., the neut. being þvert. The sense of puert is across, transverse, whence um þuert = across, athwart; taka þuert, to take athwart, to deny flatly; storm mikinn ok veðr þuert = a great storm and adverse winds. †Dan. tvær, adj., transverse; tvært, adv., across; Swed. tvär, adj., cross, unfriendly, tvärt, adv., rudely. Allied to Du. dwaars, adj. and adv., cross, crossly; AS. þueorh, perverse, transverse (as above); MlG. dwerch, tuerch, G. zuerch, adv., across, awry, askance, obliquely; Goth. thwairks, cross, angry. †. All from Teut. base puerh*, transverse, also cross, angry; answering to Idg. base uery*. Allied to L. torquere, to twist; Skt. tarhu-, a spindle. Brugmann, i. § 593 (3). Allied to Twirl; and see Torsion. Der. thwart, verb, Mf. puerren, Genesis and Exodus, 1324; also a-thwart, q. v. And see Quert.

THWITE, to cut. (E.) Obsolete. AS. þwitan, to cut. See Thwaite and Whittle.

THY, shorter form of Thine, q. v. (E.) Der. thy-self, AS. þin self, where both þin and self are declined, the gen. being þines selfes; see Grein, ii. 427, s. v. self.

THYME, a fragrant plant. (F.—L.—Gk.) The th is pronounced as t, because the word was borrowed from F. at an early period. ME. tyme, Prompt. Parv., p. 494.—OF. tym, F. thym, 'the herb time'; Cot.—L. thymum, acc. of thymus, thyme.—Gk. θύμος, θύμων, thyme; from its sweet smell; cf. Gk. θύος, incense, and L. fāmus, smoke. See Thurible. (4) DUEU. Der. thym-y, Gay, Fable 22, l. 11.

THYROID, a term in anatomy. (Gk.) I. i. 'shield-shaped.' For thyroid.—Gk. θυρεοειδής, shield-shaped (Galen).—(Ck. θυρεο-, for θύρεος, a stone against a door; also, a shield, from θύρα, a door; and είδος, form. See Door and Idyll.)

THYRSUS, a long wand, an attribute or emblem of Dionysus or Bacchus. (L.—Gk.) Herriek has thyrs: 'Shake the thyrs,' A Lyric to Mirth, l. 8.—L. thyrsus, a stalk, stem.—Gk. θύσος, the same. See Torso.

TI-TY

TIARA, a round wreathed ornament for the head. (L.—Gk.—Pers.?) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, vii. 337; and used by Tyndale; see Index to Parker Soc. publications. [The form tiar in Milton, P. L. iii. 625, is from F. tiare, given in Cotgrave.]—L. tiara, Virg. Æn. vii. 247.—Gk. τίαρα, τίαραι, the Persian head-dress, esp. on great occasions; see Herodotus, i. 132, vii. 61, viii. 120; Xenophon, Anab. ii. 5. 23. And see Smith's Dict. of Antiquities. †. Clearly not a Gk. word, and presumably of Persian origin. The modern name is Pers. tīj, 'a crown, a diadem, a crest'; see Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 351, where the tiara is described. Cf. tījāwar, 'wearing a crown, crowned'; id. p. 352.

TIBERT, a name for a cat. (F.—Teut.) Alluded to as Tyball in Shaks. Romeo, iii. 1. 80. See Narcs. 'Tybert the catte'; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ch. iii.—Low G. Thiert (Willem, author of Reynard). This answers to AS. Thiōd-beorht, from thiōd, people, and beorht, bright. †. But Tyball is rather from OF. Thibaut, a form of Theobald, answering to AS. Thiōd-beald, from beald, bold. See Teutonic; and Bright, Bold.

TIBIA, the large bone of the leg. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. A medical term.—L. tibia, the shin-bone. Der. tibi-al.

TIC, a convulsive motion of certain muscles, esp. of the face, a twitching. (F.—Teut.) Borrowed from F. tic, a twitching; and chiefly used of the tic douloureux, painful twitching, the name of a nervous disease; where douloureux=L. dolorosus, painful, from dolor, pain. The F. tic was formerly esp. used with respect to a twitching of the muscles of horses (see Litré), and is the same word as Mf. tiq, or tiquet, 'a disease which, on a sudden stopping a horses breath, makes him to stop and stand still'; Cot. Cf. près du tiquet de la mort, 'near his last gasp'; id. The F. tic also means a vicious habit; cf. Ital. ticchio, a ridiculous habit, whim, caprice. †. Of Teutonic origin; guided by the etymology of caprice, Diez suggests a prob. origin from OHG. ziken, a kid, dimin. of OHG. ziga, G.

zige, a goat, cognate with AS. ticcen, a goat, Gen. xxxviii, 19. γ. But rather from MHG. tuc, a quick movement, or Low G. tukken, to twitch; perhaps allied to Low G. tuikken, to twitch. And see Tiock (4).

TICK (1), a small insect infesting dogs, &c. (E.) 'A tick in a sheep'; Troil. iii. 3. 315. Mf. tyke (dat. case), in Polit. Songs, p. 238, l. 4, in a poem of the time of Edw. II. Spelt teke, Voc. 565. 47. AS. ticca, Erfurt Glossary, 1130. Hence the F. tique was borrowed.—MDu. teke, a tike, or a dogge-lose; Hexham; Low G. teke, tike; G. zücke, zecke, a tick (whence Ital. zecca). Allied to Lith. dygus, sharp, dėg-ti, to sting (Frank).

TICK (2), the cover into which feathers are put, to serve for a bed. (L.—Gk.) 'Quilts, ticks, and mattresses'; Holland. tr. of Pliny, b. xix, c. 1, § 2. 'And of federbeddes ryppted the *teky*s & helde theym in the wynde, that the fethers myght be blowyn away'; Fabian's Chron., an. 1305-6, fol. lxxx. ed. Ellis, p. 414. Spelt ticke in Palsgrave. The spelling tick used by Fabian is Englished from L. thēca, a case, which became Late L. thēca, a linen case, a tick (Ducange); also thēca, as in Prompt. Parv., s. v. teye. 'The teke of a bed, Tea culcitaria, Levinus; the L. thē being sounded as t. [From the same L. thēca was derived the F. taie, spelt taye in Cotgrave, and explained as 'any filme or thin skin', whence une taye d'oreiller, 'a pillowbeer', i. e. a pillow-case].—Gk. thēnē, a case to put anything into; derived from the base th- as seen in ri-thēnē, 1 place, put.—√DHF, to put; see Theme. ¶ The Du. tijck, a tick, is likewise from L. thēca. Der. tick-ing.

TICK (3), to make a slight recurring noise, to beat as a watch. (E.) Todd cites from Ray, Remains, p. 324, 'the leisurely and constant tick of the death-watch.' The word is prob. imitative, to express the clicking sound, cf. click; or it may have been suggested by Tiock (4), q. v. Cf. G. ticktack, pit-a-pat; F. tic-tac, the ticking of a clock.

TICK (4), to touch lightly. (E.) There is a game called tig, in which children endeavour to touch each other; see Halliwell. This was formerly called tick. 'At hood-wink, barley-break, at tick, or prison-base'; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 30, l. 132. ME. tek, a light touch. 'Tek, or lyttle towche, Tactulus'; Prompt. Parv. Not found earlier, except in the frequentative form tikelen; see Tiocke. † Du. tik, a touch, pat, tick; tikken, to pat, to tick; Norw. tikka, to touch lightly; Low G. tikk, a light touch with the tip of the finger; metaphorically, a moment of time. 'Ik quam up den Tikk daar, I came there just in the nick of time'; Bremen Wörterbuch. †. Apparently a lighter form of the Teut. base tak-*, to touch, just as ti- (in tip and run) is a weakened form of tap, made by the substitution of a lighter vowel. See Take. Der. tick-le, q. v.

TICKET (5), credit; see Tiocket.

TICKET, a bill stuck up, a marked card, a token. (F.—G.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave.—Mf. etiquet, 'a little note, breviate, bill or ticket; especially such a one as is stuck up on the gate of a court, &c., signifying the seizure, &c. of an inheritance by order of justice'; Cot. This is the masc. form of étiquette (formerly estiquete, Litré), a ticket.—G. stecken, to stick, put, set, fix; allied to E. stick, q. v. And see Etiquette. Der. tick-et, vb. Also tick, credit, by contraction for ticket; 'taking things to be put into a bill, was taking them on ticket, since corrupted into tick'; Nares; he gives examples, showing that tick occurs as early as 1608, and that the phrases upon ticket and on ticket were in use.

TICKLE, to touch slightly so as to cause to laugh. (E.) Mf. tikelen, tiklen, Chaucer, C. T. 6053 (D 471). Not found earlier, but the frequentative from the base tik-, to touch lightly; see Tiock (4). We also find ME. tikel, adj., unstable, ticklish, easily moved by a touch, Chaucer, C. T. 3428; from the same source. Cf. Icel. killa, to tickle; similarly formed from a base kil-*. Der. tick-er; tick-ish, Troil. iv. 5. 61, formed by adding -ish to ME. tikel above; tick-ly, -ness.

TIDE, season, time, hour; flux or reflux of the sea. (E.) ME. tide, Chaucer, C. T. 4930 (B 510); the usual sense is 'season' or hour; hence the time between flux and reflux of the sea, and, finally, the flux or reflux itself. AS. tid, time, hour, Mark, xiii. 33.—Du. tijd; Icel. tið; Dan. and Swed. tid; G. zeit; OHG. zū. †. All from Teut. type ti-di-*, time, division of time, portion of time. Allied to Time, q. v. Der. tide, vb., to happen, Mf. tidan. Dt. Dr. v. 205, ME. tiden, Chaucer, C. T. 4757 (B 337), AS. ge-tidan, to happen, John, v. 14; hence be-tide, q. v. Also morning-tide, morrow-tide, even-tide, harvest-tide, &c.; tide-mill, tide-table; tide-waiter, an officer who waits for the arrival of vessels with the tide, to secure payment of duties; tide-way; tid-al, adj., tide-less; tide-ing, tide-y.

TIDINGS, things that happen; usually, information respecting things that happen. (Scand.) Not an E. word, but adapted from Norse. ME. tidinde, Layamon, 2052, altered in the later text to tidinge; spelt tipeunde (for tipeunde), Ormulum, dedication, l. 158.

AS. tidung, tidings; A. S. Chron. an. 995. — Icel. tíðindi, neut. pl., tidings, news; also spelt tíðenda. The word may have originated from a pres. part. tíðandi* of a verb tíðan*, to happen, with the same sense as AS. tidan; and this verb is from Icel. tíð, sb., tide, time, cognate with AS. tid; see Tide. The final i is an E. addition, to show that the word is a pl. form; the ME. tidung or tiding (without s) is not uncommon; see Chaucer, C. T. 5140 (B 726). Cf. Dan. tidende, tidings, news; Du. tijding; G. zeitung. Noreen, § 150 (2).

TIDY, seasonable, hence, appropriate, neat. (E.) ME. tidy. 'Tidy men.' P. Plowman, B. ix. 104; 'he tidy child.' Will. of Palerne, 160. Formed with suffix -y (<AS. -ig) from ME. tid (AS. tid), time; see Tide. + Du. tijdig, timely, from tijd; Dan. and Swed. tidig, timely, from tid; G. zeitig. Der. tid-ness.

TIE, a fastening, band; to fasten, bind. (E.) ME. tijen, verb. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 464; tjen, P. Plowman, B. i. 96; tijen, tjen, id. A. 94. The ME. forms tijen, tjen answer to AS. tiagan, to tie, fasten, spelt tigan, Matt. xxi. 2. The forms tijen, tjen answer to an Anglian form tiagan. The verb is an unoriginal form, due to the sb. tese. 'And icien heum to-gadere mid guldene tesen' — and tie them together with golden ties; Layamon, 2097f, 2098f. The corresponding AS. word is tiagan, or rather tiak (stem tiag-), a rope; see Grein. Again, we read 'habbað langne tige to geclianan trimmlunge' — they have a long-lasting tie for the establishment of the faith; Ælfric, Of the New Test., ed. De L'Isle, p. 27, last line; here tige — tige (with mutation). Cf. Icel. tæg, a tie, string; tygill, a string-β. The form tiak corresponds to tiak, pt. s. of tiokan, to tow, pull, draw, drag; so that a tie means that which draws things together. For the strong verb tiokan or tiun (pt. t. tiok, pl. tiugon, pp. logon). See Grein, ii. 527. It is cognate with Goth. tiukan (pt. t. tauk, pp. taukans), to tow, tug, pull, and to G. ziehen. See further under Tow (1). γ. Thus tie, vb., is from tie, sb.; and the latter is ultimately from Tent. tauh*, and grade of the Tent. base TEUH = Idg. ✓DEUK, as in L. ducere, to draw. Cf. Tether.

TIER, a rank, row. (F. — Tent. ?) Tire* (or teer of ordinance, as the seamen pronounce it), a set of great guns on both sides of a ship, lying in a rank, &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt tire, with the same sense of 'row of guns', in Milton, P. L. vi. 605. We find 'tyres of batterie', i. e. rounds of shot, Life of Lord Grey (ab. 1575), p. 20 (Camden Soc.). Also 'tyre of ordinance', Florio, s. v. tiro. — OF. tire, liere, a rank, row, series (Godefroy); cf. Prov. tierra, mod. Prov. tierra, tierra, a row, series. Perhaps of Tent. origin; see Körtig, § 9464. And cf. attire, q. v. ¶ Distinct from Late L. tirare, to draw, pull, extend, hurl; whence also Ital. tirare, Span. Port. tirar.

TIERCE, TERCE, one of the canonical hours, a clock holding a third of a pipe; a sequence of three cards of a colour; a thrust in fencing. (F. — L.) In all its senses, it meant orig. 'third'; as the third hour, third of a pipe, third card, third sort of thrust. ME. tierce; 'At howre of tyerce', Myroure of Our Lady, ed. Blunt, p. 13. 1. 21; spelt tyerce, Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 41. — F. tiers, masc., tierce, fem., 'third'; tiers, m., 'a tierce, third, third part'; Cot. — L. tertius, masc., tertia, fem., 'third': the ordinal corresponding to tris, third, which is cognate with E. Three, q. v.

TIERCEL, the same as Tercel, q. v.

TIFF (1), to deck, dress out. (F. — O. Low G.) ME. tiffen; Will. of Palerne, l. 1725; tiffung, fluency, Ancren Riwle, p. 420, note a. — OF. and MF. tiffer, tifer (more commonly attiffer, attiffer), 'to deck, prance, trick, trim, adorn'; Cot. Of Low G. origin; cf. Du. tippen, to cut, clip (lit. to cut off the tip of the hair, to trim); Low G. tippen, to touch lightly, as with the tips of the fingers. These verbs are from Du. tip, Low G. tipp, sb. a tip. See Tip (1). Cf. prov. E. tippy, smart, fine (Brockett, Halliwell). So also Swed. tippa, to touch gently, from tipp, sb. See F. attiffer in Scheler.

TIFF (2), a pet, fit of ill-humour; also, liquor, drink. (Scand.) 'My lord and I have had another little-tiff, shall I call it? It came not up to a quarrel'; Richardson, Grandison, iv. 291 (1754, ed. 1812). Spelt tift in Jamieson an' Brockett. 'Small acid tiff'; J. Phillips, The Splendid Shilling, where it means 'drink'. Spelt tiffe in Brome, To his University Friend, 1661, where it means 'thin small beer' (Halliwell, Richardson). The orig. sense is 'a sniff'; hence (1) an expression of indignation; (2) a sup or draught of beer (see Halliwell), or the beer itself. — Norweg. teu, a drawing in of the breath, scent, smell, esp. a bad smell; teva, to puff, sniff, smell; Swed. dial. täv, smell, scent, taste; Icel. þefa, a smell, þefa, to sniff. Hence tiff really stands for thiff, the old Scand. th being turned into t, as in tight. β. This etymology is at once verified by the Norweg. derivatives teft, sb. a scent, and tefta, verb, to scent, which explain the North E. tift. Wedgwood well remarks: 'a tiff or fit of ill humour must be explained from sniffing or sniffing the air.' Cf. AS. þefan, to pant. See Tiffin.

TIFFANY, a kind of thin silk, gauze. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) 'Velvets, tiffanies, jewels, pearls'; Fletcher, The Noble Gentleman,

A. i. sc. 1. Lit. 'a dress for Twelfth Night,' i. e. a holiday dress, gay dress. Tiffany was formerly a Christian name, esp. for a woman born on Twelfth Day; see Bardsley, Dict. of Surnames. — OF. Tifanie (and numerous other forms, as Theophanie); see Godefroy, s. v. Tifaigne, a name for Twelfth Day. — Late L. Theophania, lit. 'manifestation of God'; another name for Epiphany. — Gk. θεοφάνεια, appearance, from φαίνω, to show. See Epiphany. TIFFIN, luncheon. (Scand.) An Anglo-Indian word, but originally provincial English. Wedgwood says it 'is the North-country tiffin (properly sipping), eating or drinking out of due season.' This is quoted from Grose, Lexicon Balatronicum (1785); see Tiffin in Yale, and Tiff in Davies, Supplementary Glossary. The latter has 'a tiff (draught) of punch'; Fielding, Amelia, bk. viii. ch. 10. Lowland-Scotch has the verb tift, to quaff, from the sb. tift, a drink; corresponding to which we have prov. E. tiff, to quaff; whence the sb. tiffin = tiffing, a quaffing, a drinking; hence, a luncheon. See Tiff (2).

TIGER, a fierce beast of prey. (F. — L. — Gk. — Pers.) ME. tigre, Chaucer, C. T. 1657. — K. tiger, 'a tiger'; Cot. — I. tigrem, acc. of tigris. — Gk. τίγρις. β. Said to be of Pers. origin; according to Littré, named from its 'swiftness', the tiger being compared to an arrow. So also Mandeville (Trav. ch. xxx. p. 395) has: 'tigris, that is, faste rennyng.' — Zend. tighri, an arrow; from tighra, sharp, pointed; words cited by Fick, i. 333. Hence mod. Pers. tir, 'an arrow, also the river Tigris, so named from its rapidity'; Rich. Dict. p. 473. Hom. § 406. Allied to Skt. tigna-, sharp, signaga-, flying swiftly, from tij, to be sharp. All these words have lost initial s; tij being allied to Gk. στίχον (= στρίχον), to prick. — ✓STEIG, to stick, prick; see Stigma. Der. tigr-ess, tiger-ick.

TIGHT, close, compact, not leaky. (Scand.) It should rather be thight, as in the dialect of Orkney; the change from th to t is common in Scandinavian, since neither Danish nor Swedish admits of initial th, which is only preserved in Icelandic. The th still exists also in prov. E. thite, 'tight, close, compact, East'; Halliwell. ME. tijt; whence tijli, closely, Will. of Palerne, 66; also þijt, spelt thyt, in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Thyht, hool, not brokyn, Integer, solidus'; also: 'Thyhtyn, or make thyt, Integer, consolidus.' Hence prov. E. theat, firm, close, staunch, spoken of barrels when they do not run (Halliwell). So also: 'as some tight vessel that holds against wind and water'; Rp. Hall, Contemplations, Ruth; bk. xi. cant. 3. § 11. It is spelt tijht four times in Beaumont and Fletcher; see Nares. — Icel. þjotr (for þiht*), tight, esp. not leaking, water-tight, whence þitta, to make tight; Swed. tät, close, tight, solid, thick, hard, compact, whence täta, to make tight, tätta, to become tight (E. tighten used intransitively); Dan. tæt, tight, close, dense, compact, water-tight, used as a naut. term in tæt til Vinden, close to the wind; tætte, to tighten; NFries. tacht (variant ticht), tight. β. The substitution of ME. tj for Icel. þ is curious; the E. has preserved the old guttural, which in the Icelandic is no longer apparent. Tent. type þihtoz*, for þinjtoz*, þenjtoz*; whence also G. dicht, tight, compact, Du. digst, tight, compact (where the guttural is also preserved). Allied to Lith. tanhu, I have enough, tanhus, close, tight; Pers. tang, tight. See Thee (2). Der. tight-ly, tight-ness; tight-ness, properly intransitive like Swed. tätta, but used, by analogy, in the sense 'to make tight'. Braggman, i. § 577.

TIKE, a dog; contemptuously, a low fellow. (Scand.) ME. tike, tyke; P. Plowman, B. xix. 37; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3642. — Icel. and Norw. tik, Swed. tik, a bitch; Dan. dial. tigg, a male dog.

TILE, a piece of baked clay for covering roofs, &c. (L.) ME. tile, Chaucer, C. T. 7687 (D 2105). A contracted form of tegula, the long i being due to loss of g. Spelt tigul, Genesis and Exodus, 2552; tegele, Aynbete of Inwyt, p. 167, l. 13. AS. tigule; pl. tygulan, Gen. xi. 3; hence tigul-wyrhta, a tile-wright's potter, Matt. xxvii. 7. — L. tegula, a tile, lit. 'that which covers'; formed with suffix -la from tegere, to cover. — ✓STEC, to cover; see Tegment. Der. tile, verb, til-er, til-ing; also til-er-y, imitated from F. tulerie, which is from F. tuile, L. tegula, a tile.

TILL (1), to cultivate. (E.) ME. tilien, Rob. of Glouc. p. 21. 1. 488. AS. tilian, teolan, to labour, endeavour, strive after, to till land; Grein, ii. 533. The orig. sense is to strive after or aim at excellence. — AS. til, good, excellent, profitable; Grein, ii. 532; cf. til, sb., goodness. Allied to tili, preposition; see Till (2). + Du. telen, to breed, raise, till, cultivate; G. zielen, to aim at, from ziel, OHG. zīt, an aim, mark; cf. Goth. ga-zīls, fit, convenient. Further allied to OIrish dil, pleasant. Der. til-er, til-age; also til-th, Temp. ii. 1. 152, from AS. til-ð, cultivation, crop, A. S. Chron. an. 1098; cf. Du. teelt, a crop.

TILL (2), to the time of, to the time when. (Scand.) A Norse word; orig. used as a preposition, then as a conjunction. ME. til, prep., to, occurring (rarely) even in Chaucer, where it seems to be put for to because it is accented and comes before a vowel. 'Hoom ill Athénis when the play is doon'; C. T. 2964 (A 2966). As a rule, it is a distinguishing mark of works in the Northumbrian dialect, such as Harboure's Bruce, where til occurs for to throughout. Sommer cites 'cweð til him hærend' = 'the Saviour said to them, without a reference; but he really found 'cweð til him be hærend', Matt. xxvi. 31, in the ONorthumb. (not the AS.) version. = Icel. til, till, to, prep. governing the genitive; Dan. til; Swed. till; in very common use; it even answers to E. too in phrases such as tilt sneg, too young; til gamalt, too old. β . Quite distinct from to, and orig. a case of til or till, sb., in the sense of 'aim' or 'bent', whence the notion of 'towards' was easily developed. The Icel. til frequently expresses 'purpose', as in til hvers for 'what purpose'. The sb. is rare in Icel., though it occurs in ú-til, a mischance; but OIIG. zil, ziel, aim, purpose, is a common word; so also is the closely allied AS. adj. till, suitable fit (cognate with Goth. ga-tilla, fit, convenient), as well as the AS. adv. tela, teala, excellently, Gröin, ii. 624. See THILL (1). Der. un-til, q.v.

THILL (3), a money-box or drawer in a tradesman's counter. (E.) The proper sense is 'drawer', something that can be 'pulled' in and out. Dryden uses thiller in this sense, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 384, where thiller is just parallel to drawer. Cotgrave explains lyette by 'a thill or drawer'; also, 'a box with tills or drawers'. Falsgrave has: 'Thyll of an almyr, lyette [sic]; an almyr being a kind of cupboard or cabinet. Cf. also prov. E. thiller, a till, a place for money; E. D. D. Thus the word is by no means modern; and, just as drawer is from the verb to draw, so thiller is from ME. thillen, to draw, pull, allure, now obsolete, but once not uncommon. 'To the scole him for to thille' = 'to draw (allure) him to school, Cursor Mundi, 12175. 'The world... tyl him drawes. And thille' = 'the world draws and allures to itself, Bricks of Conscience, 1183; and see Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1563, and esp. Rob. of Glouc. p. 115, l. 2492, where it occurs in a literal, not a metaphorical sense. Spelt also thullen; the pt. l. thulle = drew, is in Ancien Kiewle, p. 320, l. 73. AS. thyllan, appearing only in the comp. for-thyllan, with the apparent sense of draw aside, lead astray, Gröin, i. 332. AS. thyllan answers to Teut. type tul-*, but the root does not appear. Allied to Toll (2). See Thiller.

TILLER, the handle or lever for turning a rudder. (E.) Cf. prov. E. tiller, the stalk of a cross-bow, the handle of any implement (Halliwell). Phillips has it in the usual sense. 'Tiller, in a boat, is the same as helme in ship'; Coles, ed. 1684. 'The tiller of their helme was burst'; Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 111. 'The word means 'puller' or handle; from ME. tillen, to pull, draw; see further under THILL (3).

TILT (1), the canvas covering of a cart or wagen, (E.) ME. telt, a covering, tent, Layamon, 31384; and a later form was telt. Telt or tente. 'Promt, l'arv; hence our telt. AS. teld; whence geteld, a tent, Gen. xviii. 1; the prefix making no difference. β MDu. teld, telle, a tent; Ickham; Icel. tjald; Low G. telt (whence Dan. telt; Swed. tält); G. zelt. β It thus appears that the form telt (with final t for d) may have been due to Dutch influence. From the Teut. strong verb teldan-, to cover, spread over (pt. t. tald); found in AS. be-teldan, ofer-teldan, both strong verbs. If the reference is to covering over with boards, connexion with Gk. τέλειν, a writing-tablet, is possible (Trellwitz).

TILT (2), to ride in a tourney, thrust with a lance; to cause to heel over. (E.) In 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 95. But the verb was orig. intransitive, meaning 'to totter, up and down, as about unsteadily'; whence the active use of 'cause to totter, upset', was evolved. The intrans. sense occurs at least as late as Milton, and is still in use when we say 'that table will tilt over'. The floating vessel. 'Rode tilting over the waves'; Milton, P. L. xi. 747. ME. tillen, to totter, fall; 'þis likt tonn schal tylte to the ground', Allit. Poems, C. 361. β The lit. sense is 'to be unsteady'; formed from AS. telt, adj., unsteady, tottering, unstable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, § 27. 74. Hence the verb teltan-, tyltan-, to totter, would be regularly formed, with the usual vowel change from ea to i (y). β Icel. tílla, to amble as a horse; cf. Milton's use of tilting above; Norw. tylla, to walk on tiptoe; Swed. tulta, to waddle. Cf. Totter. Der. tilt, sb., tilt-ing; tilt-hammer, a hammer which, being tilted up, falls by its own weight. Also totter, q.v.

TILT, sb. (E.) See THILL (1).

TIMBER, wood for building. (E.) The b is excrecent, as usual after m, but occurs very early. ME. timber, Chaucer, C. T. 3666. AS. timbar, stuff or material to build with; Gröin, ii. 534. β Du. timmer, 'timber or structure'; Hæham; Icel. timbr; Dan. timmer; Swed. timmer; G. zimmer, a room; also timber. Cf. also Goth. timrjan, to build, timrja, a builder. β All from Teut. type tim-* = tem-, rom, n., timber; formed with agential suffix -ro from Teut. base TEM = $\sqrt{\text{DEM}}$, to build, as seen in Gk. τέμνω, to build; see Dome. Brugmann, i. § 421 (8). Der. (from same root) dome, dom-icil, dom-estie, major-domo.

TIMBER, a kind of tambourine. (F. - L. - Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 7. Dimin., with suffix -i (= -el), from ME. timber, used in the same sense, Gower, C. A. iii. 63; bk. vi. 1844. = F. timbre, 'the bell of a little clock'; Cot.; OF. timbre, a timbrel, as shown by a quotation in Diez. = L. tympānum, a drum. = Gk. τύμπανον, a kettle-drum; see Tympanum. Cf. 'Hoc tympanum, a tymbre'; Vc. 616. 28.

TIME, season, period, duration of life, &c. (E.) ME. time, Chaucer, C. T. 35. 44. AS. tima, time, Gröin, ii. 534. = Icel. timi; Dan. time; Swed. timme, an hour. β The Teut. type is ti-man-, closely allied to ti-der-, tide, time, from which it only differs in the suffix. See Tide. Der. time, verb, cf. ME. time, to happen, AS. getimian; time-ly, adj., Mach. iii. 5. 7; time-ly, adv., Mach. ii. 3. 51; time-li-ness; time-honoured, -keeper, -piece, -server, -stable, -worn.

TIMID, afraid, fearful. (F. - L.) 'The timid friend'; Pope, Prol. to Satires, 343. 'The sb. timidity is earlier, occurring in Cotgrave. = F. timide, 'timorous'; Cot. = L. timidus, full of fear. = L. timere, to fear; see Timorous. Der. timid-ly, -ness; timid-i-ty, from F. timidité, 'timidity'; Cot., from L. acc. timiditatem.

TIMOROUS, full of fear. (L.) 'The Court of Love begins: 'With timorous here'; but this is quite a late poem. Fabian has timorousness, Chron. cap. 175; Sir T. Elyot has timorously, The Governour, b. i. c. xxi. §. [There is no F. timoreux.] Coined, as if from L. adj. timoröse*, fearful, a word not used. = L. timor, fear; timere, to fear. β Prol. allied to Skt. tau, to become breathless, to be distressed, to be exhausted. Der. timorous-ly, timorous-ness; (from same root) tim-id, in-timid-ate.

TIN, a silvery-white metal. (E.) ME. tin, Chaucer, C. T. 16296 (G 828). AS. tin; 'stagnum, tin'; Alfric's Gram. (ed. Zupitza), p. 15, l. 11; whence 'stagnous, tinnes' as an adj., ibid. β Du. tin; Icel. tin; Dan. tin; Swed. tenn; G. zinn. β All from Teut. type tin-, tin. Possibly connected with Teut. taino-, a rod, for which see Mistלות; cf. G. zain, an ingot, a bar of metal. Quite distinct from L. stagnum, stannum, tin, whence W. ytaun, Corn. stann, Bret. stann, Irish stan, F. étain, are all borrowed; see Rhy. Lectures on Welsh, Appendix C. Der. tin-foil, spelt tysofoyle in Levins, i. c. tin-leaf; see Foil (2).

TINCTURE, a shade of colour, a solution. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 4. 160. ME. tincture, Lanfrank, Curigie, p. 180, l. 6. Englished from L. tinctura, a dyeing; cf. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. Der. tincture, verb. Shak. also has tinct, sb., a dye, Hamlet, iii. 4. 91, from tinctus.

TIND, to light or kindle. (E.) Also spelt time. Now obsolete, except in prov. E. Spelt tindo in Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. tenden, Wyclif, Luke, xi. 33. AS. tendan, to kindle; chiefly in comp. on-tendan, Exod. xl. 6. β Dan. tende; Swed. tända; Goth. tandjan. β These are verbs of the weak kind, from the base of a Teut. lost strong verb tendan-, making tand in the pt. t., and tundanoz* in the pp. β y. From the weak grade of the same strong verb was formed E. tinder, q.v.

TINDER, anything used for kindling fires from a spark. (E.) ME. tinder, Layamon, 29267; more often tunder, tundre, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245. AS. tyndre, Voc. 266. 39; tynder, ed. 33. 41. Cf. OHG. zundre, tinder. Teut. type tund-ir-ir-, f.; from tund-, weak grade of a lost strong verb tendan-*, to kindle, whence the weak verb tendan, to kindle; see Tind. β Icel. tindur, tindir; cf. tendra, to light a fire, tandir, fire; Dan. tönder; Swed. tunder; G. zunder; cf. anzunder, to kindle.

TINE (1), the tooth or spike of a fork or harrow. (E.) Formerly tind; cf. wood-bine for wood-bind. ME. tin, spelt tynde, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 78; tyndis of harrows', Allit. Romance of Alexander, 3907, 3925. AS. tind, pl. tindas, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 150, l. 25. β Icel. tindr, a spike, tooth of a rake or harrow; Swed. tinn, Dan. dial. tind, the tooth of a rake; MHG. zint. Teut. type tendoz*, m.; allied to L. dens (acc. dent-em), a tooth; see Tooth. Cf. Skt. dantā, a tooth; hasti-dantā, a peg to hang clothes on. Der. tin-ard.

TINE (2), to kindle; see Tind.

TINE (3), to lose. (Scand.) 'His blisse gan he tyne'; P. Plowman, B. i. 112. = Icel. tjina, to lose. = Icel. tjinn, loss, damage; cognate with AS. tēona, harm, loss; see Tean.

TINGE, to colour, dye. (L.) 'Tinged with saffron'; Holinshed, Desc. of Scotland, c. 7. The pp. form tinct is in Spenser, Shep. Kal. November, 107. = L. tingere (pp. tinctus), to dye, stain. β Gk. τίγγω, to wet, moisten, dye, stain. Cf. OIIG. thuccin, G. tunken, to dip, steep, from the weak grade (tung-) of $\sqrt{\text{TINGE}}$. Der. tinge, sb., tincture, q.v.; also tint, tint (3), tint, stain, mezzo-tinto.

TINGLE, to thrill, feel a thrilling sensation. (E.) Spelt tingil in Levins. ME. tinglen. In Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1, we have: 'a cymbal tyngkyngs', where other readings are tyngkyngs and tyngkyngs. Tingle is merely a weakened form of tinkle, being the frequentative of ting, a weakened form of tink. 'Cypide the kyng tyngkyng a sylver bel'; Test. of Creseide, st. 21 (Thynne). 'To ting, tinnire; to tingil, tinnire'; Levins. Cf. ting-lang, the saint's-bell (Halliwell); 'Sonner, to sound... to ting, as a bell'; Cot. To make one's ears tinkle or tingle is to make them seem to ring; hence, to tingle, to vibrate, to feel a sense of vibration as when a bell is rung. Hence 'bothe his eris shulen tynglen'; Wyclif, 1 Sam. iii. 11. See Tinkle, Tinker. β But prob. affected by prov. E. ting, to sting, a by-form of ting. Cf. prov. E. tingling, sharp; MDu. tingel, a nettle; tingelen, 'to sting with nettles'; Hexham.

TINKER, a mender of kettles and pans. (E.) ME. tinkere, P. Plowman, A. v. 160; B. v. 317. So called because he makes a tinkling sound; from ME. tinklen, to ring or tinkle. 'A cymbal tyngkyng'; Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. Of imitative origin; cf. MDu. tinge-tangen, to tingle (Hexham); also MDu. tintelen, 'to ring, tingle, or make a noise like brass'; (id.), where mod. Du. has tintelen only in the sense to tingle or sparkle. Cf. EFries. tinken, tingen, tengen, to make a bell ring; L. tinnire, to tinkle, ring, tintinnium, a tinkling; F. tinter, 'to ting, ring, tinkle'; Cot., whence les oreilles me tintent, 'mine ears tingle or glow'; id.; F. tintin, tinton, 'the ting of a bell'; id. Cf. Tudor E. tinkler, a tinker (Levins). ¶ Grimm's law does not necessarily apply to words so directly imitative as this.

TINKLE, to jingle. (E.) ME. tinklen, whence 'a cymbal tyngkyng'; in some MSS. of Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1; frequentative of ME. tinken, to ring. See further under Tinker and Tingle.

TINSEL, gaudy ornament, showy luster. (F.-L.) 'Tinsill clothe', Baret, ed. 1580; cf. Much Ado, iii. 4. 22. 'Under a duke, no man to wear cloth of gold tinsel.' Literary Remains of K. Edw. VI, an. 1551-2; cited in Trench, Select Glossary, q.v. 'A gowne of silver tyncell.' Excerpta Historica, p. 288 (ab. 1516). 'Tinsell (dictum a Gall. estincelle, i. scintilla, a spark). It signifieth with vs. a stuffe or cloth made partly of silke, and partly of gold or siluer, so called because it glistereth or sparkleth like starrs'; Minshew, ed. 1627. [Minshew's etymology is correct; the OF. estincelle, later étincelle, lost its initial syllable just as did the F. estique or étiquet, which became ticket in English.] = MF. estincelle, étincelle, 'a spark or sparkle of fire, a twinkle, a flash'; Cot.-L. scintilla, a spark; which seems to have been mispronounced as estincilla. Scintilla is dimin. from a form scinta*, a spark, not used. Allied to AS. scinan, to shiue; see Shine. Der. tinsel, adj. i.e. tinsel-like; tinsel-tipped, Milton, Comus, 877. And see stencil.

TINT, a slight tinge of colour. (L.) 1. For tinct, which was the older form of the word; Hamlet, iii. 4. 91. 'The first scent of a vessel lasts, and the tinct the wool first receives'; Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Præcipitendi Modi. 'A rosy-tincted face is heav'n's gold'; Drayton, K. John to Matilda, l. 57. Cf. tinct = dyed; Spenser, Shep. Kal. Nov. 107. = L. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. 2. But the mod. tint, as a term in painting, was prob. borrowed directly from Ital. tinto, a tint. = L. tincta, fem. of tinctus, pp. (as before). Der. tint, verb.

TINTINNABULATION, the ringing of bells. (L.) See E. A. Poe, The Bells. Formed from L. tintinnabulum, a bell. = L. tintinnare, to clink, to ring; reduplicated form, from tinnire, to ring, to tinkle. Of imitative origin; cf. tink-le, ting-le.

TINY, very small. (F.-L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. v. 398, 2 Hen. IV, v. 29, v. 3. 60, K. Lear, iii. 2. 74, where it is always preceded by little; the old editions have time or tyne. He speaks of 'a little tyne boy' (twice), 'my little tyne thief', and 'pretty little tyne kick-shaws'. The word was formerly spelt time or tyne; we find 'littell tyne child', in a Coventry pageant pr. by Sharp; see note to Cov. Myst., ed. Halliwell, p. 414. 'A littill tyne egg', Wars of Alexander, 507. It is almost always preceded by little, and was once a sb. 'He was constreyned... A lytill tyne shak to make a bew retret', Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 1063; 'A lytill tyne his ey castyng hym besyde, id. 1283. 'Sir, I pray you a lytill tyne stande backe'; Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 505. And later, we find: 'Thou hast stricken the Lord of Learne A litle tyne above the knee'; Percy Folio MS., i. 192. The sense seems to be 'a little bit'; and the form corresponds to OF. tyne, lit. 'a tub-full', from OF. tyne, a vat, tub, basin, bowl. = Late L. tyna, a wine-vessel (Lewis). See Notes on K. Etyim., p. 300.

TIP (1), the extreme top, the end. (E.) 'The tippe of a staffe'; Levins. ME. typ, Prompt. Parv. 'Uort pe nede tippe'—until the extremity of need, i.e. until [there be] extreme need, Ancræn Riwle, p. 338, l. 19. Prob. E., though not found in AS. = Du. tip, tip, end point; Low G. tip, point; up den Tipp von der Tied, in the very nick of time, Brem. Wört.; NFries. tipp, tippen, a tip; Dan. tip, tip; Swed. tip, end, point, extremity; G. ziffel, a dimin. form. Allied to Du. and EFries. tepel, a teat, EFries. tippel, a point. Cf. MDu. tip-ken, a teat. Der. tip, verb, to place on the tip of, chiefly in the pp. tipped, as in Chaucer, C. T. 14909 (B 4093); hence the sb. tipped-staf, i.e. spiked or piked staff, Chaucer, C. T. 7319 (D 1737); and hence [just as piked-staff became pike-staff] tip-staff, a term afterwards applied to 'certain officers that wait on the judge bearing a rod tipped with silver, Phillips; also to other officers who took men into custody. Cf. 'I tippe a staffe with yron.' Palsgrave. Also tip-toe; cf. on tip-toon on tip-toes, Chaucer, C. T. 15313 (B 4497); tipp-le.

TIP (2), to tilt, cause to slant or lean over. (E.) Gen. in the phr. to tip up = to tilt up, or tip over = to overturn. It is a weakened form of tap, as in tip (i.e. tap) and run, a game. Thus tip up is to tilt up by giving a slight tap, or by the exercise of a slight force; cf. tip for tap (blow for blow), Bullinger's Works, i. 283, now tit for tat. From the sense of slight movement we can explain the phrase to tip the wink—to make a slight movement of the eye-lid, sufficient to warn a person; it occurs in Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 202. Johnson gives: 'tip, to strike lightly, to tap'; with an illustration from Swift: 'he tips me by the elbow.' Palsgrave has: 'I type ouer, I ouerthrowe or ouerwhelme, Je renuerse. 'Tip, a fall'; Bradford's Works, ii. 104 (Parker Soc.). Not in AS. ME. tuppen, tipen. 'Tipe down zonder toune'; Allit. Poems, c. 506. Cf. EFries. tuppen, to tap lightly. = Swed. tippa, 'to tap, to tip, to strike gently, to touch lightly'; see Johnson's F. Dict.: 'Widgren. Der. tip, sb., a slight tap, wink, hint; tip-cat.

TIPPET, a cape, a cape of a cloak. (L.-Gk.) Also tepet, as in Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 301, l. 92. 'Teppet of velvet'; Paston Letters, iii. 325. ME. tipef, tepet, Chaucer, C. T. 233. AS. tæppet. 'Sifla, an healf hrnh tæppet', i.e. a half rough tippet; Voc. 152. 14; (Vestium nomina). [We also find AS. tæppe, a fillet or band; 'Tenia, tappan, vel dol-smeltas', Voc. 107. 33; where tæppan is the nom. plural. Not E. words, but borrowed.] = L. tapete, cloth, hangings. = Gk. τάπητ, stem of τάπη, a carpet, woollen rug. See Tape, Tapstry.

TIPPLE, to drink in small quantities, and habitually. (Scand.) Shak. has tipping, Antony, i. 4. 19. 'To tipple, poitane'; Levins, ed. 1570. A Scand. word; still preserved in Norweg. tippla, to drink little and often, to tittle (Aasen). It is the frequent. of Norw. tippa, to drip from a point or tip; Swed. dial. tippa, to drip, from tip, a tip; cf. Du. tepel, a nipple, teat. See Tip (1). Der. tippel-, tippel-ing.

TIPSY, intoxicated. (Scand.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 48. The formation of the word is difficult to explain, but it is clearly related to Tip (2), q.v. It means 'likely to tip over,' or 'unsteady,' ready to fall. Cf. ME. tipen, to upset. Cf. trick-sy, and other words with suffix -sy, in F. Hall, Modern English, p. 272. β Wedgwood cites Swiss tips, a fuddling with drink, tipeln, to fuddle oneself, betips, tipsy. These words present a remarkable likeness, especially as the E. and Swiss words can only be cognate, and neither language can easily have borrowed from the other; moreover, the Swiss words seem to be allied rather to tipple and to tip (1), than to tip (2). Cf. prov. E. tippy, tippity, easily upset. Der. tipsy-ly, ness.

TIRADE, a strain of censure or reproof. (F.-Ital.) Modern. = F. tirade, 'a draught, pull, . . . a shooting'; Cot. Hamilton explains F. tirade by 'a passage, a tirade or long speech (in a play)'. The lit. sense is a drawing out, a lengthening out. = Ital. tirata, a drawing, a pulling. = Ital. tirare, to pull, draw, pluck, snatch. From Late L. tirare, to pull, draw; of unknown origin; whence also F. tire.

TIRE (1), to exhaust, weary, fatigue, become exhausted. (E.) ME. tiren, teorian, not a very common word. Stratmann refers us to the Towneley Mysteries, p. 126; and to p. 5 of a Fragment printed by Sir Thos. Phillips, where occur the words him teoreþ his mikt—his might is exhausted. It occurs also in the compound atiren, as: 'gief mihte þe ne atireð'—if might (or power) fail thee not, i.e. if thy power be not tired out; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 29, l. 25. AS. tirgan; as in 'ðeah þu ge-tirge', though thou grow weary; Alfred's tr. of Boethius, ch. x1 (bk. v. pr. 1). The γ is a mutation from θ , as in tiorian, (1) to be tired, be weary, (2) to tie, fatigue; Grein, ii. 520. β It is remarkable that the dictionaries frequently refer tire (in the sense to be weary) to AS. tirgan, which is not the same thing, but related rather to Tarre, q.v. That tiorian is the real equivalent of E. tire may be seen by examining the uses of tiorian, getiorian, and atiorian. One example may suffice. 'Thorode hwæþre . . . strong . . . wërig þas weorces': nevertheless the strong one tired, being weary of the work; Exeter Book, ed. Thorpe, p. 436, Riddle lv. l. 16. 'Fatigatus, atired'; Voc. 170, 30. Further connexions doubtful; it can hardly be allied to F. tear, vñ, or to G. zekren. Sweet marks the ϵ long (teorin); cf. O. Low G.

tiurung, lassitude (Gallée). Der. tir-ed, tir-ed-ness, tire-some, tire-some-ness.

TIRE (2), a head-dress; as a verb, to adorn or dress the head. (F.—Teut. ?) 'She . . . tired her head.' 2 Kings, ix. 30. The examples show that this is an abbreviation for attire. See esp. Prompt. Parv. p. 494: 'Tyre, or a-tyre of wemmene, Mundum muliebrius.' Again, in Will. of Palerne, 1147, we have dir, but in l. 1725 we have tyr; cf. 'in no gay tyr,' Alexander and Dindimus, 883; 'tidi a-tyr,' id. 599. β. We have also the verb to tire, 2 Kings, ix. 30; cf. 'Attouré, tired, dressed, attired, decked,' Cot. The ME. verb was attiren, whence attired, pp., Will. of Palerne, 1228. However, the sb. appears earlier than the verb, being spelt atyr, with the sense 'apparel'; Layamon, 3275, later text. See Attire.

TIRE (3), a hoop of iron that binds the felloes of wheels together. (F.—Teut. ?) 'Tire, the ornament or dress of woomens heads; also, the iron band of a cart-wheel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The metall [a kind of iron] is brittle and short . . . such as will not serue one whit for stroke and nail to bind cart-wheels withall, which tire indeed would [should] be made of the other that is gentle and pliable;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 14. [Here stroke = stroke, rim of a wheel; see Halliwell.] β. The history of the word is obscure; it seems to me that the word is identical with TIRE (2), the wheel-band being likened to a woman's tire. Tire meant to dress or arrange; 'I tyer an egge, le accoutre; 'I tyer with garments' &c.; Palsgrave. To attire once meant to equip, or to furnish (N. E. D.). ¶ I have no belief in Richardson's jest-like suggestion, that a tire is a ti-cr, because it ties the wheel together. The ME. tyere or tyere nowhere occurs in connexion with a wheel.

TIRE (4), to tear a prey, as is done by predatory birds. (F.—Late L.) In Shak. Venus, 56; 1 Hen. VI. i. 269. ME. tiren, to tear a prey, only used of vultures, &c.; see Chaucer, Troilus, l. 787; tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 30. —F. tirer, 'to draw, drag, . . . pull, pluck, tug, twitch;' Cot.—Late L. tirare, to draw, extract; Du Cange. See Tirado.

TIRE (5), a train. (F.—Late L.) Only in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 35. —F. tire, 'a draught, pull, . . . stretch . . . reach, gate, course, or length and continuance of a course;' Cot.—F. tirer, to draw; see Tirado.

TIRO, TYRO, a novice. (L.) Usually misspelt tyro. 'Tyro, a new fresh-water soldier, a novice, apprentice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'That thorousur tyro should dare;' Beaumont, Introd. in Mirror for Magistrates (1578). In Mount's Gloss, ed. 1674, it appears as tyrone, evidently from Ital. tirone, 'a milksoop,' Florio, answering to L. acc. tironem. —L. tiro, a recruit, novice, tiro. Root uncertain. Der. tiro-clum, a first campaign, school, apprenticeship; the title of a poem by Cowper.

TISIC, phthisis. (F.—Gk.) Spelt tyyke, Skelton, Magnificence, 561. See Phthisis.

TISSUE, cloth interwoven with gold or silver. (F.—L.) ME. tissau, a ribbon, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 639. —F. tissu, 'a hawdrick, ribbon, fillet, or head-band of woven stuffe;' Cot. Also tissu, m., tissus, f., 'woven, plaited, interlaced;' id. Tissu was the old pp. of tistre (mod. F. tisser), to weave. —L. texere, to weave; see Text.

TIT (1), a small horse or child. (Scand.) 'The tits are little worth,' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. ix. 14; where tit means 'a little girl.' 'A little tit,' a small horse; Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. ii (K.). —Icel. títtr, a tit, bird (now obsolete); the dimin. títtingr, a sparrow, is still in use; Norweg. tita, a little bird, small trout (Asen). The orig. sense is merely something small, cf. prov. F. titty, small; tiddy-wren, a wren (Halliwell). Der. tit-ling, a sparrow, from Icel. títtingr, as above, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also tit-lark, q. v., tit-mouse, q. v.

TIT (2), a teat. (E.) ME. tite; pl. tittes, Ancrer Riwle, p. 330, l. 5. AS. tit, titt, Voc. 88. 24; pl. tittas (Toller). —Low G. tite, M.Du. titte, G. zitze; cf. Welsh, did, didi, a teat. See Teat.

TIT FOR TAT, blow for blow. (E.) In Holinshed, Chron., ed. 1808, vi. 298. Perhaps a corruption of tip for tap, where tip is a slight tap; Bullinger's Works, i. 283 (Parker Society). 'That which requirith tip for tap;' Gascoigne's Works, i. 463. —See Tip (2). β. Or it may be from the proverb—'To give one tiat for tant,' in Walker's Provurbs (1672); see Hazlitt's Proverbs. And tiat for tant seems to be an F. version of F. tant pour tant, lit. 'so much for so much.' Tit for tat is in Heywood's Prov. (1546); repr. 1874, p. 109. TITAN, the sun-god. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. Rom. ii. 3. 4; &c. Spelt Tytan, Lydgate, Compl. of Black Knight, l. 28. —L. Titān, Titānus; whence Titāni, descendants of Titan, giants. —Gk. Titrās, the sun-god, brother of Helios. —Skt. tītā, fire; in the diet, by Böhtlingk and Roth, iii. 327. —A/TEITH, to burn. Der. titān-ir, i. e. gigantic. Also titān-um, a metal.

TITHE, a tenth part, the tenth of the produce as offered to the clergy. (F.) ME. tithe, Chaucer, C. T. 541 (A 539). The proper sense is 'tenth'; hence tenth part. [Another spelling is teke, as in 'the teke hest' = the tenth commandment, Will. of Shoreham, p. 101, l. 1; AS. teōda, tenth.] β. The form tithe answers to AS. suffix -tigoda, as in ruen-tigoda, twentieth. Also spelt -teogoda, O.Merc. -tegoda; allied to Gk. dekaros, tenth, from deka, ten, see Ten. We also have ten-ia, in which n is retained; so that tenak and tithe are doublets. Cf. Icel. tíund, tenth, tithe; see Decimal. Der. tithe, verb, ME. tithen, tithen, P. Plowman, c. xiv. 73. AS. tithian, Matt. xxiii. 23; tith-er, Chaucer, C. T. 6896; tith-ing, ME. tithing, a district containing ten families, Rob. of Glouc. p. 267, l. 5402.

TITILLATION, a tickling. (F.—L.) [The verb titillare is in later use; cf. 'titillating dust,' Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 84.] The sb. is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 766. —F. titillation, a tickling; Cot. —L. titillatōem, acc. of titillatio, a tickling. —L. titillare, to tickle.

TITLARK, a kind of lark. (Scand. and E.) 1 lit. 'small lark;' see Tit and Lark.

TITLE, an inscription set over or at the beginning of a book, a name of distinction. (F.—L.) ME. title, Chaucer, C. T. 14398 (B 3512); Wyclif, John, xix. 19. —OF. titre; mod. F. titre, by change from t to r. —L. titulus, acc. of titulus, a superscription on a tomb, altar, &c.; an honourable designation. Der. title, verb; tit-ed, altar, &c.; an honourable designation. Per. ii. 3. 4; titul-ar, from F. titulaire, 'titular, having a title,' Cot.; as if from L. titulāris*, from titulus, verb, to give a title to. Hence titular-ly, titular-y. See also Titile.

TITLING, a small bird. (Scand.) See Tit. TITMOUSE, a kind of small bird. (Scand. and E.) Not connected with mouse; the true pl. should be titmouses, yet titmice is usual, owing to confusion with mouse. In Spenser, Shep. Kal. Nov. 26, it is spelt titmouse. ME. titmouse; spelt titmouse, Prompt. Parv. titmouse, Voc. 620. 28. Compounded of tit, small, or a small bird, Icel. títtr (see Tit); and AS. mīse, a name for several kinds of small birds. —β. The AS. mīse occurs in 'Sigatula, fræc-mīse; Farra, col-mīse; Parrula, spīc-mīse, all names of birds; see Voc. 286. 13-15. The n is long, as shown by the ME. -mōse, 4-Du. māse, a titmouse; G. mīse, a titmouse; OHG. mīsa; Icel. meisnir (F. mésange). Teut. type maishn-*, f. The sense was prob. 'twitterer'; cf. L. maerire (for maerire*, cf. pp. maer-ius), to lament, mourn (Frank). Cf. also L. merula (for mis-ula*), from the weak grade mis*; see Merle.

TITTER, to giggle, laugh restrainedly. (F.) Cf. twitter. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 276. The same as ME. titeren, to chatter, prattle, tell idle tales, whence titerer, a teller of tales, P. Plowman, li. xx. 297. A frequentative form from a base TIT, expressive of repeating the sound ti, just as tattle expresses the repetition of ta. See further under Tattle. Cf. Twitter. Der. titer, sb.

TITILE, a jot, small particle. (F.—L.) ME. titil, titil, used by Wyclif to translate L. apex; Matt. vi. 18; Luke, xvi. 17. [Really a doublet of titile.] —OF. titile, a title; (F. titre, a title); MF. titile, titre, 'a title, a small line drawn over an abridged word, to supply letters wanting; also a title' &c.; Cot.—L. titulus, acc. of titulus, a title, used by Petronius in the sense of sign or token. β. In Late L. titulus means again in Spain. titile, Port. til, a stroke over a letter such as the mark over Span. ñ; also in the Catalan titlla, Wallachian titile, a mark of an accent, cited by Diez, s. v. titile. The latter forms are unmistakably Latin. See Title. ¶ Not allied to tit.

TITTLE-TATTLE, prattle. (E.) See Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248. A reduplicated form of titile. Note the use of tittlere, also spelt tittlere, a prattler, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. See Tattle and Tiddle; and see Titter.

TO, in the direction of, as far as. (E.) ME. to, Chaucer, C. T. 16; and, as sign of the gerund, 13, 17; now considered as the sign of the infin. mood, the gerundial use being nearly lost. AS. tō, prep.; also a sign of the gerund as distinct from the infin. mood; Grein, ii. 536-542. —4-Du. toe; (F. zu; MHG. zu, 22; OHG. za, 22, 21, 220. —Kuss. do, to, up to. Supposed to be further related to Gk. -de, towards, as in oleo-de, home-wards; see Curtius, i. 289. Perhaps also to OIrish do, to; OWelsh di (mod. W. di), to; W. dy as a prefix; see Rhys, Lectures on W. Philology. Doublet, too, q. v. And see to (2), to-ward, to-day, to-night.

TO (1), prefix, in twain, asunder, to pieces. (E.) Retained in the phr. all to-brake = utterly broke asunder, Judges, ii. 53. With regard to the dispute as to whether it should be printed all to-brake or all-to-brake, it is certain that only the former is etymologically correct: but the phrase was already so ill understood in the Tudor period that such a mistaken use as all-to-brake was possible, though it is charitable to give our translators the benefit of the doubt. It is purely a question of chronology. At first the prefix to was used without all; later, all was often added as well, not only before the prefix to-, but before the prefixes for- and bi- also; next, all was considered as in some way belonging to to, as if all-to were short for altogether (which it is not), and consequently all-to appeared as a sort of adverb, and was considered as such, apparently, by Surrey and Latimer. It would be difficult to find any clear example of this latest use before A.D. 1530. It began with AS. to-, prefix; appearing in to-beran, to bear apart, remove; to-berstan, to burst asunder; to-blawan, to blow asunder, dissipate; to-brecan, to break asunder; and in nearly fifty other verbs, for which see Grein, ii. 542-549. We may particularly note 'hyra setlu he to-brice' = he brake in pieces their seats, Matt. xxi. 12. 2. ME. to-, prefix; appearing in tobestan, to beat in pieces, tobiten, to bite in pieces, tobrehen, to break in pieces; and in nearly a hundred other verbs, for which see Strattmann's Dict., 3rd ed., pp. 565-568. We may particularly note 'al his bondes he to-brak for lye' = all his bonds he brake in twain for joy; Will. of Palerne, 3437. 3. It should also be observed that most verbal prefixes (such as for-, be-) were usually written apart from the verb in old MSS.; ignorance of this fact has misled many. Good examples of the addition of al as an intensive, meaning 'wholly,' are the following. '[He] al-to-tare his a-ir pat he to-tere mist; Will. of Palerne, 3884; 'al for-waked' = entirely worn out with lying awake, id. 790; 'al bi-wufed for wo' = all covered with tears for wo, id. 661; 'al is to-brosen thilke region; Chaucer, C. T. 2759 (A 2757); 'he suld be soyne to-frusht al' = he would soon be broken in pieces, Harboure, Bruce, x. 597. The last instance is particularly instructive, as it follows the pp. instead of preceding it. 3. All-to or al-to, when (perhaps) misunderstood. 'To-day redy ripe, to-morrow all-to-shaken;' Surrey, Sonnet 9, last line. 'We be fallen into the dirt, and be all-to-dirtied;' Latimer, Remains, p. 397 (Parker Soc.). 'Smiling speakers . . . love and all-to love him;' Latimer, Sermons, p. 289. The last instance is a clear one. Spenser has all-to-torn, F. Q. v. 9, 10, and all-to-worne in the same stanza; all-to-runt, F. Q. iv. 7, 8. Milton has all-to-ruffled, Comus, 380; this is a very late example. B. Etymologically, the AS. to- is cognate with OFries. to-, to-; OHG. zār-, zār-, mod. G. zer-, as in zerbrechen, to break in pieces, pt. t. zerbrach (=to-brake). The sense of this prefix is 'in twain,' or 'asunder;' but it is difficult to connect it with AS. twā, two, or even with L. dis-.

TO- (3), prefix, to. (E.) Besides the prefix to- (= in twain) discussed above, we also have the prep. to in composition in some verbs, &c. Of these compounds, we still use to-ward, q. v. Others are obsolete; the chief are the sbs. to-ward, advent, to-ward, a refuge, to-ward, hope, to-ward, a nick-name; and the verb to-warden, to approach, Wyclif, Judith, xiv. 14. See Strattmann. And see TODAY.

TOAD, an amphibious animal. (L.) ME. toad; spell toode, Prompt. Parv., p. 495; toade, Tricke of Conscience, 6900. AS. tādige; 'Bufo, tādige;' Voc. 122. 11. Also tādie, id. 321. 23. Root unknown. The Dan. toad, Swed. tåssa, a toad, must be from a different root. Der. toad-pole, q. v.; also toad-stool, spell toadestool, Spenser, Shep. Kal., Dec. 69, and in Palsgrave; toad-flax; toad-eater, formerly an assistant to a mountebank (see Wedgwood, and N. and Q. 3rd S. i. 128, 176, 236, 276, v. 142), now shortened to toady; toad-stone, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 13, § 3.

TOAST (1), bread scorched before the fire. (F.-L.) ME. toast, whence the verb toasten, to toast; see Prompt. Parv., p. 497. = OF. toster, to toast (Godefroy); the usual OF. sb. was toiste, 'a toast of bread;' marked as a Picard word in Cotgrave. = L. toastus, pp. of torrere, to parch; see TORRID. Cf. Span. tostar, torrar, to toast, toastada, a toast, slice of toasted bread; Port. toastado, toasted, tostar, torrar, to toast. Der. toast, verb; toast-er, toast-ing-iron, K. John, iv. 3, 99.

TOAST (2), a person whose health is drunk. (F.-L.) It was formerly usual to put toasted bread in liquor; see Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 5. 3. The story of the origin of the present use of the word is given in the Tatler, no. 24, June 4, 1709. 'Many wits of the last age will assert that the word, in its present sense, was known among them in their youth, and had its rise from an accident at the town of Bath, in the reign of king Charles the Second. It happened that, on a public day, a celebrated beauty of those times was in the Cross Bath, and one of the crowd of her admirers took a glass of the water in which the fair one stood, and drank her health to the company. There was in the place a gay fellow half-fuddled, who offered to jump in, and swore, though he liked not the liquor, he would have the toast. He was opposed in his resolution; yet this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquors, who has ever since been called a toast. Whether the story be true or not, it may be seen that a toast, i. e. a health, easily took its name from being the usual accompaniment to liquor, esp. in loving-cups, &c. As to this putting of toast into drinks, see Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 340. Der. toast, vb.; toast-master, the announcer of toasts at a public dinner.

TOBACCO, a narcotic plant. (Span. - Hayti.) Formerly spell tabacco, Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 4 (last speech). See remarks in Whistley's Introduction to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour. Harrison fixes on 1573 as the date when the smoking of tobacco became general in England. Spelt tabacco in Hakluyt, Voy. ii. 2. 158. Cotgrave mentions tobacco, s. v. Nicotiana. = Span. tabaco, tobacco. Las Casas (Hist. of the Indies) says that tabaco was the name of the tube or pipe in which the Indians or Caribs smoked the plant, transferred by the Spaniards to the herb itself. Oviedo (1535) says tabaco is a Hayti word; see Oviedo, ed. 1851, Madrid, iv. 96. So also Clavigero, in his Conquest of Mexico (E. transl. i. 430), says: 'tabaco is a word taken from the Haitian language, i. e. the language spoken in the island of Hayti or St. Domingo. Der. tobacco-nut, a coined word, orig. used, not of the seller (as now), but of the smoker of tobacco; see examples in Trench, Select Glossary; tobacco-pipe.

TOBOGGAN, a kind of snow-sledge. (Amer. Indian.) Said to be a Canadian perversion of an American Indian odabagan, a sledge. S. T. Rand, in his Micmac Vocabulary, gives the Micmac form as tobaakus (= tobākan), a sled. Micmac is a language belonging to the Algonquin family.

TOCHER, a dowry. (Gaelic.) 'Iley for a lass wi' a tocher;' Burns (Song). = Gael. and Irish tochar, a dowry, assigned portion. = Olrish tochar, a putting, assigning; tocharum, 1 put. = Olrish to, do, to, prep. and verbal prefix; cuir-im, I put, assign.

TOCSIN, an alarm-bell, or the sound of it. (F. - Teut. and L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. He quotes: 'The priests went up into the steeple, and rang the bells backward, which they call tockaine, whereupon the people . . . flocked together;' Fulke, Answer to P. Fraricus (1580), p. 52. = MF. toquesing, 'an allarm bell, or the ringing thereof;' Cot. Mod. F. toisin (see Littré). = OF. toquer, 'to clap, knock, hit;' Cot., and OF. sing (Norm. dial. sin), 'a sign, mark, . . . also a bell or the sound of a bell, whence toeing, an allarm bell;' id. Thus it means 'a striking of the signal-bell.' 2. The Norm. dial. toquer, Picard toker, are variants of F. toucher, to touch; see TOUCH. The OF. sing, mod. F. signe, is from L. signum, a mark, hence a signal, signal-bell; see SIGN. Cf. AF. sein, a bell; Liber Albus, p. 119. Thus toe-sin = touch-sign. See TUOKET.

TOD, a bush; a certain measure of wool; a fox. (Scand.) 'An yvie todde;' an ivy-bush; Spenser, Shep. Kal., March, 67. 'Wulle is bought by the sacke, by the tod, by the stone;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 191. Palsgrave has 'Todde of woll' = tod of wool; and 'tode of chese' = tod of cheese. See Nares. Tod, a fox, occurs in Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, hymn 4; and see Jamieson's Sc. Dict. 'The fox is supposed to be so named from his bushy tail.' = Icel. toddi (nearly obsolete), a tod of wool; a bit, a piece. = Du. todde, a rag; Efris. todde, a bundle; G. zotte, zote, a tuft of hair hanging together, a rag, anything shaggy. Allied to Efris. todden, to trail, to draw along, drag after one. Perhaps allied to TED.

TODAY, this day. (E.) Compounded of to, prep., and day. The etymology is obscured by the disuse of the prep. to in the old sense of 'for,' thus to day = for the day; to night = for the night; &c. Strattmann cites me ches him to kinge = people chose him for king, Rob. of Glouc. p. 302; yuenen to wyne = to give to wife, Chaucer, C. T. 1864 (A 1860). See particularly the article on AS. to in Grein, p. 540: he gives examples of to dage, for the day, today; to dage ðissum, for this day, today; to midre nichte, to or at midnight; to morgene = for the morn. to-morrow. Hence our to-day, to-morrow, to-night, and prov. E. to-year, i. e. for the present year, this year; MF. toyer, Chaucer, C. T. 2750 (D 168).

TODDLE, to walk unsteadily as a child. (E.) Given as a Northern word by Todd, in his additions to Johnson. The same as Lowl. Sc. tottle, to walk with short steps; Jamieson. Further, tottle is equivalent to totter, the frequentative suffixes -le and -er being equivalent; see TOTTER. = Swed. tulta, to toddle; the spelling with t is duly explained s. v. trotter. And cf. G. (Bavar.) zoteln, to toddle, though probably formed in another way.

TODDY, a mixture of spirits. (Hindustani. - Pers.) 'The toddy-tree is not unlike the date or palm;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 29 (R.). = Hindustani tārī, tāqī; vulgarly toddy, the juice or sap of the palmyra-tree and of the coccol-nut [which] when allowed to stand . . . becomes a fiery and highly intoxicating spirit; H. II. Wilson, Glossary of Indian Terms, p. 510. = Hind. tār, 'a palm-tree . . . most appropriate to the Palmyra, from the stem of which the juice is extracted which becomes toddy;' id. = Pers. tār, 'a species of palm-tree from which an intoxicating liquor, toddy, is extracted;' Rich. Dict., p. 353. The r in the Hind. word has a peculiar (correl) sound, which has come to be represented by d in English. Cf. Skt. tāla, the palmyra tree.

TO-DO, stir, bustle. (E.) 'What a to-do is here!' Evelyn, Diary, Mar. 22, 1675. Compounded of to, prep., and do, verb. See ADO.

TOE, one of the five small members at the end of the foot. (E.) ME. toe, pl. toon, Chaucer, C. T. 14868 (B 4054). AS. tā, pl. tān or taon, Laws of Æthelbirt, §§ 70, 71, 72, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 20. This is a contracted form, standing for tōke; Omerc. tāhæ, Corpus Gloss. 141. + Du. teen; Icel. tā, pl. tār; Dan. taa, pl. taeer; Swed. tå; G. zehr; OHG. zēha, a toe, also a finger. We also find (Olow G. tēwa, a toe (Galle); with w (< gw) for h (< hw)). β. All from Teut. type tūhōn-*. L. Possibly allied to L. digitus (< dicitus*), a finger (Walde). See Digit and Token. γ. Distinct from toe in misletoe. Der. to-ed, having toes.

TOFFEE, TOFFY, a coarse kind of candy, made of sugar or molasses, &c. (F. — Malay.) In the United States, it is usually taffy. = F. tajña, a spirit made from molasses; in use in 1722 (Hatzfeld). = Malay tajña, the same. See Rataña.

TOFT, a green knoll, open ground, homestead. (Scand.) ME. toft, a knoll, P. Plowm. B. prol. 14. Late AS. toft (Toller). = Icel. toft (pron. toft), also tuft (pron. tuft), tuft, tuft (the oldest spelling), a place to build on; Swed. tuft, the site of a building. Perhaps for tūmft-* < tūm-* (cf. tuft), cognate with Gk. tuft, soil, floor; lit. 'site for building'. From the weak grade of denu*, to build (Gk. tuft); and pedon*, as in Gk. tuft, ground, earth. See Dan. tuft in Falk.

TOGA, the mantle of a Roman citizen. (L.) Whether toga — toga really occurs in Shakespeare is doubtful. Phillips gives it in his Dict. = L. toga, a kind of mantle, lit. a covering. = I. toga, 2nd grade of togas, to cover; see Tegument.

TOGETHER, in the same place, at the same time. (E.) ME. to-gedre, to-gedre, to-gidre, P. Plowm. B. prol. 46; to-gedres, id. xvi. 80. We even find the compound al-together as early as in the Ancien Riwle, p. 320, l. 25. For the spelling with d, cf. ME. fader, a father, fader, mother. AS. tū-gedre, tū-gedre; together, Grein, ii. 544. = AS. tū, to; and gader, together, Grein, i. 491; see further under Gather. Der. al-together.

TOIL (1), labour, fatigue; as a verb, to labour. (F. — L.) ME. toil; the dat. toile, in Morte Arture, ed. Brock, 1802, means a tussle or struggle. 'And when these com on ther was so grete toile and remour of noyse that wonder it was to heere, and therwith aroos so grete a duste.' Merlin, ed. Wheatley, p. 393, l. 1. Iow. Sc. tuyl, disturbance; Bernardus, &c., ed. Lumby, p. 24, l. 45 (E. E. S. T.); tuyl, vb., to trouble, id. p. 27, l. 123. Thus the old sense was rather turmoil or disturbance than labour. Cf. AF. toyl, glossed 'strif'; Walter de Bibbesworth; in Wright, Vocab. 147, l. 3. Also AF. toiler, to strive; A Nominal, ed. Skeat, l. 131. β. As to the verb toilen, its meaning was also different from that of mod. E. toil. We find: 'rudliche toyled to and fro' — rudely pulled or tugged to and fro, Debate between Body and Soul, l. 368, in Müntzer, Sprachproben, i. 100. Also: 'tore and toyled' — torn and pulled about or spoilt, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 143, l. 372. We may also note Iowland Sc. tuill, toil (Jamieson); and perhaps Sc. tuilzie, tuilzie, a quarrel, broil, struggle, is closely related, as well as tuilze, to harass, occurring in Barbour's Bruce, iv. 152, where the Edinb. MS. has the pp. tuilzit. γ. The origin seems to be found in OF. tuillier, MF. tuillier, 'filthily to mix or mingle, confound or shuffle together'; to mingle, trouble, or pester by scurvy meddling, also to bedir, beguile, besmear, smeech, bery; γ. Cot. The origin of this F. word is obscure; but Hatzfeld derives it from L. tudicula, to stir up (correctly, as it seems). = L. tudicula, a machine for bruising olives, dimin. of tudes, a mallet. = L. tud-, as in tu-tud-, pt. t. of tudere, to beat. ¶ Sometimes derived from MDu. tuylen, 'to till, or to manure lands'; Hexham; cf. tuyl, sb., 'tilling or manuring of lands', id.; but it seems impossible to explain the senses of ME. toilen from this source only. Der. toil-some, Spenser, F. O. ii. 12, 29; toil-some-ness.

TOIL (2), a net or snare. (F. — L.) In Hamlet, iii. 2, 362. The pl. toyles is in Spenser, Astrophel, 97. = F. toile, 'a linen cloth, also, a stalking-horse of cloth; toile de armoire, a cloth-web; pl. toiles, toils, or a hay to inclose or intangle wild beasts in.' Cot. = L. telu, a web, thing woven; for tex-la* = L. texere, to weave; see Text. Der. toil-et (below).

TOILET, TOILETTE, a small cloth on a dressing-table; hence, a dressing-table, or the operation of dressing. (F. — L.) Toilet, a kind of table-cloth, ... made of fine linen, &c. spread upon a table. ... where persons of quality dress themselves; a dressing-cloth; γ. Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt toylet in Cotgrave. = F. toilette, 'a toylet, the stuff which drapers lap about their cloths, also a bag to put nightcloths in.' Cot. Dimin. of toile, cloth; see Toil (2).

TOISE, a French measure of length. (F. — L.) It contains 6 feet, and a little over 4½ inches. = F. toise, 'a fadome, a measure containing six feet in length.' Cot. Cf. Ital. tesa, a stretching. = I. tesa, sc. braccia, the [length of the] outstretched arms, neut. pl. of pp. of tendere, to stretch. See Tense (2).

TOKAY, a white wine. (Hungary.) Mentioned in Townson's Travels in Hungary (1797); see quotation in Todd's Johnson. Also in Fielding, The Miser (1732). A. iii. Sc. 3. So named from Tokay, a town in Hungary, at some distance E.N.E. from Pesh.

TOKEN, a mark, sign, memorial, coin. (E.) ME. token, Chaucer, C. T. 13289 (B 1549). The answers to AS. z, as usual. AS. tācen, tācen, a very common word; Grein, ii. 520. + Du. teeken, a sign, mark, token, miracle; Icel. tāken, tāken; Dan. tegn; Swed. tecken; G. zeichen; Goth. taikun. Teut. types taikun-, taikun-, fem.; allied to Tosoh. The base taik* answers to Idg. doig-, to grade of deig-, which seems to be a variant of Idg. DEIK-*, to show, indicate; cf. L. dig-nus, worthy. Bragman, i. § 762 (3). Cf. Index, Diction. Cf. I. in-dic-are, to point out, AS. tikan, Goth. gaitikan, to show, G. zeigen, to show. Der. be-taken.

TOLERATE, to bear, endure, put up with. (L.) 'To tolerate those things'; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 14, § 2. = L. tolerātus, pp. of tolerāre, to endure; allied to tolle, to lift, bear. = γ. tol-, to lift, bear; cf. Skt. tol-, to lift, tolā, to suffer, AS. tolian, to endure, L. latus, pp. of latere. See Thole (2). Der. tolera-bile, from F. tolerable, 'tolerable', Cot., from I. tolerābilis, that can be endured; toler-abil-y, toler-able-ness; toler-ation, from F. toleration, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littré); from L. acc. tolerātionem, endurance; toler-ance, from MF. tolerance, 'toleration, sufferance', Cot., from L. tolerantia, sufferance; toler-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of tolerāre. From the same root are o-tolus, tol-ent, ex-tol; e-late, co-late, di-late, ab-late, pre-late, pro-late, re-late, trans-late, legis-late, ab-lat-ive, super-lat-ive.

TOLL (1), a tax for the privilege to use a road or sell goods in a market. (L. — Gk.) ME. tol, tribute, Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 7. AS. tol, Matt. xvii. 25. + Du. tol; Icel. tol; Dan. tol (for toll*); Swed. toll; G. zoll, toll. β. All from Teut. type tollaz*, m.; which might be explained as < tulaz*, from the weak grade tul-* (with suffix -naz) of Teut. tel-*, the root of Tale. But the existence of by-forms, as AS. toln, a toll (whence toln-ere, a toller), OSax. tolna, toll, OFries. tolne, OHG. zollan-tuon, as well as OHG. zollnari, MDu. tolle-nari, a toller, suggest that all these were borrowed from Late I. tolli-nium, for I. telium; from Gk. τελώνιον, a toll-house, Matt. ix. 9. Cf. also F. tonlieu, a toll; from Late I. tonlieum, tolleum, for L. telionium. γ. The Gk. τελώνιον is from τέλος, a tax, toll, allied to L. tolle, to take, and Gk. τέλαινον (see Talent); a distinct word from τέλος, with the sense of 'end'. Der. tol, verb, MF. tollen, Chaucer, C. T. 564 (A 562); toll-er, ME. tolle, P. Plowman, B. prol. 220; tol-booth, ME. tolbothe, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 9; toll-bar, gate-house.

TOLL (2), to pull a large bell; to sound as a bell. (E.) We now say 'a bell toll', i.e. sounds, but the old usage was 'to toll a bell', i.e. to pull it, set it ringing, as in Minshew, Skinner, and Phillips. The latter explains to toll a bell by 'to ring a bell after a particular manner.' It is remarkable that the sense of 'sound' occurs as early as in Shakespeare, who has, 'the clocks do toll'; γ. Hen. V. chorus to act iv. l. 15. Yet we may be satisfied that the present word, which has given some trouble to etymologists, is rightly explained by Nares, Todd, and Wedgwood, who take toll to be the ME. tollen, to pull, entice, draw, and Wedgwood adds: 'To toll the bells is when they ring slowly to invite the people into church.' The double sense of toll is remarkably shown by two quotations given by Richardson from Dryden, Duke of Guise, Act iv: 'Some crowd the spires, but most the hallow'd bells And softly toll for souls departing knells'; and again: 'When hollow murmurs of their evening-bells Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them [invite them] to their cells.' Minshew has: 'To toll a bell, and 'to toll, draw on or entice.' See examples in Nares and Todd. β. ME. tollen. Tollun, or meyn, or steryn to doon, Incito, provoco, excito; Prompt. Parv. Tollare, or styrate to do goede or badde; Excitator, inagitor; γ. id. '[He] tollid [drew] hys own wyf away'; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 3052. 'This tollid him toward thee' — this draws him towards you; Ancien Riwle, p. 290, l. 5. There is a long note on this curious word, with numerous examples, in St. Marharet, ed. Cockayne, p. 110; the oldest sense seems to be to coax or fondle, entice, draw towards one. γ. All is clear so far; but the origin of ME. tollra is obscure; we may suppose it to be nearly related to AS. fortyllan, to allure, Grein, i. 332; cf. ME. tuller, to entice, lure, Chaucer, C. T. 4133 (A 4134). See Thill (3).

TOLU, a kind of resin. (S. America.) Also called Tolu balsam or balsam of Tolu. = Balm. . from γ. Tollu, not farre from Carthage; γ. E. G., tr. of Acosta, II. Ind. Indies (1604), bk. iv. ch. 28. Named from Tolu, a place on the N.W. coast of New Granada, in S. America.

TOM, a pet name for Thomas. (L. — Gk. — Heb.) Spelt Thomme, P. Plowman, B. v. 28. = I. Thomis, = Gk. Θωμάς, Matt. x. 3. 111.

'twin'; cf. Heb. tōmim, pl., twins. This is why Thomas was also called Didymus; from Gk. δίδυμος, a twin. Der. tom-boy, tom-cat, tom-tit.

TOMAHAWK, a light war-hatchet of the N. American Indians. (W. Indian.) Capt. J. Smith has: 'Tomahawks, axes;' in his Vocabulary of Indian words; Works, p. 44. From the Algonkin tomehagan, Mohegan tumehagan, Delaware tamohacan, a war-hatchet (Webster); Micmac tumigun (S. T. Rand). Explained by Lacombe from the Cree dialect; otamahuk, knock him down; otimahawun, he is knocked down; Cent. Dict.

TOMATO, a kind of fruit, a love-apple. (Span.-Mexican.) 'Tomates, which are . . . very wholesome;' E. G. tr. of Acosta, Hist. Indies (1604); bk. iv. ch. 20. From Span. (and Port.) tomate, a tomato; we probably used final o for e because o is so common an ending in Spanish. Borrowed from Mexican tomatl.

TOMAU, a Persian gold coin. (Pers.-Mongol.) Worth about 7s. 6d. 'A Tomau is five marks sterling;' Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (1638), p. 225 (Yule). — Pers. tūmān, 'a gold coin worth about 10s. 1/2.' Palmer. From a Mongol word meaning 'ten thousand;' spelt tomau by Marco Polo, bk. i. ch. 54 (Yule).

TOMB, a grave, vault for the dead. (F.-I.-Gk.) MF. tombe, tomba, Chaucer, C. T. 10832 (F 518); tunbe, Layamon, 6080, later text. — OF. tunbe; F. tomba, 'a tomb;' Cot. — L. tumba, a tomb (White). — Gk. τύμβη, for the common form τύμβος, a tomb, sepulchre; properly a burial-mound, Irish tonn, a little hill; Skt. tanva, prominent, a height. Brugmann, i. § 103. Prob. allied to L. tumulus (Curtius, ii. 139); see TUMULUS. Der. tomb-less, Hen. V. i. 220; tomb-stone; en-tomb.

TOMBAC, TOMBACK, a variety of brass. (F.-Port.-Malay.-Skt.) F. tombac (Hatzfeld). — Port. tambaca, 'tambac,' Vieyra; (and see Yule). — Malay tumbaga, copper. — Skt. tāmra-kā-m, copper (Henfrey).

TOMBOY, a rude girl. (I.-Gk.-Ileb.) In Shak. Cymb. i. 6. 122. From Tom and Boy. ¶ So also tom-cat, tom-tit, tom-foot.

TOME, a volume of a book. (F.-I.-Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave. — F. tome, 'a tome, or volume;' Cot. — L. tomus, acc. of tomus, a volume. — Gk. τόμος, a section; hence, a volume. From τομή, and grade of τομή, as in τομή, to cut. — √TEM, to cut, whence L. tōndere, to shear; see TONSURE. Der. (from same root) a-tom-y, a-ton, en-ton-o-logy, epi-ton-e, liho-ton-y, phlebo-ton-y, zoo-ton-y.

TOMORROW, on the morrow, on the morn succeeding this one. (E.) ME. to morwe, P. Plowman, B. ii. 43. From to, prep., with the sense of 'for' or 'on'; and morwe, morrow. So also AS. tō morgen; Luke xiii. 32 (MS. A.). See TODAY and MORROW.

TOMTIT, a small bird. (I.-Gk.-Ileb.) and Scand.) In the Tatler, no. 112; Dec. 27, 1709. From Tom and Tit, q.v.

TOMTOM, a kind of drum. (Bengali.) From Bengali tan-tan, vulgarly tom-tom, a small drum, esp. one beaten to bespeak notice to a public proclamation; luxily applied to any kind of drum; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 509.

TON, TUN, a large barrel; 4 hogsheds; 20 hundredweight. (C.) We use ton for a weight; and tun for a cask; but the word is all one. Properly a large barrel, hence, the contents of a large barrel; and hence, a heavy weight. ME. tonne, Chaucer, C. T. 3892. AS. tonna, a barrel; 'Cupa, tunne,' Voc. 123, 9; 'Cuba, tunne,' id. 16, 21 (8th cent.); the pl. tunnas is in the A. S. Chron. an. 852. We find also Du. ton, a tun; Icel. and Swed. tunna, Dan. tünde, a tun, cask; G. tonne, a cask, also a heavy weight; Low L. tunna, tonna, whence F. tonneau, 'a tun,' Cot., Irish, and Gael. tunna, Irish tonna, W. tyndal, a tun, barrel. β. The Low L. tunna, a cask, written tunne, occurs in the Cassel Glossary of the 9th century; see Bartsch, Chrest. Franc. col. 2, l. 15. It is supposed to be of Celtic origin; from the OIrish tonna, a skin, a hide, hence 'a wine-skin'; cognate with: OGael. tonn, W. tonn, skin, hide. Celtic type tunnā*, f. (Macbain; Stokes-Pick, p. 135). ¶ This explains AS. tyncen, a small wine-skin, used to support a swimmer; Ælfric's Orosius, ii. 4; ed. Sweet, p. 72, l. 30. Der. tonn-age, a coined word; tunn-el, q.v. Doublet, tun, q.v.

STONE, the sound emitted by a stretched string, the character of a sound, quality of voice. (F.-L.-Gk.) Spelt toone in Levins. In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 112. ME. ton, Reliquiae Antiquae, l. 202 (riming with nōn, noon). — F. ton, 'a tune or sound;' Cot. — L. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound. — Gk. τόνος, a thing stretched, a rope, sinew, tune, note; from the sound of a stretched string. — Gk. τον, and grade of τον, Idg. √TEN, to stretch; Skt. tan, to stretch. Gk. τῆναι, to stretch; see TEND (1). Der. tone, vb.; ton-ed; ton-ic, increasing the tone or giving vigour, a late word, from Gk. τονικός, relating to stretching. Also a-ton-ic, bary-tone, mono-tone, oxy-tone, semi-tone; in-tone. Doublet, tune, q.v.

TONGS, an instrument consisting of two jointed bars of metal, used for holding and lifting. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 44. But earlier, the singular form tonge or tange is usual. ME. tange, tongr. 'Thi tungest baird so doþ a tonge' = thou tungest therewith as doth a tong; Owl and Nightingale, 156. AS. tange; 'Forceps, tange,' Voc. 336, 25. Also spelt tang, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 67, l. 5; +Du. tang, a pair of tongs or pincers; Icel. þing (pl. þingur); Dan. tang; Swed. tång; G. zange. β. All from Teut. type tangō*, f., with the sense 'a biter' or 'nipper'; cf. E. nippers, pincers (Pick, iii. 116). From the base tang*, nasalised form of tak* (Idg. dak*-), to bite. — √DENK, to bite; cf. Gk. δάκναι, to bite (from the weak grade). Skt. daṇḍa, dag, to bite, daṇḍa, a bite, daṇḍaka, a comb (a pincher). In particular, cf. OHG. zange, a pair of tongs, with OHG. zanger, biting, pinching. See TANG (1), TOUGH. Brugmann, i. § 420, 431 (3).

TONGUE, the fleshy organ in the mouth, used in tasting, swallowing, and speech. (E.) The spelling with final -u is of Norman origin, to show that the ng was not palatalised; cf. F. langue; a better spelling is tong, as in Spenser, F. Q., introd. to b. i. st. 2. ME. tunge, tonger, Chaucer, C. T. 267 (A 265). AS. tunge, a tongue, Luke, i. 64; +Du. tung; Icel. and Swed. tunga; Dan. tunge; G. zung, OHG. zunga; Goth. tuggō (= tungō*). β. All from Teut. type tungōn*-f. Further related to OL. διγνῆ, L. lingua (whence F. langue), the tongue. Allied to LINGUAL. Brugmann, i. § 441. Der. tongue, vb., Cymb. v. 4. 148; tongue-ed; tongue-less, Rich. II, i. 1. 105; tongue-tied, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 104. From the same root are lingu-al, ling-o-logy, lingu-age.

TONIC, strengthening. (Gk.) See TONE.

TONIGHT, this night. (E.) See TODAY.

TONSIL, one of two glands at the root of the tongue. (F.-I.) 'Tonsils or almonds in the mouth;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 7. § 1. — F. tonsille; tonsilles, pl., certain kernels at the root of the tongue; Cot. — L. tonsilla, a sharp pointed pole stuck in the ground to fasten vessels to the shore; pl. tonsilla, the tonsils. 'There is one [Latin] sb. in -li, viz. l. lōles, pl. m. "wen on the neck;" for tons-*li, from ten, "to stretch," Goth. at-thius-an, to draw towards one, Lith. tēs-ti, to stretch by pulling; tonsilla, "tonsils," points to an older form tons-lo* or tons-lā*;' Brugmann, ii. § 98. Cf. THISTLE.

TONSURE, a clipping of the hair, esp. the corona of hair worn by Romish priests. (F.-L.) ME. tonsure, Gower, C. A. iii. 291; bk. viii. 482. — F. tonsure, 'a sheering, clipping, the shaven crown of a priest;' Cot. — L. tonsūra, a clipping; cf. tonsus, pp. of tōndere, to shear, clip. Cf. Gk. τίθειν, to gnaw; for τίμ-δ-ειν*; ultimately allied to Gk. τίμειν, to cut; see TOME.

TONTINE, a certain financial scheme, the gain of which falls to the longest liver. (F.-Ital.) See Haydn's Diet. of Dates, and Littré. First started at Paris, about A.D. 1653. — F. fontine, a fontaine. Named from Lorenzo Tonti, a Neapolitan, who originated the scheme.

TOO, more than enough, likewise. (E.) The emphatic form of to, prep. ME. to; 'to badde' = too bad; Will. of Palerne, 5024. — AS. tō, too; Grein, ii. 542, q.v. The same word as tō, prep., but differently used. See TO.

TOOL, an instrument used by workmen. (E.) ME. tol, tool; pl. toles, toolles, P. Plowman, A. xi. 133; B. x. 177. AS. tōl, a tool; Ælfric's Hom. li. 152, l. 12; spelt tool, Voc. 116, 35; tōhl, id. 439, 15; +Icel. tōl, neut. pl., tools. β. Teut. type tōlom*, n.; for tōw-lom*; where tōw-* is related to taw-, taw-, as in AS. tawian, to prepare, dress, get ready; so that tōl is the instrument by which this is done. Cf. Goth. tawjan, to make, cause, and E. taw, teu, to work hard, to dress leather; see TAW. The Teut. base taw-* seems to be connected with a Skt. root drū or dā, to work. γ. 'This root is not recognized by Skt. grammarians, but it has to be admitted by comparative philologists. There is the verb duwayati in the Veda, meaning to worship, a denominative verb derived from dūvas. Dūvas meant, originally, any opus operatum, and presupposes a root dū or dā, in the sense of actively or sedulously working. It exists in Zend as dū, to do. With it we may connect Goth. tawjan, the G. zauen (Grimm, Gram. i. 1041), Goth. tawi, work, &c. See my remarks on this root and its derivatives in the Veda in my Translation of the Rig-Veda, l. 63, 191; Max Müller, letter to The Academy, July, 1874. See duvis in Ullrich, p. 128. As to the connexion of tool with Goth. tawjan, see Streitberg, § 85.

TOOM, empty. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; 'toom dish' = empty dish; Burns, Hallowe'en, l. 12 from end. ME. toom, toom. 'Toom, or voyde, Vacuus;' Prompt. Parv. Not an AS. word, though the adv. tōme occurs once (Grein). — Icel. tōm, empty; Swed. and Dan. tom, Cf. OHG. zuomig, empty. The Teut. type is tōmoz*, adj., empty. Der. tōm (3), q.v.

TOOT (1), to peep about, spy. (E.) A form of TOUT, q.v.

TOOT (2), to blow a horn. (Scand.) 'To tute in a horn, cornuciner' Levin. Not an AS. form, which would have given theet or thout; but borrowed from a dialect which sounded th as t.—MSwed. and Norw. tuta, to blow a horn. Cf. EFr. cornu and Low G. tuten, to tute, MDu. tuyten, 'to sound or wind a cornet'; Hexham; Du. stet-haren, a bugle-horn; Swed. tjuta, to howl; Dan. tude, to howl, blow a horn; Icel. hjúta, strong verb, j. t. t. húta, to whistle as wind, sough, resound; also, to blow a horn. AS. þutan, to howl, make a noise; Grein, ii. 589; also AS. þutan (Toller); MHG. diezen, OHG. diozan, to make a loud noise; Goth. thut-hauru, a trumpet. þ. All from Teut. base thut-*, to make a noise, resound; of imitative origin. The Idg. form of the root agrees with that of L. tunder (<tend-*), to strike; but this may be accidental.

TOOTH, one of the small bones in the jaws, used in eating; a prong. (E.) ME. toth, tooth; pl. teth, teeth, spelt teth, Ancien Kiwle, p. 288, l. 3 from bottom. AS. tōð, pl. tēð and tōðas, Grein, ii. 543. Here a short o has been lengthened, with ultimate loss of n before th following; tōð stands for tand*, for tanþ*; cf. OSax. tand + Du. tand; Icel. tinn, gen. sing. tannar; Dan. tand; Swed. tand; G. zahn; MHG. zan, OHG. zand. þ. All from Teut. type tanth-us*, m. cf. (from the weak stem) Goth. tunthus, a tooth. From the Idg. bases dent-, dant-, we have L. dens (stem dant-), W. dant, Gk. odont (stem odont-), Lithuan. dantis, Skt. danta-, a tooth. And cf. Pers. dandān, a tooth. y. The Idg. dant-, for ed-ant-, is a pres. participial form from kd-*, to eat; see Eat. Der. tooth, verb, spelt tothe, Fitzherbert, Ilushandry, § 24, l. 7; tooth-ed; tooth-ache, Mach. Ado. iii. 2, 21; tooth-less, Prompt. l'arv.; tooth-drawer, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-pick, All's Well, i. 1. 37; tooth-some, i. e. dainty, nice, not an early word. Brugmann, ii. § 126. See Time (1).

TOP (1), the highest part of anything, the summit. (E.) ME. top; top over tail—head over heels, Will. of Palerne, 2776. AS. top; Apex, summits gales, helmes top, Voc. 143, 26. + Du. top; Icel. toppr, a tuft, lock of hair, crest, top; Dan. top, a tuft, crest, top; Swed. top, a summit; G. zopf, a tuft of hair, pigtail, top of a tree; OHG. zoph. þ. All from Teut. type topaz*, m., a peak, top; allied to E. tap, a spike for a cask. Cf. G. zapfen, a peg, tap, also a fire-cock; Norweg. topp, a top, a bung (Asen). Der. top, verb, Mach. iv. 3, 57; top-dressing; top-gallant-mast, for which Shak. has top-gallant, Koucko, ii. 4, 202; top-full, K. John, iii. 4, 180; top-less, Troil. i. 3, 152; top-mast, Temp. i. 1, 37; top-sail, Temp. i. 1, 7; top-mast, really a double superl. form, see Aftermost; topple, to tumble, be top-heavy, and so fall headlong, Mach. iv. 1, 56. Also top-sy-turvy, q. v.

TOP (2), a child's toy. (F.—G.) In Shak. Merry Wives, v. 1, 27. ME. top, a child's toy; King Alisaunder, 1727. Late AS. topp; Anglin, i. 465. —AF. top or tope*; only found in the OF. dimin. topel, topet. —'Trocus, topet,' Glasgow MS., in Godefroy; he also gives topet, a top, and topier, to spin like a top, like MF. topier, Cot.; cf. F. topie, a top, and MF. topin, a pipkin, Cot.—MHG. topf, a top; also, a pot, a scull (the humming-top being like a round pot). + Low G. dop, a shell; MDu. dop, doppe, a top (also top from HG.); MDu. dop, a shell, doppe, a little pot, pipkin; EFr. dop, doppe, a shell. Allied to ME. doppen, to dip, to dip (a water-pot), WFlam. doppen, to dip, to plunge in (De Bo). Cf. Dip. ¶ Or from Old G. top; from the same MHG. topf.

TOPAZ, a precious stone. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. topas, whence Chaucer's Sir Topas; spelt topace, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 172. —OF. topase, 'topase, a stone'; Cot.—L. topazus, topazon, topazion, a topaz.—Gk. topazos, topazios, the yellow or oriental topaz. þ. According to Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 8, named from an island in the Red Sea called Topazas, the position of which was 'conjectural'; from Gk. topazios, to conjecture! But this is a popular etymology. It is probable that the name is of Eastern origin; cf. Skt. topas, fire, top, to shine. See Schade, OHG. Dict., p. 1432.

TOPE, a great drinker. (F. or Ital.—Teut.) 'Tope, to drink briskly or lustily'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The jolly members of a topeing club'; Butler, Epigram on a Club of Sots, l. 1. 'Tope! here pledge me! (drinks)'; Etherege, The Comical Revenge, A. ii. sc. 3. Certainly connected, as Wedgwood shows, with F. tôper, to cover a stake, a term used in playing at dice; whence tôpe! interj. (short for je tôle, lit. I accept your offer), used in the sense of good! agreed! well done! It came to be used as a term in drinking, though this only appears in Italian. 'According to Florio [i.e. in ed. 1688] the same exclamation was used for the acceptance of a pledge in drinking. [He gives] topa, a word among dicers, as much as to say, I hold it, done, throw! also by good fellows when they are drinking; I'll pledge you'; Wedgwood. þ. Of Teut. origin; from the striking together of hands or glasses; cf. Picard toget, to strike hands in bargaining, Ital. in-toppare, to strike against an obstacle. Originally from the act of placing together the tops of the thumbs, at the same time crying topp! See topp in Ihre, Outzen, and the Bremen Wörterbuch. Cf. Topf (1).

TOPIARY, adj. (L.—Gk.) Topiary work is a term applied to clipped trees and shrubs, in landscape gardening.—L. topiarius, belonging to landscape gardening.—L. topia, fancy gardening.—Gk. topos, a place, a district.

TOPIC, a subject of discourse or argument. (F.—L.—Gk.) Properly an adj.; Milton has 'a topic folio'—a common-place book; Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 40, l. 27, on which see the note. 'Topics (topica), books that speak of places of invention, or that part of logic which treats of the invention of arguments'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt topickes in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. topiques, 'topics, books or places of logical invention'; Cot.—L. topica, s. pl., the title of a work of Aristotle, of which a compendium is given by Cicero (White).—Gk. topikos, adj., local; also concerning topos or common-places. Aristotle wrote a treatise on the subject (τὰ τοιαῦτα).—Gk. τόπος, a place. Der. topic-al (Blount), topic-al-ly; and see topography.

TOPOGRAPHY, the art of describing places. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt topographie in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. topographie, 'the description of a place'; Cot.—L. topographia.—Gk. τοπογραφία, a description of a place; Strabo.—Gk. τοπος, for τόπος, a place; and γράφειν, to describe. See Topio and Graphio. Der. topograph-er, formed with E. suffix -er from Gk. τοπογράφος, a topographer, describer of places; topograph-ic, topograph-ic-al, -ly.

TOPPLE, to fall over. (E.) See Top (1).

TOPSYTURVY, upside down. (E.) Examples show that -sy does not stand for side, as the word is sometimes written; for topsyterry is the older form. In Stanlyhurst's tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, we have top-terry, p. 33, l. 13; topsy-terry, p. 63, l. 25; and top-syd-terry, p. 59, l. 23. Topside-terry occurs twice (at least) in the play of Cornelia, printed in 1594, in Act i, and Act v; see Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vol. v. p. 186, l. 1, p. 250, l. 15. Much earlier, we find 'He turneth all thyng topsy terry,' Roy, Rede Me and De Not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 51, l. 25 (printed in 1528). And Palsgrave (1530) has topsy terry, p. 843, col. 1. þ. In Treuch, Eng. Past and Present, we are told that topsy terry is a corruption from topside the other way; to which the author adds: 'There is no doubt of the fact; see Stanlyhurst's Ireland, p. 33, in Holinshed's Chronicles.' After searching in three editions of Holinshed, I find, in the reprint of 1808, at p. 33, that Stanlyhurst has the equivalent expression topside the other way; to which may be added that Richardson quotes topside tother way from Search's Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23. y. But this only proves that such was a current explanation of the phrase in the time of Stanlyhurst and later. It can hardly be doubted that topsy terry stood for top-sy-terry; just as upside-down was originally up-sy-down, i.e. 'up as (if) down.' Hence the derivation is from top, so, and the old verb terry, to overturn, orig. 'to roll back'; see Terve in my Gloss. to Chaucer, and topsy-terry in my Notes on E. Etym., p. 303. Cf. Lowl. Sc. our-tyrre, to turn upside down (Jamieson); ourtirvi, upset, turned over, Book of the Houllate, 837; ouer-terre, to overthrow; Hoccleve, De Regim. Princ. st. 259, l. 1811. G. Douglas has tirvi, stripped, despoiled, to translate L. detraherat, Æn. v. 260. Allied to AS. tearflan, to turn, roll over; Low G. tarven, to roll or turn up a cuff; OIG. zerben, unbi-zerben, to turn oneself round.

TORCH, a light formed of twisted tow dipped in pitch, a large candle. (F.—L.) ME. torche, Floriz and Blanchefur, l. 238.—F. torche, 'a link; also, the wreathed clowt, wisp, or wad of straw, layed by wenches between their heads and the things which they carry on them'; Cot. [Cf. Ital. torcia, a torch, torciare, to twist; Span. entorchar, to twist, antorcha, a torch.]—Late L. torcia, a torch; cf. also fortisius, occurring A.D. 1287; also fortius, &c. All various derivatives from L. tor-tus, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. A torch is simply 'a twist.' Der. torch-light.

TORREADOR, a bull-fighter. (Span.—L.) In use in 1618 (Stanford Dict.).—Span. torreador.—Span. torrear, to fight bulls.—Span. toro, a bull.—L. taurus, a bull; see Taurus.

TORMENT, anguish, great pain. (F.—L.) ME. torment, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 148, l. 6, where it means 'a tempest'; also tournment, K. Alisaunder, 5869.—OF. torment; 'torment'; Cot. Mod. F. torment, L. tormētum, an instrument for hurling stones, an instrument of torture, torture. Formed with suffix -men-tum from tor- (for torc-), base of torquere, to twist, hurl, throw; see Torture. Der. torment, verb, ME. tormēnten, Rob. of Glouc. p. 240, l. 14 (ed. Wright, p. 349, l. 36); tormēt-ing-ly; tormēt-our, ME. tormētour, Chaucer, C. T. 1595 (G 527); also tormēt-er. And see tormentill.

TORMENTILL, the name of a herb. (F.—L.) In Levin. Spelt tormentill; Palsgrave.—F. tormēntille, 'tormēntille'; Cot.—Late L. tormēntilla; Voc. 713, 6. Cf. Ital. tormēntilla, 'tormēntilla', Florio. Said to be so called because it relieved tooth-ache, an idea which is at least as old as the 16th century; see Littre.—OF. torment, great pain, an ache; see Torment.

TORNADO, a violent hurricane. (Span.—L.) 'Tornado (Span. tornado, i.e. return, or turning about) is a sudden, violent, and forcible storm . . . at sea, so termed by the mariners; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. But this is only a popular etymology; due to misapprehension of the form of the word. 'Ternados, that is, thundrings and lightnings;' Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 719.—Span. tronada, a thunder-storm.—Span. tronar, to thonder. L. tonare, to thunder. See Thunder.

TORPEDO, the cramp-fish; a kind of eel that produces numbness by communicating an electric shock. (L.) 'Like one whom a torpedo stupefies;' Drummond, sonnet 53; and see Gosson, School of Abuse, p. 56.—L. torpida, numbness; also, a torpedo, cramp-fish.—L. torpere, to be numb; see Torpid.

TORPID, sluggish, lit. numb. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. torpidus, benumbed, torpid.—L. torpere, to be numb, to be stiff. Cf. Lith. tirpti, to grow stiff; Russ. torpelo, to grow numb. Der. torpid-ly, torpid-ness, torpid-ty; torpor, torpor, numbness, inactivity; also torp-esc-ent, from the stem of pres. part. of torpescere, to grow torpid, inceptive form of torpere; torp-esc-ence.

TORQUE, a twisted metal ornament, esp. for the neck. (L.) Englished from L. torques, a torque.—L. torquere, to twist; see Torsion. Or from OF. torque, the same (Suppl. to Godefroy). See Tort.

TORRENT, a boiling, rushing stream. (F.—L.) In Shak. J. C. i. 2. 107.—F. torrent, 'a torrent, loud-flood;—L. torrentem, acc. of torrens, hot, boiling, raging, impetuous; and as a sb. a torrent, raging stream. Orig. pres. part. of torrere, to parch, dry up; see Torrid. Der. (obs.) torrent-yne, a trout; Balcan Book, p. 173, note 4.

TORRID, parching, violently hot. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. torride, torrid, scorched, parched; Cot.—L. torridus, parched.—L. torrire, to parch, dry up. β. Torrere stands for torrere, like terra for terra; from τὸ τερν, to be dry; see Terrace and Thirst. Cf. Gk. ῥιπαρῶν, to become dry. Der. torr-ent, torr-ry, to make dry, from F. torreffer, 'to scorch.' Cot.; torr-fact-ion, from L. torrefactus, pp. of torrefacere, to make dry, dry up.

TORSTON, a violent twisting, twisting force. (F.—L.) A late word. In Johnson.—F. torstion, 'a winding, wringing, wrestling; Cot.—L. torstionem, acc. of torstio, a wringing.—L. torquere (pt. t. torst), to twist; see Torture.

TORSK, a fish of the cod family. (Scand.) From Dan. and Swed. torsk; Icel. þorskr, a cod-fish; whence also G. dorsch. Perhaps named from its being dried; cf. Swed. torr, Dan. tør, Icel. þurr, dry. Cf. Torrid.

TORSO, the trunk of a statue. (Ital.—L.—Gk.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson.—Ital. torso, a stump, stalk, core, trunk.—L. thyrsus, acc. of thyrsus, a stalk, stem of a plant; a thyrsus.—Gk. θύρσος, a straight stem, stalk, rod. See Thyrus.

TORT, a wrong. (F.—L.) 'Fraud or tort; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 31.—F. tort, a wrong, harm; also pp. of F. tordre, to twist.—L. tortus, pp. of L. torquere, to twist. Cf. Irish torc, W. torch, a wreath; Russ. trók, a girth; Gk. ἀρπακτος, a spindle; Skt. toraku, a spindle.—TEKRO, to twist. See Torture.

TORTOISE, a reptile. (F.—L.) ME. toroise, Prompt. Parv.; tortoise, in Temp. i. 2. 316. We also find ME. tortu, Knight de la Tour, ch. xi. l. 2. 1. The latter form is immediately from MF. tortue, a tortoise (now tortue); with which cf. Span. tortuga, a tortoise; both from Late L. tortūca, tartūca, a tortoise, for which Diez gives a reference. So also Mital. tartuga (Florio); now corrupted to tartaruga. 2. The E. tortoise answers to an OF. form, not recorded, but cognate with Prov. tortosa, a tortoise (Dice). In all these instances the animal is named from its crooked or twisted feet, which are very remarkable; cf. OF. tortis (fem. tortisse), 'crooked' Cot. Both Late L. tortūca and Prov. tortosa are formed as if from L. tortus, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture.

TORTUOUS, crooked. (F.—L.) ME. tortuous, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. c. 28, l. 19.—F. tortueux, 'full of crookedness or crookings; Cot.—L. tortuosus, twisting about, crooked.—L. tortus, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. Der. tortuous-ly, ness.

TORTURE, a wringing pain, torment, anguish. (F.—L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 177, &c.—F. torture, 'torture; Cot.—L. tortūra, torture; allied to L. tortus, pp. of torquere, to twist, whirl. See Tort. Der. (from L. torquere) torch, tor-ment, tor-sion, tortoise, tort-u-ous; con-tort, de-tort, dis-tort, ex-tort, re-tort; also tart (s), tortment.

TORY, a Conservative in English politics. (Irish.) 'Tory, an Irish robber, or bog-trotter; also a nick-name given to the stanch Royalists, or High-flyers, in the times of King Charles II. and James II.; Phillips, ed. 1706. As to the use of the name, see Trench, Select Glossary, and Todd's Johnson. First used about 1680. Dryden even duplicates the word into tory-rory. 'Before George, I grew tory-rory, as they say,' Kind Keeper, i. 1; 'Your tory-rory jades,' id. iv. 1. By this it appears to mean 'wild.' 'Tories was a name properly belonging to the Irish bogtrotters, who during our Civil War robbed and plundered, professing to be in arms for the royal cause; and from them transferred, about 1680, to those who sought to maintain the extreme prerogatives of the Crown;' Trench, Select Glossary. Trench cites 'the increase of tories and other lawless persons' from the Irish State Papers, Jan. 24, 1656.

In Irish the word means 'pursuer;' hence, I suppose, it was easily transferred to bogtrotters and plunderers.—Irish toiridhe, also toirighe, a pursuer; cf. torachd, pursuit, search, toir, a pursuit, diligent search, also pursuers; toirreach, pursuit, search; toirighim, I fancy, I think, I pursue, follow closely. Cf. Gael. toir, a pursuit, diligent search, also pursuers; torachd, a pursuit with hostile intention, strict search. From OIrish toracht (for do-fa-racht), pursuit; where do (to) and fa (under) are prefixes; and racht is from REG, as in L. reg-ere, to direct, Irish rig-im, I stretch out (Macbain). Der. Tory-an.

TOSE, to pull, or pluck; see Tease, Touse.

TOSS, to jerk, throw violently, agitate, move up and down violently. (Scand.) 'I tosse a balle;' Palsgrave.—Norw. tossa, to sprinkle, strew, spread out; hence, 'to toss hay.' Allied to Dan. tusse, to stir, move, shake; also to E. Touse, q. v. and to Low G. tussen, to toss (hay). W. tosio, to toss, is from E.; not a Celtic word. Der. toss, sb.; toss-pol, Tw. Nt. v. 412.

TOTAL, complete, undivided. (F.—L.) 'Thei toteth [look] on her summe total;' Plowman's Tale, pt. i. st. 46. We still use sum total for total sum, putting the adj. after the sb., according to the V. idiom.—F. total, 'the tall, or whole sum;' Cot.—Late L. totalis, extended from L. titulus, entire. Der. total-ity, from F. totalité, 'a totality;' Cot. Also sur-tout.

TOTEM, a natural object, usually an animal, used as a badge or token of a clan, among N. American Indians. (Amer. Indian.) 'Each his own ancestral totem;' Longfellow, Hiawatha, xiv. Said to be from the Algonquin otem, with a prefixed poss. pron.; giving n'otem, 'my totem;' Cent. Dict.

TOTTER, to be unsteady, stagger. (E.) For talter, by assimilation; it is related to tilt (ME. tulten, tillen); and means to be always tilting over, to be ready to fall at any minute. 'Where home the cart-horse tolters with the wain;' Clare, Village Minstrel, Rural Evening, l. 20. 'The toltering [jolting] bustle of a blundering trot;' id., Rural Morning, 37. Cf. prov. E. tolter, to struggle, foundr about (Halliwell). Trevisa, ii. 387, has: 'men toltere peron [swung upon ropes] and meued hider and yider;' here the L is dropped. The form tolter occurs twice in the King's Quhair, by James I. of Scotland; but not as a verb, as Jamieson wrongly says. 'On her tolter quehele'—on her [Fortune's] tottering wheel, st. 9; where tolter is an adj. 'So tolter quhilum did she it to wrye'—so totteringly (unsteadily) did she (Fortune) cause it (her wheel) to go aside, st. 164; where tolter is an adverb. The suffix -er is here adjectival; tolter means 'ready to tilt.' Precisely the same loss of l occurs in talter (also spelt totter), a rag; see Tatter. β. Again, tolter is a frequent, related to ME. tulten, to totter or tilt over; 'Feole temples per-inne tulten to be corpe'—many temples therein tottered (fell) to the earth; Joseph of Arimathea, ed. Skeat, 100. Tulten is another form of tillen; see Tilt (s). But it is important to remark that the word totter itself is allied to AS. tealtrian, to totter, vacillate, Grein, ii. 526; formed from the adj. tealt, tottery, unstable; id. Add, that we have the cognate M10. touler, 'to tremble,' Hexham; for tolteren*, like Du. goud for golder. Hence Du. touter, a swing; like the Norfolk teeter-um-tauter, a see-saw; cf. tytter-totter, a see-saw (Palsgrave, p. 282). Further allied to Bav. zelter-n, to hobble along. Der. totter-er. Note also tolty (i.e. talty, tilty), unsteady; Chaucer, C. T. 4251 (A 4253); Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 39. And see tottle.

TOUCAN, a large-beaked tropical bird. (F.—Brazilian.) Littre gives a quotation of the 16th century. 'Il a veu aux terres neuves un oiseau que les sauvages appellent en leur gergon [jargon] toucan;' &c.; Paré, Monstr. app. 2. The form toucan is F., as above.—Brazil. tucana, toucan, Hist. Nat. Brésilien (1648), p. 217. According to Burton, Highlands of Brazil, i. 40, the bird is named from its cry. The Guaraní form is said to be tucá (whence Port. tucano); Granadá gives the Guaraní form as táca (with á and á both nasal).

TOUCH, to perceive by feeling, handle, move influence. (F.—Teut.) ME. touchen, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1195.—F. toucher, to touch. [Cf. Ital. toccare, Span., Port. and Prov. tocar, to touch; also OF. topper, 'to clap, knock, or hit against;' Cot. 'To touch a lyre is to strike the strings, or rather to twich them; so also Ital. toccare il liuto, to twang the lute; Florio gives 'to strike, to smite, to hit,' as senses of toccare.]—Teut. type tukkōn*, represented by Low G. tukken, and OHG. zucken, mod. G. zucken, to draw with a quick motion, to twitch; cf. MDu. tocken, tucken, to touch (Hexham). This is an intensive form, from the weak grade (tuh-) of Teut. teuhan-, as seen in Goth. tīuhan, AS. tēan (<tēohan*), to pull, to draw, cognate with OHG. ziōhan, G. ziehen, and therefore with L. dūcere, to draw; see Tuok (1), Tow (1), and Duke. The Teut. base tuhk-* arose from the ldg. tuhk-u-*; Brugmann, i. § 421 (7). Der. touch, sb. As You Like It, iii. 4. 15; touching, i. e. relating to, orig. pres. part. of the verb touchen, Chaucer, C. T. 7872 (D 2290), spelt touchende (which is a pres. part. form) in Gower C. A. p. 249, l. 2 of Macaulay's edition, but spelt touchinge in Pauli's edition, i. 307, bk. iii. 842; touching, adj., touching-ly, touch-stone, a stone for testing gold, Palsgrave; touch-hole, Beaumont and Fletcher, Custom of the Country, iii. 3. 8. Also toc-sin, q. v., tuck-et.

TOUCH-WOOD, wood used (like tinder) for taking fire from a spark. (F.—Teut.; and E.) We find 'Peace, Touchwood!' in Beaumont and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer, Act ii (Clermont). Capt. Smith has: 'small pieces of touchwood'; Works, p. 74. Apparently, wood that catches fire at the touch of a spark; cf. touch-box, box for priming, touch-pan, pan of a flint-lock musket, touch-hole of a gun. Probably influenced by M.E. tache, in the sense of touch-wood or tinder; Piers Plowman, C. xx. 211.

TOUCHY, apt to take offence. (F.—Low G.) 'You're touchy without all cause'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy, iii. 2 (Melantius). Doubtless often used as if derived from touch; but really a corruption of Tetohy, q. v.

TOUGH, firm, not easily broken, stiff, tenacious. (E.) ME. tough, Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 531. AS. tōh, tough; Voc. 29. 39. Du. taai, flexible, pliant, tough, viscous, clammy; Low G. taue, taue, taue, tough; G. zäh, zäh, tough, tenacious, viscous, MHG. zähe, OHG. zāhi. β. Teut. type tanxuz*, later tāhuz*; allied to AS. ge-teng-e, close to, oppressive, OSax. bi-teng-i, oppressive. The orig. sense is 'holding tight' or 'tenacious'; cf. Tongs. ¶ The Teut. type regularly becomes tanh*, tonk*, tōk in AS.; cf. Tooth. Der. tough-ly, tough-ness, tough-ish; also tough-en, formed like hright-en, &c.

TOUR, a going round, circuit, ramble. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Tour, a travel or journey about a country'; Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tour, 'a turn, round, compass, . . . a bout or walk'; Cot. Cf. Prov. tors, also torns, a turn; Bartsch, Chrest. Provencale. Tour is a verbal sb. from tourner, to turn; it is a short form of touron (as the Prov. form shows), in the sense of 'a turn'; the final n being lost.—L. torum, acc. of torus.—Gk. τόπος, a lathe. See Turn. Der. tour-ist.

TOURMALINE, the name of a certain mineral. (F.—Cingalese.) First brought from Ceylon by the Dutch in 1703; see tr. of Beckmann, Hist. of Inventions, ed. 1846, vol. i. 89.—F. tourmaline; formed from the native name in Ceylon, where it was called tōramalli. This name is explained (vaguely) as 'a general name for the corallian'; Clough, Singhalese Dict. (1830), ii. 246.

TOURNAMENT, TOURNEY, a mock fight. (F.—L.—Gk.) So named from the swift turning of the horses in the combat. Cotgrave has F. tourney, 'a tourney'; Chaucer has turneynges, sb., C. T. 2559 (A 2557). ME. turnement, Aucrén Riwele, p. 390, l. 5 from bottom.—OF. tornoiment, a tournament (Burguy). Formed with suffix -ment (L. -mentum) from OF. tornoier, to joust.—OF. tornoi, a tourney, joust; properly, a turning about.—OF. torner, to turn; see Turn. 2. Tourney is from AF. torney—OF. tornoi, a tourney (above); see torney in Stat. Realm, i. 320.

TOURNIQUET, a bandage which is tightened by turning a stick round to check a flow of blood. (F.—L.—Gk.) Properly the stick itself. 'Tourniquet, a turn-still (sic); also the gripe-stick us'd by surgeons in cutting off an arm'; Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tourniquet, 'the pin of a kind of fiddle, that which the fiddler turns with his hand as he plays'; Cot. It refers, apparently, to a sort of hardy-gurdy, of which the F. name was vi-llé. 'Tourni-gu-et' is formed, with dimin. suffixes, from tourner, to turn; see Turn. [N.B. turn-still = turn-stile, a sense of F. tourniquet.]

TOUSE, to pull about, tear or rend. (E.) In Shak. Meas. v. 313. Spenser has touse in the sense of worry, to tease; F. Q. ii. 11. 33. ME. tūsen, in comp. tō-tūsen, to pull about (Stratmann). It answers to OFries. tūsen, NFries. tuse, to tear, pull, rend. Cf. Low G. tuseln, G. zausen, to touse. Der. touse-er; spelt also Towzer, as a dog's name; also tous-le, tuss-le; and cf. tuss.

TOUT, to look about, solicit custom. (E.) 'A touter is one who looks out for custom'; Wedgwood. We often shorten the sb. to tout. But tout is properly a verb, the same as prov. E. toot, ME. tooten, to peep, look about, P. Plowman's Crede, 142, 168, 339, 425. Totakille*, Specula; Prompt. Parv.; whence Totkille, a look-out hill

(W. Tutkille, at Carnarvon). Also toot, to look, search, pry; Index to Parker Soc. publications; Tusser's Husbandry, § 94, st. 2; Peele, Arraignment of Paris, i. 2. See Toot in E. D. D., and in Nares. The latter has: 'The tradesmen of Tunbridge Wells were used formerly to hunt out customers on the road, at their arrival; and hence they were called tooters.' AS. tōtan, to project, stick out; hence, to peep out; þā heafu tōtanu 'it' = the heads projected out; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xvi, ed. Sweet, p. 104, l. 5. The orig. sense was 'to project'; hence, to put out one's head, peep about, look all round; and finally, to toot for custom. Der. touter. Tout* and touter are found in no dictionaries but those of very recent date; yet these words were in use before 1754. See S. Richardson, Correspondence, &c., vol. iii. p. 316; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 134. Distinct from toot, verb, to blow a horn.

TOW (1), to tug or pull a vessel along. (E.) ME. towen, tojen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 100; Layamon, 7536 (later text). AS. togian, to tug, draw (Toller); whence the sb. tow-line, a tow-line, tow-ropes, Voc. 182. 32. Cf. OFries. toga, to pull about, 4-Icel. toga, to tug, pull; tog, a cord, a tow-ropes; MHG. zogen, OHG. zogen, to tear, pluck, pull. β. Derived from Teut. tuh-* (>tug-), weak grade of teuhan-, to draw; as seen in AS. togen, pp. of the strong verb tēohan, tēon, to pull, draw, which is cognate with G. ziehen, OHG. ziōhan, Goth. tīuhan, to draw. All from the Teut. base TEUH, to draw (Fick, iii. 122), answering to *DEUK, as seen in L. dūcere, to draw. ¶ F. touer, to tow, is of Teut. origin. Der. tow-boat, -line, -rope; tow-nger, Blount's Nomolexicon, 1691. And see tie, tug.

TOW (2), the coarse part of flax or hemp. (E.) ME. tow or towr, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245; Tyrwhitt prints tawse in Chaucer, C. T. 3772 (A 3774). AS. tow (tīu ?); it occurs in tow-lie, tow-like, fit for spinning. 'Texturium opus, towlie uerore'; Voc. 125. 20; the next entries being 'Colus, distaff', and 'Fussus, spind', i. e. distaff and spindle. Again, we find: 'tow-hūs of wulle' = a tow-house or spinning-house for wool, id. 186. 29; see the footnote. And see tow-creft, skill in spinning (Toller). Tow was, in fact, orig. the working or spinning itself, the operation of spinning; whence it came to be applied to the material wrought upon. Hence we find getawa, implements (Grein); and the word is brought into close connexion with E. tow and tow. See further under Toot, Taw, & MDu. touwe, or werck; 'towie'; Hexham; touwe, 'the instrument of a weaver', touweu, 'to tanne leather', i. e. to tow; id., Icel. tō, a tuft of wool for spinning; vinna tō, to dress wool. (Quite distinct from Icel. tog, goat's hair.) Cf. Low G. tow, tow, implements; also Goth. taw, a work, a thing made, taujan, to make. Similarly C. werp or werk, tow, is merely the same word as werk, a work.

TOWARD, TOWARDS, in the direction of. (E.) As in other cases, towards is a later form, due to adding the adverbial suffix -es (orig. the mark of a gen. case) to the shorter toward. In Layamon, 666, we have 'toward Brutun' = toward Brutus; in l. 515, we have 'him towards come' = he came towards him. The AS. tōward is used as an adj. with the sense of 'future', as in: 'on tōwardre worlde' = in the future world, in the life to come; Mark, x. 30. Hence was formed tōwardes, towards, used as a prep. with a dat. case, and commonly occurring after its case, as 'ēow tōwardes' = towards you, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4). β. Compounded of tō, to (see To); and ward in the sense of 'becoming' or 'tending to'. Ward only occurs as the latter element of several adjectives, such as afward (lit. off-ward), absent; afterward, afterward; andward, present; forward, forward, in front; innanward, inward; niderward, netherward; ufward, upward; utanward, outward; widerward, contrary; and in the adverbs kiderward, hitherward, niderward, thitherward; see Kittmüller's Dict., p. 107. γ. Cognate with Icel. verðr, similarly used in the adj. átanverðr, outward, and in other adjectives; also with MHG. -wert, whence G. vorwärts, forwards, and the like; also with Goth. -wairths, as in andwairths, present, 1 Cor. vii. 26; also allied to L. versus, towards, which is often used after its case. 8. And just as L. versus is from vertere, to turn, so AS. ward is from the cognate verb weorþan (pt. t. weorð), to become. See further under Worth (2), verb.

6. We may note that ward can be separated from tō, as in tō you-ward = toward you, 2 Cor. xiii. 3; see Ward in The Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Also that toward is properly an adj. in AS., and commonly so used in later E., as opposed to forward; it is common in Shakespeare. Der. toward-ly, Timon, iii. 1. 37; toward-ness, toward-li-ness. And (with the suffix -ward) after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, for-ward, fro-ward, home-ward, hither-ward, in-ward, nether-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, to-ward (as above), thither-ward, up-ward, west-ward, whither-ward.

TOWEL, a cloth for wiping the skin after washing. (F.—OHG.) ME. towaille, Floriz and Blanchefleur, 563; towaille, Chaucer, C. T.

14663 (B 3935). =F. touaille, 'a towel,' Cot.; OF. toaille. [Cf. Low L. toacila; Span. toalla; Ital. tovaglia. All of Teut. origin.] =OHG. tuwila, tuwila, MHG. tuwile, G. zuwile, a towel. =OHG. tuwan, MHG. tuwan, to wash. +Icel. þvát (pp. þvagna), to wash; Dan. tøe; AS. þwæcan (contr. for þwakan*), to wash; Goth. þwakan, to wash. And cf. AS. þwiele, a towel (O. E. Texts); þwatal, a bath; Du. dwael, a towel; dwel, a clout, whence prov. E. dwile, a clout, coarse rag for rubbing. β. All from Teut. base THWAIL, to wash. N.B. The AF. form townelle occurs in A. Nominal, ed. Skeat, l. 408. Der. townell-ing, stuff for making towels.

TOWER, a lofty building, fort, or part of a fort. (F.-L.-Gk.) Spelt tur in the A. S. Chron. an. 1097. =OK. tur, later towr, 'a tower'; Cot. =L. turrem, acc. of turris, a tower. =Gk. ῥάπαν, ῥάππη, a tower, bastion. We also find Gael. torr, a hill or mountain of an abrupt or conical form, a lofty hill, eminence, mound, tower, castle; Irish tor, a castle; cf. prov. E. (Devon.) tor, a conical hill, a word of Celtic origin. [Scopulum, torr;] Voc. 147-38. Cf. Skt. tūraya, an arch. Der. tower, verb; towered, tower-ing, tower-y.

TOWN, a large village. (E.) The old sense is simply 'enclosure'; it was often applied (like Lowland Sc. town) to a single farmhouse with its outbuildings, &c. ME. town, Wyclif, Matt. xxii. 5. AS. tūn, Matt. xxii. 5; where the L. text has uillam. The original sense is 'fence'; whence the derived verb tūnan, to enclose. +Du. tuin, a fence, hedge; Icel. tūn, an enclosure, a homestead, a dwelling-house; G. zaun, OHG. zūn, a hedge. β. All from Teut. type tūnos*, n., a hedge, enclosure. Cognate words appear in Irish and Gael. dun, a fortress, W. din, a hill-fort (whence dinas, a town); this Celtic word is conspicuous in many old place-names, such as Augustodūnum, Camalodūnum, &c. Lit. 'fastness'; allied to Irish dur, firm, strong, I. dúrur, hard, lasting; Gk. δύραμις, strength. See Dure. Brugmann, i. § 112; ii. § 66. Der. town-clerk, -crier, -hall, -house, -ship, -talk; also towns-man (= town's man), towns-folk (= town's folk). Also town-ish, Sir T. Wyatt, Sat. i. 4.

TOXICOLOGICAL, the science which investigates poisons. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson. Coined from Gk. τοξικόν, poison for smearing arrows with; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, λέγειν, to say (see Logio). Τοξικόν is neut. of τοξικός, adj., belonging to arrows or archery; from τόξον, a bow, lit. a piece of shaped wood. Perhaps from ΤΕΚΣ, to cut, hew, shape; cf. Skt. takṣh, to cut. See Technical. Or allied to L. taxus, a yew. Der. toxicologist-al, toxicology-ist.

TOXOPHILITE, a lover of archery. (Gk.) Coined from Gk. τόξον, a bow, and φιλεῖν, to love; with suffix -ιτε, Gk. -ιτης. See above.

TOY, a plaything; also, as a verb, to trifle, dally. (Du.) 'Any silk, any thread, any toys for your head.' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 326. 'On my head no toy but was her pattern;'. Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3. This is only a special sense. 'Any folsyshe toy': Barclay, Ship of Fools, i. 176. Palsgrave has 'Toy, a tryffel'; also, 'I toye, or tryffel with one, I deale nat substancially with hym; I toye, I playe with one; He doth but toye with you, Il ne fait que se jouer avecques vous.' Not in ME. =Du. tuig, tools, utensils, implements, stuff, refuse, trash; which answers to Palsgrave's definition as 'a trifle.' The sense of plaything occurs in the comp. speeltuig, playthings, child's toys; lit. 'stuff to play with.' Sewel gives: 'Speeltuig, playthings, toys'; also: 'Op de tuy houden, to amuse,' lit. to hold in trifling, toy with one; also: 'een tuig op zy, silver chains with a knife, cissars, pincushion, &c. as women wear,' which explains the Shakespearean usage. +Low G. tug, used in all the senses of G. zeug; Icel. tygi, gear; Dan. tøj, stuff, things, gear; dumt tøj, stuff and nonsense, trash; whence legelti, a plaything, a toy, from lege (= prov. E. laik), to play; Swed. tyg, gear, stuff, trash. +G. zeug, stuff, matter, materials, lumber, trash; whence spielzeug, toys; MHG. zine, stuff, materials. β. Connected by some with the strong Teut. verb teuhau-* (Goth. tiuhau, AS. tēon, OHG. ziuhon, G. ziehen), to draw, cognate with L. ducere, to lead (✓DEUC); which may be correct. ¶ The pronunciation of oy in toy is an attempt at imitating the pronunciation of Du. tuig; just as boy, a sloop, answers to the Flemish huys; see Hoy (1). Der. toy-ish.

TRACE (1), a track left by drawing anything along, a mark left, a footprint. (F.-L.) ME. traces, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 777; Pricke of Conscience, 4349. =F. traces, 'a trace, footing, print of the foot; also, a path or track'; Cot. [Cf. Ital. traccia, a trace, track; Span. traza, a first sketch, outline.] A verbal sb., from MF. tracer, verb, 'to trace, follow, pursue'; of which another form was MF. trasser, 'to delineate, score, trace out'; Cot. Cf. Ital. tracciare, to trace, devise; Span. trazar, to plan, sketch. These verbs are all formed (as if from a Late L. traciare*) from tract-us, pp. of trahere, to draw, orig. to drag with violence. See Tract. Der. traces, verb, ME. tracen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 54 (less common than the sb.), directly from F. tracer, to trace, as above; trac-er, trac-able, trac-ing; trac-er-y, a coined word, in rather late use. Also (from L. trahere) trace (2), tract (1), tract (2), tract-able, tract-ile, tract-ion, tract-ate, trail, train, trait, tract, tract-ise, tract-y; also ab-tract, at-tract, con-tract, de-tract, dis-tract, ex-tract, pro-tract, re-tract, sub-tract; an-tract, de-tract, mal-tract, por-trait, por-tray or pour-tray, re-trait.

TRACE (2), one of the straps by which a vehicle is drawn. (F.-L.) =F. Trace, horse harness, trays; Palsgrave, MF. traces: 'Trayce, horsys harneys, Tenda, traxus, restra, trahale;'. Prompt. Parv. Evidently from the OF. trays, cited by Palsgrave, which is a pl. form equivalent to F. traits, pl. of trait. In Walter de Bibbesworth, we find: 'Les trays si unt bracerotes, and bracerotes is glossed by 'hennecs (f. of trays);' Wright, Vocab. i. 168. Golding has traces as a plural; tr. of Ovid, Met. ii. fol. 16 b (1663). Cf. 'for v pair trays', for the king's ear; Privy Purse Exp. of Eliz. of York (1480), p. 123. Cotgrave gives as one sense of trait (which he spells tract) that of 'a teame-trace or trait, the cord or chain that runs between the horses, also the draught-tree of a caroch.' Thus traces = F. traits; so that traces is a double plural. See Trait.

TRACTERA, the wind-pipe. (L.-Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1607. =L. trachea; also trachia. The latter form is given in White. =Gk. τράχεια, lit. 'the rough,' from the rings of gristle of which it is composed; τράχεια is the fem. of τράχειος, rough, rugged, harsh. Allied to τί-τρηχ-α, perf. tense of τράσσειν, τράσσειν, to disturb. Der. trache-al.

TRACK, a path, course. (F.-Teut.) Confused with tract in old authors; also with trace both in old and modern authors. Minshew has: 'A trace, or track;' Cotgrave explains F. trac by 'a track, tract, or trace.' In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 3. 66, Rich. III, v. 3. 20, the folios have tract for track; and in Timon, i. 1. 50, the word tract is used in the sense of trace. 'The trak of his hors'; Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. x. c. 14. These words require peculiar care, because trace and tract are really connected, but track is not of I. origin, and quite distinct from the other two words. =F. trac, 'a track, tract, or trace, a beaten way or path, a trade or course.' Cf. Norm. dial. trac, a track; Walloon trak, a stage, or distance along a road. The sense of 'beaten track' is the right one; we still use that very phrase. Of Teut. origin. =MDu. treck, Du. trak, a draught; from trekken, to draw, pull, tow, travel, march, &c., MDu. trecken, 'to draw, pull, or hale'; Hexham; also MHG. trecken, to draw, a secondary verb formed from the OHG. strong verb trahan, to scrape, shove, draw. As the last is a strong verb, we see that tract is quite independent of the L. trahere. Note that NFries. has tracks for Du. trecken. Der. track, verb; track-less, Cowley, The Muse, l. 25.

TRACT (1), continued duration, a region. (L.) Often confused both with trace and track; it is related to the former only; see Trace (1). 'This in tracte of tyme made hym welthy'; Fabyan, Chron. c. 56. =L. tractus, a drawing out; the course of a river, a tract or region. =L. tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Trace (1). And see Tractable.

TRACT (2), a short treatise. (L.) An abbreviation for tractate, which is now little used. 'Tractate, a treatise'; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. =L. tractatus, acc. of tractatus, a handling, also a treatise, tractate, or tract. See Tractable. Der. tract-ar-i-an, one who holds opinions such as were propounded in 'Tracts for the Times,' of which 90 numbers were published, A. D. 1833-1841; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

TRACTABLE, easily managed, docile. (L.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iii. 3. 194. =L. tractabilis, manageable, easily wrought. =L. tractare, to handle, frequent of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw. See Trace (1). Der. tract-ability, tractable-ness, tractability. Also (like L. pp. tractus) tract-ile, that may be drawn out; tract-ion, from F. traction, 'a draught or extraction,' Cot.; tract-ive, drawing or pulling; tract-or (see Webster). Also tract-ate, for which see Tract (2).

TRADE, way of life, occupation, commerce. (E.) 'Properly that path which we tread, and thus the ever recurring habit and manner of our life;' Trench, Select Glossary. It once meant, literally, a path; 'A common trade, to pass through Priams house;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 592. Not common; the usual ME. words are tred and trod, both in the sense of footmark, Ancren Riwle, p. 380, note g. But we find the exact form in the ME. trade, Sir Guy (Caius MS.), 4731, the prov. E. trade (E. D. D.), and Low G. trade, Swed. dial. trad, a beaten track; from the 2nd grade of the vb. All from AS. trædan, to tread; see Tread. Der. trades-man, i. e. trade's-man, one who follows a trade; trades-woman; trades-union (= either trade's union or trades' union). Also trade, vb., trad-ed, K. John, iv. 3. 109; trad-er, i Hen. IV, i. 2. 141. Also trade-wind, a wind blowing in a constant direction, formed from the phr. to blow trade = to blow always in the same course; 'the wind blowing trade,' Hakluyt's Voyages, iii. 849; the word trade-wind is in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, last line but one.

TRADITION, the handing down to posterity of unwritten practices or opinions. (L.) ME. traditoun, Wyclif, Col. ii. 8. Formed directly from L. traditio, a surrender, delivery, tradition (Col. ii. 8). [The F. form of the word gave us our word trason.] Cf. L. tradit-us, pp. of tradere, to deliver; see TRAITOR. Der. tradition-al. Doubtless, tradition.

TRADUCE, to defame. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 175. In the Prologue to the Golden Joke, traduce occurs in the sense of translate, and traduction is translation. — L. tradūcere, to lead across, transfer, derive; also, to divulge, convict, prove guilty (whence our use to defame). — L. trā-, for trans, across; and ducere, to lead; see TRANS and DUKE. Der. traduce-er.

TRAFFIC, to trade, exchange, barter. (F.—Ital.) In Shak. Timon, i. 158; Macb. iii. 5. 4; we have also the sb. traffic, spelt traffice in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 11. 9. — F. traffiquer, 'to traffick, trade'; Cot. We find also F. traffique, sb. 'traffick'; id. — Ital. trafficare, to traffic, manage (trafficare in Florio). Cf. Span. traficar, trafagar; Port. traficar, trafagar; to traffic, to cheat. Also Ital. traffico (traffico in Florio), Span. traffico, traffico, traffic, careful management; Port. traffico, traffico, traffic. F. Origin unknown. It has been proposed to derive it from Heb. traffik, a late Heb. rendering of late Gk. τραφικία; which again is a Gk. rendering of L. uictorius, the name of a silver coin bearing the figure of Victory (Lewis). See Athenaeum, Apr. 7, 1900. Der. traffic, sb.; traffic-er, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 12.

TRAGACANTH, a gum obtained from several shrubs of the genus Astragalus. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Bailey, vol. ii (1731), who explains it by 'gum dragon'; where dragon is due to the old name dragant, from MF. dragant in Cotgrave. — F. tragacanth (Hatzfeld), the name of a shrub. — L. tragacantha, the tragacanth-shrub; cf. tragacanthum, also dragantum, gum tragacanth. — Gk. τραγάκανθα, astragalus, lit. 'goat-thorn'. — Gk. τράγος, a goat; and ἀκανθα, a thorn, from ἀκ-, sharp point.

TRAGEDY, a species of drama of a lofty and mournful cast. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. tragédie; see Chaucer's definition of it, C. T. i. 3979 (B 3163). — MF. tragedie, 'a tragedy'; Cot. — L. tragœdia = Gk. τραγῳδία, a tragedy. 'There is no question that tragœdy is the song of the goat; but why the song of the goat, whether because a goat was the prize for the best performance of that song in which the germs of the future tragedy lay, or because the first actors were dressed like satyrs, in goat-skins, is a question which has stirred abundant discussion, and will remain unsettled to the end;' Trench, Study of Words, lect. v. The latter theory now finds most favour. A third theory is that a goat was sacrificed at the singing of the song; a goat, as being the spoiler of vines, was a fitting sacrifice at the feasts of Dionysus. In any case, the etymology is certain. — Gk. τραγῳδία, lit. 'a goat-singer'; a tragic poet and singer. — Gk. τράγος, a he-goat; and οἶκος, a singer, contracted from δοῖκος; see ODE. Der. tragedy, in All's Well, iv. 3. 299, apparently a coined word, not borrowed from French. Also trag-ig, 2 Hen. IV. i. 1. 61, from F. tragique, 'tragically, tragick'; Cot. — L. tragicus, Gk. τραγικός, goatish, tragic, from τράγος, a goat. Hence tragic-al, -al-ly, -al-ness.

TRAIL, to draw along the ground, to hunt by tracking. (F.—L.) ME. trailer. In Wyclif, Esther, xv. 7, later version, we find: 'but the tother of the seruantes sude the lady, and bar vp the clothis fletinge doum in-to the erthe;' where, for fletinge, some MSS. have trailing, and the earlier version has flowende = flowing. Cf. 'Branches doo trails;' Palladius, iii. 289, p. 71. 'Traylyn as collops, Segmento;' Prompt. Parv. We have also ME. traille, sb. 'Trayle, or trayne of a clothe;' Prompt. Parv. So also: 'Trayle, sledde [sledges], trah; to Trayle, trahere;' Lxvins, ed. 1570. John de Garlande, in the 13th cent., gives a list of 'instrumenta mulieribus convenientia'; one of these is trahale, of which he says: 'Trahale dicitur a traho, Gallice trahil;' Wright's Voc. i. 134. Palsgrave has: 'I trayle, lyke as a gowne dothe behynde on the grounde;' also 'I trayle, as one trayleth an other behynde or at a horse-tayle.' — OF. trailer, to tow a boat (Supp. to Godfrey); MF. trailer, 'to wind a yarn; also, to trail a deer, or hunt him upon a cold sent'; Cot. — OF. traille, a tow-rope (Supp. to Godfrey); also, a ferry-boat with a cord. — L. trahēda, a drag-net, sledge; cf. traha, a sledge. — L. trahere, to draw; see TRAIT. And cf. trahin. Cf. MDu. traylen, 'to draw, or dragge a boate with a cord'; Hexham; borrowed (like MDu. trayn, a train) from French.

TRAILBASTON, a law-term. (F.—L.) See Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, and Spelman. 'There were justices of traylbaston, appointed by Edw. I. [The common people, in those days called them tray-baston, quod sonat trake baculum.] Blount. Roquefort divides the word as tray-le-baston. It would seem that the word was considered as a compound of OF. trah (= L. trahere), give up, and baston, a wand of office, because many unjust officers were deprived of their offices.] But this view is proved to be wrong by the passage from Langtoft's Chronicle printed in Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 311 on which see Wright's note, p. 383. The Anglo-F. word traylbastoun, traylebastoun or traylbastoun, meaning 'trail-stick' stick-carrier; (id. pp. 231, 233, 319); and the name was given a particular set of lawless men, who carried sticks, and committed acts of violence. Against these the articles of trailbaston were directed; and the justices of trailbaston tried them. The Outlaw Song (Polit. Songs, p. 231) is explicit; he says that these articles were unreasonable; for if he merely gives his servant a buffet or two the servant will have him arrested, and he will be heavily fine. Mr. Wright notes that some have supposed (quite wrongly) that the name was given, not to the outlaws, but the judges. For the form of the word, compare MDu. kolf-drager, a sergeant, lit. 'club-bearer'. See TRAIL and BASTON.

TRAIN, the hinder part of a trailing dress, a retinue, serie line of gun-powder, line of carriages; as a verb, to trail, to allure, educate, discipline. (F.—L.) ME. train, sb., spelt trayn, with the sense of pl. Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 295, l. 22: trays id. p. 263, l. 231; 'treson and trayne,' Mort. Arthur, ed. Broc 4192; ME. trayner, verb, to entice, id. 1683; — F. train, m., 'great man's retinue, the train or hinder part of a beast; . . . word dealing, trade, practise'; Cot. Also traine, f., 'a sled, a drag (drag without wheels, i.e. drag-net); id. Also trainer, verb, 'to trail drag, draw'; id. Of trahin, trahin, a train of men; trahine, trainer, verb; cf. Late L. trahināre, to drag; occurring A.D. 126 — Late L. trahināre, draw along (Schwan); evidently founded upon L. trahere, to draw; see TRADE. TRAIL. Cf. AF. traine, p. dragged along, Liber Custumarum, p. 284. Der. train-er; train-bear, i.e. train's bearer, a band of trained men, Cowper, John Gilpin st. 1, and used by Dryden and Clarendon (Todd); train-bear-er. But not two-ol.

TRAIN-OIL, oil procured from the blubber or fat of whales boiling. (Hybrid; Du.; and F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt traine-oyle, Halley's Voyages, i. 477, last line; trayne oyle, Arnold's Chron. p. 237 In Hexham's Du. Dict., ed. 1658, we find: 'Trayn, trayne-oyle m. of the fat of whales.' Also: 'trayn, a tear; liquor pressed out of the fat.' Cf. mod. Du. trane, a tear; trane, train-oil. We thus see that the lit. sense of train is 'tear'; then, a drop of liquor forced out by fire; and lastly, we have train-oil, or oil forced out by boiling. Cf. Dan. and Swed. trane, train-oil, blubber. G. thran, all borrow from Dutch; cf. G. thran, a tear, also a drop exuding from a vein when cut. So also Low G. trane, train-oil; trane, a tear; very well explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch. Similarly, we use E. tear in the sense of 'a drop of some balsams and resins, &c.' β. The D. trane (equivalent to OHG. trahan below) is the only form for 'tear' used in Dutch; in the OHG. trahan is really a pl. form, due to MIG trahans, pl. of trahan, OHG. trahan, a tear. It has been thought that the OHG. trahan is allied to E. tear; but the connexion is not clear. ¶ It thus appears that train-oil is a tautologous expression accordingly, we find trane, train-oil, in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775.

TRAIT, a feature. (F.—L.) Given in Johnson, with the remark 'scarcely English.' — F. trait, 'a draught, line, streak, stroke,' Cot. He also gives the MF. spelling traiet. — F. trait, formerly also traiet pp. of traire, to draw. — L. tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see TRADE (γ).

TRAITOR, one who betrays, a deceiver. (F.—L.) ME. traitour spelt traitoure, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 61, l. 12; traitur O. Eng. Homilies, i. 279, l. 22. — OF. traitor, traiteur, a traitor. — L. traditorem, act of traditio, one who betrays. — L. tridreder, to hand over, deliver, betray. — L. trā-, for trans, across, over, and -dere, to dare, to give; (hence trā-didi, pt. t., is due to dedit, I gave). See TRANS and DARE. Der. traitor-ous, 1 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 173; traitor-ous-ly; trait-ras, All's Well, i. 1. 184. From the same source an tradit-ion, treason, be-tray.

TRAJECTORY, the curve which a body describes when projected. (F.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Suggested by MF. trajec-taire, 'casting, thrusting, sending, transporting'; Cot. Formed as if from a L. trāiectorius, belonging to projection; formed from trā-icere, pp. of trahere (trāicere), to throw, cast, or fling over or across. — L. trā-, for trans, across; and iacere, to cast. See TRANS and JET. Der. trajec-t, which is perhaps the right reading for tranect in Merch. of Ven. iii. 4. 53; from MF. trajec-t, 'a ferry; passage over,' Cot., which from L. trāiectus, a passage over. Shakespeare would have written traicet, which was made into tranect, a false form.

TRAM, a coal-wagon, a carriage for passengers running on iron rails. (Scand.) There have been frequent inquiries about this word see Notes and Queries, 2 Ser. v. 128, iii. 229, 276, 358; 4 Ser. xii. 299, 420; 6 Ser. ii. 225, 356. A tram is an old Northern word for a coal-wagon, esp. such a one as ran upon mills. In N. and Q. 2 Ser. xii. 276, J. N. quoted an Act of Parliament for the year 1794 for the construction of 'an iron drum-road, tram-road, or railway' between Cardiff and Merthyr Tydfil; but the date 1794 should have been 1820. In N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 356, A. Wallis stated that 'tramways were in use in Derbyshire before 1790: one of planks and log-sleepers was laid between Shipley coal-pit and the wharf near Newmansley, a distance of 1½ miles, and was discontinued in the above year.' [About A.D. 1800, a Mr. Benjamin Outram made certain improvements in connexion with railways for common vehicles, which gave rise to the fiction (ever since industriously circulated) that tram-road is short for Outram road, in ignorance of the fact that the accent alone is sufficient to show that Outram, if shortened to one syllable, must become Out rather than ram or tram.] Brockett's Glossary (3rd ed. 1846) explains that a tram is the Northern word for 'a small carriage on four wheels, so distinguished from a sledge. It is used in coal-mines to bring the coals from the hewers to the crane.'

β. The word is clearly the same as Lowland Scotch tram, '(1) the shaft of a cart or carriage of any kind, (2) a beam or bar,' Jamieson. Dunbar has barrow-tram; Of the same James Dog, l. 19. Cf. prov. E. tram, a small milk-bench (Halliwell); which was orig. a plank of wood. It was prob. used first of the shaft of a small carriage, and then applied to the small carriage itself, esp. such a one as was pushed or drawn by men or boys in coal-pits. This notion is borne out by the cognate Low G. trām, a word particularly used of the handles of a wheel-barrow or the handles by which a kind of sledge was pushed; Bremen Wörterbuch, ed. 1771. In N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 498, J. H. Clark notes that 'the amending of the highway or tram from the Weste ende of Bridgegait, in Barnard Castle' occurs in a will dated 1555; see Surtees Soc. Publications, vol. xxxviii. p. 37. Here a tram prob. means a log-road. The word is Scandinavian. — Norw. tram, a doorstep (of wood); trām, a frame; Swed. dial. trām, a log, stock of a tree; also a summer-sledge (sommarsläd); also trām, trām (Rietz); MSwed. trām, trām, a piece of a large tree, cut up into logs. The orig. sense is clearly a beam or bar of cut wood, hence a shaft of a sledge or cart, or even the sledge itself. Cf. E. fries, trame, a step of a ladder, handle of a barrow; Low G. trām, a balk, beam, esp. one of the handles of a wheel-barrow, as above; also MDu. drom, a beam (obsolete); Hexham. Also OHG. drām, trām, a beam, once a common word; see Grimm's Dict. ii. 1331, 1332. The last form may account for the variation drum-road, in the Act of Parliament cited above; and it has been already observed that a drumroad or trāmroad might also be explained as a log-road. γ. The comparison of Swed. trām with Du. drum shows that the original Low G. initial letter must have been th; which is proved by the Icel. fram-vær, lit. 'a beam-hawk,' a poet. word for a ship. δ. The Swed. dial. trām (above) further resembles G. trām, lump, stump, end, thrum, fragment, and suggests a connexion with Thrum (1), to which Icel. fram is related by gradation. Hence, the orig. sense was 'end'; then fragment, bit, lump, log, plank, shaft, &c. Der. tram-road, way.

TRAMMEL, a net, shackle, anything that confines or restrains. (F.—L.) ME. tramayle, 'grote nette for fyschuyge'; Prompt. Parv. Spenser has trammels, nets for the hair, F. Q. ii. 2. 15. — MF. trammel, 'a trammel, or a net for partridges,' Cot. Cf. F. trameau (answering to an older form tramel*), 'a kind of drag-net for fish, a trammel net for fowls'; this comes still nearer to Spenser's trammel. Cf. Ital. trammaglio, a drag-net, trammel; Port. trasmalho, Span. trasmallo, a trammel or net; Gascon trammil; mod. F. trémale. — Late L. tramacula, tramacula, a trammel, occurring in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessel and Kern, xviii. 20, col. 154; cf. coll. 158, 161. The word has numerous other forms, such as tramacle, trémale, trémale, &c., in other texts of the Lex Salica. Kern remarks: 'trémale, &c. is a diminutive, more or less Latinised. The Frankish word must have differed but slightly, if at all, from the Drenthian (N. Saxon) treemke (for treemke, treemke), a trammel. Both the English and Drenthian word point to a simplex trami or trami a'; col. 501. β. This assumes the word to be Teutonic, yet brings us back to no intelligible Teut. base; nor does it account for the Ital. form. Dietz takes it to be Latin, and explains tramacula from L. tri-, thrice, three times, and macula, a mesh or net, as if it meant treble-mesh or treble-net. He remarks that a similar explanation applies to Trellis, q.v. [This account is accepted, without question, by Scheler, Littre, and Hatzfeld.] It is to be further noted that, according to Dietz, the Piedmontese trimag is explained by Zalli to mean a fish-net or bird-net made of three layers of net of different-sized meshes; and that Cherubini and Patriarchi make similar remarks concerning the Milanese trémagge and Venetian trémagio. γ. As to L. tri-, see Three; as to L. macula, see Mail (1). The Span. trasmallo is an altered form, as if from trans maculam, across the net, which is not very intelligible. See Körtig, § 9739.

TRAMONTANE, foreign. (F.—Ital.—L.) The word is properly Italian, and only intelligible from an Italian point of view; it was applied to men who lived beyond the mountains, i.e. in France, Switzerland, Spain, &c. It came to us through the French, and was at first spelt tramountain. 'The Italians account all tramountain doctors but apothecaries in comparison of themselves;' Fuller, Worthies, Hertfordshire (R.). — MF. tramountain, 'northerly;' Cot. — Ital. tramountano, pl. tramountani, 'those folks that dwell beyond the mountains;' Florio. — L. trasmontanus, beyond the mountains. — L. trans, beyond; and mont-, stem of mons, a mountain; see Trans and Mountain. Cf. Ultramountane.

TRAMP, to tread, stamp. (E.) ME. trampen. 'Trampelen, trampyn, Tero;' Prompt. Parv. 'He trampith with the foot;' Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13. Not in AS, but prob. E.; it is found in G. and Low G., whence the Scand. forms. Cf. Low G. and G. trampen, trampeln, to stamp; Dan. trampe, Swed. trampa, to tread, trample on. From the Teut. base TRAMP, to tread, occurring as the 2nd grade of the Goth. strong verb ana-trimpan. 'Managei ana-trimpan ina' = the multitude pressed upon him, lit. trampled on him, Luke, v. 1. β. This is a nasalised form of the Teut. base TRAP, to tread; see Trap (1). Der. tramp, sb., a journey on foot; tramp-er, a vagrant (see Johnson); also tramp, a shortened familiar form of trampler, both forms being given in Grose's Dict. of the Vulgar Tongue, 1790. And see tramp-le.

TRAMPLE, to tread under foot. (E.) ME. trampelen; Prompt. Parv. The frequentative of TRAMP, q.v. The sense is, accordingly, 'to keep on treading upon.' Cf. Low G. trampeln, G. trampeln, to trample, stamp; from Low G. and G. trampen, to tramp or stamp.

TRAM-ROAD, TRAM-WAY; see Tram.

TRANSCEND, catalepsy, ecstasy, loss of self-consciousness. (F.—L.) ME. transce, Chaucer, C. T., A 1572. — F. transce, 'extreme fear, dread, . . . a trance or swoon;' Cot. A verbal sb. from the OF. transire, of which Cot. gives the pp. transi, 'fallen into a trance or swoon, astonished, amazed, half dead.' — L. transire, to go or pass over; whence Ital. transire, 'to go forth, pass over'; . . . also to fall in a swoon, to dye or gaspe the last; Florio. [This shows that transire came to have the sense of 'die' or 'swoon'; similarly the OF. trespasser (our trespass) commonly means 'to die.' — L. trans, across; and ire, to go; see Transit. Der. en-transce (2). Also trans-ed, K. Lear, v. 3. 218.

TRANQUIL, quiet, peaceful. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 348. [The sb. tranquillity is in much earlier use; we find ME. tranquillite, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4. 1. 99.] — F. tranquille, 'calm;' Cot. — L. tranquillus, calm, quiet, still. Prob. associated with qui-ēs, rest; compare quies with E. while. Der. tranquil-ly; tranquillity, from F. tranquillité, 'tranquillity,' Cot., from L. acc. tranquillitatem. Also tranquillise, Thomson, Castle of Indolence, c. ii. st. 19.

TRANS-, beyond, across, over. (L.) L. trans-, prefix; also as prep. trans, beyond. Trans is the pres. part. of a verb trāre*, to cross, go beyond, only occurring in in-trāre, ex-trāre, penetrāre. Cf. Skt. tara-, a crossing over. Brugmann, ii. § 579. Allied to Term. β. The comp. suffix -ter (in Latin) is prob. from the same root; cf. pra-ter, sub-ter, in-ter-ior, &c. In composition, trans becomes tran- in tran-qui, tran-scend, tran-scribe, tran-sept, tran-spire, tran-substantiate; and tra- in tra-dition, tra-duce, tra-jectory, tramountane (though the last is only an Ital., not a Latin spelling); also in tra-verse, tra-vesty.

TRANSACTION, the management of an affair. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transacion, 'a transaction, accord, agreement;' Cot. — L. transactiōnem, acc. of transactio, a completion, an agreement; cf. L. transactus, pp. of transigere, to drive or thrust through, also to settle a matter, complete a business. — L. trans, across, through; and agere, to drive; see Trans and Aet. Der. transact-or, in Cot., to translate F. transacteur, but perhaps directly from L. transactor, a manager. Hence was evolved the verb transact, Milton, P. L. vi. 286.

TRANS-ALPINE, beyond the Alps. (F.—L.) 'Transalpine garbs;' Beaumont and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, l. 1. — F. transalpin, 'foraigñ;' Cot. — L. transalpinus, beyond the Alps. — L. trans, beyond; and Alp-, stem of Alpēs, the Alps; with suffix -inus. See Trans and Alp. ¶ So also trans-atlantic, a coined word, 'used by Sir W. Jones in 1782; see Memoirs, &c., p. 217;' F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 275.

TRANSCEND, to surmount, surpass. (L.) In Gawain Douglas, Palace of Honour, pt. ii. st. 18. — L. transcendere, to climb over, surpass. — L. trans, beyond; and scendere, to climb. See Trans and Soan. Der. transcend-ent, used by Cot. to translate F. transcendunt; transcend-ent-ly, transcendence, All's Well, ii. 3. 40, from L. sb. transcendentia; transcend-ent-ly, given as a mathematical term in Phillips, ed. 1706; transcend-ent-ly, -ism, -ist.

TRANSCRIBE, to copy out. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cot., to translate F. transcribere = L. transcribere (pp. transcriptus), to transfer in writing, copy from one book into another. — L. trans, across, over; and scribere, to write; see Trans and Scribe. Der. transcriber, Tatler, no. 271, § 3; transcript, in Minshew, from L. pp. transcriptus; the part of a church at right angles to the nave.

TRANSEPT, the part of a church at right angles to the nave. (L.) Lit. 'a cross-enclosure.' Not an old word; and coined. Oddly spelt transsept in Wood's Fasti Oxonienses, vol. ii. (R.); of which the first edition appeared in 1691. — L. tran-, for trans, across; and septum, an enclosure. Septum is from seps, pp. of sēpere or sēpire, to enclose; from sēps, a hedge.

TRANSFER, to transport, convey to another place. (L.) In Shak. Sonnet 137. Cot. gives F. pp. transferre, 'transferred'; but the E. word was prob. directly from L. transferre, to transport, transfer. — L. trans, across; and ferre, to carry, cognate with E. bear. See Trans and Bear (1). Der. transfer-able, also spelt transferr-ible (quite needless); transfer-ence, transfer-ee.

TRANSFIGURE, to change the appearance of. (F.—L.) ME. transfiguren, Chaucer, C. T. 1107 (A 1105). — F. transfigurare, 'to transfigure.' Cot.—L. transfigurare, to change the figure of.—L. trans, across (hence implying change); and figūra, figure, outward appearance. See Trans and Figure. Der. transfiguration—ion, from F. transfigurationem, 'a transfiguration,' Cot., from L. acc. transfigurationem.

TRANSFIX, to fix by piercing through. (L.) 'Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart.' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 21.—L. transfixus, pp. of transfigere, to thrust through. See Trans and Fix.

TRANSFORM, to change the form of. (F.—L.) ME. transformen, Wyclif, 2 Cor. iii. 18.—F. transformare, 'to transform.' Cot.—L. transformare, to change the form of.—L. trans, across (implying change); and forma, form. See Trans and Form. Der. transformation—ion, from F. transformationem, 'a transformation,' Cot., from L. acc. transformationem.

TRANSFUSE, to cause to pass from one person or part into another, to make to imbibe. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 389, vi. 704.—L. transfundere, pp. of transfundere, to pour out of one vessel into another, to decant, transfuse.—L. trans, across; and fundere, to pour; see Trans and Fuse. Der. transfusion—ion.

TRANSGRESSION, violation of a law, sin. (F.—L.) 'For the rage of my transgression;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii (How the Child was slain by a serpent). — F. transgressionem, 'a transgression, trespass.' Cot.—L. transgressionem, acc. of transgressio, a passing over, transposition, also a transgression of the law; cf. transgressus, pp. of transgredi, to step over, pass over.—L. trans, across; and gradi, to step, walk; see Trans and Grade. Der. transgressor, formerly transgressor, Fabyan, Chron. an. 1180, ed. Ellis, p. 299, from F. transgressore, 'a transgressor,' Cot., from L. acc. transgressorem. Hence was made transgress, verb, used by Tyn-dall, Works, p. 224, col. 1, l. 3 from bottom. Observe tres-pass, a similar formation to trans-gress.

TRANSIENT, passing away, not lasting. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 554. Suggested by L. transiens, of which the oblique case stem is transiunt, not transient. [Cf. ambiens, from ambire, which is conjugated regularly.] Transiens is the pres. part. of transire, to go across, to pass away.—L. trans, across; and ire, to go, from √EL, to go. See Trans and Itinerant. Der. transient-ly, -ness. Also (like pp. transitus) transit, in Phillips, ed. 1706, shortened from L. transitus, a passing over; transit-ion, Phillips, from L. acc. transitumem, a passing over, a transition; transit-ion-al; transit-ive, from L. transitivus, a term applied to a transitive or active verb; transit-ive-ly, -ness; transit-or-ly, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 128, suggested by F. transitoare, 'transitory,' Cot., from L. transitorius, liable to pass away, passing away; transit-or-ly, -ness. And see transce.

TRANSLATE, to transfer, move to another place, to render into another language. (F.—L.) ME. translatere, to remove, Gower, C. A. i. 261; bk. ii. 3044.—F. translare, to translate, . . . reduce, or remove.' Cot.—Late L. translatere, to translate, in use in the 12th century.—L. translatum, transferred; used as the pp. of transfere, but really from a different root.—L. trans, across; and latum, carried, borne, from √TEL, to lift, bear, whence L. tollere, to lift. See Trans and Tolerate. Der. translation, ME. translatiōem, Chaucer, C. T. 15493 (G 25), from F. translationem, 'a translation,' Cot., from L. translationem, acc. of translatiō, a transference, transferring.

TRANSLUCENT, clear, allowing light to pass through. (L.) In Milton, Comus, 861.—L. translucent, stem of pres. part. of translucere, to shine through.—L. trans, through; and lucere, to shine; see Trans and Lucid. Der. translucent-ly, translucence.

TRANSMARINE, beyond the sea. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. transmarinus, beyond sea.—L. trans, beyond; and mar-e, sea; with suffix -inus. See Trans and Marine.

TRANSMIGRATION, the passing into another country or state of existence. (F.—L.) Spelt transmigrationem, Trevisa, i. 33, l. 20.—F. transmigrationem, 'a transmigration, a shifting or shifting of abroad.' Cot.—L. transmigrationem, acc. of transmigrationem, a removing from one country to another.—L. transmigrationem, to migrate across, from one place to another. See Trans and Migrate. Der. (from L. pp. transmigrationem) transmigrate, Antony, ii. 7. 51; transmigrat-or, transmigrat-or-y.

TRANSMIT, to cause or suffer to pass through, to deliver. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 576 (R.). — L. transmittere, to cause to go across, send over, dispatch, transmit.—L. trans, across; and mittere, to send; see Trans and Mission. Der. transmitt-al, transmitt-er; transmiss-ion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 2, from L. acc. transmissiōem; transmiss-ible, from F. transmissibile, 'transmittable,' Cot.; transmiss-ibil-ity.

TRANSMUTE, to change to another form or substance. (L.) '[He] transmuted the sentence of death unto perpetuity of prison;' Fabyan, Chron. c. 159. [The ME. form was transmuere, or transmueren, Chaucer, C. T. 8261 (E 385), from F. transmuer, 'to change or alter over,' Cot., from L. transmutare.] — L. transmutare, to change into another form.—L. trans, across (implying change); and mutare, to change; see Trans and Mutate. Der. transmut-able; transmut-al-ion, spelt transmutacionem, Chaucer, C. T. 2841 (A 2839), from F. transmutacionem, 'a transmutation, alteration,' Cot., from L. acc. transmutacionem.

TRANSON, a thwart-piece across a double window; the lintel over a door; in ships, a beam across the stern-post to strengthen the after-part. (L.) 'Transome, or lintell over a dore;' Barlet, ed. 1580. 'The transome of a bed, trabula.' Levins. 'Menuet de fenestre, the transome, or cross-bar of a window.' Cot. 'Beames, prickeposts, gronnidels, summers or dormants, transoms, and such principals;' Harrison, Desc. of England, b. ii. c. 12, ed. Furnivall, p. 233. Spelt transom, meaning the part of the bedstead between the two headposts, Bury Wills, p. 23 (1463); spelt transom, Paston Letters, iii. 407. [Halliwell notes the spelling transumpt, but this is a corrupt form; the real meaning of transumpt is a copy of a record; see Transumpt in Cot. Webster says it is sometimes spelt transummer, but I can nowhere find it, and such a spelling is obviously due to confusion with summer, a beam, as used in the above quotation from Harrison.]

β. It is a corruption of L. transstrum, used as an architectural and nautical term. It means precisely a transom, in all its senses. 'Transstra et tabulae nauium dicuntur et tigna, quae ex pariete in parietem porriguntur.' Festus (White). 'Transoms est vox Architectonica et transversas trabes notat, Vitruvius transstra;' Skinner, 1671. Cooper's Thesaurus (1565) explains L. transstrum by 'a transome going overthwart an house.' Florio explains Mital. transstri as 'crosse or overthwart beames, transstrams;' and trasto as 'a transome or beame going crosse a house.'

γ. The L. transstrum is derived from L. trans, orig. 'going across' (see Trans); -trum is a suffix, denoting the agent, as in arā-trum, that which ploughs. Hence trans-strum—that which goes across; cf. in-trans, going in.

TRANSPARENT, clear, allowing objects to be seen through. (F.—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 31.—F. transparent, 'transparent, clear-shining.' Cot.—L. trans, through; and parent, stem of pres. part. of parere, to appear; see Trans and Appear. Der. transparent-ly, -ness; transparency.

TRANSPICUOUS, transparent, translucent. (L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 141. Coined, as if from *L. transpicuus, from L. transpicere, to see or look through; see Conspicuous, Perspicuous. — L. trans, through; and spicere, to look; see Trans and Spy.

TRANSPIERCE, to pierce through. (F.—L.) Used by Drayton; Civil War, bk. vi. last stanza.—F. transpercer, 'to pierce through.' Cot. See Trans and Pierce.

TRANSPIRE, to pass through the pores of the skin, to become public, or ooze out. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 438.—L. trans-, for trans, through; and spirare, to breathe, respire. See Trans and Spirit. Der. transpiration—ion, from F. transpirationem, 'a transpiration, evaporation,' Cot. This sb. prob. really suggested Milton's verb.

TRANSPLANT, to plant in a new place. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. transplantier, 'to transplant,' Cot.—L. transplantare. — L. trans, across, implying change; and plantare, to plant. See Trans and Plant. Der. transplant-al-ion, from F. transplantationem, 'a transplantation,' Cot.

TRANSPORT, to carry to another place, carry away by passion or pleasure, to banish. (F.—L.) In Spenser, Illyon 4, Of Heavenly Heanty, l. 18.—F. transporter, 'to transport, transfer,' Cot.—L. transportare, to carry across.—L. trans, across; and portare, to carry.

See Trans- and Port (1). Der. transport, sb., Pope, Windsor Forest, 90; transport-able; transport-ance, Troil. iii. 2. 12; transport-al-ion.

TRANSPOSE, to change the position of, change the order of. (F.—L. and Gk.) ME. transposen, Gower, C. A. ii. 90; bk. iv. 2056.—F. transposer, 'to transpose, translate, remove'; Cot. See Trans- and Pose. Der. transpos-al.

TRANSPOSITION, a change in the order of words, &c. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. transposition, 'a transposition, removal out of one place into another'; Cot. See Trans- and Position. ¶ Not ultimately connected with transpose, which is from a different source.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the doctrine that the bread and wine in the Eucharist are changed into Christ's body and blood. (F.—L.) In Tyndall, Works, p. 447, col. 2; he also has transubstantiated, id. p. 445, col. 2.—F. transubstantiation; Cot.—Late L. transubstantiatio, acc. of transubstantiatio; see Hildebert, Bp. of Tours, Sermon 93. Hildebert died in 1134 (Trench, Study of Words). Cf. Late L. transubstantiatus, pp. of transubstantiatio, coined from trans, across (implying change), and substantia, substance. See Trans- and Substance.

TRANSVERSE, lying across or cross-wise. (L.) 'But all things tost and turned by transverse', Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56; where by transverse = in a confused manner, or reversedly.—L. transversus, turned across; hence, athwart. Orig. pp. of transvertere, to turn across. See Trans- and Verse. And see Traverse. Der. transverse-ly.

TRAP (1), an instrument or device for ensnaring animals. (E.) ME. trappe, Chaucer, C. T. 145. AS. trappe, a trap; Alfric's (Oloquy the Fowler); for trappe*; cf. be-trappan, to entrap; A. S. Chron. an. 992. But the pronunciation has perhaps been affected by F. trappe, a trap, a word of Teut. origin.—MDu. trappe, 'a trap to catch mice in'; Hexham; OHG. trappa, trappa, a snare, trap [whence Low L. trappa, Ital. trappa, F. trappe, Span. trampa, a trap (Dizel)]. Ø. Orig. sense 'step' the trap is that on which an animal steps, or puts its foot, and is so caught. Cf. Westphal. trappe, a step; Du. trap, a stair, step, kick; G. trappe, a flight of steps; Swed. trappa, a stair; allied to Du. trappen, to tread on, FFries, and Low G. trappen, Norw. trappa, to tread on, trample. Allied to Tramp. The nasalised form tramp appears in Span. trampa, a trap. Der. trap, verb, spelt trappe in Palsgrave; trap-door, a door falling and shutting with a catch; also en-trap, q. v. Also trap-ball or trap-bat, a game played with a ball, bat, and a trap which, when lightly tapped, throws the ball into the air. And see trap (3).

TRAP (2), to adorn, or ornament with gay dress or clothing. (F.—Teut.) The pp. trapped occurs in Chaucer: 'Upon a stede bay, trapped in steele', C. T. 2159 (A 2157); and see l. 2892 (A 2890). This is formed from a sb. trappe, meaning the trappings or ornaments of a horse. 'Mony trappe, mony croper' = many a trapping, many a crupper; King Alisaunder, 3421. 'Upon a stede whyt so milke; His trappys wer off tuelly sylke'; Rich. Cœur de Lion, 1515; where tuelly means 'scarlet'. Coined, with unusual change from dr to tr (by sound association with trap (1)), from F. drap, cloth; as shown by Chaucer's use of drapure, trappings of a horse, C. T. A 2499, from OF. drapure, trappings of a horse (Godefroy). We also find Late L. trappus, cloth (usually drappus), Span. and Port. trapo, cloth; Late L. trappatura, a horse's trappings. See Drape. Ø. Cf. F. draper, 'to dress, or to full cloth; to beat, or thicken, as cloth, in the fulling'. Possibly for traper*; in which case it may come from Low G. and Du. trappen, to tread upon, trample on (hence, to full cloth). See Trap (1). Der. trappings, s. pl., ornaments for a horse, Shak. Venus, 286, hence, any ornaments, Hamlet, i. 2. 86. Also rattle-traps, q. v.

TRAP (3), a kind of igneous rock. (Swed.) Modern. So called because such rocks often appear in large tabular masses, rising above each other like steps (Webster).—Swed. trappa, a stair, or flight of stairs, trapp, trap (rock); Dan. trappe, a stair, trap, trapp—Du. trap, a stair, step; G. trappe, a stair. See Trap (1) and Tramp.

TRAPANE, the same as Trepan (2), q. v.

TRAPEZIUM, a plane four-sided figure with unequal sides. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in M. Blundeville's Exercises, 1594, fol. 36 b (wrongly marked 39 b).—L. trapezium.—Gk. trapézion, a small table or counter; a trapezium, because four-sided, like such a table. Dimin. of trapéza, a table, esp. a dining-table. Cf. trapézion, i. e. silver-footed, as an epithet of Thetis.—Gk. trapa, allied to trapéza, prefix signifying 'four', as in trapéza-yaros, four-cornered, from trapéza, Attic for trapézion, a table; and trapa, a foot, for trapa*, an allied word to trapa (stem trapa), four; which is cognate with E. foot. See Tetragon and Foot. Der. trapezo-id, lit. 'trapezium-like', from trapéza, for trapéza, and eid-os, form; trapezo-id-al.

Also trapeze, from F. trapèze, the name of a kind of swing for athletic exercise, so called from being sometimes made in the shape of a trapezium, as thus: Δ. The F. trapèze is from L. trapezium.

TRAPPINGS, horse-ornaments; see Trap (2).

TRAPPIST, a member of a certain monastic body. (F.) 'Named from the village of Soligny-la-Trappe, in the department of Orne, France, where the abbey of la Trappe was founded in 1140'; Cent. Dict.

TRASH, refuse, worthless stuff. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 223; Oth. iii. 3. 157; hence used of a worthless person, Oth. ii. 1. 312, v. 1. 85. The orig. sense is clippings of trees, as stated by Wedgwood, or (yet more exactly) the bits of broken sticks found under trees in a wood, and collected for fire-wood. Wedgwood quotes from Evelyn as follows, with a reference to Notes and Queries, June 11, 1853: 'Faggots to be every stick of three foot in length—this to prevent the abuse of filling the middle part and ends with trash and short sticks.' Hence it came to mean refuse generally; Cotgrave explains menüailles by 'small ware, small trash, small offals.' Of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. trass, rubbish, leaves and twigs from a tree picked up and used for fuel, whence trassa, to become worn out, to split up as a seam does; cf. trassi, a slovenly fellow, trassa, to be slovenly. Norweg. trask, trash, scraps (Ross); tras, small pieces (Ross); trasa, a rag, tatter (Ross); trase, the same; also trass, fallen twigs, half-rotten branches easily broken, allied to trygia, to break into small pieces, to crackle. Swed. trasa, a rag, a tatter; Swed. dial. trase, a rag; triss, a heap of sticks, a worthless fellow (which is one sense of Cleveland trash), old useless bits of fencing. Ø. Rietz points out the true origin; he adduces Swed. dial. slä i tras, to break in pieces, which is obviously the same phrase as Swed. slä i kras, to break in pieces; the substitution of tr for kr being a Scan. peculiarity, of which we have an undoubted example in Icel. trani, Swed. trana, Dan. trane, all variants of the word which we spell crane; see Crane. Hence the etym. is from Swed. krasa, Dan. krase, to crash, as a thing does when broken; see Crash. The Icel. form trass answers to Swed. krossa, to bruise, crush, crash, a colloquial form of krasa; cf. Orkney trass, refuse, also prov. E. trass, the trimmings of a hedge (Halliwell). Y. Thus trash means 'crashings', i. e. pieces that break off short with a snap or crash, dry twigs; hence also a bit of torn stuff, a rag, &c. ¶ This throws no light on trash, as in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 87; which has prob. a different origin, perhaps trace (2). Der. trash-ly.

TRAVAIL, toil, labour in child-birth. (F.—L.) ME. travail (with u for v), Aeneid of Inwyt, p. 130, l. 32.—F. travail, 'travell, toile, labour, business, pains-taking'; Cot. [Cf. Ital. travaglio, Span. trabajo, Port. trabalho, Prov. trabalhas (Hartsch), toil, labour; orig. an obstacle or impediment, which is still a sense of Span. trabajo.] According to P. Meyer (Romania, xvii. 421) it answers to Late L. trēpālium, a kind of rack for torturing martyrs (Ducange); perhaps made of three beams (tres pāli). Others equate it to Late L. trabaculum*, which might have been formed from L. trab, base of L. trabs, trabes, a beam. Cf. L. trabille, an axle-tree; and see Trave. ¶ The W. travael, travail, is borrowed from English. Der. travail, verb, ME. trawailen, King Alisaunder, 1612, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 34, l. 3, from F. trawailier, 'to travell, toile, also to harry, weary, vex, infest'; Cot. Doublet, trawl.

TRAVERE, a beam, a shackle. (F.—L.) 'Trave, a frame into which farriers put unruly horses'; Halliwell. 'Trave, Traveise, a place enclosed with rails for shoeing an unruly horse'; Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. 'Trave, a trevis or little room made purposely to shoe unbroken horses in'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Trens, to shoe a wyld horse in, trawayl a cheual'; Palsgrave. ME. trave (with u for v); 'And she sprong as a colt doth in the trawe'; Chaucer, C. T. 3282.—OF. trave, a beam, Godefroy; traf, a beam, given in the Supp. to Roquefort; usually trēf, 'the beam of a house'; Cot. [Cf. Mital. trave, 'any kind of beam'; Florio.]—L. trabem, acc. of trabes or trabs, a beam. Der. archi-trave, q. v.

TRAVEL, to journey, walk. (F.—L.) Merely the same word as travail; the two forms are used indiscriminately in old editions of Shakespeare (Schmidt). So also travail, to travel; in Ben Jonson, Every Man, ii. 5. 32. The word forcibly recalls the toil of travel in former days. See Travail. Der. travel, verb; travell-er, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308. Doublet, travail.

TRAVERSE, laid across; as sb., a cross, obstruction, a thing built across; as a verb, to cross, obstruct, deny an argument, also to pass over a country. (F.—L.) 'Trees . . . hewen downe, and laid trawrs, one over another'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 186 (R.). 'Smote his hors traverse'; Malory, Mort. Arture, bk. x. c. 65. Gower has trawrs as a sb., meaning 'cross', or impediments, in the last line but 14 of his Conf. Amantis.—F. travers, m., traverse, f., 'cross-wise, overthwart'; Cot. (Hence the sb. traverse, 'a cross-way, also . . . a thwart, . . . let, bar, hinderance'; id.; also the verb travertine, 'to thwart or go overthwart, to cross or pass over,' id. = L. transvertere, turned across, laid athwart; pp. of transvertere, to turn across; see TRANSVERSE. Der. travertine, verb, in Malory, M. A. bk. x. c. 30, from F. travertine, as above; travertine.

TRAVERTINE, TRAVERTIN, a kind of white lime-stone. (Ital.-L.) Used for building. Spelt Travertino, R. Eden, Three Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 367; = Ital. travertino, Mital. tivertino, 'a kind of stone to build withall' (Florio). = L. Tiberinus, belonging to Tiber, the modern Tivoli.

TRAVESTY, a parody. (F.-Ital.-L.) 'Scarronides, or Virgile Travestie, being the first book of Virgil's Æneis in English Burlesque; London, 1664;' by Charles Cotton. Probably travestie is here used in the lit. sense of 'disguised,' or as we should now say, travestied. It is properly a pp., being borrowed from F. travesti, pp. of se travestir, 'to disguise or shift his apparel, to play the counterfeite;' Cot. = Ital. travestire, 'to disguise or shift in apparel, to masquerade;' Florio. = L. trans, prefix, lit. across, but implying change; and vestire, to clothe. The verb vestire is from the sb. vestis, clothing. See TRANS and VEST. Der. travesty, verb.

TRAWL, to fish with a drag-net. (F.-Teut.) 'Trawler-men, a sort of fishermen that use'd unlawful arts and engines, to destroy the fish upon the river Thames; among whom some were styl'd hebbemmen, others stickermen, Peterman, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = OF. trawler, to go hither and thither (Roquefort); Walloon trawler, the same (Sigart); mod. Prov. trawla; also OF. tröller, mod. F. tröler, to drag about; Hamilton. See TROLL. ¶ Quite distinct from trawl.

TRAY, a shallow vessel, a salver. (E.) 'A tray, or such hollow vessel . . . that laborers carry mortar in to serve tilers or plasterers;' Bart, ed. 1580. ME. treye; 'Bolles, treys, and platers,' i. e. bowls, trays, and platters; Rich. C.uer de Lion, l. 1490. AS. tryg, written tryg; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 340. Derived, by mutation, from AS. trog, a trough; see TROUGH. Cf. Low G. trügge (Stratmann); deriv. of trog, trough; Icel. tryggill, a little trough, tray; Swed. dial. trygel, Norw. trygel. ¶ The alleged AS. tryg is an error for tryg; but tryg might be a Kentish form of tryg, and would give ME. trye.

TRACHEERY, faithlessness, trickery of a gross kind. (F.-L.) ME. tracherie, spelt treckerey, P. Plowman, B. i. 196; older spelling tricherie, id. A. l. 172; Ancren Riwle, p. 202, l. 18. = OF. tracherie, tricherie, Godefroy; MF. tricherie, 'whence, as it seems, our trachery, cozenage, deceit, a cheating, a beguiling;' Cot. = OF. trechier, trichier, MF. tricher, 'to couzen, cheat, beguile, deceive;' id. Cf. Ital. tracare, to cheat; Prov. tracharia, trachery, trachaire, a traitor. = Late L. trichicare, for trichire, to dally (Eclues. xxiii. 15). L. trichiri, to make difficulties. = L. trica, pl. difficulties, wiles; see INTRICATE. See KÖRTING, § 9727. But prob. confused with Du. trek, a stroke; see further under TRICKERY. Der. trachereous, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 41, spelt trachereous, 1716, of Conscience, 4232, coined by adding the suffix -ous to the old word tracher, a traitor, spelt trichour in Rob. of Glouc. p. 455, l. 939, trachour in Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 239, l. 6; trachereous-ly, -ness. Körtling, § 9727.

TREACLE, the syrup drained from sugar in making it. (F.-L.) = Gk. ME. triacle, a medicament, a sovereign remedy (very common), P. Plowman, C. ii. 147, B. l. 146; see my note on it, explaining the matter. It had some resemblance to the treacle which has inherited its name. = OF. triacle, 'treacle,' Cot. The f is unoriginal; triacle is only another spelling of OF. theriaque, 'treacle;' Cot. = L. theriaca, an antidote against the bite of serpents, or against poison; also spelt theriac. = Gk. θηριακός, belonging to wild or venomous beasts; hence θηριακὰ φάρμακα, antidotes against the bite of venomous animals; and (no doubt) θηριακή, sb. sing. fem., in the same sense, whence L. theriaca. = Gk. θηρίον, a wild animal, poisonous animal; lit. of θηρ, a wild beast, θηρίον θηρ; cf. Russ. zver(e), a wild beast; Lith. šveris, a wild beast. L. ferus. Brugmann, i. § 319.

TREAD, to set down the foot, tramp, walk. (E.) ME. treden; pt. t. trad, Ormulum, 2561; pp. traden, treden, Chaucer, C. T. 12646 (C. 712). AS. tradan, pt. t. traden, traden, Chaucer, C. T. 12646 (C. 712). G. treten, pt. t. trad, pp. getreten. We find also Icel. tröda, pt. t. trad, pp. tröddinn; which accounts for our pp. trödden; Dan. træde; Swed. tråda; Goth. trudan, to tread, pt. t. trauk. Teut. type tredan*, pt. t. trad, pp. trandanz*. Der. tread-le or tread-le, the same as ME. trödy, a step, AS. træd; 'bases, tredeas vel stapas, i. e. steps; Voc. 117. 6. Also tread-mill; træde, q. v.

TREASON, a betrayal of the government, or an attempt to overthrow it. (F.-L.) ME. traison, treison; spelt traison, Havok, 444; traison, Ancren Riwle, p. 56, l. 17. = OF. traison, mod. F. trahison, treason, betrayal. = L. acc. trahiditum, betrayal. = L. trudere, to deliver, betray; see TRAITOR. Der. treason-able, treason-ably. Doublet, tradition.

TREASURE, wealth stored up, a hoard. (F.-L.) = Gk. ME. tresor, occurring very early, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1137. = OF.

tresor, mod. F. trésor, treasure. [Cf. Ital. tesoro, Span. tesoro, Port. tesouro, spelt without r after t.] = L. thésaurum, acc. of thésaurus, a treasure. = Gk. θησαυρός, a treasure, a store, hoard; formed (it is not very clear with what suffixes) from the base θη-, to lay up, as seen in θήνημι, I place, lay up; or from θηρ-, as in the future θήσω. See THEME, THEIS. Der. treasure, verb, Shak. Sonnet 6; treasurer, from F. tresorier, spelt tresorier in Choc., and explained by 'a treasurer'; treasure-y, ME. tresorier, tresore, Rob. of Glouc. p. 274, l. 5540, contracted from OF. tresorerie, spelt thresorerie in Cotgrave, so that treasure is short for treasurerie. Also treasure-trove, i. e. treasure found; see TROVER. Doublet, thesaurus.

TREAT, to handle in a particular manner, to entertain, manage by applying remedies, discourse of. (F.-L.) ME. treten, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 12455 (C. 521). = F. traiter, to treat. = L. tractare, to handle; frequent. form of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw; see TRAC. Der. treat-ment, from F. traitement; treat-ise, ME. treit, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. f. 8, from OF. treit, treit, treit, treit, treit (see treit in Roquefort), meaning 'a thing well handled or nicely made, attractive, admirable, an adj. which was even applied by Chaucer to the Princess's nose, C. T. 152, and answering to a Late L. form tractius*. Also treat-y, ME. trete, Chaucer, C. T. 1290 (A. 1288), from F. trait (treit in Cotgrave), 'a treaty,' properly the pp. of traiter, to treat, and therefore 'a thing treated of.'

TREBLE, threefold; the highest part in music. (F.-L.) Why the highest part in music is called treble is not clear; it is usually explained as being the third part, after the tenor and alto. In this sense, it is the same word as when it means triple. Indeed, we find triple used by Fairfax in the musical sense of treble. 'The human voices sung a triple hie'; Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xviii. st. 24. 'Palsgrave has: Treble of a song, le dessus; Treble-singing of an instrument, chanterelle.' Reginald atte Pette, in 1436, bequeathed 6s. Scd. towards the making of a new bell called trebly; Testamenta Vetusta, ed. Nicholas, p. 286. ME. treble, threefold, Gower, C. A. iii. 159; bk. vii. 2202. = OF. treble, triple (Burgundy). = L. tripulum, acc. of tripus, triple. See TRIPLE. For the change from p to b, cf. F. double, due to L. duplus. Der. treble, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 221; trebly. Doublet, triple.

TREDDLE, the same as Treadle; see Tread.

TREE, a woody plant, of a large size. (E.) ME. tre, tree; also used in the sense of timber. 'Not onely vessels of gold and of silver, but also of tree and of erthe;' Wyclif, a Tim. ii. 20. AS. trēa, trēow, a tree, also dead wood or timber; Grein, ii. 551. = Icel. tré; Dan. træ; Swed. tré, timber; tréda, a tree, a corruption of tréid, lit. 'the wood,' with the post-positive article; Goth. triu (gen. triuws), a tree, piece of wood. B. All from Teut. type treuom*, n., a tree, Fick, iii. 118; further allied to Russ. drevo, a tree, W. deru, an oak, Irish. darag, an oak, Gk. δρῦς, an oak, Skt. drū-, wood; cf. Gk. δρῦς, a spear-shaft, Skt. drū-, wood, a species of pine. γ. Benfey connects Skt. drū- and drū- with the root dhr̥*, to tear, rend, whence E. tear; see TEAR (1); so also Fick, i. 615, 616. The explanation is that it meant a piece of cleft wood; cf. Gk. δρῦς, to flay, E. tear, to rend. But this is improbable. Brugmann, i. § 486. Der. tre-en, adj., made of wood, or belonging to a tree, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 26, Cursor Mundi, 12392; with suffix -en as in gold-en, wood-en. Also tree-nail, a peg, a pin or nail made of wood, a nautical term. And see rhodo-dendron, dryad.

TREFOIL, a three-leaved plant such as the white and red clover. (F.-L.) Given by Cot. as the tr. of F. treffle. = AF. trifol; in a Vocabulary pr. in Voc. 556. 33, we find AF. trifol answering to L. trifolium and E. white clover [white clover]. = L. trifolium, a three-leaved plant, as above. = L. tri-, prefix allied to trās, three; and folium, a leaf; see TRI- and FOLI.

TRELLIS, a structure of lattice-work. (F.-L.) ME. trellis. 'Trellis, of a wyndow or other lyke, Canellus;' Prompt. Parv. = F. treillis, 'a trellis;' Cot. = F. treiller, 'to grate or lattice, to support or underlay by, or hold in with, crossed bars or latticed frames;' Cot.; F. treille, 'an arbor or walk set on both sides with vines, &c. twining about a latticed frame;' id. = Late L. trichilia, trichia, a bower, arbour, or summer-house. Origin doubtful. ¶ Quite distinct from F. treillis, sackcloth, OF. treillis, treillis, adj., applied to armour covered with a sort of lattice-work, Late L. trichileum, a covering of sackcloth. = L. trās, three; trichium, a thread. But the suffix -is in the former OF. treillis seems to have been due to association with this latter word. Der. treillis-id.

TREMBLE, to shiver, shake, quiver. (F.-L.) ME. tremblen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 235. = F. trembler, 'to tremble;' Cot. The b is excrement, as is common after m. = Late L. tremuläre, to hesitate, lit. to tremble. = L. tremulus, trembling. = L. trem-er, to tremble, with adj. suffix -ul-, = Lithuan. trim-ti, to tremble; Gk. τρεμ-ειν, to tremble. = TREM, to tremble; Fick, i. 604; Brugmann, i. § 474. Der. trembl-er, trembl-ing-ly. From L. tremere are also trem-er, in Phillips, borrowed from L. tremor, a trembling; trem-end-ous, also in Phillips, from L. tremendus, that ought to be feared, fut. pass. part. of tremare; trem-end-ous-ly; trem-ul-ous, Englished from L. tremulus, as above; trem-ul-ous-ly, ness.

TRENCH, a kind of ditch or furrow. (F.—L.?) ME. trenche, Chaucer, C. T. 10706; (F 392). Shortened from F. trenchés, 'a trench', Cot. lit. a thing cut.—F. trencher (now spelt trancher), 'to cut, carve, slice, hack, hew'; Cot. Cf. Span. trinchas, a trench, trinchar, to carve, trincar, to chop; Port. trinchar, to carve, trincar, to crack asunder, break; Ital. trincea, a trench, trinciare, to cut, carve.

β. There is no satisfactory solution of this word; see Litté, Scheler, and Diez. Prob. Latin; apparently from Late L. trençare, to cut, substituted for L. truncare, to lop, from truncus, the trunk of a tree. We may notice, in Florio, Ital. trincare, 'to trim or smug up'; trinci, 'gardings, fringes, lacings, gaggings, also cuts, ings, or snips in garments'. Der. trench, verb, Macb. iii. 4. 27, from trencher, to cut; trench-cut, cutting, Timon, iv. 3. 115, from F. trenchant, pres. part. of trencher; trench-er, a wooden plate for cutting things on. ME. trenchere, Voc. 610. 17, from F. trenchoir, 'a trencher', Cot. OF. trenchoir. Cf. Trinket (1).

TREND, to turn or bend away, said of direction or course. (E.) See Nares. 'The shoare trended to the southwestward;' Hakluyt, Voyages, i. 276, § 7. 'By the trending of the land [you] come hawks'; id. i. 383. ME. trenden, to roll or turn about. 'Lat hym rollen and trenden'; &c.; Chaucer, T. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 11. 1. 2. The word is E., being formed from the same source as AS. trendel, a circle, a ring, esp. a ring seen round the sun, A. S. Chron. an. 806; cf. AS. tryndel, a ring. Allied words are Dan. trind, adj. round, trindt, adv. around, trindes, to grow round; Swed. trind, round, cylindrical; OFriesic trind, trund, round; see Trundle. Cf. trendil, a hoop, mill-wheel, trendle, to tundle, in Levins, ed. 1570; trindals, rolls of wax, Crammer's Works, ii. 155, 503 (Parker Soc.). All from the Teut. str. vb. trend-an-*, to roll; whence AS. trendan, to roll (Napier), and ā-trend-lion, to roll.

TRENTAL, a set of thirty masses for the dead. (F.—L.) See the poem of St. Gregory's Trental, in Polit. Relig. and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, and my note on P. Plowman, C. x. 320. See Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 453; and see Nares.—OF. trental, a trental, set of thirty masses; Roquefort. Cf. Low L. trentile, a trental.—F. trente, thirty.—L. triginta, thirty.—L. tri, three, allied to trēs, three, and ginta, i. e. centa, short for decinta = decinta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Three and Ten.

TREPAN (1), a small cylindrical saw used in removing a piece of a fractured skull. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. trepane, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 127. Spelt trepane in Cot.—MF. trepan, 'a trepane, an instrument having a round and indented edge' &c.; Cot.—Late L. trepanum (for trypanum).—Gk. τρύπανον, a carpenter's tool, a borer, augur; also a surgical instrument, a trepan (Galen).—Gk. τρύπειν, to bore.—Gk. τρύπα, τρύπη, a hole. Ultimately from TER*, to pierce; as in L. terere, to bore, Gk. τερεω (for τρύπειν).

TREPAN (2), TRAPAN, to ensnare. (F.—Teut.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. 1. 617. Usually spelt trepan, as in Phillips, by a ridiculous confusion with the word above. Rightly spelt trapan in South's Sermons, vol. v. ser. 3 (R.), and in Anson's Voyages, b. i. c. 9 (R.). 'Forwith alights the innocent trapan'd'; Cotton, Wonders of the Peak, 1681, p. 38 (Todd). 'For fear his words they should trapan'; Tom Thumb (1630); in E. Eng. Pop. Poetry, ii. 247. Not an old word.—OF. trappan, a snare or trap for animals (Roquefort); he also gives trapan, a kind of trap-door; OF. trapan, trapan, a plank (Godefroy).—Late L. trapanum, a plank for a trap-door.—F. trappe, a trap.—OHG. trappa, a trap; see Trap (1). ¶ The E. word is now only used as a verb, but it must have come in as a sb. in the first instance, as it is used by South: 'It is indeed a real trapan,' i. e. stratagem, Serm. ii. 377; 'Nothing but gins, and snares, and *trapan*s for souls,' Serm. iii. 166 (Todd). The last quotation puts the matter in a very clear light. Cotgrave has the verb atrapper, and the sbs. trape, trapelle, atrapere.

TREPANG; see Tripang.

TREPHINE, an improved form of the trepan. (F.—L.—Gk.) F. trephine; in Litté; not in Hatzfeld. An arbitrary variant of trépan; see Trepan (1).

TREPIDATION, terror, trembling, fright. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 483, where it is used in an astronomical sense. 'A continual trepidation,' i. e. trembling motion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 137.—F. trepidatio, 'trembling, terror'; Cot.—L. trepidationem, act of trepidatio, alarm, a trembling.—L. trepidae, to tremble.—L. trepidus, agitated, disturbed, alarmed. Allied to OSlav. trępetu, to tremble, Russ. trępetat (s), Skt. tarala-s, trembling. See Brugmann, ii. § 797 (note). Der. (from L. trepidus) in trepid.

TRESPASS, a passing over a boundary, the act of entering another man's land unlawfully, a crime, sin, offence, injury. (F.—L.)

ME. trespas, Rob. of Glouc. p. 505, l. 10402, where it means 'sin'.—OF. trespas, a crime (Burguy); also 'a decess', départ out of this world, also a passage; Cot. ('The lit. sense is 'a step beyond or across,' so that it has direct reference to the mod. use of trespas in the sense of intrusion on another man's land. Cf. Span. trespaso, a conveyance across, also a trespass; Ital. trespaso, a passage, digression.) The sb. is from trespas, verb, ME. trespasmen, Wyclif, Acts, l. 25.—OF. trespas, 'to pass over', Cot., also to trespass (Burguy).—L. trans, across; and Late L. passare, to pass, from pass-us, a step; see Trans and Pass. Der. trespas-er, ME. trespasour, P. Plowman, C. ii. 92; also trespas-offering.

TRESS, a curl or lock of hair, a ringlet. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) ME. tresse, Chaucer, C. T. 1051 (A 1049); the pp. tressed, adorned with tresses, is in King Allisaunder, l. 5409.—F. tresse, 'a tresse or lock of hair'; Cot. He also gives trasser, 'to plait, weave, or make into tresses'. (Cf. Ital. treccia, a braid, knot, curl; pl. treccie, 'plaits, tresses, trelms, or roulees of women's hairs'; Span. trenza, a braid of hair, plaited silk.) β. The orig. sense is 'a plait'.—Late L. tricia, variant of trica, a plait.—Gk. τρίψα, in three parts, threefold (Diez); from the usual method of plaiting the hair in three folds.—Gk. τρίψα, thrice; allied to τρεῖς, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. γ. This is borne out by the Ital. trina, a lace, loop, allied to trino, threefold, from L. trinus, threefold. Der. tress-ed, as above. Also tress-ure, q. v.

TRESSURE, a kind of border, in heraldry. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, and in works on heraldry.—MF. trescheur, 'a tresseur, in blazon'; Cot.—F. trasser, 'to plait, weave'; Cot.—F. tresse, a tress or plait of hair; see Tress. ¶ I find 'Hoc tricatorium, Anglice, tressure;' and again, 'Hec tricatoria, Anglice, tressure,' Voc. 656. 17, 792. 18. Here tricatoria is merely a Latinised form of the F. word, the F. trasser being Latinised as tricator.

TRESTLE, TRESSSEL, a movable support for a table, frame for supporting. (F.—L.) 'Trestyl for a table, trestean;' Palgrave. 'Hic tristallus, Anglice, trestle;' Voc. 656. 28. 'Hic tristellus, a trestylle;' id. 723. 33. The pl. trestleys, i. e. trestles, occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 23, l. 6, in a will dated 1463; and ME. pl. trestles is in Rich. Coer de Lion, 102.—OF. trestel, spelt trestean, trestean in Cot., and explained 'a trestle for a table, &c.', also a kind of rack, or stretching torture. Mod. F. tréteau (see Litté).—Late L. transtellum*, for L. transtellum, dimin. of transstrum, a little cross-beam. See Transom. ¶ This Late L. form should rather have given OF. trastel; but we find F. tres for L. trans in our tres-pass. We must by no means neglect Lowland Sc. trast, trast, a trestle, trast, a beam, North E. tres, a trestle (Brockett), Lanc. trast, a strong large stool (Halliwell), and ME. treste, a trestle, above. These are from OF. traste, a cross-beam (Roquefort), the same word as Mital. trasto, 'a bench of a gallic, a transome or beam going cross a house,' which is obviously from L. transtrum. See Transom. Scheler takes the same view, proposing a Late L. transtellum*, as a parallel form to transtellum, in order to give the exact OF. form. Cotgrave's explanation of the word as meaning a rack is much to the point; a rack requires two cross-beams (transtilla) to work it, these beams being turned round with levers, thus pulling the victim by means of ropes wound round the beams. And note trastelli fortes, strong trestles, in John de Garlande; in Wright, Vocab. i. 132.

TRET, an allowance to purchasers on consideration of waste. (F.—L.) 'Tret, an allowance made for the waste, . . . which is always 4 in every 104 pounds;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. It appears much earlier. 'For the tret of the same pepper,' i. e. pepper; Arnold's Chron. (1501), repr. 1811, p. 128.—AF. trete*, i. answering to F. truite just as AF. treit (Gloss. to Britton) answers to F. trait; cf. F. trait, 'a draught, . . . also, a transportation, vent outward, shipping over, and an imposition upon commodities'; Cot. This F. truite answers to L. tracta, fem. of tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Traue. Cf. Mital. tratta, 'leave to transport merchandise, also a trade or trading'; Florio. Also Late L. tracta, a payment on exports (Ducange).

TREWS, an old form of Trousers, q. v.

TREY, three, at cards or dice. (F.—L.) 'Two treys;' L. L. L. v. 2. 232. And in Chaucer, C. T. 12587 (C 653).—AF. trais; OF. trai, trai (mod. F. trois), three.—L. trēs, three; see Three.

TRI, relating to three, threefold. (L. or Gk.; or F.—L. or Gk.) F. and L. tri, three times, prefix related to L. tri-a, neut. of trēs, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. So also Gk. τρί, allied to τρί-a, neut. or τρεῖς, m., three.

TRIAD, the union of three. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'This is the famous Platonic triad;' More, Song of the Soul (1647), preface (Todd).—L. triade, 'three'; Cot.—L. triad-, stem of trīs, a triad.—Gk. τριάς, a triad, = Gk. τρί-, from τρεῖς, three; see Tri.

TRIAL, a test; see Try.

TRIANGLE, a plane, three-sided figure. (F.—L.) ME. triangle; Lanfrank, Curigie, p. 215. 'Tryangle, to be trigle'; Palsgrave.—F. triangle, 'a triangle'; Cot.—L. triangulum, a triangle; neut. of triangulus, adj., having three angles.—L. tri, three; and angulus, an angle; see Tri and Angle. Der. triangl-ed; triangul-ar, used by Spenser (Todd), from F. triangulaire, 'triangular', Cot., from L. triangulus; triangul-ate, a coined word; triangul-at-ion.

TRIBE, a race, family, kindred. (F.—L.) Gower, C. A. iii. 230 (bk. vii. 4118), has the pl. tribes.—F. tribu, 'a tribe'; Cot.—L. tribus, decl. stem of tribus, a tribe; cf. Umbrian trifo. β. A tribus is supposed to have been, in the first instance, one of the three families of people in Rome, their names being the Ramnes, Tities, and Luceres. The etymology is thought to be from L. tri- (akin to trēs, three), and -bus, family, from √BHEU, to be; cf. Gk. φύλη, a tribe, family, from the same root. See Tri- and Be. But Brugmann thinks this unlikely; ii. § 104. Rather, allied to W. tref, a homestead; see Thorpe. Der. trib-une, q. v.; tri-bute, q. v.

TRIBRACH, a metrical foot consisting of three short syllables. (L.—Gk.) Written tribrachus or tribrachys in Phillips, ed. 1706; and tribrachus in Putterman, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3.—L. tribrachys.—Gk. τρίβραχυς, a tribrach;—Gk. τρι-, akin to τρεῖς, three; and βραχυς, short. See Brief.

TRIBULATION, great affliction, distress. (F.—L.) ME. tribulacioun, spell tribulaciun, Ancien Riwle, p. 402, l. 24.—F. tribulation, 'tribulation'; Cot.—L. tribulatio, neut. acc. of tribulatio, tribulation, affliction; lit. a rubbing out of corn by a sledge;—L. tribulāre, to rub out corn, to oppress, afflict.—L. tribulum, a sledge for rubbing out corn, consisting of a wooden platform studded underneath with sharp flints or iron teeth.—L. tri-, base of tri-ni, tri-tum, pl. t. and pp. of terere, to rub; with suffix -bulum denoting the agent (as in verbi-bulum, that which turns about, a joint). See further under Trite.

TRIBUNE, a Roman magistrate elected by the plebeians. (F.—L.) ME. tribun; pl. tribunes, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 21.—F. tribun.—L. tribunum, acc. of tribunus, a tribune, properly the chief of (or elected by) a tribe; also a chieftain, Mark, vi. 21.—L. tribu-, decl. stem of tribus, a tribe; with suffix -nus (ldg. -no). See Tribe. Der. tribune-ship. Also tribun-al, Antony, iii. 6, 3, from L. tribunal, a raised platform on which the seats of tribunes, or magistrates, were placed.

TRIBUTE, homage, contribution paid to secure protection. (F.—L.) ME. tribut, Wyclif, Luke, xxiii. 2; Gower, C. A. ii. 74, l. 7.—F. tribut, 'tribute'; Cot.—L. tributum, tribute; lit. a thing contributed or paid; neut. of tributus, pp. of tribuere, to assign, impart, allot, bestow, pay; orig. to allot or assign (to a tribe?). Perhaps (says Bréal) from L. tribu-, decl. stem of tribus, a tribe; see Tribe. Der. tribul-ar-y, ME. tributaire, Chaucer, C. T. 14594 (B 3866), from AF. tribulaire, F. tributaire, 'tributary'; Cot., from L. tributus, paying tribute. Also at-tribute, con-tribute, dis-tribute, re-tribute.

TRICE (1), a short space of time. (Low G.) In the phrases in a trice, Twelfth Nt. iv. 2. 133; on a trice, Temp. v. 238; in this trice of time, K. Lear, i. 1. 219. 'And wasteth with a trice'; Turberville, To his Friend, &c., st. 5. Now only in the phr. in a trice, i. e. suddenly. 'Subitaneum, swiftly, quickly, speedily, in a trice, out of hand'; Cot. ME. at a trysse, at a (single) pull. 'The howndis that were of gret pris Plucked down dere all at a trysse'; Ipomydon with his howndis thoo Drew downe bothe buk and doo'; Ipomydon (ed. Weber), 392. Ihere trysse (trysse) is a verbal sb. from the verb tryssen, tryssen, to pull, haul; Chaucer, C. T. 14443 (B 3715). See further under Trios (2). ¶ The later phrase in a trice bears a remarkable resemblance to the Span. en un tris. We find Span. tris, noise made by the breaking of glass; also, a trice, a short time, an instant; venir en un tris, to come in an instant; estar en un tris, to be on the verge of (Neuman). So also Port. triz, a word to express the sound of glass when it cracks: estar por hum triz, to be within a hair's breadth, to have a narrow escape; em hum triz, in a trice. But it does not appear that we could have borrowed such a phrase from Spain. It occurs as early as in Skelton, Philip Sparowe, 1131.

TRICE (2), TRIBE, to haul up or hoist. (Low G.) 'Trise (see-word), to hale up anything into the ship by hand with a dead rope, or one that does not run in a block or pulley'; Phillips, ed. 1706. ME. tricen, trisen, to pull, haul; Chaucer, C. T. 14443 (B 3715). 'They trisen vpe thaire saillez', Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 832. A nautical term; of Low G. origin; and the sense noted by Phillips is unoriginal, as it must once have meant to haul by help of a pulley, and not only without it. Cf. ME. tryss, (and, with a final t) tryssede, 'troclea', Prompt. Parv.—Low G. t. lissen, trissen, to trice up; from trisse, trisse, a hauling-rope (which explains the sense given by Phillips), also a pulley (Lübben). Cf. also (from Low G.)

Swed. trissa, a sheave, pulley, truckle, triss, a spritsail-brace; Dan. tride, a pulley, whence tride, verb, to haul by means of a pulley, to trice; Norweg. triss, trissel, a pulley, or sheave in a block; Swed. dial. trissa, a roller, also a shoemaker's implement, a little round wheel with teeth on it. Note also Low G. trisal, a whirling round, giddiness, in the Bremen Wörterbuch; where also are cited OG. tryssen, to wind, and Ilambrag drysen, up drysen, to wind up, dryse-blok, the block of a pulley, like Dan. tridsblok.

TRICENTENARY, a space of 300 years. (L.) Modern. From Tri- and Centenary.

TRICK (1), a stratagem, clever contrivance, fraud, parcel of cards won at once. (F.—L.) Common in Shakespeare. 'A trick, facinus'; Levins, ed. 1570. 'It were but a schoole-trick'; Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 512. 'Suche unkyghtly trickes'; Hoccleve, De Reg. Princ. 2286.—ONorth F. trique (for OF. triche); cf. Norm. dial. trique, a trick (Moisy, ed. 1895). Goldfroy gives the vb. triquier, and Moisy has Norm. dial. triquier, for OF. trichier, to trick, deceive. Cf. ME. trichen, to deceive, cozen, trick, occurring early in the 14th century, Polil. Songs, p. 69, l. 7. 'This ME. trichen is from OK. trichier, trechie, explained under Treachery. β. Some of the senses are due to Du. trek. Thus Shakespeare has trick in the sense of lineament, K. John, i. 85; this is precisely the Du. trek. 'De trekken van't gelaet, the lineaments of the face'; Sewcl. Cf. Du. 'een slimme trek, a cunning trick; tenaend eenen trek spelen, to play one a trick; de kap trekken, to play tricks, play the fool'; Sewcl. γ. The Du. trek (trek), a trick (borrowed from, or suggested by the ONorth F. trique) is properly distinct from, but was easily confused with Du. trek, a pull, draught, tug; from the verb trekken, to draw, pull. We find also OFries. trekka or trekka, NFries. trecke, tracce (Outzen), Low G. trekken, Dan. trække, MHG. trecken, to draw, drag, pull. The MHG. trecken is a causal form, from the strong verb found as MHG. trecken, OIIG. trekhan, to push, shove, also to pull. Der. trick-ster; trick-ry-y (doublet of treachery, q. v.); trick-ish, trick-ish-y, trick-ish-ness; also tricks-y, full of tricks (formed by adding -y to the pl. tricks). Temp. v. 226. And see trigger, trick (2), trick (3).

TRICK (2), to dress out, adorn. (F.—L.) 'Which they trick up with new-tuned oaths'; Illec. v. iii. 6. 80. 'To trick, or trim, Concinnare'; Levins, ed. 1570. Minshew also has the word, but it is not a little strange that Blount, Phillips, Coles, and Kersey ignore trick, in whatever sense. [It is remarkable that trick appears early as an adjective, synonymous with neat or trim. 'The same reason I finde true in two bowes that I haue, wherof the one is quicke of caste, tricke, and trimme both for pleasure and profyite'; Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 28. So also in Levins. But this is prob. a different word; cf. Lowl. Sc. trig, neat, trim.] The verb is a derivative from the sb. trick, above, which obtained many meanings, for which see Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. For example, a trick meant a knack, neat contrivance, custom, particular habit, peculiarity, a trait of character or feature, a prank; also a toy or trifles, as in 'a knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap'; Tani. Shrew, iv. 3. 67. Cf. MF. trique-nisques, 'trifles'; Cot. Hence to trick, to use a neat contrivance, to exhibit a trait of character, to have a habit in dress. Compare Triok (3), below. Der. trick-ing, ornament, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 79.

TRICK (3), to delineate arms, to blazon; an heraldic term. (Du.) This is the true sense in Hamlet, ii. 2. 479. It is much clearer in the following. 'There they are trick'd, they and their pedigrees; they need no other heralds'; Ben Jonson, The Poetaster, i. 1 (Tucca).—Du. trekken, formerly trecken, 'to delineate, to make a draught or modell, to purtray'; Hlexham. Tricking is a kind of sketching. This is only a particular use of Du. trekken, to pull or draw; cf. our double use of draw. See Triok (1), § γ.

TRICKLE, to flow in drops or in a small stream. (E.) ME. triklen. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (B 1864), two MSS. have trickled, two have stricked or stryked, and one has stricked; Tyrwhitt prints trilled. 'With teris trikland on hir cheekes'; Ywayne and Gawain, 1558; in Ritson, Met. Romances, l. 66. 'The teeris triklen down'; Polit., Religions, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 207, l. 47. 'Teres trickyl downe be my face'; Cov. Mysteries, p. 72. In all these passages the word is preceded by the sb. teres, pronounced as a dissyllable, and such must often have been the case; this caused a corruption of strikelen by the loss of initial s; the phrases the teres strikelen and the teres trikelen being confused by the hearer. Trickle is clearly a corruption of strikelen, to flow frequently or to keep on flowing, the frequent of ME. striken, to flow. 'Ase strem that strikes stille'—as a stream that flows quietly; Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 48, l. 21.—AS. strican, to move or sweep along, to hold one's course, Grein, ii. 489. This is the same word as AS. strican, to strike; see Strike. Cf. mod. E. streak; to trickle or strickle is to flow in a course, leaving a streak behind; G. streichen, to move onward, rove, sweep on. The loss of s was facilitated by association with trill (Dan. trille), to roll.

TRICOLOR, the national flag of France, having three colours, red, white, and blue. (F.—L.) The flag dates from 1789. = F. tricolor, short for drapau tricolore, the three-coloured flag. = F. tricolor, the three-coloured amaranth (Hamilton). = L. tri- prefix, three; and color, acc. of color, colour. See Tri- and Colour. Der. tri-colour-ed.

TRIDENT, a three-pronged spear. (F.—L.) In Temp. i. 2. 206. = F. trident, 'Neptune's three-forked mace.' Cot. = L. tridentem, acc. of tridens, an implement with three teeth, esp. the three-pronged spear of Neptune. = L. tri-, three; and dens, a tooth, prong. See Tri- and Tooth.

TRIENNIAL, happening every third year, lasting for three years. (L.) A coined word, made by adding -al (L. -ālis) to L. trienni-um, a period of three years. It supplanted the older word triennal, of F. origin, which occurs early, in P. Plowman, B. vii. 179; this is from F. triennal, 'triennial,' Cot., formed by adding -al to L. adj. triennus, lasting for three years. β. Both triennium and triennus are from L. tri-, three, and annus, a year; see Tri- and Annual. Der. triennial-ly.

TRIFLE, anything of small value. (F.—L.) The spelling with i is remarkable, as the usual ME. spelling was truffe. Spelt truffyl, Rob. of Brunne, Handl. Synne, 503; but truffe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 417, l. 8613; truffe (one MS. has treffe), P. Plowman, B. xii. 140; also id. B. xviii. 147 (other MSS. have truffe, truffe); also id. C. xv. 83 (other MSS. treffe, triffe). Spelt truffe (also treffe), P. Plowman's Credo, 352. There is the same variation of spelling in the verb; the proper ME. form is truffen, spelt truffe, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 214; truffe, Morte Arthure, ed. Irook, 2932, truffylm, Prompt. Parv. 'Trufa, a trefele; Trufu, to trefele;' Voc. 617. 42, 43. The sb. is the more orig. word; we find 'þeos ant offe truffes þet he bitruffed monie meū mīde'—these and other delusions that he beguiles many men with, Ancr. Riwle, p. 106, l. 7. The old sense was a delusion or trick, a sense still partly apparent in the phr. 'to truffe with'—OF. truffe, truffe, mockery, rillery (Godefroy, who quotes 'Nuga, truffe' from a glossary); variant of truffe, 'a gibe, mock, fool, jest, gullery; also, a most dainty kind of round and russet root, which grows in forrests or dry and sandy grounds,' &c.; Cot. It refers to a truffe. That truffe and truffe are the same word, or rather that both senses of F. truffe arose from one form, is admitted by Burguy, Diez, and Littér. It is supposed that a truffe became a name for a small or worthless object, or a subject for jesting. Similarly, in English, the phrases not worth a straw, not worth a bean, not worth a cress (now turned into course) were proverbial; so also 'a fig for the phrase,' or 'a fig for it.' See further under Truffle. Cf. Wflem. truffel, trijfel, false news (De Bo). Note also: 'Mantiglia, a kinde of clouted cream called a foole or a trife, in English; Florio. Der. trife, verb, ME. truffen, as above; triff-er, triff-ing, triff-ing-ly.

TRIFOLIATE, three-leaved. (L.) Modern. = L. tri-, three; and foliātus, leaved, from folium, a leaf; see Trefol.

TRIFORIUM, a gallery above the arches of the nave and choir of a church. (L.) From L. tri-, for tres, three; and fori-s, a door, an opening. ¶ Now usually built with but two arches or openings (within a third); but some early examples had three such. See wood-cut in Cent. Dict.

TRIFORM, having a triple form. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 730. = L. triformis, often applied to the moon or Diana. = L. tri-, three; and form-a, form; see Tri- and Form.

TRIGGER, a catch which, when pulled, lets fall the hammer or cock of a gun. (Du.) A weakened or 'voiced' form of tricker. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 528, Bell's edition, we find: 'The trigger of his pistol draw.' Here the editor, without any hint and free from any conscience in the matter, has put trigger in the place of tricker; see the quotation as it stands in Richardson and Todd's Johnson. Spelt tricker in Farquhar, Recruiting Officer, i. 1 (1706). = Du. trekker, a trigger; formerly trecker, 'a drawer, a haler, or a puller,' Hexham. = Du. trekken, to pull, draw; see Trook (3). Der. trig, vb., to skid a wheel (Phillips).

TRIGLYPH, a three-grooved tablet. (L.—Gk.) A term in Doric architecture. In Bloom's Gloss, ed. 1674. = L. triglyphus; Vitruvius, iv. 2 (White). = Gk. τριγλύφος, three-cloven; also, a triglyph, three-grooved tablet. = Gk. τρι-, three; and γλύφειν, to carve, hollow out, groove, which is allied to E. cleave; see Cleave (1). Der. triglyph-ic.

TRIGON, a combination of three zodiacal signs, so as to form an equilateral triangle. (L.—Gk.) 'The fiery trigon'; Shak. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 288. The combination of Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius was the 'fiery' trigon. = L. trigonum, a triangle, trigon. = Gk. τριγωνος, a triangle, neut. of τριγωνος, three-cornered. = Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; γων-ia, an angle, akin to γων, a knee. Cf. Trine.

TRIGONOMETRY, the measurement of triangles. (Gk.) Shak. has trigon, i.e. triangle, 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 288. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. τριγωνο-, for τριγωνος, a triangle; and -μετρον, measurement (as in geo-metry, &c.), from μετρον, a measure. β. Τριγωνος is properly neut. of τριγωνος, three-cornered; from τρι-, three, and γων-ia, an angle, akin to γων, a knee. See Tri-, Knee, and Metre. Der. trigonometric-al, -ly.

TRILATERAL, having three sides. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined with suffix -al (L. -ālis) from L. trilaterus, three-sided. = L. tri-, three; and later-, decl. stem of latus, a side; see Tri- and Lateral.

TRILINGUAL, consisting of three languages. (L.) Coined with suffix -al (L. -ālis) from L. trilinguis, triple-tongued, speaking three languages. = L. tri-, three; and lingua, a tongue. See Tri- and Lingual.

TRILITERAL, consisting of three letters. (L.) A term applied to Hebrew roots. From Tri- and Literal.

TRILL (1), to shake, to quaver. (Ital.) 'The sober-suited songstress trills her lay'; Thomson, Summer, 746. 'His trills and quavers'; Tatler, no. 222, Sept. 9, 1710. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: 'Trill, a quavering in music,' and rightly notes that it is an Ital. word, like many other musical terms. = Ital. trillare, to trill, shake, quaver; trillo, sb., a trill, shake. A word of imitative origin, meaning 'to say trill.' Cf. Span. trinar, to trill. Hence are derived E. trill, Du. trillen, G. trillern, &c. Der. trill, sb.

TRILL (2), to turn round and round. (Scand.) Perhaps obsolete, but once common. 'As fortune trills the ball'; Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 67. 'To trill, circummertere'; Levius. 'I trill a whirling round aboute, þe pironette'; Palgrave. Mk. trillen, Chaucer, C. T. 10630 (F. 316). = Swed. trilla, to roll, whence trilla, a roller; Dan. trille, to roll, trundle, whence trille, a disc, trillebør, a wheelbarrow. Perhaps allied to E. drill; but this is by no means certain. It may be allied to Low G. trisen, to turn round; see Trise (2).

TRILL (3), to trickle, to roll. (Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78; K. Lear, iv. 3. 13. 'With many a teere trilling on my cheekie'; Chaucer, C. T. 7246, D 1864 (Corpus MS.). = Dan. trille, to roll, to trickle (as tears), Larsen; Swed. trilla ned, to roll down. This is merely a particular use of Trill (2).

TRILLION, a million raised to the third power. (F.—L.) A coined word, said in Todd's Johnson to have been invented by Locke. Composed of tri-, for trid, three; and -illion, the latter part of the word million. See Tri- and Million; and see Billion.

TRIOBITE, a kind of fossil. (Gk.) Named from its three lobes. = Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; λοβ-ος, a lobe; = τρι-ος, suffix.

TRIOLOGY, a series of three tragedies or poems. (F.—Gk.) F. trilogye (1812); Hatfield. = Gk. τριλογία. = Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; -λογία, from λόγος, a tale, story; see Logio.

TRIM, to put in due order, to adjust, to deck, dress, arrange. (F.) 'I trymme, as a man doth his heare [hair]'; Palgrave. ME. trumen, trimes, a rare word. 'Ich iseo godd seolf mid his eadi engles bitrumen þe abuten' = I see God Himself with His blessed angels be-trim [surround] thee about; St. Marharete, p. 20, l. 3. 'Helle hundes habbes bitrume me'—hounds of hell have surrounded me; id. p. 6, l. 4 from bottom. AS. tryman, trymman, to make firm, strengthen (a common word), Grein, ii. 554; also, to set in order, array, prepare, Blickling Homilies, p. 91, l. 31; p. 201, l. 35. The orig. sense is preserved in our phrase to trim a boat, 'i.e. to make it steady; hence to put in perfect order. Formed (by the regular vowel-change from u to y) from the Teut. type of AS. trum, adj., firm, strong, Grein, ii. 553. = Low G. trium; only in the derivative betrimmed, betrimmed, decked, trimmed, adorned; trimme, an affected or over-dressed person. Root uncertain. Der. trim, sb., Cor. i. 9. 62; trim, adj. (with the vowel i of the derived verb), Much Ado, iv. 1. 323; trim-ly, trim-ness; trimm-er, trimm-ing; also be-trim, verb, Temp. iv. 65.

TRIMETER, a division of a verse consisting of three measures. (L.—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace, Art of Poetry, l. 333. = L. trimetrus, Horace, Art of Poetry, ll. 252, 259. = Gk. τριμετρος, consisting of three measures. = Gk. τρι-, three; and μετρον, a measure, metre. See Tri- and Metre.

TRINE, a certain aspect of the planets. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 659. 'Tryne in trone'; Cov. Myst., p. 88. 'Trine, belonging to the number three; as, a trine aspect, which is when a planet is distant from each other [by] a third part of the circle, i.e. 120 degrees. It is noted thus Δ, and accounted by astrologers an aspect of amity and friendship'; Phillips. = L. trinus, more common in pl. trini, three by three. For tris-ius*, allied to trēs, three. Brugmann, ii. § 66. See Tri- and Three. Der. triu-al, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 39. Also trin-i-ty, q.v.

TRINITY, the union of Three in One Godhead. (F.—L.) ME. trinitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7406 (Tr 1824); Ancrur Riwle, p. 26,

1. 10. —OF. trinité, later trinité. —L. trinitatem, acc. of trinitas, a triad. —L. trinus, threefold; see TRINE. Der. Trinity-Sunday; Trinitarian, Trinitarianism.

TRINKET (1), a small ornament. (F.—L. ?) We find ME. 'treuket', sowsary knife, i.e. a shoemaker's knife, Prompt. Parv. 'Trenket', an instrument for a cordwayner, batton a l'orneur [sowles]; Palsgrave. Way, in his note to Prompt. Parv., says: 'In a Nominal by Nich. de Minshull, Harl. MS. 1002, under peritinentia allutarii, occur:—Aserium, a shaving-knife; Galla, idem est, trynet; also, under peritinentia rustica, occur:—Sarcolum, a wedge-hoke; Sarpa, idem est, trynet.' This shows that a trynet was a general name for a sort of knife, whether for shoemaking or weeding. Palsgrave gives the spelling trynet as well as trunket. We may fairly assume that trinket was also used to denote a toy-knife, such as could be worn about the person, and that for three reasons. These are: (1) the sense of something worn about the person still clings to trinket at this day; (2) trinket, as used by old authors, means sometimes a tool or implement, sometimes a knife; and (3) toy-knives were very commonly given as presents to ladies, and were doubtless of an ornamental character, and worn on the person. As early as Chaucer's time, the Friar had his tippet 'farsed [stuffed] ful of knives And pinnes, for to given faire wivies.' A few examples of the use of the word may be added. 'The poorer sort of common soldiers have every man his leather bag or sachell well sown together, wherein he packs up all his trinkets.' Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 62. 'What husbandle husbands, except they be foolcs, But handsome have storehouse for trinkets and tooles?' Tusser, Husb. § 53. 13. Todd cites from Arbuthnot: 'She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses.' More extracts would probably make this matter clearer. β. The etymology of trinket, formerly trenket, in the sense of 'knife', is from (ONorth F. trénquet, variant of OF. tranchet, a small knife (see Supp. to Godefroy). —ONorth F. trénquer, occurring in trénquefle, variant of tranchefle (Godefroy), so that trenquer is a variant of OF. tranchier, trancher, to cut. Cf. Span. trinchete, a shoemaker's paring-knife, tranchete, a broad curved knife, used for pruning, a shoemaker's heel-knife; mod. F. tranchet, a shoemaker's knife; OF. trinchet, sup. to Godefroy, s.v. tranchet. And cf. Span. trinchar, to cut. See further under TRENCH. γ. Perhaps we may also note MItal. trincare, 'to trim or snug up,' whence trincato, 'fine, neat, trim,' Florio. This seems allied to trinci, 'fringings, lacings, cuts, or snips in garments,' id.; and to trinciare, to cut, allied to Span. trinchar, as above.

TRINKET (2), TRINQUET, the highest sail of a ship. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 471. Spelt trinkette in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Trinquet,' is properly the top or top-gallant on any mast, the highest sail of a ship; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. —F. trinquet, 'the top or top-gallant,' &c. (as in Blount); Cot.—Ital. trinchetto, 'a small sail in a ship called a trinket'; Florio. [Or from Span. trinquete, a trinket.] Prob. from L. triquetrum, acc. of triquetrus, three-cornered (with reference to lateen sails). Prob. from L. tri, allied to trés, three; and quatus*, quadrus, square, hence 'cornered.' Cf. L. quater, four times, quatuor, four. ¶ The n may have been due to association with Span. trınca, a rope for lashing fast; trincar, to keep close to the wind; poner la vela a la trınca, 'to put a ship that the edges of the sails may be to the wind'; Minshew.

TRINOMIAL, in mathematics, an expression consisting of three terms. (L.) Not a good form; it should rather have been trinominal. Coined, in imitation of binomial, from tri, three; and nómi, for nómini, decl. stem of nómen, a name. See TRI- and NOMINAL; and BINOMIAL.

TRIO, in music, a piece for three performers. (Ital.—L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. —Ital. trío, a trio, three parts together. —L. tri, three, allied to trés, three; see TRI- and THREE.

TRIP, to move with short, light steps, to stumble, err; also, to cause to stumble. (F.—Teut.) ME. trippen; 'This hors anon gan for to trippe and daunce'; Chaucer, C. T. 10626 (F 1312). —OF. treper (Wace), tripier, tripper, to dance; Norm. dial. tripier. —MDu. trippen, 'to tread under foot'; tripplen, 'to trip or to daunce'; Hexham. Cf. Low G. trippeln, to trip; Swed. trippa, to trip; Dan. trippe, to trip, tripp, a short step; Iccl. trippi, a young colt (from its tripping gait). The base trip- is a lighter form of trap-, as in MDu. trappen, to tread under foot; the nasalised form appears in Tramp, q.v. Der. trip, sb., Tw. Nt. v. 170; tripping-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 2. TRIPANG, TREPANG, an edible sea-slug. (Malay.) Malay tripang.

TRIPARTITE, divided into three parts, having three corresponding parts, existing in three copies. (L.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iii. 1. 80. 'Indentures tripartite indented'; Bury Wills, ed. Tyms, p. 57, in a will dated 1480. —L. tri, three; and partit-us, pp. of partiri, to part, divide, from parti-, decl. stem of pars, a part. See TRI- and PART.

TRIPLE, the stomach of ruminating animals, prepared for food. (F.) ME. tripe, Prompt. Parv.; King Alisaunder, l. 1578. —F. tripe, tripe. Cf. Span. and Port. tripa, Ital. trippa. Of unknown origin. We also find Irish tripra, a pl., tripes, entrails; W. tripa, the intestines; Bret. stripen, tripe, more commonly used in the pl. stripenno, stripen, the intestines.

TRIPHTHONG, three vowel characters representing a single sound. (Gk.) Little used; coined in imitation of diphthong, with prefix tri- (Gk. tri-), three, instead of di- (Gk. di-), double. See TRI- and DIPHTHONG. Der. tripthong-al.

TRIPLE, threefold, three times repeated. (F.—L.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 391. [Rich. refers us to Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7, l. 26, but the reading there is treble, a much older form.] —F. triple, 'triple, threefold'; Cot. —L. tripulus, triple. —L. tri-, three; and -plus, related to L. plenus, full. See TRI- and DOUBLE. Der. triply; triplet, formed in imitation of doublet. Doublet, treble.

TRIPPLICATE, threefold. (L.) In mathematics, a triplicate ratio is not the ratio of 3 to 1, but the ratio of two cubical numbers, just as the duplicate ratio is a ratio of squares. In Phillips, ed. 1706. —L. triplicatus, pp. of triplicare, to treble. —L. tri-, three; and plus-are, to fold, weave. See TRI- and PLY. Der. triplicate-ion, from L. acc. triplicitiōnem. Also triplex, from L. triplex, threefold, Tw. Nt. v. 41; triplic-it-y, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 39.

TRIPOD, anything supported on three feet, as a stool. (L.—Gk.; or Gk.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. ix. l. 127; where it was taken directly from Gk. Also in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, 1102, where we find 'tripode or three-footed table' (K.). ME. tripod, Trevisa, tr. of Illyden, l. 179. —L. tripod-, stem of tripūs. —Gk. tripous (stem tripōs), three-footed; or, as sb., a tripod, a three-footed brass kettle, a three-legged table. —Gk. tri-, three; and pod (stem pod-), a foot, cognate with F. foot; see TRI- and FOOT. Der. tripos (for L. nom. tripūs, Gk. tripous), an honour examination at Cambridge, so called at present because the successful candidates are arranged in three classes; but we must not forget that a tripos sometimes meant an oracle (see Johnson), and that there was formerly a certain scholar who went by the name of tripos, being otherwise called prevaricator at Cambridge or terra filius at Oxford; he was a master of arts chosen at a commencement to make an ingenious satirical speech reflecting on the misdeeds of members of the university, a practice which gave rise to the so-called tripos-verse, i.e. facetious Latin verses printed on the back of the tripos-lists (after 1798). The orig. reference was to the Tripos on which the M.A. sat; and the lists were named from the verses which took the place of his speech. See Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Wits, . . . who never . . . were at all inspired from a Tripos,' Terra-filius, or Prevaricator's speech; Eng. Garner, vii. 267 (1670). Doublet, trivet.

TRIPTYCH, a picture in three compartments. (Gk.) Frequently, the two side-pictures can be folded over the central one, which is of double their breadth. —Gk. τρίπτυχον, neut. of τρίπτυχος, threefold, or consisting of three layers. —Gk. tri-, for treis, three; πτυχ, a fold, from πτύσσειν (for πτύχ-ειν*), to fold.

TRIREME, a galley with three ranks of oars. (L.) 'Thucydides writeth that Aminocles the Corinthian built the first trireme with three rows of oars to a side'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 56. —L. trirēmis, a trireme. —L. trirēmis, having three banks of oars. —L. tri-, three; and rēmus, an oar. β. The L. trirēmis corresponds to Gk. τρίρημις, a trireme; Thucydides, i. 13. γ. The L. rēmus = OL. resmos, is allied to Gk. ῥέμπος, a rudder, orig. a paddle. The Gk. ῥέμπος, like -np-ns in τρίπημις, is allied to E. rudder and row. See ROW (1).

TRISE, the same as TRICE (2); q.v.

TRISECT, to divide into three equal parts. (L.) Coined (in imitation of bi-sect) from L. tri-, three; and sect-us, supine of secūre, to cut. See TRI-, SECTION, BISECT. Der. trisection.

TRIST, the same as TRYST, q.v.

TRISYLLABLE, a word of three syllables. (F.—L.—Gk.) From TRI- and Syllable; see Dissyllable. Cotgrave gives F. trisyllable, adj., of three syllables. Der. trisyllab-ic, trisyllab-ical, -ly.

TRITE, worn out by use, hackneyed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. —L. tritius, worn, pp. of *tere*re, to rub, to wear. —Russ. teret (e), to rub; Lithuan. triti, to rub; Gk. τέριπαι (for τέρι-παι*). —✓TER, to rub. Der. trite-ly, -ness. Also trit-ur-ale, trit-bul-at-ion, q.v. And see try. From the same root, con-trite, de-trite.

TRITON, a marine demi-god. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 89. —L. Trítōn. —Gk. Τρίτων, a Triton. Cf. Irish triath, the sea; Skt. trita-, the name of a deity.

TRITURATE, to rub or grind to powder. (L.) Blount, ed. 1674, has triturate and trituration. Perhaps the sb. trituration was first introduced from the F. sb. trituration, 'a crumming, crumbling,' Cot. = L. tritūrus, pp. of tritūrāre, to thrash, hence to grind. = L. tritūra, a rubbing, chafing; formed like the fut. part. of terere, to rub; see TRITE. Der. trituration, trituri-able.

TRIUMPH, joy for success, rejoicing for victory. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. triumph, Chaucer, C.T. 14369 (B3553). = OF. triumphe, trionphe, 'a triumph,' Cot. = L. triumphum, acc. of triumphus, a triumph, or public rejoicing for a victory. = Gk. θρίαμβος, a hymn to Bacchus, sung in festal processions to his honour; also used as a name for Bacchus. Der. triumph, verb, L. L. L. iv. 3. 35; triumph-er, Titus Andron. i. 170; triumph-ant, Rich. III. iii. 2. 84, from the stem of the pres. part. of L. triumphāre, to triumph; triumph-ant-ly, also triumph-al, from L. triumphālis, belonging to a triumph. Doublet, trump (2). (Perhaps L. triumphus is a native word.)

TRIUMVIR, one of three men in the same office or government. (L.) Shak. has triumvirate, Antony, iii. 6. 28; and even triumviry, L. L. L. iv. 3. 53. = L. triumvir, one of three men associated in an office. A curious form, evolved from the pl. triumviri, three men, which again was evolved from the gen. pl. trium virorum, so that trium is the gen. pl. of trēs, three; whilst vir, a man, is a nom. sing. See Three and Virile. Der. triumvir-ate, from L. triumvirātus, the office of a triumvir.

TRINE, the being Three in One. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from L. tri-, three; and ūnus, one, cognate with F. une. See Tri- and One.

TRIVET, TREVET, a three-legged support. (L.) 'A trivette, tripes,' Levins. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 82, we find trevid under the date 1493, and the pl. trivettis at p. 100, under the date 1504. AS. treft, Cart. Saxon, ed. Birch, iii. 367. = L. tripedes, acc. of tripēs, having three feet. = L. tri-, three, and pēs, a foot, cognate with E. foot. Doublet, tripod, which is a Greek form.

TRIVIAL, common, slight, of small worth. (F.—L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 61. It also meant trite or well-known; see Trench, Select Glossary. = F. trivial, 'trivial, common;' Cot. = L. trivialis, that which belongs to the cross-roads, that which may be picked up anywhere, ordinary, common-place. = L. trivialis, a place where three roads meet. = L. tri-, three; and via, a way; see Tri- and Voyage. Der. trivialis-ly, -ness.

TROCHEE, a metrical foot of two syllables, a long one followed by a short one. (L.—Gk.) Spelt trocheus in Putehan, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3; now shortened to trochee. = L. trocheus. = Gk. τροχαιος, running; also a trochee, from its tripping measure. = Gk. τροχός, a running. = Gk. τρέχειν, to run. The form of the root appears to be DIKEGH. Der. trochaic-ly, from Gk. τροχαιος. And see truck (2).

TROGLodyTE, a dweller in a cave. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'These savages . . . flew away at last into their caves, for they were troglo-dites;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. x; ed. Arber, p. 51. And see Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 159. = F. trogodyte, used by Montesquieu, and doubtless somewhat older than his time. = L. trogodyta. = Gk. τρογλοδύτης, one who creeps into holes, a cave-dweller; Herod. iv. 183. = Gk. τρογλο- for τρώγλη, a hole, a cave; and δύ-ειν, to enter, creep into; with suffix -της, of the agent. β. τρώγλη is from Gk. τρώγ-ειν, to gnaw, to bite, hence to gnaw a hole; whence also TROUT.

TROLL, to roll, to sing a catch, to fish for pike with a rod of which the line runs on a reel. (F.—Teut.) ME. trollen, to roll; Prompt. Parv. To troll the bowl, to send it round, circulate it; see Troul in Nares. To troll a catch is, probably, to sing it irregularly (see below); to troll, in fishing, is, prob. rather to draw the line hither and thither than to use a reel; see Trawl. = MF. troller, which Cot. explains by 'hounds to troule, rauge, or hunt out of order;' to which he subjoins the sb. trollerie, 'a trowling or disordered ranging, a hunting out of order;' this shows it was a term of the chase. Roquefort gives OF. trouler, troller, to run hither and thither; cf. mod. F. trôler, to lead, drag about, also to stroll about, to ramble. = G. trollen, to roll, to troll; cognate with MDu. drollen, 'to troole,' Hexham; Low G. drollen, to troll, troll, Bremen Wörterbuch. Prob. allied to EFries. drollen, to turn, to roll; and to Drill (1). ¶ Distinct from trail. Der. troll-er; also troll-op, a stroller, slattern, loitering person, where the suffix is obscure; perhaps suggested by gallop. Phillips gives troll about, 'to ramble up and down in a careless or sluttish dress;' also trollop, 'an idle, nasty slut.' And see trull.

TROMBONE, a deep-toned bass instrument of music. (Ital.—G.—Slav.) Not in Todd's Johnson. = Ital. trombone, a trombone, trumpet, sackbut; augmentative form of tromba, a trumpet; see Trump (1).

TRON, a weighing-machine. (F.—L.) See Riley, tr. of Liber Albus, pp. 124, 199, 548; hence ironage, pp. 199, 215. The tron was gen. used for weighing wool. The Tron Church in Edinburgh is so called from being situated near the site of the old weighing-machine. We read of 'Tronage and Poundage' in Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 100; where we also find: 'To ironage pertenein thoos things that shal be weyen by the trone of the kynge.' = AF. trone, a weighing-machine, Liber Albus, p. 246; and Latinised as Low L. trona (in Ducange); cf. OF. trouel, a dimin. form in Godefroy. = L. trulina, a pair of scales. Cf. Gk. τρονάρη, a tongue of a balance, a pair of scales. Der. iron-ge; with F. suffix -age < L. -aticum.

TROOP, a company, especially of soldiers, a crew. (F.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 220. = F. troupe, 'a troupe, crew;' Cot. OF. trope, in use in the 13th cent., Littré; cf. Span. tropa, Mital. tropia, 'a troupe,' Florio; mod. Ital. truppa; Late L. truppus. β. Origin doubtful; perhaps from Norw. tropp, a flock, a crowd, Icel. þorp; cf. Icel. þyrrast, to throng. Körtling, § 9520. Der. troop, verb, Romeo, i. 5. 80; hence troop-er, moss-troop-er.

TROPE, a figure of speech. (L.—Gk.) In Levins; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1340 a. = L. trōpus, a figure of speech, a trope. = Gk. τροπός, a turning, a turn, a turn or figure of speech. = Gk. τροπή, 2nd grade of τρέπω, to turn. 4. OL. trepere, to turn. Der. tropeic, q.v. Also tropeic-al, i. e. figurative; trope-logic-al, expressed in tropes, Tyndall, Works, p. 166, col. 1 (see Logio). Also heliō-trope. And see trophy, trobador, trover.

TROPHY, a memorial of the defeat of an enemy, something taken from an enemy. (F.—L.—Gk.) Formerly spel. trophæe, as in Cotgrave, and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56. = F. trophée, 'a trophy, a sign or mark of victory;' Cot. = L. trōphæum, a sign of victory. = Gk. τροφαῖον, τροφαῖον, a trophy, a monument of an enemy's defeat, consisting of shields, &c., displayed on a frame. Neut. of τροφάω, adj., belonging to a defeat. = Gk. τροφή, a return, a putting to flight of an enemy by causing them to turn. = Gk. τροπή, 2nd grade of τρέπω, to turn; see Trope. Der. trophé-id.

TROPIC, one of the two small circles on the celestial sphere, where the sun appears to turn, after reaching its greatest declination north or south; also one of two corresponding circles on the terrestrial sphere. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. trophik, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. c. 17, l. 8. = F. tropique, 'a tropick;' Cot. = L. trōpicum, acc. of trōpicus, tropical. = Gk. τροπικός, belonging to a turn; β. τροπικός κύκλος, the tropic circle. = Gk. τροπός, a turn; see Trope. Der. tropic, adj.; tropic-al, tropic-al-ly.

TROT, to move or walk fast, run as a horse when not going at full pace. (F.—L.?) ME. trotten, Chaucer, C. T. 9412 (E 1538); P. Plowman, B. ii. 164. = F. trotter, 'to trot;' Cot. OF. troter, 13th cent.; Littré. We also find OF. trotier, a trotter, messenger, Late L. trotarius; and this answers so nearly to L. tolitarius, going at a trot, that it is usual to suppose OF. trotter to result from a Late L. tolitarius, to trot, by the common change of t into r, and loss of o. β. Tolitarius is derived from tolūtum, adv., at a trot, used of horses. The lit. sense is 'with a lifting up of the feet.' = L. toltere, to lift; see Tolerate. γ. This etymology is accepted by Diez, Scheler, and Littré; but some compare MHG. trotten, to run, perhaps allied to G. tretten, to tread; MDu. tratten, 'to go, to pace, or to trot;' Hexham. G. tretten is cognate with E. tread. Der. trot, sb., trott-er.

TROTH, truth, fidelity. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 36. ME. trouthe, Ormulum, i. 44. Formed from the verb Trow, q.v. Der. troth-ed, Much Ado, iii. 1. 38; troth-plight, a plighting of troth, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 278; troth-plight = troth-plighted, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 151. Also be-troth, q.v.

TROUBADOUR, a Provençal poet. (Prov.—L.—Gk.) See Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. iii. And see Littré, Roquefort, and Raynouard. Troubadour does not seem to be the right Prov. word, but a F. modification of it. The Prov. word is trobador (Littré), or (very commonly) trobairre; see Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale. From a L. type trōpādōrem*, acc. of trōpātor*; from a verb trōpāre*, formed from L. trōpus, which was used by Venantius Fortunatus (about A.D. 600) with the sense of 'a kind of singing, a song,' White; and see Ducange. This is only a peculiar use of L. trōpus, which usually means a trope; see Trope. β. The Late L. trōfāre* would have the exact sense 'to make or write, or sing a song' which is so conspicuous in OF. trover (F. trouver), Prov. trobār, Port. and Span. trovar, Ital. trovare; for, though the mod. F. trouver means 'to find' in a general sense, this is merely generalised from the particular sense of 'to find out' or 'devise' poetry; cf. Port. trova, a rime, trovar, to make rimes, trovador, a rimer; Span. trova, verse, trovar, to versify, also to find; trovador, a versifier, finder; trovista, a poet; Ital. trovare, 'to finde, to devise, to invent, to imagine, get, obtain, procure, seek out,' Florio. It may be added that, even in Gk., ῥῥῶος was used with reference to music, to signify a particular mode, such as ῥῥῶος Ἀδῶος, the Lydian mode, &c. y. As regards the letter-changes, a L. p rightly gives Ital. p and Prov. b, as in Ital. arrivare = Prov. arribar < L. adriare (see ARRIVE). Cf. also Prov. troubaire, a troubadour; from L. nom. trōpādor*. See TROVER.

TROUBLE, to agitate, disturb, confuse, vex. (F. — L.) M.E. troublen, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 19; trublen, Ancræn Riwle, p. 268, l. 20. — OF. trubler, troubler, later troubler, 'to trouble, disturb'; Cot. Formed as if from a Late *L. turbulāre, a verb made from L. turbula, a disorderly group, a little crowd of people (White), dimin. of turba, a crowd. In fact, we find OF. turbulere, one who troubles. [From the L. turba we have also the verb turbāre, to disturb, with much the same sense as F. troubler.] β. The L. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people, is cognate with Gk. ῥῥῥῥῥῥ, also written ῥῥῥῥῥῥ, disorder, throng, bustle; whence ῥῥῥῥῥῥ (see) to disturb. See TURBID. Der. trouble, sb., spelt trubie, turbie in Prompt. Parv., from OF. trouble, trubie, later trouble, 'trouble'; Cot.; trouble-some, Mer. Wives, l. 1. 325; troub-ous, 2 Hen. VI, i. 2. 22. Also turb-id, turb-ul-ent, q.v. Also (from L. turbāre) dis-turb, per-turb.

TROUGH, a long hollow vessel for water. (F.) M.E. troghe, trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3627. AS. troh or trog (gen. trogas), a trough or hollow vessel; used by Alfred in the sense of a little boat, tr. of Orosius, b. ii. c. 5. § 7 (end). 'Littoraria, trog-skip, i.e. a little boat', Spau. 166. 4; 'Canthera, trog', id. 12. 12. Du. trog; Icel. trog; Dan. trog; Swed. tråg; G. trog, MIIG. trog. We find also G. truhe, OHG. truha, a chest or trunk. Teut. type trugōz*, ldg. type drukōz*, m.; from ldg. dru-*, as in Skt. dru, a tree; with adj. suffix. Thus the sense is 'wooden'; see TREE. Der. tray.

TROUNC, to beat, castigate. (F. — L.) 'But the Lord trounced Sisara and all his charrettes'; Bible, 1551, Judges, iv. 15. Lit. 'to beat with a truncheon.' — OF. trous, m. a truncheon; tronce, f., variant of OF. tronche, 'a great piece of timber', Cot.; allied to F. tronc, a trunk; cf. also F. tronson, mod. F. tronçon, 'a truncheon or little trunk, a thick slice', id. See TRUNCEON and TRUNK. Cf. also F. troncir, 'to cut or break off in two', Cot.; Span. tronzar, to shatter.

TROUSERS, TROWERS, a garment worn by males on the lower limbs. (F. — L. — Gk.) The form trowers does not seem to be old; Richardson quotes 'by laced stockings and trowers' from Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 18; Wiseman died in 1676. In older books the word appears without the latter r, in the forms trowes, trouses, &c., and even troze; cf. Lowland Sc. traws. We find, however, the curious and corrupt form strowers in Slak. Hen. V, iii. 7. 57, where most mod. editions have trowers, though the same form occurs also in Dekker and Middleton; see Dyce's Glossary to Shakespeare. β. The word was particularly used of the nether garments of the Irish; Nares cites, from Ware's Antiquities of Ireland, 'their little coats, and strait breeches called trowes.' 'Their breeches, like the Irish trowe, have hose and stockings sewed together,' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 297 (Todd) or p. 313, ed. 1665. Hence Irish trius, triubhas, trousers; MIrish triubhas; Gael. triubhas. Herbert also has the spelling trowes, p. 325, ed. 1665. 'The poor trowz'd Irish there,' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 22. Cf. also: 'And leaving me to stalk here in my trowes,' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1 (Pennyboy junior). 'Four wild Irish in trowes,' Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 1; stage direction. — F. trousers, s. pl., trunk-hose, breeches (Hamilton; see also Litttré). Trousers is the pl. of trousse, a bundle, a 'truss', formerly also a case, such as 'a quiver for arrows'; Cot. Hence trousers became a jocular term, used esp. of the breeches of a page (Litttré), and was so applied by the English to the Irish garments. — F. trousier, 'to truss, pack, tuck, bind or girt in, pluck or twich up'; Cot. These senses help to explain the sb. See further under TRUSS. Der. trousseau, q.v.

TROUSSEAU, a package; esp. the lighter articles of a bride's outfit. (F. — L. — Gk.) Modern; yet it is not a little remarkable that trousseau, i.e. packages, occurs in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 168, l. 1. — F. trousseau, 'a little truss or bundle'; Cot.; OF. troussel, dimin. of F. trousse, a truss, bundle; see TRUSS.

TROUT, a fresh-water fish. (L. — Gk.) M.E. troute, spelt troutte in the Prompt. Parv. AS. truh; 'Tructin, truh', Voc. 180. 37. — L. tructa (whence also F. truite); also tructus — Gk. ῥῥῥῥῥῥ, a gnawer, lover of dainties; also a sea-fish with sharp teeth. — Gk. ῥῥῥῥῥῥ — traw, with suffix -traw of the agent. As the sense is 'gnawer' or 'nibbler', it was easily applied to fish of various kinds. Cf. TROGLDYTE.

TROVE, the gaining possession of goods, by finding or otherwise. (F. — L. — Gk.) Trove* is the name of an action, which a man hath against one who, having found any of his goods, refuseth to deliver them upon demand; Blount's Nonullexicon, ed. 1691. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3, l. 648. An old law-term, in early use, as shown by the spelling. — OF. trouer, later trouver, to find. It answers in form to the Late *L. tropire, orig. used in the sense to find out poetry, to invent, devise, which was a sense of OF. trover, and prob. the orig. one. See further under TROUBADOUR. Hence treasure-trove, treasure found, though trove is now barbarously pronounced as a monosyllable, where it stands for OF. treuve (troue), pp. of trouer, to find; see Blackstone, Commentaries, b. i. c. 8. Der. con-trive, re-trive.

TROW, to believe, think, suppose to be true. (E.) In Luke, xvii. 9 (A. V.). M.E. trawen, Chaucer, C. T. 693 (A 691). OFries. trawen, EFries. trēn, to believe. AS. trāwian, to trow, trust; from Teut. base trū-*. We also find AS. trāwian, to believe, allied to trēow, sb., faith, and to trāwe, adj., true; from the Teut. base trēw(w)*. Cf. Icel. trúa, to trow, trūr, true; Dan. troe, to trow, tro, true; Swed. tro, to trow; Low G. trauen, to trow, trou, true; Du. trawen, to marry, trawu, true; G. trauen, OHG. trāwēn, to trust; Goth. trawan, to believe. See TRUE.

TROWEL, a tool used in spreading mortar and in gardening. (F. — L.) M.E. truel; 'a truel of [a] massoun'; Wyclif, Amos, vii. 7, earlier version; in the later version has trulle. 'Ilec trolle, a trowelle'; Voc. 728. 29. Spelt trowell in Palsgrave. — F. truelle, a trowel, spelt truele in the 13th cent. (Litttré). — Late L. trullia, a trowel, in use A. D. 1163 (Ducange); cf. L. trulla, a small ladle, scoop, firepan, trowel. A dimin. of L. trua, a stirring-spoon, skimmer, ladle. See TWIRL.

TROWERS, the same as TROUSERS, q.v.
TROY-WEIGHT, the weight used by goldsmiths. (F.; and E.) Spelt troie-weight in Minshew, ed. 1627. Troy wryt; Paston Letters, iii. 297. 'The received opinion is that it took its name from a weight used at the fair of Troyes; this is likely enough; we have the pound of Cologne, of Toulouse, and perhaps also of Troyes. That there was a very old English pound of 12 oz. is a well-determined fact, and also that this pound existed long before the name Troy was given to it, [is] another.' The troy-pound was mentioned as a known weight in 2 Hen. V. cap. 4 (1414), and 2 Hen. VI. cap. 13 (1423), &c.; Eng. Cyclopaedia. And see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. This explanation is verified by the expression 'a Paris pece of sylver weyng bee the weight off troye viij. vuncis'; Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 108; at p. 191, it appears simply as 'troy weight.' As early as 1392-3, we find 'pouderis . . . de Troye'; Earl of Derby's Expeditious (C. S.), p. 100, l. 28. Troyes is a town in France, to the S.E. of Paris. Colgrave, s.v. livre, mentions the pounds of Spain, Florence, Lyons, and Milan; and explains la livre des apothecaries as belonging to 'Troy weight.'

TRUANT, an idler, a boy who absents himself from school without leave. (F. — C.) M.E. truani, Gower, C. A. ii. 13; bk. iv. 342. The derived sb. truandise occurs as early as in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 330, l. 2. — AF. truant, Boeve de Haumtone, ed. Stimming, l. 281; Vie de St. Aulan; F. truand, 'a common beggar, vagabond, a rogue, a lazare rascal'; Cot. He also gives the adj. truand, 'beggarly, rascally, roguish.' [We find also Span. truhan, Port. truhão, a buffoon, jester.] Of Celtic origin. — W. truan, wretched, truan, a wretch; cf. truedd, wretchedness, trueni, pity, trugar, compassionate, truennus, piteous. Corn. tr., interj. alas! woe! troe, wretched. Breton truez, truez, pity, truez, to pity; truani, a vagabond, beggar, of which Legonidec says that, though this particular form is borrowed from French, it is none the less of Celtic origin, and that, in the dialect of Vannes, a beggar is called trued. Irish trogha, miserable, unhappy; troighe, grief; truo, lean, piteous; truadh, a poor, miserable creature; truagh, pity, also poor, lean, meagre; &c. Gael. truaghan, a poor, distressed creature; truaghanta, lamentable, from truagh, wretched; cf. truas, pity, troair, mercy. β. Thus the F. truand is formed, with excrement d, from the sb. which appears as W. truan, Gael. truaghan, a wretched creature; which sb. was orig. an adj. extended from the shorter form seen in W. tro, Corn. troe, Irish trogha, Gael. truagh, wretched; Olirish troag; Celtic type trawgos*, wretched (Stokes-Fick, p. 138). Allied to Gk. σῥῥῥῥῥῥῥῥῥ, I am wretched, I feel distress.

TRUCE, a temporary cessation of hostilities, temporary agreement. (E.) The etymology is much obscured by the curious modern spelling; it is really a plural form, and might be spelt treus, i.e. pledges, pl. of treu, a pledge of truth, derived from the adj. treu. This comes out clearly in tracing the M.E. forms. M.E. trives, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 10005; troues, K. Alisaunder, 2808; troues, Rich. Coer de Lion, 3207. Truwys*, truwys, or truce of pees'; Prompt. Parv. All these are pl. forms; the sing. treue, a truce, pledge of reconciliation, occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 332, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 879. — AS. trēwa, a compact, promise, pledge, faith (Grein); cf. AS. trēwa, by-form trēwa, used in the sense of compact in Gen. xvii. 19; it also means faith, Mark, xi. 22. Allied to AS. trōwe, true; see True. Cf. AF. trues, truce, Gaimar, 567; trives, id. 3046; trewe, sing., Stat. Realm, i. 300 (1344).

TRUCK (1), to barter, exchange. (F. - Teut.) 'All goods, wares, and merchandises so trucked, bought, or otherwise dispended'; Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 228. Just above, on the same page, we have: 'by way of merchandise, trucke, or any other respect.' ME. trukken, Prompt. Parv.; and even in Ancrén Kniwe, p. 408, l. 15. - AF. troquier, La Clef d'Amors, l. 1067; F. troquer, 'to truck, chop, swab, score, barter'; Cot. Cf. Span. (and Port.) trocar, to barter; Ital. truccare, 'to truck, barter'; Florio. β. From OF. troque, sb., barter (1537), Godefroy; MF. troc, troq, 'a bartering'; Cot. And the Vocab. du Haut Maine has tric pour troc, a simple exchange; and we find Norm. dial. faire la troque, to barter; Walloon trouk po truck, a simple exchange (Rémacle). A North F. form; the Central F. trocher occurs in 1434 (Ducange, s. v. Trocere). - WFlem. trok, truk, sale; used with regard to the good or bad 'sale' of goods, trokken, to procure goods. The WFlem. trok and trokken are used in all the senses of Du. trek, trekken (De Ho). Cf. Du. trak, demand, quick sale; in trek zijn, to be in vogue; from trekken, vb., to draw. See Trigger. Der. truck, sb., as above, from F. troq, 'a truck, or trucking'; Cot.; cf. Span. truca, truque, barter, Port. troco, the change of a piece of gold or silver, troca, barter. Also truck-age. See Notes on F. Etym., p. 307.

TRUCK (2), a small wheel, a low-wheeled vehicle for heavy articles. (L. - Gk.) 'In gunnery, trucks are entire round pieces of wood like wheels fixed on the axle-trees of the carriages, to move the ordnance at sea'; Phillips, ed. 1706. He also gives: 'trochus, a wheel, a top for children to play with.' Truck is an English adaptation of L. trochus, now disused in its L. form. - Gk. τροχός, a runner, a wheel, disc. - Gk. τροχ-, and grade of τροχέω, to run; see Trochee. Der. truck-le, a little wheel, answering to L. trochlea; Phillips gives - 'trochlea, a truckle or pulley, . . . which is one of the six mechanical powers or principles'; showing that the L. form trochlea was once in use. Rarest has: 'Pulle, trochlea; a truckle, or pulley.' Cotgrave explains F. jaquet by 'a truckle or pulley'; and the word occurs rather early, as shown under Truckle, verb. Hence truckle-bed, a bed that runs on small wheels and can be pushed under another bed, Romeo, ii. 1. 39; see Nares. And see truckle below.

TRUCKLE, to submit servilely to another. (L. - Gk.) 'Truckle, to submit, to yield or buckle to'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Not an old word; Todd's Johnson has: 'Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a nation that truckles under us?' Cleaveland (no reference). Also: 'For which so many a legal cuckold Has been run down in courts and truckled'; Butler's Hudibras, Part iii. c. 1. l. 613. To truckle under is a phrase having reference to the old truckle-bed, which could be pushed under another larger one; and the force of the phrase is in the fact that a pupil or scholar slept under his tutor on a truckle-bed. See Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 6, where he intentionally reverses the order of things, saying that a complaisant tutor would submit 'to lie upon the truckle-bed, Whilst his young master lieth o'er his head.' Warton, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 419, has a note upon this passage in which he proves that such was the usual practice both at Oxford and Cambridge, citing: 'When I was in Cambridge, and lay in a trundle-bed under my tutor,' Return from Parnassus (1606), Act ii. sc. 6 (Amoretti). He quotes from the statutes of Magdalen College, (Oxford, 1459), the statute: 'Sint duo lecti principales, et duo lecti rotales, trochyl-beddys valgariter nuncupati'; cap. xlv. He adds: 'And in the statutes of Trinity College, Oxford, given [in] 1556, trocle-bed, the old spelling, ascertains the etymology from troclea, a wheel.' In fact, this shows how the words truckle and truck (2) came to be taken immediately from the Latin; they originated at the universities. ¶ No connexion with AS. trucean, to fail, which does not in any way explain the word or its use.

TRUCULENT, fierce, barbarous, cruel. (F. - L.) In Cotgrave. - MF. truculent, 'truculent, cruel'; Cot. - L. truculentus, acc. of truculentus, cruel; extended from trux (gen. truci-), fierce, wild. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'threatening'; cf. G. drohen, MHG. drouwen, OHG. drouwen, to threaten, AS. þrōgan, to threaten. Der. truculent-ly, truculence.

TRUDGE, to travel on foot slowly, march heavily. (F. - Teut.?) In Shak. it means to run heavily, trod along or away; Merry Wives, i. 3. 91; iii. 3. 13; Romeo, i. 2. 24; i. 3. 34. 'May from the prison trudge'; Turberville, That Lovers must not despair, st. 6. 'And let them trudge hence apace'; Bale, Apologie, fol. 6 (K.). 'I trudge about from gate to gate'; Mirror for Magistrates (Alured). Perhaps it meant to go about like a vagabond or idle beggar. - F. trucher, to beg idly (16th cent.), Littré; Picard trucker, to beg; Norm. dial. trucher, to sponge upon. Of Teut. origin; cf.

Low G. truggeln, to beg sawningly; Du. traggelen, to beg, to wheedle; MDu. truggelen, 'to trudge up and down a beggung'; Hexham; WFlem. truggelen, to walk with difficulty, De Bo (who notices that in Limburg it is pronounced truggelen or trukhelen); EFrics. truggeln, to press back, also to beg with importunity. From Teut. base þrug-, to press; as in Icel. þruga, Swed. truga, Dan. trug, to press. ¶ Florio has Ital. truccare, 'to trudge, to skud, or pack away.' Cf. grudge < OF. groucher. (Doubtful.)

TRUE, firm, established, certain, honest, faithful. (E.) ME. trewe (properly dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. i. 88. AS. trāwes, true, also spelt trīwe, Grein, ii. 552. Cf. AS. trōw, trīw, truth, preservation of a compact. - Du. trouw, true, faithful; trouw, fidelity; Icel. trýggj, trár, true; Dan. tro, true; tro, truth; Swed. trogen, true; tro, fidelity; G. treu, OHG. triuwi, true; treue, OHG. triuwa, fidelity; Goth. triggus, true; triggwa, a covenant; cf. traun, to trust, to be persuaded. β. The Teut. type appears to be trewaz*, adj., 'believed in, relied upon'; from Idg. DKEU*, to rely upon, trust in; whence also Lith. dri-tas, firm, OPrussian druwis, druwi, belief, druaiti, to believe. Dor. truly, tru-ism (a coined word); also tru-ly, ME. treuthe, tronike, Chaucer, C. T. 10877 (F 563), AS. trōwdu, IXcod. xix. 5, cognate with Icel. trýggð; hence truth-ful, -ly, -ness. Also truth (doublet of truth), truw, tru-st.

TRUFFLE, a round underground edible fungus. (F. - L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A dish of truffles'; Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 30, 1644. - MF. truffe, another spelling of truffe, 'a most dainty kind of round and russet root'; Cot. Cf. Span. trufa, a truffle; also a cheat (see Trifle). We also find F. tarrouffe in the same sense; Ital. tarisfo, a truffle; tarisfi bianchi, white esculent roots, i.e. potatoes. β. The F. truffe, Span. trufa, is supposed to be derived from L. tuber, a tuber, esculent root, a truffle (Juv. v. 116); the neut. pl. tubera would give a nom. fem. tufre* (whence truffe by shifting of r) as in other instances; e.g. the L. fem. sing. antiphrona = Gk. neut. pl. ἀντιφωνα. γ. That this is the right explanation (for which see Diez and Scheler) is rendered almost certain by the Ital. form tarisfo (also tarisfofa), where tar- stands for L. terra (of the earth), and tarisfo is from terra tuber. Florio gives Ital. tarisfo, tarisfofa, 'a kind of meate, fruit, or roote of the nature of potatoes called truffles [truffles?]; also, a kind of artichoke.' Brugmann derives Ital. -tufa (in tar-tufa) from an Oscan-Umbrian dialect; i. 5. 413 (8).

δ. From the Ital. tarisfofa is derived (by dissimilation of the double t) the curious G. karisoffel, a potato; of which an earlier form was tarisoffel. See further under Tuber. Doublet, triffe, q. v.

TRULL, a drab, worthless woman. (G.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 6. 95; and in Levens. 'The Governour (of Brill, in Holland) was all bedewed with drinke, His trulls and he were all layde downe to sleepe'; Gascogne. Voyage into Holland, A. D. 1572; Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 391. We should expect to find it a Du. word, but it is German, imported, perhaps, by way of Holland, though not in Hexham's or Sewel's dictionaries. - G. trulle, trulle, a trull (whence Walloon tronille (Siger), Picard tronle, the same. It is a fem. form, allied to MDu. drol, m., 'a pleasant or a merrie mau, or a gester', Hexham, and to Dan. troll, Swed. and Icel. troll, a merry elf; see Droll. The orig. sense was merely a merry or droll companion.

TRUMP (1), a trumpet, kind of wind instrument. (F. - G. - Slav.) ME. trumpet, trompe, Chaucer, C. T. 676 (A 674); Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 30, l. 13. - F. trompe, 'a trump, or trumpet'; Cot. [Cf. Span., Port., and Prov. trompa, Ital. tromba.] - OHG. trumpa, trumba, a trumpet (Hatzfeld). Of Slavonic origin. - OSlav. type tromba* (Miklosich); evidenced by OSlav. and Polish trąba(m), with the former a nasal, Slovenian tromba, trōba, a trumpet; Russ. truba, a pipe, a tube, a trumpet. Der. trump-et, ME. trompette, Gower, C. A. iii. 217; bk. vii. 3744; from F. trompette, 'a trumpet', Cot., dimin. of F. trompe; trump-et-er, from F. trompeteur, 'a trumpeter', Cot. Also trumpet-fish; trumpet-tongued, Mach. i. 7. 19. And see trumpet.

TRUMP (2), one of the suit of cards that takes any other suit. (F. - L.) Well known to be a corruption of trump; see Latimer's Sermons (Parker Society), i. 1. 8, 13, and Foxe's remarks on them, id. vol. ii. p. xi. Triumph in Shak. Antony, iv. 14. 20, prob. means a trump-card; see Nares. - F. trionphie, 'the card-game called ruffe, or trump; also the ruffe or trump at it'; Cot. See Triumph. Der. trump, verb; trump-card.

TRUMPERY, falsehood, idle talk, trash. (F. - L.) In Temp. iv. 186; and in Levens. Caxton has trumpery, meaning 'deception'; Godfrey of Boulogne, p. 238. The proper sense is deceit, or something deceptive, hence imposture, &c. - F. trumperie, 'a craft, wile, fraud'; Cot. - F. tromper, 'to counsel, deceive', id. β. Littré says that the orig. sense was to play on the trump or trumpet; thence arose the phrase se tromper de quelq'un, to play with any one, to amuse oneself at his expense; hence the sense to beguile, cheat.

This seems to be the right and simple solution; and Littré also quotes, s. v. trompette (1), the 15th cent. 1 phrase me jous tu de la trompette? are you playing the trumpet with me, i. e. are you playing with me, which confirms it. See further under Trump (1).

TRUMPET, the dimin. of Trump (1), q. v.
TRUNCATE, to cut off short. (L.) Phillips has 'truncated pyramid or cone' = L. truncatus, pp. of truncare, to cut off, reduce to a trunk. — L. truncus, a trunk, stock; see Trunk. Der. truncat-ia, from F. truncation, 'a truncation, truncing, mutilation, cutting off', Cot., from L. acc. truncationem.

TRUNCHEON, a cudgel, short staff. (F.—L.) ME. troncheon, Chaucer, C. T. 2617 (A 2615), where it means the shaft of a broken spear; so also troncheon, King Alisaunder, 3745.—ONorth F. tronchon (Norm. dial.); see Molsy and Godefroy; OF. tronpon; MF. tronson, a truncheon, or little trunk, a thick stick, luncheon, or piece cut off; Cot. Mod. F. tronçon. Dimin. of F. tronc, 'trunk, stock, stemme'; Cot.; see Trunk. Der. truncheon-er, Hen. VIII, v. 4, 5.

TRUNDLE, a wheel, anything round; to roll. (F.—Low G.) Now chiefly used only as a verb, to roll round; the sb. occurs in trundle-bed, a bed running on wheels, trundle-tail, a round tail of a dog; cf. AS. tryndlyd, rounded; Voc. 152, 5. [We also find: 'Trendyl, sb., tounouer'; Palgrave. 'I tryndyl, as a boule or a stone dothe, 7s roudle'; id. ME. trendyl, sb., trendulen, verb. 'Trendyl, troclea'; 'Trendyl, a rownd thyng, Trocleo, volvo'. Prompt. Parv.; from AS. trendel, a circle; see further under Trend.] β. The vowel is due to borrowing from MF. (Picard) trondeler, 'to trundle'; Cot.; Walloon trondeler, to roll (Sigart). Of Low G. origin; cf. Low G. tründeln, Pomeran. tründeln, to trundle a hoop.—Teut. trund-, weak grade of a lost str. vb. trund-, to roll (pt. t. trund*); whence also AS. sin-tryndel, a large round shield; OFries. trund, round. Cf. NFries. Swed., Dan. trind, round. The ME. trenden, to turn, roll, is a secondary verb from trund-, and grade of trund-. See Trend. Der. trundle-bed, see quotation s. v. truckle; trundle bedstead occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tynms, p. 220, l. 11, in a will dated 1649; trundle-tail, a cur, Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 3, 16, according to Richardson, but Darley's ed. has trindletail; see, however, K. Lear, iii. 6, 73.

TRUNK (1), the stem of a tree, the proboscis of an elephant, shaft of a column, chest for clothes. (F.—L.) 'A chestie, or trunke of elene syluer'; Fabryan, Chron. cap. 131, fol. lxvii, ed. Ellis, p. 113. ME. tronke, a body without limbs; Caxton, Golden Legend, Saul, § 3.—F. tronc, 'the trunk, stock, stemme, or body of a tree; also a trunk, or hendlesse body; also, the poor man's box in churches' [whence E. trunk = box]; Cot.—L. truncus, acc. of truncus, a trunk, stem, trunk of the body, pained cut off. Spelt troncus in Lucretius, i. 354; cf. truncus, adj., mutilated. See Brugmann, i. § 144. The elephant's trunk owes its name to an error (see below). The AF. trunk, a trunk of a tree, is in Wm. of Wadlington's Manuel, l. 11090. Der. trunk-aid, having a trunk; trunk-line (of a railway); trunk-hose, trunk-breeches (see Nares), short wide breeches, reaching a little above or sometimes below the knee, and striped, meaning (I suppose) trunked hose, i. e. cut short (cf. trunked = truncated, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5, 4). Also trunc-ate, q. v., trunc-eon, q. v., trunn-ion, q. v., trounce, q. v.

TRUNK (2), the proboscis of an elephant. (F.—G.—Slav.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. viii. c. 7. A mistaken form of trump; which was confused with trunk, because the latter was sometimes used with the notion of a (hollow) stem or 'tube', which was also a sense of trump (Palgrave). Cf. F. trompe, 'a trumpet, or trumpeter'; also, the snout of an elephant; Cot. See Trump (1). For trunk, a speaking-tube, see Ben Jonson, Epitaph, l. 1. Halliwell gives both trunk and trump, as meaning 'a pea-shooter'; and notes the corrupt use of trunk to mean a trumpet at cards. See Trunk (1).

TRUNNION, one of the stumps or round projections on each side of a cannon, on which it rests in the carriage. (F.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tronçon, 'the stock, stump, or trunk of a branchless tree'; Cot. Dimin. of tron, 'a piece of anything, a trunk, stem', &c.; Cot. This is a shortened form of tronc, due perhaps (as Diez suggests) to misdividing the derived word tronçon as tron-pon; in any case tron and tronc meant the same thing, as Cotgrave tells us. Cf. Ital. troncone, from tronco. See Trunk.

TRUSS, to pack, bind up, fasten as in a package or in bundles. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. trussen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; Ancien Riwle, p. 322, l. 6. [The sb. trusse, a package, is in the Prompt. Parv. p. 504.]—OF. trusser, troussier (also troussier, troussier), MF. troussier, 'to truss, pack, bind or girt in'; Cot. The old spelling troussier (troussier in Godefroy) is supposed to be due to Late L. trussus, L. thyrsus, a stalk.—Gk. θύρσος, a stalk, stem; see Thyrsus. See Körtling, § 9606. Hence OF. trousse, a bundle, troussel, troussel, a little bundle, F. troussau. ¶ The idea seems to be that of 'gathering stalks together,' as in making up a bunch of flowers, &c. Cf. Ital. torso, 'a stem or stalk of any herb'; Florio. Der. truss, sb., ME. trusse, as above. Also truss-er, q. v., trouss-eau, q. v.

TRUST, confidence, belief, credit, ground of confidence. (E.) ME. trust, Ancien Riwle, p. 202, l. 7.—AS. trūst*, not found; cf. trūst-ian*, to pledge oneself, trūst-ian, to trust.—OFries. trūst; Icel. trústr, trust, protection, firmness; Dan. and Swed. trústr, comfort, consolation.—G. trūst, consolation, help, protection; Goth. trūsti, a covenant; Eph. ii. 12. β. The Teut. base of the Icel. form is trūst-ia*, formed with Idg. suffix -to- from traw-s*, extended from traw-*, as seen in Goth. traw-an, to believe, to trust; see True, Trow. Der. trust, verb, ME. trusten, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 213, l. 7; trust-er; trust-ee, one who is trusted, a coined word, with the suffix -ee = F. -é (L. -itus); trust-ful, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4, 434, trust-ful-ly, trust-ful-ness; trust-less, Shak. Lucrece, 2; trust-y, ME. trusti, Ancien Riwle, p. 334, l. 21; trust-i-ly, trust-i-ness; trust-worthy (not in Todd's Johnson), trust-worthy-ly, trust-worthy-ness. Also mi-trust, q. v., tryst, q. v.

TRUTH, sb.; see True. Doublet, trath.
TRY, to test, sift, select, examine judicially, examine experimentally; also, to endeavour. (F.—L.) The old sense is usually to sift, select, pick out. ME. trien, tryen, P. Plowman, B. i. 205. 'Tryin, tryyn, Eligo, præligo, discerno'; Prompt. Parv.—F. trier, 'to pick, chuse, cul out from among others'; Cot. Cf. Prov. trier, to choose, tria, choice (Bartsch).—Late L. trītāre, to triturate; cf. Ital. tritare, 'to bruze, to wear, . . . also to grinde or thresh corn'; Florio.—L. tritus, pp. of terere, to rub, to thresh corn; see Trit. β. Diez explains it thus: L. terere grānum is to thresh corn; the Prov. triar lo gra de la palha is to separate the corn from the stalk; to which he adds other arguments. It would appear that the meaning passed over from the threshing of corn to the separation of the grain from the straw, and thence to the notion of selecting, culling, purifying. Cf. Ital. tritare, 'to crumble, grind; to ponder, consider, sift, scan, examine'; Baretti. To try gold is to purify it; cf. 'tried gold', Merch. Ven. ii. 7, 531; 'the fire seven times tried this'; id. B. 9, 63. Der. try, sb., Timon, v. 1, 11. Also try-ing; try-sail, a small sail tried when the wind is very high. Also tri-al, a coined word, spelt triall in Frith's Works, p. 81, col. 1.

TRYST, TRIST, an appointment to meet, an appointed meeting. (F.—Scand.) See Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary. A trist (ME. trist, trister) was an appointed station in hunting, a place where a man was stationed to watch. 'Lo, holde thee at thy triste cloos, and I Shal we the deer unto thy bowe dryve'; Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1534. 'To triste was he set, forto waite the chance'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 94. Spelt tryster, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1712; tristre, Ancien Riwle, p. 332. Hence the phr. to hold trist, to keep trist, to bide trist, to stay where placid, or to come to an appointed place. 'Halden trist', O. Eng. Met. Hom., ed. Small, p. 82.—OF. triste, tristre, station to watch (in hunting), ambush (Godefroy); Low L. trista. Prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. trysta (st), to trust, to rely upon; Swed. trista, Dan. triste, to trust; see Trust. Hence ME. trist, trist. 'Lady, in yow is all my tryste'; Eil of Tolous, 550, in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii.

TSAB, a better spelling of Czar, q. v.
TUB, a kind of vessel, a small cask. (O. Low G.) ME. tubbe, Chaucer, C. T. 3621. Not improbably a term introduced by Flemish brewers.—MDu. tobbe, dobbe, 'a tubbe'; Hexham; mod. Du. tobbe; EFries. tubbe; Low G. tubbe, a tub, esp. a tub in which orange-trees are planted. ¶ The G. zuber, cognate with Low G. tüber, means a two-handled vessel, and is the same as OHG. zupar, zubar; this is derived from zui, laver zwei, two, and the suffix -bar (as in fruchtbar, fruit-bearing) from OHG. beran, peran, to bear. Thus G. zu-ber = Low G. tü-ber, (=two-bearing), i. e. a vessel borne or carried by two handles. But this throws no light on tub, since tubbe and tüber are a long way apart. Der. tubby, tub-like.

TUBE, a pipe, long hollow cylinder. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. iil. 590.—F. tube, 'a conduit-pipe'; Cot.—L. tubum, acc. of tubus, a pipe, tube; akin to tuba, a trumpet. Der. tub-ing, a length of tube; tubul-ar, from L. tubul-us, dimin. of tubus; tubul-at-ed, from L. tubulatus, formed like a pipe.

TUBER, a knob on a root, a rounded root. (L.) 'Tuber, a truffe, a knot in a tree, &c.'; Phillips, ed. 1617.—L. tüber, a bump, swelling, tumour, knob on plants, a truffe. To be divided as tü-b-er (cf. L. plu-uia, rain, with plu-it, it rains); allied to tu-m-ere, to swell; so that tüber is lit. 'a swelling'. See Tumid. Brugmann, i. § 413 (8). Der. tuber-cle, from F. tubercle, the small rising or swelling of a pimple; from L. tüber-culus, from tüber, whence tubercul-ar, tubercul-ous < F. tuberculeux, 'swelling'; Cot. Also tubar-ous (Phillips), from F. tubereux, 'swelling, bumpy'; Cot., from L. tüberosus, full of swellings; also tubar-ous (Phillips), directly from L. tüberosus. Also tuberosa (Phillips), fem. of L. tuberosus, as the name of a flower: now tuberosa (often absurdly pronounced as tube-rose!). Also truffe, q. v.; trifle, q. v.; pro-tuberant.

TUCK (1), to draw close together, fold or gather in a dress. (OLow G.) ME. tucken. 'Tukken vp, or stykken vp, trukken vp or stakken vp, tuffekino.' Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has tuckyn, i. e. with the frock drawn up under the girdle, C. T. 623; also y-tukked, 7319 (D 1737). Not an E. word, but borrowed from abroad. — Low G. tukken, tokken, to pull up, draw up, tuck up; also to entice; allied to Low G. tuken, to ruck up, lie in folds, as a badly made garment. The same word as MDu. tocken, 'to entice', Hexham; MSwed. tocka, to draw towards one. — G. zucken, OHG. zuechen, to draw or twitch up, to shrug. β Tent. base tukk-; intensive form from the weak up, grade (tink) of teuhan-*, the strong verb appearing as Goth. tiukan, AS. teon, G. ziehen, to draw; see Touche. Allied to Tug. The verb means 'to draw up with a tug or twitch', to hitch up. Der. tuck, sb., a fold; tuck-er, a piece of cloth tucked in over the bosom. γ ME. trukken, in Prompt. Parv. as above, is a Scand. word; Swed. trycka, Dan. trykke, to press, squeeze; cf. G. drücken.

TUCK (2), a rapier. (F. — Ital. — G.) 'Discount thy tuck'; Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 244. A fencing term, and, like other such terms, an Ital. word, but borrowed through French. Just as E. ticket is from F. estiquet or ciquet, so tuck is short for étoc, occasional form of MF. estoc, 'the stock of a tree; . . . also a rapier, or tuck; also a thrust'; Cot. — Ital. stocco, 'a truncheon, a tuck, a short sword'; Florio. — G. stock, a stump, stock, stick, staff; cognate with E. Stook, q. v.

TUCK (3), beat of drum, blow, stroke. (F. — Tent.) 'Hercules it smyteth with a mighty tuck'; G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, Æn. viii; ch. iv. 119. — Picard (or Walloon) toquer, toker, ONorth F. toquer, to touch, strike; variant of F. toucher, to touch; see below.

TUCKER, a fuller. (F. — Tent.) ME. tucker, lit. 'beater'; though the cloth was worked up with the feet; P. Howman, A. prol. 100. — ONorth F. toquer (above). — Low G. tukken, to beat, to touch. See Noies on K. Rym., p. 308.

TUCKET, to flourish on a trumpet. (F. — Tent.) In Hen. V. iv. 2. 35. The form answers to ONorth F. touquet, for OF. touche, a blow; given in Godefroy. The sense answers to that of Ital. toccata, arelude to a piece of music (Torriano); Florio only gives toccata, 'a touch, a touching'; but he notes tocco di campana (lit. a touch of the bell), 'a knock, a stroke, a knell or peal, or tinkle upon the bells.' Toccata is properly the fem. of the pp. of toccare, to touch; of Tent. origin. See Touch. And compare Toccasin.

TUESDAY, the third day of the week. (F. — ME. Tuesday; spelt Tuesday in Wyclif's Select Works, ed. Arnold, li. 75, l. 14. AS. Tiwes dæg, Maric, xiv. 1. rubric. Lit. the day of Tiw, of which Tiwes is the gen. case. — Icel. Týs dagr, the day of Týr; where Týs is the gen. of Týr, the god of war; Dan. Tirsdag; Swed. Tisdag; G. Dienstag, MilG. tiung, OHG. zies tac, the day of Tiu, god of war. β The AS. Tiw (Icel. Týr, OHG. Ziu) answers to the L. Mars as far as the sense goes; but the name itself answers to Skt. deva-s, god; allied to L. deus, and to L. Iu- in Iu-piter, Grk. Zeus, Skt. Dyaus, and means 'the shining one.' ¶ A translation of L. di-s Martis.

TUFFA, a soft stone, usually calcareous. (Ital. — L.) Not from Ital. tufa, 'volcanic earth'; Baretti. But an error for tufa, 'a kind of porous stone'; id. — L. tuffus, tuphicus. Cf. Grk. trápos, tufa. ¶ Also written tuff, from MF. tuff, tuffe (from Ital. tufa), 'a kind of soft and brittle stone'; Cotgrave.

TUFFT (1), a small cluster or knot, crest. (F. — Tent.) 'With a knoppe, other-whyse callyd a tufft'; Bury Wills, ed. Tyms, p. 36, in a will dated 1463. 'A tufft (or toft) of heres' — a tuft of hairs; Chaucer, C. T. 557 (A 555). The proper form should rather be tuff, as in prov. E. tuff, 'a lock of hair' (Halliwell), Lowland Sc. tuff, a tuft of feathers (Jamieson). Howell has tuff, pl.; Fam. Letters, i. let. 25. Cf. W. tuff (from E.). The final t was due to confusion with Tuft (2), q. v.; or it may have been excrement. — F. touffe; 'touffe de cheueux', a tuft or lock of curled hair; Cot. [He also gives touffe de bois, 'a houlst, a tuft of trees growing near a house'; which was easily altered to tuft (2) below.] Of Tent. origin; cf. Swed. dial. tuppa, a tuft, fringe; Icel. toppr, a tuft, top, or lock of hair, horse's crest; MDu. top, 'a tuft of hair, a top', Hexham; G. zopf. If so, tuff is a doublet of top (1). 2 Otherwise, F. touffe may be from Late L. túfa, a kind of standard, perhaps a tuft; said to be from AS. þūf, a tuft (see Toller). Cf. Swed. tufva, a tuft, matted hair; EFrica. tuf-ke, a little tuft; Swed. tuf, a tuft. Perhaps also MDu. tuffa, a Turkish turban (Hexham); called in E. a tuff (Nares). Der. tuff-ut, Norm. dial. touffute, a little tuft, a bow of ribbon (toiffe); dimin. of touffe (above).

TUFT (2), a plantation, clump of trees. (F. — Tent.) 'The tuft of olives'; Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 75. Halliwell gives: 'A tuft, a plantation.' It seems to be the same as tuft (1); and is sufficiently explained by Cotgrave's 'touffe de bois, a houlst or tuft of trees growing near a house'; see Tuft (1). Perhaps sometimes confused with Toft, q. v.

TUG, to pull, drag along. (Scand.) ME. taggen, Prompt. Parv.; Ancrer Riwle, p. 424, last line but one, where it means to sport or dally. A verb formed from Icel. toga, MSwed. tug, a rope to pull by; or, as a secondary verb, from the weak grade (tuh*, tug*) of the strong verb which appears as Icel. týga (pp. toga), AS. teon, G. ziehen, Goth. tiukan, to draw, whence a great number of derivatives have arisen. One of these derivatives, to teug, comes very near to tug in sense. See Tow (1). Allied to EFrica. tokken, to pull, tug; Low G. tukken, to pull up, draw up; cf. Low G. togg, a pull, a tug (Danneil). Cf. also MDu. toge, 'a draught of beer', Hexham; G. zug, a pull, tug, draught; Icel. toggla, to tug. Der. tug, sb. Allied to tuck (1).

TUITION, care and instruction of the young. (F. — L.) 'Tuicyon and gouernance'; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 6; ME. tuicion, Libell of Eng. Policy, l. 1138. — F. tuition, 'tuition, protection'; Cot. — L. tuitiōnem, acc. of tuitio, protection; cf. tuit-us, pp. of tuari, to watch, protect. Der. in-tuition; and see tu-tal-eg, tu-tor.

TULIP, the name of a flower. (F. — Ital. — Turk. — Pers.) In Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary (Shepherd). — MF. tulippe, also tulipan, 'the delicate flower called a tulip, or tulipe, or Dalmatian Cap'; Cot. So called from its likeness to a turban. — Ital. tulipa, tulipano, a tulip. — Turk. tulband, vulgar pronunciation of dulband, a turban; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 433. — Pers. dulband, a turban. (See Turban in Yule.) See Turban, doublet, turban.

TULLE, a kind of silk open-work or lace. (F.) Named from Tulle, in the department of Corrèze, France; where it was first made (Litttré).

TULWAR, an Indian sabre. (Hind.) From Hind. talwār, tarwār, a sword (Forbes).

TULY, red or scarlet. (F. — L.) 'Off tuly silk'; Rich. Coer de Lion, 67, 1516; and see Halliwell. — OF. tiule, of the colour of a tile; cf. red (Godefroy), l. 1138. — F. tuile, a tile. — L. tīgula, a tile. See Tile.

TUMBLE, to fall over, fall suddenly, roll over. (F.) ME. tumbelen, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 6, in one MS. of the later version; tumbelen, King Alisaunder, 2465. Frequentative form (with the usual -l- for -el-) of tumben or tomben; in Trevisa, iv. 365, we have he wenche þat tombode (various readings tombode); Struttman. — AS. tumbian, to tumble, turn heels over head, Matt. xiv. 6; in some old pictures of this scene, Herodias' daughter is represented as standing on her head. — Du. tumelen, to tumble; MDu. tumelen (Hexham), also tommelēn, tummelen, id.; G. tumeln, tummeln, to reel, to stagger; OHG. fāman, to turn round and round, whence fāmar, a tumbler, acrobat (an OLow G. form, acc. to Gallée); Dan. tumle, Swed. tumla, to tumble, toss about. The F. tomber is of Tent. origin. β It will be observed that, contrary to Grimm's law, the word begins with t both in German and English; this points to borrowing, and suggests that the G. word is of Low G. origin. Der. tumble, sb.; tumbler-er, an acrobat, I. L. L. iii. 190, which took the place of AS. tumbere; 'Saltator, tumbere', Voc. 150. 20; cf. 'Saltator, a tumbler' in a Nominalia of the 15th century, id. 696. 35; also tumbler-er, a kind of drinking-glass, orig. without a foot, so that it could not be set down except (inverted) when empty. Also tumbler-el (see Nares), spelt tumbrell-cart in Falsgrave (for which he gives tumbrean as the F. equivalent), from OF. tumbrel, tumbere, later tumbereau, 'a tumbrell'; Cot., also spelt tumbrel, tombereau (Cot.), lit. a tumble-cart, or two-wheeled cart which could be tumbled over or upturned to deposit the manure with which it was usually laden; derived from F. tomber, to fall, a word of Tent. origin, as above. Cf. AF. tumbere, a tumbrel. Surt. Realm, i. 218.

TUMBLEY, to cause to swell, also to swell. (F. — L.) Spelt tumify in Phillips, who also has the sb. tumefaction. — F. tumefier, 'to make to swell, or puff up'; Cot. — Late L. tumeficere, for L. tumefacere, to tumefy, make to swell. — L. tume, for tumēre, to swell; and facere, to make; see Tumid and Fact. Der. tumefaction, as if from L. tumefactio (not used), like tumefactus, pp. of tumefacere.

TUMID, inflated, bombastic. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 288. — L. tumidus, swelling. — L. tumēre, to swell. — TEU-*, to swell, increase; whence also Grk. τῦ-αι, τῦ-λος, a swelling. Cf. Skt. tu, to be powerful, to increase. Brugmann, i. § 413 (8). Der. tumid-ly, -ness. Also (from tumēre) tum-our, a swelling, Milton, Samson, 185, from F. tumeur, 'a tumor, swelling', Cot., from L. acc. tumorem. And see tum-ult, tum-ut-us. From the same root are tu-ber, pro-tuberant, truffe, trifle, thumb.

TUMPE, a hillock. (C.) The W. tump; a tump, may be from E. But the word is prob. Celtic; from W. tonn, Gael. and Irish tonn, a hillock; allied to Gk. τῦμβος, L. tumultus, a mound. See Tumulus, Tomb.

TUMULT, excitement, uproar, agitation. (F.—L.) In K. John, iv. 2. 247; tumulte in Lewis. —F. tumulte, 'a tumult, uproar'; Cot. = L. tumultum, acc. of tumultus, a restless swelling or surging up, a tumult. —L. tum-ere, to swell; cf. tumulus, of which tumultus seems to be an extended form; cf. Skt. tumula-m, n, tumult; tumula-, noisy, tumultuous. See Tumultu-ary. Der. tumult, verb, Milton, tr. of Ps. ii. 1; tumult-u-ary, from F. tumultuaire, 'tumultuary', Cot., from L. tumultuarius, hurried. Also tumult-u-ous, Rich. II, iv. 140, from F. tumultueux, 'tumultuous', Cot., from L. tumultuosus, full of tumult, which from tumultu, decl. stem of tumultus, with suffix -osus; tumultuous-ly, -ness.

TUMULUS, a mound of earth over a grave. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. —L. tumulus, a mound; lit. a swelling. —L. tum-ere, to swell; see Tumid. And see Tump.

TUN, a large cask; see Ton.

TUNE, tone, sound, melody, a melodious air. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'With many a tun and many a note'; Gower, C. A. iii. 303; bk. viii. 830. —AF. tun, Life of Edw. Conf. p. 18; F. ton, 'a tune, or sound'; Cot. = L. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound. —Gk. τῶνος, a tone; see Tone. ¶ The old word tune was afterwards re-introduced as tone, which is a later form. Der. tune, verb, Two Gent. iv. 2. 25; tune-able, Mids. Nat. Dr. i. 1. 184; tune-er, Romeo, ii. 4. 30; tune-ful, Spenser, Tears of the Muses, 27; tune-ful-ly; tune-less, Spenser, Sonnet 44.

TUNGSTEN, a very heavy metal. (Swedish.) Also called wolfram, and schedium (from the discoverer). 'From tungstate of lead, Scheele in 1781 obtained tungstic acid, whence the brothers De Luyart in 1786 obtained the metal'; Haysdn, Dict. of Dates. 'The name indicates heavy stone, in consequence of the high specific gravity of its Swedish ore'; Engl. Cycl. The word is Swedish. —Swed. tungsten, compounded of tung, heavy; and sten, a stone. Ferrall and Repp's Dan. Dict. gives the very word tungsteen, tungsten, from similar Danish elements, viz. tung, heavy, and steen. β. Swed. sten, Dan. steen, are cognate with E. Stone. Swed. and Dan. tung are the same as Icel. þung, heavy; whence þungi, a load, þunga, to load. Cf. Lithuan. tunkis, I become fat, infin. tukti.

TUNIC, an under-garment, loose frock. (L.) Introduced directly from the Latin, before the Norman conquest. AS. tuñice, tuñee. —OF. tunica, tuñee; also 'Tonica, tuñee'; Voc. 151. 8; 268. 1. —L. tunica, an under-garment of the Romans, worn by both sexes; whence also F. tunique (Cot.). Perhaps of Semitic origin; see Gk. χιτών in Prellwitz. Der. tunic-je, P. Plowman, B. xv. 163, from OF. tunicle (Rouquetfort) < L. tunicula, dimin. of tunica. Also tunie-at-ed, a botanical term, from L. tunicatib, provided with a coating; from tunica in the sense of coating, membrane, or husk.

TUNNEL, a hollow vessel for conveying liquors into bottles, a funnel, a passage cut through a hill. (F.—C.) Formerly, when a chimney meant a fireplace, a tunnel often meant a chimney, or flue. 'Tonnell to fyll wythe with, antonyour'; Palsgrave. 'Tonnell of a chymney, tynan'; id. Hence the sense of flue, shaft, railway-tunnel. —OF. tonnel (Burguy), later tonneau, 'a tun, or (generally) any great vessel, or piece of cask for wine, &c., as a tun, hogshead, &c., also a tunnel for partridges'; Cot. The tunnel for partridges was a long tunnel or covered passage made of light wire, strengthened with hoops, into which partridges were decoyed, and could not afterwards escape. Cf. prov. E. tunnel, a funnel, an arched drain; OF. tunnelle, with like senses (Godefroy). The word evidently once meant a sort of cask, then a hooped pipe or funnel, then a flue, shaft, &c. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tyms, p. 20, we find (in 1463) 'my newe house with the ij. tunnys of cheameycis'; Mr. Tyms remarks (p. 241): 'The passage of the chimney was called a tunnel till the beginning of the present century, and the chimney-shaft is still called a tun'. β. F. tonneau is the dimin. of F. tonne, 'a tun'; Cot. Ultimately of Celtic origin; see Ton. Cf. AF. tonel, a tun; Stat. Reaun, i. 156 (1309); tonel, a tunnel (for birds), Bozon, p. 173. Der. tunnel, verb; modern.

TUNNY, the name of a fish. (F.—Prov.—L.—Gk.) 'A tuny fish, thunnius'; Lewis. Palsgrave gives 'Tonny, fysh, without any F. equivalent. The final y is an E. addition. —F. thon, 'a tunny fish'; Cot. —Prov. ton (mod. Prov. toun); see Hatfield. —L. thunnum, acc. of thunnus, a tunny; also spelt thynnus. —Gk. θύνος, a tunny; also spelt θύος. Lit. 'the darter, the fish that darts about (cf. E. dart)'. Cf. Gk. θύων, allied to θύω, to rush along. —√DHIEU, to shake, blow, rush; see Dust.

TUP, a ram. (Scand.) ME. tuppe; Palladius on Husbandrie, viii. 71; 'Vervex, a tuppe'; Voc. 698. 29. Prob. a transferred name; cf. Swed. and Norw. tupp, a cock, allied to Dan. top, a cock's crest, Icel. toppr, a top, a crest. See Top.

TURBAN, a head-covering worn in the East. (F.—Ital.—

Turkish.—Pers.) Spelt turbant, Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xvii. st. 10; turribant, Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 28; turbant, Cymb. iii. 3. 6. 'Nash, in his Lenten Stuffe (1598) has turbanto'; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 112. (Todd remarks that it is spelt tulbant in Puteham, Art of Poësie (1589), and tulbant repeatedly in Sir T. Herbert's Travels. As a fact, Puteham has tulbant, Art of Poësie, b. iii. c. 24; ed. Arber, p. 201. These forms with l are really more correct, as will be seen, and answer to the occasional F. form tolapan, given in Cotgrave as equivalent to turbant.) —MF. turbant (given by Cotgrave, s.v. tolapan), but usually turban, 'a turbant, a Turkish hat'; Cot. —Ital. turbante, 'a turbant' &c.; Florio. —Turkish tubend, vulgar pronunciation of Turkish dulband, a turban; a word borrowed from Persian; Zenker's Dict., p. 433. col. 3. —Pers. dulband, a turban; Rich. Dict., p. 681. Vüllers, in his Etym. Pers. Dict. i. 893, col. 2, says that dulband seems to be of Hindustani origin; cf. Hind. dulband, a turban; Shakespeare, II. Ind. Dict. p. 1059. But this is doubtful. See Turban in Yule. See Tulip.

TURBARY, a right of digging turf, or a place for digging it. (F.—Teut.) 'Turbarie (turbaria) is a right or interest to dig turves on another man's ground'; Blount, Nomenclicon (1691). —OF. torberie, Low L. turbaria, the same. —OHG. turba*, older form of zurba, turf; see Turf. Cf. AF. turbarie, Year-books, 1304-5, p. 485.

TURBID, disordered, muddy. (L.) 'Lees do make the liquor turbide'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 306. —L. turbidus, disturbed. —L. turbare, to disturb. —L. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people; see Trouble. Der. turbid-ly, -ness.

TURBINE, a hydraulic wheel, wheel driven by water. (F.—L.) Used in various ways. —F. turbine, a hydraulic wheel; MF. turbine, a whirlwind (Cot.). —L. turbinem, acc. of turbo, a wheel, a top, a whirlwind; cf. turbare, to disturb.

TURBOT, a flat round fish. (F.—L.) MF. turbot, Prompt. Parv.; Havelok, 754; spelt turbote, Wright's Voc. i. 189. —F. turbot, 'the turbot-fish'; Cot. According to Diez, followed with suffix -ot from L. turbo, a whipping-top, a spindle, a reel; from its rhomboidal shape. This is verified by two facts: (1) the L. rhombus, a circle, a turbot, is merely borrowed from Gk. ῥόμβος, a top, wheel, spindle, having, in fact, just the same senses as L. turbo; and (2) the Late L. turbo was used to mean a turbot; thus we have: 'Turbot, turtr, turbo', Prompt. Parv. We also find Irish turbit, a turbot, a rhomboid, Gael. turbaid, W. turbait; but it is a borrowed word in Celtic. Cf. 'The Lozange . . . Ronibus . . . the Turbot'; Puteham, Arte of E. Poësie, bk. ii. c. 11 (12). Also AF. turbit, Liber Allius, p. 234.

TURBULENT, disorderly, restless as a crowd, producing commotion. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 4. —F. turbulent, 'turbulent, blustering'; Cot. —L. turbulentus, full of commotion or disturbance. —L. turbo-are, to disturb. —L. turba, a crowd of people; see Trouble. Der. turbulent-ly, turbulence. Troil. v. 3. 11, from F. turbulence (which Cotgrave omits, but see Littre), which from L. turbulentia; also turbulency, from L. turbulentia.

TUREEN, the same as Terreen, q. v.

TURF, the surface of land matted with roots of grass, &c., sward, sod, pent. (E.) ME. turf, sometimes torf; pl. turnes (= turnes), Havelok, 939; Chaucer, C. T. 10109 (E. MS. 2235). AS. turf (dat. torf), turf, A. S. Chrou. an. 189 (Laud MS.). So also: 'Gleba, turf', Voc. 146. 13; pl. torf, id. 236. 18. —Du. turf, pent; Icel. torf, a turf, sod, pent; Dan. tjør; Swed. torf; OHG. zurba, turf (the mod. G. torf being borrowed from Low German). β. All from Teut. base torb-*; and allied to Skt. darbha-, a kind of grass, Benfey, p. 388; so called from its being twined or matted together, from Skt. dṛbh, to string, to bind. —√DERBII, to wind, twine, knit together. Der. turf-y, Temp. iv. 62.

TURGID, swollen, pompous, bombastic. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —L. turgidus, swollen, extended. —L. turgere, to swell out. Der. turgid-ly, -ness, turgid-ly. Also turg-esc-ence, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors b. ii. c. 7, part 5, formed as if from L. turgescencia, swelling up, from turgescere, inceptive form of turgere.

TURKEY, the name of a bird. (F.—Tatar.) 'Turky-cocke, or cocke of India, ausis ita dicta, quod ex Africa, et, ut nonnulli volunt alii, ex India vel Arabia ad nos illata sit'; Belg. Indische haen, Teut. Indianisch hun, Calcuttisch hun, i. e. Gallina Indiae seu Calcuttensis, Ital. gallo, o gallina d'India, Hispan. pavon de la India, Gall. poulet d'Inde, &c.; Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'A turkie, or Ginnie henne, Belg. Indisch hinne, Teut. Indianisch henn, Ital. gallina d'India, Hispan. gallina Morisca, &c.; id. Turkey in Shak. means (1) the bird, i Hen. IV, ii. 1. 291 (2) adj. Turkish, Tam. Shrew, i. 355; hence he also says turkey-cock, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Meliagrides, birds that we call henes of Ginnie or turkey henues'; Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1562. Turkeys were 'unknown in Europe until introduced from the New World'; see Trench, Study of Words. The date of their introduction was about 1530 (Beckmann). As they were strange birds, they were hastily called Turkey-cocks and Turkey-hens, by which it was merely meant that they were foreign; it must be remembered that Turkey was at that time a vague term, and often meant Tartary. 'Turkie, Tartaria;' Levin. Similarly, the French called the bird poule d'Inde, whence Inde, F. dinde, a turkey; Cotgrave gives 'Dindar, Indar, a turkey-cock.' Minshew, in his Span. Dict., gives 'gallina Morisca, a hen of Guynie, gallina de India, a Turkie hen;' whilst in his Eng. Dict. (as quoted above) he calls gallina Morisca, the turkey-hen; showing that he was not particular. The German Calecutische hahn, a turkey-cock, means 'a cock of Calicut,' not 'Calcutta;' a name extremely wide of the mark. β. The E. Turkey, though here used as an adj. (since turkey is short for turkey-cock or turkey-hen) was also used as a sb., to denote the name of the country. — F. Turquie, 'Turkie,' Cot. — F. Turc, m., Turque, f., 'Turkish,' id. — Tatar turk, orig. meaning 'brave.' [The Turkish word for Turk is 'osmānli.' Cf. Pers. Turk, 'a Turk,' comprehending likewise those numerous nations of Tartars . . . who claim descent from Turk, the son of Japhet. . . . Also a Scythian, barbarian, robber, plunderer, villani, vagabond;' Richardson's Dict., p. 392. Hence Pers. Turki, 'Turkish, Turk-like;' id. p. 393. (See Turkey in Yule.) ¶ So also in Inde was called Turkey wheat, F. blé de Turquie; Wedgwood. Der. turq-u-aise, q.v.

TURMERIC, the root of an E. Indian plant, used as a yellow dye, and in curry-powder. (F. — L. — Arab.?) Spelt turmeric in Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Performer). A gross corruption of the F. name. — F. terre-mérite, turmeric; not given in Littré under terre, but under Curcuma he says that the root is called in commerce 'saffran des Indes, et curcuma, dite terre-mérite, quand elle est réduite en poudre.' — L. terra merita; turmeric 'is likewise called by the French terra merita; Carcama, hec Gallis terra merita male dicitur,' see Royle, Antiquity of Hindoo Medicine, p. 87; (Eng. Cyl. Division Arts and Sciences). I suppose it means 'excellent earth,' as if from L. terra, earth, and merita, fem. of meritus, pp. of mereri, to deserve. But terra merita is hardly Latin, and is doubtless a barbarous corruption; perhaps of Arab. kurkum, kurkum, saffron or eucema (whence Span. and Port. curcuma, turmeric); Rich. Dict., p. 1181.

TURMOIL, excessive labour, tumult, bustle; as a verb, to harass. (V. — L.?) 'The turmoil of his mind being refrained;' Udal, on St. John, c. 11 (R.). The pp. turmid occurs in Spenser, F. Q. iv. q. 39; and turmid-ail in Shak. 2 Hen. VI. iv. 10. 18. 'At such turmid the five days with raging winds;' Mirror for Mag. Brennus, st. 9. The origin is somewhat doubtful; the form is prob. corrupt, the latter part of the word being perhaps due to E. moul, q. v., and the former part assimilated to tur. β. It has been suggested that it may have something to do with Mk. tremul, tremouille, 'the hopper of a mill.' Cot. also called tremie, and prob. so called from being in continual movement, from L. tremere, to tremble, shake. But the old accent on the latter syllable suggests that tur is a mere prefix, and may represent the OF. intensive prefix tra- or tra- (both from L. trans); as in OF. tra-batre, tra-batre, to beat extremely (Godefroy). If so, the sense is 'to moul (or harass) greatly.' See Moul.

TURN, to cause to revolve, transfer, convert, whirl round, change. (L. — Gk.) Mk. tournen, turnen, turnen; Ormulum, 169; cf. F. tourner, OK. torner, turner, to turn. But it occurs in late AS. as turnian, turnan (Toller); so that it was taken directly from L. tournare, to turn in a lathe, to turn. — L. tornus, a lathe, turner's wheel. — Gk. trypnos, a carpenter's tool to draw circles with, compasses, whence trypnos, to turn, work with a lathe. Allied to Gk. tropos, adj. piercing, reipser, to pierce, L. terere, to rub. — √TER, to rub, hence to bore a hole; see Trite. Der. turn, sb., turn-er; turn-er-y, from F. tournerie, 'a turning, turner's work'; turn-ing, turn-ing-point; turn-coat, Much Ado, i. 1. 125; turn-key, one who turns a prison-key, a warder; turn-pike, q. v.; turn-sole, a heliotrope, or flower that turns with the sun, OF. tornasol (Supp. to Godefroy), from L. sol, the sun; turn-split, one who turns a spit; turn-stile, a stile that turns, Butler's Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. 1. 23; turn-stone, a small bird that turns over stones to find food; turn-table, a table that turns. Also (from tornare) tour, tour-na-meni, tour-ni-quet.

TURNIP, TURNER, a plant with a round root, used for food. (F. — L. and L.) The pl. turneps is in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 13; spelt turnepes in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. 1. The latter part of the word is nep or nep. We find 'uile nep, Cucurbita, brionia' in Prompt. Parv. p. 528. 'Hoc bacar, nepes:' Voc. 645. 17. 'As a nepes white' — as white as a turnip; Destruction of Troy, 3076. This is from AS. næp, a turnip, borrowed from L. nāpus, a kind of turnip. 'Napus, næp; Rape, næp;' Voc. 135. 30. 37. Hence the etymological spelling should rather be turnep than turnip, and we know that the latter part of the word is from Latin. Cf. Irish and Gael. nép, a turnip. 2. The former part of the word is less obvious; but it is most likely F. tour in the sense of 'wheel,' to signify its round shape, as if it had been 'turned.' Cotgrave gives, among the senses of tour, these: 'also a spinning-wheel, a turn, or turner's wheel.' Or it might be the E. turn, used in a like sense; Cotgrave also gives: 'Tournoir, a turn, turning-wheel, or turners wheel, called a lathe or lare.' It makes but little difference, since F. tour is the verbal sb. of tournier, to turn; see Tour, Turn. Cf. Ital. torno, 'a turne, a turners or spinners wheele'; Florio; W. turn, a turn, also round (from E.); Irish turnapa, a turnip, turnapa, a turner (from E.).

TURNPICK, a gate set across a road to stop those liable to toll. (F. — L.) The name was given to the toll-gate, because it took the place of the old-fashioned turn-pike, which had three (or more) horizontal bars or pikes (sharp at one end) revolving on a central post. For the difference between a turn-pike and a turn-stile, see figs. 266, 267, in Bottell's Heraldry. Jamieson cites turn-pyk from Wyntoun, viii. 38. 74. The word occurs in Cotgrave, who translates F. tour by 'a turn, . . . also, a turn-pike or turning-stile.' So also: 'I move upon my axle like a turnpike;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 1 (Pieclock); see Nares. The word turn-pike was also used in the sense of chevaux de Frise, as in Phillips, ed. 1706. From Turn and Pike. Der. turn-pike-gate, turn-pike-road.

TUREPENTINE, the resinous juice of the terebinth tree, &c. (F. — L. — Gk.) In Levin, ed. 1570. ME. turbenine, Mandeville's Trav. ch. v. p. 51. — MF. turbeninus, 'turpentine;' Cot. — L. terebinthus, a terebinth-tree; whence the adj. terebinthinus, made from the terebinth-tree. — Gk. terebinthos, made from the tree called terebinthos; see Terebinth. Cf. Norm. dial. turbentine (Moisy).

TUREPTUDE, baseness, depravity. (F. — L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 112. — F. turpitude, 'turpitude;' Cot. — L. turpitude, baseness.

— L. turpi, decl. stem of turpis, base; with suffix -ido, β. The L. turpis is 'shameful;' cf. Skt. trap, to be embarrassed, be ashamed; causal, trāpaya, to make ashamed trāpi, shame.

TURQUOISE, TURQUOIS, TURKIOISE, TURKISH, a precious stone. (F. — Low L. — Tatar.) In Cotgrave; also Palsgrave has: 'Tourques, a precious stone, fourquois.' Turcas, a turquoise, Bale's Works, p. 607 (Parker Soc.). — F. turquoise, 'a turquois, or Turkish stone;' Cot. Turquoise is the fem. of Turquois, 'Turkish,' id.; cf. Mtal. Turchesca, 'a blue precious stone called a Turkoise;' Florio. The sense is Turkish; the Late L. turchesius is found with the sense of turquoise in A.D. 1347 (Ducange). The F. Turquois is an adj. form, from Low L. Turcus, a Turk, which is from Tatar turk, a Turk; see Turkey.

TURRET, a small tower. (F. — L.) ME. touret, Chaucer, C. T. 1909 (A 1911); torret, Prompt. Parv. — F. tourette, 'a turret or small tower;' Cot. Dimin. of K. tour (OF. tor, tur), a tower. — L. turrem, acc. of turre, a tower; see Tower. Cf. AF. turette, French Chron. of London, p. 49. Der. turret, ed.

TURTLE (1), a turtle-dove, kind of pigeon. (L.) ME. turle, Chaucer, C. T. 10013 (E 2139). AS. turtla, 'Turtur, turtle;' Voc. 132. 1. — L. turtur, a turtle; with the common change from r to l. Hence also G. turid-laube, a turtle-dove; Ital. tortora, tortola, a turtle. β. The L. tur-tur is of imitative origin, due to a repetition of tur, imitative of the coo of a pigeon. Cf. Du. kirren, to coo.

TURTLE (2), the sea-tortoise. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. This word is absolutely the same as the word above. It occurs, according to Richardson, in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687; see ed. 1690, i. 395. The islands called Tortugas in Spanish were called Tortie in English, because turtles breed there; Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, v. 121; vii. 355, 357-8. The English sailors having a difficulty with the Portuguese tartaruga, a tortoise or turtle, and the Span. tortuga, tortoise, turtle, overcame that difficulty by substituting the E. turtle, with a grand disregard of the difference between the two creatures. The Span. and Port. names did not readily suggest the E. tortoise; whereas tartaruga could easily become 'tortoluga, and then 'tortol for short. See Tortoise.

TUSE, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Much Ado, iii. 3. 130; &c. Holinshed (or Stanhurst) gives the form tush. 'There is a . . . disdainful interjection used in Irish called tough, which is as much in English as tush;' Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. 8 (K.). Tush is expressive of disgust; cf. fish; also tui. Note also Low G. tuss, silence! Dan. tyss, to be silent; tyss, hush! NFries. tuss, hush! tüsse, tüsche, to command silence. See Tut.

TUSK, a long pointed tooth. (E.) Shak. uses the pl. form tuskes, Venus, 617, 624. ME. tusk, tusch, touch; spelt toische, Prompt. Parv.; we even find the pl. tuskes in K. Alisaunder, 6547. AS. tus, almost always spelt tus, esp. in the pl. tusas, just as AS. fise is often spelt fis; here tu = es, by metathesis of se. Spelt tus, translated 'grinder' by Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 95, § 49. 'Canin, vel colomelli, mannes tusas;' Voc. 157. 31. — OFries. tusk, toisch; EFries.

tusk; Icel. toskr. Perhaps the AS. form was orig. tusk (with long u). Hardly allied to Tooth; see Brugmann, i. § 795. Der. tusk-ed, tusk-y.

TUSSE, to scuffle. (E.) Allied to tousle, to disorder, frequent. of Touse, q.v. Cf. Westphal. tusseln, to pull about; Dan. dial. tuse, to move about, to confuse. And cf. Toss.

TUSOCK, a clump or tuft of growing grass. (Scand.?) Latimer has: 'tusocks nor tufts'; see Todd's Johnson. The suffix -ock is a diminutive, as in hill-ock. Cf. Swed. dial. tuss, a wisp of hay (Kietz); and cf. E. touse. Dryden has tuzzes, i.e. tufts or knots of hair; tr. of Persius, iv. 90.

TUT, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 117; &c. 'And that he said.' Tut, tut, tut; State Trials, Hen. VIII, an. 1536; Q. Anne Boleyn (K.). Cf. F. trut, 'an interjection importing indignation, tush, tut, fy man'; Cot. 'Trot, skomefull word, or trut'; Prompt. Parv., p. 415. And cf. Tush.

TUTELAGE, guardianship. (L.; with F. suffix.) 'The tutelage whereof' &c.; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 3; l. 218. Coined with F. suffix -age (< L. -aticum) from L. tutela, protection; see Tutelar.

TUTELAR, protecting, having in charge. (L.) 'Tutelar god of the place'; Ben Jonson, Love's Triumph through Callipolis, introduction. = L. tutellāris, tutelar. = L. tutela, protection; allied to tutor, a protector; see Tutor. Der. tutelar-y, from F. tutelaire, 'tutulary, guarding'; Cot.

TUTOR, an instructor, teacher, guardian. (F. -L.) For tutor, the older form. ME. tutor, F. tuteur, B. l. 56. = F. tuteur, 'a tutor'; Cot. = L. tutor, acc. of tutor, a guardian; allied to L. tut-us (short for tutulus), pp. of tutari, to look after, guard; see Tuition. Der. tutor, verb, L. l. iv. 2. 77; tutor-ships, tutor-age, tutor-in-l.

TUTTY, a collyrium. (F. -Pers.) 'Tutie, a medicinale stone or dust'; Blount (1681). ME. tutie, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 95. = MF. tutkie, 'a medicinale stone or dust, said to be the heavier foile of brasse, cleaving to the upper sides and tops of brasse-melting houses'; Cot. F. tutie, = Pers. tūtīyā, tutty; Rich. Diet. p. 461. Cf. Skt. tuttha-m, blue vitriol (Bkany).

TWADDLE, to tattle, talk unmeaningly. (E.) Formerly twattle. 'No glossing falsh I twattle'; Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 2; ed. Arber, p. 46. 'Vayneley toe twattle'; id. Æn. iv. p. 101. A collateral form of Tattle, q.v. So also twittle-twattle, sb., used by L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson) as equivalent to littile-tattle. Cf. 'such fables twitted, such untrue reports twatted'; Stanihurst, Desc. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 48. Cf. AS. twædding, adulation (Napier). Der. twaddle, sb., twaddler.

TWAIN, two; see under Two.

TWANG, to sound with a sharp noise. (E.) 'Sharply twanged off'; Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 198. 'To Twangue, resonaire'; Levins. 'To twang, as the string of an instrument'; Minshew. A collateral form of twang, used with the same sense; see Tang (2), Tingle. It represents the ringing sound of a tense string. Der. twang, sb.

TWEAK, to twitch, pull sharply, pinch. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 601. A better form is twick; cf. prov. E. twick, a sudden jerk (Halliwell). ME. twicken, Prompt. Parv. p. 505. AS. twiccan (pt. t. twice-ode). The Shrine, ed. Cockayne, p. 41. Besides which, we find AS. angel-twecca = a hook-twitcher, the name of a worm used as bait for fishing; Voc. 320. 32. Twick is a palatalised form of it; see Twitth. 4-Low G. twicken, to tweak, nip; G. zuicken, to pinch, nip; whence twick, a pinch, twick bei der Nase, tweak by the nose; also G. zuacken, to pinch, to twitch. Cf. Twinge. Der. twink, sb.

TWEEZERS, nippers, small pincers for pulling out hairs. (F. -Teut.; with F. suffix.) 'Handkerchers, rosaries, tweezers'; Middleton, Span. Gipsy, ii. 1. The history of this word is remarkable; it exhibits an unusual development. A tweezer-er or tweezer-er is, properly, an instrument contained in a tweezer, or small case for instruments. And as the tweezer contained tweezers, it was also called a tweezer-case; hence it is that we find tweezer and tweezer-case used as synonymous terms. 'Tweezers, nippers or pincers, to pull hair by the roots'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Then his tweezers-cases are incomparable; you shall have one not much bigger than your finger, with seventeen several instruments in it, all necessary every hour of the day'; Tatler, no. 142; March 7, 1709-10. This shows that a tweezer-case was a case containing a great number of small instruments, of which what are now specifically called tweezers was but one. See another quotation under Trinket (1). B. Next, we observe that the proper name for such a case was a tweezer, or a pair of tweezers; probably a pair of tweezers means that the case was made double, folding up like a book, as some instrument cases are made still. 'Drawing a little penknife out of a pair of tweezers I then chanced to have about me'; Boyle, Works, ii. 419 (R.). 'I have sent you by Vacandary the post, the French bever [hat] and tweezers you writ for'; Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. let. 17; May 1, 1620. 'A Surgeon's tweezer, or box of instruments, paranard de chirurgien'; Sherwood, Index to Cotgrave. C. Lastly, the word tweezer is a new pl. formed from twee, short for etwee, from MF. etwey (mod. F. etui). 'Etwey, a sheath, case, or box to put things in, and more particularly, a case of little instruments, or sizzers, bodkin, penknife, &c., now commonly termed an etwee'; Cot. And again: 'Paranard de Chirurgien, a chirurgian's case or etwey; the box wherein he carries his instruments'; id. Hence twee was 'sure I have not dropt my twee'; Halliwell, The Suspicious Husband, A. ii. sc. 2 (1747). Here we see that the F. etwey was pronounced et-wee; then the initial e (for es) was dropped, just as in the case of Ticket and Tuok (2); then twee became tweez or tweezee, probably because the case was double; then it was called a pair of tweezers, and a particular implement in it was called a tweezer or tweezers, prob. from some confusion with the obsolete twick, tweezers; see additions to Nares, by Halliwell and Wright. The most remarkable point is the double addition of the pl. form, so that twee-zes is from twee; this can be explained by the common use of the plural for certain implements, such as shears, scissors, pliers, snuffers, tongs, scales, nippers, pincers, &c. So far, the history of the word is quite clear, and fully known. D. The etymology of OF. etwey or etui is difficult; it is the same as Span. etucha, a scissors-case, also scissors (note this change of scus); Port. estuche, a case, a tweezer-case, Low Lat. estugium, a case, box, occurring A.D. 1231 (Ducange). We also find Ital. stuccio, stuckio, 'a little pocket-case with scissors, pen-knives, and such trifles in them,' (sic) Florio; whence (with prefix a- < L. ad) Ital. astuccio, a small box, case, sheath. The form stuccio does not seem to have been observed before; perhaps it helps the etymology, proposed by Diez, from MIIG. stūca, OIIG. stūcka, a cuff, a muff (prov. G. stauche, a short and narrow muff) + Icel. stikka, a sleeve. If so, the orig. case for small instruments was a muff, or a cuff, or a part of the sleeve. Kärting, § 9128.

TWELVE, two and ten. (E.) ME. twelf; whence also twelf-e, twel-ue (< twel-ue), a pl. form and dissyllable. It was not uncommon to use numerals in the pl. form of adjectives; cf. E. five (= fif-v), from AS. fif. 'Twelue winter' = twelve years, P. Plowman, B. v. 196, where two MSS. have twelf. We have, in the Ormulum, the form twelf, 11069; but also twelf-e (dissyllable), 537. AS. twelf, also twelfe, Grein, ii. 556. 4. OFris. twelf, twelf, twelf, twelf; Du. twelf; Icel. tölf; Dan. tolv; Swed. tolf; G. zwölf; OIIG. zwelf; Goth. twelf. B. All from the Teut. type twelf, as in Gothic. Here two is two; see Two. The suffix -if is the Teut. equivalent (but from another root leip, to stick, remain, leave) to the Lithuan. jika occurring in duj-ika, twelve. The Lithuan. -ika is due to the adj. likas, signifying 'what is over, or remaining over'; see Nesselmann, p. 365. In fact, the phr. antras likas, lit. 'second one over,' is used as an ordinal, meaning 'twelfth'. Lika is from Lith. li-ki, to leave, allied to L. linquere. See Eleven. Brugmann, ii. § 175. Der. twelf-th, used instead of twelfth (ME. twelfthe, AS. twelfsa, Grein, ii. 556) by analogy with seven-th, eight-th, nine-th, &c.; hence twelf-th-day, twelf-th-night (often called twelfth-day, twelfth-night, as in Shakespeare's play of 'Twelfth Night'); twelve-month, ME. twelf-monthe, P. Plowman, C. vii. 80.

TWENTY, twice ten. (E.) ME. twenty, Chaucer, C. T. 17118 (H 169). AS. twentig, Grein, ii. 557. Prob. for twen-tig = twegen-tig; from AS. twegen, twain, and the suffix -ig, cognate with Goth. tigjus, Gk. deka, a decade, a collection of ten things; allied to E. ten, Goth. taihun, Gk. deka. See Two and Ten. 4-Du. twintig; Icel. uttugun; Goth. twintigun, Luke, xiv. 31; G. zwanzig, MHG. zwanzeiz, OIIG. zwanzeiz. All similarly formed. B. So also L. ui-ginti, twenty; from ui- (for dui*, twice, related to duo, two), and -ginti (for -centi, short for decanti, tenth, from decem, ten); whence F. vingt, twenty, &c. Der. twenti-eth, AS. twentigoba, Exod. xii. 18.

TWIBILL, TWYBILL, a two-edged bill or mattock. (E.) Still in use provincially; see Halliwell. In Becon's Works, ii. 449; Parker Society. ME. twibill; spelt twybill, Prompt. Parv. AS. twibille or twibill. 'Bipennis, twibille, vel stin-axe [stone-axe]; Falcastrum, bill'; Voc. 141. 27. 28. Also: 'Bipennis, twibill'; id. 361. 6. = AS. twi-, double, and bill, a bill. See Twice and Bill.

TWICE, two times. (E.) For ME. twi or twy, formerly dissyllable; the word has been reduced to a single syllable, and the final -e is a mere orthographical device for representing the fact that the final s was voiceless, and not sounded as z. 'He twy was Jerusalem the citee'; Chaucer, C. T. 14153 (H 3337). AS. twiges; A.S. Chron. an. 1120 (Laud MS.). This is a genitive form, genitives being often used adverbially; the more common AS. word is twā, Luke, xviii. 12, older form twina, twice, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 2. § 7. Both *twi-ge*s and twi-wa are from the base twi-, double, only used as a prefix, answering to Icel. tví-, li- bi- (for duis), Gk. bi-, Skt. dui-, and allied to twi, two; see Two. Cf. prov. E. twi-bill, a mattock (above), twi-fallow, to till ground a second time; and see Twilight.

TWIDDLE (twi idly. (Scand.)) As in the phr. 'to twiddle one's thumbs.' From Norw. tvíðla, variant of tvílla, to mix up by stirring round; and tvílla is a mere variant of tvírla, with the same sense; see Aasen and Ross. See Twirl. (Prob. tvírla > tvíll-la > tvíl-la* or tvíd-la.) Cf. mod. Icel. kalla, to call; pronounced (knd-la).

TWIG (twi), a thin branch, small shoot of a tree. (E.) ME. twig, spelt twyg in Aeneas of Inwyt, p. 22, l. 5; pl. twiggis, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Superbia (l. 390). AS. twig, pl. twigu, a twig; Northumb. twigge, pl. twiggo, John, xv. 5. Westphalian twich, twick; Du. twijg; G. zweig. β. From the AS. base twi-, double, because orig. applied to the fork of a branch, or the place where a small shoot branches off from a larger one. In fact twi- is cognate with Skt. dui-ka, 'consisting of two', Gk. duois, double, twofold. Brugmann, ii. § 166. A similar explanation applies to ME. twist, often used in the sense of twig or spray, as in Chaucer, C. T. 10223 (E 2349). Cf. G. zweisel, a forked branch; and see Twilight, Twice, Twist, Two.

TWIG (twi), to comprehend. (E.) Orig. to observe, mark, take note of; as in 'Now twig him; now mind him;' Foote, Mayor of Garratt (1763), ii. 2. Cf. prov. E. twig, a glance; twig to pull quickly; twick, to snatch, pluck, also to hold tight, to nip. See E. D. D. β. Otherwise, twig may be from the Irish twi-im, I understand, discern; Stokes-Fick, p. 80.

TWILIGHT, the faint light after sunset or before sunrise. (F.) ME. twilight, spelt twylyghte in Prompt. Parv. The AS. twi-, prefix, means 'double,' like Icel. tví-, Du. twæ-, G. zwei-, but it is here used rather in the sense of 'doubtful' or 'half.' The ideas of double and half are liable to confusion; cf. AS. twæ, doubt, from the hovering between two opinions; see Doubt and Between. β. Precisely the same confusion appears in German; we there find zweifach, double, zweifach, twilight, zweisel, a branch dividing into two ends, zweitracht, discord, all with the prefix zwei- = AS. twi-. The prefix is further to Two; cf. Twice, Two. And see Light. By way of related illustration, I find M.D. twellich, twilich, 'twilight.' Hezham; cf. Du. twæ, two, twæelbhel, twice/double, &c. Also Low G. twæ-lucht; AS. twæne-lucht, twilight, Voc. 175, 34. But this last would only give a mod. E. form twenlight, and does not account for the form twilight.

TWILL, an appearance of diagonal lines in textile fabrics produced by causing the weft-threads to pass over one and under two warp-threads, instead of over one and under one. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson; Lowland Sc. twæl, twiel, twael (Jamieson). 'De i. nappa mensali de twill,' York Wills, iii. 14 (1400); 'panno vocato twilled,' id. iii. 71 (1423). The form is very old, and has reference to a peculiar method of doubling the warp-threads, or taking two of them together. From AS. twíllie (Toller), OlowG. twíll, adj., woven with double thread, twill (Gallé). Cognate with G. zwillich, 'ticking,' MHG. zwillich, zwilch, OllG. zui-lit, 'two-threaded'; a word suggested by L. bilis, two-threaded, from bi-, double, and litium, a thread. See EFries. twíllien, to double, in Koolman. Formed, like twig, twine, twist, from the Teut. base twi-, double, appearing in AS. twi-, Du. twæ-, G. zwei-, all allied to Two, q.v. We also find: 'Trilicis, bylen hrægel,' i.e. a garment woven with three threads, corresponding to an E. form thril*; Voc. 161, 34. And see Twilight, Twice. Der. twill, verb. β. Twilled in Temp. iv. 64, is yet unexplained. Ray tells us that North E. twill means a spool, and is a corruption of quill (see E. D. D.). I doubt it as regards this passage; the Swed. dial. twill is to turn round like a spindle, to become entangled, as thread (Rietz); Norweg. tvílla is to stir milk round and round, also to twist into knots, as a thread; tvílla, sb., is a twist or knot in a thread. And the Norw. verb tvílla is merely an assimilated form of Norw. tvírla, to twirl, to turn round; like prov. E. twell, to turn a spindle over (E. D. D.). I explain pioned as 'dug out,' and twilled as 'turned over,' said of excavated trenches with sloping sides, on which the mud is laid. See the context. Halliwell gives twilly, to turn reversely.

TWIN, one of two born at a birth. (E.) ME. twinn, adj., double. 'Iosep gaf ile here twinne scrid' = Joseph gave each of them double raiment, 'changes of raiment,' cf. Gen. xiv. 22. 'Piss twinne seolpe' = this double blessing, Ormulum, 856. AS. ge-twinne-as, pl. twins (Bosworth); 'biui, getwinne-u, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 13, l. 14; 'gemellus, getwin-u, Corpus Gloss., 22. β. Icel. tvinnar, tvunnar, two and two, twin, in pairs; cf. tvinnar, to twine, tvinnar two together. We also find Dan. tvilling, Swed. tvilling, a twiu, perhaps for twinding*, by assimilation; cf. ME. twinking, Bav. zwin-ling, G. zwil-ling, a twin. Due to AS. twi-, double; see Twibill, + Lithuan. duyni, twins, sing. duynys; from dui, two. The n seems to give a collective force, as in Goth. twiweht, two apiece, Luke, ix. 3; 1. biui, two at a time. Hence twinn, by two at a time, orig. adj., as above. Der. twinn, verb, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 67.

TWINE, to double or twist together; as sb., a twisted thread. (E.) ME. twinen, to twine; pp. twyned, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 204. In Layamon, 14220, the later text has 'a twined þred,' where the earlier text has 'a twines þred' = a thread of twine. The supposed AS. twinan is unauthorised, but the verb was early coined from the sb. twinn, a twisted thread, curiously used to translate L. byssus in Luke, xvi. 19 (as if from 1. bi, twice). β. Du. twijn, twine, twist, whence twijnen, to twine; Icel. tvinni, twine, whence tvinna, to twine; Dan. tvinde (for tvinned*), to twine; Swed. tvinnad, twine-thread, tvanna, to twine; also Du. twæren, twine, G. zwirn. β. All from Teut. type twi-no-* > twiz-no-*, double; the iz becomes i in AS. twi, Du. twijn; the zn becomes nn in Icel. and Swed., and the z becomes v in Du. and G. The base twi-* occurs in Goth. twis, prefix, and in E. twi-; cf. L. bi (for dui*), Gk. bi, Skt. dui, twice. Brugmann, i. § 203, c. note 2.

TWINGE, to affect with a sudden, sharp pain, to nip. (E.) ME. tuengen, weak vb. (ng = n), to twinge, twink; Owl and Night, 156. Cf. 'Whil þat twinge me the foe' = while the foe afflicts me; E. Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, p. xli. 10. Causal of ME. tuengen, str. vb.; 'I am meked and tuungen smert,' id. Ps. xxxvii. 9. AS. tuengen, weak vb. (Toller); for earlier tuengan*, causal of tuengen*, whence the derived word Thong. For change of thu- to tu-, cf. twirl below, q.v. It is preserved in OFries. tuenga, also tuinga, duinga, to constrain, pt. t. tuang, tuong, pp. tuungen, + OSax. thuenga, in the pp. bithungun, oppressed; Dan. twinge, to force, compel, constrain; Swed. tuinga, to force, bridle, restrain, compel; Icel. þunga, to oppress; Du. duingen, to constrain, pt. t. duong, pp. geduungen; G. zuingen, pt. t. zuang, pp. gezungen. β. All from the Teut. type tuengan-* (pt. t. tuenge*), to constrain, compel; whence also the secondary verbs appearing in G. zuingen, to press tightly, constrain, and ME. tuengen, to press tightly, twerk, or twinge (as above), and in the Life of St. Dunstan, l. 81: 'he tuengde and schok hir bi þe nose' = he twinged and shook her by the nose, Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. The mod. E. twinge answers rather to this secondary or causal form than to the strong verb twing; just as in the case of swing, due to the strong verb swing. γ. Cf. Lithuan. tuenkii, to beat, to smart; tuankas, sultry. (✓TWENK). Der. twinge, sb. Also thong, q.v.

TWINKLE, to shine with a quivering light. ME. twinklen, Chaucer, C. T. 269 (A 267). AS. twincian, to twinkle, shine faintly, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 3; b. iii. pr. 12. Twinkle is a frequentative from a form twink, appearing in ME. twinken, to blink, wink; Prompt. Parv., p. 505. And again, twink is a nasalised form of AS. twicean, to twitch; see Twack, Twitth. The sense is to keep on twitching or quivering, hence to twinkle. β. Bav. zwinckern, frequentative of zwincken, to blink. Der. twinkle, sb.; twinkler. Also twinkl-ing, sb., a twitch or wink with the eye, ME. twinkeling; 'And in the twinkling of a luke' [look, glance], Gower, C. A. i. 144, bk. i. 3033; this is from ME. twinkelen in the sense to wink, as: 'he twincelp with the eyen' = he winks with the eyes, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13 (earlier version); see twink, sb., a twinkling, in Shak. Temp. iv. 43.

TWINTER, a beast two winters old. (E.) 'Five twinters britnit he'; G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. v. ch. ii. 105, AS. twintre, adj., of two years. = AS. twi-, double (see Twibill); and winter, a winter, a year.

TWIRE, to peep at. (E.) In Shak. Son. 28. Recorded in the cognate Bavarian zwiren, zwieren, to peep out (Schmeller); MHG. zwieren, to peep out (Schade). Not in Chaucer, as Nares asserts; but known in prov. E. (L. D. D.).

TWIRL, to whirl, turn round rapidly. (Scand.) Twirl stands for thwirl, as twinge for thwinge. 'Leave twirling of your hat'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, Act ii. sc. 3 (Alten); twyrie, Fitzherbert, Husb., § 55, l. 1. = Norw. tvírla, to twirl (Ross). Twirl is a frequentative form, from Teut. puer-an*, AS. puer-an, to agitate, turn; it means 'to keep on turning,' and is used of rather violent motion. The AS. puer-an only occurs in the pueruan, to stir round, to churn, and ge-pueran, to churn (Toller). We have also the derived sb. puiril, supposed to mean the handle of a churn, which was steadily turned round. We find: 'Lac, mele [milk]; Lac congolatum, molcem [curdled milk]; Verberaturum, puiril; Cascum, eye [cheese], &c.; Voc. 280, 27-33. Slight as these traces are, they are made quite certain by the cognate words; it may be necessary to observe that, in AS. puir-il, the final -il denotes the implement, and is an agential suffix, distinct from the frequentative -i in twirl. Cf. Du. dwarten, to whirl; whence dwartwind, a whirlwind (the Du. dw = AS. y). That the i is frequentative, appears at once from the Low G.

duerwind, a whirlwind, as well as from MHG. duer(c)u, OHG. dueran, tuoran, strong verb, to turn round swiftly, to whirl, to mix up. From the Teut. type dueran-* to stir round (pt. t. thuar*); whence also Icel. þværa, Norw. tværa, AS. þwæra, OHG. thwirl, MlG. twirl, G. twirl, a stirring-stick. Note also EFries. dwirlede, dwirten, to twirl, duerwel, a whirl, from dueren, to turn. From Ildg. TWEL*, whence also Gk. top-ōn, L. trun, a stirrer. See Trowel.

TWIST, to twine together, wreath, turn forcibly. (E.) ME. twisten, Chaucer, C. T. 10880 (F 566); O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, II. 213. Not found in AS., but regularly formed from a sb. twist, a rope, occurring in the comp. maest-twist, a stay, a rope used to stay a mast. Parastates, maest-twist*; Voc. 182. 8; one sense of Gk. παραστατης is a stay. Again, twist is formed, with suffix -t, from AS. twis*, double, explained under Twine. The suffix -t is the very common Ildg. suffix -to-. We should also notice ME. twist, a twig, i. e. forked branch, branch dividing into two; see under Twig, -t-Du. twisten, to quarrel; from twist, a quarrel. This is the same form, but used in quite a different sense from the notion of two persons contending; cf. Du. twisten, discord, twesdrif, discord, twesdrif, a duel; Dan. twiste, to strive, from twist, strike; the Dan. twist also means a twist; Swed. twista, to strive, from twist, strike; G. zwist, a twist, also discord, whence zwistig, discordant. And cf. Icel. twist, the two or 'deuce' in card-playing. Der. twist, sb. (really an older word, as appears above); twist-er. Cf. obsol. twissel, a double fruit (Nares), from AS. twisel, double.

TWIT, to remind of a fault, reproach. (E.) For twite, the i was certainly once long, which accounts for the extraordinary form twight (miswritten for twite, like delight for delite) in Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 12, where it rhymes with light and flight. Palgrave has the queer spelling tuikyte, prob. a misprint for twite, as it occurs immediately before twyne and under the heading 'T before W: I tuikyte one, I caste hym in the tethe or in the nose, Je luy reproche; this term is also northern.' The orig. length of the vowel leaves no doubt that twite is due to ME. atwiten, to twit, reproach, by loss of initial a; this verb is used in much the same way as the mod. E. word, and was once common; Stratmann gives more than 12 examples. 'Imputo, to a-twite;' Voc. 589. 17. Spelt atwytte, Aenb. of Inwyrt, p. 198, l. 16; whence atwyttings, twittings, reproaches, ed. p. 194, l. 6. 'Pat atwytte hym'—that twitted him, Rob. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 782. AS. atwitan, to twit, reproach; see Sweet, AS. Reader, and Grein. [We also find AS. ad-witan with the same sense, but the prefix differs.]—AS. at, at, prep. often used as a prefix; and witan, to blame, the more orig. sense being to behold, observe, hence to observe what is wrong, take notice of what is amiss; Grein, II. 734. For the prefix, see At. The AS. witan is cognate with Goth. weitan, occurring in idewitan, to reproach (= AS. ad-witan), and in fuirweitan, to observe intently. AS. witan, Goth. weitan, are allied to AS. and Goth. witan, to know, and to L. uidere, to see. WEID*, to see; see Wit and Vision. Cf. Du. wijten, to reproach, ver-wijzen.

TWITCH, to pluck, snatch, move suddenly. (E.) ME. twicken, a palatalised form of twicken, to twenk. 'Twicken, twychyn, or sumwhat drawyn, Tractulo;' Prompt. Parv. We find also the comp. verb to-twicken, to pull to pieces, O. Eng. Homilies, I. 53, l. 4; with the pt. t. to-twichte, spelt to-twigt, Will. of Palerne, 2097. Similarly the simple verb twicken makes the pt. t. twigte, and pp. twigte. This explains twight—twitched, pulled, Chaucer, C. T. 7145 (D 1563). For the form, cf. AS. angel-twice, prov. E. angel-twice, an earth-worm (for fishing). See Twpeak. Der. twich, sb.; twich-er.

TWITTER, to chirp as a bird, to feel a slight trembling of the nerves. (E.) ME. twiteren; whence 'Hille brid.' twitereth*—that bird twitters, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iiii. met. 2, l. 21. Twitter is a frequentative from a base twit, and means to keep on saying twit; and twit is a lighter or weakened form of twat, appearing in the old word twatt-le, now twaddle; see Twaddle. Again, twaddle is related to tattle; and as twitter: twattle :: titter: tattle. All these words are of imitative origin. G. zwitschern*, to twitter; Bavar. zwitern. And cf. Du. kwetteren, to twitter, warble, chatter; Dau. kwidre, Swed. kwittra, to chirp, twitter. Der. twitter, sb. TWIT* The sense of trembling may follow from that of tremulous sound; but a twitter of the nerves may be due to the influence of ME. twicken, to twerk or twitch.

TWO, TWAIN, one and one. (E.) The difference between two and twain is one of gender only, as appears from the AS. forms. Twain is masc., whilst two is fcm. and neuter; but this distinction was early disregarded. ME. twien, twieze, twain, twie, twi, twy, &c.; also two, tuw, in which the u was pronounced; the pronunciation of two as too being of rather late date. 'Us tweyne'—us twain, two, Chaucer, C. T. 1136 (A 1134). 'Sustren two'—sisters two, id. 1021 (A 1019). Our poets seem to use twain and two indifferently. AS. twegen, masc. nom. and acc.; twā, fcm. nom. and acc.; twā, tu, neut. nom. and acc.; twæga, gen. (all genders); twām, dat. (all genders). The neut. tu already shows an occasional loss of w; and even in AS. twā was used instead of twegen when nouns of different genders were conjoined; see Grein, II. 556. Du. twee*; Icel. tvær, acc. tvā, tvö; Dan. to; Norw. tu; Swed. två, tu; Goth. twai, masc., twiwa, fcm., twā, neut.; twai gen. twandja, dat. twaim; acc. twan, twā, twā; G. zwei; also zween, only in the masc. gender; also zwo, fcm. (rare); OHG. zwinā, zwin, zwo, zwei; Irish da; Gael. da, do; W. dau, du; Russ. duo; Lithuan. du, dui, fu; L. duo (whence F. deux, Ital. due, Span. dos, Port. duos, E. deuce); Gk. duo; Skt. dvā, dvā.

β*. All from the Ildg. type duo-, duwo-; Brugmann, II. § 166. v*. In composition, we find, as a prefix, AS. twi- (E. twi- in twi-er, twi-light), Icel. tvir, Du. twee, Dan. and Swed. tvē, G. zwei, L. bi- (for dui-*), Gk. du- (for dui-*), Skt. dvi-, dvā-; also E. twi- (L. bi-), as in twi-er; see Twine. Der. two-edged; two-fold, a modern substitution for ME. twifold, Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Pa. cviii. 20. AS. twifald, spelt twifald in Gen. xliii. 15, so that two-fold should rather be twy-fold. Also a-two, ME. a two, Chaucer, C. T. 3569, AS. on tu, Grein, II. 556, so that the prefix a- is on; see A- (2). Also twain (as above), two-ten, twen-ty, two-bill, twi-er, twi-light, twi-ty, twi-tyne, twi-ty, twi-ty; bi- prefix; twi- prefix, in bi-sexile; di- prefix, di- prefix, di- prefix. Also deuce (1).

TYBALT, the 'prince of cats.' (AF.—Low G.) See Shak. Romeo, iii. 1.80.—AF. Tebalt, Tebaud.—OSax. Thiod-bald, Theobald.—OSax. thiod, people, bald, bold. See Tibert.

TYMPANUM, the hollow part of the ear, &c. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [He also gives: 'Tympa, the drum of the ear, a frame belonging to a printing-press covered with parchment. . . pannel of a door, &c.; this is from F. tympa, 'a tympan, or timbrel, also a taber'; also, a printer's tympane, &c.; Cot.]—L. tympa, a drum; also of a pediment (in architecture); panel of a door.—Gk. τύμπανον, a drum, roller, area of a pediment, panel of a door. Formed with inserted u from the rarer τύμπανον, a drum.—Gk. τύμπανον, base of τύμπανον, to strike, beat, beat a drum; see Type. And see Timbrel. Der. tympa, a flatulent distension of the belly, Dryden, Mac-Flecknoe, 194, from Gk. τύμπανος, a kind of dropsy in which the belly is stretched tight like a drum; the F. form tympanie is given in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave; Palgrave has E. tympa.

TYPE, a mark or figure, emblem, model, a raised letter in printing. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Rich. III. iv. 4. 244; and in Spenser, F. Q. Intro. to b. i. st. 4.—F. type, a type; in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave.—L. typus, acc. of typus, a figure, image, type.—Gk. τύπος, a blow, the mark of a blow, stamp, impress, mark, mould, outline, sketch, figure, type, character of a disease.—Gk. τύπος, base of τύπος, to strike, beat. Allied to Skt. tip, tump, to hurt; and to Gk. τύπος, to strike. (STEU*). β*. We also find Skt. tud, L. indulere (pt. t. tu-tud), to strike. These are from a base steud-*, to strike; whence Goth. stulan, to strike. Cf. Brugmann, I. § 818 (2). Der. typic, from Gk. τύπος, typical, figurative; typical, typical-ly; typify, a coined word, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, § 1; type-founder, type-metal; also typography, orig. in the sense of 'figurative description,' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 8, § 15, where the suffix is from Gk. τύπος, to write; typography, typo-graphic, typo-graphic-ly; typo-graph-er. And see typanum, thump.

TYPHOON, a violent whirlwind or hurricane. (Arab.—Gk.) [The word has been claimed as Chinese, from the Chinese ta, 'great,' and feng (Cantonese fung), 'wind'; as if 'great wind.' But this seems to be a late mystification, and unhistorical.] In old authors, the forms are tyffon, tyffon, typhon, &c. Spelt tyffon, and explained as 'an extraordinary storme at sea'; Hakluyt, Voy. ii. 1. 239; tyffoons, pl., W. Dampier, New Voyage (1699), ii. 1. 35.—Typhoon in Yule.—Arab. ṭūfān, a hurricane, storm; Rich. Diet., p. 466.—Gk. τύφος, better τύφος, a whirlwind. Allied to τύπος, smoke, cloud; see Typhus.

TYPHUS, a kind of continued fever. (L.—Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Todd says it is 'one of the modern names given to low fever.'—L. typhus; a Latinised form from the Gk.—Gk. τύφος, smoke, cloud, mist, stupor, esp. stupor arising from fever; so that 'typhus fever'—stupor-fever.—Gk. τύφος, to raise a smoke, to smoke. Allied to θύμω, vigour, courage, θύμω, to rush along; from DIEU*, to blow, fan a flame, shake; see Fume. Der. typhous, adj.; typhoid, resembling typhus, from Gk. τύφος, for τύπος, and ειδός, resemblance, from εἶδος, I seem; see Idol.

TYRANT, a despotic ruler, oppressive master. (F.—L.—Gk.) The word was not originally used in a bad sense; see Trench, Study of Words. The spelling with y is modern, and due to our knowledge of Gk.; the word was really derived from French, and might as well have i. ME. tyrant, but spelt tyrant in Rob. of Glouc. p. 374, l. 7689; tyrant in Chaucer, prol. to Legend of Good Women,

1. 374.—OF. tyran, also tyranz, whence an oblique case tyrant; also spelt tyran, tyrant; see Littre. Cotgrave gives: 'Tyran, a tyrant.' = L. tyrannus, acc. of tyrannus.—Gk. tyrannos, a lord, master, an absolute sovereign; later, a tyrant, usurper. Prob. orig. an adj. signifying kingly, lordly, in a good sense; as in the tragedians. Der. tyrann-y, ME. tyrannie or tyranny, Chaucer, C. T. 943 (A 941), from F. tyrannie, 'tyranny', Cot., L. tyrannia, Gk. tyrannia, sovereign sway; also tyrann-ic, F. tyrannique, L. tyrannicus, Gk. tyrannikos; tyrann-ic-al, Cor. iii. 2; tyrann-ic-al-ly, tyrann-ic, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 87, a coined word; tyrann-ous-ly, tyrann-ic, K. John, v. 7. 47; from F. tyrannizere, 'to tyrannize, to play the tyrant', Cot., as if from L. tyrannizare* = Gk. tyrannizein, to take the part of a tyrant (hence to act as one).

TYRO, a gross misspelling of Tiro, q. v.

U

UBIQUITY, omnipresence. (F.—L.) In Becon's Works, iii. 450, 524 (Parker Soc.); and in Cotgrave.—F. ubiquité, 'an ubiquity'; Cot. It answers to L. ubiquitatem*, acc. of ubiquitas*, a coined word, coined to signify 'a being everywhere', i.e. omnipresence.—L. ubique, wherever, also, everywhere.—L. ubi, where; with suffix -que, answering to Gk. re, and allied to L. quis, Gk. tis, and E. who. β. Ubi is short for cubi, appearing in ai-cubi, anywhere, ai-cubi, nowhere; and cubi* stands for cuius-bi*, where -bi is a suffix as in i-bi, there. Cf. Skt. ku-, as in ku-ha, where; also Ocean pu-f, Umbrian pu-f, where. Brugmann, i. § 667. Der. ubiqui-ous, -ous-ly.

UDDER, the breast of a female mammal. (E.) ME. uðdr (= uðdr); Udder, or uðdr of a beeste; Prompt. Parv. AS. uðdr, in a Gloss. to Prov. vii. (Bosworth); cf. L. uberibus in Prov. vii. 18 (Vulgate); see Kentish Glosses, 203.—MDu. uðdr, uðdr (Hexham); Du. uðdr; Low G. uðdr (Danneil); Icel. júgr (an abnormal form; for júgr*); Swed. jufur, jur; Dan. yur (cf. North E. yure, a Scand. form); G. uter, OHG. uðr. Teut. type uðro*; Idg. type uðro-*. Further cognate with L. uber (for uðer*), Gk. uðro (gen. uðro-), Skt. uðra, an udder. Der. (from L. uber) ex-uber-ant.

UGLY, frightful, hateful. (Scand.) ME. ugly, Chaucer, C. T. 8549 (B 673); spelt ugliche, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2805. We also find ugsom, frightful, Destruction of Troy, 877.—Icel. uggligr, fearful, dreadful, to be feared.—Icel. ugg-, fear; with suffix -ligr—AS. -lic = E. -like, -ly. Cf. Icel. ugg-, to fear. Apparently allied to Icel. agi, whence E. awe. Also to Goth. agan, to fear, agjan, to terrify. See Awe. Der. ugli-ness, spelt ugliness, Pricke of Conscience, 917, where it is used to translate l. horror.

UHLAN, ULAN, a lancer. (G.—Polish—Turkish.) Modern. 'Each Hulan forward with his lance!' Scott, Field of Waterloo, x. 5.—G. uhlan, a lancer.—Pol. ulan, an uhlan; not of Polish origin. β. According to Heyse, uklan were a kind of light cavalry of Tataric origin, first introduced into European armies in Poland; the Polish ulan, a lancer, having been borrowed from Turkish oglan, also ulan, a youth, lad. Of Tataric origin. From Tatar oglan, a son, child; formerly also a Mogul title. See Zenker, Turk. Diet., p. 124; Pavet de Courteille, Dict. Turk-Oriental, p. 68.

UKASE, an edict of the Czar. (F.—Russ.) Modern.—F. ukase, —Russ. ukaz, an ordinance, edict; cf. ykazivati(c), ykazai(c), to indicate, show, order, prescribe.—Russ. y, prefix; kazai(c), to show. The Russ. y, Church Slav. u-, is allied to Skt. ava, away, off; and kazai(c) is the Ch. Slav. kazati, to show. Brugmann, i. § 163 (note), § 616.

ULCER, a dangerous sore. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 124.—MF. *ulcere (Cot.), mod. F. ulcère, 'an ulcer, a raw scab'.—L. ulcer-, decl. stem of ulcus, a sore; cf. Span. and Ital. ulcera, an ulcer.—Gk. ulceros, a wound, sore, abscess; Skt. aryas, hemorrhoids. Der. ulcerat-ion, from F. ulceration, 'an ulceration', Cot., from L. acc. ulcerat-inem; ulcer-ate, from L. ulceratus, pp. of ulcerare, to make sore; ulcer-ous, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147, from L. adj. ulcerosus, full of sores.*

ULLAGE, the unfilled part of a cask. (Prov.—L.) 'Ullage of a Cask, what is the cask wants of being full'; Phillips, ed. 1706. A Prov. word; due to the wine trade.—Prov. ullage (given by Mistral s. v. uillage), a filling up of a cask; OF. ullage (Roquefort); ouillage (Godefroy).—Prov. ulha, OFrov. ulhar (in Mistral, s. v. via), to fill up; OF. ullier, ouillier; MF. oellier, to fill up wine vessels, Cot. The Late L. type is oculare, to fill up to the ocular, the eye, or orifice.—L. oculus, the eye; see Ocular. We also find OF. ouillier, as if for adoculare*. Cf. MF. ocillade, an amorous look, oel, the eye (Cot.).

ULTERIOR, further, more remote. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson.—L. ulterior, further; comp. of ulter, beyond, on that side, an old adj. only occurring in the abl. ultrā (= ultrā parte) and ultrā, which are used as adverbs with the sense of beyond; ultrā is also used as a preposition. β. Ul-ter is also a comparative form (ul-ter-ior being a double comparative, like ex-ter-ior from ex); cf. OL. ul-, beyond, allied to OL. olus, that, yon, olle (= ille). Hence ul-ter = more than that way, more in that direction. γ. OL. olus is for olnus*; cf. Skt. aranyas, foreign, far, yon. Brugmann, i. § 163. Der. ultra-, prefix, q. v.; ultra-ate, q. v. Also outrage, ulterance (2).

ULTIMATE, furthest, last. (L.) 'The ultimate end of his presence'; Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 1. (R.). = L. ultimus, pp. of ulimäre, to come to an end, to be at the last.—L. ultimus, last. Ul-ti-mus is a superl. form (like op-ti-mus, in-ti-mus), formed from the base ul- appearing in ul-ter, ul-ter-ior; see Ulterior. Der. ultimate-ly; also ulimat-um from L. ultimatum, neut. of pp. ultimatus. Der. pen-ultimate, ante-pen-ultimate.

ULTRA, beyond. (L.) L. ultra-, prefix; ultrā, beyond, adv. and prep., orig. abl. fem. of OL. ulter, adj.; see Ulterior. ¶ The F. form is outra, Ital. oltra, Span. ultra.

ULTRAMARINE, beyond sea; as sb., sky-blue. (Ital.—L.) 'Ultramarine, that comes or is brought from beyond sea; also, the finest sort of blew colour used in painting'; Phillips, ed. 1706; spelt ultramaria in ed. 1658. And used by Dryden, On Painting, s. 354 (R.), who talks of 'ultramarine or azure'. 'Assure', such as the paynters caule Azzuro Ultramarino, that is, Assure of beyonde the sea; Eden, Three E. Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 366 (1555). The word is Ital. (the Ital. oltra being altered to L. ultrā).—Ital. oltra marino, of beyond the seas (Florio). Cf. Span. ultramarina, beyond sea, foreign; also as sb. 'ultramarine, the finest blue colour, produced by calcination from lapis lazuli'; Neuman.—L. ultrā, beyond; mar-e, sea; and suffix -inus. See Ultra- and Marine. β. So called because lapis lazuli was a foreign production; see Azure.

ULTRAMONTANE, beyond the Alps. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'Ultramontane, a name given by the Italians to all people living on the hither side of the Alps, who, with respect to their country, are beyond those mountains'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'He is an ultramontane'; Bacon, Observations on a Libel (R.).—F. ultramontane, applied by the French to the Italians themselves, as being beyond the Alps from the French side, and in use as early as the 14th cent. (Littre). This is also the E. view of the word, which is used with reference to the Italians, esp. to those who hold extreme views as to the Pope's supremacy.—Ital. ultramontano, beyond the mountains; Late L. ultramontānus, coined in imitation of classical L. trāmōntānus.—L. ultrā, beyond; and mont- stem of mons, a mountain; with suffix -anus. See Ultra- and Mountain; and see Tramontane. Der. ultramontan-ist, -ism (F. ultramontanisme).

ULTRAMUNDANE, beyond the limits of our solar system, beyond the world. (L.) 'Imaginary ultramundane spaces'; Boyle's Works, vol. v, p. 140 (R.). And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. ultrāmūdānus, beyond the world.—L. ultrā, beyond; and mūdānus, worldly, from mundus, world. See Ultra- and Mundane.

UMBEL, a form of flower in which a number of stalks, each bearing a flower, radiate from a centre. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it in the form umbella; it has since been shortened to umbel. Florio gives Ital. umbella, 'a little shadow, . . . also the round tuft or head of fenell or dill'. So called from its likeness in form to an umbrella.—L. umbella, a parasol; Juvenal, ix. 50. Dimin. of umbra, a shade. See Umbrella. Der. umbellifer-ous, bearing umbels (Phillips), coined with suffix -fer-ous, as in cruci-ferous, from L. suffix -fer, bearing, and E. -ous (F. -eux, L. -osus). Doublet, umbrella.

UMBER, a species of brown ochre. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 114.—F. Umbra, used shortly for terre d'ombra, 'beyond-sea azure, an earth found in silver mines, and used by painters for shadowings'; Cot. [As 'beyond-sea azure' is properly ultramarine, it must here be differently applied.]—Ital. ombra, used shortly for terre d'ombra, umber. Torriano has 'terre d'ombra', a kind of earth found in silver-mines used by painters for shadowings. Lit. 'earth of shadow', i.e. earth used for shadowing; cf. Ital. ombreggiare, to shadow. The Ital. ombra is from L. umbra, shadow; see Umbra. ¶ See Wedgwood (p. 746), who notes that 'the fable of the pigment taking its name from Umbria [which is only a guess by Malone] is completely disproved by the Span. name sombra (shade); sombra di Venecia, Venetian umber; sombra de hueso, bone-umber. Some paintings of the Venetian school in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, are remarkable for their umbered or sombre appearance. Cf. also F. ombré, 'umbered or shadowed'; Cot.; and see Sombre.

UMBILICAL, pertaining to the navel. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. =MF. umbilical, 'umbilical, belonging to the navel'; Cot. =MF. umbilic, 'the navel or middle of'; id. =L. umbilicus, acc. of umbilicus, the navel, middle, centre. Allied to Gk. ὀμφαλός, the navel; umbilicus being really an adjectival form from a sb. umbilus = ὀμφαλός. Cf. L. umbo, a boss. Allied to Skt. nābhī, navel; and E. Navel, q.v. All from a common root enēbā* (Uhlenbeck).

UMBLE-PIE, pie containing the umbles or numbles (entrails) of deer. (F.—L.) 'The umblis of venyson.' Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 1240. See further under NUMBLES. And see UMBLIES in Nares.

UMBRAGE, a shade or screen of trees, suspicion of injury, offence. (F.—L.) The proper sense is 'shadow,' as in Hamlet, v. 2. 125; thence it came to mean a shadow of suspicion cast upon a person, suspicion of injury, &c. 'It is also evident that St. Peter did not carry himself so as to give the least overture or umbrage to make any one suspect he had any such preeminence.' Bp. Taylor, A Dissuasive from Popery, p. i. § 8 (K.); and see Trench, Select Glossary.—F. umbrage (also umbrage), 'an umbrage, shade, shadow; also jealousie, suspicion, an inceling of; whence douner umbrage à, to discontent, make jealous of.' Cot. =F. ombrer, a shadow; with suffix -age (<L. ūdicum; cf. L. umbraticus, belonging to shade, =L. umbrā, a shadow. Der. umbrage-ous, shadowy, from F. ombrageux, 'shady, . . . umbragious,' Cot.; umbrageous-ly, -ness. And see umb-el, umber, umbr-elite, umbrer.

UMBRELLA, a screen carried in the hand to protect from sunshine or rain. (Ital.—L.) Now used to protect from rain, in contradistinction to a parasol; but formerly used to protect from sunshine, and rather an old word. Cotgrave translates F. ombraire by 'an umbrello, or shadow,' and F. ombrelle by 'an umbrello.' 'Now you have got a shadow, an umbrella, To keep the scorching world's opinion From your fair credit.' Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1. 2.—Ital. umbrella (see below); better spelt umbrella, 'a fan, a canopy, . . . also a kind of round fan or shadowing that they use to ride with in summer in Italy, a little shade.' Florio. Dimin. of Ital. ombra, a shade.—L. umbrā, a shade; see UMBRAGE. ¶ The true classical L. form is umbella; umbrella is an Ital. diminutive, regularly formed from ombra; the spelling with u is found even in Italian. Florio has umbella, umbrella, 'a little shadow, a little round thing that women bare in their hands to shadow them; also, a broad brim that to keepe off heate and rayne; also, a kind of round thing like a round skreen that gentlemen use in Italie in time of summer.' This account of the word, in the edition of Florio of 1598, clearly implies that the word umbrella was not, in that year, much used in English; for he does not employ the word. Doublet, umbrel.

UMPIRE, a third person called in to decide a dispute between two others. (F.—L.) This curious word has lost initial n, and stands for umpire, once a common form. See remarks under the letter N. Spelt umpire in I. L. L. i. 1. 170. ME. nonpere or nonperre. 'N(ō)mpire, or owmpire, Arbitrer.' Prompt. Parv. Spelt nonperre, nonperre, nonpierre, P. Ploymann, B. v. 337; nonperre, id. C. vii. 388; nonperre, id. A. v. 181. In Wyclif, Prologue to Romans, ed. Forshall and Madden, p. 302, l. 24, we have nonperre, where six MSS. read umpire. It also occurs, spelt nonperre, in the Testament of Love, bk. i. ch. 2. l. 96. Tyrwhitt shows (in his Glossary to Chaucer) that the L. impar was sometimes used in the sense of arbitrator, and rightly suggests a connexion with mod. F. nonpair, odd. β. The ME. nonperre exactly represents the OF. form nonpair, peerless (Godefroy). Later, it occurs in Cotgrave as nonpair, 'peerless, also odder'; and an earlier spelling nonper is given by Roquefort, with the sense of peerless. It is simply a compound of F. non, not, and OF. per, a peer, an equal; from L. non, not, and par, equal; see NON and PEER (1). γ. The OF. nonper became nonper regularly, since n before p becomes m, as in kamper < kanafer; see HAMPER (2). It may also be noted that it is not the only ME. word in which the same F. prefix occurs, since we also have ME. nonpower, i.e. lack of power, in P. Ploymann, C. xx. 292, spelt nonpower, nonpower, and even unpower. The last form suggests that the loss of initial n was due to some confusion between the F. non and E. un, with much the same negative sense. Hence a nonper or an unper was a non-per or an un-per, orig. the former. δ. The sense is curious; but the sense of L. impar, ill. odd, in the sense of arbitrator or umpire sufficiently explains it, for the umpire is the odd man, the third man, called in to settle a dispute between two others. It may also be noted that pair and peer are doublets.

UN- (1), negative prefix. (E.) Prefixed to substantives, adjectives, and adverbs; distinct from the verbal prefix un- below. ME. un-, AS. un-; very common as a neg. prefix. +11n. un-; Icel. ú- or ö- (for un-); Dan. u-; Swed. o-; Goth. un-; G. un-; W. an-; Irish an-, in-; L. in-; Gk. ἀ-, δ-; Zend. an-, a-; Skt. an-, a-.

β. All from Idg. en*, negative prefix; cf. Brugmann, i. § 433. Allied to Skt. na, not; Goth. ni, not, Lith. nē; also to L. nē, not, Gk. νῆ, neg. prefix.

γ. It is unnecessary to give all the words in which this prefix occurs; it is used before words of various origin, both English and French. The following may be noted in particular. 1. It occurs in words purely English, and appears in many of these in Anglo-Saxon; Grein gives AS. words, for example, answering to un-clean, un-even, un-fair, un-whole, un-smooth, un-soft, un-still, un-wise. Some compounds are now disused, or nearly so; such as un-bold, un-blihe, un-little, un-right, un-sad, un-slow (all in Grein). In the case of past participles, the prefix is ambiguous; thus un-bound may either mean 'not bound,' like AS. unbounden; or it may mean 'opened' or 'released,' being taken as the pp. of unbind, verb. 2. Un- is frequently prefixed to words of F. origin; examples such as un-feyned (unfined) and un-stable occur in Chaucer; we even find un-famous in House of Fame, iii. 56, where we should now say not famous. Palsgrave has un-able, un-certaine, un-cortoyse (uncourteous), un-gentyll, un-gracyous, un-honest, un-maryed, un-parfyte (imperfect), un-profytable, un-rysonable (unreasonable). 3. In some cases, such as un-couth, the simple word (without the prefix) is obsolete; such cases are discussed below.

UN- (2), verbal prefix, expressing the reversal of an action. (E.) In the verb to un-lock, we have an example of this; it expresses the reversal of the action expressed by lock; i.e. it means to open again that which was closed by locking. This is quite distinct from the mere negative prefix, with which many, no doubt, confound it. ME. un-, AS. un-; only used as a prefix in verbs, +11u. un-; as in un-laden, to unload, from laden, to load; G. ent-, as in ent-laden, to unload; OIIG. ant-, as in ant-lukhan, to unlock; Goth. ant-, as in ant-bindan, to unbind. β. It is precisely the same prefix as that which appears as an- in E. an-swer, and as and- in AS. and-svarian; and it is cognate with Gk. ἀντ-, used only in the not very different sense of 'in opposition to'; thus, whilst E. un-say is to reverse what is said, to deny it, the Gk. ἀντ-λέγειν is to with-say or gain-say, to deny what is said by others. See ANSWER and ANTI-. γ. It is unnecessary to give all the words with this prefix; I may note that Grein gives the AS. verb corresponding to F. un-do, viz. undōn, with which cf. EFrics. und-dōn, und-dīn, Du. ondoen; also un-lyman, to unfasten, open, now obsolete; Diosworth gives unbindan, to unbind, unfeldan, to unfold, unlican, to unlock, and a few others, but verbs with this prefix are not very numerous in AS. γ. However, it was so freely employed before verbs of French origin, that we have now many such words in use; Palsgrave has un-arm, un-bend, un-bind, un-boukell (unbuckle), un-bridle, un-clasp, &c., with others that are obsolete, such as un-custume, to disuse a custom. δ. The most common and remarkable of the mod. E. verbs with this prefix are: un-bar, un-bend, un-bolt, un-bossom, un-brace, un-buckle, un-burden, un-butto, un-case, un-chain, un-clasp, un-close, un-clothe, un-coil, un-couple, un-cover, un-curl, un-deceive, un-dress, un-earth, un-fasten, un-fetter, un-fix, un-fold, un-furl, un-gird, un-hand, un-harness, un-hinge, un-hook, un-horse, un-house, un-kennel, un-knit, un-knot, un-lace, un-learn, un-limber, un-load, un-lock, un-loose, un-make, un-man, un-mask, un-moor, un-muffle, un-muzzle, un-nerve, un-pack, un-people, un-ravel, un-rig, un-robe, un-roll, un-roof, un-root, un-saddle, un-say, un-screw, un-seal, un-settle, un-sew, un-shackle, un-ship, un-stop, un-string, un-thread, un-tie, un-tune, un-twine, un-twist, un-warf, un-weave, un-wind, un-wrap, un-yoke. See further under the simple words. ¶ Note the ambiguity in the case of past participles; for which see under UN- (1).

UN- (3), prefix. (E.) See UNTO, UNTIL.

UNANELED, without having received extreme unction. (F.; and L.—Gk.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 77. Lit. 'not un-oiled.' =AS. un-, not; and ME. an-ēled, pp. of anēlen, anēlen, to give extreme unction to; Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 11269 (1303). The verb is from ME. an (AS. an), on, upon; and ēlen, to oil, regularly formed from AS. ele, sb., oil. The AS. ele is not a Teut. word, but borrowed from L. oleum, oil, Gk. ἐλαιον. See UN- (1), ON, and OIL. Cf. also anail, v., which see in N. E. D. 'I aneale, . . . I anoynt . . . with holy oyle.' Palsgrave.

UNANIMOUS, of one mind. (L.) 'The universall and unanimous belief.' Camden, Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588 (R.). Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.), from L. unanimus, of one mind.—L. un-, us, one; and animus, mind; see UNIT and ANIMOSITY. Der. unanimously; also unanimity, spelt unanimitee in The Libell of Englyshe Polycie (A. D. 1436), l. 1068 (quoted in Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 206), from F. unanimité, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littre), from L. acc. unanimiūtem, due to the adj. unanimus, by-form of unanimus.

UNCIAL, pertaining to a certain style of writing. (L.) 'Uncial, belonging to an ounce or inch.' Blount, ed. 1674. Applied to a particular form of letters in MSS. from the 4th to the 9th centuries. The letters are of large size, and the word signifies 'of the size of an inch.' Phillips gives uncial only in its other sense, viz. 'belonging to an ounce.' Cotgrave gives F. oncial, 'weighing as much as an ounce;' but he also gives lettres onciales, 'huge letters, great letters.' — L. uncialis, belonging to an inch, or to an ounce. — L. uncia, an inch, an ounce. See INCH and OUNCE (1). ¶ The term uncial was orig. a misappellation of St. Jerome's expression litterae unciales, 'inch-high' i. e. large, handsome letters; Cent. Dict. See Jerome's Prologue to the book of Job (near the end).

UNCLE, the brother of one's father or mother. (F. — L.) ME. uncle, uncle; Rob. of Glouc. p. 58, l. 1337. — AF. unkel, Gaimar, 188; F. oncle, 'an uncle;' Cot. — L. avunculus, acc. of avunculus, a mother's brother; avunculus was shortened to unculus, whence F. oncle. The lit. sense is 'little grandfather;' it is a double dimin. (with suffixes -cu-lu-) from avus, a grandfather. Allied to Goth. awō, a grandmother, Lith. avynas, an uncle, W. ewythr, an uncle. Brugmann, i. § 330. ¶ The G. onkel is also from Latin. The E. nuncle, K. Lear, i. 4. 117, is due to the phrase my nuncle, corrupted from mine uncle.

UNCOMEATABLE, unapproachable. (E.; with F. suffix.) In the Tatler, no. 12. A strange compound, with prefix un- (1) and suffix -able, from Come and At.

UNCOUTH, unfamiliar, odd, awkward, strange. (E.) The lit. sense is simply 'unknown;' hence strange, &c. ME. uncouth, strange, Chaucer, C. T. 10598 (F. 284). A common word; see Strattmann. AS. uncūð, unknown, strange (common); Grein, ii. 616. — AS. un-, not; and cūð, known, pp. of cunnan, to know, but used as an adj.; Grein, i. 172. See further under CAN (1); and see UN- (1). ¶ The Lowland Sc. unco is the same word; and, again, the prov. E. unked or unkid (spelt unkard in Halliwell), strange, unusual, odd, also lonely, solitary, corresponds to ME. unkid, 'not made known,' where kid (= AS. cyðed) is the pp. of the causal verb cyðan, to make known, a derivative from cūð by vowel-change from ū to y; Grein, i. 181.

UNCTION, an anointing, a salve; also, warmth of address, sanctifying grace. (F. — L.) In Shk. Hamlet, iii. 4. 145, iv. 7. 142. 'His inward vncion wyl worke with our diligence;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 763 a. ME. unccion; spelt uncion, Trevisa, i. 113. — F. onction, 'an unctio, an anointing;' Cot. — L. unctio, acc. of unctio, an anointing; cf. unctus, pp. of ungere, to anoint; see UNGUENT. Der. unctus-ous, Hollinshed, Desc. of Britain, c. 24 (R.), Trevisa, i. 113, also spelt unctious, Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 195 (first folio), and even unctuous, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 12, p. 510, from F. onctuous, 'oily, fatty;' Cot., from Late L. unctuosus (Dacangue); due to L. unctus, decl. stem of unctus (gen. unctus), an anointing. Hence unctu-ous-ity, from F. unctuosité; 'unctuosité'; Cot.

UNDER, beneath, below. (E.) ME. under, under, Chaucer, C. T. 1697. AS. under; Grein, ii. 617. + Du. onder; Icel. undir; Swed. and Dan. under; Goth. undar; OHG. untar. B. Further allied to Skt. adhara, lower; and to adhas, prep. under, adv. below; L. infra, beneath. Brugmann, i. § 446; ii. § 75. ¶ For the phrase under way, see WAY.

UNDER, profix, beneath. (E.) The same word as the above. Very common; the chief words with this prefix are under-bred, current, done, gird (Acts, xxvii. 17), under-go (AS. undergin, Bosworth), under-graduate, i. e. a student who is under a graduate, one who has not taken his degree, under-ground, growth, under-hand, adv. secretly, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 34, also as adj., As You Like It, i. 1. 146, under-lay (AS. underlegan, Alfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 190, l. 5), under-lie (AS. underlidan, Bosworth), under-line. Also under-ling, Gower, C. A. iii. 80 (l. v. 2350), Layamon, 19116, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also under-nine, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 30, early version; under-m-ost, with double superl. suffix, as explained under AFTERMOST; under-neath, ME. undir-of, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 5. l. 15, compounded like BENEATH; q. v. Also under-plot, sb., -drop, vb., -rate, -sell; -set, Ancrén Riwele, p. 254, l. 5; under-sig; under-staid, q. v.; under-stake; under-take, q. v.; under-tone, valise, wood (Ben Jonson), -write, -writter.

UNDERN, a certain period of the day. (E.) The time denoted by undern differed at different periods. In Chaucer, C. T. 15228 (B. 4412), it denotes some hour of the forenoon, perhaps about 11 o'clock. 'At undern and at midday,' O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 33; with reference to the parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard. 'Abuten undern deies' — about the undern-tide of the day, Ancrén Riwele, p. 24; where perhaps an earlier hour is meant, about 9 A.M. AS. undern; whence undern-idd, undern-tide, Matt. xx. 3; here it means the third hour, i. e. 9 A.M. + Icel. undarn, mid-afternoon; also mid-forenoon; MHG. undern, OHG. untarn, a time of the day; Goth. undarni; only in the compound undarni-mats, a morning-meal, Luke, xiv. 12. B. The true sense is merely 'intervening period,' which accounts for its vagueness; this sense does not appear in under, prep., but suggests a connexion with L. inter, between,

Skt. antar, within. Cf. L. internus, inward. ¶ The word is by no means obsolete, but appears in various forms in prov. E., such as aundorn, aundor, orndorns, downdrins, dondinner, all in Ray, aundor, in Halliwell, &c. (Here Nares is wrong.)

UNDERSTAND, to comprehend. (E.) ME. understanden, understanden, a strong verb; the pp. appears as understanden, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1681. The weak pp. understanden occurs in the Prayer-book. AS. understandan, lit. to stand under or among, hence to comprehend (cf. L. intel-ligere); Alfrid, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, c. xxxiv. § 8. — AS. under, under; and standan, to stand; see UNDER and STAND. So also MSwed. understå, from under and stå, to stand; see Ihre. Another AS. word, with the same prefix and the same sense, is undergitan (lit. to underget), John, viii. 27, xii. 16. Der. understand-ing, spelt understandinge, Aynbite of Luwytt, p. 24, l. 8.

UNDERTAKE, to take upon oneself, attempt. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) ME. undertaken, strong verb; pt. t. undertok, see llave-lok, 377. It first appears in the Ormulum, l. 10314. The latter part of the word is of Scand. origin; see UNDER and TAKE. B. The word is a sort of translation of (and was suggested by) the AS. underniman, to understand, receive, Matt. xix. 12, and AS. underfon, to receive, Matt. x. 40, John, xviii. 3. Neither of these words have precisely the same sense, but both niman and fon have the sense of E. take (Icel. taka). Der. undertak-ing, Hamlet, ii. 1. 104; undertake-r, orig. one who takes a business in hand, Oth. iv. 1. 224, Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 349.

UNDULATE, to wave, move in waves. (L.) In Thomson, Summer, 982. 'I'llipps, ed. 1706, has undulate only as a pp. Houtet, ed. 1674, gives undulated and undulation. — L. undulatus, undulated, wavy. — L. undula, a little wave; not used, but a regular dimin. of unda, a wave, properly 'water.' B. Unda is a nasalised form, like O'Russ. und, water, allied to Gk. ōdōp, water, and to E. water. Cf. Skt. udan, water, and to wt.; Lithuan. vanis, water; Russ. voda, water. — WED, to wet; see WATER. Brugmann, i. § 102, 594. Der. undulat-ion (I'llipps); undulat-ory. Also (from unda) ab-undul, ab-und-ant, in-und-ate, red-und, red-und-ant, super-ab-und, sur-und.

UNEATE, scarcely, with difficulty. (E.) Obsolete; in Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 38; misused, with the sense 'almost,' id. i. 12. 4. ME. un-eate, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 154. AS. un-eatle, with difficulty, Gen. xxvii. 30; adv. from adj. un-eatle, difficult, Grein, ii. 630. — AS. un-, not; and eate, easy, smooth, common also in the adv. form eate, easily, Grein, i. 254; we also find eate, eate, easy, id. i. 330, ii. 767. + OSax. ēdi, easy. Some further compare it with the OHG. ēdi, desert, empty, G. äde, deserted, desolate; Icel. andri, empty; Goth. auhts, auhts, desert, waste. But it is probable that these words, though similar in form, are of independent origin.

UNGAINLY, awkward. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) ME. un-gainliche, used as an adv., awkwardly, horribly, St. Marthe, ed. Cockayne, p. 9, l. 14. Formed by adding -liche (-ly) to the adj. ungein, inconvenient, spelt ungayne in Le Bone Florence, l. 1421, in Ritson, Met. Romances, iii. 60. — AS. un-, not, see UN- (1); and Icel. gegn, really, serviceable, convenient, allied to gegna, to meet, to suit, gegn, against, and E. again; see AGAIN. Cf. Icel. gegnligir, meet; gegn (ungain), ungainly, gentle. Der. ungainli-ness. ¶ We also find AS. gægne in a gloss: 'Compensio, breulter, gægne;' Voc. 207. 17. Perhaps the word is of native origin.

UNGUENT, ointment. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. — L. unguentum, ointment. — L. unguens, stem of pres. part. of ungere, to anoint. + Skt. anj, to anoint, smear. Brugmann, i. § 398. Der. (from ungere, pp. unctus) unctuarius, q. v.; also uncti-ment, an-oint.

UNICORN, a fabulous animal with one horn. (F. — L.) ME. unicorna, Ancrén Riwele, p. 120, l. 9. — AF. unicorn, Psalm xxi. 22; F. unicorn, 'an unicorn;' Cot. — L. unicornem, acc. of unicornis, adj., one-horned. — L. ūni, for ūno, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and corn-a, a horn, cognate with E. horn. See UNITY and HORN.

UNIFORM, consistent, having throughout the same form or character. (F. — L.) Spelt uniforme in Minshew, ed. 1627; uniform in Cotgrave. — F. uniforme, 'uniform,' Cot. — L. uniformem, acc. of uniformis, having one form. — L. ūni, for ūno, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and form-a, a form; see UNITY and FORM. Der. uniformis, sb., a like dress for persons who belong to the same body; uniformity; uniform-ity, from F. uniformité, 'uniformity,' Cot., from L. acc. uniformitatem.

UNILITERAL, consisting of one letter. (L.) The only such words in E. are a, i, and o. Coined from L. ūni, for ūno, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and litter-a, a letter; with suffix -al; cf. bi-literal, tri-literal.

UNION (1), concord, harmony, confederation in one. (F. — L.) Spelt unyon, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 233 (R.). — F. union, 'an union'; Cot. = L. ūniōnem, acc. of ūniō, oneness. = L. ūn-us, one, cognate with E. One, q. v. And see Unity.

UNION (2), a large pearl. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 283. = AF. unio; Bestiary, 1482. Really the same word as the above; the L. ūniō means (1) oneness, (2) a single pearl of a large size. Onion is also the same word. See above; and see Onion. Doublet, onion.

UNIQUE, single, without a like. (F.—L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. = F. unique, 'single'. Cot. = L. ūnicum, acc. of ūnicus, single. = L. ūni-, for uno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; with suffix -us (Idg. -ko-). See Unity.

UNISON, concord, harmony. (F.—L.) 'In concordes, discordes, notes and clifles in tunes of unisonne;' Gascoigne, Grene Knight's Farewell to Fansie, st. 7; Works, i. 413. Spelt unysounne, York Plays, p. 209, l. 262. = MF. unisson, 'an unison'; Cot. [The spelling with s is remarkable, as it is not etymological.] = L. ūnisonum, acc. of ūnisonus, having the same sound as something else. = L. ūni-, for uno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and sonus, a sound. See Unity and Sound (3). Der. unisson-ous; unisson-ant (from sonant-, stem of pres. part. of sonare, to sound); unisson-ance.

UNIT, a single thing, person, or number. (F.—L.) Not derived from L. ūnium, which would mean 'united', but a purely E. formation, made by dropping the final letter of unit-y. 'Unit, Unite, or Unity, in arithmetic, the first significant figure or number 1; in Notation, if a number consist of 4 or 5 places, that which is outermost towards the right hand is called the Place of Units;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The number 1 is still called unity. See Unity.

UNITE, to make one, join. (L.) 'I unite, I bring diverse thynges together in one;' Palgrave. = L. ūnit-us, pp. of ūnīre, to unite. = L. ūn-us, one; see Unity.

UNITY, oneness, union in one, concord. (F.—L.) ME. unitee, unite, unite, Gower, C. A. iii. 181 (bk. vii. 2836); P. Plowman, C. vi. 10. = AF. unite, Stat. Realm, i. 186 (1322); F. unité, 'an unity'; Cot. = L. ūnitatem, acc. of ūnitās, oneness. = L. ūni-, for uno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; with suffix -itas. The L. ūnus is cognate with E. One, q. v. Der. unit-ari-an, a coined word, added by Todd to Johnson; hence unit-ari-an-ism. Doublet, unit, q. v. We also have (from L. ūn-us) un-ite, un-ion, unit-que, unit-vers-al, unit-corn, unit-form, unit-literal, unit-vocal; also un-an-imonis, dis-un-ite, dis-un-ion, re-un-ite, re-un-ion, tri-un-ion. Also null, q. v.; an-ml, q. v.

UNIVERSAL, comprehending the whole, extending to the whole. (F.—L.) ME. universal; spelt universal, Gower, C. A. iii. 91; (bk. vii. 214). = F. universel (sometimes universal in the 14th century); 'universall,' Cot. = L. ūniversālis, belonging to the whole. = L. ūniversum, the whole; neut. of ūniversus, turned into one, combined into a whole. = L. ūni-, for uno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and versus, pp. of vertere, to turn; see Unity and Verses. Der. universal-ly, universal-ism, universal-ism. Also (from *F. univers-*l = L. ūniversum) universe, Henry V, iv. chor. 3; also universe-ity, a school for universal knowledge. ME. universite, used in the sense of 'world' in Wyclif, James, iii. 6. AF. université, Yearbooks of Edw. I, 1304-5, p. 429, from F. université, 'university, also an university,' Cot., from L. acc. ūniversitatem.

UNIVOCAL, having one voice, having but one meaning. (L.) Now little used; it is the antithesis of equivocal, i. e. having a variable meaning. In Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). Cf. F. univoque, 'of one only sense.' Cot. = L. ūnivocalis, univocal; with suffix -ilis. = L. ūni-, for uno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and vocal, allied to vox, voice, sound. See Unity and Voice.

UNKEMPT, not combed. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10, 29; and Shep. Kal. November, 51; in both places in the metaphorical sense of rough or rude. A contracted form of un-kemmed. From un-, not; and ME. kembed, kempt, combed, Chaucer, C. T. 2145 (A 2143). Kembed is the pp. of kemben, to comb, P. Plowman, B. x. 18. = AS. cemban, to comb; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zapitza, p. 168, l. 6; formed (by vowel-change of a to e) from AS. cemb, a comb; see Comb.

UNLESS, if not, except. (E.) Formerly written onless, onlesse, with o; Horne Tooke remarks: 'I believe that William Tyndal . . . was one of the first who wrote this word with a u;' and he cites: 'The scripture was given, that we may apply the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, unless then we intend to be idle disputers.' Tyndal, Prolog. to the 5 books of Moses. Horne Tooke gives 16 quotations with the spellings onless and onlesse; the earliest appears to be: 'It was not possible for them to make whole Cristes cote without some, onlesse certeyn grete men were brought out of the way;' Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, an. 1413. We may also note: 'That, lesse than synne the soner swage, God wyl be vengyd,' &c.; Coventry Myst. p. 40. Also: 'Charite is not perfect unles that it be burninge,' T. Lupet, Treatise of Charitie, p. 8. 'Ones that ye tary ouer longe;' Malory, Morte Arthur, bk. x. c. 20. [But Horne Tooke's own explanation of the phrase is utterly wrong.] Palgrave, in his list of conjunctions, gives onlesse and onlesse that. β. Thus the full phrase was on lesse that; but that was soon dropped. Here on is the preposition; and lesse is mod. E. less; see On and Less. The sense is 'in less than,' or 'on a less supposition.' Thus, if charity be (fully) burning, it is perfect; in a less case, it is imperfect. The use of on in the sense of in is extremely common in ME., as in on liss = in life (see Alive), on sleep = in sleep (see Asleep); and see numerous examples in Stratmann. On less or in less is similar to at least, at most. ¶ Mätzner, and Mahn (in Webster, 1864) wrongly explain un- in unless as a negative prefix; this is contrary to all the evidence, and makes nonsense of the phrase. Morris (Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 332) rightly gives on lesse as the orig. form, but does not explain it.

UNRULY, disregarding restraint. (Hybrid; E. and F.—L.; with E. suffix.) In James, iii. 8 (A.V.), where Wyclif has unpesible; here the E. version translates the Gk. ἀκαταστάτος, i. e. that cannot be ruled. Thus unruly is for unrule-ly; it does not seem to be a very old word, though going back to 1483; the Cathol. Anglicum has: 'Reuly, tranquillous; and 'unreuly, inquietus'; also 'reule, regula; 'reule, regulate.' Cf. 'Ye . . . unruly have ruled;' Sir J. Cheke, Hurt of Sedition (R.) Cotgrave translates F. modéré by 'moderate, quiet, reuly, temperate, orderly.' From Un- and Rule; with suffix -ly. ¶ It is remarkable that the ME. unruly, unrest, might have produced a somewhat similar adj., viz. unruly, unruly, restless. [But Stratmann gives no example of the word, and the vowel-sound does not accord; so that any idea of such a connexion may be rejected. This ME. unruly is from AS. un-, not, and row, rest (Grein, ii. 384), cognate with Icel. rō, G. ruhe, rest.] We must also note that unruly occurs as equivalent to unruly, as in 'theyse unruly company,' Fabian, Chron. an. 1380-1. Der. unruly-ly, -ness.

UNTIL, till, to. (E. and Scand.) ME. until, P. Plowman, B. prol. 227; Pricke of Conscience, 555; spelt until, Havelok, 761. A substituted form of unto, due to the use of the Northern E. til for to; the two latter words being equivalent in sense. MF. til (E. till) is of Scand. origin, as distinguished from to (= AS. tō). See Till (2), and see further under Unto.

UNTO, even to, to. (E.) Not found in AS. ME. unto, Chaucer, C. T. 490 (A 488); earlier in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 1, l. 7. It stands for und-to*; where to is the usual E. prep. (AS. tō), and und is the OFries. and (also unt), unto, OSax. and unto (whence OSax. unt, shortened from und-te, where te = AS. tō, as well as untō, shortened from und-tō). 'Forun folk untō = follow-unt unto him; Heliland, 2814. So also Goth. unt, unto, until, as far as, up to; 'und Bethlahaim' = unto Bethlehem, Luke, ii. 15; whence unt (= und tē), until. [It is remarkable that a closely related word is common in AS. in a different form, viz. ō, for an older anth*.] β. The Goth. und is the weak-grade form answering to the Goth. and-, prefix, cognate with Gk. ἀν-, so that the un in un-to is allied to the verbal prefix un-; see Un- (2). And see Until.

UP, towards a higher place, aloft. (E.) ME. up, up; common. AS. up, up, up, adv.; Grein, ii. 630. f. Du. op; Icel. upp; Dan. op; Swed. upp; Goth. iup; OHG. iuf. β. AS. upp = the Teut. type upp*, from *Idg. up-n-; and thus allied to Teut. uf*, as seen in Goth. uf, under, uf-ar, over (comparative form), and in E. over; further allied to Gk. ὑπό, under, Skt. upa, near, on, under. See the account under Over. Der. upp-er, ME. upper, King Alisaunder, 5691; Chaucer uses over in the same sense, as in upper lip = upper lip, C. T. 133. Hence upper-most (not an old form), as in 'even vpon the uppermost pinnacle of the temple,' Udall, On St. Luke, iv. 9; this is not a correct form, but made on the model of Aftermost, q. v. Also up-most, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 24, which appears to be simply a contraction for uppermost, though really a letter form. And see Up below, and Upon; also Open.

UP-, prefix. (E.) The same word as the above. The chief words in which it occurs are: up-bear, up-bind, up-brail, q. v.; up-leave, Shak. Venus, 483; up-hill; up-hoard, Hamlet, i. 1. 136; up-hold, up-holster, q. v.; up-land, up-land-ish = ME. uplandische in Prompt. Parv.; up-lift, Temp. iii. 3. 68; up-right, AS. upriht, uppriht, Grein, ii. 632; up-ri-ing, L. T. iv. 1. 2, with which cf. ME. uprysinge, resurrection, Rob. of Glouc. p. 379, l. 7792; up-roar, q. v.; up-root, Dryden, St. Cecilia's Day, 49; up-set = set up, Gower, C. A. i. 53 (bk. i. 339), also to overset, id. iii. 283 (bk. vii. 244); up-shot, Hamlet, v. 2. 395; up-side; up-side-down, q. v.; up-start, q. v.; up-ward, AS. upweard, Grein, ii. 632; up-ward-s, AS. upweardes, adv., ibid.

UPAS, the poison-tree of Java. (Malay.) Not in Todd's Johnson; the deadly effects of the tree have been grossly exaggerated. — Malay ūpas, 'a milky juice extracted from certain vegetables, operating, when mixed with the blood, as a most deadly poison, concerning the effects of which many exaggerated stories have been related; see 111st. of Sumatra, ed. 3, p. 110. Pūn ūpas, the poison-tree, arbor toxicaria Macassarensis; Marsden, Malay Diet. p. 24. The Malay pūhan or pūhan means 'tree'; id. p. 239. Now commonly pronounced pūhan ipoh, 'upas tree'.

UPBRAID, to reproach. (E.) ME. upbriden, to upbraid; we also find upbruid, sb., a reproach. 'The deuyls runne to me with grete scornes and upbraydyngs,' and again, 'wykyd angelles of the deuyll upbraydyng me.' Monk of Evesham, c. 27; ed. Arber, p. 67. Up-braiding, sb., a reproach, occurs in Layamon, 19117; also upbruid, upbruid, sb., id. 26036. AS. up-bregdan; found in the equivalent form up-gebridan, to upbraid, in Wulfstan's Homilies, ed. Napier, p. 249. — AS. upp, up; and bregdan, brēdan, to braid, weave, also to lay hold of, pull, draw, used (like Icel. bregða) in a variety of senses; so that up-braid is simply compounded of Up and Braid (1), q. v. The orig. sense of upbraid was prob. to lay hands on, lay hold of, hence to attack, lay to one's charge. Cf. 'Bregðel sōna feond be ðam fæxe' = he shall soon seize the fiend by the hair, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Grein, 99; and see bregdan in Grein, i. 138. Cf. Dan. beltraide, to upbraid, which only differs in the prefix (Dan. be = E. be). Der. upbruid-ing, sb., as above.

UPHOLSTERER, one who supplies beds and furniture. (E.) Formerly called an upholder. An equivalent form was upholdster, used by Caxton (see Prompt. Parv., p. 512, note 2), with suffix -ster for -er; see -ster. Hence, by a needless addition of -er (as in pauit-er-er), was made upholdster-er, whence the corrupt form upholsterer, by loss of d after l. 'Upholsterer or upholsterer, a tradesman that deals in all sorts of chamber-furniture.' Phillips, ed. 1706. Already spelt upholster in Palsgrave. ME. upholder, a broker, a tradesman, P. Plowman, B. v. 325; C. xiii. 218. At the latter reference we read: 'Vpholderes on the hul shullen haue hit to selle' = upholders on the hill [Cornhill] shall have it to sell. It is clear from this and from my note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 377, that the upholder was a broker or auctioneer; so that the name may have arisen from his holding up wares for inspection while trying to sell them. The derivation is from Up and Hold. Cf. 'Vpholderes, þat sellythe smal thyngys,' Prompt. Parv. Der. upholster-y, a coined word, from the form upholster.

UPON, on, on the top of. (E.) ME. upon, ufon, prep., Chaucer, C. T. iii. AS. uppon, upon, Gen. xxii. 2; also uppan, Matt. xxi. 44. — AS. upp, up, above, adv.; and ou, an, on. See Up and On. †Icel. up á, upp á, upon; where upp = AS. upp, and á (for an) = AS. on; Swed. på, upon, clearly a shortened form of up á, where d = E. on; Dan. på, upon.

UPROAR, a tumult, clamour, disturbance. (Du.) In Acts, xvii. 5, xix. 40, xx. 1, xxi. 31, 38; in Shak. Lucerne, 427, we have: 'his cry . . . Unto a greater uproar templs his veins'; where there is no notion of noise, but only of excitement or disturbance. 'To haue all the world in an uprore, and unquieted with warres;' Udall, on St. Mark, preface, fol. vi. l. 9. Spelt uprore in Levins. It is a corrupt form, due to confusion with E. roar, with which it has no real connexion; it is not an E. word at all, but borrowed from Dutch. — Du. oproer, 'uprore, tumult, commotion, mutiny, or sedition; oproer maken, to make an uprore; oproerigh, seditious, or tumultuous; Hexham. — Du. op, up; and roeren, to stir, move, touch; so that uproer = a stirring up, commotion, excitement. [Formerly also spelt rueren (Hexham); the Du. oe is pronounced as E. oo; Du. boer = E. boor.] †Swed. uppror, revolt, sedition; allied to upp, up, and röra, to stir; Dan. oprør, revolt; oprøre, to stir up, from op, up, and røre, to stir; G. aufbruh, tumult; aufbrühen, to stir up, from G. auf, up, and brühen, to stir. †The verb appears as Du. roeren, Swed. röra, Dan. røre, Icel. hræra, G. rühren, AS. hræran, O'Nax. hrærian, to stir; and is the same word as rear- or reer- in E. rearmouse, rearmouse, a bat; see Rearmouse. †Y. The AS. hræran, to stir, agitate, is from hrōr, motion, allied to hrōr, adj., active (with the usual change from hōr to ð); the Swed. uppror preserves the orig. unmodified h. Perhaps allied to Skt. prā, to boil. See Crater. Der. uproar-i-ous, an ill-coined word; uproar-i-ous-ly, uns.

UPSIDE-DOWN, topsyturvy. (E.) 'Turn'd upside-down to me'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, v. 1 (Gregory). 'I torne upsyde downe;' Palsgrave, p. 760. From up, side, and down. But it is remarkable that this expression took the place of ME. up so down, once a common phrase, as in Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 12, Luke xv. 8; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5. l. 91, b. v. pr. 3. l. 60; this is composed of up, so, and down, where so has (as often) the force of as, or as it were, i. e. up as it were down.

UPSTART, one who has suddenly started up from low life to wealth or honour. (E.) In Shak. i Hen. vi. v. 7. 87. A sb. coined from the verb upstart, to start up; the pt. v. upstart is in Spenser, F. Q. i. l. 16. From Up and Start; see note to Start, § y.

UPWARD, UPWARDS; see Up and -ward, suffix.

URBANE, pertaining to a city, refined, courteous. (L.) Spelt urbane in Levins, ed. 1570. — L. urbānus, belonging to a city. — L.

urb-s, a city. Der. urban, belonging to a city (which is only another spelling of the same word); sub-urban, q. v. And see below.

URBANITY, courteousness. (F. — L.) Spelt urbanitas in Levins, ed. 1570. — F. urbanité, 'urbanity, civility'; Cot. — L. urbānitas, acc. of urbānitas, city-manners, refinement. — L. urbānitas, from urbānus, urbane; with suffix -itas; see Urbane.

URCHIN, a hedgehog; a goblin, imp, a small child. (North F. — L.) In Shak. it means (1) a hedgehog, Temp. i. 2. 326, Titus, ii. 3. 101; (2) a goblin, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 49. Spelt urchon in Palsgrave. ME. urchon, urchone, Prompt. Parv., see the note; also spelt irchon, Early E. Pwaler, Pa. ciii. 18 (l. 42); see Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat (Glossary). — ONorth F. herichum, Marie (Fable 62); cf. Picard irechon, Walloon urechon, irchon (Sigart); Kouchi urechon (Hécart); Norm. dial. hêrichon; also OF. irechon, a hedgehog; also spelt herigon, erigon (Burguy); mod. F. hêrisson. Formed, with dimin. suffix -on (as if from a L. acc. hêrici-ōnem*), from L. hêricus, a hedgehog. — β. Erictus is a lengthened form from ēr (gen. eris), a hedgehog; for hēr*, and cognate with Gk. χῆρ, a hedgehog. The Gk. χῆρ is allied to χῆρ-αῖ, a pointed stake, χῆρ-αῖ-εῖν, to scratch (see Character); and further, to L. horreō, to be bristly, hirsūtus, bristly, Skt. hṛṣṭ, to bristle. Named from its sharp prickles.

URE, practice, use. (F. — L.) Obsolete, except in the derivative in-ure; and cf. man-ure. The real sense is work, practice; and, as it often has the sense of use, Richardson and others confuse it with use or usage; but it has no connexion with those words. It was once a common word; see examples in Nares. 'To put in ure, in usum trahere,' Levins, 193. 17. 'I ure one, I accustom him to a thingy;' Palsgrave. ME. ure; 'Moche like thyng I haue had in ure;' Remedy of Loue, st. 23, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323. [Distinct from ME. ure = good luck.] — OF. eure, euere, oure, work, action, operation. — L. opera, work. See further under Inure, Manure, and Operate. Doublet, opera.

URGE, to press earnestly, drive, provoke. (L.) Levins, ed. 1570, has both urge and urgēt. — L. urgere, to urge, drive. β. For urg-ere*, where urg- is the weak grade of urg-*. Allied to Gk. εἰργεῖν (for εἰργεῖν*), to repress, constrain, Lithuan. werz-iti, I press tight, Goth. urikan, to persecute. — WERK; to compel; see Weak. Brugmann, i. § 350. Der. urg-ent, from L. urgent-, stem of pres. part. of urgere; urgent-ly, urgency.

URIM, lit. lights. (Heb.) Only in the phr. urim and thummim; see Thummim. The lit. sense is 'lights', though the word may be used in the sing. sense 'light.' — Heb. urim, lights, pl. of ur, light. — Heb. root ur, to shine.

URINE, the water separated by the kidneys from the blood. (F. — L.) In Mach. ii. 3. 32; and in Chaucer, C. T. 5703 (D 121). — F. urine, 'urine'; Cot. — L. urina, urine; where -ina is a suffix. †Gk. οὔρον, urine; Skt. vāri, water; vāir, water. Allied to Icel. ur, drizzling rain; ver, the sea; ur, water, the sea. β. Orig. sense 'water.' Der. urial, urial, Chaucer, C. T. 12239 (C 305), Layamon, 17724, from F. urinal (Cot); urin-ary, from F. urinaire (Cot.).

URN, a vase for ashes of the dead. (F. — L.) ME. urne, urne, Chaucer, Troil. v. 311. — F. urne, 'a narrow necked pot, or pitcher of earth'; Cot. — L. urna, an urn. For urc-na*; and allied to L. urc-us, a pitcher. Brugmann, i. § 756.

URSINE, of or belonging to a bear. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — L. ursinus, bear-like. — L. ursus, a bear. Allied to Gk. ἄρκτος, a bear; W. arth, Skt. ṛkṣa-s, a bear; see Aroctis. Brugmann, i. § 598.

US, the objective case of we. (E.) ME. us, ous, us; used both as acc. and dat. AS. ūs, dat.; ūs, ūsic, ūsic, acc. pl., us (Grein). †Du. ons; Icel. oss, dat. and acc. pl.; Swed. oss; Dan. os; G. uns; Goth. uns, unsis, dat. and acc. pl. β. All from a Teut. base uns-*. Cf. L. nōs, Skt. nas; and also Gk. ἡμᾶς, Skt. asmān, us. Brugmann, i. § 437 (2); id. § 436.

USE (1), sb., employment, custom. (F. — L.) ME. use, use; properly us, as in Ancræn Riwle, p. 16, l. 1. 7; the word being monosyllabic. — AF. us (Havelock, 800), OF. (and F.) us, usage (Burguy); spelt uz in Cotgrave. — L. ūsum, acc. of ūsus, us; cf. ūsus, pp. of ūti, to use. Der. us, vb., ME. usen, usen, Layamon, 24293, from F. user, to use, from Late L. ūsare, to use, for ūsari*, frequentative form of ūti, to use. Also us-able, from the verb to us; us-age, ME. usage, usage, King Alisaunder, l. 1286, from AF. usage (Stat. Realm, i. 100). F. usage, 'usage', Cot. Also us-ful, use-ful-ness; use-less, use-less-ly, use-less-ness; all from the sb. us. Also us-u-al, Hamlet, i. 1. 22, from L. ūsualis, from ūs-, decl. stem of ūsus; us-u-al-ly. And see usurp, usury, utensil, utility. Also ab-use, dis-use, mis-use, ill-use, per-use.

USE (2), profit, benefit. (F. — L.) When us is employed, in legal documents, in the special sense of 'benefit,' it is a modified spelling of the Anglo-F. form of the L. opus, employment, need. Cf. Anglo-F. oes, use, profit, Annals of Burton, pp. 474, 482, A.D. 1258; oes, Liber Custumarie, p. 202; Statutes of the Realm, i. 144, A.D. 1299; uoes, service, Vie de St. Auban, 1554. A good example is the following: 'Que il fesan a sun oes guarder,' which he caused to be kept for his own use; Roman de Ron, 2336. See oes, ues, ous, obs, in Bartsch.

USHER, a door-keeper, one who introduced strangers. (F.—L.) ME. uschere; 'Yschere, Hostiaris' [i.e. ostiarius]; Prompt. Parv. 'That dore can non huisscher schette' [slut]; Gower, C. A. i. 231 (bk. ii. 2130).—AF. usser, Gaimar, 5995; OF. ussier, uissier (Burguy); also huissier, 'an usher, or door-keeper of a court, or of a chamber in court'; Cot.—L. ostiarius, acc. of ostiarius, belonging to a door, or (as sb.) a door-keeper.—L. ostium, a door, an entrance; extended from os, a mouth; see ORAL. Cf. O'Russ. austo, a mouth. Der. usher, verb, l. 1. L. v. 2. 328; usher-ship.

USQUEBAUGH, whiskey. (Irish.) In Ben Jonson, The Irish Masque; Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, ii. 3 (Savill); Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 3.—Irish uisge beatha, usquebaugh, whiskey, lit. 'water of life'; cf. L. agua vitæ, F. eau-de-vie,—Irish uisge, water, whiskey (see WHISKEY); and beatha, life, Orlish beathu, allied to Gk. βίω, L. vita, life, and E. quick (see QUICK). Brugmann, i. § 85, 368.

USURP, to seize to one's own use, take possession of forcibly. (F.—L.) Spelt usurpe in Palgrave; ME. usurpen, Chaucer, Astrolabe, prol. 42.—F. usurper, 'to usurp'; Cot.—L. usurpare, to employ, acquire; and, in a bad sense, to assume, usurp. β. Bréal suggests a formation from a sb. ūsū-rupus* (ūsū-rupus*?), one who seizes for his own use. Cf. L. surpere for surripere. Der. usurp-er; usurp-al-ion, from F. usurpation, 'a usurpation'; Cot. from L. acc. usurpationem.

USURY, large interest for the use of money. (F.—L.) 'Userer, usurier; Usury, usure'; Palgrave. ME. usure, of which usury was another form. 'Occur, or usure of gowle, Usura'; Prompt. Parv. p. 362; usurie, id. p. 513. Spelt usurie, I. Ploewman, li. v. 240; usurie, li. C. vii. 239. Here usurie seems to be a by-form of usure.—F. usure, 'the occupation of a thing, usury'; Cot.—L. ūsūra, use, enjoyment; also, interest, usury.—L. ūsūm, supine of ūsū, to use; see USE. Der. usur-er, ME. usurer, I. Prompt. Parv., F. usurier, from L. ūsūrarius.

UT, the first note of the musical scale. (L.) In Shak. L. L. iv. 2. 102. Cf. F. and L. ut, the same. See SOLFA.

UTAS, the octave of a feast. (F.—L.) Also utis, 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 22; where it means 'the time between a festival and the eighth day after it, merriment'; Schmidt. 'Utas of a feast, octaves'; Palgrave. ME. utas, Trevisa, vii. 259. Utas is shortened from AF. utaves, utavo, Yearbooks of Edw. I., 1302-3, p. 407; 1292-3, p. 75; corresponding to OF. oitaves (Burguy), oitieues (Roquefort), the pl. of oitave, octave, or eighth (day). Utas occurs in the statute concerning General Days in the Bench, 51 Hen. III, i.e. A.D. 1266-7 (Minsheu). 'El dyemanche des oitaves de la Resurrection' on the Sunday of the octaves of the resurrection; Miracles de S. Louis, c. 39 (Roquefort). The OF. oitave is from the L. octāva (diēs), eighth day; cf. OF. oit, oît, uit (mod. F. huit), from L. octo, eight. 'Thus utas is, as it were, a pl. of octave; see OCTAVE.

UTENSIL, an instrument or vessel in common use. (F.—L.) 'All myn hostilmentis, utensilis', &c.; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 94; in a will dated 1504. 'Alle the utensyl of myn hows'; Early E. Wills, ed. Furnivall, p. 18 (1411).—MF. utensile, 'an utensil'; Cot.—L. utensilis, adj., fit for use; whence utensilia, a utensil, pl. utensils. β. L. utensilis is for utent-tilis*, formed with suffix -tilis (as in fer-tilis, fil-tilis) from utent-, stem of pres. part. of ūtī, to use; see USE. The mod. F. is utensile (corruptly).

UTERINE, born of the same mother by a different father. (F.—L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. ME. uteryns, pl. Trevisa, v. 29.—MF. uterin, 'of the womb, born of one mother or damme'; Cot.—L. uterinus, born of the same mother.—L. uterus, the womb. Cf. Gk. βασίρα, the womb; Skt. udara, belly. Brugmann, i. § 706.

UTILISE, to put to good use. (F.—L.) Not in Todd's Johnson; quite modern.—F. utiliser, to utilise; a modern word (Littré). Coined with suffix -iser (< L. -izare = Gk. -izein), from L. ūtīl-is, useful; see UTILITY.

UTILITY, usefulness. (F.—L.) ME. utilité, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. § 26. l. 16.—F. utilité, 'utility'; Cot.—L. utilitatem, acc. of utilitas, usefulness.—L. ūtīl-is, decl. stem of ūtīl-is, useful; with suffix -itas.—L. ūtī, to use; see USE. Der. util-ar-i-an, a modern coined word.

UTMOST, outmost, most distant, extreme. (F.) ME. utenest, orig. trisyllabic; spelt uteneste in Layamon, 1102; outeneste in Rich. Coer de Lion, 2931; uteneste, Trevisa, vi. 359. From AS. ūte-m-est, double superl. from ūt, out, also found as ūte, adv. out.

[We also find the mutated forms Yemest, Yimest, Grein, ii. 777.] This word is therefore a doublet of utmost; see OUT. On the double suffix, see AFTERMOST; utmost became utmost by confusion with most. We also find utler-most; see UTTER (1).

UTOPIAN, imaginary, chimerical. (Gk.) An adj. due to Sir T. More's description of Utopia, an imaginary island situate nowhere, as the name implies. Coined (by Sir T. More, A.D. 1516) from Gk. ou, not; and topos, a place; see TOPIA.

UTTER (1), utter, further out. (E.) ME. utter, utter; whence was formed a superlative utter-est, used in the def. form uttestere by Chaucer, C. T. 8663 (E 787). AS. uttra (which occurs as well as uttra), compar. adj. formed from ūt, adv., out; see OUT. Thus utter is a doublet of outer. Der. utter-ly; utter-most (see UTMOST). And see utter (2).

UTTER (2), to put forth, send out, circulate. (E.; perhaps confused with F.—L.) ME. uttrere, attributed to Chaucer, C. T. 16302, in Thynne's edition (1532), but every one of the MSS. in the Six-text edition has outen, Group G, l. 834; so also the Harl. MS. Hence there is really no authority for supposing that Chaucer used the word. The verb outen, which he really uses, is to put out, 'out with', as we say; answering to AS. ūtian, vb., to put out, expel; from ūt, out; see OUT. β. The verb outre, to utter, speak, occurs frequently in the Romance of Partenay, ll. 1024, 1437, 1563, 2816, 3156, &c. It is possible that the r was suggested by OF. outre, to go beyond, surpass, finish (Godefroy); cf. F. outre, beyond; see UTTERANCE (2). And this last partly owed its form to Utter (1). Cf. AS. ūtian, to put out, eject; Laws of the Northumb. Priests, § 22, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 294. Der. utter-able; utter-ance, Hamlet, iii. 2. 378.

UTTERANCE (1), an uttering; see UTTER (2); as above. UTTERANCE (2), extremity. (F.—L.) Only in the phrases to the uttrance, Mach. iii. 1. 72; at uttrance, Cymb. iii. 1. 73. ME. outrance; in Lydgate, Siege of Troy, bk. i. ch. 2; fol. b. 4, back, col. 1: 'Unto outrance with these bulles to fight.' F. outrance, MF. outrance, 'extremity'; Cot. 'Combattre à outrance, to fight it out, or to the uttermost'; id.—F. oultre (ultra in Cotgrave), beyond; with suffix -ance.—L. ultra, beyond; see OUTRAGE.

UVULA, the fleshy conical body suspended from the soft palate. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. uvule.—Late L. uvula, dimin. of ūva, a cluster, grape, also the uvula.—Lith. ūga, a berry. Brugmann, i. § 223(2).

UXORIOUS, excessively fond of a wife. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, iv. 1 (Otter).—L. uxorius, belonging to a wife; also, fond of a wife.—L. uxōrī, decl. stem of uxor, a wife. Der. uxorious-ly, -ness.

V

V. In Middle-English, v is commonly written u in the MSS., though many editors needlessly falsify the spellings of the originals to suit a supposed popular taste. Conversely, u sometimes appears as v, most often at the beginnings of words, especially in the words us, vse, vp, vn-to, vuler, and vn- used as a prefix. The use of v for u, and conversely, is also found in early printed books, and occurs occasionally down to rather a late date. Cotgrave ranges all F. words beginning with v and u under the common symbol V. We may also note that a very large proportion of the words which begin with V are of French or Latin origin; only vane, vat, vineued, vixen, are English.

VACATION, leisure, cessation from labour. (F.—L.) In Palgrave, spelt vacacion. ME. vacacionum, Chaucer, C. T., D 683.—F. vacation, 'a vacation, vacancy, leisure'; Cot.—L. vacationem, acc. of vacatio, leisure; cf. vacuatus, pp. of vacare, to be empty, to be free from, to be unoccupied. See VACUUM. Der. vacant, in early use, in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 110, l. 15, from F. vacant, 'vacant'; Cot. from the stem of the pres. part. of L. vacare; hence vacant-y, Hamlet, iii. 4. 117; vacate, vb., a late word, from vacatus, pp. of vacare. And see vacuum.

VACCINATE, to inoculate with the cow-pox. (L.) 'Of modern formation, from the inoculation of human beings with the variola vaccina, or cow-pox. . . Dr. Jenner's Inquiry was first published in 1798'; Richardson. Coined, as if from the pp. of vaccināre*, to inoculate, from L. vaccinus, belonging to cows.—L. vacca, a cow. Cf. Skt. vacā, a cow. It prob. means 'the lowing animal'; cf. Skt. vāc, to cry, to howl, to low. Der. vaccin-at-ion; also vaccine, from L. vaccinus.

VACILLATION, wavering, unsteadfastness. (F.—L.) 'No remainders of doubt, no vacillation'; Bp. Hall, The Peace-maker, § 15 (R.). And in Blount.—F. vacillation, 'a reeling, staggering, wagging; 'Cot.—L. vacillatōnem, acc. of vacillatio, a reeling, wavering; cf. vacillatūs, pp. of vacillare, to sway to and fro, waver, vacillate. Formed as if from an adj. vacillus*, from a base vac- = WAQ, to bend, sway to one side; cf. Skt. vaik, to go tortuously, to be crooked, vaikra, bent; AS. waik, crooked. Der. vacillate, from L. pp. vacillatus; a late word. Cf. woo.

VACUUM, an empty space. (L.) It was supposed that nature abhorred a vacuum; see Crammer's Works, i. 250, 330 (Parker Society).—L. vacuum, an empty space; neut. of vacuus, empty. Allied to L. vacare, to be empty; see VACATION. +W. gwag, empty. Der. vacu-i-ty, in Cotgrave, from F. vacuité, 'vacuity', Cot., from L. acc. vacuitatem.

VADE, to wither. (Du.—F.—L.) In Shak. Pilgrim, 131, 170, 174, 176; Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 40.—MDu. vadden, 'to fade'; Ilexham.—OF. fader, to fade; see Fade.

VAGABOND, adj., wandering; as sb., a wandering, idle fellow. (F.—L.) Spelt vacabonde in Palsgrave; he gives the MF. form as vacabond; so also 'Vacabonds, vagabonds,' Cot. Rich. cites vacabunde from the Bible (1534), Gen. iv. 12; spelt vacabund in the edit. of 1551. Also vacabonde, Caxton, Siege of Troy, fol. 334, back.—F. vagabond, 'a vagabond,' Cot. We also find OF. vacabond (Godefroy).—L. vagabundus, adj., strolling about. Formed, with suffix -undus (a gerundive form), from vagari, to wander.—L. ugus, wandering; see Vague.

VAGARY, a wild freak, a whim. (L.) In The Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 3. 54 (82); fgaries, pl., Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, iii. 3. Also vagare, sing., a triyllabic word, in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. ii, ed. Arber, p. 44, l. 10. Perhaps orig. a verb; see below. Apparently borrowed directly from L. vagari, to wander; and, in any case, due to this verb. Cf. F. vaguer, 'to wander, vagary, grad, range, roam,' Cot.; also Ital. vagare, 'to wander, to vagare, or range,' Florio. We have instances of F. infinitives used as sbs. in attainder, remainder, leisure, pleasure. See above.

VAGRANT, wandering, unsettled. (F.—OHG.) 'A vagant and wild kind of life;' Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 490; quoted by Richardson, who alters vagant to vagrant; but vagant is, I think, quite right. Cf. vagantans, vagrants, Harman's Caveat, p. 19. It corresponds to Anglo-F. wakerant, a vagrant, vagabond; see Liber Albus, p. 275. Also found as AF. and OF. vancerant, pres. pt. of OF. walerer, to wander about. Spelt wacrant, Tristan, ii. 75, 80; Bozon, p. 72; walerant, Horn, fol. 8, back, col. 2. See walerer, wacerer, wacer, in Godefroy. Of Germanic origin; cf. MLow G. welkern, MHG. walgern, to walk about; allied to OHG. walkan, walchan, to move oneself about, to full cloth; cognate with E. walk, AS. wealcian. See Walk. Der. vagrant, sb., vagrancy. ¶ Doubtless confused with L. vagari, to wander; but not derived from it. Roquefort notes the use of OF. wakerant to translate L. vaga in Prov. vii. 10. See Notes on L. Etym., p. 311.

VAGUE, unsettled, uncertain. (F.—L.) It seems to have been first in use as a verb, parallel in use to vagary, q. v. 'Doth vague and wander;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 231 (R.). 'To vague and range abroad;' id. p. 630 (R.). As an adj. it is later. 'Vague and insignificant forms of speech;' Locke, Human Understanding, To the Reader (R.).—F. vaguer, 'to wander; vague, wandering;' Cot.—L. vagari, to wander; from ugus, adj., wandering. β. Connected by Fick, iii. 761, with AS. wancol, unsteady; from WAG*, a by-form of WAQ*, to swerve, for which see Vacillate. Der. vague-ly, -ness; and see vag-abond, vag-ar-y. From the same L. vagari we have extra-vagant.

VAILE (1), the same as Veil, q. v.

VAILE (2), to lower. (F.—L.) In Merch. Ven. i. 1. 28, &c.; and not uncommon. A headless form of avale or avale, in the same sense. 'I avale, as the water dothe when it goeth downwardes or ebbseth, Jaule;' Palsgrave.—F. avaler (in Cot. avaller), 'to let, put, lay, cast, fell down,' Cot. See further under Avalanche. Der. vail, sb., Troil. v. 8. 7.

VAILE (3), a gift to a servant. (F.—L.) Dryden has the pl. vaile; tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. l. 311. 'Vaile, profits that arise to servants, besides their salary or wages;' Phillips, ed. 1706. A headless form of avale, sb., in the sense of profit, help. 'A vaile, sb., proffit;' Palsgrave. 'Vaile my preceses'—let my prayers avail, Wyclif, Jer. xxxvii. 19, earlier version. See Avail.

VAIN, empty, fruitless, unreal, worthless; also, conceited. (F.—L.) ME. vain, vein, veyn, Chaucer, C. T. 15665 (G 497).—F. vain, 'vain;' Cot.—L. vanum, acc. of vanus, empty, vain. Brugmann, i. § 414 (3). Der. vain-ly, -ness; also the phr. in vain, a translation of in vain (Cot.). Also vain-glory, ME. veinglorie, Gower, C. A. i. 132, b. i. 2677; vain-glori-ous, -ly, -ness. Also van-i-ty, q. v.; vanit, q. v.; van-ish, q. v.

VAIR, a kind of fur. (F.—L.) A common term in heraldry; whence the adj. vairy or verry, given in Phillips, ed. 1706, and spelt vairy in Blount. ME. veir, Keliquia Antiqua, i. 121; Rob. Manning, ed. Furnivall, l. 615.—F. veir, 'a rich fur of ermines,' &c.; Cot.—L. varius, variegated. See Miniver and Various. Cf. Late L. varium, vair; Gloss. to Liber Custumarum. Der. vair-y, adj., from F. vairé, 'very, diversified with argent and azure;' Cot. Also mine-ver.

VALANCE, a fringe of drapery, now applied to a part of the bed-hangings. (F.—L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 356; he also has valanced—fringed, Hamlet, ii. 2. 442. 'Rich cloth of tissue, and valance of black silk;' Strype, Eccles. Mem., Funeral Solemnities of Henry VIII. Cf. 'A subtil kerchief of Valence;' Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 272. Florio (1598) has Ital. 'Valenzana, a kind of saye, serge, or stuffe to make curtains for beds with; Valenzana del letto, the valances of a bed.' Torriano (1688) has Valenza as well as Valenzana in the former sense, and Valenzane for Valenzana in the latter one. Prob. named from Valence in France, not far to the S. of Lyons, where silk is made even to this day; Lyons silks are well-known. Sir Aymor de Valence, whose widow founded Pembroke College, Cambridge, may have taken his name from the same place. Valence = L. Valentia, a name given to more towns than one, and clearly a derivative of valere (pres. part. valens), to be strong; whence also the names Valens and Valentinian; see Valiant. ¶ See Todd; Johnson derives Valence from Valencia in Spain, which was also famous for silk. Mahn (in Webster) derives valence (without evidence) from a supposed Norm. F. valant, answering to F. avalant, pres. part. of avaler, to let fall; for which see Avalanche.

VALE, a valley. (F.—L.) ME. val, as a various reading for valle (valley), in Legends of the Iloly Rood, p. 22, l. 47.—F. val, 'a vale;' Cot.—L. vallem, acc. of vallis, a vale. Der. vall-ey, q. v.; also a-val-anche, vail (2).

VALEDICTION, a farewell. (L.) 'He alwayes took this solemn valédiction of the fellows;' Fuller, Worthies; Shropshire (R.). Englished from a supposed L. valédiction*, coined like valédiction, pp. of valédicere, to say farewell.—L. valē, farewell; and dicere, to say. β. L. valē, lit. 'be strong, be of good health,' is the 2 pers. sing. imp. of valere, to be strong. See Valiant and Dictum. Der. valédic-ory.

VALENTINE, a sweetheart; also a love-letter sent on Feb. 14. (F.—L.) In Nares and Brand. See Hamlet, iv. 5. 48, 51. Named from St. Valentine's day, when birds were supposed to pair; see Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 309, 322, 683; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 32.—F. Valentin.—L. Valentinus.—L. valent-, stem of pres. part. of valere, to be strong; see Valiant.

VALERIAN, the name of a flower. (F.—L.) 'Valeryan, an herbe;' Palsgrave. And in Chaucer, C. T., G 800.—F. valeriane, 'garden valerian;' Cot.—Late L. valeriana, valerian. β. Orig. unknown; valeriana is the fem. of Valerianus, which must mean either 'belonging to Valerius' or 'belonging to Valeria,' a province of Pannonia. Both names are doubtless due to L. valere, to be strong, whence many names were derived; see Valance, Valentine, and Valiant.

VALET, a man-servant. (F.—C.) In Blount. 'The king made him his valett;' Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. Valet-de-chambre occurs in Vanbrugh, The Provoked Wife, Act v. 3.—F. valet, 'a groom, yeoman, &c.,' Cot.; valet de chambre, 'a chamberlain,' id. The same word as Varlet, q. v.

VALETUDINARY, sickly, in weak health. (F.—L.) In Sir T. Brown, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 26.—F. valétudinaire, 'sickly;' Cot.—L. valétudinarius, sickly.—L. valétudo, stem of valētudo, health, whether good or bad, but esp. bad health, feebleness; with suffix -arius.—L. valē-re, to be in good health; with suffix -tudo. See Valiant. Der. valétudinari-an, adj. and sb.; as sb. in Spectator, no. 25; valétudinari-anism.

VALHALLA, the hall of the slain. (Scand.) In Scand. mythology, the place of immortality for the souls of heroes slain in battle. The spelling Valhalla is hardly correct; it is probably due to Bp. Percy, who translated M. Mallet's work on Northern Antiquities; see chap. v of the translation.—Icel. valhöll (gen. valhöllar), lit. the hall of the slain.—Icel. valr, the slain, slaughter; and höll or hall, a hall, cognate with E. Hall. β. The Icel. valr is cognate with AS. wæl, slaughter, the slain, also a single corpse; prob. allied to OHG. wuol, slaughter, AS. wæl, disease. It was thought that the dead were selected from the field of battle by the deities called in Icelandic Valkyria and in AS. Wælcyrigan, lit. 'choosers of the slain.' See Valkyria.

VALIANT, brave. (F.—L.) ME. valiant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 4. p. 177, l. 3.—F. valiant, 'valiant;' Cot. Also spelt valant in OF., and the pres. part. of the verb valoir, 'to profit, serve, be good for,' id.—L. valere, to be strong, to be worth. Allied to E. Wield, q. v. Der. valiant-ly, -ness; and see val- dition, Val-ent-ine, vale-tu-din-ar-y, val-id, val-our, val-ue; also a-vail, counter-vail, pre-vail, con-val-esc; equi-val-ent, pre-val-ent, in-val-id.

VALID, having force, well-founded, conclusive. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. valide, 'valid, strong, weighty'; Cot.—L. validus, strong.—L. valere, to be strong; see VALIANT. Der. valid-ly; valid-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 199, from F. validité, 'validity', Cot., from L. acc. validitatem.

VALISE, a travelling-bag, small portmanteau. (F.—Late L.) 'Seal'd up In the valises of my trust, lock'd close for ever'; Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1 (Metaphor).—F. valise, 'a male, cloak-bag, budget, wallet'; Cot. The same word as Span. balija, Ital. valigia (Florio), with the same sense. Corrupted in G. into felleisen (Diez).—Late L. valisia (1401), DuCange; also spelt valisia (id.). β. Etym. unknown. Diez imagines a Late L. form nidul-ita*, made from L. nidulus, a leathern travelling-trunk; which at any rate gives the right sense. Devic (Suppl. to Littré) suggests Pers. valichak, 'a large sack,' or Arab. waliha(?), 'a corn-sack'; Rich. Dict. p. 1657.

VALKYRIA, one of the handmaidens of Odin. (Scand.) Icel. valkyria, a goddess; lit. 'chooser of the slain'; pl. valkyrjur.—Icel. val, acc. of valr, the slain (AS. wæl); and -kyria, I., a chooser, from kur- (< kuz-), weak grade of kjisa, to choose, cognate with E. choose. Cf. AS. walcyrga, Corpus gloss, 2017.

VALLEY, a vale, dale. (F.—L.) ME. valt, Assumption of St. Mary, ed. Lumby, l. 590; valie, Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 47.—OF. valles (F. valle), a valley; Burguy. This is parallel to Ital. valle, a valley, and appears to mean, literally, 'formed like a vale,' or 'vale-like.' Formed, with suffix -ee (< L. -ata), from F. val, a vale; see Vale.

VALOUR, courage, bravery. (F.—L.) Spelt valoure, King Alisaunder, 2530.—OF. valor, valur, F. valour, 'value, worth, worthiness'; Cot.—L. valorem, acc. of valor, worth; hence, worthiness, courage.—L. valere, to be strong, to be worth; see VALIANT. Der. valour-ous, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 236, from F. valoureux, 'valorous, valiant', Cot.; valour-ous-ly.

VALUE, worth. (F.—L.) 'All is to him of o [one] value', Gower, C. A. iii. 346 (bk. viii. 211);—F. valuz, fem., 'value'; Cot. Fem. of valur, pp. of valoir, to be worth.—L. valere, to be worth. Der. value, verb, in Palgrave; value-able; value-less, K. John, iii. 1. 101; valu-ation, a coined word.

VALVE, one of the leaves of a folding-door, a lid which opens only one way, one of the pieces of a (bivalve) shell. (F.—L.) 'Valves, folding-doors or windows'; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Valves, pl., doors, Trevisa, iv. 409.—F. valve, 'a folding, or two-leaved door, or window'; Cot.—L. valva, sing. of valvae, the leaves of a folding-door. Allied to L. valvere, to roll, turn round about; from the revolving of the leaves on their hinges. See Voluble. Der. valv-id, valv-ul-ar; bi-valve, uni-valve.

VAMBRACE, VANBRACE, armour for the fore-arm. (F.—L.) 'Plate, cum vambrace et cetera'; York Wills, i. 171 (1392). The word properly signifies 'fore-arm.' It is short for avant-brace.—MF. avant-bras, 'a vambrace, armour for an arm; also, the part of the arm which extends from the elbow to the wrist'; Cot.—F. avant, before; bras, the arm.—L. ab ante, from before, in front; brachium, arm (of which the pl. brachia gave OF. brace, arm; see Scheler). See Van (1), Vamp, Vamplate. ¶ The armour for the upper arm was called a re-re-brace, i.e. rear-brace.

VAMP, the fore-part or upper leather of a boot or shoe. (F.—L.) ME. vamppe (dissyllable). 'Hosen widuten vamppe = hose without vamps'; Ancien Riwle, p. 420, l. 3. [Another copy has vamppe; Reliq. Antiquæ, ii. 3.] 'Vampe, or vamppe of an hose, Pedana'; Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc antepedale, Anglice vampe [for vamppe]; Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 1. 'Hec pedana, Anglice vamppe, id. 201, col. 2.—MF. avant-pied, 'the part of the foot that's next to the toes, and consisteth of five bones'; Cot. (Hence E. vamp, vamp; by loss of initial a, change of mp to mp, and suppression of the unstressed termination).—F. avant, before; and pied, the foot. For F. avant, see Advantage or Van (1). The F. pied is from L. pedem, acc. of pēs, a foot; see Foot. ¶ This etymology is verified by the fact that the word also appears as vamppe. 'Vamppe of a hose, vamppe'; Palgrave (where the final d is dropped, as well as the initial a, in the F. form). So also ME. vamppe, above, and later vampy (Phillips). Godefroy has OF. avantpied, a kind of sandal. Der. vamp, verb, to mend with a new vamp, Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca, Act i. sc. 2 (Peitillius); hence vamp up—to patch up, vamp, to improvise a musical accompaniment.

VAMPIRE, a ghost which sucks the blood of men, a blood-sucker. (F.—G.—Servian.) In Todd's Johnson. 'Of these beings many imaginary stories are told in Hungary; Ricaut, in his State of the Greek and Armenian Churches (1679), gives a curious account of this superstitious persuasion, p. 278; Todd. Todd also cites:

'These are the vampires of the publick, and riflers of the kingdom'; Forman, Obs. on the Revolution in 1688 (1741), p. 11.—F. vampire.—G. vampyr (Flügel).—Servian vampir, a werwolf, blood-sucker, Popović, Servian Dict.; cf. Polish upir, upir, a vampire. Prob. of Turkish origin; in N. Turk. uber, a witch (Miklosich). Der. vampire-bat; so named by Linnaeus.

VAMPLATE, an iron plate protecting a lance. (F.—L.) 'Pro uno pare de schynbaldes, aliter vampplates'; York Wills, iii. 73 (1423). From F. avant, in front, force; and plate. See Vambrace.

VAN (1), the front of an army. (F.—L.) In Shak. Antony, iv. 6. 9. An abbreviated form of van-guard, vant-guard, or avant-garde, also spelt van-ward, vant-ward. 'And when our vanguard was passed the toun'; Holinshed, Chron. Edw. III, an. 1346. 'And her vantward was to-broke'; Rob. of Glouc. p. 362, l. 7478; the pl. vantwardes occurs, id. p. 437, l. 9006. Spelt vant-ward, vant-ward, avant-ward, P. Ploverman, C. xxiii. 94.—OF. avant-ward, later avant-garde, 'the vanguard of an army'; Cot. Here avant is from L. ab ante, 'from in front'; see Advantage. And see Guard, Ward.

VAN (2), a fan for winnowing, &c. (F.—L.) 'His sail-broad vans, i.e. wings; Milton, P. L. ii. 927.—F. van, 'a vanne, or winnowing sieve'; Cot.—L. unnum, acc. of unnum, a fan; see Fan. L. unnum is for cunnum*; cf. OHG. kuennen (for kuennan*), to swing, vibrate. Brugmann, i. § 357. (Doubtful; it may be allied to L. ventus, wind.) Der. van, v., to winnow, spelt vanne in Levins, from F. vanner, 'to vanne'; Cot. Doublet, fan.

VAN (3), a caravan or large covered wagon for goods. (F.—Pers.) A modern abbreviation for caravan, just as we now use bus for omnibus, and wig for periwig. See Caravan. The little man will now walk three times round the caravan; Dickens, Going into Society. 'Carry me into the van'; ibid.

VANDAL, a barbarian. (L.—Teut.) See Vandalic and Vandalism in Todd's Johnson.—L. Vandalus, a Vandal, one of the tribe of the Vandali, whose name means, literally, 'the wanderers'; see Pliny. Vandali answers to AS. pl. Wendlas (sing. Wendil). Cf. Icel. Vendill (also Vandill), a proper name. Cf. G. Wandels, to wander; a frequentative verb cognate with E. Wander, q.v. Der. Vandal, adj.; Vandal-ic, Vandal-ism.

VANE, a weather-cock. (F.) Also spelt fan (cf. vat, veich); it formerly meant a small flag, pennon, or streamer; hence applied to the weather-cock from its likeness to a small pennon. 'Fane of a stepylle'; Prompt. Parv. p. 148; and see Way's note. 'Chaungyng as a vane' (other MSS. fan); Chaucer, C. T., Group E, 996; in the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. AS. fana, a small flag; Grein, i. 263.—Du. vaan; Icel. fani; Dan. fane; Swed. and Goth. fana; G. fahne, MHG. fano. β. Teut. type fanon-*, m. Orig. 'a bit of cloth'; cognate with L. fannus, a cloth, piece of cloth; see Fane. Der. gon-fan-on or gon-fan-on, q.v. Doublet, pane.

VANGUARD; see under Van (1).

VANILLA, the name of a plant. (Span.—L.) In Todd's Johnson; Johnson says: 'the fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate.' Misspell for vainilla, by confusion with F. vainille, which is merely borrowed from Spanish, like the E. word.—Span. vainilla, a small pod, husk, or capsule; which is the true sense of the word. Dimin. of vaino, a scabbard, case, pod, sheath.—L. uagina, a scabbard, sheath, husk, pod.

VANISE, to disappear. (F.—L.) ME. vanisen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4, l. 53. The pt. t. appears as vanishide, vansched, vensched, vanished, in P. Ploverman, C. xv. 217. Certainly derived from OFrench, but the F. word is not recorded as commencing with v. Prob. shortened from the pres. pt. stem (vaniss-*) of AF. vanir, OF. evanir, to vanish away; cf. Ital. vanire, to vanish (where s is from L. ex).—Late L. type evanire*, from L. evanescere, to vanish away.—L. ex, away; and evanescere, to vanish; lit. to become empty, from vanus, empty; see Vain. Der. e-van-esc-ent.

VANITY, empty pride, conceit, worthlessness. (F.—L.) ME. vanite (= vanite), Hall Meidenhall, p. 27, l. 25.—F. vanité, 'vanity'; Cot.—L. vanitatem, acc. of vanitas, emptiness, worthlessness.—L. vanus, empty, vain; see Vain.

VANQUISH, to conquer, defeat. (F.—L.) ME. venkisen, P. Ploverman, C. xxi. 106; venkisen, Wyclif, i Kings, xiv. 47, earlier version; venquishen, Chaucer, C. T. 4711 (B 291).—AF. venquise, OF. veinquis, stem of pres. pt. of AF. venquir, OF. veinguir, occurring in the 14th century as a collateral form of OF. vincere (mod. F. vaincre); cf. F. veinquis, still used as the pt. t. of vaincre, and the form que je vainquis.—L. vincere, to conquer; pt. t. vici, pp. victus (stem vic-).—OF. veiq, to fight, strive; whence also Goth. veiknan, veigan (pp. veig-ans), OHG. and AS. veigan, to strive, fight, contend. Brugmann, i. § 85, 367. Der. vanquish-er; and see victor.

VANTAGE, advantage. (F.—L.) Common in Shak.; in K.

John, ii. 550, &c.: spelt vantage in Palsgrave; who also gives: 'I vantage one, I profite him, je vantage; What dothe it vantage you, quest ce quil vous vantage, or advantage.'—AF. vantage, advantage; Year-books of Edw. I. 1302-3, p. 309; F. avantage, 'an advantage; avantage, to advantage;' Cot. See ADVANTAGE. This vantage is a headless form of F. avantage; and it is clear from Palsgrave (as above) that the loss of initial a occurred in F. as well as in E.

VANWARD; see VAWARD and VAN (1).
VAPID, spiritless, flat, insipid. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Prob. directly from L. apidus, vapid, spoiled, flat, rather than from F. vapide, 'that sends up an ill fume,' marked by Cotgrave as a scarce or old word. Allied to L. vappa, wine that has emitted its vapour, vapid or palled wine; closely allied to L. vap-or, vapour. β. The L. vap-or is allied to Gk. κωρύς, smoke, κωρύειν, to breathe forth; Lithuan. kvápas, breath, fragrance, evaporation, kvápti, to breathe, smell, kvápalas, perfume. Brugmann, i. § 193.—✓QWEP, to reek, breathe out; cf. Fick, i. 542. Der. vapid-ly, -ness. And see vapour.

VAPOUR, water in the atmosphere, steam, fume, fine mist, gas. (F.—L.) ME. vapour, Chaucer, C. T. 10707 (F 393).—F. vapeur, 'a vapor, fume;' Cot.—L. vaporem, acc. of vapor, vapour; see vapor. Der. vapour, verb; vapor-ous, Mach. iii. 5. 24; vapor-ize, a coined word; vapor-is-at-ion, e-vapor-ate.

VARICOSE, permanently dilated, as a vein. (L.) A late word. [Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Varix, a crooked vein.']=L. varicōsus, varicose.—L. varic-, stem of varix, a dilated vein. Perhaps allied to L. varius, a blotch, a pimple.

VARIEGATE, to diversify. (L.) 'Variegated tulips;' Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 41.—L. variēgātus, pp. of variēgare, to make of various colours.—L. vari(o)-, for varius, of divers colours; and -igāre, due to agere, to drive, cause, make; agere being used to form verbs expressive of an object (see AGENT). See VARIOUS. Der. variēgation, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

VARIETY, difference, diversification, change, diversity. (F.—L.) In Shak., Antony, ii. 2. 241.—F. variété, 'variety;' Cot.—L. variētatem, acc. of variētās, variety.—L. varius, various; see VARIOUS.

VARIOUS, different, several. (L.) 'A man so various;' Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 545. Englished from L. varius, variegated, diverse, manifold; with suffix -ous. Der. various-ly; varie-gate, variously; also, vary, q.v.; vair, q.v.

VARLET, a groom, footman, low fellow, scoundrel. (F.—C.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 40. 'Not sparring minsters nor varletts;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 16 (K.).—OF. varlet, 'a groom; also, a yokner, stripling, youth;' Cot. He notes that 'in old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen, untill they came to be 18 years of age, were termed so. β. An older spelling was vaslet (Godefroy), which became valet, vallet, valet. We also find the AF. spelling valet in the Liber Allius, ed. Riley, p. 46, where d stands for an older s, as in medlar, medley; which again proves that valet was the orig. form. γ. Vaslet is for vasalet, the regular diminutive of OF. vasal, vassal, a vassal; so that a varlet was orig. a young vassal, a youth, stripling; hence, a servant, &c.; and finally a valet, and a varlet as a term of reproach. OF. vaslet became vaslet*, valet in AF.; also varlet, vallet, valet. See VASSAL. Doublet, valet.

VARNISH, a kind of size or glaze, a liquid employed to give a glossy surface. (F.) ME. vernisch. 'Vernyche, Vernicium;' Prompt. Parv. In P. Plowman, A. v. 70, the Venous MS. wrongly reads vernisch for vergeous (verjuice); still, this shows that the word was already known before A. D. 1400.—F. vernis, 'varnish, made of linseed oyle and the gumme of the juniper-tree;' Cot. Hence the verb vernissier, 'to sleek or glaze over with varnish;' Cot. Cf. Span. bernis, bernis, varnish, lacquer; bernariz, to varnish, lacquer; Ital. vernice, varnish; verniciare, verniciare, to varnish. β. Of doubtful origin; but compare the MGk. βερνίκιον; see Schade, O. H. G. Diet., p. 1439. Wedgwood says: 'It seems to me probable that it is from Gk. Βερνίκιον, bernikion, amber, applied by Agapias to sandarach, a gum resin similar in appearance to amber, of which varnish was made; Gk. Βερνίκιον, to varnish; Ducange, Greek Glossary. Cf. mod. Gk. βερνίκι, 'varnish.' But the MGk. βερνίκιον seems to be merely a Gk. form of Ital. vernice. Ducange gives a Late L. form vernicium (A. D. 1243). Der. varnish, verb; Palsgrave has: 'I vernyshe a spurre, or any yron with vernyshe, je vernis;' which exemplifies the MF. verb vernir, late by-form of vernissier.

VARSOVIENNE, a dance in imitation of a Polish dance. (F.—Polish). F. Varsovienne, a dance (about 1835); lit. 'belonging to Warsaw.'—F. Varsovie, Warsaw.—Pol. Warszawa, Warsaw.

VARY, to alter, change. (F.—L.) ME. varien, Prompt. Parv.; pres. part. variande, Pricke of Conscience, 1447.—F. varier, 'to vary;' Cot.—L. variāre, to diversify, vary.—L. varius, various; see VARIOUS. Der. vari-able, spelt varyable in Palsgrave, from F. variable, 'variable,' Cot., from L. variābilis; variable-ness, vari-abil-ity, vari-al-ion, ME. variacion, Chaucer, C. T. 2590 (A 2588), from F. variation, 'a variation,' from L. acc. variātōnem; vari-ance, Chaucer, C. T. 8586 (E 710), as if from L. variantia. And see vair, mine-var.

VASCULAR, consisting of vessels, as arteries, veins, &c. (L.) In Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -ar (from L. -āris) from L. vascul-um, a small vessel; formed with the double dimin. suffix -cul-ū, from vis, a vessel; see VASE. Der. vascular-ly.

VASE, a vessel, particularly an ornamented one. (F.—L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 122.—F. vase, 'a vessel;' Cot.—L. uasum, a vase, vessel; a collateral form of uas (gen. uas-is), a vessel; the pl. uasā is common, though the suffix -um is hardly used. β. L. uasum resembles Skt. vasāna, a receptacle, box, basket, water-jar; also, an envelope, cover, cloth; the orig. sense being perhaps 'case' or 'protecting cover.' Perhaps allied to Vest. Der. vas-cular; vessel.

VASELINE, a semi-fluid greasy substance, used in ointments, &c. A fanciful name; given by the maker. Said to have been suggested by G. wass(er), water, and Gk. ἐλ(αιον), oil; with F. suffix -ine. (Cent. Dict.)

VASSAL, a dependent. (F.—C.) In Spenser, Daphniaida, 181. Certainly in early use; the ME. vassal, however, is rare, though the derivative vasselage (vassalage) is in Chaucer, C. T. 3056 (A 3054), where it means 'good service' or prowess in arms; it has the same sense in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 86, l. 21, and in Gower (as cited in Richardson). [The word vassal, cited by Richardson from Rob. of Glouc., means vassail.]—AF. vassal, Philip de Thau, Livre des Creatures, l. 698; F. vassal, 'a vassal, subject, tenant;' Cot. (Cotgrave well explains the word.) The orig. sense is 'servant;' and the word is of Celtic origin, Latinised (in Low Latin) as vassallus, in which form it is extremely common. We also find the shorter form uasius or uasus, a servant; which occurs in the Lex Salica, ed. Heessels and Kern, coll. 55, 56.—Olfert. uas = was, Bret. gwaz, a servant, vassal; W. and Corn. gwaz, a youth, servant. Cf. OIrish foss, a servant. All from Celtic type wasos*, a servant; Stokes-Fick, p. 278. Cf. L. verna, a home-born slave. See VERNA. Der. vassal-ize; also varlet, valet.

VAST, great, of great extent. (F.—L.) We possess this word in two forms, viz. vast and waste, both being from French; the latter being much the older. They are generally used with different senses, but in the Owl and Nightingale, l. 17, we have: 'in ore waste pikke hegge' = in a vast thick hedge, in a great thick hedge. We may, however, consider vast as belonging to the 16th century; it does not seem to be much older than the latter part of that century. 'That mightie and waste sea;' Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 822.—F. vaste, 'vast;' Cot.—L. uasum, acc. of uasus, vast, of great extent. See further under WASTE. Der. vast, ab. Temp. i. 2. 327, Wint. Tale, i. 1. 33; vast-ly, vast-ness; also vast-y, adj., Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 41. Also de-vast-ate.

VAT, a large vessel for liquors. (E.) ME. fat. 'Fate, vassel;' Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has fatte; and the A. V. of the Bible has fats (Joel, ii. 24) and wine-fat (Mark, xii. 1). The difference between the words fat and vat is one of dialect; vat is Southern English, prob. Kentish. The use of v for f is common in Devonshire, Somersetshire, and in Old Kentish; the connexion of the word with Kent may have been due to the brewing trade; cf. vane, velch. AS. fæt (pl. fatu), a vessel, cask; Mark, iii. 27. 4. Du. vat; Icel. fat; Dan. fad; Swed. fat; G. fass; MHG. vaz. β. All from the Teut. type fatom*, n., a vat, a barrel. From the Teut. base fat-*, to catch, take, seize, comprehend, contain; cf. OIrish. fátia, El'ries. fáten, Du. vatten, to catch, take, contain, G. fassen, to seize, also to contain; so that the sense is 'that which contains.' Der. wine-fat or wine-vat.

VATICAN, the palace of the pope. (F.—L.) F. Vatican.—L. Vaticānus (mons), the Vatican hill in Rome.

VATICINATION, a prediction, prophecy. (F.—L.) 'This so clear vaticination;' Jeremy Taylor, Works (1835); ii. 333.—MF. vaticination, 'a prophesying;' Cot.—L. acc. vaticinātionem.—L. vaticināri, to prophesy; vaticinium, a prophecy.—L. vatic-, decl. stem of uātes, a prophet; and -cin-, weak grade of can-, to sing. Cf. Wood (2).

VAUDEVILLE, VAUDEVIL, a lively satirical song; a kind of drama. (F.) Spelt vaudevil in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. vaudeville, 'a country ballade, or song; so termed of Vaudevire, a Norman town, wherein Olivier Bassel (or Basselin), the first inventor of them, lived;' Cot. Olivier de Basselin was a Norman poet of the 15th century, and his songs were called after his native valley, the Vau (or Val, i. e. valley) de Vire; see VALS. Vire is a town in Normandy, to the S. of Bayeux.

VAULT (1), an arched roof, a chamber with an arched roof, esp.

one underground, a cellar. (F.-L.) The spelling with l is comparatively modern; it has been inserted, precisely as in faul, from pedantic and ignorant notions concerning 'etymological' spelling. The ME. form is voute, also voute; in King Alisaunder, 7210, it is spelt voute. 'Vout under the ground, voute; Palsgrave. 'Voute, lacunar; Voutayd, arculatus; Voutyn, or make a voute, arcu; Prompt. Parv.-MF. voute (also voute, with inserted l as in English), 'a vault, or arch, also, a vaulted or enbowed roof; Cot. OF. volte, voute, vante, a vault, cavern; Burguy (mod. F. voûte); where volte is a fem. form, from OF. volt, vaulted, lit. bent or bowed. Volte is the same word as Ital. volta, 'a time, a turn or course; a circuit, or a compass; also, a vault, cellar, an arch, bow; Florio. β. The OF. volt answers to L. volūtus, and the OF. volte, Ital. volta, to L. volūtā; these are abbreviated forms of volūtus (fem. volūtā), pp. of volvere, to roll, turn round; whence the later sense of bend round, bow, or arch. Similarly we have volute, in the sense of a spiral scroll. γ. Thus a vault means an arch, an arched roof; hence, a chamber with an arched roof, and finally a cellar, because it often has an arched roof, for the sake of strength. See Voluble. Der. vault, verb, to overarch, ME. vouten, as above; vault-ed, Cymb. i. 6. 33; vault-y, concave, Romeo, iii. 5. 22; vault-age, a vaulted room, Ilcen. V. ii. 4. 124.

VAULT (2), to bound, leap. (F.-Ital.-L.) 'Vaulting ambition; Macb. i. 7. 27.-MF. vouter, 'to vault; Cot.-MF. volte, 'a round or turn; and thence, the bounding turn which cunning riders teach their horses; also a tumbler's gambol; id.-Ital. volta, 'the turn that cunning riders teach their horses; Florio. The same word as Ital. volta, a vault; both from the orig. sense of 'turn; see further under Vault (1). Der. vault, sb., vault-er, vault-ing-horse.

VAUNT, to boast. (F.-L.) 'vaunte, I boiste, or crake, le me vante; Palsgrave. [It is remarkable that the ME. form was avaunten or avaunten, from OF. avaunter, to boast (Godefroy), in which the a- (from L. ad) was intensive, or may have been due to confusion with F. avant, before, and avauncer, to advance. This ME. avaunten occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 5985 (D 403), and at least twice in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1, l. 21, b. 1, pr. 4, l. 158; and hence the sb. avaunt, avaunt, avaunt, in Chaucer, C. T. 227. However, the prefix is to be neglected. Cf. avaunter, a vaunter, Chaucer, Troilus ii. 724.] 'F. vauter, 'se venter, to vaunt, brag, boast, glory, crack; Cot.-Late L. vanitäre, to speak vainly, flatter (Ducange); so that se venter = to speak vainly of oneself. (Diz remarks that vanitäre, to boast, occurs in S. Augustine, Opp. i. 437, 761.) This verb is a frequentative formed from L. vanus, vain. See Vain; and cf. L. vanitas, vanity. Der. vauant, sb., ME. avaunte; vauant-er, formerly avaunter (as above), or avaunter, Count of Love, 1219.

VAVASSOR, a vassal not holding immediately from the sovereign, but from a great lord, having inferior vassals under him. (F.-Late L.-C.) 'A worthy vavassour; Chaucer, C. T., prol. 360. = OF. vavassour. = Late L. vassus vassorum, lit. 'vassal of vassals.' The Late L. vassus is of Celtic origin; see Vassal.

VAWARD, another spelling of vanward or vanguard. (F.-L. and G.) In Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 209; and vanward, in Drayton, Battle of Agincourt, st. 218. Spelt vaaward, in Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, l. 602. See Van (1).

VEAL, the flesh of a calf. (F.-L.) ME. veel, Chaucer, C. T. 9294 (E 1420). = OF. veel, later vein, 'a calf, or veale; Cot.-L. vitellum, acc. of vitellus, a little calf, allied to vitulus, a calf. (Gk. βῆλος, the same (little used). Allied to Skt. vatsa-, a calf, vatsatara-, a steer, vatsalā, a cow anxious for her calf. β. All from Idg. vetos*, a year, as in Gk. eros, a year. See Wether. Hence the sense of Skt. vatsa- was really 'a yearling calf; and the same sense of 'yearling' was the orig. one of L. vitulus. γ. From the same sense of 'year', differently applied, we have L. vetus, old in years, aged, vetulus, a little old man. See Veteran. Der. veall, q. v.

VEDA, knowledge; one of the ancient sacred books written in Skt. (Skt.) Skt. veda-, 'knowledge; the generic name for the sacred writings of the Hindus, esp. the 4 collections called rig-veda, yajur-veda, sama-veda, and atharva-veda; Benfey, p. 900. Formed by gradation (Skt. ē = Gk. oi = AS. ō) from vid, to know, cognate with E. wit, q. v. The Skt. nom. case is vedas.

VEDETTE, VIDETTE, a cavalry sentinel. (F.-Ital.-L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. = MF. vedette, 'a sentry; any high place from which one may see afar off; Cot.-Ital. vedetta, a horse-sentry; also a sentry-box; formerly a watch-tower, a beacon, a peeping-hole (Florio). An altered or dimin. form of Ital. veduta, 'a high prospect' (Florio); orig. fem. pp. of vedere, to see. = L. videre, to see; see Vision. See Körtig, § 10156. ¶ Diz takes it to be an Ital. corruption of veletta, a sentry-box; due to confusion with vedere, to see (pp. velutus), from which veletta cannot (he thinks) be derived. Veletta is a dimin. of veligia, a watch, watching, vigil; just as Span. velita, a weather-cock (lit. a watcher), is a dimin. of Span. vela, a watching, vigil (Diz). = L. vigilia; see Vigil. But, as Körtig notes, the dimin. of veglia would have been veglietta, not veletta.

VEER, to turn round, change direction, swerve. (F.-L.) 'Vere the main shete; Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 1; 'and vereth his main sheat,' id. v. 12. 18. 'Vere the shete; Reliquia: Antiquae, l. 2 (15th cent.). [The spelling with e or ee is hard to explain; but it may have been due to the confusion between the sound of ee in late ME. and that of f. i. Sir P. Sidney writes vere; see Narces.] = F. vire, 'to veer, turn round, wheele or whirle about; Cot. β. The F. vire is the same word as Span. virar, birar, to wind, twist, tack, or veer, Port. virar, to turn, change, Prov. virar, to turn, to change (Bartsch). Allied words are Port. viravolta, a circular motion, Ital. virolare, 'to scrue, i. e. twist round (Florio); &c. The orig. sense is to turn round, and it appears as Late L. virare, which is rather an old word (Diz); it appears also in F. en-vir-on, round about, in a circle (whence F. environs), in F. vir-ole (whence E. ferrule), and in MF. vir-ol-et, 'a boy's windmill; Cot. γ. The key to this difficult word lies in the sense of 'ring' or 'circle' as appearing in envir-on and ferrule; the Late L. virola, a ring to bind anything, answers to L. virula, a bracelet, dimin. of viria, an armlet, large ring, see ferule in the pl. lorin viria. = WEL, to twist, wind round; see Ferrule, Withy. ¶ The Du. vieren, to veer, is merely borrowed (like our own word) from F. vire. The old derivation of vire from L. gyrere cannot possibly be sustained; even the above solution is doubtful. See Diz; and Körtig, § 10135. The latter refers (but obscurely) Late L. virare to WEL. Der. (from L. viria), en-vir-on, ferrule.

VEGETABLE, a plant for the table. (F.-L.) Properly an adj., as used by Milton, P. L. iv. 220. The pl. vegetables is given (both as E. and F.) in Supp. to Palsgrave, p. 1053. [Instead of vegetables, Shak. has vegetives, Pericles, iii. 2. 36; and Ben Jonson has vegetals, Alchemist, i. 1. 40.] = MF. vegetable, 'vegetable, fit or able to live; Cot.-L. vegetabilis, animating; hence, full of life. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from L. vegetare, to enliven, quicken. = L. vegetus, lively. = L. vegere, to excite, quicken, arouse; allied to vig-, wakeful, and vig-, to flourish. See Vigil, Vigorous. Der. (from vegetare) veget-ale; veget-al-ion, from F. vegetation, 'a giving of life; Cot.; veget-al-ive (Palsgrave), from F. vegetatif, 'vegetative, lively; Cot.; veget-al (as above), from MF. vegetal, 'vegetal; Cot.; veget-ar-i-an, a modern coined word, to denote a vegetable-arian, or one who lives on vegetables (though it should rather mean 'vigorous'); veget-ar-i-an-ism.

VEHEMENT, passionate, very eager. (F.-L.) In Palsgrave. = MF. vehement, 'vehement; Cot.-L. vehementem, acc. of vehemens, passionate, eager, vehement. Vehe- has been explained as equivalent to ve-, 'apart from,' as in ve-cors, senseless; cf. Skt. vahis, apart; cf. E. de-mend-ent. For mens, the mind, see Mental. Der. vehement-ly; vehemence (Levinus), from MF. vehemens, 'vehemence, from L. vehementin.

VEHICLE, a carriage, conveyance. (L.) 'Alms are but the vehicles of prayer; Dryden, Hind and Panther, l. 1400. Englished from L. vehiculum, a carriage. = L. veh-ere, to carry; with double dimin. suffix -culum. = WEG, to carry; whence also Skt. vah, to carry, Gk. ἄω-ω, a chariot. Brugmann, i. § 128. Der. vehicul-ar, from L. vehiculāris, adj. And see veil, con-vey, in-weigh, ves, vein, via-duct, voy-age.

VEIL, a curtain, covering, cover for the face, disguise. (F.-L.) ME. veile, Ancien Riwe, p. 420. = OF. veile (Burguy), later voile, 'a vail; Cot.-L. velum, a sail; also, a cloth, covering. The orig. sense was sail or 'propeller' of a ship; Curtius, i. 237. = Velum is for uexilum* = uec-silum; cf. nextilum, a standard. Brugmann, i. § 883. = L. ueh-ere (pt. t. ueh-i), to carry, bear along; see Vehicle. But Walke derives it from WEG, to weave; as seen in OIrish fig-im, I weave; cf. W. gwe, a web of cloth. Der. veil, verb, to veil.

VEIN, a tube conveying blood to the heart, a small rib on a leaf. (F.-L.) ME. veine, Gower, C. A. iii. 92 (bk. vii. 245); Chaucer has veins-blood, C. T. 2749 (A 2747). = F. veine, 'a vein; Cot.-L. uina, a vein. For uecna; perhaps (like ue-silum, see Veil) from L. ueh-ere, to carry; a vein being the 'conveyer' of blood. = WEG, to carry; see Vehicle. Der. vein-ed.

VELDT, an open grassy tract of country. (Du.) A term used in S. Africa. = MDu. veldt, 'a field, or a campaign, Hexam; Du. velt. The same word as AS. feld, a field; see Field.

VELLUM, prepared skin of calves, &c., for writing on. (F.-L.) ME. velim, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 204; spelt velyme in Prompt. Parv., and velym in Palsgrave. = F. velin, 'vellum; Cot. Mod. F. velin. (For the change of final n to m, compare venom.) = L. vitellinus, adj., belonging to a calf. = L. vitulus, a calf; see Veal. Cf. Late L. vitulinum, or pellis vitulina, vellum.

VELOCIPEDE, a light carriage for one person, propelled by the feet. (L.) Modern; coined from L. uēlōci-, from uēlōx, swift; and ped-, stem of pēs, the foot, cognate with E. Foot. Thus the sense is 'swift-foot,' or 'swift-footed.' See Velocity.

VELOCITY, great speed. (F.-L.) In Cotgrave. = MF. velocitē, 'velocity.' Cot. = L. acc. uēlōcitatem, acc. of uēlōcītis, swiftness, speed. = L. uēlōci-, decl. stem of uēlōx, swift; with suffix -itās. The lit. sense of uēlōx is 'flying'; if it be allied to uol-āre, to fly; see Volatile.

VELVET, a cloth made from silk, with a close, shaggy pile; also made from cotton. (F.-L.) Vdvet, or veluet, Velvetus; Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has the pl. uēlvetēs (four syllables). C. T. 10958, F 644; whilst Spenser has vellet, Shep. Kal., May, 185. (Again, the form velure occurs in Holinshed, Descr. of England, b. iii. c. 1 (R); which is borrowed from F. velours, 'velvet,' Cot.) But veluet, veluet, velouet, vellet are from AF. veluet, veluet, Late L. uēlūtum; from a Romanic type uēllūtum*. Allied to MItal. veluto, 'veluet,' Florio; mod. Ital. uēluto. β. The Ital. uēluto answers to a Late L. type uēllūtus*, shaggy, allied to L. uēllūsus, shaggy; whilst F. velours (OF. uēlours, the r being unoriginal) answers to L. uēllūsus directly. = L. uēllus, shaggy hair, a tuft of hair; so that veluet means 'woolly' or shaggy stuff, from its nap. Allied to uēllus, a fleece; see Wool. Der. veluet-y, veluet-ing.

VENAL, that can be bought, mercenary. (F.-L.) In Pope, Epistle to Jervas, l. 2. = MF. uenal, 'vendible, saleable.' Cot. = L. uēnālis, saleable, for sale. = L. uēn-us, or uēn-um, sale. Allied to (ik. uēnos, price, uēny, a buying; Brugmann, i. § 329. Der. uenal-i-ty, from MF. uēnālīs, 'venality,' Cot; from L. acc. uēnālītēm.

VEND, to sell. (F.-L.) 'Twenty thousand pounds worth of this coarse commodity is yearly . . . vended in the vicinage'; Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. = F. vendre, 'to sell.' Cot. = L. uēndere, to sell; contracted from uēnuūdere, to sell, which again stands for uēnuū dare, to offer for sale, a phrase which occurs in Claudian, &c. = L. uēnuū, sale; and dare, to give, offer; see Venal and Date (1). Der. uēnd-er or uēnd-or; uēnd-ible, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 112, from F. vendible, 'vendible,' Cot., from L. uēndibilis, saleable; we also find uēnd-able, a spelling due to MF. uēndāble (Cot.), formed from the F. verb uēndre; uēnd-ible-ly, uēnd-ible-ness.

VENDETTA, a blood-feud; esp. in Corsica. (Ital.-L.) Ital. uēndetta, lit. 'vengeance, revenge.' = L. uēndicta, revenge; see Vindictive.

VENEER, to overlay or face with a thin slice of wood. (G.-F. = OHG.) This curious word, after being borrowed by French from Old German, was again borrowed back from French, as if it had been foreign to the G. language. It is not old in E., and the sense has changed. It was orig. used with reference to marquetry-work. 'Veneering, a kind of inlaid work;' Phillips, ed. 1766. Johnson (quoting from Bailey) describes to veneer as signifying 'to make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine wood of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood.' Also formerly spelt finer, as in Old Farming Words (E. D. S.), Part 1; and finer, Smollett, France and Italy, let. 28 (Davies). The E. verb (older than the sb.) is borrowed from G. furniren, to inlay, to veneer, lit. 'to furnish' or provide small pieces of wood; from the careful arrangement of the pieces. = F. fournir, 'to furnish, supply, minister, find, provide [i.e. with], accommodate with;' Cot. A word of OHG. origin; see Furnish. Der. veneer, sb., veneering. Doublet, furnish.

VENERABLE, worthy of reverence. (F.-L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 167. = MF. uenerabile, 'venerable.' Cot. = L. uenerabilis, to be revered. = L. uenerārī, to reverence, worship, adore. = L. uener-, for uēnes-*, stem of uēnos, love; allied to Skt. van, to serve, to honour. = WEN, to love, to win; Fick, i. 768; Benfey, p. 812. See Venerable and Win. Der. uenerabl-y, uenerable-ness; also (from pp. uenerātus) uenerate, Geo. Herbert, The Church Porch, st. 45; ueneration, from MF. ueneration, 'ueneration,' Cot., from L. acc. uenerātīnem.

VENERIAL, pertaining to sexual intercourse. (L.) Spelt ueneriāl in Levins. Coined, with suffix -āl, from L. Venerius (also Venerius), belonging to Venus. [The MF. word is uenerien (Cotgrave), whence uenerian in Chaucer, C. T. 6191 (D 609).] = L. Vener-, for uēnes-*, stem of uēnos, Venus, love. Allied to Skt. van, to love. See Venerable and Win. Der. ueneri, sb., spelt uenerie in Levins, from L. Venerius.

VENERY, hunting, the sport of the chase. (F.-L.) ME. uenerie, Chaucer, C. T. 166. = MF. uenerie, 'a hunt, or hunting;' Cot. = MF. uener, 'to hunt;' id. = L. uēnārī, to hunt; see Venison.

VENESECTION, blood-letting. (L.; and F.-L.) According to Richardson, it is spelt uēnasection in Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 3. = L. uēna, uēnas, gen. case of uēna, a vein; and F. section. See Vein and Section.

VENUE, VENUE, VENEY, a thrust received at playing with weapons; a turn or bout at fencing. (F.-L.) In Merry Wives, i. 1. 296; J. L. L. v. 1. 62. = MF. uēnuē, 'a coming, arrival,' also a uēny in fencing, a turn, trick; Cot. The sense is 'an arrival,' hence a thrust that attains the person aimed at, one that reaches home. Vēnuē is the fem. of uēnu, pp. of uēnir, to come. = L. uēnīre, to come, cognate with E. Come, q.v. Doublet, venue, q.v.

VENGEANCE, retribution, vindictive punishment. (F.-L.) ME. uēngeance, uēngeance; but spelt uēngeance, King Alisaunder, 4194. = F. vengeance, 'vengeance;' Cot. = F. venger, 'to avenge, id.; with suffix -ance (< L. -antia). Cf. Span. uēngar, Ital. uēngiare. = L. uēndicāre, to lay claim to, also to avenge; cf. F. manger < L. manducāre. See Vindictive. Der. a-venge, re-venge (from F. venger); also venge-ful, i.e. avenge-ful, Tit. Andron. v. 2. 51; venge-ful-ly.

VENIAL, excusable, that may be pardoned. (F.-L.) ME. uenial (= uenial), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 16, l. 9; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 92. = OF. uenial (Littre). = L. uēnialis, pardonable. = L. uēnia, grace, favour, kindness; also, pardon. Allied to Skt. van, to love. = WEN, to love, win; see Venerable and Win. Der. uēnial-ly, uēnial-ness or uēnial-i-ty.

VENISON, the flesh of animals taken in hunting, esp. flesh of deer. (F.-L.) ME. uēnison; spelt uēnysoun, Havelok, 1726, uēnison, Rob. of Glouc. p. 243, l. 101. = OF. uēnison (Burguy), later uēnison, 'venison, the flesh of (edible) beasts of chase, as the deer, wild boar, &c., Cot. = L. uēndicātīnem, acc. of uēnditio, the chase; also, that which is hunted, game; cf. uēnātus, pp. of uēnārī, to hunt. See Gain (2). Der. (from L. uēnārī) uēnary, q.v.

VENOM, poison. (F.-L.) ME. uenim; spelt uēnyne, King Alisaunder, 2860; uēnyne, Rob. of Glouc. p. 43, l. 1010. = OF. uenim, 'venome,' Cot. We also find OF. uēlin, mod. F. uēnin. = L. uēnēnum, poison. (For change of n to m, cf. uēllum.) Perhaps uēnēnum is for uēnesnum*, a love-poison; from uēnes-, uēnos; cf. uēnos, love. Der. uēnom-ous, ME. uēnitomus, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 203, l. 17, from F. uēnimex; 'venomous,' Cot., from L. uēnēnōsus, pulsonous; uēnomous-ly, -ness.

VENOUS, contained in a vein. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from L. uēnōsus, belonging to a vein. = L. uēna, a vein; see Vein.

VENT (1), an opening for air or smoke, an air-hole, flue. (F.-L.) 'A vent, meatus, porus; To vent, aperire, euacuare;' Levins. Halliwell gives Somerset uent-hole, a button-hole in a wristband. It is most likely that the word has been connected in popular etymology with F. vent, the wind, as if it were a hole to let wind or air in; but the senses of 'aperture' and 'wind' are widely different. The older spelling was uent or fente, used in the sense of slit in a garment, whence the notion of 'button-hole.' The Prompt. Parv. gives: 'Fente of a clothe, fibulatorium,' on which Way notes that 'the fent or vent, in the 13th cent., appears at the collar of the robe, . . . being a short slit closed by a brooch, which served for greater convenience in putting on a dress so fashioned as to fit closely round the throat;' see the whole note. 'The collar and the uente;' Assemblée of Ladies, 526. 'Fent of a gowne, fente;' Palsgrave. The sense was easily extended to slits and apertures of all kinds, esp. as the F. original was unrestricted. = F. fente, 'a cleft, rift, chink, slit, cranny;' Cot. A participial sb. from the verb uēndre, to cleave. = L. uēndere, to cleave; see Fissure. Der. uent, verb, to emit from an orifice, as in 'can he uent [emit] Trinculos?' Temp. ii. 2. 111; but it is tolerably certain that the use of this verb was influenced by F. vent, wind; see Vent (3). And see Vent (2).

VENT (2), sale, utterance of commodities, and hence, generally, utterance, outlet, publication. (F.-L.) 'The merchant-adventurers likewise . . . did hold out bravely; taking off the commodities . . . though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent;' Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 146, l. 6. 'Vent of utterance of the same,' viz. of 'spices, drugges, and other commodities;' Hakluyt's Voyages, l. 347. 'Find the meanes to have a vent to make sales;' id. i. 356. = F. uente, 'a sale, or selling, an alienation, or passing away for money,' &c.; Cot. Vente is a participial sb. from the F. uēndre, 'to sell,' Cot. = L. uēndere, to sell; see Vend. Der. uent, to utter, as in: 'when he found ill money had been put into his hands, he would never suffer it to be uēnted again,' Burnet, Life of Hale (R); but it is tolerably certain that the use of uent as a verb has been largely influenced by confusion with Vent (1) and Vent (3), and it is extremely difficult to determine its complete history without very numerous examples of its use.

VENT (3), to snuff up air, breathe, or puff out, to expose to air. (F.-L.) 'See howe he [a bullock] uēnteth into the wynd;' Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. 75. Explained by 'snuffeth in the wind' in the Glosse, but more likely it means to puff out or exhale. In Spenser,

F. Q. iii. 1. 42, we are told that Britomart 'vented' her umbriere. And so did let her goodly visage to appear.' Here the poet was probably thinking of F. vent, the wind, and of the part of the helmet called the ventail or aventail, which was the lower half of the movable front of a helmet as distinct from the upper half or visor, with which it is often confused; see my note on aventail in Chaucer, C. T. Group E, 1204. If we had a large collection of quotations illustrative of the use of vent as a verb, I suspect it would appear that the connexion with the F. vent, wind, was due solely to a misunderstanding and misuse of the word, and that it is etymologically due to Vent (1) or Vent (2), or to confusion of both; and, in particular, to inability to account for Vent (1), shown above to be used in place of MF. fente. That writers used the word with reference to air is certain; we have: 'there's none [air] abroad so wholesome as that you vent;' Cymb. i. 2. 5; also: 'which have poisoned the very air of our church wherein they were vented;' 1st Hall, Ser. Eccel. iii. 4 (R.); and hence the sb. ventage, venting-hole (see below).—F. vent, 'the (wind) to blow or puffe,' Cot.—F. vent, the wind.—L. ventum, acc. of ventus, wind, cognate with L. Wind, q.v. Dor. vent-age, the air-hole of a flute (app. a coined word), Hamlet, iii. 2. 373; vent-ing-hole, an outlet for vapour, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxi. c. 3. § last. And see vent-ail, vent-il-ate.

VENTAIL, the lower half of the movable part of the front of a helmet. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 24, iv. 6. 19. ME. ventaille, Early E. Wills, ed. Fumivall, p. 19, l. 4 (1411); also aventaille, Chaucer, C. T. 9080 (E 1204), which is the same word with the addition of F. prefix a- (<L. ad-).—AF. ventaille, Langtoft, ii. 428; MF. ventaille, the breathing-part of a helmet.—F. vent, 'to blow or puffe,' Cot.; with suffix -ale <L. -a-cu-lum.—F. vent, wind.—L. ventum, acc. of ventus, wind; see Vent (3), Ventilate, and Wind.

VENTILATE, to fan with wind, to open to air, expose to air or to the public view. (L.) Spelt ventilate in Palsgrave. Ventilate is used as a pp. by Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 25, § 3; and in Trevisa, ii. 141, 299 (later text).—L. ventilare, pp. of ventilare, to blow, winnow, ventilate. From an adj. ventilus* (not used), from ventus, wind, cognate with F. Wind. Dor. ventilat-or, from L. ventilator, a winnower; ventilat-ion, MF. ventilation, 'a ventilation, breathing,' Cot., from L. acc. ventilatiōem.

VENTRAL, belonging to the belly. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson.—L. ventrālis, belonging to the belly.—L. ventr, for venter, the belly. Dor. ventri-er, q.v.; ventri-logist, q.v.

VENTRICLE, the stomach; a part of the heart. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave, and in Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 113. F. ventricule, 'the ventricle, the place wherein the meat stow from the stomach is digested, some call so the stomach itself;' Cot.—L. ventriculus, acc. of ventriculus, the stomach, also a ventricle of the heart. A double dimn. (with suffix -culus) from ventri, decl. stem of venter, the belly; see Ventral. Dor. ventricul-ae.

VENTRILLOQUIST, one who speaks so that the voice seems to come from a distance or from some one else. (L.) 'Ventriloquium, a speaking in the belly;' Adv. Discovery of Witches (1661), p. 77. In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674; but Phillips has ventriloquus, 'a person that speaks inwardly;' this is the true L. word, whence ventriloquist has since been formed, by adding the suffix -ist (L. -ista, Gk. -αγγελος).—L. ventriloquus, a ventriloquist, lit. one who speaks from (or in) the belly.—L. ventri, decl. stem of venter, the belly; and loqui, to speak; see Ventral and Loquacious. Dor. ventriloqu-ism.

VENTURE, chance, luck, hazard. (F.—L.) Common in Shak. both as sb. and vb.; as sb., Merch. Ven. i. 3. 92; as a verb, ib. iii. 2. 10. It is a headless form of ME. aventure or aventure, which also took the form Adventure, q.v. Dor. venture, adv. Mide. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 39, short for ME. aventureus, later adventureus; ventur-ous-ly, -ness. Also venture-some, in Strype, Eccles. Mem., Henry VIII, an. 1546 (R.), where the suffix -some is English.

VENUE, the same as Venew, q.v. (F.—L.) As a law-term it is the place where the jury are summoned to come; from F. venir, 'a coming, arrival, approach, a passage, access,' Cotgrave; which is merely another sense of venew, as above. β. Blackstone has: 'a change of the venue, or visme (that is, the vicinia or neighbourhood in which the injury is declared to be done);' Comment. b. iii. c. 20. His interpretation of visme as having the same sense as L. vicinia is right; but that has nothing to do with the etymology of venue, which is, of course, a different word. Dor. a-venue.

VENUS, the goddess of love. (L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1538 (A 1536).—L. Venus; see Venerable.

VERACIOUS, truthful. (L.) A late word; Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the sb. veracity. Coined from L. veraci, decl. stem of verax, truthful; with suffix -ous.—L. verax, true. β. The orig. sense is 'credible;' see Very. Dor. verac-i-ty, Englished from L. veraciās, truthfulness.

VERGE

VERANDA, VERANDAH, a kind of covered balcony. (Port.—L. P.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson; it should be spelt varanda. 'The other gate leads to what in this country [India] is called a veranda or feranda, which is a kind of piazza or landing-place before you enter the hall or inner apartments;' Archaeologia (1787), viii. 254.—Port. varanda, a balcony. Marsden, in his Malay Dict., 1812, p. 30, has: 'barandak (Portuguese), a varanda, balcony, or open gallery to a house;' but the Malay word is, as Marsden says, adapted from the Portuguese. Cf. OSpan. varanda, in the sense of balustrade or stair-railing; as early as A.D. 1505; see the quotation in Yule. Perhaps from Port. and Span. vara, a rod; from L. vira, a forked pole. Cf. Port. varal, the shaft of a post-chaise. Dryden has vara, a rod; Abalom, i. 535. Hence also mod. Skt. varanā, a portico; the Skt. (or Hind.) word being quite modern. Minshew's Span. Dict. (1623) has 'Vara, a rod;' and 'Varanda, railles to lean the breast on.'

VERB, the word; in grammar, the chief word of a sentence. (F.—L.) ME. verbe (15th cent.), Kellig, Antiqua, ii. 14. Palsgrave gives a 'Table of Verbes'—F. verbe, 'a verbe;' Cot.—L. verbum, a word, a verb. β. Here the L. b represents an Idg. dh (<Tent. d), and verbum is cognate with F. Word, q.v.—WER, to speak; cf. Gk. εἰπ-ειν (<φip-yein), to speak; Fick, i. 772. Dor. verb-al (Palsgrave), from F. verbal, 'verball', Cot., from L. verbalis, belonging to a word; verbal-ly, verbal-ize, to turn into a verb, a coined word; verbal-ism; verbi-age, wordiness, not in Johnson's Dict., but used by him on April 9, 1778 (Howell), from F. verbage, a late F. word, coined (according to Littré) from OF. verbaier ('verbier'), to talk; verb-ous, wordy (Phillips), from L. verbosus; verb-ous-ly, verb-ous-ness, verb-ous-ly. Also verbatim, 1 Hen. vi, iii. 1. 13, from L. verbatim, adv. word by word.

VERBENA, vervain. (L.) See Vervain.

VERDANT, verdant, flourishing. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 13. Coined as if from a *F. verdant, substituted for F. verdissant, pres. part. of verdir, 'to flourish, to wax green;' Cot.—F. verd, green.—L. viridē, acc. of viridis, green. See Vert. Cf. also OF. verdoyant, becoming green (Suppl. to Godefroy). Dor. verdant-ly, verdanc-y; also verd-ure, Temp. i. 2. 87, from F. verdure, 'verdure,' Cot.; also verdur-ous (Nares). And see furthright, verdigris, verjuice.

VERDERER, a wood-ward, forester. (F.—L.) 'Forresters, verderers;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. iv. let. 16. Formed by adding -er (needlessly) to AK. verder, which is glossed by 'wode-ward' in W. de Ribbesworth, Wright's Voc. i. 164.—Late L. viridarius, a forester (Ducange).—L. virid-er, green (above).

VERDICT, the decision of a jury, decision. (F.—L.) Lit. 'a true saying.' The true word is verdict, pelantically altered to the mongrel form verdict, to bring the latter half of it nearer to the L. spelling. ME. verdict, Chaucer, C. T. 789 (A 787).—OF. verdit, a verdict; see verdict in Littré, the mod. F. form being borrowed again from English.—L. veridictum, truly said, which passed into Late L. veridictum, with the sense of true saying or verdict, occurring A.D. 1287 (Ducange). Formed similarly to bene-diction, male-diction.—L. verū, truly, adv., from verus, true; and dictum, a saying, orig. neut. of pp. of dicere, to say; see Very and Diction.

VERDIGRIS, the rust of bronze, copper, or brass. (F.—L.) Spelt verdigrise in Arnold's Chronicle (1502), repr. 1811, p. 74; verdigrise, Chaucer, C. T. 16258 (G 790). Cf. MF. verd de gris, 'verdigrise, Spanish green,' Cot.; spelt verte grez in the 13th cent. (Littré). But the l'rompt. Parv. has: 'Verte grece, verde green, flus eris.' So also: 'Viride grecum, verdigrise;' Wright's Voc. 619. 35. Hence the sense is 'Grek green,' or 'green of Greece'; and we may explain ME. verte grece as from AF. vert de Grece, for which see Vic de S. Gile, 853. See Verdant. See Academy, no. 1118, Oct. 1893.

VERDITER, a green pigment. (F.—L.) Adapted from MF. verd de terre, a green pigment; Cot.—L. acc. viridē, green (see Verdant); de, of; terra, earth.

VERGE (1), a wand of office, extent of jurisdiction, edge, brink. (F.—L.) In the sense of edge or brink it is quite a different word from verge, to incline (see below), though some late writers may have confused the words, as indeed is done in Johnson's Dict. The sense of 'edge' follows at once from the use of verge (as a law-term) to mean a limit or circuit, hence a circle, Rich. II, ii. 1. 102; cf. i. 1. 93. In the sense of 'wand,' it is best known by the derivative verger, a wand-bearer. MF. verge. β. Verge, in a wrytis [wright's] wand, Virgata;' Prompt. Parv. Here it must mean a yard (in length); cf. verge la roy, a standard length; Liber Albus, p. 275.—F. verge, 'a rod, wand, stick; also, a sergeant's verge or mace; also, a yard; . . . a plaine hoopo, or gimball, ring; also, a rood of land;' Cot.—L. virga, a twig, rod, wand. Dor. verg-er, a wand-bearer, 'that bereth a rodde in the churche' (Palsgrave), from MF. verger, 'one that bears a verge before a magistrate, a vergier', Cot., from Late L. virgarius, an apparitor, occurring A.D. 1370 (Ducange).

VERGE (v), to tend towards, tend, slope, border on. (L.) 'Verging more and more westward'; Fuller, Worthies, Somersetshire (R.). = L. vergere, to bend, turn, incline, verge towards, incline. Allied to Skt. vrjāna, crooked, vrj, to exclude (of which the orig. sense seems to be to bend, Benfey). = $\sqrt{\text{WEG}}$, to bend, turn, force; Fick, i. 772. ¶ The phrase 'to be on the verge of' is perhaps connected with this verb by many writers; but belongs to VERGE (1). Der. con-verge, di-verge.

VERIFY, to show to be true, confirm by evidence. (F.-L.) 'I verify, Je vérifie'; Palsgrave. = MF. verifier, 'to verify'; Cot. = L. verificāre, to make true. = L. veris, for verus, true; and -ficāre, for facere, to make; see VERY and FACT. Der. verifi-er, verifi-able, verifi-cation, from MF. verification, 'a verification, verifying'; Cot. verifi-ly, adv.; see VERY.

VERISIMILITUDE, likelihood. (F.-L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 845 (R.). = MF. verisimilitude, 'likelihood'; Cot. = L. verisimilitudo, likelihood. = L. veris similis, likely, like the truth. = L. veris, gen. of verum, the truth, orig. neut. of verus, true; and similis, like; see VERY and SIMILAR.

VERITY, truth, a true assertion. (F.-L.) Spelt veritie in Levins. = MF. verité, 'verity'; Cot. = L. veritatem, acc. of veritas, truth. = L. verus, true; see VERY. Der. verit-able, spelt veritable in Palsgrave, from MF. veritable, 'true', Cot., a coined word.

VERJUICE, a kind of vinegar. (F.-L.) ME. verjuice, verjuis, P. Plowman, A. v. 70 (footnote). = F. verjus, 'verjuice', esp. that which is made of sower, and unripe grapes'; Cot. Lit. 'green juice.' = F. vert (spelt verd in Cotgrave), green; and jus, juice; see Verdant and Juice.

VERMIL, vermilion. (F.-L.) 'A vermilion-tinctured lip'; Milton, Comus, 752. = F. vermeil, vermilion; see VERMILION.

VERMICELLI, dough of wheat flour formed into thin worm-like rolls. (Ital.-L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Ital. vermicelli, lit. 'little worms'; from the shape. It is the pl. of vermicello, a little worm, which is the dimin. of verme, a worm. = L. vermen, acc. of vermis, a worm, cognate with E. Worm.

VERMICULAR, pertaining to a worm. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vermiculars, certain muscles, &c.; Vermicularis, worm-grass, lesser house-leek; Vermiculat, inlaid, wrought with checker-work; Vermiculatio, worm-eating'; &c. All are derivatives from L. vermiculus, a little worm, double dimin. of vermis, a worm; see Worm. Der. So also vermi-form, worm-shaped; from vermi, decl. stem of vermis, and form; also vermi-fuge, a remedy that expels a worm, from L. fugis, putting to flight, from fugare, to put to flight; see Fugitive. And see vermilion, vermin, vermicelli.

VERMILION, a scarlet colouring substance obtained from cochineal, &c. (F.-L.) 'Vermilyone, minium'; Prompt. Parv.; spelt vermyllion, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 7 (later version). = F. vermillon, 'vermilliou'; also, a little worm; Cot. = F. vermeil, 'vermillion'; id. = L. vermiculus, a little worm; double dimin. of vermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm. ¶ For the reason of the name, see Crimson and Cochineal; but vermilion is now generally made of red lead, or various mineral substances, and must have been so made at an early date; it was perhaps named merely for its resemblance to crimson.

VERMIN, any small obnoxious insect or animal. (F.-L.) MF. vermine, Chaucer, C. T. 8971 (E 1095). = F. vermine, 'vermine'; also little beasts ingested of corruption and filth, as lice, fleas, ticks, mice, rats'; Cot. As if from a L. adj. verminus*, formed from vermi, decl. stem of vermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm.

VERNACULAR, native. (L.) 'In the vernacular dialect'; Fuller, Worthies, General (R.); and in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount has vernaculus. Formed with suffix -ar (L. -arius) from L. vernācul-us, belonging to home-born slaves, domestic, native, indigenous; double dimin. of L. verna, a home-born slave. β . Verna is for ves-na*, dwelling in one's house, from $\sqrt{\text{VES}}$, to dwell, live, be; see WAS. Brugmann, ii. § 66. Der. vernacular-ly.

VERNAL, belonging to spring. (L.) Spelt vernall in Minshew, ed. 1627. = L. vernalis, vernal; extended from L. vernus, belonging to spring. = L. ver, the spring. + Gk. top (for fisop*), the spring; Russ. vesna, the spring; Lithuan. vasara, summer; Icel. vár; Dan. vår; Swed. vår. β . All from $\sqrt{\text{VES}}$, to brighten, dawn; cf. Skt. vasanta, spring, usk. to burn, L. aurora, dawn; OIrish fúir, W. gwasur, dawn. Fick, i. 780.

VERNIER, a short scale made to slide along a graduated instrument for measuring intervals between its divisions. (F.) So named from its inventor (1631). 'Peter Vernier, of Franche Comté; inventor of scale, born 1580, died Sept. 14, 1637'; Hole, Brief Biographical Dictionary.

VERSATILE, turning easily from one thing to another. (F.-L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. versatil, 'quickly turning'; Cot. = L. versatilis, that turns round, movable, versatile. = L. versare, to turn often, frequentative of vertere, to turn (pp. versus); see VERSE. Des. versatil-ly.

VERSE, a line of poetry, poetry, a stanza, short portion of the Bible or of a hymn. (L.) In very early use, and borrowed from Latin directly, not through the F. vers. 'Verse, vers, Versus'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt fers in the Ormulum, 11943. AS. fers, a verse, a line of poetry; 'hū man tādēlles þā fers on rādēlge' = how one divides the verse in reading; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 291, l. 2. = Late L. versus, a verse; L. versus, a turning, a line, row; so named from the turning to begin a new line. [Vanček separates versus a furrow, which he connects with vertere, to sweep.] = L. versus, pp. of vertere, to turn. = $\sqrt{\text{WERT}}$, to turn; whence also E. worth, verb, to become; see Worth (1). Der. vers-ed, Milton, P. R. iv. 327, only in the phr. versed in conversant with, and used (instead of versed) as a translation of L. versutus, pp. of versari, to keep turning oneself about, passive form of the frequentative of vertere; and see vers-ify, vers-ion, &c. Also (from versare) ad-vert, ad-verse, ad-vert-ise, anim-ad-vert, anni-vers-ary, a-vert, con-verse, con-vert, con-vert-er, di-vert, di-vers, di-versa, di-vers-ify, di-versor, e-vert, in-ad-vert-ent, intro-vert, in-vert, in-versa, mal-ad-vert, ob-verse, per-vert, per-verse, re-vert, re-verse, sub-vert, sub-vers-ion, tergi-versation, trans-verse, tra-verse, uni-versa, vers-at-ile, vert-ebra, vert-ig-o, vert-ix; and see vert.

VERSIFY, to make verses. (F.-L.) ME. versifier, P. Plowman, B. xv. 367. = F. versifier, 'to versify'; Cot. = L. versificāre, to versify. = L. versis, for versus, a verse; and -ficāre, for facere, to make; see VERSE and FACT. Der. versific-ation, in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 977 (R.). From F. versification (omitted by Cotgrave), from L. acc. versificationem; versifi-er, Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 49.

VERSION, a translation, statement. (F.-L.) Formerly used in the sense of turning or change; Bacon's Essays, Ess. 58 (Of Vicissitude). = F. version, a version, a translation (not given in Cotgrave). = Late L. versio, acc. of versio, regularly formed from vers, as in vers-us, pp. of vertere, to turn.

VERST, a Russian measure of length. (Russ.) In Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 388, l. 306. = Russ. versta, a verst, 3,500 Eng. feet, a verst; also, age. For vert-ast*; from $\sqrt{\text{WERT}}$, as in Russ. vertis(e), to turn. Brugmann, ii. § 79.

VERT, green, in heraldry. (F.-L.) In Blount, ed. 1674. From F. vert, green; formerly verd. Cot. = L. viridem, acc. of viridis, green. Cf. L. viridis, to be green. + W. gwyrdd, green; Corn. gwirt. Or (if these Celtic words are borrowed from L.) perhaps allied to virid; cf. Skt. ji-ra-, active, ji-va-, living. Brugmann, ii. § 74.

VERTEBRA, one of the small bones of the spine. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = L. vertebra, a joint, a vertebra. = L. vert-ere, to turn; see VERSE. Der. vertebr-al, a coined word; vertebr-ate, vertebr-at-ed, from L. vertebrātus, jointed.

VERTEX, the top, summit. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; the adj. vertical is in Cotgrave. = L. vertex, the top, properly the turning-point, esp. the pole of the sky (which is the turning-point of the stars), but afterwards applied to the zenith. = L. vert-ere, to turn; see VERSE. An older form of vertex was vortex. Brugmann, i. § 144. Der. vertic-al, from F. vertical, 'verticall', Cot., from L. vertic-ilis, vertical, from vertic-, stem of vertex. Hence vertical-ly. Doublet, vortex.

VERTIGO, giddiness. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = L. vertigo (gen. vertigin-is), a turning or whirling round, giddiness. = L. vert-ere, to turn; see VERSE.

VERVAIN, a plant of the genus verbena. (F.-L.) ME. verweyne, Gower, C. A. ii. 262 (bk. v. 4039). = F. verveine, 'verveine'; Cot. = L. vervina, used in pl. vervina, sacred boughs, usually of olive, laurel, or myrtle. Allied to verber, a rod, properly a twig, shoot.

VERVE, spirit, energy, enthusiasm. (F.-L.) 'If he... is resolved to follow his own verve, as the French call it'; Dryden, Ded. of the Æneid. = F. verve, 'a bawling, jangling, jarring'; also, an odd humour in a man'; Cot. Suggested to represent a Late L. verva*, for L. verba, lit. 'words', i.e. talk, a neut. pl. treated as a fem. sing.; pl. of L. verbum, a word; see Verb. (So Hatfield.)

VERY, true, real, actual. (F.-L.) ME. verrai, verrai; 'verrey charite' = true charity, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 289; 'verrai man' = true man, id. C. xxii. 153. It occurs as verray in An Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 27, l. 26, in the O. Kentish Sermons (about A.D. 1240). = OF. verai, later vrai (in Cotgrave vray). True. Cf. Prov. vrai, true. It answers to a Late L. type verācus*, not found; similarly, Scheler compares F. Cambrai, Douai from L. Cambracum, Diocum.

Cf. Schwan, § 56. This vericus* is a by-form of L. uerax (stem uérac-), truthful, extended from uérus, true (represented in OF. by ver, veir, voir, true). β. The orig. sense of uérus is 'existing'. For ues-ro-*, from WES, to be. W. gwir, Olfrish fir, true; cf. Russ. vera, faith; G. wahr, true; AS. wær, true. Brugmann, i. § 367; § 818 (note 3). Der. very, adv., as in 'very well', i.e. truly well, Sir T. More, Works, p. 108 h; verily, adv., ME. verailly, verailly, Chaucer, C. T. 13590 (B 1850). Also (from L. uérus) verily, verisimilar, verily, ver-acious; ver-dict; a-ver.

VESICLE, a small tumour, bladder-like cell. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vesicula, a vesicle, or little bladder.' Englished from L. uiscula, a little bladder; dimin. of uésica, a bladder. Allied to Skt. vasti-, the bladder. Der. vesicul-ar, adj.; also vesic-ul-ion, the raising of blisters on the skin.

VESPER, the evening star; the evening; pl. verspers, even-song. (L.) In the ecclesiastical sense, the word does not seem to be old, as the E. name for the service was even-song or even-song. Vesper occurs in Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 7 (K.). or see the Index to Parker Soc. Publications. But we already find vesper, in the sense of evening-star, in Gower, C. A. ii. 100 (bk. iv. 3209). = L. vesper, the evening-star, the evening; cf. uespera, even-tide. Hence OF. vespre (F. vèpre), 'the evening', Cot., and vespres, 'even-song', id. W. gwir, vepr, adj. and sb., evening, twepes dorrip, the evening star; twépa, even-tide; Olfrish feser, W. ucher, evening. Brugmann, i. § 329, 365 (3); Stokes-Fick, p. 278.

VESSEL, a utensil for holding liquids, &c., a ship. (F.-L.) ME. vesel, Chaucer, C. T. 5682 (D 100). = AF. vesel, a vessel, OF. vaisel, vaisel, a ship (Burguy); later vaisseau, 'a vessel, of what kind soever'; Cot. = L. uncellum, a small vase or urn; dimin. of uis, a vase, whence also the dimin. unsculum; and see VASULAR, VASE.

VEST, a garment, waistcoat. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 241. = L. vestis, a garment; orig. the act of putting on clothes (Bréal). Formed (with Idg. suffix -it-) from WES, to clothe, protect; cf. Skt. vas, to put on (clothes), Gk. φύω (φύω), I clothe, φύω, clothing, Goth. gawansjan, to clothe, wasit, clothes; Curtius, i. 470. Der. vest, vb., formerly used in such phrases as to vest one with supreme power, and (less properly) to vest supreme power in one; see Phillips, ed. 1706; hence vest-ed, fully possessed. And see vest-ment, vest-ure. Also di-vest, in-vest, tra-vest.

VESTAL, chaste, pure. (F.-L.) As adj. in Shak. Romeo, iii. 3: 38; as sb., a Vestal virgin, priestess of Vesta, Antony, iii. 12: 31. = F. vestal, a Vestal virgin; see Cotgrave. = L. Vestalis, belonging to a Vestal, also (for Vestilis uirgo), a priestess of Vesta. = L. Vesta, a Roman goddess; goddess of the flock and household. W. Eoria, daughter of Chronos and Rhea, goddess of the domestic hearth. = WES, to dwell (Waldic). See WAS.

VESTIBULE, a porch. (L.) In Swinburne, Travels in Spain, p. 216. Phillips has only the L. form vestibulum. Englished from L. vestibulum, a fore-court, entrance-court, entrance. Lit. 'that which forms a part of the abode.' Perhaps from L. uesit-, a dwelling; with suffix -bulum, as in sesit-bulum, a seat. Cf. Skt. vasta, vástā, a house, OHG. waist, an abode; from WES, to dwell (Waldic).

VESTIGE, a foot-print, a trace. (F.-L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. vestige, 'a step, foot-step, track, trace'; Cot. = L. uestigium, a foot-step, track. β. Of doubtful origin; see Walde.

VESTIMENT, a garment, long robe. (F.-L.) ME. vestiment; pl. vestiments, Ancren Riwle, p. 418. This form occurs as late as in Spenser, W. G. iii. 12: 29; whilst the Prompt. Parv. has both vest-ment and vestiment. = OF. vestement, 'a vestment'; Cot. (Mod. F. vêtement) = L. vestimentum, a garment. = L. uesit-re, to clothe. = L. uesit-, decl. stem of uésit; see VEST.

VESTRY, place for keeping vestments. (F.-L.) ME. vestrye, Prompt. Parv. Slightly altered from OF. vestiaire, whence MF. vestiaire, 'the vestry in a church'; Cot. = L. uesitarius, a warrior; orig. neut. of uesitarius, adj., belonging to a vest or robe. = L. uesit-, decl. stem of uésit, a garment; see VEST.

VESTURE, dress, a robe. (F.-L.) In P. Plowman, B. i. 23. = OF. vesture, MF. vesture, 'a clothing, arraying'; Cot. = Late L. uesitarius, clothing. = L. uesit-us, pp. of uésit to clothe. = L. uesit-, decl. stem of uésit; see VEST. Cf. F. in-vestiture.

VETCH, a genus of plants. (F.-L.) The same as fitch; pl. fitches, Isaiah xxviii. 25, Ezek. iv. 9 (A.V.). In the earlier of Wyclif's versions of Isaiah xxviii. 25, the word is written fèche, and in the later fitchis. Baret (Alvarius) gives: Fitches, Vicia. Plin. Blavir; A. vinciendo, vt. Varroni placet; Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. For the variation of the initial letter, cf. fane and vane, fat and vat; for the variation is dialectal, and in the present case the right form is that with initial v. The correct ME. spelling would be veche; we actually find 'Orobus, wech' in Voc. 599. 26; also 'Hec uicia, Anglice fèche' in Voc. 664. 24; in a vocabulary strongly marked by Northern forms; fèche being the Northern form corresponding to the Southern veche. = ONorth. F. veche (Walloon veche), OF. vece, MF. vesce, a vetch. Palgrave has: 'Fèche, a lytell pease, uesce, ueche, lentille;' whilst Cotgrave has: 'Vence, the pulse called fitch or vitch.' = L. uicia, a vetch; whence also G. wicke, D. wikke. β. As the vetch has tendrils, Varro's derivation is perhaps to be accepted; viz. from the base WEIK, to bind, as appearing in vincere, to bind, uinea, a plant (orig. a climbing one). Cf. WEL, to wind, whence L. uilit, a vine, ui-men, a plant twig. See Witchy.

VETERAN, experienced, long exercised in military life. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = L. ueteranus, old, veteran, experienced; as sb., a veteran. = L. ueter-, for uete-*, stem of uetus, old, aged; lit. 'advanced in years'. Cf. Gk. ἔτος (= féros), a year, Skt. vatsa-, a year. See Veal. Der. veteran, sb. From the same base as veter-in-ary, in-veter-ate, veal, wether.

VETERINARY, pertaining to the art of treating diseases of domestic animals. (L.) 'Veterinarius, he that lets horses or mules to hire, a hackney-man, also a horse-leech or farrier;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Sir T. Browne has veterinarian as a sb., Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 2, § 1. = L. ueterinarius, of or belonging to beasts of burden; as sb., a cattle-doctor. = L. ueterinus, belonging to beasts of burden; pl. ueterine (sc. bestiæ), beasts of burden. β. The L. ueterina probably meant, originally, an old animal, one that was no longer fit for anything but carrying burdens; from the same base as that which occurs in uetus (gen. ueter-is), old; see Veteran and Veal. And see Wether. Der. veterin-ary, as above.

VETO, a prohibition. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. = L. ueto, I forbid; hence, the saying of 'I forbid,' i.e. a prohibition. OL. ueto. Der. ueto, verb.

VEX, to harass, torment, irritate. (F.-L.) ME. vesen, Prompt. Parv. = F. vexer, 'to vex'; Cot. = L. uexare, to vex, orig. to shake; of doubtful origin. Der. vex-nt-ism, from F. vexation, 'vexation', Cot., from L. acc. uexationem; vex-at-i-ous, vex-at-i-ous-ly, vex-at-i-ousness.

VIADUCT, a road or railway carried across a valley or river. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from L. uia ducta, a way conducted across; from L. uia, a way, and ducta, fem. of ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead, conduct; see Duct, Duke. Prob. coined in imitation of aqueduct. β. L. uia was formerly written uea, and some connect it with F. way; which can hardly be right. Der. uianicum, a doublet of viage, q. v.; also con-uea, co-uey, de-ue-ate, de-ue-i-ous, en-uey, im-per-ue-i-ous, in-voice, ob-ue-ate, ob-ue-i-ous, per-ue-i-ous, tri-ue-ate.

VIAL, PHIAL, a small glass vessel or bottle. (F.-L.) = (Gk.) phial is a pedantic spelling; the spelling vial is historically more correct, as we took the word from French; another (French) spelling was viol. 'Viola, a glass, fiolle, viola;' Palgrave. ME. viola; pl. violis, Wyclif, Rev. v. 8, where the A. V. has viols. = OF. viola, fiolle, fiolle (for which forms see algorave above), later phiale, 'a violl, a small glass bottle'; Cot. Mod. F. fiolle = L. phiala, a sancer, a shallow drinking-vessel (the form of which must have been altered) = Gk. φιάλη, a shallow cup or bowl.

VIAND, food, provision. (F.-L.) Usually in pl. viands. (F.-L.) 'viand, viande;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 6 b. = F. viande, 'meat, food, substance'; Cot. '[The same as Ital. vianda, victuals, food, eatables.] = L. uisenda, neut. pl., things to live on, provisions; considered as a fem. sing., by a change common in Late L. = L. uisendus, fut. pass. of uicere, to live; see Victuals.

VIBRATE, to swing, move backwards and forwards. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has vibration; the verb is perhaps a little later. = L. uibratus, pp. of uibrare, to shake, swing, brandish. = WEIB, variant of WESIT, to shake, agitate; cf. Skt. vep, to tremble, feel. Wep, to vibrate, wave. Brugmann, i. § 701. See Sweep, Waive. Der. vibrat-um, vibrat-ory.

VICAR, lit. a deputy; the incumbent of a benefice. (F.-L.) ME. vicar, a deputy, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 379; also vicario, a vicar, id. C. T. 17333 (I 22). = F. vicaire, 'a vicar, or vice-gentil, also the tenant or incumbent who, in the right of a corporation or church, is to pay duties, or do services, unto the lord of the land'; Cot. = L. uicarius, acc. of uicarius, a substitute, deputy; orig. an adj., substituted, deputated, said of one who supplies the turn or place of another. = L. uic-, stem of uicis (gen.), a turn, change, succession. = WEIQ, to yield, give way; hence to succeed in another's turn: cf. Gk. ἐκ-ειν, to yield, G. wach-sel, a turn. Brugmann, i. § 701. Der. vicar-age, vicer, vicerage in Palgrave (prob. a misprint for vicerage); vicar-i-ate, vicar-i-ate, sb., from F. vicariat, 'a vicarship', Cot. Also vicar-i-ous, Englished from L. uicarius, substituted, delegated, vicarious (as above); vicar-i-ous-ly. And see vice-gentil, vic-i-us-tude.

VICE (1), a blemish, fault, depravity. (F.-L.) ME. vice, vice, Rob. of Glouc., p. 195, l. 4025. = F. vice, 'a vice, fault'; Cot. = L. uicium, a vice, fault. Der. vici-ous, from F. vicieux, 'vicious', Cot., from L. vitiosus, faulty; vici-ous-ly, vici-ous-ness, spelt vicioussness in Palgrave; vici-ate, spelt viciate in Cot. (to translate F. viciat), from L. vitiat, pp. of vitare, to injure; vici-ation.

VICE (2), an instrument, tightened by a screw, for holding anything firmly. (F.—L.) ME. vice, vyce, in Wyclif, 3 Kings, vi. 8, where it means 'a winding-stair' (see the A.V.), the orig. sense being 'a screw'. A vice is so called because tightened by a screw.—F. vis, the vice, or spindle of a presse, also a winding-stair; Cot. OF. viz; Burguy.—L. vitis, a vine, bryony, the lit. sense being 'that which winds or twines'; hence the OF. viz (= vitis), where the suffix s represents the termination -is of the L. nom. sing. or -is of the L. nom. pl. = WEI, to wind, blind, or twine about; cf. E. withe, witky, L. vi-men, a pliant twig, &c. Cf. Ital. vite, 'the vine, also a vice or a screw,' Florio.

VICE-GERENT, having delegated authority, acting in place of another. (F.—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 222.—F. vicegerent, 'a vicegerent, or deputy'; Cot.—L. vice, in place of; and gerent-, stem of pres. part. of gerere, to carry on, perform, conduct, act, rule. Here vice is the abl. from the gen. viciis, a turn, change, stead (the nom. not being used); see Vicior. For gerere, see Gesture. ¶ With the same prefix vice- (F. vice, L. vice, in place of) we have vice-admiral, vice-chancellor; also vice-roy, Temp. iii. 2. 116, where roy = F. roi, from L. regem, acc. of rex, a king; vice-regal; and see vis-count.

VICINAGE, neighbourhood. (F.—L.) Vicinage is a pedantic spelling of voisinage, due to an attempt to reduce the F. word to a L. spelling; both forms are given in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Bp. Taylor has the spelling voisinage more than once, in Episcopacy Asserted, § 21 (R.), and Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4 (R.).—F. voisinage, 'neighbourhood'; Cot.—F. voisin, 'neighbouring', id.—L. vicinum, acc. of vicinus, neighbouring, near, lit. belonging to the same street.—L. vic-us, a village, street (whence the AS. wic, E. wick, a town, is borrowed).—Gk. oikos, a house, dwelling-place; Russ. ves(e), a village; Skt. vega(s), a house, entrance.—WEI, to come to, enter, enter into; Skt. vi, to enter. Der. vicin-ity, from MF. vicinité, 'vicinity'; Cot. from L. acc. vicinilitatem, neighbourhood. Der. (from Gk. oikos), par-ish, par-och-ial.

VICISSITUDE, change. (L.) In Bacon, Essay On Vicissitude of Things.—L. vicissitudo, change. Allied to vicissi-m, by turns, where the suffix -sim may be compared with pas-sim, recess-sim, &c.—L. vicis (gen.), a change; see Vicior.

VICTIM, a living being offered as a sacrifice, one who is persecuted. (F.—L.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, A'n. xii. l. 319.—F. victime (not in Cotgrave).—L. victima, a victim. Allied to Goth. weihan, to consecrate, weihis, holy. Brugmann, i. § 606. Der. victim-ise, a coined word.

VICTOR, a conqueror. (L.) In K. John, ii. 324; and in Trevisa, i. 239.—L. victor, a conqueror; see below.

VICTORY, success in a contest. (F.—L.) ME. victorie. In King Alisaunder, 7663.—OF. victorie (Burguy), later victoire, 'victory', Cot.—L. victoria, conquest; L. victor, a conqueror; cf. vici-us, pp. of vincere, to conquer (pt. t. vici-).—WEI, to fight; whence also Goth. weiغان, weiغان (pp. wigan), to strive, contend; AS. wig, war. Brugmann, i. § 367. Der. victori-ous (Palgrave), from F. victorieux, L. victoriosus, full of victory; victori-ous-ly. Also (from vincere) victor, as above; vanguish, vinc-ible; con-vince, con-vict, e-vice, e-vict, in-vinc-ible.

VICTUALS, provisions, meat. (F.—L.) The sing. victual is little used now, but occurs in Exod. xii. 39 (A.V.), and in Much Ado, i. 1. 50. The word is misspelt, by a pedantry which ignores the F. origin; yet the true orthography will fairly represent the pronunciation still commonly used by the best speakers. ME. vitaille, Chaucer, C. T. 248.—OF. vitaille (Burguy), later victuailles (with inserted e, due to pedantry); Cot. gives victuailles, victualls, but Palgrave has 'Ytaille, uitaille, uieres; Ystailles, inete and drinke, toute maniere de uitailles'.—L. victuallia, neut. pl., provisions, victuals.—L. victuallis, belonging to nourishment.—L. victu-, for victus, food, nourishment; with suffix -alis.—L. vict-us, pp. of vincere, to live; allied to vincis, living.—WEI, to live; cf. Skt. vi, to live, Gk. bi-os, life, Russ. jit(e), to live; and see Quik. Brugmann, ii. § 488. Der. victual, verb, As You Like It, v. 4. 198; victuall-er, spelt victail-er in Palgrave. Also (from the same root) vi-and, vi-tal, viv-aci-ous, viv-id, viv-ify, vivi-par-ous, vivi-section; con-viv-al, re-vive, sur-vive; also bio-graphy, bio-log; quik; but hardly vi-per, wyvern.

VICUNA, a quadruped of the camel tribe. (Span.—Peruv.) 'These beasts, which at Peru they call . . . Vicunas;' E. G., tr. of Acosta's Nat. Hist. (1604); bk. i. c. 21; p. 70.—Span. vicuña; Minahue (1623). Of Peruvian origin; Monlau gives the form as vicunna; see Garcilasso de la Vega (bk. viii. c. 17).

VIDELICET, namely. (L.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 330. In old MSS. and books, the abbreviation for L. -et (final) closely resemble bled a z. Hence the abbreviation viz. = videt., short for videlicet.—L. videlicet, for videre licet (like scilicet = scire licet). It is easy to see, it is manifest, hence plainly, to wit, namely.—L. videre, to see; and licet, it is allowable, hence, it is easy. See Vision and Licence.

VIDETTE, another spelling of Vedette, q.v.

VIE, to contend, strive for superiority. (F.—L.) ME. vien, a contracted form of MF. envier, due to the loss of the initial syllable, as in story for history, venge for defence, &c. In Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 173, we have: 'To vye who might slepe best', ed. Thynne (1532), and so also in the Tanner MS. 346; but MS. Fairfax 16 has: 'To envye who myght slepe best', where To envye = Tenve in pronunciation, just as Chaucer has tabiden = to abiden, &c. β. This ME. envier is quite a different word from envien, to envy; it is really a doublet of invite, and is a term formerly used in gambling.—OF. 'envier (au ieu), to vie'; Cot.—L. invitare, to invite; see Invite. γ. This is proved by the Span. and Ital. forms; cf. Span. envidar, 'among gamesters, to invite or to open the game by staking a certain sum', Neuman; Ital. invitare (al giuoco), 'to vie or to reue at any game, to drop vie; invito, a vie at play, a vie at any game; also, an inviting, proffer, or bidding'; Florio. See plentiful examples of vie, to wager, and vie, sb., a wager, in Nares; and remember that the true sense of with is against, as in with-stand, fight with, &c., so that to vie with = to stake against, wager against, which fully explains the word. Much more might be added; Scheler's excellent explanation of F. à l'envi is strictly to the point; so also Wedgwood's remarks on E. vie. In particular, the latter shows that the OF. envier also meant 'to invite', and he adds: 'From the verb was formed the adv. expression à l'envi, E. a-vie, as if for a wager: "They that write of these toads strive a-vie who shall write most wonders of them." Holland, tr. of Pliny; [b. xxiii. c. 5]. Doublet, invite.

VIEW, a sight, reach of the sight, a scene, mental survey. (F.—L.) Very common in Shak.; see ME. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 144, iii. 2. 377, &c. I evins has the verb to veue.—AF. view, Liber Albus, p. 182; veue, Stat. Realm. i. 192 (1323); MF. veue, 'the sense, act, or instrument of seeing, the eyes, a glance, a view, look, sight', &c.; Cot. Properly the fem. of veur, 'viewed, seen', pp. of veoir (mod. F. voir), 'to view, see'; id.—L. videre, to see; see Vision. Der. view, verb; view-er; re-view; view-less, invisible, Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 124.

VIGIL, the eve before a feast or fast-day. (F.—L.) Lit. 'a watching'; so named because orig. kept by watching through the night. ME. vigile, Ancren Riwle, p. 412, l. 23; Chaucer, C. T. 379 (A 377).—F. vigile, 'a vigil, the eve of a holy or solemn day'; Cot.—L. vigilia, a watch, watching.—L. uigil, awake, lively, vigilant, watchful.—L. uigere, to be lively or vigorous, flourish, thrive; allied to uigere, to arouse.—Irish feil, W. gwyl, a festival (lit. vigil).—WEI, to be strong, to wake; see Vegetable. Der. vigil-ant, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 64, from F. vigilant, 'vigilant'; Cot., from L. uigilant-, stem of pres. part. of uigilare, to watch; vigil-ance, Temp. iii. 3. 16, from F. vigilance, 'vigilancy', Cot., from L. uigilantia. From the same root are veg-etable, vig-our, in-vig-or-ate, re-veill, sur-veillance; also wake, watch, wait.

VIGNETTE, a small engraving with ornamented borders. (F.—L.) So called because orig. applied to ornamented borders in which vine-leaves and tendrils were freely introduced. In the edition of Cotgrave's Dict. published in 1660, the English Index (by Sherwood) has a title-page with such a border, in which two pillars are represented on each side, wreathed with vines bearing leaves, tendrils, and bunches of grapes. ME. vinettes, vine-branches; Lydgate, Siege of Troy, fol. F 5, col. 2.—F. vignette, 'a little vine; vignettes, vignets, branches, or branchlike borders or flourishes, in painting or engraving'; Cot. Dimin. of F. vigne, a vine; see Vine.

VIGOUR, vital strength, force, energy. (F.—L.) ME. vigour; spelt vigor, King Alisaunder, l. 1431.—OF. vigor, vigor, later vigueur, 'vigor'; Cot.—L. uigorem, acc. of uigor, liveliness, activity, force.—L. uigere, to be lively or vigorous; see Vigil. Der. vigor-ous, spelt vigorouse in Palgrave, from F. vigoureux, 'vigorous'; Cot.; vigor-ous-ly, vigor-ous-ness.

VIKING, a Northern pirate. (Scand.) The form vicing occurs in AS, but viking is borrowed from Scandinavian.—Icel. vikinger, a freebooter, rover, pirate, used in the Icel. Saga esp. of the bands of Scand. warriors who, during the 9th and 10th centuries, harried the British Isles and Normandy. [Wrongly explained as 'a creek-dweller,' one of the men who haunted the bays, creeks, and fjords.—Icel. vik, a creek, inlet, bay; with suffix -ingr (AS. -ing) in the sense of 'son of' or belonging to. Cf. also Swed. vik, Dan. vig, a creek, cove.] Explained also as 'a warrior'; for vikingr* (where ign > ik); allied to Icel. vig, war, Goth. weihan, to fight, L. vincere, to conquer; see Victor. (So Noreen, § 252; Sweet, Hist. E. Sounds, § 319).—AS. wicing, the same.

VILE, abject, base, worthless, wicked. (F.—L.) ME. vil, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 10003.—F. vil (fem. vile), 'vile, abject, base, low, mean, ... good cheap, of small price,' Cot.—I. uilem, acc. of uilis, of small price, cheap, worthless, base, vil—W. guual, vile; Stokes-Fick, p. 259. Der. vile-ly, vile-ness; vil-i-fy, a coined word, to account vile, defame, properly to make vile, as in Milton, P. L. xl. 516; vil-i-fic-er, vil-i-fic-at-ion, re-vile.

VILIPEND, to despise. (L.) Spelt vilepende in Skelton; i. 202.—L. vilipendere, to hold cheap.—L. vilis, for vilis, vile, cheap; and pendere, to weigh, esteem. See POISE.

VILLA, a country residence or seat, a house. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, b. iii. l. 283.—L. villa, a farm-house; lit. 'a house in a village.' Perhaps for uic-sla*, i.e. 'dwelling'; from uic-us, a village; see VIOTAGE. Der. vill-age, Chaucer, C. T. 12621 (C 687), from F. village, 'a village,' Cot., from L. adj. uillatius, belonging to a villa; villag-er, Jul. Caesar, i. 2. 172; villag-er-y, a collection of villages, Mts. Nd. Dr. ii. 1. 35. And see vil-lain.

VILLAIN, a clownish or depraved person, a scoundrel. (F.—L.) ME. vilein, vileyn, Aynbrite of Inwyt, p. 18, l. 7. 'For vilany makith vilein'; Rom. of the Rose, 2181.—OF. vilein, 'servile, base, vile'; Cot. Ile also gives vilein, 'a villaine, slave, bondman, seruant tenant.' Late L. villanus, a farm-servant, scrf; the degradation by which it passed into a term of reproach is well stated by Cotgrave, who further explains villain as meaning 'a farmer, yeoman, churle, carle, boore, clown, knave, rascal, varlet, filthy fellow.'—L. villa, a farm; see VILLA. Der. villain-ous, Merry Wives, ii. 2. 308; villain-ous-ly; also villain-y, ME. vileinie, Chaucer, C. T. 70, Ancren Riwle, p. 216, from OF. vilein (or villain), 'villainy,' Cot.

VINCIBLE, that can be conquered, (L.) Rare. In Bp. Taylor, Of Repentance, c. 3. § 3. (R.).—L. vincibilis, easily overcome.—L. vincere, to conquer; see VICTOR. Der. vincibil-ly, in-vincible.

VINCULUM, a link. (L.) Modern; chiefly used as a mathematical term.—L. vinculum, a bond, fetter, link.—L. vincire, to bind, fetter. Brugmann, ii. § 631. See VETCH.

VINDICATE, to lay claim to, defend, maintain by force. (L.) In Milton, P. K. ii. 47.—L. vindicatus, pp. of vindicare, to lay legal claim to, arrogate, avenge.—L. vindic, decl. stem of vindere, a claimant, maintainer. Orig. 'one who favours or protects a friend'; from uen—(as in uen-ia, favour, cf. AS. win-a, a friend), and dic-ere, to appoint, dicere, to say; cf. the suffix in iud-ice, a judge. See Walde. Der. vindicat-or, vindic-able, vindic-at-ion; vindic-at-ive, i.e. vindictive, Troil. iv. 5. 107; vindic-at-or-y; and see vindic-tive, vengeance.

VINDICTIVE, revengeful. (F.—L.) Vindictive is merely a shortened form of vindicative, obviously due to confusion with the related L. vindicta, revenge. Bp. Taylor, in his Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3, speaks of 'vindicative justice,' but in the same work, b. ii. c. 2, of 'vindicative justice'; if Richardson's quotations be correct. Shak. has vindicative—vindicative, Troil. iv. 5. 107.—F. vindicatif, 'vindicative, revengeful,' Cot. Formed with suffix -if (L. -ivus) from vindicat-um, supine of vindicare, (1) to claim, (2) to avenge; see VINDICATE. Der. vindicative-ly, -ness.

VINE, the plant from which wine is made. (F.—L.) ME. vine, vyne; Wyclif, John, xv. 1.—F. vigne, 'a vine'; Cot.—L. vineta, a vineyard, which in late L. (see Lewis) also had the sense of 'vine,' for which the true L. word is vitis. Vinea is properly the fem. of adj. vineus, of or belonging to wine.—L. vinum, wine.—Gk. olvos, wine; allied to olvy, the vine, olvas, the vine, grape, vine. Cf. L. utis, the vine.—WEL. to twine; as seen in L. uicere, to twist together, ui-men, a plant twig, ui-tis, the vine, &c. Brugmann, ii. § 66. And see Curtius, i. 487, who notes that the Gk. words were used 'by no means exclusively of the drink, but just as much of the vine.' Pott very appropriately compares the Lithuan. ap-vyns, a hop-tendrill. ... The fact is therefore that the Indo-Germans had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various plant twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice. The Northern names (Goth. vein, &c.) are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed.' See the whole passage. To which we may add that the L. vinum also meant 'a vine,' and the E. vine-yard = AS. win-geard = wine-yard, which identified vine with the vine itself. Der. vine-dress-er; vin-er-y, occurring in 'the venery of Ramey,' in Fabyan's Chronicle, John of France, an. 8 (ed. Ellis, p. 511), a word coined on the model of but-er-y, pant-ry, brew-er-y; vine-yard, ME. vineyard, Trevisa, i. 337. AS. win-geard, Matt. xx. 1; vin-ous, a late word, from L. vinosus, belonging to wine. Also win-egar, vin-tage, vin-i-fer, which see below. From the same root are with or witky, wine; cf. vetch, vinculum.

VINEGAR, an acid liquor made from fermented liquors. (F.—L.) ME. vinegre, vynegre, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 26. Lit. 'sour wine.'—F. vinaigre, 'vinegar'; Cot.—F. vin, wine; and AF. agre, F. agrie, sharp, sour; see VINE or WINE, and BLAER.

VINEWEED, mouldy. (E.) In mod. edd. of Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 15, we generally find vine-weed, where the folios have win-weed. Minshew, ed. 1627, has finewe, as equivalent to 'mistle'; and also the sb. vine-weedness; and see vine-weed, finewe, finewe in Nares. Cf. prov. E. vine-weed (West), Halliwell. The form finewe answers to the pp. of AS. finegan, fynegan, to become mouldy or musty, occurring in the Canons of Eilfric, § 36; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 360, l. 7. It is a verb formed from an adj. finig or fyne, mouldy, occurring in the same passage. We also find the pl. finie (for finige) in Josh. ix. 5, where it is used of mouldy loaves. The true form is fyne (with y, mutation of u); the adj. is from the sb. fyne, mouldiness, Voc. 183. 19. From a Teut. base fun-*; allied to Du. vuns, rank, MK. vunsligh, 'mistle (as hay)'; Hexham. Cf. FOUL.

VINTAGE, the gathering or produce of grapes, time of grape-gathering. (F.—L.) 'Tyll they had inned [gathered in] all their corne and vyntage'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 22 (R.). Vintage is for ME. vindage, Wyclif, Levit. xxv. 5, or vendage, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 367, which was also pronounced as ventage, as shown by the various readings in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 414. And again, ME. vendage is for vendage, the unfamiliar ending -ange being turned into the common suffix -age; it is clear that the word was confused with vin-ner, vin-ry; see VINTNER. AF. vendenge, Statutes of the Realm, i. 331 (1353); F. vendange (MF. vendenge in Cotgrave), 'a vintage'; Cot.—L. uindemia, a vintage.—L. uin-um, (1) wine, (2) grapes; and dem-ere, to take away; so that uindemia = a taking away of grapes, grape-gathering. β. For L. uinum, see VINE, WINE. The L. demere is for di-inere*, to take away; from dē, prep., off, away, and emere, to take; see DE and REDEEM.

VINTNER, a wine-dealer, tavern-keeper. (F.—L.) 'Vyn-tenere, Vinarius,' Prompt. Parv. Thus vin-ner is short for vin-tener; and again, vin-tener is an altered form of vin-ter or vin-ter, which is the older form. It occurs, spelt vin-ter, in Rob. of Glouc. p. 542, l. 11226, in a passage where we also find vin-ter, now shortened to vintry, and occurring as the name of a house in London (Stow, Survey of London, ed. Thoms, p. 90).—AF. vinetier, Bozon, p. 19; MF. vinetier, 'a vintner, taverner, wine-seller'; Cot.—Late L. vin-tarius, a wine-seller (occurring A.D. 1226). Really derived from L. vinetum, a vine-yard, but used with the sense of L. vinarius, a wine-seller.—L. uinum, grapes, wine; see VINE and WINE.

VIOL, a kind of fiddle, a musical instrument. (F.—Prov.—Late L.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 3. 162.—MF. viola (also vielle), 'a (musical) viol, or violin'; Cot.—Prov. viola, a viol; see Bartsch. Cf. Ital. viola, Span. and Port. viola (Diez). Diez takes the Prov. viola (a trisyllabic word) to be the oldest form, derived from Late L. vitula, vidula, a viol, which was first transposed into the form viudla* (cf. Prov. veuzza from L. vidua, tenne from L. tenui), and then became viudla*, viudla, viola. 'Vidulatores dicuntur a vidula, Gallice, vellem'; John de Garlande, in Wright's Voc. i. 137, l. 4 from bottom. The AS. fidol, OHG. fidula, E. fiddle appear to be the same as Late L. vitula, vidula; see FIDDLE, which may be a doublet. [The i in vitula was short (Ducange); connexion with L. uitali, to rejoice, is doubtful.] Der. viol-in, Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, l. 103, from Ital. violino, dimin. of viola, a viol; viol-in-ist, a player on the violin; viol-on-cello, a bass violin, from Ital. violoncello, dimin. of violone, a bass-viol, augmentative form of viola. Also bass-viol, Comedy of Errors, iv. 3. 23. Doublet, fiddle.

VIOLATE, to injure, abuse, profane, ravish. (L.) In Shak. L. L. i. 1. 21.—L. violatus, pp. of violare, to violate. Orig. 'to treat with force'; formed as if from an adj. uiolus*, due to ui-s, force. β. Allied to Gk. vi-s, strength, force; cf. Skt. vayas, youth. See Brugmann, i. § 91. Der. violat-or, from L. violator; viola-ble, from L. violabilis; violat-ion, from F. violation, 'a violation,' Cot., from L. acc. violatiōnem. Also viol-ent, q.v.; (from the same root) per-vi-car-i-ous.

VIOLENT, vehement, outrageous, very forcible. (F.—L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 12801 (C 867).—F. violente, 'violent,' Cot.—L. violens, violent, full of might. Formed with suffix -entus from an adjectival form uiolus*, due to ui-s, strength; see above. Der. viol-ent-ly; violence, Chaucer, C. T. 16376 (G 908), from F. violence, 'violence,' Cot., from L. sb. violencia.

VIOLET, a flower; a light purple colour. (F.—L.) ME. violet, vyolet, Prompt. Parv.; Trevisa, i. 261. 'Tunicam de vyolet;' York Wills, i. 23 (1346).—MF. violet, m. also violette, fem., 'a violet; also, violet-colour'; Cot. Dimin. of MF. viola, 'a gillflower,' Cot.; it must also have meant a violet.—L. viola, a violet. Formed with dimin. suffix -ula from a base uio, cognate with Gk. io, base of io (for fiow*), a violet. See IODINE. Der. violet, adj., violet-coloured.

VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO; see under Viol.

VIPER, a poisonous snake. (F.—L.) In Levins, ed. 1570.—F. vipere, 'the serpent called a viper'; Cot.—L. vipera, a viper. Usually explained as the serpent 'that produces living young'; Buffon says that the viper differs from most other serpents in being much slower, as also in excluding its young completely formed, and bringing them forth alive. As if viper were short for visipara, fem. of visiparus, producing live young; see VIVIPAROUS. β. Walde prefers a derivation from the WEIF, to wind round, as in Goth. biwaipjan, to wind round; from the viper's coils. Der. viper-ous, Cor. iii. 1. 287; viper-iné, Blount, from L. viperinus, adj. Doublet, vyyvern.

VIRAGO, a bold, impudent, manlike woman. (L.) In Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. i, ed. Arber, p. 34, l. 2. 'This [woman] schal be clepid virago,' Wychly, Gen. ii. 23.—L. uirago, a manlike maiden, female warrior; extended from uir, a man. See Virile.

VIRELAY, an old French form of poem, running on two rimes. (F.) Chaucer has 'roundels, virelayes'; C. T., F. 948 (Frank. Ta. 220).—OF. virelai, MF. virelay, 'a virelay, round, freemans song'; Cot.—OF. vire, to turn, to change the direction of (see Veer); and OF. lai, a lay, song (see Lay).

VIRGATE, an (old) measure of land. (L.) Also formerly called a yardland; see Blount, who says:—'This Yardland, Bracton (lib. 2. cap. 10 and 27) calls virgatum terra; but expresseth no certainty what it contains. It is called a verge of land, anno 28 Edw. 1.—Late L. virgata, a fem. pp. form, from L. uirga, a rod. See Verge (1).

VIRGIN, a maiden. (F.—L.) In early use; the pl. virgines occurs in St. Katharine, l. 2342.—OF. virgine (Burguy).—L. uirguen, acc. of uirgo, a virgin. Root uncertain (not allied to uir, a man, or uirre, to flourish, as the base is uirg, not uir). Der. virgin-it, ME. virginité, Chaucer, C. T. 5657 (D 75), from F. virginité, 'virginity'; Cot. from L. acc. virginitatem. Also virgin-al, spelt 'virginité' in Levins, ed. 1570; an old musical instrument, also named the virgin, or a pair [set] of virginals, and so called because played upon by virgins (Blount, Nares); cf. ME. virginal, adj., Hoccleve, Rep. Princes, 3584; from F. virginal, 'belonging to a virgin'; Cot. from L. acc. virginalis. Also Virgo (L. uirgo), the virgin, a zodiacal sign.

VIRIDITY, greenness. (L.) Little used; in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, and added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who gives an example from Evelyn. Englished from L. viriditās, greenness.—L. uiridis, green. See Verdant.

VIRILE, male, masculine, manly. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. virile, 'virile, manly'; Cot.—L. uirilis, manly.—L. uir, a man; AS. wer, gwr, Irish fer, Irish fer, a man; Goth. wair, a man; AS. wer; Icel. ver; OHG. wer. See Werwolf. Further allied to Skt. viras, sh., a hero; adj., strong, heroic; Zend vira, a hero (Fick, i. 786). Der. vir-il-ty (Blount), from F. virilité, 'virility'; Cot. from L. acc. uirilitatem, manhood. Also (from L. uir) vir-ago, q. v., vir-tue, q. v., decem-vir, trium-vir.

VIRTUE, excellence, worth, efficacy. (F.—L.) ME. vertu, Ancr. Riwle, p. 340, l. 9.—F. vertu, 'virtue, goodness'; Cot.—L. uirtitium, acc. of uirtitus, manly excellence.—L. uir, a man; see Virile. ¶ The spelling has been changed from vertu to virtue to bring it nearer to Latin. Der. virtu-ous, ME. vertuous, Chaucer, C. T. 251, from F. vertueux, 'virtuous'; Cot. from Late L. uirtitus, full of virtue (Ducange); virtu-ous-ly, uirtu-al, having effect, in Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Poetry, § 3 (R.), from F. virtuel (Littre), as if from a L. form uirtualis*; virtu-al-ly. Also virtu, a love of the fine arts, a late word, borrowed from Ital. virtù (also virtù), shortened form of virtute, virtue, excellence, used in the particular sense of learning or excellence in a love of the fine arts, from L. acc. uirtitutem; whence virtu-oso, Evelyn's Diary, Feb. 27, 1644, from Ital. virtuoso, lit. virtuous, learned, esp. a person skilled in the fine arts.

VIRULENT, very active in injuring, spiteful, bitter in animosity. (F.—L.) Lit. poisonous. 'The seed of dragon is hot and biting, and besides of a virulent and stinking smell'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 16. ME. virulent, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 80.—F. virulent, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th century (Littre); and prob. much earlier.—L. uirulentus, poisonous, virulent.—L. uir, for virus, slime, poison; with suffix -lentus, -Gk. lōs (for fiōs), poison; Skt. visha-m, poison. Allied to Irish fi, poison, W. gwy, fluid; and to E. Wizen. Der. virulent-ly, virulence, from F. virulence, 'stench, rankness, poison'; Cot. from L. uirulentia. The sb. virus, borrowed immediately from Latin, is now also in use.

VISAGE, the face, mien, look. (F.—L.) ME. visage, King Alisaunder, 7652.—F. visage, 'the visage, face, look'; Cot. Formed with suffix -age (< L. -itium) from MF. vis, 'the visage, face'. Cot.—L. uisum, acc. of uisus, the vision, sight; whence the sense was transferred to that of 'look' or mien, and finally to that of 'face'; perhaps (as Scheler suggests) under the influence of G. gesicht, the face, lit. the sight.—L. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see; see Vision. Der. visag-ed, as in tripe-visag-ed, 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 9.

VISARD, the same as Visor, q. v.

VIS-A-VIS, in a position (that is) face to face. (F.—L.) F. vis à vis, 'face to face, directly opposite'; Cot. The F. vis represents the L. acc. uisum; see Visage. The F. a is from L. ad, to, towards.

VISCACHA, VIZCACHA, a South-American rodent mammal. (Span.—Peruv.) Span. viscachá, vizcachá, 'a creature like a hare'; Pineda.—Peruv. viscachá, 'conejo de la tierra'; Peruv. Dict.

VISCERA, the entrails. (L.) A medical term.—L. uisera, neut. pl., the entrails; from nom. sing. uiscus. Perhaps allied to L. uisre, to twist together. Der. viscer-al (Blount), v-iscer-ale.

VISCID, sticky, clammy. (F.—L.) 'Viscid, or Viscous, clammy, fast as glue'; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—F. viscid, 'clammy'; Cot.—L. uiscidus, clammy, like birdlime.—L. uisum, the mistletoe, also birdlime.—Gk. lōs, lōis, mistletoe, the mistletoe-berry, from which birdlime was made. Der. viscid-ty, from F. viscidité, 'viscidité'; Cot. So also visc-ous, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 178, from L. uiscosus, clammy, visc-ous-ty, from F. viscosité, 'viscosité'; Cot.

VISCOUNT, a title; an officer who formerly supplied the place of a count or earl. (F.—L.) The s (in the F. word) is not pronounced; the usual E. spelling was formerly vicount (pronounced with i as in F., whence the mod. E. vicount, pronounced with i as in modern E.), spelt vicount in Fabyan, Chron. c. 245. But we also find AF. viscount, a sheriff, Stat. Keston, i. 28 (1215).—F. viconte, 'a vicount, was at the first the deputy or lieutenant of an earl'; &c., Cot.; OF. viscounts (12th cent.).—L. uis, in place of; comites, acc. of comes, count. In the 12th century the word was spelt uiscounts (Littre), a traditional spelling which we still retain, though the s was early lost in F., and ceased to be sounded in E. The prefix was also written vica, as in MF. vica-admirall, 'a vicadmiral', vica-onte, 'a vicount'; Cot.; Rokefort notes the OF. vis-admiral, a vicadmiral. See Vicegerent and Count (1). Der. viscount-ess, from OF. vis-, prefix, 'vice-', and Countess.

VISE, another spelling (chiefly American) of Vies (2), q. v.

VISE, an endorsement, made upon a pass-port. (F.—L.) Modern.—F. visé, i. e. 'examined', pp. of viser, to view, inspect.—Late L. uisire*, used for L. uisere, to behold; from uidere (pp. uisus), to see; see Visit. ¶ The true F. word is visa, sb.

VISIBLE, that can be seen. (F.—L.) Spelt visyble in Falsgrave. F. visible, 'visible'; Cot.—L. uisibilis, that may be seen.—L. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see. See Vision.

VISIER, the same as Vizier, q. v.

VISIGOTH, one of the West Goths. (Late L.—Teut.) The Goths were divided into Ostro-Goths and Visi-Goths, i. e. Eastern and Western Goths. See Gibbon, Roman Empire, cap. 36.—Late L. Visigothi or Visigothe, pl., the Visigoths. Of Teut. origin; from Teut. west, West, and Teut. Guths* or Gutans*, pl.; only found in Gothic in the comp. Gut-thiuda, the Gothic people.

VISION, sight, a sight, dream. (F.—L.) ME. visioun, visioun, Cursor Mundi, 4454.—F. vision, 'a vision, sight'; Cot.—L. uisiōnem, acc. of uisio, sight; cf. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see.—Gk. lō-ōn (for lō-ōn), to see, infin. of lōōn, I saw, a and aorist form; whence perf. t. ōlē (I have seen), I know (—E. was).—Skt. vid, to know; Goth. witan, to know; AS. witan. β. All from WEID, to see, know; see Wit, verb. Der. vision-ary, adj., Dryden, Tyrannick Love, Act i. sc. 1 (R.), a coined word; also vision-ary, sb., one who sees visions, or forms impracticable schemes. Also (like L. uisus) vis-age, q. v., vis-ible, q. v., vis-ory, q. v., vis-it, q. v., vis-it-ly, q. v., vis-ual, q. v., also ad-vis, ad-vis, de-vis, de-vis, im-pro-vis, pro-vis, pro-vis-ion, pro-vis-a, re-vis, super-vis. Also (from L. uisere), en-vis, e-vid-ent, in-vid-i-ous, juris-pru-d-ent, pro-vid, pro-vid-ent, pru-d-ent, pur-vey, re-vey, see, vey, vide-li-ent, view. And see Wald.

VISIT, to go to see or inspect, call upon. (F.—L.) ME. visiten, Ancr. Riwle, p. 154, l. 8.—F. visiter, 'to visit, or go to see'; Cot.—L. uisitare, to go to see, visit; frequentative of uisere, to behold, survey, intensive form of uidere (pp. uisus), to see; see Vision. Der. visit, sb.; visit-ation, from F. visitation, a visitation, visiting; Cot. from L. acc. uisitationem; visit-ant, Milton, P. L. i. 225, from L. uisitans, stem of pres. part. of uisitare; visit-or, Timon, i. 1. 42 (for visitour), from F. visiteur, a visitor, searcher, overseer; Cot., the true L. word being uisitator; visit-or-ial.

VISOR, VIZOR, VISARD, VIZARD, a mask, part of a helmet. (F.—L.) In the forms visard, vizard, the final d is excrement and unoriginal. It is variously spelt in Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 30; L. L. L. v. 2. 242, Mich. iii. 2. 34, &c. ME. visiere; 'Visiere, larva', Prompt. Parv.—AF. visiere (A. Neckam), in Wright, Vocab. i. 113; MF. visiere, 'the visier, or sight of a helmet'; Cot. Formed from F. vis, the face; and so called from its protecting the face. In the related to L. vacuus, empty, void. Körtling, § 10280. Der. void, verb, ME. voiden, to empty, King Allasunder, 373, from OF. voider, MF. vider, 'to void', Cot. Also void-able, void-ance (cf. MF. voidange, 'a voidance', Cot.); void-ness; a-void.

VOLANT, flying, nimble. (F.-L.) Rare. 'In manner of a star volant in the air.' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 525 (R.). -F. volant, pres. part. of volar, 'to fly'; Cot. -L. volans, to fly. Formed from the adj. volans, flying, occurring only in voli-volans, flying on sails. Allied to Skt. garud, a wing, garuda, a mythical bird; Brugmann, i. § 663.

Der. volantile, Ben Jonson, Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 1. (Subtle), from F. volatil, 'flying'; Cot. from L. volatilis, flying, from volans, flight, which from volatus, pp. of volar. Hence volatile-ness, volatil-ity, volatil-ise, volatil-is-ation. Also volley, q. v.

VOLAPUK, a kind of world-speech. (E.) An artificial language for international speech, invented about 1879 by J. M. Schleyer, of Constance, Baden. Properly written Völpük. This form was suggested by E. word (here turned into vola) and E. speech (here turned into pük).

VOLCANO, a burning mountain. (Ital.-L.) 'A volcano or volcano.' Skinner, ed. 1691. Spelt volcan, J. Frampton, Joyfull Newea, fol. 31 (1577). Borrowed from Italian, because the chief burning mountain known to sailors was that of Ætna. -Ital. volcano, 'a hill that continually burneth'; Florio. -L. Vulcānum, Vulcānum, acc. of Vulcanus or Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire, hence fire. β. The true form is Vulcanus (with o). Allied to Skt. ulhā, a fire-brand, fire falling from heaven, a meteor. Der. volcan-ic; and see vulcan-ize.

VOLE, a field-mouse. (Scand.) A word that reached us from the Orkney Islands. A shortened form of vole-mouse; see Jamieson, who quotes from the Edin. Mag., July, 1819, p. 505; and from Barry's Orkney, p. 314 (ed. 1805), who says: '-with us it has the name of the vole-mouse. So also vole-mouse is given in Edmondston's Shetland and Orkney Words. Of Norse origin; from an unrecorded (prob. colloquial) Norw. vollmus*, for the word is known in Icelandic in the colloquial form vallarmús (E. Magnusson). The former element is the Norw. voll, Swed. vall, Icel. völr, a plain, field; which is cognate with E. vold; see Wold. There are many compounds with Norw. voll (and the like); cf. Norw. voll-gras, field-grass, voll-høy, meadow-hay, Icel. vallar-garðr, a paddock, vall-humall, milfoil; Swed. vall-hund, a shepherd's dog; Swed. dial. vall-gås, wild goose.

VOLLITION, the exercise of the will. (F.-L.) 'Consequent to the mere internal volition.' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. i. -F. vollition, found in the 16th century (Hatzfeldt); we find cognate terms in Span. vollition, Ital. vollitione, volition. All these answer to a Late L. vollitum, acc. of vollitio*, volition; a word not recorded by DuCange, but prob. a term of the schools. It is a pure coinage, from L. vol-o, I wish; of which the infinitive is velle; see Voluntary.

VOLLEY, a flight of shot, the discharge of many fire-arms at once. (F.-L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 363. See Nares. -F. volée, 'a flight, or flying, also a whole flight of birds'; Cot. [Cf. Ital. volata, a flight, volley; -L. volata, orig. fem. of volatus, pp. of volar, to fly; see Volant.]

VOLT, a bound, a leap; the same as Vault (2), q. v.

VOLTAIC, originated by Volta. (Ital.) Applied to Voltaic electricity, or galvanism; the Voltaic pile or battery, first set up about 1800, was discovered by Alessandro Volta, of Como, an experimental philosopher, born 1745, died March 6, 1826; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates, and Hole, Brief Biograph. Dict. Der. (from Volta) volt, a unit of electromotive force.

VOLUBLE, flowing smoothly, fluent in speech. (F.-L.) In Shak. Comedy of Errors, ii. 1. 92. -F. voluble, 'voluble, easily rolled, turned, or tumbled; hence, fickle, . . . glib'; Cot. -L. volubilis, acc. of volubilis, easily turned about; formed with suffix -bilis from volū, as seen in volūtus, pp. of volvere, to roll, turn about. + Goth. volwjan, to roll; Gk. ἐλκεν, to roll; from a base velu-* (volu-*). The shorter base VEL occurs in Lithuan. velti, to full, Russ. valit(e), to roll, Skt. val, to move to and fro; cf. AS. weallan, to roll, Icel. valr, round, Gk. ἐλκ, a spiral, ἐλκεν, to turn round. See Helix. Der. volubly, volubil-ity; also (from L. volvere), vault (1), vault (2), vol-vme, vol-ute, circum-volve, con-volv-ul-us, con-vol-ul-ion, de-volve, e-volve, e-volu-t-ion, in-volve, in-volu-t-ion, in-vol-ute, re-volv, re-volu-t-ion, re-volve. From the same root are valve, wale, helix.

VOLUME, a roll, a book, tome. (F.-L.) ME. volume, Chaucer, C. T. 6263 (D 681). -F. volume, 'a volume, tome, book'; Cot. -L. volūmen, a roll, scroll; hence, a book written on a parchment roll. -L. volū, as seen in volū-tus, pp. of volvere, to roll. See Voluble. Der. volume-ed; volume-ous, Milton, P. R. iv. 384, from L. volūminosus, full of rolls or folds, from volūmin-, decl. stem of volūmen; volūmin-ous-ly.

VOLUNTARY, willing, acting by choice. (F.-L.) Spelt voluntarie in Levins, ed. 1570. -MF. voluntaire, also spelt voluntaire, 'voluntary, willing, free, of his own accord'; Cot. -L. voluntarius, voluntary. -L. voluntās, free will. Formed, with suffix -tās, from a present participial stem volunt-*, a variant of volent-, from volens, willing, from vol-o, I will; infin. velle. + Lithuan. veliti, Goth. viljan; Skt. vr, to select, choose. Brugmann, ii. § 102, 493. See Will. Der. voluntari-ly, voluntari-ness; also volunteer, Drayton, Miseries of Qu. Margaret, st. 177, from F. volontaire (used as a sb.), 'a voluntary, one that serves without pay or compulsion'; Cot.; hence volunteer, verb. And see vol-up-tu-ous, vol-it-ion; bene-volent, male-volent.

VOLUPTUOUS, sensual, given up to pleasure. (F.-L.) ME. voluptuous, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1573. [Gower has voluptuosite, sb., C. A. iii. 280; bk. viii. 156.] -F. voluptueux, 'voluptuous'; Cot. -L. voluptuosus, full of pleasure. -L. voluptus, akin to voluptās, pleasure. -L. volup, volupe, adv. agreeably. -L. vol-o, I wish; velle, to wish; see Voluntary. Cf. Gk. ἐλκ, hope. Der. voluptuous-ly, -ness (Palsgrave); volup-tu-ary, from L. voluptarius, voluptarius, devoted to pleasure. Hence prob. the vulgar gluttonous.

VOLUTE, a spiral scroll on a capital. (F.-L.) Spelt voluta in Phillips, which is the L. form. -F. volute, 'the rolling shell of a snail; also, the written circle that hangs over the chapter of a pillar'; Cot. -L. volūta, a volute (Vitruvius). Orig. fem. of volūtus, pp. of volvere, to roll; see Voluble. Der. volut-el.

VOMIT, matter rejected by, and thrown up from the stomach. (L.) ME. vomitte, vomyte, sb.; Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has vomyt, verb. -L. vomitus, a vomiting, vomit; whence vomitare, to vomit often. -L. vomitus, pp. of vomere, to vomit. + Gk. ἐμειν, to vomit; Skt. vam, to vomit, spit out; Lithuan. vemti, -WEM, to spit out; Fick, i. 769. Der. vomit, vb.; vomit-or-y, causing to vomit. And see em-et-ic.

VORACITY, eagerness to devour. (F.-L.) In Cotgrave, -F. voracité, 'voracity'; Cot. -L. voracitatem, acc. of voracitas, hungriness. -L. voraci-, decl. stem of vorax, greedy to devour. -L. vor-āre, to devour. -L. vorus, adj. devouring; only in compounds, such as carni-vorus, flesh-devouring. β. The L. vorus stands for guorus*, as shown by the allied Skt. garu-, devouring, as seen in aja-gara, a boa constrictor, lit. 'goat-devouring', from aja-, a goat. Cf. also Gk. βορῆς, gluttonous, βορῆ, meat, βιβώμεν, to devour. -WGER, to swallow down. Brugmann, i. § 653. Der. voraci-ous, from L. voraci-, decl. stem of vorax, greedy to devour; voraci-ous-ly, from the same root are gramini-vorus, carni-vorus, omni-vorus, &c., also de-vour.

VORTEX, a whirlpool, whirlwind. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. -L. vortex (also urtes), a whirlpool, whirl, eddy. -L. urtere, to turn, whirl; see Verse. The pl. is vortices, as in Latin.

VOTE, an ardent wish, the expression of a decided wish or opinion, expressed decision. (L.) In Selden, Table-talk, Bishops in the Parliament, § 4. -L. vōta, a wish; or a vow. -L. vōtum, neut. of vōtus, pp. of vōvere, to vow; see Vow. Der. vote-ive, from L. vōtus, promised by a vow; vote-ive, adv. Also vote-ary, a coined word, L. L. ii. 37; vote-ary-ess, Pericles, iv. prol. 4; vote-ress, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 123; vote-ary-ist, Timon, iv. 3. 27.

VOUCH, to warrant, attest, affirm strongly. (F.-L.) ME. vouchen, Gower, C. A. ii. 24; bk. iv. 668. -MF. voucher, 'to vouch, cite, pray in aid or call unto aid, in a suit', Cot. Marked by Cotgrave as a Norman word; cf. Norm. dial. vocher, to call (Moisy). -L. vocāre, to call, call upon, summon. See Vocable. Der. vouch-er; vouch-safe, q. v.

VOUCHSAFE, to vouch or warrant safe, sanction or allow without danger, condescend to grant. (F.-L.) Merely due to the phr. vouch safe, i. e. vouch or warrant as safe, guarantee, grant. The two words were run together into one. ME. vouchen safe, or saue. 'The kyng vouches it saue'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 260. 'Vouches sauf' his horse hire wedde'; Will. of Palerne, 1449; 'sauf wol I fouche', id. 4152. See Vouch and Safe.

VOUSSOIR, a stone forming part of an arch, the key-stone being the central one. (F.-L.) F. vousoir, OF. voisoir, a stone for an arch (Godefroy). -Late L. type volsōrium*; from volsūm, equivalent to L. volūtum, neut. pp. of volvere, to roll. See Volute.

VOW, a solemn promise. (F.-L.) ME. vow, vou; pl. vowes, P. Plowman, B. prol. 71. [The ME. avow is commoner; it is a compound word with prefix av- (<L. ad-), but is frequently misprinted a vow; Tyrwhitt rightly has 'min avow'; Chaucer, C. T. 2339 (A 2237); 'this avowt'; id. 2416 (A 2414).] -OF. vow, vou, veu (mod. F. vau), a vow. -L. vōtum, a vow, lit. 'a thing vowed'; neut. of vōtus, pp. of vōvere, to promise, to vow. (N.B. Another avow answers to F. avouer, L. advocāre, and is a doublet of avouch.) Der. vow, verb, ME. vowen, Prompt. Parv. Also (from L. vōtum), vole, q. v.

VOWEL, a simple vocal sound; the letter representing it. (F.—L.) Spelt vowel in Levins, ed. 1570; and in Palsgrave, b. i. c. 2.—OF. vowel, voiel; F. voyelle, 'a vowel'; Cot.—L. vocalem, acc. of voculus (sc. littera), a vowel. Fem. of voculus, adj. sounding, vocal.—L. vōx, stem of vōx, a voice; see Vocal, Voice.

VOYAGE, a journey, passage by water. (F.—L.) ME. viage, Chaucer, C. T. 4679, 4720 (B 259, 300); weige, Rob. of Glouc. p. 200, l. 112. The later form voyage (as in Caxton, Siege of Troy, fol. 120) answers to the 15th cent. spelling of the F. word.—AF. voiage; OF. voiage, later voyage, 'voyage'; Cot.—L. viaticum, provisions for a journey, money or other requisites for a journey; whence also Ital. viaggio, Span. viage, Prov. viage; see Ducange.—L. viaticus, belonging to a journey.—L. uia, a way, journey. Der. voyage, verb, from F. voyer, 'to travel, goe a voyage'; Cot.; voyager. Also (from L. uia), via-duct, and related words given under Viaduct.

VULCANISE, to combine caoutchouc with sulphur, by heat. (F.—L.) Modern; F. vulcaniser (1878). Formed with suffix -ise (F. -iser, from Gk. -izein) from L. Vulcānis, god of fire, hence fire; see Volsano. Der. vulcan-ite, vulcanised caoutchouc.

VULGAR, used by the common people, native, common, mean, rude. (F.—L.) In Cor. i. 1. 219.—F. vulgaire, 'vulgar, common'; Cot.—L. vulgāris, vulgar.—L. vulgus, the common people; also spelt vulguis. The lit. sense is 'a throng, a crowd'; allied to Skt. varga-, a troop; OIrish ful, abundance (Stokes); W. gwala, fullness; Bret. gwalc'h, repletion. Stokes-Fick, p. 286. Der. vulgar, sb., L. L. i. 2. 51, from F. vulgaire, sb. Cot.; vulgar-ly, vulgar-ise, vulgar-isim, vulgar-ism. Also vulgar-ate, the E. name for the Latin version of the Bible known as the Editio Vulgata (see publications of the Parker Society, &c.); where vulgata is the fem. of vulgatus, pp. of vulgare, to make public, to publish.

VULNERABLE, liable to injury. (L.) In Mach. v. 8. 11.—L. vulnerabilis, wounding, likely to injure; but also (taken in the pass. sense) vulnerable (in late Latin).—L. vulnerāre, to wound.—L. vulner-, stem of vulnus, a wound; OL. vulnus. Allied to vellere (pt. t. ul-si), to pluck, pull, tear.—Gk. oidhē, W. gweli, Corn. goly, Skt. vraṇa-, a wound. Stokes-Fick, p. 285. Der. vulner-ary, from F. vulneraire, 'vulnerary, healing wounds', Cot., from L. vulnerārius, suitable for wounds. And see vul-ture.

VULPINE, fox-like, cunning. (F.—L.) 'The slyness of a vulpine craft'; Feltham, pt. i. Res. 10. Blount, ed. 1674, has: 'Vulpinate, to play the fox.'—MF. vulpin, 'fox-like'. Cot.—L. vulpinus, fox-like.—L. ulp-, base of vulpes, a fox; with suffix -inus. Allied to Wolf (see Darbishire, Reliquiae Philologicae, p. 92).

VULTURE, a large bird of prey. (L.) In Mach. iv. 3. 74. ME. vultur, Wyclif, Job, xxviii. 17, later version.—L. vultur, a vulture; (OL. vultur); lit. 'a plucker' or 'tearer'.—L. ul-, (ul-), as seen in ul-si, pt. t. of vellere, to pluck; with suffix -tur denoting the agent. See Vulnerable. Der. vultur-ine, from L. vulturinus, vulture-like.

WA-WE

WABBLE, WOBBLE, to reel, move unsteadily. (E.) 'Wabble, to vacillate, reel, waver'; Brockett. A voiced form of wapple, equivalent to prov. E. wapper, 'to move tremulously, Somerset'; Halliwell. Both wabble and wapper are frequentatives of wap in the sense 'to flutter, beat the wings' (Halliwell), whence also wapping, quaking, used by Batman, 1582 (id.). There are several verbs which take the form wap, but the one now under consideration is properly whap, a by-form of ME. quappen, to palpitate; see Quaver. Cf. quabbe, a bog, quagmire (Halliwell). So also Low G. wabbeln or quabbeln, to wobble; EFries. wabbeln, kwabbeln, to wobble; Swed. dial. vabbla, to move food to and fro in the mouth, which is given as a sense of wobble in the E. D. D. Cf. AS. waspa, foam. See Whap. WACKE, a kind of soft rock. (G.) Modern; geological.—G. wacke, 'a sort of stone, consisting of quartz, sand, and mica'; Flügel. MHG. wacke, OHG. waggo, a kind of flint.

WAD, a small bundle of stuff, a little mass of wool, &c. (Scand.) Nares (ed. Halliwell) cites 'a wadde of hay'; a bundle of hay, from the poet Taylor's Works, 1630. 'Make it [lupines] into wads or bottles'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 9; cf. the phrase 'a bottle of hay'.—Swed. vadd, wadding; MSwed. wad, clothing, cloth, stuff (Ihre); Icel. vadr, stuff, only in the comp. vadmál, a plain woollen stuff, wadmál; cf. MSwed. wadmál, Dan. vadmál. Cf. G. waite, wadding, wad, a large fishing-net; watten, to dress cloth, to wad; also waite, cloth (Flügel). Hence Dan. vat, F. ovate, wadding. β. The stuff called wadmál was formerly well known in England; in Arnold's Chronicle (repr. 1811), p. 236, we find, among imports, notice of 'Rolls of wadmál' and 'course [coarse] wadmál'. 'Pann' grisei qui vocantur wadmál'; (1326), Wardrobe Acc. 20. Edw. II. 26. 3. Q. R. Halliwell gives: 'Wadmál, a very thick coarse kind of woollen cloth; coarse tow given by doctors for cattle is also so called.' It may be that our wad is nothing but a shortened form of wadmál in the sense of coarse tow, or coarse stuff; it brings us, however, ultimately, to the same source. [The Icel. vadr properly means 'a fishing-line', just as the G. watte means 'a fishing-net']. The Icel. vadmál (from mál, a measure—E. meal (2)) is for vðdmál; from Icel. vðd, vðð, a piece of stuff, cloth as it leaves the loom, which is again allied to E. weed, a garment, as used in the phr. 'a widow's weeds'. γ. From Teut. base wēd*, 3rd grade of Teut. root WED, as in Goth. ga-widan, OHG. wetan, to bind together. This base accounts for wad, stuff wound together < Icel. vadr, stuff bound or woven together, whilst the 2nd grade wad* accounts for G. watte, a fishing-net (because twined together), and Icel. vadr, a fishing-line (because twisted together). See further under Weed (2). 8. The Russ. vata, F. ovate, wadding, Span. huala, Ital. ovata, may be of Teut. origin, the last form being due to an attempt to give it a sense from Ital. ovo, an egg. It is quite unnecessary to suppose (as Diez, not very confidently, suggests) that the whole set of words allied to wad are derived from the L. ovum, an egg. Der. wadd-ing; wad-mal, as above. (The prov. E. wadmál shows that the Olcel. form was vðdmál.)

WADDLE, to walk with short steps and unweildy gait. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 37. The frequentative of Wade, q. v. Der. waddler.

WADE, to walk slowly, esp. through water. (E.) ME. waden, Chaucer, C. T. 9558 (E 1684). AS. wadan, pt. t. wōd, to wade, trudge, go; 'wadan ofer wealdas', to trudge over the woods, Genesis, ed. Grein, 2886; see Grein, i. 636. 4. Du. waden, to wade, ford; Icel. vada, strong verb, pt. t. vōð, to wade, to rush through, whence vōð, sb., a ford; Dan. vade; Swed. vada; OHG. watan, pt. t. wōt; the mod. G. waten is only a weak verb. β. All from the Teut. base WAD, to go, press through, make one's way; Idg. WADH*, to go; whence also L. wādere, to go, uadum, a ford. Der. wad-le, q. v.; wad-er; and compare (from L. wādere) s-wade, in-vade, per-vade.

WADI, WADY, a water-course, river. (Arab.) From Arab. wādī, a water-course, channel, river-bed; Richt. Dict., p. 1624. WADMAL, WADMALL; see under Wad.

WAFER, a thin small cake, usually round, a thin leaf of paste. (F.—Olow G.) ME. wafre, pl. wafres, Chaucer, C. T. 3379; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 271. We find Low L. gasfras, glossed by wafurs, in John de Garlande; Wright's Voc. i. 126, l. 14.—AF. wafre, Liber Custum. p. 473; OF. wafre, mod. F. gaufre, a wafer. The form wafre occurs in a quotation, dated 1433, given by Roquefort in his Supplement, s. v. Autier; cf. wafret in Godefroy. (The more usual OF. form was gaufre, or goffre, in which g is substituted for the orig. w.) In this quotation we have mention of un fer a wafres, an iron on which to bake wafers. Cf. Walloon wāfe, wāffle, a wafer. β. The word is of Low G. origin; Hexham gives MDu. waffel, 'a wafer'; waffel-ysse, 'a wafer-iron to bake wafers in', of which fer a wafres is a translation; mod. Du. wafel, a wafer, wafel-ijzer, a wafer-iron. So also Low G. wafeln, pl. wafers; wafel-isern, a wafer-iron. Webster's Dict. gives waffle and waffle-iron as E. words; they are obviously borrowed from Dutch immediately, and seem to be modern. Cf. also G. waffel, a wafer, waffel-eisen, a wafer-iron; Dan. vaffel, Swed. vaffla; from Low G. wafel. γ. The wafel (dotted regularly with small indentations) was named from its resemblance to a piece of honey-comb or cake of wax in a bee-hive; from a Low G. form allied to G. wabe, a honey-comb, cake of wax, a derivative from the Teut. base wēb* (2nd grade wōb*), to weave, Richt. iii. 289; the comb constructed by the bees being, as it were, woven together. The f appears in Icel. vuf, a weft, Swed. vuf, a web, AS. wefan, to weave; see Weave. The spelling with ae (in Hexham) of the MDu. word suggests a derivation from wēb*, the 3rd grade of the root. The form waffel is a diminutive. Der. wafser, verb; wafser-er, a wafer-seller, Chaucer, C. T. 12413 (C 479); ME. wafser-estre, a female wafer-seller, P. Plowman, B. v. 641.

WAFT, to bear along through air or water. (E.) 'Neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all, till the ships at Middleborough were returned, . . . by the force whereof they might be the more strongly wafted over'; Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 175. Shak. has it in several senses; (1) to beckon, as by a wave of the hand, Merch. Ven. v. 11; Timon, i. 1. 70; (2) to turn quickly, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 372; (3) to carry or send over the sea, K. John, ii. 73; 2 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 114; 116; 3 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 253; v. 7. 41. He also has waftage, passage by water, Com. Errors, iv. 1. 95; wafture (old edd. wafter), the waving of the hand, a gesture, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 246. We must also note, that Shak. has waf both for the pt. t. and pp.; see Merch. Ven. v. 11; K. John, ii. 73. [Rich. cites waft as a pt. t., occurring in Gamelyn, 785, but the best MSS. have fast; so that this is nothing to the point.] β. The word waft is not old, and does not occur in ME.; it seems to be nothing but a variant of waive, used as a verb, formed by taking the pp. and pt. t. waved (shortened to waft by rapid pronunciation), as the infinitive mood of a new verb. This is by no means an isolated case; by precisely the same process we have mod. E. hoist, due to hoised, pp. of Tudor Eng. hoise, and mod. E. graft, due to graffed, pp. of Tudor Eng. graff; while Spenser actually writes waift and weft instead of Waif, q.v. By way of proof, we should notice the exact equivalence of waved and waft in the following passages. 'Yet towards night a great sort [number of people] came doune to the water-side, and waved us on shoare [beckoned us ashore] with a white flag; Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 34 (also on p. 33). 'And waft [beckoned] her love To come again to Carthage; Merch. Ven. v. 11. And again, we must particularly note Lowland Sc. waft, to wave, shake, fluctuate, and as a sb., a hasty motion, the act of waving, a signal made by waving (Jamieson); this is merely the Northern form of waive. 'And therefore schall y waiffe it away; York Plays, p. 301. In Gawain Douglas's translation of Virgil (Aeneid, i. 310), we have, in the edition of 1839, 'With wynd waving hir haris lowist of tres', where another edition (cited by Wedgwood) has wafting. So also, in Barbour's Bruce, ix. 245, xi. 193, 513, we have the forms wafand, wafand, wafand, all meaning 'waving', with reference to banners waving in the wind. γ. We thus see that waft is due to waft or waved, pp. and pt. t. of waft or waft; cf. AS. wafian, to wave with the hand, and see further under Wave (1). Der. waft-age, wafture, as above; waft, sb., waft-er.

WAG, to move from side to side, shake to and fro. (Scand.) ME. waggen, introduced (probably) as a Northern word in Chaucer, C. T. 4037 (A 4039); cf. P. Plowman, B. viii. 31, xvi. 41. Earlier, in Havelock, 89.—MSwed. wagga, to wag, fluctuate; whence wagga, a cradle, wagga, to cradle a cradle (1hre); Swed. wagga, a cradle; or as verb, to rock a cradle; Norw. wagga, to wag. Cf. Icel. wagga, a cradle; Dan. wagge, a cradle, also, to rock a cradle; AS. wægan, to wag, OHG. weggen, Goth. wagian. Closely allied to AS. wagian, to move, vacillate, rock (Grein, i. 637), which became ME. wagen, and could not have given the mod. form wag. In Wyclif, Luke, vi. 25, the later version has waggid with the w, where the earlier version has wauid. β. The AS. wagian is a secondary weak verb, from the strong verb wægan (pt. t. wag, pp. wegen), to bear, move, carry (weigh), Grein, i. 655; and similarly the MSwed. wagga is from the 2nd grade wag* of Teut. wægan*, cognate with L. ueh-ere, to carry, from Idg. wegh-*, to carry; see Wegh, Wagon. Der. wag, sb., a droll fellow, L. L. L. v. 2. 108; as to which Wedgwood plausibly suggests that it is an abbreviation for wag-halter, once a common term for a rogue or gallow-bird, one who is likely to wag in a halter (or rather, to wag or sway a halter), see Nares; and cf. 'little young wags . . . these are lackies; 'Holinshead, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 68; also 'Oh! thou crafty wag-string! Heywood, Eng. Traveller, Act iv (near end); 'a wag-halter page, Ford, The Fancies, A. i. sc. 2. Hence wagg-ish, wagg-ish-ly, wagg-er-y (formed like knav-er-y). Also wagg-le, q.v.; wag-tail, q.v.; wag-moire, a quagmire, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Sept. 130. And see wedge.

WAGE, a gage, pledge, stake, pay for service; pl. Wages, pay for service. (F.—Teut.) ME. wage, usually in the sense of pay, Rob. of Brunne, p. 319, l. 19; for which the pl. wages occurs only two lines above. 'Wage, or hyre, Stipendium, salarium; Prompt. Parv. We now usually employ the word in the plural.—AF. wage, a prize, Langtoft, l. 222; wages, pl., Fr. Chron. of London, p. 83; OF. wager, also gage, a gage, pledge, guarantee (Burguy); hence it came to mean a stipulated payment. The change from initial w to g (and even, as here, to g) is not uncommon in OF. A verbal sb. from OF. wager, gager, gagier, to pledge; cf. Walloon wager, to pledge.—Low L. wadiere, to pledge.—Low L. wadium, a pledge.—Goth. wadi, a pledge; whence gawadijon, to pledge. β. The Goth. wadi is cognate with AS. wæd, a pledge; see Wed (1). Der. wage, verb, ME. wagen, to engage or go bail, P. Plowman, B. iv. 97, from OF. wager, verb, as above. Also wager, q.v.; en-gage, q.v. Doublet, gage (1). γ. To wage war was formerly to declare war, engage in it, not merely to carry it on, as now; cf. the phr. 'wager of battle'; see Wedgwood.

WAGER, a pledge, bet, something staked upon a chance. (F.—Teut.) ME. wageour, Assembly of Ladies, st. 55, l. 383; spelt waiour, Politt. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 218, l. 19, in a song dated 1308.—OF. wageure, orig. form of OF. gageure, 'a wager, Cot.—Low L. wadiāura, sb. formed from the pp. of wadiere, to pledge, also to wag (as shown in Duncane); see Wage. Der. wager, verb, Haml. iv. 7. 135; wager-er.

WAGGLE, to wag frequently. (Scand.) Shak. has wagglings, Much Ado, ii. 1. 119. The frequentative of Wag, q.v. Another frequentative form (with -er instead of -el or -le) appears in ME. wageren, to tremble, in Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 3, early version; the later version has tremble. Cf. Swed. dial. wagla, to totter; also G. wackeln (whence Swed. wackla); Pomeran. waggeln, to waggle; Low G. wigel-wageln, to wiggle-waggle; Du. waggelen, to totter.

WAGON, WAGGON, a wain, a vehicle for goods. (Du.) The spelling with double g merely serves to show that the vowel a is short. We find the spelling waggon in Romeo. i. 4. 59 (ed. 1623); wagon, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 28. The word is not very old, and not E., being borrowed from Dutch. (The E. form is wain.) 'They trusted all their harnes in waganes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 62 (R.); 'charyotts or waggans;' Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, p. 88.—Du. wagen, 'a wagon, or a waine,' Hexham. † AS. wægn, a wain; see Wain. γ. The mod. F. wagon is borrowed from English. Doublet, wain. Der. waggon-er, Romeo, i. 4. 64.

WAGTAIL, the name of a bird. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) In King Lear, ii. 2. 73; and in Palsgrave. Formerly called a wag-start (start meaning tail); ME. wagstart, Voc. 763. 2. From Wag and Tail. Cf. Swed. wippstjert, a wagstart or wagtail; from wippra, to wag.

WAIF, anything found astray without an owner. (F.—Scand.) ME. waif, weif; the pl. is waynes or weynes (with u=v), P. Plowman, B. prol. 94; C. i. 92. A Norman-French law-term.—AF. waif, Lib. Customarum, 434, 775; OF. waif, later gaif, pl. waives, gaives. Godefroy gives gaif, a thing lost and not claimed; choses gaives, things lost and not claimed; also wayne, a waif, which is a feminine form, evolved from a pl. form waynes, of which the sing. would be waif or waif. Cotgrave has: 'Choses guyves, weites, things forsaken, miscarried, or lost,' &c. Waif is an old Norman-French term, and of Norse origin.—ONorse weif*, Icel. veif, anything flapping about, applied, e.g. to the fin of a seal; veifan, a moving about uncertainly, whence veifanar-orð, 'a word of wafting,' a rumour; from veifa, to vibrate, move about, whence veif-skati, a spendthrift, lit. one who squanders coin. β. The ONorse v was sounded as f, w, and thus weifa* (Icel. veifa) is the source of E. waive, vb., whence waif seems to have been derived as a verbal sb. Cf. Norw. veiva, to swing about. A waif is a thing tossed loosely abroad, and then abandoned. See further under Waive, v. γ. We may also note that Spenser writes waift, F. Q. iv. 12. 31; weft, id. v. 3. 27, where the i is unoriginal (just as in waft), and due to the pp. waved. ¶ The E. weft (from weave) is a different word. So also is waive, though easily confused with waive, when used as a verb.

WAIL, to lament. (Scand.) ME. wailen, wailen, Chaucer, C. T. 1297 (A 1295); Wyclif, Matt. xxiv. 30.—Icel. wæla (formerly wæla*), to wail; also spelt wæla, mod. Icel. wala; Swed. dial. wæla, to wail; Dan. dial. wæle, to wail, wæl, a wail; Norw. wæla, to bleat. Orig. 'to cry woe'; from wæ, wel, woe! used as an interjection; cf. the curious ME. waymenten, to lament, Prompt. Parv., formed from the same interjection with the F. suffix -ment, and apparently imitated from L. lamentare. † Ital. guaiolare, to wail, cry woe; from guai, woe! a word of Teut. origin; cf. Goth. wai, woe! whence Goth. waiajmerjan, to lament. See Wo. Der. wail-ing.

WAIN, a waggon, vehicle for goods. (E.) ME. wain; written wayn, Rob. of Glouc. p. 416, l. 8596. AS. wægn, a wain; also used in the contracted form wæn, Grein, ii. 644. † Du. wagen (whence E. wagon was borrowed in the 15th or 16th century); OSax. wagan; Icel. vagn; Dan. vogn; Swed. wagn; G. wagen, OHG. wagian. β. The AS. wægn soon passed into the form wæn by the loss of g (sounded as y), just as AS. regn became ræn, mod. E. rain; cf. hail, nail, tail, in which g similarly disappears; so also E. day from AS. dag, &c. Hence it is impossible to regard wagon as a true E. word. γ. All the above forms are from Teut. waggon*, m., a wain, carriage; from the 2nd grade (wag*) of Teut. wægun*, to carry; from Idg. wegh-*, to carry, whence E. vehicle. From the same root we have L. ueh-iculum, Skt. vahanu-, a vehicle, Skt. vah-ya, Gk. ōx-os, a car, Irish fen, a car, Russ. voz, a load. See Vehicle. Doublet, wagon or waggon. And see Wegh.

WAINSCOT, panelled boards on the walls of rooms. (Du.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 3. 88. Applied to any kind of panelled work. I find: 'a tabyll of waynscott with to [two] joynted trestellis; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 115, in a will dated 1522; also 'a rownde tabyll of waynscott with lok and key, id. p. 116; also 'a brode cheste of waynscott,' id. p. 117. Still earlier, I find waynscot in what appears to be a list of imports; Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 236, l. 4. And much earlier 'c du bord appelle waynscott,' Liber Albus, p. 238. Hakluyt even retains something of the Du. spelling, where he speaks of 'boards [boards] called waghen-scot;' Voyages, i. 173.—Du. wagen-schot, 'wainscot;' Hexham. Low G. wagenschot, the best kind of oak-wood, well-grained and without knots. Cf. Low G. bühenschot, the best kind of beech-wood, without knots, in which the former part of the word is Low G. bühen, beechen, adj. formed from bock, a beech. (We may here remark that E. wainscot, in the building trade, is applied to the best kind of oak-timber only, used for panelling because it would not 'cast' or warp; see Wainscot in Trench, Select Glossary.) β. The Du. schot (like E. shot) has numerous senses, of which one is 'a closure of boards,' Hexham. It also meant 'a shot, a cast, or a throw, the floure of meale, revenue or rent, gaine or money, a shot or score to pay for any things,' id. Sewel also explains schot by 'a wainscot, partition, a stop put to anything, the pace (of a ship), a hogs-sty.' See Shot. γ. The mod. Du. wagen-schot is an altered form, due to popular etymology; as if the derivation were from Du. wagen, a wain or waggon; see Wain. But the older form is MDu. waeghe-schot (without n, Kilian); which some (see Ten Kate, Aencliding, &c. (1723), ii. 507) wrongly take to be connected with MDu. waech, weegh, Du. weeg, a wall, cognate with AS. wāh, OFries. wāch, OSax. weg, a wall, and allied to Icel. vegg, Goth. waddja, a wall. See the article by J. B. Vinckers, in Tenatidate, dated Oct. 7, 1883, from which I quote: 'Dutch shipwrights still use a very remarkable term wageren, meaning "to cover the inside of a ship with boards," from which is derived the pl. noun wageringen, the inside boards.' δ. A better theory is that given in Kilian, which connects waeghe with MDu. waeghe (G. wage, AS. weg, Goth. wēg), a wage; with reference to the waving grain appearing upon the cleft wood. This suits the phonology better. ε. Hexham also has want-schot, wainscot, from want, a wall; and explains want-schotten by 'to wainscott walls.' Der. wainscot, verb.

WAIST, the middle part of the human body, or of a ship. (E.) Spelt waist in Palsgrave. ME. waist, called waiste of a mannys myddel or waist of the myddel in Prompt. Parv. The dat. waiste is in Gower, C. A. ii. 373, l. 13. The right sense is 'growth,' hence the thick part or middle of the body, where the size of a man is developed; we find the spelling waiste (dat. case) with the sense of 'strength,' in O. Eng. Homilies, l. 77, l. 3. It answers to an AS. form waist*, waet*, not found, though the nearly related waestm, growth, also fruit, p. -lance, is a very common word; see Grein, ii. 650. Indeed, the AS. waestm became waeste, waeste in later English, and it is by no means improbable that the mod. E. waist was suggested by it. In Genesis and Exodus, 1910, Joseph is described as being 'bricest of waspenes,' certainly miswritten (in the MS.) for 'bricest of waestnes,' i.e. fairest of form or shape, 'well-waisted.' = AS. waestan, to grow, to wax; from Teut. base waks-* (as in Goth. wakjan, to wax); whence AS. waks-ful*, weat*; cf. AS. waestm, formed like bliss-m (E. blossom) from blissan, to flourish. See Wax (1). So also Goth. waikjan, out-growth, waikjan, to grow; OIG. wakst, wast, growth, waks-an, to grow. Further allied to Goth. wakstun, growth; Icel. vætt, stature, also shape, wætt; Dan. væst, væst, væst, growth, size. Der. waist-band, waist-coat, spelt wæst-coat in Browne, Britannia's Pastors, b. i. s. 5, l. 106 from the end; and see Nares.

WAITE, to watch, stay in expectation, abide, lie in ambush. (F.—Low L. OIG.) ME. waiten, P. Plowman, B. v. 202; Havelok, 512.—AF. waiter, to watch, Langtoft, i. 448; OF. waiter, waitier, also guiter, guiter (Godefroy), later guetter, 'to watch, ward, mark, heed, note, dog, stalk after, lie in wait for'; Cot. Cf. Walloon waitier, to spy. A denominative verb. = AF. waite, Liber Albus, p. 646; OF. wait, gaite (Godefroy), a guard, sentinel, watchman, or spy; later gaite, 'watch, ward, heed, also the watch, or company appointed to watch'; Cot.—Low L. waite, a guard; whence waiteira, to guard, Ducange (>OF. waitier).—OHG. wakst, MHG. wakste, G. wacht, a guard, watch; whence was formed G. wächter, a watchman. (The Icel. wakta, to watch, is merely borrowed from G., not a true Scand. word.) β. The sh. wak-ta answers to a Teut. type wak-ton-, m., for wak-ton-, a watcher, one who is awake; from Teut. wak-an-*, to wake; see Wake (1). Der. wait-er, ME. waitere, a watchman, Wyclif, 4 Kings ix. 17 (once MS. of later version). Also wait, sb., chiefly in the plur. 'to lie in wait,' Acts, xxiii. 21. The ME. waite properly signifies a watchman or spy, as in Cursor Mundi, 11541, from OF. waite, as above, and is really an older word than the verb, as above shown; it only remains to us in the phrase 'the Christmas waits,' where a wait is 'one who is awake,' for the purpose of playing music at night; cf. Waite, a spy; Waite, waker, Vigil; Prompt. Parv. 'Assint etiam excubie vigiles [glossed by OF. vegies veliales], cornibus suis strepitum et clangorem et sonitum facientes.' Wright's Voc. i. 106, l. 1. Also wait-ing, wait-ing-woman, K. Lear, iv. i. 65; a-wait, vb., q. v.

WAIVE, to relinquish, abandon a claim. (F.—Scand.) Chiefly in the phr. 'to waive a claim,' as in Cotgrave (see below). ME. waiven, waiven (with w=), a difficult and rather vague word, chiefly in the sense 'to set aside' or 'shun,' also 'to remove' or 'push aside'; see P. Plowman, B. v. 611 (where the MS. may be read waive); id. B. xx. 167; Chaucer, C. T. 4728, 9357, 10298, 17127, 17344 (B 308, E 1483, 2424, H 178, I 33), Troil. ii. 284; Gower, C. A. i. 276, bk. ii. 3469.—AF. waiver, to waive, Year-Books of Edw. I (1293-3), pp. 39, 53, 55, 205; OF. waiver (Godefroy), to cede, abandon; later guesier, 'to waive, refuse, abandon, give over, surrender, resigne'; Cot. The AF. waif, sb., is in the Liber Custumarum, pp. 151, 434, 486; OF. gaif in Godefroy; see Waif. Ducange gives Low L. waivare, to waive, abandon, waivium, a waif, or a beast without an owner, waivus, adj., abandoned as a waif, which are merely Latinised forms of the F. words; and he remarks that these words are of common occurrence. β. The sb. seems to be from the vb.—ONorse weifa*, Icel. veifa, to vibrate, swing about, move to and fro in a loose way; Norw. veiva, to swing about, to turn a grindstone, Swed. veiva, to wind; cf. Low G. waifen, to swing about, to toss (Schambach). Hence the sense 'to cast loose.'—OIG. waibin, MHG. weiben, waiben, to fluctuate, swing about; cf. Goth. bi-waibjan, to wind about; Skt. wēp, to shake. (✓WELP.)

γ. Distinct from wave, despite some similarity in the sense; but the words have been confused.

WAKE (1), to cease from sleep, be brisk. (F.) ME. waken, strong verb, pt. wok, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1393 (Six-text); where Tyrwhitt, l. 1395, prints wokok; also wakien, weak verb, to keep awake, pp. waked, Havelok, 2999. Corresponding to these verbs, we should now say 'he waked,' and 'he was waked.' [They are both distinct from ME. waknen, to waken; which see under Waken.] AS. wacan, to arise, come to life, be born, pt. wac, pp. wacen; also wacian, to wake, watch, pt. wacode, wacode; Grein, ii. 635.—Goth. wakan, pt. wak, pp. wakans, to wake, watch; whence wakjan, weak verb, only in comp. wakjanjan, to wake from sleep; Icel. waken (weak verb); Icel. waka (weak); Dan. vagge; Swed. vaki; G. wachen. β. All from Teut. base WAK, to be brisk, be awake, allied to Idg. wegw-* to be vigorous, whence Vigil, Vegetable, q. v. Brugmann, ii. § 804. Der. wake (weak verb), to rouse, answering to AS. wacian, as above; wake, sb., a vigil, ME. wake, Ancien. Kiwe, p. 314, l. 2 from bottom, from AS. wake, occurring in the comp. nicht-waken, a night-wake, Grein, ii. 286, l. 5. Also wake-ful, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 9. 7, substituted for AS. wacod or wacod (allied to L. vigil), Cot. 315. 26; hence wake-ful-ly, wake-ful-ness, q. v., wake-en, q. v., watch, q. v.

WAKE (2), the track of a ship. (Scand.) 'In the wake of the ship (as it called), or the smoothness which the ship's passing has made (on the sea); Daupier's Voyages, an. 1699 (R.).' Wake, (among seamen) is taken for that smooth water which a ship leaves astern when under sail, and is also called the ship's way; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'In Norfolk, where the breads [large tarps] are mostly frozen over, the spaces of open water are called wakes.' Wedgwood. Like many other E. Anglian words, wake is of Scand. origin. It was originally cut for a ship in a frozen lake or sea; and esp. to the passage cut for a ship in a frozen lake or sea; thence it was easily transferred to denote the smooth water track left behind a ship that had made its way through ice, and at last (by a complete forgetfulness of its true use) was applied to the smooth track left behind a vessel when there is no ice at all. And even, in prov. E., rows of green damp grass are called wakes (Halliwell).—Icel. wak (stem wak-, gen. sing. wakna), a hole, opening in ice; drag þeir skipi milli vakanna—to drag their ship between [or along] wakes (Vigfussun); Swed. wak, an opening in ice; Norw. wak, the same, whence wakjan, to cut a hole in ice, especially to hew out a passage for ships in frozen water' (Asen); N'ries, wak, Dan. vage, the same. 'The mod. Du. wak (like E. wake) is merely borrowed from Scandinavian. The orig. sense is a 'moist' or 'wet' place, and it is allied to Icel. viskr, moist, viskra, to moisten, to water, viskra, moisture, juice, whence Lowland Sc. wak, moist, watery; so also Dan. wake, juice. Teut. type wakwaz*, moist (Frank); Teut. base WIK, to wet, answering to Idg. root wegw-*, to wet, whence Gk. βη-ρην, L. βι-ρην, βι-ρην, see further under Humid. Brugmann, i. § 628 (3). β. The F. ouiche, formerly also ouage, now usually houache, the wake of a ship, is clearly borrowed from English, as Littre says. The connexion between wake, a wet track through ice, and prov. E. wake, a row of damp grass, is sufficiently clear. Cf. Homer's βυρρὰ κλειυεβα, Od. iii. 71. From the same root is quaff, q. v.

WAKEN, to awake. (K.) This verb is of considerable grammatical importance, and should be carefully studied, being one of a class not very common in mod. E., and peculiarly liable to be misunderstood. The point is, that it was orig. intransitive, whereas in Shk. it is transitive only, 3 Hen. VI. iv. 3. 19, Romeo, iii. i. 28, iv. 4. 24, Oth. ii. 1. 188; &c. In mod. English, verbs in -en, by a singular change, are mostly transitive, such as strengthen, embolden, &c.; but this is just contrary to the older usage, not only in ME. and AS. but in the Teut. languages generally. The subject is discussed in Grimm's Grammar, ed. 1837, iv. 23, where he shows that Goth.

auk-a, I eke, or increase, answers to Gk. αἰῶν, whereas aukna (= I eke-n) answers to Gk. αἰδέσθαι, in the middle voice; and there was also in Gothic a third form auwada=Gk. αἰδέσθαι in the passive voice.

β. The ME form is waken or wahnen, intransitive. 'So þat he bigan to waken'=so that he began to waken (or be aroused from sleep), Havelock, 2164. AS. wacnan, to arise, be aroused, be born; Grein, ii. 642. The formative -n- in wac-n is due to the pp. suffix -n (Teut. -awo-) seen in AS. wacenn, pp. of wac-an, to wake; so that wac-n an orig. meant 'to become awake.' Allied to AS. wacan, to wake; see Waka, +Icel. wakna, to become awake; allied to vaka, to wake; Swed. wakna, allied to vaka; Dan. vagune, allied to vagge; Goth. gawaknan, allied to wahan; whence pres. part. pl. gawaknandans=becoming awake, Luke, ix. 32. Der. a-waken.

WALE (1). WEAL, the mark of a stroke of a rod or whip upon the flesh, a streak, a ridge, a plank along a ship's side. (E). Sometimes spelt wealk, but a wealk is properly a blister; see WHEEL (1). 'The wales, marks, scars, and cicatrices'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 459 (R). 'The wales or marks of stripes and lashes'; id. p. 547 (R). MK. wale. 'Wale, or strype'; Prompt. Parv. 'Wychtly on the wale [gunwale] they wye vp their ankrs'; Morle Arthur, 740. AS. walu (pl. wala), a wael, mark of a blow, occurring 4 times in glosses; also, a ridge (Toller). We also find OS. wurt-wala (-wala), properly the shoot or stem of a root, as when the root of a tree projects from the ground, hence used for 'root' simply; cf. 681 plantadust wyrttruman hys = thou plantest his roots, l. lxix, 10. cf. Spelman, where the Trinity MS. has 681 wurtwalo (sic wurtwalo), the last word being corrupted written for wurtwala. The orig. sense was 'rod', hence the rounded half-buried side-shoot of a root (as above), or the raised stripe or ridge caused by the blow of a rod or whip. Hence also the sense of ridge or plank along the edge of a ship, as in the comp. gun-wale, q. v. + OFries. walu, a rod, wand; only in the comp. walubera, walebera, a rod-bearer, a pilgrim; + OFries. walu, a wael; + NFriesic wal, a staff, rod (Outzen); Icel. wal (gen. walar), a round stick, a staff; Swed. dial. val, a round stick, cudgel, flail-handle (Kietz); Goth. walus, a staff; Luke, ix. 3. B. All from the Teut. types (walton-, waltu-, waluz-, a round stick, so named from its roundness; the sense of 'rounded ridge' still lingers in mod. E. wale; cf. Icel. walr, round, OFries. waluz, to turn round, Russ. wal, a cylinder, walid(e), to roll; allied to L. uolvere, to turn, Gk. diagein, to turn round. (2) WEL. See Volute. Der. gun-wale, WALE (2), choice; as a vb., to choose. (Scand.) Obsolete; except in N. dialects. ME. walen, to choose, Wars of Alexander, 4655; from wale, sb., choice, Allit. Troy-book, 11052.—Olf. wal*, Icel. val, choice; Swed. val; MDan. val; + OlfG. wale, choice; G. wahl. Hence Icel. valja, to choose, Swed. välja, Dan. vælge; cf. Gotl. waljan, to choose, Skt. varaya, to choose, causal form of vr, to choose. From Teut. wal*. Idg. wal*, and grade of wel-*, to desire. See Will (1).

WALK, v. [g., walk, n.; g., walken, v.] To move along on foot without running. (E.) ME. walke, formerly a strong verb; pt. walk, pp. walken. The pt. t. walk occurs in the Fricke of Conscience, ll. 4248, 4390; the pp. is spelt walke, King Horn, ed. Launby, 953. AS. wælcian, pp. wæole, pp. wælcen, to roll, to toss oneself about, rove about, esp. used of the movement or flow of water; Grein, i. 669. Thus the orig. sense was 'to roll,' much as in the proverb 'a rolling [moving] stone gathers no moss.' Hence the ME. walker, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 2 (earlier version), lit. a roller, a term applied to a fuller of cloth from his stamping on or pressing it; AS. wælcere=I., fulto, Voc. 407. 29; Walker is still common as a proper name. +Du. walken, to work or make a hat; MDu. walkēn, 'to press, to squeeze, or to strain'; walcker, 'a fuller'; Ilexham; Iccl. walka, wolka, to roll, to stamp, to roll oneself, to wallow; wilk, a tossing about; Swed. walka, to roll, to roll, to work; wälke, to fall, to mail; G. wälken, to mail, OHG. walkan, to fall, to roll or turn oneself round, to move about; hence G. walker, a fuller. +Fr. walc from Vulg. base WALK, to roll about, answering to Idg. WALG, whence Skt. val, to go by leaps. Der. walk, sk. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 138; walking-stick, Rich. II. ii. 3. 151; walk-ing-stick. Also walk-er, a fuller, P. Plowman, C. i. 222. And see wallow.

WALL, a stone fence, a fence of stone or brick, a rampart. (L. ME. wall, appearing as walle, Chaucer, C. T. 8923 (E 1047). AS. weal, weall, a rampart of earth, a wall of stone; Grein, ii. 67r. Not a Teut. word, but borrowed from the famous L. vallum, a rampart, whence also W. gwâl, a rampart, as well as Du. wal, Swed. vall, G. wall, &c. β . The L. vallum is a collective sb., signifying a row or line of stakes—L. vallus, a stake, pale, palisade; lit. a protection. Allied to Olrish fâl, a hedge; Stokes-Fick, p. 276. ¶ The true AS. word for 'wall' was wæll, Grein, ii. 643 (where the accent is wrongly omitted), whence ME. wowe, P. Plowman, B. iii. 61 (obsolete). Dex. wall, verb, ME. wallen, Robt. of Glouc. p. 51, l. 1160; wall-flower, wall-fruit; also wall-newt, K. Lear, iii. 4. 135. ~~See~~ No connection with wall-eyed.

WALLA, WALLAH, short for Competition-walla. (Hind.-Skt.) A competition-walla is an Anglo-Indian term, applied, after 1836, to one who entered the Civil Service by the competitive system then established. See Yule, who explains that the Hind. -wālā is properly a Hindi adjectival suffix, with a similar value to that of Lat. -arius, or E. -er; so that competition-walla = competition-er, i. e. competitor. Cf. Hind. gwālā, a cow-herd; for gṛ-wālā*; from gṛ, a cow. -Skt. -wala-, suffix; as in vid-wala, clever, from vid, to know; Brugmann, i. § 76, note 1.

WALLABY, a small kangaroo. (Australian). 'Wallaby, a name used for the smaller kinds of kangaroos.' E. E. Morris, Austral. Dict.: q. v. From the native Austral. walla, to jump.

AUGUSTAL, DICE; q.v. From the name Augustus, Latin, to aug. WALLLET, a bag for carrying money, budget (E. P.) ME. wallet (with one r). Cf. OED s.v. 683 (A87); P. Plowman, l. 29, where fogel-wallet; some MSS. have watlet-~~e~~; and others have walof in the latter passage we have the probable solution of the word; the ME. wallet being apparently a corruption of watet. In the same way, wallats, used by Shakespeare for bags of flesh upon the neck (Temp. iii. 2. 46), may be the same as wattles, 'teat-like excrescences that hang from the cheeks of swine,' Brockett. That wattit should turn into wallet is not very surprising, for i is near kin to r, and a similar shifting of r is a common phenomenon in English, as in AS. irnan=rinnan, to run, ME. brid=a bird, ME. burd=a bride, &c.; so also needt, a needle, moult=model; worldt for worlde, i.e. world, P. Plowm. C. i. 10, &c. We even find fadoch for fugot, Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, v. 77; and maddock with the same sense as maggot. At any rate, the very special use of wallets=wattles=fleshy bags, is remarkable, as well as the equivalent use of watet and watet in the MSS. of P. Plowman. β. The E. wattle commonly means 'hurdle,' but ME. wattel appears to have also meant a basket, and hence a bag. See further under WATTLE. It is perhaps worth while to add that we find in Voc. 656. 9, the entry Ilic pero, woyling, which Mr. Wright explains as 'a leathern sack.' This ME. woyling, having no obvious etymology, is perhaps a contraction of walling (the dimin. of wat), by loss of t. (Doubtful! some assume an OF. walat, bag; as if from OHG. wallon, to go on pilgrimage.)

WALL-EYED, with glaring eyes, discolored eyes. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John. iv. 3. 49. Titus, v. 1. 44. Spenser has whally eyes, F. Q. I. 4. 24. "Glaucious, An horse with a waile eye;" Cooper's Thesaurus, cl. 1565. Nares writes it whally, and explains it from whaile or whall, the disease of the eyes called glaucoma; and cites "Glaucoma, a disease in the eye; some think it to be a whal eye;" A. Fleming's Nomenclator, p. 428. Colgrave has "Oeil de chevre, a whall, or over-white eye; an eye full of white spots, or whose appearance is defined by a streak of white." But the spelling with k is wrong. ME. wald-eyed, Wars of Alexander, 608; wolden-eyghed, King Alis. 5274. Also wauil-eyed, Wars of Alexander, 1706.—Icel. wald-eygr, a corrupted form of vagi-eygr, wall-eyed, said of a horse.—Icel. vagi, a beam, also a beam in the eye, a disease of the eye (as in vagi á anga, a wall in the eye); and eygr, eyegry, eyed, an adjective. Wald-eygr is the eye which is fogged with E. Wyre. þ. the Icel. vagi, the beam; Wald-eygr, a fogged eye, a perch, as þ. the Icel. vagi þá ígat, "a swimmer on the cyclidic style of the cyclid, in the eye; vagi þá ígat, "a tumor on the cyclidic style of the cyclid," Widgren. Cf. Norweg. vagi, a hen-roost, Aasen. The lit. sense is "a perch," or "a narrow support" closely allied to Icel. vagn, a wain.—WEGH, to carry, as in Skt. vah, l. uhere (whence uac-is, a pole); see Wain. See Notes on E. Kym., c. 316.

WALLOW, to roll; see Potwallopan and Gallop.
WALLOW, to roll oneself about, as in mire. (E.) ME. wallowen, Chaucer, C. T. 6684 (D 1102). AS. wealwian, to roll round, Alfred, tr. of Boethius, c. 6 (b. i. met. 7); Goth. waļwjan, to roll, in comp. atwaļwjan, afwaļwjan, faurwaļwjan; L. wolvere, to roll. See Volute.

WALNUT, lit. a foreign nut. (E.) MF. walnois, spelt walnois, P. Plowman, B. xi. 251. OMercr. walk-hnutin, a walnut; Voc. 452. 34. Lit. 'foreign (i.e. Gaulish) nut' = OMercr. walut, AS. walut, foreign; and hnutin, a nut. The pl. Wenas means 'strangers', i.e. the Weisk; but in mod. E. it has become Wales. +Du. walnut, MDu. walote (Hexham); Icel. walnut; Dan. valnød; Swed. valnöt; G. walnuß; also Walche = nut. c. foreign nut. P. For the latter element, see Nut. The former element is AS. wal, foreign, foreign, OHG. walah, a foreigner, whence G. Wälsch, Italian. The sense 'foreign' is inexact; the AS. Wenla meant a Celt, either of Wales or Gaul. It answers in form to 'one of the tribe of Volca', who occupied Southern Gaul: Caesar, Bellum Gallicum, vii. 7.

WALRUS, a kind of large seal. (Du.—Scand.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775.—Du. walrus, 'a kind of great fish with tusks'; Sewel, 1754. Hence also the modern Scand. forms; as Swed. walros, a morse, walrus; Dan. kvalros. The name is very old, since the word ross (for horse) is no longer in use in Swedish and Danish, which languages now employ häst, hest in its stead; but we find the right word, in an inverted form, in Icel. krass-kvalr, a walrus, lit. a horse-whale; the name being given (it is suggested) from the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh. So also AS. horskvalr, a horse-whale or walrus. β. The Swed. vall, Dan. kval, Icel. kvalr, are cognate with E. Whale. The Swed. ross, Dan. ros, Icel. hröst or höst, are cognate with AS. hors (the r in which has shifted); see Horse. ¶ The name morse, q. v., is of Finnish origin.

WALTZ, the name of a dance. (G.) Introduced in 1812; see Byron's poem on 'The Waltz.' A shortened form of G. waltzer (with z sounded as ts, whence the K. spelling), 'a jig, a waltz,' Flügel. — G. walzen, 'to roll, revolve, dance round about, waltz'; id. † AS. wæltian, to roll, twist; see further under Welter. Der. waltz, verb.

WAMPUM, small beads, used as money. (N. American Indian.) 'Wampum, small beads made of shells [sometimes white], used by the N. American Indians as money, and also wrought into belts, &c., as an ornament;' Webster. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. From the Narragansett wamp, white, and compag, a suffix to denote a string of money; whence the compound wampumpag, or briefly, wampum; Notes and Queries, 9 S. x. 226. Cf. Algonkin wab, white (Cuoq); Massachusetts wampin, Delaware wipi, white (Mahn). See Wapiti.

WAN, colourless, languid, pale. (E.) ME. wan, Chaucer, C. T. 2458 (A 2456). AS. wann, dark, black, Grein, ii. 638. It occurs as an epithet of a raven, and of night; so that the sense of the word appears to have suffered a remarkable change; the sense, however, was probably 'dead' or 'colourless,' which is applicable to black and pallid alike. Hence Ettmüller derives it from AS. wann, 2nd grade of winnan, to strive, contend, toil (whence E. win); so that the orig. sense would have been 'worn out with toil, tired out,' from which we easily pass to the sense of 'worn out' or 'pallid with sleeplessness' in the mod. E. word. (Cf. Goth. wunns, affliction; from the weak grade wunna.) So also in Stokes-Fick, p. 259, who takes it to be cognate with Irish fann, W. gwan, feeble, weak, faint. It seems to be distinct from Wane, confusion with which has affected its sense. See further under Win. Der. wan-ly, wan-ness.

WAND, a long slender rod. (Scand.) ME. wand, Pricke of Conscience, 6880; Ormulum, 16178. — Icel. vundur (gen. vandar), a wand, a switch, whence vandahús, a wicker-house; MSwed. wand (Ihre); Dan. wand, † Goth. wandus, a rod, 2 Cr. ii. 25. β. The Teut. type is wanduz*, n. It was perhaps named from its pliancy and use in wicker-work, the orig. sense being a little twig, that could be wound into wicker-work. From Teut. wand*, 2nd grade of windan*; to wind; see Wind (2). But some give it the sense of 'weapon, and connect it with Wound.

WANDER, to ramble, rove. (E.) ME. wandrien, wandren, P. Mowman, l. v. 304. AS. wandrian, to wander, Alfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. 1 (cap. xxxvi. § 2). The frequentative form of wend, to go; hence it means 'to keep going about.' From wand, base of wand-jan*, the orig. form of wend. See Wend. † EFries. wandern, wandeln; Swed. vandra, Dan. vandre (from Low G.); Du. wandelen, 'to walk,' Hexham; G. wandeln, to wander, travel, walk. Der. wander-er. Also Vandal, q. v.

WANDERROO, a large Cingalese and Malabar monkey. (Cingalese. — Skt.) Spelt wanderow in 1681 (Yule). — Cing. wanderu; cf. Hind. bandar, an ape. — Skt. vānara, vānara, a monkey. Lit. 'forest-dweller.' — Skt. vana, forest. Allied to Goth. winja, pasture; Icel. vin, meadow; orig. free space or 'pleasure-ground'; and allied to Winsome and Win. (WEN*.)

WANE, to decrease (as the moon), to fail. (E.) ME. wanien, wanen, Chaucer, C. T. 2080 (A 2078). AS. wanien, wonien, to decrease, grow less; Grein, ii. 639. — AS. wan, won, deficient, id. 638. † Icel. vana, to diminish, from vanr, lacking, wanting; also van-, in composition. Cf. OHG. and MHG. wanōn, wanēn, to wane, from wan, deficient, appearing in mod. G. compounds as wahn-. So also Du. wan-, prefix, in wanhoop, despair (lit. lacking hope). Also Goth. wans, lacking. β. All from Teut. type wa-noz*, adj., deficient; perhaps orig. a pp. Allied to the Gk. ēvres, bereaved, Skt. śva-s, wanting, lessened, inferior. Der. want, wan-ton; and prob. wan-i-on, q. v.

WANION, in the phrase with a wanion. (E.) In Shak. Per. ii. 1. 17; the phr. with a wanion means 'with a curse on you,' or 'with bad luck to you,' or 'to him,' as the case may be. Explained by Wedgwood, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1873-4, p. 328; the connexion with the verb to wane was pointed out by Nares. There is no doubt (1) that it stands for waniond, and (2) that waniond was taken to be a sb., instead of a pres. part. Rich. quotes from Sir T. More: 'He would of likelyhod binde thee to cartes and beate them, and make them wed in the waniond,' Works, p. 306 h; which means, I suppose, he would flog them at the cart's tail (a common expression), and make them marry in the waning moon, i.e. at an unlucky time. So also: 'in woo to wonne [dwell], in the wanyand,' York Plays, p. 124. 'It was in the waniond [in an unlucky time]; Minot, ed. T. Wright, l. 87. And even in AS, we have: 'Ealle corliffe lichaman beoð fulran on fuller in the waxing than in the waning moon; Pop. Treatise on Science, ed. T. Wright, p. 15. Halliwell gives 'waniand, and the wane of the moon,' without any authority; but compare the following: 'So myghte he wel sey, that in the crook [crescent] of the moon com he thiderward, and in the wyde wanyande [i.e. waning] wente homward;' A Chronicle of London, ed. Sir H. Nicolas, 1827, p. 122; see note to Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 398. So that the first and last quarters of the moon were both unpropitious. β. Waniand is the Northern form of the pres. part. of ME. wanien, to wane, also used actively in the sense to lessen, deprive (see below). The confusion of the pres. part. with the sb. in -ing is so common in English that many people cannot parse a word ending in -ing. Thus in the waniand came to mean 'in the waning,' and with a wanion means with a diminution, detriment, ill-luck. On 'the fatal influence of the waning moon,' general in Scotland,' see Brand's Popular Antiquities, chapter on The Moon. The Icel. vana, to wane, is commonly transitive, with the senses 'to make to wane, disable, spoil, destroy,' which may have influenced the superstition in the North, though it is doubtless widely spread. Cf. 'wurres uppe churches, oder wanied hier ritters, oder letter' — war upon churches, or lessen their rights, or hinder them; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 177, l. 6. See Wane.

WANT, lack, deficiency, indigence, need. (Scand.) ME. want, first in the Ormulum, 14398, where it is spelt wannt, and has the adj. sense of 'deficient'; spelt wante, and used as a sb., Ancrer Riwle, p. 284, l. 2. — Icel. want, neuter of wanr, adj., lacking, deficient. This neuter form was used with a gen. case following; as, var þeim vetrugis want — there was lacking to them of nothing, i.e. they wanted nothing. [The Icel. sb. for want is wansi.] β. Thus the final t was orig. merely the termination of the neut. gender (as in E. i-t, tho-t, thwar-t); but the word want was in common use, and even the verb wanta, to want, to lack, was formed from it, which is the origin of E. want as a verb. γ. The Icel. wanr, adj., is explained under Wane, q. v. Der. want, verb, ME. wanten, spelt wonten in Ancrer Riwle, p. 344, l. 14; from Icel. wanta, verb, as above. Also wanting, pres. part., sometimes used as adj.

WANTON, playful, sportive, unrestrained. (E.) The true sense is unrestrained, uneducated, not taken in hand by a master; hence, licentious. ME. wantoun, contracted form of wantowen; spelt wantoun, Chaucer, C. T. 208; spelt wantowen, wantowne, wanton, P. Mowman, C. iv. 143, where it is applied to women. Compounded of wan-, prefix, and towen, pp. β. The prefix wan- signifies 'lacking, wanting,' and is explained under Wane. In composition it has sometimes the force of un- (to which it is not related), but also gives an ill sense, almost like Gk. δυσ-. γ. The pp. towen stands for AS. togen, pp. of teon, to draw, to educate, bring up, Grein, ii. 527. The change from AS. g to ME. w (after a, o, or u) is seen again in AS. mugan = ME. mowen, to be able, and is regular. The AS. togen is cognate with G. gezogen, so that E. wanton, ill-bred, corresponds very nearly to G. ungezogen, 'ill-bred, unmanly, rude, uncivil,' Flügel. For an account of AS. teon, see Tow (1). Mr. Wedgwood well cites ut i-towne, well educated, modest, Ancrer Riwle, p. 204, l. 17; utownne, licentious, id. p. 342, l. 26. So also ful i-towne, foully (badly) educated; id. p. 140, l. 26. Der. wanton-ly; wantonness, ME. wantonnesse, Chaucer, C. T. 266 (A 264). Also wanton, sb.

WAPENTAKE, an old name for a hundred or district. (Scand.) 'Fraunchises, hundredis, wapentakes;' Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 181. 'Candred . . . is a contray bat conteyneþ an hundred townes, and is also in Englishe i-cleped wapentake;' Trevisa, ii. 87; spelt wapentake, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 145, l. 16. The word occurs in the AS. Laws, but was merely adapted from Norse; the AS. tecan does not mean 'to touch,' but 'to teach,' and is altogether removed from the word under discussion. It is remarkable that various explanations of this word have been given, seeing that all the while the Laws of Edward the Confessor fully explain the orig. sense. AS. wæpentaec, dat. case, a district, wapentake, Secular Laws of Edgar, § vi, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, vol. i. p. 274; we also find wæpentaec, dat. case, id. p. 292. The nom. is wæpentaec or wæpentac, Latinised as wapentac or wapentagium, Laws of Edw. Conf. § xxx, in Thorpe, i. 455, where we also read: 'Quod alii vocant hundredum, supradicti comitatus vocant wapentagium, et hoc non sine causa; cum enim aliquis accipiebatur prefecturam wapentagii, die constituto, conveniebant omnes maiores contra eum in loco ubi soliti erant congregari, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgant contra eum, et ipse erigebat lanceam suam in altum, et omnes de lanceis suis tangebant hastam ejus, et sic confirmabant se sibi. Et de armis, quia arma vocant wapta, et taccare, quod est confirmare. To which another MS. adds: 'Anglice vero arma vocantur wapen, et taccare confirmare, quasi armorum confirmacio, vel ut magis expresse, secundum linguam Anglicam, dicimus wapentia, i. e. armorum tactus: wapen enim arma sonat, tactus est. Quamobrem potest cognosci quod hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur wapentia, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confederate (sic) sunt.' We may then dismiss other explanations, and accept the one above, that when a new chief of a wapentake was elected, he used to raise his wapen (a spear), and his men touched it with theirs in token of fealty. However the word (as above said) is Norse. — Icel. vápnatak, lit. a weapon-taking or weapon-touching; hence, a vote of consent so expressed, and lastly, a subdivision of a shire in the Danish part of England, answering (somewhat) to the hundred in other parts; the reason for this being as above given. — Icel. vápná, gen. pl. of vápn, a weapon, cognate with E. weapon; and tak, a taking hold, a grasp, esp. a grasp in wrestling (here used of the contact of weapons), from taka, to take, seize, grasp, also to touch. See Weapon and Take. ¶ As the Icel. taka means to touch as well as to take, it will be seen that the explanation 'weapon-grasping' in the Icel. Dict. is insufficient; it means more than that, viz. the clashing of one spear against another. 'Si placuit [sententia], framas concutunt; honoratissimum assensus genus est armis laudare,' Tacitus, Germania, chap. 11; &c. Cf. Lowland Sc. wapinschow (weapon-show), an exhibition of arms made at certain times in every district; Jamieson.

WAPITI, the American elk. (Amer. Indian.) From the Cree wapitik, 'white deer'; cf. Delaware wipi, white. See Wampus. ¶ The name is misspelled, as the wapiti is not white; it was first given to the Rocky Mountain goat (Haploceerus montanus); and then transferred to the wapiti, which does not much resemble it. See Century Dict.

WAR, hostility, a contest between states by force of arms. (F.—Teut.) ME. werre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 47. It occurs in the A. S. Chron. an. 1119, where it is spelt werre, but a little further on, an. 1140, it is spelt wuerre (= werre). But we also find 'armorum oneribus, quod Angli war-scot dicunt' in the Laws of Cnut, De Foresta, § 9; Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 427 (evidently from a MS. of later date). The word is really French; the usual A.S. word is wig; we also find hild, winn, gáf, &c. The derivatives warrior and warlike (to make war on, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 48), respecting which see below, are also of F. origin. — OF. werre, war (Burguy, Roquefort), whence mod. F. guerre. OF. Teut. origin. From the sb. seen in MDu. werre, 'war', Hexham; OIlg. werria, brail, confusion, strife. — OSax. and OIlg. werran, str. vb., to confuse, embroil; cf. mod. G. verwirren. The Teut. base is wer-, for older werz-, wers-*, meaning 'to confuse.' Prob. allied to worse; see Worse. Der. war, verb, late AS. werrian, A. S. Chron. an. 1135, formed from the sb. werre. Also war-fare, properly 'a warlike expedition'; 'he was nat in good poynt to ride a warfare,' i. e. on a warlike expedition, Bernal, tr. of Froissart's Chron. vol. ii. c. 13 (R.); see Fare. Also war-like, K. John, v. 1. 71; war-i-or, ME. warreour, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 166, l. 5, from OF. werreour*, not recorded, old spelling of OF. guerrier (Burguy), a warrior, one who makes war, formed with suffix -ur from OF. werreier, guerrier (spelt werreier in Suppl. to Godefroy, s. v. guerrier), to make war, borrowed by E. and appearing as ME. werreien or werreyen, Chaucer, C. T. 1546, 10324 (A 1544, F 10), and in Spenser as warroy or warrey, F. Q. i. 5. 48, ll. 10, 21; so that warrior is really a familiar form of warroyer; cf. guerryer, 'a martialist, or warrior,' Cot., from guerroyer, 'to warre,' id.

WARBLE, to sing as a bird, chirp, carol. (F.—MHG.) ME. werblen, spelt werbelen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 404; the sb. werble occurs in the same, 119. — OF. werbler, to quaver with the voice, speak in a high tone (Burguy). — MHG. wirbeln* (not given), or werbeln*, mod. G. wirbeln, to whirl, to run round, to warble, frequentative form of MHG. werben, OIlg. werban, to be busy, to set in movement, urge on (with mod. G. be-werben, to sue for, er-werben, to acquire), the orig. sense being to twirl oneself about, to twirl or whirl. See Whirl, which is, practically, a doublet. Der. warble, sb., ME. warble, as above; warbl-eer.

WARD, a guard, a watch, means of guarding, one who is under a guardian, &c. (E.) 1. ME. ward, dat. ward, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 320; pl. wardes, guards, Klug Alisaunder, 1977. 2. AS. ward, a guard, watchman, Grein, ii. 673. This is a masc. sb. (gen. wardes); we also find AS. ward, fem. (gen. wardes), a guarding, watching, protection; id. Both senses are still retained. Both sbs. are formed from the Teut. base WER, to watch; see Wary. Thus the orig. sense of the masc. sb. is 'a watchman,' and of the fem. sb. is 'a watching.' †Icel. vörðr, gen. vörðar, (1) a warder or watchman, (2) a watch; G. wart, a warder; Goth. -wards, masc. sb., a keeper, only in the comp. daurwards, a door-keeper. All these are from the same root. 2. From this sb. was formed the verb ward, AS. wardian, to keep, to watch, Grein, ii. 674; cognate with which are Icel. varða, to warrant, G. warten, and OSax. wardōn, to watch, from the last of which were derived the OF. (and AF.) warder, to guard, whence E. ward-en, and (through the French) E. guard. Der. ward-er, Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 21; ward-room, ward-ship. Also ward-en, q. v., ward-rube, q. v. Also ward-ward, door-ward, key-ward (= hedge-ward, from AS. hege, a hedge); ste-ward, q. v. Doublet, guard, sb. and verb.

-WARD, suffix. (E.) A common suffix, expressing the direction towards which one tends. AS. -ward, as in ti-ward, toward; see Toward, where the suffix is fully explained. It occurs also as Icel. -verðr, Goth. -wairths, OIlg. -wert, -wart; and cf. L. uersus, towards, from the same root. We also have -wards, AS. -weardes, where -es is a genitive suffix giving an adverbial force. Der. after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, for-ward, fro-ward, hind-ward, hither-ward, home-ward, in-ward, nether-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, thither-ward, to-ward, up-ward, west-ward. To most of these -s can be added, except to from-ward. We also woy-ward, wool-ward, verse, prose, suzerain.

WARDEN, a guardian, keeper, one who keeps guard. (F.—OSax.) Though the verb ward is English, and so is its derivative warder, the sb. warden is F., as shown by the suffix. ME. warden, Ancren Riwle, p. 272, l. 4.—AF. warden, Liber Albis, p. 247; OF. wardain (Godefroy), old spelling of OF. garden, gardain, a warden, guardian. Cf. Low L. gardianus, a guardian; showing that OF. warden was formed from OF. ward-er by help of the L. suffix -ānus. See Ward.

WARDON, WARDEN, a pear. (E.) A wardon was 'a large coarse pear used for baking,' Voc. 717, note 1, where we find it spelt wardun, in a Nominal of the 15th century; it is spelt warden in Voc. 629, 7, and in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 48. By popular etymology, a keeping pear (see Nares); Cotgrave has 'poire de garde, a warden, or winter pear, a pear which may be kept very long;' but the adj. garden, 'keeping, warding, guarding,' answering to Low L. gardianus (for wardianus*), had an active sense, and is therefore inappropriate. The better spelling is wardon, as in Palsgrave, the Prompt. Parv., and the Catholicism; in Two Cookery Books, ed. Austin, we find wardon, wardone, wardoun. In Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 15, the pl. wardouns rimes with two sbs. ending with -ouns, showing that the form wardon (-oun, -un) is right. Cf. 'medlers and wardones;' Excerpta Historica, p. 115 (1498). So named from Wardon (<AS. Ward-dūn) in Ileds. The arms of Warlon (or Warden) Abbey were argent, three wardon-pears, or; see Privy Purse Expenses of Princess Mary, ed. Madden, p. 272.

WARDROBE, a place to keep clothes in. (F.—Teut.) ME. wardrobe; 'Jupiter hath in his wardrobe bothe garments of ioye and of sorowe,' Test. of Love, b. ii. ch. ix. 140.—OF. wardrobe, old spelling of gardrobe; see Godefroy. The spelling gardrobe is in Palsgrave, s. v. wardrobe. Cotgrave spells it garderobe, 'a wardrobe, also a house of office' [see wardrobe in Halliwell]. — OF. warder, to ward, keep, preserve; and robe, a robe; both words being of G. origin. See Ward and Robe.

WARE (1), merchandise. (E.) ME. ware (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4560 (B 140). AS. waru, ware; 'Merx, waru;' Voc. 311. 35. We also find AS. waru, protection, guard, care, custody, which is tolerably common; Grein, ii. 641. These words are doubtless related; the sense of wares appears to have been 'things kept in store'; cf. Icel. varnadr, (1) protection, (2) wares. †Du. ware, a ware, commodity; pl. waren, warces. Cf. MDu. waren, 'to keep or to garde,' Hexham; Low G. ware, Icel. vara, pl. vörur, wares; Dan. var, pl. varer; cf. var, care; Swed. vara, pl. varor; cf. var, care; G. waren, pl. waren; cf. wahr, care, wahren, to guard. Teut. type ward*, fem.; from the Teut. base WER, to guard; as distinct from the base WEI, to watch. See Weir (1) and Worth. Der. ware-house (Palsgrave).

WARE (2), aware. (E.) 'They were ware of it,' Acts, xiv. 6; so also in Romeo, i. 1. 131, ii. 2. 103, &c. See further under Wary.

WARE (3), sea-weed. (E.) The Northern form; see Jamieson, who quotes from G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil. Prov. E. ware, waru. AS. war, sea-weed. 'Alga, war;' Voc. 5. 1. †MDu. wier, 'sea-grasse;' Hexham. Perhaps from †WEI, to twine; see Withy.

WARE (4), pt. t. of Wear, q. v.

WARFARE, WARLIKE; see under War.

WARILY, WARINESS; see under Wary.

WARISON, protection, reward. (F.—Teut.) ME. warisoun, protection, Rob. of Brunne, p. 198, l. 1. This is the true sense; but it is much more common in the sense of help or 'reward'; see Will. of Palerne, 2359, 2379, Barbour, Bruce, ii. 206, x. 526, xx. 544. The usual sense of mod. F. guérison is 'recovery from illness,' which is yet a third sense of what is really the same word. Cf. ME. warishen, to cure, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 105. —OF. warison, garison (Godefroy), surely, safely, provision, also healing. Cot. has garison, 'health, curing, recovery'. —OF. warir, garir, to keep, secure, also to heal (Godefroy); mod. F. gairir. β. Of Teut. origin; from the verb appearing as Goth. warjan, to defend, forbid, keep off from, whence the sense 'secure'; and in OHG. werjan, to keep off, AS. werian, to defend; Teut. type warjan*, to keep off. Allied to Gk. ἐπωρᾶν, to keep off; see Weir. γ. We may note that the OF. garison corresponds to the mod. E. garrison in form; but the sense of garrison is such as to link it more closely with OF. garison, another sb. from a different WER*, for which see Ware (1). And see Garrison. ¶ Sir W. Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 24, uses warrior in the sense of 'note of assault', as if it were a warry (warlike) sound. This is a singular blunder.

WARLOCK, a wizard. (F.) In Jamieson's Scot. Diet. '[Eneas] was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron-free or lead-free'; Dryden, Dedication to tr. of Virgil's Aeneid; § 28. The final ck stands for an orig. guttural sound, just as most Englishmen say lock for the Scottish loch; the suffix was prob. confused with that of hem-lock or wed-lock. ME. warloghe, a wicked one, a name for the devil, Destruction of Troy, 4439. Spelt warlaghe, a warlock, devil, Cursor Mundi, 8915; warlau, id. 725; warlaus, a deceiver, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 783. AS. wærlaga, a traitor, deceiver, liar, truce-breaker, Grein, ii. 650. Lit. 'one who lies against the truth' = AS. wær, truth (as in wærlas, false, lit. 'truthless', Grein), cognate with L. verum, truth; and loga, a liar, from log- (Teut. lug-*), weak grade of legan (pp. log-en), to lie, Grein, ii. 176, 194. See Verity and Lie (2).

WARM, moderately hot. (E.) ME. warm, Chaucer, C. T. 7409 (D 1827). AS. warm, Grein, ii. 675, +Du. warm; Icel. varmr; Dan. and Swed. warm; G. warm. Cf. Goth. warminjan, to warm; the adj. warmus does not occur. β. The Teut. is type war-moz*, warm, Fick, iii. 292. It is usual to connect this with L. formus, Gk. θερμός, hot, Skt. gharma-s, heat, from the GwlllEK*, to glow; with labiovelar gh. γ. But this is not very satisfactory. On this account, Fick (ii. 465) connects warm with Russ. variti, to boil, brew, scorch, burn, Lithuan. verdu, I cook, seethe, boil (inf. virsi), and hence infers a WER*, to cook or boil, common to Teutonic and Slavonic. So also Brugmann, i. § 680; cf. § 650. Der. warm-ly, warm-ness; also warm, verb, AS. wearmian, Grein, ii. 675, whence warm-er, warm-ing-pan; also warm-th, sb., ME. werthe, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 37, l. 33 (not found in AS., which has warm-ness).

WARN, to caution against, put on one's guard. (E.) ME. warnien, warnen, Chaucer, C. T. 3535. AS. wearnian, warnian, (1) to take heed, which is the usual sense, Luke, xi. 35; (2) to warn, Gen. vi. 6; cf. warnung, a warning, Gen. xli. 32. Cognate with OHG. warnôn, to provide for oneself against, used reflexively, whence G. warnen, to warn against, to caution against. Further allied to beware and wary; see Wary. ¶ Distinct from the AS. sb. wearn, a refusal, denial (Grein), an obstacle, impediment (Bosworth); the orig. sense being a guarding of oneself, a defence of a person on trial, as in Icel. vörn, a defence; cf. Icel. varna, to warn off, refuse, abstain from. Der. warn-ing. And see garn-ish, garri-son (for garu-ison). Also fore-warn, pre-warn.

WARP, the thread stretched lengthwise in a loom, to be crossed by the woof; a rope used in towing. (E.) Lit. 'that which is thrown across'; see Nares. ME. warpe; 'Warp, threde for webbyngne'; Prompt. Parv. AS. wearp, a warp; 'Stamen, warpe', Voc. 48. 33. +Low G. warp (Danneil); Icel. varp, a casting, throwing, also the warping of anything; Dan. varp, only as a naut. term; Swed. varp, a warp; OHG. warf, a warp. Teut. type warpan*, n. β. All from the Teut. base warp*, 2nd grade of Teut. warp-an*, to throw, as seen in AS. weorpan, G. werfen, Goth. waipfan, to throw. If the Teut. warp* is for an older warp*, from Idg. WERGW*, we may compare Russ. verg-a(e), to throw. ¶ The ME. werpen, to throw, pt. warpe, pp. worpen, occurring in Havelok, 1061, &c., is obsolete. Der. warpe, verb, to pervert, twist out of shape (cf. east in the sense of to twist timber out of shape); Palgrave has: 'I warpe, as borders do.' This is not the ME. werpen (as above), but a derived weak verb, and is of Scand. origin; ME. warpen, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. warpa, to throw, cast; cf. varp, sb., a casting, also a warping. Cf. Swed. varpa, Dan. varpe, to warp a ship, from Swed. varp, the draught of a net, Dan. varp, a warp; Dan. varpanker, a warp-anchor or ledge.

WARRANT, a voucher, guarantee, commission giving authority. (F.—OHG.) ME. warrant, Havelok, 2067, St. Marharette, ed. Cockayne, p. 8, l. 10.—OF. warrant, guarant (Burguy, Supp. to Godefroy), later garant, 'a voucher, warrant'; also, a supporter, defender, maintainer, protector; Cot. Cotgrave also gives the spelling garant, 'a warranter.' In the Laws of Will. I, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, l. 476, 477, the AF. spelling is guarant, and the Low L. warrantum and warrantum. The suffix -ant is clearly due to the -ant- used as the suffix of a present participle; so that the orig. sense of OF. warrant was 'certifying' or 'securing'. —OHG. werint-, stem of pres. pt. of werin (G. gewähren), to certify, to warrant. Allied to OFries. wera, to warrant. Of uncertain origin; Schade suggests connexion with OHG. and AS. wer, a man; as if 'to offer oneself as a surety'. Der. warrant, verb, ME. warranten, K. Alisander, 2132 (cf. Walloon warranti, to warrant); warrant-er, warrant-or, warrant-able, warrant-abi-ly, warrant-able-ness. Also warrant-y, from OF. warrantie, later garantie, 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise', Cot., orig. fem. of pp. of warrantir, later garantir, to warrant, guarantee. Also guarant-ee (error for guarant-ie), q. v.

WARREN, a preserved piece of ground, now only used of a place where rabbits abound, not always a preserved place. (F.—OHG.) ME. wareine, P. Plowman, B. prol. 163.—OF. warene, varene, warene (Roquefort); warene, garene, garene (Godefroy); later garene, 'a warren of conies [conies], also a certain, or limited fishing in a river'; Cot. The orig. sense was 'a preserve'. Cf. Low L. warena, a preserve for rabbits, hares, or fish, occurring A. D. 1186 (Dncange). Formed (with Low L. suffix -enna) from OHG. warjan (>OF. warir), to protect, keep, preserve; see Warison. Cf. Du. warande, a park; borrowed from OFrench. Der. warren-er, contracted to warner, P. Plowman, B. v. 316; which explains the name Warner.

WART, a small hard excrescence, on the skin, or on trees. (E.) ME. werte (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T., A 555 (Six-text edition, where one MS. has worte); spelt wert in Tyrrhitt, l. 557. AS. wearte, pl. weartan, Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 130, l. 20. 'Papula, wearte'; Voc. 37. 9. +Du. wart; MDu. warle, warle (Hexham); Pomeran. waralle; Icel. varit; Dan. vorte; Swed. vårta; G. warze. β. All from Teut. type warin-*, f. Perhaps the orig. sense is 'growth', hence out-growth or excrescence; and closely allied to Wort (1), q. v. Some connect it with AS. weary, a callosity, L. verruca, a wart, from an allied root wers*, to rise. Brugmann, i. § 380. Der. wart-y.

WARY, WARE, guarding against deception or danger, cautious. (E.) The ME. form is war; war-yis a comparatively late formation; perhaps the -y was subjoined as in wurk-y from ME. mirke, merke, and swarth-y from swart. In Meas. for Meas. iv. 1. 38. ME. war, Chaucer, C. T. A 309 (Six-text ed.), misspelt war in Tyrrhitt, l. 311. AS. war, cautious, Grein, ii. 649. +Icel. varr; Dan. and Swed. var; Goth. vars; G. gewahr, aware. β. All from Teut. type waroz*, cautious. From Teut. base war*, answering to Idg. wor*, as in Gk. ὤρα, I perceive, look out for, observe, and grade of Idg. WER*, to watch, regard, as in L. uereri, to regard, respect, dread. Der. war-ly, war-ness; a-warre, be-warre. And see war-d, guard; ware (1); re-ware; pan-or-a-ma, di-wa-ward.

WAS, WAST, WERE, WERT, used as parts of the verb to be. (E.) ME. pt. t. sing. was, wast, was; pl. weren or were. AS. wasan, infin. to be; whence pt. t. indic. sing. was, wære, was; pl. wæran, wærum, or wærun; pt. t. subj. sing. wære (for all persons), pl. wæren or wærun (for all persons). See Grein, ii. 664. β. As to the use of was in the 1st and 3rd persons, there is no difficulty. γ. As to the 2nd person, the AS. form was wære, whence ME. wer, as in 'thou were betrayed' Chaucer, C. T. 14690 (B 3570). In Wyellif, Mark, xiv. 67, where 7 MSS. read were, one MS. has was, and another has was; no doubt was-t was formed (by analogy with hast) from the dialectal was, which was prob. Northern. When you came to be used for thou, the phrase you was took the place of thou was, and is very common in writings of the 18th century. Cf. I has, Harbour, Bruce, xiii. 652; I is, ye is (Northern dialect), Chaucer, C. T. 4043; thou is, id. 4087 (A 4045, 4089). In the subj. mood, the true form is were; hence wer-t (by analogy with was), K. Jolu, iii. 1. 43, ed. 1623. δ. In the first and third persons singular of the subjunctive, and in the plural, the true form is were; but the use of wer in the singular is gradually becoming obsolete, except when the conjunction if precedes. The forms if I were, if he were, if I be, if he be, if he have, exhibit the clearest surviving traces of a (grammatically marked) subj. mood in mod. English; and of these, if he have is almost gone. Some careful writers employ if he do, if it make, and the like; but it is not improbable that the subjunctive mood will disappear from the language; the particular phrase if I were will probably linger the longest. +Du. infin. wezen; indic. sing. was, waert, was; pl. waren, waert, waren; subj. sing. ware, waert, ware; pl. waren, waert, waren; Icel. infin. vera; indic. sing. var, var, var, pl. værum, værit, værun; subj. sing. vera, varir, vari; pl. verim, verit, veri; Dan. infin. vere; indic. sing. and pl. var; subj. sing. and pl. vere; Swed. infin. vara; indic. sing. var; pl. voro, voren, voro; subj. sing. vore; pl. vore, voren, voro; Goth. wasan, to be, dwell, remain; pt. t. indic. sing. was, wast, was; dual, wæun, wæuns; pl.

Der. wasn-all, q.v. And see ver-na-cu-lar.

WASH, to cleanse with water, overflow. (E.) Formerly a strong verb; hence un-washen, Mark. vii. 2. ME. waschen, waschen, pt. t. wasch, wasch, pp. waschen. The pt. t. is wasch in Chaucer, C. T. 2285 (A 2283), misprinted wesche by Tyrwhitt. AS. wascan, Grein, ii. 641. Just as we find ascian (= ascian) as well as ascian, so also wascan appears as waxan; the pt. t. is wōse or wōx; the pp. is wascan or wascen. 'Ilig hira reaf wāron' = they washed their robes, Exod. xix. 14. + Du. waschen; Icel. and Swed. waska; Dan. vaske; G. waschen, pt. t. wasch, pp. gewaschen. β. The Teut. type is wasan-* to wash, prob. for waskan-* wat-shan-* to rinse in wet or to wash, where wat* is allied to E. wat-er, wet. Brugmann, i. § 942. Der. wash, sb., as in The Wash (place-name); wash-er, wash-er-woman, wash-y.

WASP, a stinging insect. (F.) ME. waspe, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 648. Cf. prov. E. wasps, wasps, AS. wasps. 'Vespa, wasps' Voc. 121, 14. In a very old AS. glossary of the 8th century, we find: 'Vespa, wasp, Voc. 21. 42. + OHG. wespa, waspa; G. wespe; Bavarian wespe, a wasp; Olow G. wespa (Gallic). Contracted from a Teut. type wadis-, answering to Ilg. woohes- (whence Russ. osa, a wasp, Lith. wapsis, a gadfly); from wooh-, and grade of wēd- to weave (whence L. pespa, a wasp, for pespa, wēbsa*), from the nests which they construct. See Weave. Brugmann, i. § 918. Cf. Skt. arjya-wibhi, a spider, lit. 'wool-weaver', in Macdonell's Dict. Der. wasp-ish, As You Like It, iv. 3. 9; wasp-ish-ly, -ness.

WASSAIL, a festive occasion, a carouse. (AF. = Teut.) See Brund's Popular Antiquities, vol. i. p. 2, where also Verstegan's 'etymology' (from was hale) and Selden's (from wich-hail) and other curiosities may be found. In Mach. i. 7. 64; Hamlet, i. 4. 9, &c. ME. wasseyl, waskeyl, Rob. of Glouc. p. 117, 118, ll. 2514, 2522; and see Hearn's Glossary, p. 731, and Layamon. The story is that Vorstigen presented a cup to Vorstigen with the words was heil, and that Vorstigen, who knew no English, was told to reply by saying drinc heil. Whatever truth there be in this, we at any rate learn that was heil and drinc heil were phrases used at a drinking-bout. The former phrase is a salutation, meaning 'be of good health', lit. 'be hale'; the latter phrase is almost untranslatable, meaning literally 'drink, hale!' i. e. 'drink, and good luck be with you'. β. These forms are not AS, but Norman; Wace, describing the night before the battle of Hastings, gives the forms wæsseil and wæsseil heil (error for was heil). The latter represents the OSax. was heil, OEcel. was heil* (Icel. was heill). The corresponding AS. (Wessex) form of salutation was was þu heil, occurring in Beowulf, 407; or hāl was þu, Luke, i. 28. It occurs in the plural in Matt. xxviii. 9; 'hāle wæs ge' = whole be ye, or peace be unto you; from AS. was, wæ, be thou, imperative, and person, of wasan, to be; and hāl, whole. See Was and Whole. γ. In the Icel. Dict. we find similar phrases, such as kom heill, welcome, hail! (lit. come, hale!); far heill, farewell! (lit. fare, hale!); sit heill, sit hail! (lit. sit, hale!); the last of these fully explains drinc heil. We may also notice Icel. heill, sb., good luck; and we even find AS. hæl (as a sb.), health, salvation, Luke, xix. 9. See Hail (2). Explained by me in N. and Q. 10. iii. 455. Cf. ONorthern hæl, whence mod. Yorks. hale, a wassail.

WASTE, desert, desolate, unused. (F. = OHG. = L.) ME. wast, Rob. of Glouc. p. 272, l. 767. -OF. wast, in the phr. faire wast, to make waste (preserved in E. as lay waste), Roquefort; later form gast. He also gives waster, to waste; see also gast, gaster, in Godfrey. We find AF. wast, adj., and waster, pp. fem., in Stat. Renim. i. 48 (1278). -MIIG. waste, sb., a waste; wasten, to lay waste; whence also Ital. guastare, to waste, F. gâter, to spoil. Not a Teut. word, but simply borrowed from L. wastus, waste, desolate, also wast, whence the verb wastare, to waste, lay waste. Allied to OIrish fā, empty; Idg. types wastōs, wastōis*; Brugmann, i. § 317. B. It is remarkable that we should have adopted this word from French, since we had the word already in an AS. form as wæste; but it is quite certain that we did so, since wæste would have been wæst in mod. F.; besides which, there are two ME. forms, viz. wast (from F.) and wæste (from AS.), of which the latter soon died out, the latest example noted by Stratmann being from the Owl and Nightingale, l. 1528. And the result is remarkably confirmed by the ME. wastour for waster (see below). C. The history of the word in G. is equally curious. There also the OHG. has wuosti, adj., empty, wuosti, sb., a waste, and wuostan, to waste; yet, in addition to these, we also find waste, sb., wasten, verb, borrowed from Latin, as shown above. But in G. the native form prevailed, as shown by mod. G. wüst, waste, wüste, a waste, wüsten, to waste. Cf. also OHG. wuosti, AS. wæste, OSax. wūsti, Du. woest, adj., waste, empty; Teut. type wūstjaz*, Idg. type wūstios* (as above). ¶ Hatzfeld derives OF. waster from L. wastare, explaining the w as due to OHG. influence. It comes to much the same thing. See Vast. Der. waste, sb., ME. waste, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2098; waste, verb, ME. wasten, I.ayamon, 22575, from OF. waster < OHG. wasten, from L. wastare; wast-er, ME. wastour, P. Plowman, B. prol. 22, vi. 29, where the suffix -our is French. Also waste-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 16; waste-ful-ly, -ness; waste-ness, Zeph. i. 15. (A. V.) Doublet, vast.

WATCH, a keeping guard, observation. (L.) ME. wacche, P. Plowman, B. ix. 17. AS. wacce, a watch, Grein, ii. 641. -AS. wacian, to watch; Matt. xxvi. 40; AS. wacan, to wake; see Wake (1). Der. watch, verb, ME. wacchen, Gower, C. A. i. 163; bk. ii. 110; watch-er; watch-ful, Two Gent. i. 1. 31; watch-ful-ly, -ness; watch-case, a sentry-box, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 17; watch-dog, Temp. i. 2. 383; watch-man (Palsgrave); watch-word, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 231.

WATCHET, light blue. (F.) Cotgrave has: 'pers, watchet, blanket, skie-coloured'. Nares gives ex. of watchet from Browne, Lily, Drayton, and Taylor; and Richardson from Beaumont and Fletcher, Hakluyt, Spenser, Ben Jonson, and Chaucer. 'Watchet eyes,' tr. of Juvenal, Sat. xiii. (not by Dryden). 'AI in a kettell of a lilt watchet'; Chaucer, C. T. A 331; 1. Lansdowne MS. The Camb. MS. has vachet, the Harl. MS. has wachet; the rest waget, wagett, -OF. wachet, a sort of stuff (Godefroy); cf. wache, wasse, the same. Perhaps from OHG. wilt, clothing; see Wadmal. As with blanket (see N. E. D.), the difficulty is to know whether the stuff gave name to the colour or conversely.

WATER, the fluid in seas and rivers. (E.) ME. water, Chaucer, C. T. 402 (A 400). AS. water, Grein, i. 651. + Du. water; OSax. water; G. wasser, OHG. warzar, warzar, w. β. From the Teut. type watrom*, n., water. There is also a Teut. type watan-*, water, appearing in Icel. vatn. Der. vatten was Swed. vatten, Goth. watō (pl. watan), water. Allied words are Russ. voia, Gk. ὕδωρ, L. unda, Lithuan. uand, Skt. udan, water; OIrish uad, a tear. All from the wēd-*, to wet; see Wet. Der. water, verb, AS. wætrian, Gen. ii. 6, 10; water-iss, K. Lear, i. 1. 261; water-y, AS. wætrig, Gen. ii. 147. 6; also water-carrige, -clock, -closed, -colour, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 80; -course, -even, ME. water-her, Voc. 623. 26; foul; gall, a rainbow, Shak. Lucerne, 1588; level; lily, ME. water-lily, Voc. 644. 11; line, -luggel, -man, -mark, -mill (Palsgrave), -pipe, -pol, Chaucer, C. T. 8166 (E 290); -power, -proof, -shed (modern), -spout, -tight, -wheel, -work; &c., &c.

WATTLE, a twig, flexible rod, usually a hurdle; the fleshy part under the throat of a cock or turkey. (E.) In all senses, it is the same word. The orig. sense is something twined together; hence it came to mean a hurdle, woven with twigs, a basket; hence, a bag; also, the baggy flesh on a bird's neck. (It also appears in the corrupt form wallet; see Wallet.) ME. watal, a bag, P. Plowman, C. xi. 269; see further under Wallet. Hence ME. watelen, verb, to wattle, twist together or strengthen with hurdles, P. Plowman, B. ix. 323. AS. watal, a hurdle, covering; also watol. 'Tuges, watal'; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 52, l. 13. Watala, pl., coverings of a roof, tiles, Luke, v. 19; also in the sense of twigs or hurdles, Ælfric, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 16. Allied to AS. wæta, a handage. There appear to be no cognate words, and the root is unknown. Der. watol; verb, ME. watelen, as above. Doublet, wallet.

WAUVE, see under Wave. WAVE (1), to fluctuate, to move or be moved about with an undulating motion or up and down. (E.) ME. wauen, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 256. The pres. part. is spelt wauend, vaffand, Barbour, Bruce, ix. 245, xi. 193, 513; the scribe constantly writes v for w. AS. wæw, a wave (with one's hand), Leechdoms, ii. 318; Ælfric's Saints' Lives, xxvii. 151. The sense also comes out in the derived adj. wafre, wavering, restless, Grein, ii. 642; see Waver. + OEcel. wafa*, cited by E. Müller and Stratmann; the Dict. gives the derivatives wafra, waffa, to waver, waff, hesitation (which presuppose an orig. verb wafa*); also wifa, wiða, wifa, to swing, vibrate. Cf. also MHG. waberen, wablen, to move about, to stir; Bavarian wabern, to sway and to fro; see Wabble. Der. wave, sb., a late word, occurring in the Bible of 1551, James, i. 6; it is due to the verb, and took the place of ME. wæw, a wave, Wyclif, James, i. 6, which is not the same word, but allied to E. Wag, q.v. (cf. Icel. vagr, Dan. vage, G. woge, a wave). Also wave-less, wave-let, a coined word, with double dimin. suffix; wave-offering, Exod. xxix. 24; wave-worn, Temp. ii. 1. 120; wav-y. Also wav-er, q.v.; and wavf. Distinct from waive, waif.

WAVE (2), the same as Waive, q. v.

WAVER, to vacillate. (E.) ME. waveren (= waveren), Prompt. Parv. p. 518. Barbour has waverand, wandering about; Bruce, vii. 112, xiii. 517, cf. vii. 41. 'Waverand wynd' = a changeable wind, Wallace, iv. 340; wafergy, wavering, York Plays, p. 39. l. 111. [Apparently a Northern and E. Anglian word; and perhaps of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. vafra, to waver, Norw. vafrá.] If a native word, it was suggested by AS. waefe, adj., wandering, restless, Grein, ii. 652. +Icel. vafra, to hover about; Norw. vafrá, to flap about; OHG. wabar (in compounds), wavering. β . It is the frequentative form of Wave, q. v. Der. waver-en.

WAWL, WAUL, to cry as a cat, cry, squall. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'houaller, to yawl, waul, cry out aloud.' It is the frequent. form of waw, as in ME. waw-en; see a-cater-wawed in Chaucer, C. T., D 354; and the note. A more usual old form is wawal, frequent. of wraw-en; cf. 'he [a cat] began to wrawen'; Caxton, Reynard the Fox, ch. x; ed. Arber, p. 22. Of infinitive origin; see Wall. Cf. also Swed. våla, to bellow, Dan. våle, vålle, to squall; Norw. raala, to cry as a cat; also Icel. våla, to wail.

WAX (1), to grow, increase, become. (E.) ME. waxen, wesen, a strong verb, pt. t. wax, wex, pp. woxen, waxen; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 30; Luke, ii. 40, xxiii. 5, 23; Matt. xiii. 32. AS. wæcan, pt. t. wiox, pp. gewuxen, Grein, ii. 676. +Du. wassen, pt. t. wies, pp. gewassen; Icel. vaxa, pt. t. ös, pp. vaxinn; Dan. væxe; Swed. våxa; G. wachsen, pt. t. wuchs, pp. gewachsen; Goth. waxjan, pt. t. wûks, pp. waxsan. β . All from Teut. base wax-*, to grow; from Idg. \sqrt{WKS} , to grow; whence Gk. daíw, adéw, adéwv, to wax, Skt. váksh, to wax, grow. Extended from \sqrt{WEG} , to be strong, be lively and vigorous; cf. Skt. vaj, to strengthen, L. vigere, to increase, vigere, to flourish, &c. When extended by the addition of s, the form wags* became waks*. Brugmann, i. § 635; ii. § 657. See Eke (1), Vigour, Vegetable, Augment, Auction. Der. waist, q. v.

WAX (2), a substance made by bees; other substances resembling it. (E.) ME. wax, Chaucer, C. T. 677 (A 675). AS. wæax, Grein, ii. 676. +Du. was; Icel. and Swed. vax; Dan. vax; G. wachs; Russ. vosk; Lithuan. voskas. Root unknown. Some (wrongly) connect it with L. viscum, birdlime; see Viscid. Der. wax, verb; wax-cloth, wax-work; wax-en, Rich. II, l. 3: 75; wax-y.

WAY, a road, path, distance, direction, means, manner, will. (E.) ME. wey, way, Chaucer, C. T. 74. AS. weg, Grein, ii. 655. +Du. weg; Icel. veg; Dan. væg; Swed. väg; G. weg; OHG. weg; Goth. wigs. β . All from Teut. type wegaz*. Further allied to Lithuan. weša, the track of a cart, from wešiti, to drive, or draw, a wagon; L. uia (?), a way; Skt. vahā, a road, vay, from vah, to carry. All from \sqrt{WEG} , to carry; see Wain, Viaduct, Vehicle. α Under way is from the Du. onderweg, on the way. Der. al-ways, al-ways, q. v.; length-ways, side-ways, &c.; also way-faring, i. e. faring on the way, spelt wayfaring, Trevisa, v. 449; cf. AS. weyferend, Matt. xxvii. 39, wh. weyferend is the pres. part. of feran, to fare, travel, Grein, i. 285, a derivative of the more primitive verb feran, to go (see Fare); way-far-er; way-lay, Tw. Night, iii. 4: 176; way-mark, Jer. xxxi. 21 (A. V.); way-worn; way-ward, q. v.

WAYWARD, perverse. (E.) ME. weiuward; 'if thin iþe be weiuward [L. nequam], at thi bodi shal be derk', Wyclif, Matt. vi. 23; used as an adj., but orig. a headless form of weiuward, adv., Owl and Nightingale, 376, Layamon, 889, 21464; Reliq. Antiquæ, l. 292, ii. 9; cf. weiuwardes, in a direction away from, Layamon, 22352, Will. of Palerne, 2188. In Trevisa, ii. 215, we find: 'man is euer faillynge and moeyward', where Caxton prints wayward. Thus wayward is away-ward, i. e. turned away, perverse. A parallel formation to fro-ward, q. v. It is now often made to mean bent on one's way. Cf. 'ouerthwartlie weiuwarded' = perversely turned away, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 274. Der. wayward-ness, ME. weiuwardnesse, Wyclif, Rom. l. 29.

WE, pl. of the 1st pers. pronoun. (E.) ME. we, Chaucer, C. T. 29. AS. wē; Grein, ii. 652. +Du. wij; Icel. vēr, ver; Dan. and Swed. vi; G. wir; Goth. weis. Cf. Skt. vyam-ay, we.

WEAK, yielding, soft, feeble. (E.) [A. The verbal form has ousted the AS. wic, which became ME. wook, spelt wouk in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1874; and would have given a mod. F. woak, like oak from AS. ōc. We also find ME. weik, wik, whence the pl. weike, for which Tyrrhitt prints wike, Chaucer, C. T. 889; but see Six-text ed., A 88; the pl. is spelt wouke, Havellok, l. 1012. This is a Scand. form; from Icel. veik, veyk, weak, Swed. vek. +AS. wie, pliant, weak, easily bent. Grein, ii. 635; Du. wiek, tender, weak; G. weich, pliant, soft. All from the Teut. type wōikaz*, weak; from wōik*, 2nd grade of Teut. wōikun*, as in AS. and OSax. wēcan, G. weichen, to yield, give way. From an Idg. base WEIGW, a hy-form of \sqrt{WEIO} , as in Gk. tiēw, to yield, Brugmann, i. § 701. β . But the mod. E. weak is a back-formation from the verb weaken, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1144 (in Thynne's ed.), from AS. wēcan; for wician*, formed by mutation from AS. wāc, weak, adj. (above). Der. weak-ly, weak-ness. Also weaken-en, in which the suffix is added as in length-en, &c.; cf. ME. wēken, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1144, AS. wēcan, wician, Grein, ii. 641, 636, Icel. veikja-sk, to grow ill; as above. Also weak-ly, adj., used by Raleigh (Todd's Johnson, no reference); weak-l-ing, 3 llen. VI, v. 1. 37, with double dimin. suffix, as in gos-l-ing. And see wick (3), wicked, wick-er.

WEAL, prosperity, welfare. (E.) ME. wēle, Chaucer, C. T. 3103, 4595 (A 3101, B 175). AS. wela, wēala, wēol, well, opulence, prosperity; Grein, ii. 656. +OHG. wela, wolo, G. wohl, welfare; cf. Dan. vel, wæl, welfare; Swed. väl. β . The orig. sense is a 'well-being', welfare, and (like the words well-being, well-fare, well-come, fare-well) it is allied to AS. wel, well, adv., the notion of condition being expressed by the nominal suffix -a. See Well (1). And see Wealth.

WEALD, a wooded region, an open country. (E.) The peculiar spelling of this word is not improbably due to Verstegan, who was anxious to spell it so as to connect it at once with the AS. form, getting that the diphthong ea was scarcely ever employed in the 13th and 14th centuries. Minshew, in his Dict., ed. 1627, has: 'Weald of Kent, is the woodie part of the country. Verstegan saith that wald, wæld, and weld signifie a wood or Forrest; a Teut. Wald, i. sylva, a wood.' This fashion, once set, has prevailed. β . It also appears that two words have been confused, viz. wald and wild. Wald (now also wold) was sometimes spelt wald, as in Layamon, 21339; hence it passed into weld or wæld. Caxton, in the preface to his Recuyell of the Histories of Troye, tells us that he was born in Kent, 'in the weeld'. In the reprint of this book by Copland, this phrase appears as 'in the wilde'. Ilyly, in his Epithues and his England, says: 'I was borne in the wyld of Kent'; ed. Arber, p. 268. Shak. has 'wilde of Kent,' i. llen. IV, ii. 1. 60, ed. 1623. γ . For the further explanation of ME. wald, see Wold. For the further explanation of wild, see Wild. Both words are English. Der. wæld-en, adj., belonging to the wealds of the S. of England; a term in geology. For the suffix -en, cf. gold-en.

WEALTH, prosperity, riches. (E.) ME. welthe (the dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. l. 55. Spelt welthe, Genesis and Exodus, l. 796. Not in AS. A longer by-form of wel (ME. wēle), made with the suffix -th, denoting condition or state; cf. heal-th and heal, dear-th and dear, &c. See Weal. +Du. welthe, luxury; from wel, adv., well; OHG. welidā, riches. Der. welth-ly, spelt welthly in Fabyan, Chron. c. 56; welth-i-ness, spelt welthinnes in Fabyan, in the same passage. WEAN, to accustom a child to bread, &c., to reconcile to a new custom. (E.) The proper sense is 'to accustom to'; we also use it, less properly, in the sense of 'to disaccustom to.' These opposite senses are easily reconciled; the child who is being accustomed to bread, &c. is at the same time disaccustomed to, or weaned from, the breast. Cf. G. entwöhnen, lit. to disaccustom, also to wean; where ent- is equivalent to L. un- as a verbal prefix; so that ent-wöhnen = un-wean. ME. wēnen. 'Wene chylde for sokyngne [sucking]', Ab-lacto, elacto, Prompt. Parv. AS. wēnian, to accustom, Grein, ii. 660. Hence awēnian, answering to G. entwöhnen; 'fir þonne þæt acennede bearn from meolcum awēned si' before the child that is born be weaned from milk; Alfred, tr. of Bede, l. i. c. 27, ed. Wheloc, p. 88. 'Ab-lacto, to awene;' Voc. 560. 8. +Du. wēnnen, to accustom, inure or aftennen, to wean; Icel. veinja, to accustom; Dan. vænne, to accustom; vænne fra Bystet, to wean; Swed. vånja, to accustom; vånja af, to wean; G. gewöhnen, to accustom, OHG. wēnian, wennan, MHG. wēnen; whence entwöhnen, to wean. β . All from a Teut. weak verb wānian*, to make accustomed, accustom; from the adj. wānaz*, wont, accustomed, used to, as in Icel. vannr, Swed. vann, accustomed, allied to Icel. vani, a usage. From Teut. wan*, 2nd grade of \sqrt{WEN} , to desire, earn; see Win and Wont.

WEAPON, an instrument for offence or defence. (E.) ME. wēpen, Chaucer, C. T. A 1591. AS. wēpan, a weapon, shield, or sword; Grein, ii. 648. +Du. wāpen; Icel. vāpn; Dan. våben; Swed. våpen; G. waffe, OHG. wāfan (also wāpan, borrowed from Dutch or Low G.); Goth. wāpna, neut. pl., John, xviii. 3. β . All from the Teut. type wāpnom*, n., a weapon. A by-form (with k for p) is found in MSwed. wātkn, a weapon (Ihre). Der. weapon-ed, Oth. v. 2. 226; weapon-less. Also weapon-shaw, weapon-take.

WEAR (1), to carry on the body, as clothes; to consume by use, rub away. (E.) The pt. t. wore, now in use, is due to analogy with bore, pt. t. of bear; the word is not really a strong one, the ME. pt. t. being wored. We also find pt. t. warre, Luke, vii. 27 (A. V.) ME. weren, pt. t. wered, Chaucer, C. T. 75. AS. werian (pt. t. werode), Exod. xxix. 29. (Quite distinct from AS. werian, to defend; Grein.) +Icel. verja, to wear (quite distinct from verja, to defend); OHG. werian; Goth. wairjan, to clothe; pp. wasida, Matt. xl. 8. β . From the Teut. and Idg. \sqrt{WES} , to clothe; the r standing for the s (by Verner's law), as shown by the Gothic form. Hence also L. uestis, clothing;

Gk. tr-ōp, clothing; Skt. vas, to put on clothes. See Vest. Dor. wear, sb., As You Like It, ii. 7. 34; wear-able; wear-er, Antony, ii. 2. 7. OE. All the senses of wear can be deduced from the carrying of clothes on the body; it hence means to bear, to carry; also to consume or use up by wear, destroy, tire, efface; also, to become old by wearing, to be wasted, pass away (as time); to wear well = to bear wear and tear, hence to last out, endure. There is no connexion with the sense of AS. wearian, to defend.

WEAR (2), the same as Wear, q. v.

WEAR (3), in phr. 'to wear a name', the same as Veer, q. v.

WEARISH, insipid, weakly. (E.) 'A wretched wearish [weak] elf'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 34. 'Waryish, as meate is that is not wet taste'; Palsgrave. Prov. E. waish, wairish, weirish, insipid, squeamish, weak. See Wearish in Nares, whose explanation is conjectural. The orig. sense may have been 'watery' from AS. wer, the sea; cf. Icel. ver, the sea, orig. 'water'. Cf. also Skt. vār, vārī, water; Gk. ōpōv; Swed. var, pus. See Urine.

WEARY, exhausted, tired, causing exhaustion. (E.) ME. weri, very, Chaucer, C. T. 4232 (A. 4234). (The e is long, as in mod. E.) AS. wērig, tired; Grein, ii. 663; wērig, O. E. Texts, + OSax. wērig, weary; in the comp. sī-wērig, fatigued with a journey; Heland, 660, 670, 678, 608, 2338; cf. OHG. wuorag, intoxicated. β. The long ē is (as usual) due to a mutation of long o, as shown by the cognate OSaxon form. It is, consequently, connected with AS. wōrian, to wander, travel, Gen. iv. 14; Numb. xiv. 33; Grein, ii. 736. γ. This verb is a weak one, formed from the ā, wōr, which probably meant a moor or swampy place; so that wōrian was orig. 'to tramp over wet ground', the most likely thing to cause weariness. Hence AS. wōr-kana, a moor-cock, O. E. Texts, p. 465. Not allied to Wear (1). δ. Prob. allied to Skt. vār, water; the prime grade appears in AS. wea, sea. Der. weari-ly, ness; weary, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 19; weari-some, Two Gent. ii. 7. 8; weari-some-ly, ness.

WEASAND, WESAND, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt wesand in Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 14; he also has wesand-pipe, id. iv. 3. 12. ME. wesand; spelt wesande, Voc. 676. 24; wesande, id. 635. 19. AS. wāsund, Voc. 157. 45; 264. 19; used to translate L. rūmen, the gullet. The mod. E. wesand answers rather to a by-form wāsund; whilst the AS. wāsund answers to prov. E. wosen, the wind-pipe (I. Halliwell). + OFries. wāsunde, wāsunde. Cf. Bavar. weisel, the gullet of animals that chew the cud; MHG. weisant, OHG. weisunt, wesand, cited by E. Müller. The form is like that of a pres. part.

WEASEL, a small slender-bodied quadruped. (E.) ME. wesele, wesel, Chaucer, C. T. 3234. AS. weasel, Voc. 119. 6; oldest forms, wesale, wesale; O. E. Texts, + Du. wesal; Icel. weisla (given in the comp. hryssivisla); Dan. weasel; MSwed. weisla; Swed. wessla; G. weisel; OHG. weisla, weisla, weisla. β. The Teut. type seems to be weisalon* or weisulon*, f. (Franc); evidently a dimin. form. Root uncertain; cf. Gk. αἰσώπος, αἰσώπος, a weasel; perhaps allied to αἰσώ (for δφωλός*?), nimble.

WEATHER, the condition of the air, &c. as to sunshine or rain. (E.) ME. weder, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326; Chaucer, C. T. 10366, where Tyrwhitt prints wether, but the MSS. mostly have weder, as in all the six MSS. in the Six-text edition, Group F, l. 52. The mod. E. th for ME. d occurs again in ME. fader, moder, and is prob. due to dialectal influence. AS. weder, Grein, ii. 654; + Du. weder; Icel. veðr; Dan. veir (a contracted form); Swed. väder, wind, air, weather; G. wetter; OHG. wetar; cf. G. gewitter, a storm. β. All from the Teut. type wedron*, n., weather, storm, wind; allied words appear in G. wetter, as above, and in Icel. land-viðri, a land-wind, hail-viðri, bright weather. Further allied to Lithuan. wētra, a storm, OPruss. wetrow, wind; Russ. vieter, vieter, wind, breeze; Skt. vātara-, adj. windy. γ. To be divided as wed-dron*, denoting the suffix (as in fa-ther, mo-ther) answers to Idg. trō-, denoting the agent; and the base is wē*, weak grade of wē*, to blow, which occurs in Gothic wain, to blow, Skt. vā, to blow; cf. Gk. δνυ (for dfy-ju*), I blow; whence also E. wind; see Wind (1). δ. Thus weather and wind mean much the same, viz. 'that which blows', and they are constantly associated in the E. phrase 'wind and weather'. 'Wind ligeð, weder bið figer'; Phenix, ed. Grein, l. 182. A weather-cock means a wind-cock. Der. weather, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 42; weather-board, cf. Icel. veðrbord, the windward side; weather-bound; weather-cock, ME. wedercock, Aynbite of Inwyt, p. 180, l. 27, and in Wright, Voc. i. 115 (12th cent.), so called because formerly often in the shape of a cock, as some are still made (cf. Du. weerhaan = wederhaan, from haan, a cock); weather-fend, i. e. to defend from the weather, Temp. v. 10, where fend is a clipped form of defend (see Fend); weather-gage, weather-side; weather-wise, ME. wederwis, P. Plowman, B. xv. 350. And see weather-beaten, wither.

WEATHER-BEATEN, WEATHER-BITTEN, harassed by the weather. (E. or Scand.) Weather-beaten, lit. beaten by the weather, or beaten upon by the weather, makes such good sense that

I do not know that we can disallow it as being a genuine phrase; it occurs in 1 Hen. IV, iii. l. 67, in Spenser, F. Q. ii. l. 2, and in Nich. Breton, ed. Grosart (see the Index). Cf. also prov. E. weather-bet, i. e. 'weather-beaten'; E. D. D. β. At the same time there can be little doubt that, in some cases, the right word is weather-bitten, i. e. bitten by the weather, as in Shaks. Wint. Tale, v. 2. 60. The latter is a true Scand. idiom. We find Swed. vederbiten, lit. weather-bitten, but explained in Wiedegren as 'weather-beaten'; so also Norweg. vederbiten, which Aasen explains by Dan. veirbit, also as 'tanned in the face by exposure to the weather', said of a man; he also gives the expressive Norw. vederlitten, weather-work into a fabric. (E.)

WEAVE, to twine threads together, work into a fabric. (E.) ME. woven (for woven); pt. t. waf, Gower, C. A. ii. 320; bk. v. 5770; pp. woven (= woven), spelt wuon, Wyclif, John, xii. 23. AS. wafan, pt. t. waf, pp. wafen; Grein, ii. 654; + Du. woven; Icel. vefa, pt. t. vaf, pp. ofna; Dan. væve; Swed. vefa; G. weben, to weave, pt. t. wob, pp. gewoben; also as a weak verb. β. All from Teut. type waban*, to weave; from Idg. wēbhi*, to weave, which further appears in Gk. βῶ-βῶ, βῶ-βῶ, a web, βῶ-βῶ, to weave, and Skt. urva-vāhika, a spider (lit. a wool-weaver), Brugmann, i. § 562. Der. weaver, weaving; also web, q. v., wef, q. v., woof, q. v., waf-er, wasp, weevil.

WEB, that which is woven; a film over the eye, the skin between the toes of water-birds. (E.) ME. web, Wyclif, Job, vi. 6; also webbe, P. Plowman, B. v. 111. AS. webb, gen. written web, Voc. 50. 28; + Du. web; Icel. vefr (gen. vefjar); Dan. væv; Swed. väf; G. ge-webe, OHG. wepfi, wappi. β. All from the Teut. type waban*, n., a web; from wab, 2nd grade of waban*, from wēbhi*, to weave; see Weave. Der. webb-in, webb-ed, webb-foot-ed. Also ME. webbe, Chaucer, C. T. 364 (A. 363), AS. webba, a weaver, Voc. 188. 10, where the suffix -a denotes the agent (obsolete, except in the name Webb); ME. webster, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6, AS. webestre, a female weaver, used to translate L. textrix, Voc. 188. 11 (obsolete, except in the name Webster); for the suffix -ster, see Spinster.

WED, to engage by a pledge, to marry. (E.) ME. weiden, Chaucer, C. T. 870 (A. 868). AS. weddian, lit. to pledge, engage, Luke xxii. 5. = AS. wed, sb., a pledge, Grein, ii. 653; + Du. wedden, to lay a wager, from MDu. wedde, 'a pledge, a pawn', Hexham; Icel. vefja, to wager, from veð, a pledge; Dan. vedde, to wager; Swed. vädja, to appeal, from vad, a bet, an appeal; G. wetten, to wager, from wette, a wager; Goth. ga-wadjan, to pledge, betroth, from wadi, a pledge. β. All from the Teut. type wad-jon*, n., a pledge. Further allied to Lithuan. wadiiti, to redeem a pledge; L. uas (gen. uadi), a pledge. = wēdhi*, to carry home, to marry, Fick, i. 767; cf. Lithuan. wisti, pres. tense wedū, to marry, take home a bride, wadas, a conductor, guide, leader by the hand, Russ. westi, to lead, conduct; Olrish fer-in, I carry off, W. dy-weddito, to wed; Skt. vadhū, a bride. Der. wed-ded; wedd-ing, AS. weddung, Gospel of Nicodemus, c. 7; also wed-lock, q. v. Also see wage, wager, gage (1), en-gage.

WEDGE, a piece of metal or wood, thick at one end and sloping to a thin edge at the other. (E.) Also used to denote simply a mass of metal, as in Rich. III, i. 4. 26. ME. wegge, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 14, l. 3. AS. wegc, a mass of metal; Sweet, A. S. Reader. 'Cuneus, wegc'; Voc. 216. 12; + Du. wig, wigge, a wedge; Icel. væggr; Dan. vægge; Swed. vigg; OHG. wekki, MHG. wecke, a wedge; G. wecke, a kind of loaf, from its shape (cf. prov. E. wig, a kind of cake). β. All from Teut. type wag-jaz*, m., a wedge; from Teut. base wag-* = Idg. wagh*, with velar gh, as shown by the cognate Lithuan. wagis, a bent wooden peg for hanging things upon, also a spigot for a cask, also a wedge. See Brugmann, i. § 367, 654. Der. wedge, verb.

WEDLOCK, marriage. (E.) ME. wedlok (with long o), written wedloke, P. Plowman, B. ix. 113, 119; where some MSS. have wedloke. AS. wedlic, in the sense of pledge; 'Arrabo, wedlic'; Voc. 115. 42. = AS. wed, a pledge; and lic, a sport, also a gift, in token of pleasure. Thus the sense is 'a gift given as a pledge, and in token of pleasure'; hence, the gift given to a bride. It was usual to make a present to the bride on the morning after marriage; cf. G. morgengabe, a nuptial (lit. morning) gift. However, lic is also used as a mere suffix, with but slight meaning. See Wed. And see Knowledge, which has a like suffix.

WEDNESDAY, the fourth day of the week. (E.) ME. wednesday, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 154, where one MSS. has wednesday. AS. Wōdnes dag, rubric to Matt. v. 25. The change from ō to e is the usual vowel-change, when the vowel i follows; this vowel appears in the OFries. Wēdnisdai, for Wēdnisdai*; cf. OFries. Wida, Woden (Weigand, a. v. Wotan), NFries. Wēnsdi, Outzen, p. 38; so that the e for ō is Friesian. 'Wōdnes dag' means 'day of Woden or Wōdin', after whom it was named; see Day. Cognate words are Du. woensdag, Icel. ðinsdagr, Swed. Dan. onsdag (for ordensdag). The G. name is simply mitwock (mid-week). β . The AS. Wōden is cognate with Icel. Óðinn, OHG. Wōtan, Wuotan. The name signifies 'the furious,' or rather 'the divinely inspired'; being apparently closely related to L. uātes (stem uāt-), a prophet, a seer, and to OIrish faith (Celtic stem wāt-*), a singer, minstrel. Also, to AS. wōd, raging, mad (cognate with Icel. ōðr, Goth. wīds), whence ME. wood, mad, a word which occurs as late as in Shakespeare, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 192; see Wood (3). \parallel It is remarkable that the Romans, whilst looking upon Wōden as the chief divinity of the Teutonic races, nevertheless identified him with Mercury; hence dies Mercurii was translated into AS. by Wintreslag. Cf. köllobu þeir Pál Óðin, en Barnabas Þir' = they called Paul Odinn, but Barnabas Thor; Icel. Bible, Acts, xiv. 12.

WEE, small, tiny. (E.) 'A little wee face;' Merry Wives, i. 4. 22. ME. we, only as a sb., a bit. 'A little we,' a little bit, for a short space; Harbour, Bruce, vii. 182, xiii. 217. 'And behynd hir a littill we I tell' – and it fell a little way behind her; id. xvii. 677. In all three passages it occurs in the same phrase, viz. 'a little we;' and in the last case we should now say 'a little way.' So also: 'a littill wee;' G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. x. ch. 6; cf. 'in a littill wei,' in a short time, Cursor Mundi, 12531; 'He ne es yitt bot a littill wei,' he is yet but young; id. 8419. And as it is a sb., I believe it is nothing but the Northern form of E. way. See Way. \parallel That the constant association of little with we (=way) should lead to the supposition that the words little and wee are synonymous, seems natural enough; and we have the evidence of Harbour that the word is Northern. The above solution is strongly corroborated by the fact that way-bit is still in use, in the North, in the sense of wee bit or little bit; see Halliwell, and wee in F. D. D.; also Way-bit in Davies, Supp. Glossary. 'In the North parts, wher ther is a wea-bit to evry mule;' Howells, Letters, bk. iv. let. 28.

WEED (1), any useless and troublesome plant. (E.) ME. weed, Prompt. Parv. p. 519. AS. wōod, wōid; Grein, i. 676. \dagger OSax. wōid; whence Du. wieden, vb., to weed. Teut. type weudom*, n. Root unknown. Der. weed, verb, ME. weeden, Palladius on Husbandry, ii. 289; cf. Du. wieden, Low G. wēden, to weed. Der. weed-y, Hamlet, iv. 7. 175.

WEED (2), a garment. (E.) Chiefly in the phr. 'a widow's weeds,' i.e. a widow's mourning apparel. Common in Shak. as a sing. sb., in the sense of garment, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 256, &c. ME. weeds (dissyllabic), Havelock, i. 94. AS. wēde, neut., also wōde, fem., a garment; Grein, ii. 642. \dagger OFrisic wēde, wōd; OSax. wōdi; MDu. wade, 'a garment, a habit, or a vesture,' Hexham; Icel. vād, a piece of stuff, cloth; also, a garment; OIlg. vād, vōd, clothing, armour; O. Low G. wād, a coverlet (Gallice). β . All from the Teut. base wēd-*, a garment, perhaps 'something woven' v. cf. Skt. vē, to weave. Others connect it with Goth. ga-wēidan, pt. t. gawōth, Mark, x. 9, OIlg. wētan, to bind, yoke together. Cf. Skt. vi-vādka, a yoke for carrying a burden. See Wad.

WEEK, a period of seven days. (E.) The vowel, in ME., is very variable; we find weke, wike, on the one hand, and wonke, wonke, wonke on the other. In Chaucer, Six-text, Group A, 1539, we have weke, wike, as well as wonke; Tyrwhitt, C. T. 1541, prints weke. 1. The forms weke, wike (together with mod. E. week) answer to AS. wice, wicu, of which the gen. wtican occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 438, l. 43 (Reccl. Institutes, § 41). 2. The forms wonke, wonke, wonke, answer to AS. woice, wuon, Grein, i. 744. We find the same change in AS. wōde, later form wunth, wood. \dagger Du. week; Icel. wika; Swed. vecka; OHG. wecha, wehka; but the MHG. form is weche, which is also the mod. G. form. Cf. Dan. uge (=vage), a week. β . The prevalent Teut. type is wōkin-*, f. The Goth. wōk occurs only once, in Luke, i. 8, where the Gk. ἐν ᾧ ῥήσας ῥῆς ἡμερας αὐτοῦ (L. in ordine alius suū) appears in Gothic as in wōkin kunja seinis – in the order of his course. It is by no means clear what is the precise force of this Goth. wōk (which exactly answers in form to E. week), and some have (wrongly) supposed that it was borrowed from L. wich, which is, however, equivalent in this passage to kunja, not to wōk. γ . It is usual to consider week as a true Teut. word, and allied to AS. wice, an office, duty, function; perhaps it meant 'succession' or 'change,' being related to Icel. vīkja, to turn, return; from Teut. wik-, weak grade of wikan-, to yield, give way, give place to. Cf. Icel. wīd, a change, vīdja, a changeling, G. winkel, a change; a week corresponds to a phase of the moon. Cf. also Skt. vij, to tremble; and see Weak. Der. week-day, Icel. wikudag; week-day.

WEIRD, to suppose, imagine, think. (E.) ME. wēnen, Chaucer, C. T. 1665. AS. wēnan, to imagine, hope, expect; Grein, ii. 658. = AS. wān, expectation, supposition, hope; id. 4-Du. wānen, to fancy, from wānen, conjecture, Icel. vāna, to hope, from vān expectation; G. wānen, from wān, OHG. wān, sb.; Goth. wēnan, to expect, from wēns, expectation. β . From the sb. of which the Teut. type is wēniz*, f., expectation, hope. Perhaps it meant orig. 'a striving after,' and hence an expectation of obtaining. Some compare it with L. uēnāri, to hunt after; and with Teut. wēn*, 3rd grade of Teut. wēnan-*, to crave, desire; cf. L. uen-uo, desire, Skt. van, to crave, See Win.

WEEP, to wail, lament, shed tears. (E.) ME. weepen, orig. a strong verb, pt. t. weep, wep, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, Group D, l. 588, where only one MS. has wepte (dissyllabic), for which Tyrwhitt erroneously prints wep, C. T. 6170. AS. wēpan, pt. t. wēp; Grein, ii. 661. The lit. sense is to cry aloud, raise an outcry, lament loudly; wēpan (for wēpian*) is regularly formed, with the usual vowel-change, from wōp, a clamour, outcry, lament, Grein, ii. 732. \dagger OSax. wōpan, to raise an outcry; wōp, sb.; Goth. wōpjan, to cry out; OIlg. wōpjan, to lament, weep, str. vb.; also wōpjan, weak vb., wōp, wōp, an outcry; Icel. apa, to shout, cry; þp, a shout. β . All from the Teut. base wōp-, appearing in wōpaz, m. (AS. wōp), an outcry, loud lament. \parallel This AS. wōp is quite distinct from L. whoop, in which the initial w is unoriginal, but the h essential. Der. weep-er, weep-ing.

WEET, to know; the same as Wit (1), q. v.

WEEVIL, a small kind of beetle very destructive to grain. (E.) ME. weel, weel (with u = v), spelt weeyl, weyyl in Prompt. Parv., pp. 523, 531. AS. wēl, to translate L. scarabius (sic), Voc. 261, 13; spelt wīl in a very early gloss of the 8th century, where it translates L. cantarus, i. e. cantharis, a beetle; Voc. 11. 28. We even find the older form wibba; 'Scarabæus, scarn-wibba,' Voc. 319, 2; where scarn means dung. \dagger Icel. -yfl, in comp. torlyfl, a dung-beetle; MDu. wewel, 'a little worme eating corne or beanes, or a weevil,' Hexham; OHG. wihel, MHG. wihel; G. wiebel. β . The Teut. type is wēbilaz*, m., a beetle; a dimin. form of Teut. wōrþon-*, m., whence AS. wibba. From the Teut. wēn-*, to weave; from the filaments spun for the larva-case. See Weave. γ . Further allied to Lithuan. wiholas, a chaper, winged insect.

WEFT, the threads woven into and crossing the warp. (E.) ME. wef, wyfel, Exod. xxxix. 3, earlier version, where the later version has warp. AS. wef, wef; 'Deponille, wef, vel wef;' Voc. 187, 32; and again 'Deponille, wef' in a gloss of the 8th century, id. 17. 6. \dagger Icel. weftr; also ripta, wif. β . The Teut. types are wēfraz*, m., wēfraz*, m., lit. 'a thing woven'; formed with participial suffix -lo from wēn-*, to weave, whence AS. wef-an, to weave; see Weave and Woof.

WEIGH, to balance, ponder, to have weight, be heavy. (E.) ME. weghen, wēzen, wēzen, wēzen, Chaucer, C. T. 456 (A 454). AS. wegan, str. vb., pt. t. wag, to carry, bear; also, intrans., to move; Grein, ii. 655. From the sense of 'carry' we pass to that of 'raise' or 'lift,' as when we say 'to weigh anchor'; so also Cowper says: 'Weigh the vessel up.' Loss of the Royal George, at 7. From the sense of raising or lifting, we pass to that of weighing. \dagger Du. wegen, to weigh; Icel. wega, to move, carry, lift, weigh; Dan. vægt, to weigh; Swed. väga, to weigh; väga npp., to weigh up, to lift; G. wegen, to move, wägen, to move gently, rock, wägen, to weigh; OIlg. wegan, to move, bear, weigh. Cf. Goth. gawigan, to shake about. β . The AS. wegan is a strong verb; pt. t. wag, pp. wegen; so also is the Icel. wega; pt. t. vā, pp. vęgin. All from the Teut. type wegan-, pt. t. wag, pp. wagan*, to carry, move, weigh, answering to ldg. \dagger WEGH, to carry, as in Skt. vah, l. wekare; see Vehlole. Der. weigh-t, ME. weght, f. Ploewman, B. xiv. 292, also spelt wicht, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1385. AS. ge-wiht, G. xxiii. 16, cognate with MDu. wicht, gewicht (Hexham), Du. gewicht, G. gewicht, Swed. wigt; cf. Icel. vætt, Dan. vægt. Teut. type weg-tom*, n., which became weh-tom*; and AS. wēht became wiht by palatal mutation (Stevens); whence weight-y, spelt wyghtly in Palsgrave; weight-i-y, ness. Also wag, q. v.; wagge-on, wain, wey, wicht, wiht.

WEIR, WEAR, a dam in a river. (E.) ME. wer; dat. were, Chaucer, Parliament of Foules, 138. AS. wer, a weir, dam, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past Care, c. 38, ed. Sweet, p. 278, l. 16; the pp. geweor, dammed up, occurs in the line above. The lit. sense is 'defence,' hence a fence, dam; closely allied to AS. wearian, to defend, protect; also (as above) to dam up, Grein, ii. 662. \dagger Icel. vör, a fenced-in landing-place, ver, a fishing-station; G. wehr, a defence; cf. wehren, to defend, also to check, constrain, control; mühl-wehr, a mill-dam; MDu. weer, 'a palissado, or a rampard,' Hexham. Cf. also Goth. warjan, to defend, Icel. verja; allied to Skt. vr, to cover, virāya, to stop, hinder, keep off, varira-, a dam, embankment (Macdonell); Gk. ép-vōda, to ward off. From the \dagger WER, to protect.

WEIRD, fate, destiny. (E.) As an adj. in Shak. Mach. i. 3. 32; i. 5. 8; i. 1. 20; id. 4. 133; iv. 1. 136, where it means 'subservient to destiny.' But it is properly a sb. ME. wirde, wyrde; 'And out of wo into wele zone wyrdes shul change' – and out of wo into weal your destinies shall change; P. Ploewman, C. xiii. 209. AS. wyr, also wird, fate, destiny, also one of the 'Norms' or Fates, an extremely common word in poetry, Grein, ii. 760. Teut. type wurdiz*, f. Formed, by vowel-change from u* to y, from Teut. wurō* (with wurō* <wurp*, by Verne's Law), weak grade of Teut. werthan* > AS. weorþan, to be, become, take place, happen, come to pass; see WORTH (2). The lit. sense is 'that which happens,' or 'that which comes to pass;' hence fate, destiny. Icel. wórd*, fate, one of the three Norms or Fates; cf. urð, stem of pt. t. pl. of verða, to become; OSax. wurð, fate; OHG. wurt. (✓WERT.)

WELCOME, received gladly, causing gladness by coming. (Scand.) Now used as an adj., and derived from wel, adv., and the pp. come of the verb to come; and hence of Scand. origin. = Icel. velkominn, welcome; cf. Dan. velkommen, Swed. vilkommen, = Icel. vei, well; and kominn, pp. of kom, to come. Hence also the AF. verb welcomer, to welcome (Godefroy). β. Substituted for AS. wilcuma, intrans. sb., one who comes so as to please another, Grein, ii. 705. = AS. wel, prefix, allied to will, will, pleasure; and cuma, a comer, one who comes, formed, with suffix -a of the agent, from cuman, to come; Grein, ii. 706; i. 169. See WILL and COME. Hence AS. wilcuman, to welcome.

WELD (1), to beat metal together. (Scand.) The final d is extraneous, like d after l in alder, a tree, elder, a tree, and Shakespeare's alder-hief for alder-hiest, 2 Hen. vi. i. 28. It is only a particular use of the word wel, verb, to spring up as a fountain, lit. to boil up. It meant (1) to boil, (2) to heat to a high degree, (3) to beat heated iron. We find this particular use in Wyclif, Isaiah, ii. 4; where the earlier version has 'thai shal bete togidere their swerdes into shars', the later version has 'thai schulen welte togidere hir swerdes in-to scharris.' See further under Well (2). The word is apparently Scand., not E.; for (1) the Swed. välla (lit. to well) is only used in the sense 'to weld,' as in välla järn, to weld iron (Widgren); the sense 'to well' appearing in the comp. uppvälla, to boil up; (2) Sweden exports large quantities of iron and steel. (cf. Dan. vælde with excrement d), to well up; I pomeran. wellen, to weld iron; prov. E. well, to weld. In Icel. and Norw., a distinction is made between valla, intr., to well, pt. vall (str. vb.), and vella, tr., to cause to boil (wk. vb.); the Swed. välla, to weld, answers to the latter. ¶ The process of welding iron is named, in many languages, from the word for boiling; cf. Illyrian variti, to boil, weld iron, Lettish wirdit, to boil, sawariti, to weld; &c.; Wedgwood.

WELD (2), dyer's weed; Reseda luteola. (E.) ME. welde; 'Madyi, welde, or wood' = madder, weld, or wood; Chaucer, Atlas Prima, l. 17. 'Welde, or wolve.' Prompt. Parv. pp. 520, 532. According to Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 349, it is spelt wolde in MS. Harl. 3388. In Lowland Scotch, it is wald; see Jamieson. It appears to be an E. word. Cognate with Low G. wolde, weld (Lübben), Du. wouwe, MDn. wouwe (for wolde); also G. wau, Swed. van, vau (from van). We also find Span. gualda, F. gaude (of Teut. origin). Prob. allied to AS. wæld, a wood, as if 'belonging to the wood or world;' see Wold. Cf. OSax. sin-weldi, a great wood. ¶ Quite distinct from Woad.

WELFARE, prosperity. (E.) Lit. a state of faring or going on well. ME. welfare, Chaucer, C. T. 11150 (F 838); compounded of wel, adv. well, and fare = AS. faru, sb., lit. a journey, from faran, to fare, go. See Well (1) and Fare. Cf. Icel. veifærr, a well-doing.

WELKIN, the sky, the region of clouds. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 101, &c. ME. welkin, as printed in Tyrwhitt's edition of Chaucer, C. T. 9000, where the MSS. have welkne, welken, welkine, walkyn, Six-text, Group E. 1124. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 160, we have welkne, wolkne, þe welkne, welken in the various MSS. It thus appears that welkne is a mutated form of wolkne, which is an older spelling; in Layamon, 4574, 23947, we have wolkne, wolkne, wolkene, prob. a pl. form, and signifying 'the clouds.' AS. wolcna, clouds, pl. of wolk, a cloud, Grein, ii. 731. ¶ OSax. walkan, a cloud. Du. wolk, Low G. wolkte; G. wolke, OHG. wolka, f., wolkana, n., a cloud. Teut. base wulk(e)no-*. β. Some have connected it with AS. gewealc, a rolling about, as in þa gewealc, the rolling of the waves, Grein, i. 477; from walkan, to roll, walk; see Walk. There is no proof of this; as if it were true, walcen would mean 'that which rolls about;' cf. AS. waleca, a wave, billow. γ. Or else connected with OHG. welk, moist, damp; Russ. welga, moisture; Lith. wilg-yti, to wet, moisten; from an Idg. welg-*.

WELL (1), in a good state, excellently. (E.) ME. wel, Chaucer, C. T. 106; wel, 4728 (B 308). AS. wel, Grein, ii. 656; also spelt weli. ¶ Du. wel; Icel. vel; Dan. vel; Swed. vel; Goth. waila. ¶ G. welt, wolt; OHG. wela, wola. β. The Goth. waila answers to a Teut. type wala*. The orig. sense is 'agreeably,' or suitably to one's will or wish; from the Idg. wel-*, to wish; cf. L. wol-o, I wish, wel-le, to wish, Russ. vol-ia, sb., will, W. gwel, better, Skt. vara-, better, vara-, a wish, prati varam, according to a wish; see Will. Der. well-behaved, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 59; belowed, Jul. Cæs. iii. 2. 180; -born, -bred, -disposed, favoured, Two Gent. ii. 1. 54; -meaning, Rich. II. ii. 1. 128; -meant, 3. Hen. vi. 3. 67; -nigh; -spoken, Rich. III. i. 2. 29; -won, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 51; and numerous other compounds. And see wel-come, wel-fare; also wel, wel-th.

WELL (2), a spring, fountain of water. (E.) ME. welle (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 5689 (D 107). AS. wel, also well, Grein, ii. 657; also spelt wylla, wylle, wyll, id. 756. Teut. type wailjon*, m.; allied to AS. weallan (strong verb, pt. t. woll, pp. weallan), to well up, boil, id. 672; the mod. E. verb to well being derived, not from this strong verb, but from the sb.; so that the pt. t. in mod. E. is welled, ¶ Icel. well, ebullition; from vella, to well, boil, pt. t. vall, pp. allinn (strong verb); whence also valla, weak verb, to make to boil; Du. wel, a spring; Dan. væld (for væll), a spring; G. welle, a wave, surge; cf. wallen, to undulate, boil, bubble up, of which the OHG. pt. t. was wial. β. All from the Teut. wailan-, str. vb., to boil up, undulate; from the Idg. wel-, to turn round, roll, as in Skt. val, to move to and fro, Russ. valiate, to roll. See further under Helix. From the weak grade we have Goth. wulan, to boil; cf. also AS. wielan, wyln, a boiling, and Skt. ārmī-, a wave. Der. well, verb, ME. wellen, verb, in P. Plowman, B. xix. 375, from AS. wellan, wyln; we find 'Fernece, ic welles', Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 156, l. 14, in the Royal MS. (see the footnote), though most MSS. have ic welle. Der. wellspring, ME. wellespring, Genesis and Exodus, l. 1243. And see Well (1).

WELLAWAY, an exclamation of great sorrow. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 46. ME. wellaway, Chaucer, C. T. 13048 (H 1308); the MSS. have wellauey, wellaueie, and (corruptly) well unwey, well away, showing that some scribes mistook it to mean 'weal [is] away,' i.e. prosperity is away! ¶ Wellawe, and wolowen = alas! and alas! Ancrer Kivle, p. 88, l. 7; wellawe, id. p. 274, l. 2. 'Wo is us þat we weren born! Wellawit!' Havelock, 462; cf. l. 570. Written waila wai, Layamon, 8031; wala wa, 7971; also wela wa (without wei or wa following), 3456. It stands for wei la wei or wai lā wā (wo lo wo). AS. wā lā wā, written wā lā wā, alas! lit. 'woe! lo! woe!' Ælfred, t. 6 of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4); wā lā wā, id., c. xxxv. § 6 (b. iii. met. 12); we also find wā lā wā, Mark, xv. 29, and simply wā, Mark, xiv. 21. — AS. wā, woe; l. 10; wā, woe. See Woe and Lo. ¶ The expression was early misunderstood; and was even turned into wella-day, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 106; in which unmeaning expression, though intended as an exclamation of sorrow, we seem to have wel in place of wo, and day introduced without any sense; perhaps alas! the day also owed its existence to this unmeaning corruption.

WELSH, pertaining to Wales. (E.) Welsh properly means 'foreign.' ME. walsh, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; Walsh is still in use as a proper name. AS. walisc, welisc; þā welisc meun' — the foreigners, i.e. Normans, A. S. Chron. an. 1048; see Earle's edition, p. 178, l. 15; 'þā welisc meun' ibid. l. 24; and see the note. Formed, with suffix -isc (> E. -ish) and vowel-change, from AS. wælk, a foreigner; orig. a Celt. (From the pl. Wenlas we have mod. E. Wales, now the name of a country.) The Teut. form Walh-* answers to L. Volc-, i.e. 'one of the tribe of Volca,' who occupied Southern Gaul. See Walnut. Der. Welsh-rabbit, a Welsh dainty, i.e. not a rabbit, but toast cheese; this is a mild joke, just as a Norfolk-capon is not a capon at all, but a red-herring (Halliwell). There is no authority for the assertion that rabbit is a corruption of rare bit; which renders Welsh pointless.

WELT, a narrow strip of leather round a shoe. (E.) The old sense seems to be hem or border. Cotgrave explains F. orlet by 'a little hemme, selvidge, welt, border;' and the verb orlet by 'to hemme, selvidge, border, welt the edges or sides of.' 'Take care of the skirts, fringes, and welts of their garments,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 51. 'Welt of a garment, orelet [F. orlet]; Welt of a shoe, oreleure;' Palsgrave. ME. welte. 'Welt of a schoo, Incucium, vel intercucium.' Prompt. Parv. 'Hec pedana, Anglice wampay [a vamp]; Hoc intercucium, Anglice welte;' Voc. 664. 34, 35. Palsgrave also has the verb: 'I welte, as a garment is, ie orle: This kyrtell is well weltd, ce corset icy est bien orlé.' Lowl. S. waut, ME. walte, a welt, walte, to welt; Cathol. Anglicum. The pl. waltys occurs as a gloss to intercucia, in John de Garlande; Wright's Vocab. i. 125. Lit. 'a hem,' or 'strip turned over;' cf. Norw. welt, a card turned up as a trump; allied to AS. wyltan, gewaltan, to roll, Icel. vælt, to roll over; see Walter and Wale. We also find W. gwald, a hem, welt, gwalties, the welt of a shoe; gwald, to welt, hem; Gael. balt, a welt of a shoe, a border; Irish balt, a welt, border; all (apparently) borrowed from E. Der. welt, verb.

WELTER, to wallow, roll about. (Scand.) Surrey has 'waling tongues,' i.e. rolling or lolling tongues of snakes, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, bk. ii. l. 266. 'I walter, I tumble, je me voystre;' Hye you, your horse are wallerings yonder, hastiz vous, vostre cheval se vostre la: Palsgrave. 'I welter, je verse; Thon wellerest in the myer, as thou were a sow'; Palsgrave. ME. welleren, to wallow; Cursor Mundi, 4503; prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. vältra, to roll, to wallow. Waller and weller are frequentative forms, with the usual suffix -er, from ME. walten, to roll over, overturn, hence to totter, fall, throw, rouse, rush, &c.; Destruction of Troy, 1056, 3810, 4027, 4633, 4891, pt. t. weli, id. 4418, 4891, &c. This ME. walten is from the AS. wæltian*, wæltian, a strong verb, of which the pp. gewæltan (for gewæltan) occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the Oñorthumb. translation of Matt. xvii. 14, where cænsum gewæltano occurs as a gloss on genibus pronoluitis; hence the secondary verb wyllan, to roll round, Grein, ii. 757. also the adj. unwealt, steady, lit. 'not tottering'; A. S. Chron. an. 897, ed. Earle, p. 95, l. 14, and the note. Cf. Low G. wellern, wältern, to roll over; Icel. welstak, to rotate, to roll over, as a horse does, from wella, pt. t. vall, to roll; Dan. vælte, to roll, overturn; Swed. vältra, to roll, wallow, welter, frequentative of välta, to roll; G. wälzen, to roll, wallow, welter, from wälzen, to roll; Goth. us-wäljan, to subvert. See Waltz, Wallow. From Idg. base wel-d-, extended from WEL, to turn; see Well (2).

WEN, a fleshy tumour. (E.) ME. wenne; 'Wenne, veruca, gibbus,' Prompt. l'rv. AS. wenn; acc. pl. wennas, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 12, l. 22; nom. pl. wennas, id. 46, l. 21. +Du. wen; Low G. wenn; wenn-bulen [wen-boils]; prov. G. wenne, wenne, wänke, cited by E. Müller; Dau. dial. wan, a can, wart. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'pali', or painful swelling; Teut. type wanjaz*, m. Prob. from wann*, and grade of the Teut. str. vb. seen in Goth. winnan, to suffer, as in aglōns winnan—to suffer afflictions, 1 Tim. v. 10; cf. winnas, affliction, suffering, 2 Tim. iii. 11. So also Icel. vinna, though cognate with E. win, means not only to work, labour, toil, but also to suffer, and vinna is to do bodily harm to another. See Win.

WENCH, a young girl, vulgar woman. (E.) Common in prov. E. without any depreciatory intention; as, 'a fine young wench.' 'Temperance was a delicate wench,' Temp. ii. 43. ME. wenche, Chaucer, C. T. 3254; P. Plowman, B. v. 364. We also find the form wenche, Aucrēn Kivle, p. 334, note k. β. It is to be particularly noted that wenche is the earlier form. Stratmann gives no references for wenche earlier than Will. of Palerne, l. 1901, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 24, and Poems and Lives of the Saints, ed. Furnivall, xvi. 98, where, however, the form printed is wenche. But wenche (spelt wenche) occurs in the Ormulun, 3356, where it is used of a male infant, viz. in the account of the annunciation of Christ's birth to the shepherds. The orig. sense was simply 'infant,' without respect of sex, but, as the word also implies 'weak' or 'tender,' it was naturally soon restricted to the weaker sex. The ME. wenche resulted from wenche by loss of t, which was doubtless thought to be a dimin. suffix; yet in this particular instance, it is not so. The sb. wenche, an infant, is closely allied to the ME. adj. wenke, tottery, unsteady, Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 221. AS. wenel, a child, a daughter (Toller); pl. wenelo, children (of either sex), Exod. xxi. 4. Allied to wenel, wencele, weak, Grein, ii. 659; wenacol, wenacol, unstable, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. vii. § 2 (b. ii. pr. 1). γ. The lit. sense of wenacol is 'tottery,' whence the senses unstable, weak, infirm, easily followed. Formed, with AS. suffix -ol, from Teut. base wank-*, to bend sideways, nod, totter, as in G. wanken, to totter, reel, stagger, waddle, flinch, shrink; cf. MlIG. wanken (causal form), to render unsteady. +MlIG. wankel, OHG. wanckel, unstable; mod. G. (provincial) wankel, 'tottery, unsteady,' Flügel. The base wank-* is the 2nd grade of Teut. wenkan-*; see further under Wink.

WEND, to go, take one's way. (E.) Now little used, except in the pt. t. went, which is used in place of the pt. t. of go. When used, it is gen. in the phr. 'to wend one's way'; but Shak. twice has simply wend, Com. of Errors, i. 1. 158, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 372. ME. wenden, Chaucer, C. T. 16. AS. wendan, (1) trans. to turn; (2) intrans. to turn oneself, proceed, go; common in both senses, Grein, ii. 659. The pt. t. was wende, which became wende in ME., and is now went. The lit. sense was orig. 'to make to wind,' and it is the causal of wind; formed, by vowel-change of a to e, from Teut. wand*, and grade of wendan*, windan, to wind. +Du. wenden, to turn, to tack, causal of winden; Icel. wenda, to wind, turn, change, causal of winda; Dau. wende, caus. of winde; Swed. wända, caus. of winda; Goth. wandjan, caus. of windan; G. wenden, caus. of winden. See Wind (2).

WERE, pl. of was; also as subj. sing. and pl. See Was.

WERGILD, in AS. law, a fine paid for manslaughter or crime against the person. (E.) See Hittuut's Nomelocion. AS. wergild, the price set upon a man according to his rank (Toller). = AS. wer, a man; and gild, a payment, from gildan, gieldan, to pay. See Werewolf and Yield.

WERWOLF, a man-wolf. (E.) On the subject of werwolves, i. e. men supposed to be metamorphosed into wolves, see pref. to William of Palerne, otherwise called William and the Werwolf, p. xxvi; where the etymology is discussed. Cf. Gk. Λυδωπορος, i. e. wolf-man. ME. werwolf, Will. of Palerne, 80, &c. AS. were-wulf, a werwolf; as an epithet of the devil (meaning fierce despoiler). Laws of Cnut, § 26, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 374. Usually explained as from AS. wer, a man; and wulf, a wolf. +G. wülf, a werwolf; MlIG. werwolf; as if from MlIG. wer, a man, and wolf, a wolf. This was Latinised as garulphus or gerulphus, whence OF. garoul (Barguy), mod. F. loup-garou, i. e. wolf-man-wolf, the word loup being prefixed because the sense of the final -ou had been lost. For the latter syllable, see Wolf. For the AS. wer, see Virile. B. Kluge thinks this is uncertain; for the AS. prefix were- (answering to OllG. weri- in Weri-wolf, a man's name) suggests connexion with AS. weri-an, to wear clothes; cf. Icel. álfr-hamr, lit. 'wolf-skin,' applied to the skin of a werwolf. But it is easy to reply that the AS. wergild (certainly derived from AS. wer, a man) is also spelt weregild; the OHG. forms being weregilt, weregilt. Hence the usual explanation 'man-wolf' may certainly be accepted. See Wergild. Cf. O. Low G. weregild (Gallée).

WEST, the quarter where the sun sets. (E.) ME. west, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 113. AS. west, Grein, ii. 667, where it occurs as an adv., with the sense 'westward'; 'we also find westan, the adv. from the west, id. 668; west-diel, the west part, west-ende, the west end, west-mest, most in the west. +Du. west, adj. and adv.: Icel. vestr, sb., the west; Dan. and Swed. vest, sb.; G. west (whence F. ouest) β. All from Teut. base wes-*, west. Prob. allied to Gk. ἐσ-ωρος, l. es-fer, evening. See Vesper. Der. west-ward, AS. weste-weard, adj., Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xvi. § 4 (b. ii. met. 6). west-ern; west-er-ly (short for west-ern-ly).

WET, very moist, rainy. (E.) ME. wēt (with long e), spelt wet in 'The Castle of Love, l. 1433 (Stratmann); whence pl. wēte (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1282 (A 1280), riming with grēte, pl. of grēt, great. AS. wēt, Grein, ii. 651. +Icel. witr; Dan. vaad; Swed. vät; NFricks. wet. β. All from Teut. type wetaz*, wet, from the same root as E. water. From Teut. wet-, 3rd grade of wet, Idg. WED* to wet, or spring up (as water). See Water. Der. wet, verb, AS. wētan (Grein); wet, sb., AS. wēta (Grein); wett-isk, wet-ness; wet-shod, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 161. From the same root are all-er, und-ale, hyd-ra, hyd-rant-ic, hyd-ro-gen, &c.

WETHER, a castrated ram. (E.) ME. wether, Chaucer, C. T. 3249. AS. wēter, Pa. xxviii. 1, ed. Spelman (marginal reading). +OSax. wethar, withar; Kleinere Altniederdeutsche Denkmäler, ed. Heyne, p. 186; Icel. wör; Dau. væder, væder; Swed. vådar; G. widder, OllG. widar; Goth. withrus, a lamb, John, i. 29. β. All from Teut. type wethruz*, m. The orig. sense was doubtless 'a yearling,' as the word corresponds very closely to L. nitulus, a calf, Skt. wisla-, a calf, allied to Skt. wisara-, Gk. eros, a year. See Veterinary and Veal. ¶ We may note the distinction between weather and wether by observing that the former is wen-her (with Idg. suffix -tro-), whilst the latter is weth-er (with suffix -ro-), the th answering to the t in uit-lus.

WEY, a heavy weight. (E.) The weight varies considerably, from 2 cwt. to 3 cwt. ME. weye, P. Plowman, B. v. 93. The lit. sense is merely 'weight.' AS. wēge; 'Pondus, byrden odde wēge,' i. e. burden or weight; Ælfrie's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 58, l. 17. Allied to AS. wēg, stem of pl. of pt. t. of wegan, to bear, carry, weigh; so that the sb. is from Teut. wēg-*, 3rd grade of wēg-, to carry. See Weigh.

WH

WH. This is distinct from w, just as th is from t. The mod. F. wh is represented by hw in AS., and by hv in Icelandic; it answers to L. qu, Gk. π, τ; Idg. kw.

WHACK, to beat. (E.) See Thwack, which is supposed to be the same word. But it is rather a variant, i. e. a similarly sounding imitative word. Cf. EFries. and Westphalian wack-eln, to beat, to cudgel; prov. G. (Thüringen) wackeln, walken, to beat (Hertel).

WHALE, the largest of sea-animals. (E.) ME. whal, Chaucer, C. T. 7512 (D 1930); qual, Havelock, 753. AS. hwæl, Voc. 94. 15. +Du. walvisch, i. e. whale-fish; Icel. hvalr; Dan. and Swed. hval; G. wal, walfisch. β. The Teut. type is hwalo-*, m. The name was orig. applied to any large fish, including the walrus, grampus, porpoise, &c. Thus Ælfrie explains hwæl by 'balena, vel cetæ, vel pistris.' Cf. G. wels, a catfish; OFruss. kalis, a catfish. Perhaps it meant 'roller,' from the rolling of porpoises; cf. Icel. hvel, a wheel, OFrass. kélan, a wheel; GK. whāp, a monster, whālos, a pivot; see Pole (2), and Wheel. Whale and balena have nothing in common but the letter l, and cannot be compared. Der. whale-bone, formerly whales bone, Spenser, P. Q. iii. 1. 15, where the reference is to the ivory of the walrus' tusk; ME. whales bon, Layamon, 2363; whal-ing, whal-er. Also wal-rus, q. v.

WHAP, to beat, flutter. (E.) Sometimes spelt whop; and wap. Halliwell has wap, 'to beat; to flutter, to beat the wings, to move in any violent manner'; also wapping (for whapping), 'quaking, used by Batman, 1882.' A whapp, a blow; York Plays, xxiii. 199. 'The waters wappe,' i. e. lap; Malory, Morte Arthur, bk. xxi. c. 5. A variant of quap; an imitative word. Cf. ME. quappen, to palpitate, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 87; Legend of Good Women, 865; Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4, earlier version. From a base whap*, to throb; see Quaver. Allied to Low G. quabben, to palpitate, with which cf. E. wabble. Note also W. chwapp, a sudden stroke, chwappio, to strike, to slap; EFries. wappen, to swing, to rock; wip-wap, a swing. Der. wabb-le. And see whip.

WHARF (1), a place on the shore for lading and unlading goods. (E.) Spelt warf in Fabyan's Chron. an. 1543, where we read that 'the maior went to the woods-warfes, and sold to the poore people billet and faggot,' because of the severe frost. Palgrave has wharf. MK. Wharfe, in Liber Custumarum, p. 447 (1343); cf. pp. 62, 150. Blount, ed. 1694, explains wharf as meaning, not only a landing-place, but also 'a working-place for shipwrights'; see below. AS. hwærf, a dam or bank to keep out water; 'þa gýrnde hē þæt hē mōste macian foran gēn Mildryðe æker ðanne hwærf wif þon wodað tō werianne,' which Thorpe translates by 'then desired he that he might make a wharf over against Mildred's field as a protection against the ford,' where 'ford' is a conjectural translation of wodað; Diplomatarium Ævi Anglo-Saxonici (A. D. 1038), p. 384; and again, 'þat land and ðanne wearf ðar tō' = the land and the wharf thereto; id. (an. 1042), p. 361. The orig. sense seems to have been a bank of earth, used at first as a dam against a flood; the present use is prob. of Dutch or Scand. origin. The lit. sense is 'a turning,' whence it came to mean a dam, from its turning the course of water; the allied AS. hwærf not only means 'a returning,' but also 'a change, and even 'a space or distance,' as in the ONorlunth, tr. of Lake, xxiv. 13; also 'a crowd,' Grein, ii. 118; cf. hwærfan, to turn about. A good example is seen in the comp. mere-hwærf, the sea-shore, Grein, ii. 233. It corresponds, as to form, with AS. hwærf, to turn, turn about, Grein, ii. 119. + Du. werf, a wharf, yard; also a turn, time; Ilexham has werf, 'a wharfe, or a working-place for shipwrights or otherwise'; Icel. hwarf, a turning away, also, a shelter; cf. hwarf, pt. t. of hverfa, to turn; Dan. werf, a wharf, a dock-yard; Swed. warf, a shipbuilder's yard; MSwed. hwarf, sheps-hwarf (ship's wharf), the same (Ihre). The MSwed. hwarf also meant a turn or time, order, stratum, or layer; Ihre, i. 945; from hverfan, to turn, return. B. It thus appears that, even in AS., this difficult word, with a great range of senses, meant not only a turning, reversion, but also turning-place, dam, shore, space, distance. Cf. prov. E. wharfstead, a ford in a river (Halliwell). In Swedish and Dutch it had a narrower sense, that of 'ship-builder's yard,' so called from its being situate on a shore. And from this sense to that of 'landing-place' the step is not a long one. C. The AS. strong verb hwærfan, answering to Goth. hwaiban, to turn oneself about (hence to walk), and to Icel. hverfa, answers to a Teut. type hwærfan*, pt. t. hwærf*, to turn, turn about. Cf. GK. καρπ-ός, the wrist (from its turning). ¶ Not allied to G. werfen, to throw, which is allied to E. warf. Der. wharf-age, Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 135; wharf-ing-er, which occurs (according to Blount, ed. 1674) anno 7 Edw. VI, cap. 7, a corruption of wharfinger, just as messenger is of messenger.

WHARF (2), the bank of a river. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 33; Antony, ii. 2. 218. The occurrence of mere-hwærf, the sea-shore (for which see Grein, ii. 233), justifies Shakespeare's spelling, and shows that the present word is only a peculiar sense of Wharf (1), q. v. Hence perhaps the river-name Wharfe.

WHAT, neuter of WHO, q. v. (E.) We find the form whatsome-er in Dictes and Sayings, pr. by Caxton, fol. 18, back, l. 2. Der. what-ever, what-so-ever; what-not, a piece of furniture for holding anything, whence the name.

WHAUP, the curlew. (E.) Prov. E. whaup; Iowl. Sc., quhaip, in 1551 (Jam.). Prob. the same as AS. hwiþa (for hwipþa) in The Sea-larer, l. 21. Of imitative origin.

WHEAL (1), a pimple. (E.) Not to be confused with wheal, another spelling of wale, the mark caused by a stripe; for which see Wale. A wheal is a swelling, pimple, caused by ill-health. It occurs frequently in Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 25, where is mention of 'pushes, wheals, and blains,' and of 'pushes and angry wheals,' &c.; a push being a pustule, still in use in Camb. ME. whele; 'Whele, whele, wheel, or whekke, gwelke, soore, Pustula;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. pl. whealles, Chaucer, C. T. 634 (A 634). AS. hwela, a wheel; an unauthorised word, due to Sommer. [Ettmüller cites AS. hwela, with a reference to Ælfric's Glossary; but Wright prints it hwela; 'Lotium, hwela,' Wright's Voc. i. 46, l. 7; and the word is very doubtful.] There is also a verb hwelidan, to turn to pus (the word (Toller), also to pine away, as in sect. 15 of the Liber Scintillarum: 'Unde bonus prociat, inde inuidus contabescit,' glossed by 'þanon þe se goda framab, þanon se andiga hwelað.' The pp. is hwelaet, inflamed. Cf. W. chweler, a maggot, wheel, pimple. The ME. wheleke, a pimple, is clearly a dimin. form; hence whelek, Hen. V, iii. 6. 108.

WHEAL (2), a mine. (C.) Still common in Cornwall. = Corn. hwel, a work, a mine; also written wheal, whal, whely; Williams, Corn. Dict. Williams compares it with W. chwyl, a turn, a course, a while, chwylto, to turn, revolve, run a course, bustle; cf. also W. chwel, a course, turn. Stokes-Fick, p. 324.

WHEAT, the name of a grain used for making bread. (E.) ME. whele, Chaucer, C. T. 3986 (A 3988). AS. hwæte; Grein, ii. 117-4. Du. weite, weil; Icel. hveiti; Dan. hvæde; Swed. hwete; G. weizen; Goth. hwæiteis. (The Lithuan. kwieps, wheat, is borrowed from Teutonic.) β. All from a Teut. type hwæitiyo*, wheat; from hwæit*, and grade of hwæit*; so named from the whiteness of the meal. See White. Der. wheat-en, AS. hwæiten, John, xii. 24; wheat-fly; buck-wheat.

WHEAT-EAR, the name of a small bird. (E.) In Phillips; formerly wheatears (with final s), in T. Fuller, Worthies of England, ii. 382 (see Palmer, Folk-Etymology), as to which Smollett says: 'this is a pleasant corruption of white-ear, the translation of their French name cul blanc, . . . for they are actually white towards the tail;' Travels, letter iii. Swainson, in his Bird-names (E. D. S.), gives the name white ass [= white-ear] as in use in Cornwall, and white-rump in Norfolk; while Cotgrave has: 'Cul blanc, the bird called a whitetail,' i. e. white tail. Hence the etymology is from white and arse. Cf. Du. wit-staart, 'a white-tail, white-ear;' Calisch; M'Don. hwit-stjart (Kalkar).

WHEEDLE, to cajole, flatter. (E.?) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 760. In Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act i. sc. 1, we find: 'I must wheedle her.' Blount, ed. 1674, notes it as a new word, saying: 'Wheedle in the British tongue signifies a story, whence probably our late word of fancy, and signifies to draw one in by fair words or subtil insinuation,' &c. It is referring to W. chwedi, a saying, sentence, fable, story, tale, chwedda, to gossip, chweddu, to tell a fable; but this is not a satisfactory explanation, nor does it account for the long e. But we should note his spelling with ea (from an open r). It seems more likely that the word should be weddle, and that it was a prov. E. word, answering to AS. wæddian, to beg. 'Mē sceamaþ þæt ic widdige,' to beg I am ashamed, Luke, xvi. 3. The orig. sense of wæddian was 'to be poor'; from wædd, poverty, indigence, wæddla, poor. Cf. ME. weddle, poor; Ormulum, 5638. Der. wheed-er.

WHEEL, a circular frame turning on an axle. (E.) ME. wheel, Wyclif, James, iii. 6. AS. hwōel, Grein, ii. 119. Hwōel is a shortened form of hwecwōel, Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman; it is also spelt hwecwōel (Toller), and hwecwōel, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 7 (h. iv. pr. 6). Icel. hvíl; Dan. hjul; Swed. hjul; MSwed. huglil (Ihre). Teut. type hwecwōlōm*, n., for hwecwōlōm*, Idg. type ghe-glo-*, as in Skt. chakrá-, GK. κύκλος, a wheel. The Idg. ghe-glo-* is a reduplicated form, from QWEL, to drive; whence GK. κύκλος, an axis, Russ. kolos, Icel. hvel, a wheel. See Cycle and Pole (2). Brugmann, i. § 658. Cf. Calash. Der. wheel, verb; wheel-er; wheel-barrow, spelt whelebarrow in Le Bone Florence, l. 2031, pr. in Ritson's Met. Romances, iii. 86; wheel-wright (see Wright).

WHEEZE, to breathe audibly and with difficulty. (E.) ME. whesen, Towneley Mysteries, 152 (Stratmann); rare. AS. hwisan, to wheeze, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 365 (glossary). [The 3rd pers. pres. hwist occurs in the same volume, p. 126, l. 9, according to Cockayne; but perhaps hwist is here for hwistet, from hwistetan, to cough, which is a related word, but not quite the same thing.] The only sure trace of the verb is in Ælfric's Homilies, i. 86, where we find the strong pt. t. hwōcos = wheezed (misinterpreted by Thorpe, but rightly explained by Cockayne). As ē is the mutation of ō, the Teut. base is hwōs-*, whence also AS. hwisa-ta, a cough, prov. F. hoast, a cough, Du. hoest, G. husten. Teut. base hwōs-* = Idg. ghe-*, as in Skt. hās, to cough; and grade of Idg. QWAS, to cough, as in Irish cas-achdach, W. pas, a cough; cf. Lith. hosi, to cough. See Pose (3). Brugmann, i. § 675. Connexion with Icel. hwōsa, to hiss, is doubtful.

WHELK (1), a mollusc with a spiral shell. (E.) The h is unoriginal, and due to confusion with the word below; the right (etymological) spelling is welk or wilk. Spenser has 'welky pearly' = shelly pearls, pearls in the shell; Virgil's Gnat, l. 105. ME. wilk; spelt wylke, Prompt. Parv.; and in Voc. 642. 6. Pl. welkes, Liber Allus, pp. 179, 244, &c. AS. wilco (8th cent.), Voc. 13. 40; also weluc, weluc, id. 261. 22, 181. 10. + Du. wulck, also spelt welk, willock, wullock (Kranck). Cf. 'inuolucus, wulloc', Corpus Gloss. 1115; prov. E. wulk, wullock. Prob. named from its convoluted shell; cf. Gk. ἐλκ (for ἐλκ-α), a volute; see Helix. And cf. Walk. Der. Hence prob. welk-ed, K. Lear, iv. 6. 71, spelt welk'd, i.e. convoluted, in the first folio; cf. 'welked horns', in Golding's Ovid, pp. 60b, 107b, 122b.

WHELK (2), a small pimple. (E.) The dimin. of Wheal (1), q. v.

WHELM, to overturn, cover over by something that is turned over, overwhelm, submerge. (Scaud.) 'Ocean whelm them all'; Murry Wives, ii. 2. 143. ME. whelmen. to turn over; Chaucer, Troilus, l. 139. 'Whelmyng, a vessel, Sappino, Prompt. Parv.; on which Way cites Palsgrave: 'I whelme an holowe thyng over an other thyng, je mets dessus; Whelme a platter upon it, to save it from flies.' He adds: 'in the E. Anglian dialect, to whelm signifies to turn a tub or other vessel upside down, whether to cover anything with it or not; see Forby.' 'Whelm, to turn upside down, cover over', E. D. D.; which see. The Lowland Sc. form is quheme, whemmlr, or whommlr, to turn upside down; ovir quhemlit = did overturn, occurs in Bellenden's Chron., prol. st. 2 (Jamieson). Jamieson gives Sibbald's opinion (which is correct) that the Lowl. Sc. whemmlr is due to E. whelm, the letters being transposed to make the word easier of utterance; but he afterwards assumes the Lowl. Sc. word as the older form, in order to deduce its etymology from MSwed. hwimla, to swarm (= G. wimmeln), which he explains wrongly. β. The word presents some difficulty; but it is obvious that whelm and overwhelm must be closely related to ME. wheluen (whelven) and overwheluen (overwhelven), which are used in almost precisely the same sense. Wheluen is also spelt hwelven; and he hwelfste at pure sepulchre-dure eunc grete ston = he rolled (or turned) over a great stone at the door of the sepulchre; (O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 51, l. 513. 'And perchance the overwhelme = and perchance overwhelm thee; Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 161. Cf. AS. ā-hwelfan; as in: 'ā-hwelfste Tharoneas cratu', (the sea) overwhelmed Tharoneas's chariots; Exod. xiv. 27. γ. The only difficulty is to explain the final -m; this is due to the fact that whelm, verb, is really formed from a substantive whelm; and the sb. whel-m stands for whelf-m, in which the f was dropped; the suffix -m being substantival, as in doon-m, hloo-m. This appears from MSwed. hlir gives the verb hwalma, to cock hay, derived from hwalm, a hay-cock; and he connects hwalm with hwelfua, to arch over, make into a rowled shape, and hwelf, an arch, a vault. So also Kietz gives Swed. dial. hwalm, a hay-stack, from hwälva (pt. t. hwälvt); cf. Swed. wälva, to cock hay, wälvm, a hay-cock (which have lost the k); hwälva, to arch, hwälft, an arch. Cf. Dan. hwälv, to arch, vault over. Thus the orig. sense of whelm was to arch over, vault, make of a convex form; hence, to upset, overturn, which is now the prevailing idea. δ. We conclude that whelm (for whelf-m*) is from the strong verb appearing in Swed. dial. hwälva (for hwelva*), pt. t. hwälvt, Norw. hwälva (for hwelva*), pt. t. hwälvt, MHG. whelven (pt. t. wälvt), to distend oneself into a convex form, swell out, become convex, answering to the Teut. base HWELF, to become convex. Derivatives are seen in AS. hwelf, adj. convex, sb. a vault (Grein, ii. 118); ā-hwelfan, to overwhelm; be-hwelfan, to vault over (Grein); Icel. hwelf, hölft, a vault, hwälfa, hölfta, to 'whelve' or turn upside down, overwhelm or capsize a ship, hwelfa, to arch, vault, to turn upside down, &c.; mod. G. wölben, to arch over. All from Ildg. whelw; whence also OPruss. po-quelt-tan, kneeling, Gk. κύκλος, bosom, a hollow. See Prellwitz. Der. overwhelm.

WHELP, a puppy, young of the dog or lion. (E.) ME. whelp, Chaucer, C. T. 10805 (l. 491). AS. hwelf, Matt. xv. 27. + Du. welp; Icel. hwelp; Tan. hwälf; Swed. wälp; MSwed. hwälf (lirc); MHG. welf. β. The Teut. types are hwelpoz*, hwälpaz*, m. Root unknown. Der. whelp, vii., J. Caesar, ii. 2. 17.

WHEN, at what time, at which time. (E.) ME. whan, Chaucer, C. T. 5. 169; whanne, Ormulum, 133. AS. hwænne, hwonne; Grein, ii. 115. + MDu. wan (Irishman); Goth. hwan; G. wann; OHG. hwanne. β. Evidently orig. a case of the interrogative pronoun; cf. Goth. hwana, acc. case, of hwan, who; see Who. So also I. quæn-do, when, quæ, who; W. fann, when; Olirish can. Der. when-ever, whenever; and see whence.

WHENNOR, from what place. (E.) ME. whennes (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 12260 (C 335). In which whenn-es, in which the suffix imitates the adverbial -es (as in twi-es, twice, nei-es, of necessity), was substituted for the older form whanne, when wonne in I. aya-mon, l. 16. The suffix -es was orig. a genitive case-ending, as in dag-es, of a day. β. The form whanne is from AS. hwanne, also hwanon, hwanan, whence, Grein, ii. 114. This is closely connected with AS. hwænne, when; the suffix -an being used to express direction, as in AS. sitt-an, from the south. See When. + G. wann, when; allied to wann, when. ¶ Compare hen-ce, similarly formed from ME. henn-es, AS. heon-an, hence; see Hence. Also Thence. Der. whence-so-ever.

WHERE, at which place. (E.) ME. wher, Chaucer, C. T. 4918 (B 498). AS. hwir, hwær, Grein, ii. 116. + Du. waar; Icel. hvar; Dan. hvor; Swed. hvar. + OHG. hwær, whence MHG. wär, wü, G. wo; cf. G. war in war-un, why, lit. about what; Goth. hwar. Evidently allied to AS. hwā, who, and to when. Cf. Lithuan. kur, where? Skt. kar-hi, at what time? Der. where-about, where-about-s, where-as, where-at; whereby, ME. whar-by, Will. of Palerne, 2256; where-for, ME. hwarfor, Ancien Riwe, p. 158, note g; where-in; where-of, ME. hwarof, Ancien Riwe, p. 12, l. 12; where-on, ME. whar-on, Layamon, 15502; where-so-ever; where-to, ME. hwerto, St. Marharete, p. 16, l. 29; where-unto, Cymb. iii. 4. 109; where-upon, K. John, iv. 2. 65; wher-ever, As You Like It, ii. 2. 15; wher-with, ME. hwertwith, Hali Meidenhad, p. 9, l. 19; where-with-al, Kich. II, v. 1. 55. ¶ These compounds were prob. suggested as correlative to the formations from there; see There.

WHERRY, a shallow, light boat. (E.) A wherry, honte, ponto; Levins, ed. 1570. The pl. is wheries in Hakluyt, Voyages, ii. 645. In use on the Thames in particular. Spelt wherry in Lattimer, Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 170. A whery, cymbe, Du Wez, appendix to Palgrave, p. 916, col. 3. Cf. Lowl. Sc. wherry, to whirl, to hurry; prov. E. wherry, dizzy; see Whir. Perhaps named from its lightness. Cf. Icel. hvefr, shifty, crank (said of a ship); Norw. hvær, crank, also swift of motion. See Wharf.

WHET, to sharpen, make keen. (E.) ME. whetten, Prompt. Parv. AS. hwettan, to sharpen, Grein, ii. 118. For hwetfan*; from hwet*, as in AS. hwæt, keen, bold, brave; Ildg. + Du. wettra, to sharpen; cf. OSax. hwæt, sharp, keen; Ildg. hwetfa, to sharpen, to encourage; cf. hwat, bold, active, vigorous; Swed. wättna, to whet; G. wetzen, OHG. hwazim; cf. OHG. hwaz, sharp. β. All from Teut. type hwetaz*, sharp, keen; allied to Skt. chid-ana-m, an inciting. ¶ Not allied to I. cós, a whet-stone, which is related to E. hone and cone. Der. whet, sb.; whett-er; whet-stone, AS. hwet-stān, Alfred, tr. of Orosius, l. iv. c. 13. § 5.

WHETHER, which of two. (E.) 'Whether of the twain,' Matt. xxvii. 21. ME. whether, Chaucer, C. T. 1858 (A 1856). AS. hwæðer, which of two; Grein, ii. 114. + Icel. hwærr (a contracted form); MHG. wæder, OHG. hwædar, adj., which of two; Goth. hwæthar, adj. Formed, with comparative suffix -ther (Ildg. -tero), from the base of who; see Who. Cf. Lith. katras, Gk. κότερος, Skt. katara, which of two. Der. whether, conj., AS. hwæðer, Grein, ii. 115. Also neither, nor.

WHEY, the watery part of milk, separated from the curd. (E.) Lowland Sc. whip; see Jamieson; and see Narc. ME. wely, Prompt. Parv. AS. hwæg; Serun, hwæg, Voc. 46. 28. + MDu. wey; Th. wel. Cf. W. chwig, 'whay fermented with sour herbs'; chwig, adj. fermented, sour. β. In the Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 161, we find various Low G. words for wehy, which are not all related; the related forms are the Holstein wäje and the Dittmarsch hät, heu, which (like Du. huf) are from a weaker grade (hujo*-) of the base (hwajin*-) of AS. hwæg. Der. whry-ey, whry-ish; whry-fay, Macb. v. 3. 17.

WHICH, a relative and interrogative pronoun. (E.) ME. which, formerly used with relation to persons, as in Chaucer, C. T. 16482 (G 1014); spelt quikil in Barbour, Bruce, l. 77. AS. hwile, hwile, hwile, Grein, ii. 121. A contracted form of AS. hwit-ic, of what form, = AS. hwit, allied to hwit, who; and lic, like. See Who and Like. + OSax. hwitik; OFrisic hwelk, hwelk, hwelk; Du. welk; Icel. hwitir, of what kind; Dan. hwit-en, masc., hwit-et, neut.; Swed. hwit-en, hwit-et; G. welcher; OHG. hwelch; Goth. hwileiks. Also Goth. hwileiks; as hwil, instrumental case of hwus, who, and hwil, like. Allied to I. qui-tis, of what sort, lit. 'what-like'; Gk. ἡλικος. Brugmann, ii. § 88. Der. which-ever, whichever-so-ever; also (from I. quälis) quälty, q. v.

WHIFF, a puff of wind or smoke. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 495. ME. wiffe, vapour; Prompt. Parv. An imitative word; cf. puff, pife, pipe. Cf. W. chwiff, a whiff, puff; chwiffio, to puff; chwaff, a gust; Dan. wift, a puff, gust; Lowl. Sc. whed, a fife. Cf. G. piff-paff, to denote a sudden explosive sound; also Icel. hwifa, a puff; AS. hwifa, a breeze; Voc. 175. 21. Der. whiff, verb, whiff-le, q. v.

WHIFFLE, to blow in gusts, veer about as the wind does. (E.) 'But if the winds whiffle about to the south'; Dampier, Discourse of Winds, c. 6 (R.). Whiffle is the frequentative of whiff, to puff, and was specially used of puffing in various directions; hence it came to mean to trifle, to trick (Phillips). See Whiff. Der. whiff-er, Henry V, v. chor. 12, orig. a piper or fifer, as explained by Phillips, who says that 'it is also taken for a piper that plays on a fife in a company of foot-soldiers;' hence it meant one who goes first in a procession; see Whiffle in E. D. D., and Whiffer in Nares, whose account is sufficient.

WHIG, one of a political party. (North E.) First about 1678 (Haydn). 'Wit and fool are consequents of Whig and Tory;' Dryden, Pref. to Absalom and Achitophel (1681). See the full account in Todd's Johnson and Nares. The standard passage on the word is in b. i. of Burnet's Own Times, fully cited by Johnson; it is to the effect that whig is a shortened form of whiggamor, applied to certain Scotchmen who came from the west in the summer to buy corn at Leith; and that the term was given them from a word whiggam, which was employed by those men in driving their horses. A march to Edinburgh made by the Marquis of Argyll and 6,000 men (in 1648) was called 'the whiggamor's inroad,' and afterwards those who opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs. The term had been applied previously (in 1667) to the Scottish Covenanters (Lingard). [There seems no reason to doubt this account, nor does there seem to be any foundation for an assertion made by Woodrow that Whigs were named from whig, sour whey, which is obviously a mere guess.] B. The Glossary to Sir W. Scott's novels has whiggamore, a great whig; also whiggig, jogging rudely, urging forward; Jamieson has whig, to go quickly; whig awa, to move at an easy and steady pace, to jog (Liddesdale); to whig awa with a carl, remarks Sir W. Scott, signifies to drive it briskly on. I suspect that whig should be wig, and that these words are connected with Lowland Sc. wiggle, to wriggle (or rather to keep moving about) and with Efris. wiggen, Norw. wigga, to rock. Cf. Lowl. Sc. wig, to wag, shake, move (E. D. D.); and E. Wag. Der. whiggish, -ish-ly, -some, -ery.

WHILE, a time, space of time. (E.) ME. whil, white, P. lowman, B. whil, 46. AS. awil, sb. a time, Grein, ii. 130. Icel. hvila, only in the special sense of a place of rest, a bed; Dan. hvile, rest; Swed. hvila, rest; G. weile, OHG. hwila; Goth. hwila, a time, season. B. The Teut. types are whila*, f., hwila*, f., a time, rest, pause, time of repose. Prob. allied to L. quies, rest; see Quiet; and to Skt. chir-ā, long-lasting. Idg. Qwila*. Brugmann, i. § 675. Der. while, adv., from some derivative of the sb., prob. from the acc. or dat. hwile; whil-er, Matt. v. 25, ME. whiles, Chaucer, C. T. 35 (in the Harleian MS.), where whiles is the gen. case (m. or n.) used adverbially, as in two-er, twice, now-er, needs, &c. [but note that the AS. genitive was hwile, the sb. being feminine]; hence whil-ot, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2, 16, with added excrement l after s (as in ameng-er, amid-er). Also whil-on, spelt whilone in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2, 1, from AS. hwilun, instr. or dat. pl. of hwil, signifying 'at times.' Also mean-while, see Mean (3); while-ere, Temp. iii. 2, 127. Also whiling-time, the 'waiting a little before dinner,' Spectator, no. 448, Aug. 4, 1712; whence 'to while away time,' prob. with some thought of confusion with while.

WHIM, a sudden fancy, a caprice. (Scand.) 'With a whym-whum Knyt with a trym-tram Upon her brayne-pan;' Skelton, Elinoor Rammyng, 75.—Icel. hvima, to wander with the eyes, as a silly person; Norw. hvima, to whial or flutter about, to trifle, play the fool (Aasen); cf. Swed. dial. hwimmer-kantig, dizzy, giddy in the head; Icel. vim, Norw. kvim (Ross), giddiness, folly. B. This etymology is verified by the derived word whimsy, a whim, Ben Jonson, The Fox, iii. 1, 4, pl. whimsies, Beaumont and Fletcher, Women Pleased, iii. 2, last line; from the allied Norw. kvimsa, Dan. vimse, to skip, whisk, bustle, Swed. dial. kvimsa, to be unsteady, giddy, dizzy. Y. All from a base kwim*, to move briskly. Der. whim-wham, a reduplicated word, as above; whims-ey, above; whimsical, whimsical-ly; whim-ling (Nares). Also whim-bie (2), q.v.

WHIMBREL, a bird, a sort of curlew. (E.) Willoughby says the bird was described to him under this name by Mr. Johnson of Brighal (N. Riding of Yorkshire). See also Swainson, Provincial Bird-names, E. D. S., p. 199. It is easily assented to as standing for whim-br-al; where -b- is excrement after m, -r- is frequentative, -al is the suffix of the agent, and whim- (allied to whine) is imitative. It means the bird that repeats the cry imitated by whim; cf. Lowl. Sc. whimmer, E. whimper and whime, G. whimmer. See Whimper.

WHIMPER, to cry in a low, whining voice. (E.) 'Line in puling and whimpering and heinies of hert;' Sir T. More, p. 90 b. And in Palsgrave. A frequentative form, from whimpe. 'There shall be intractables, that will whimpe and whine;' Latimer, Seven Sermons (March 22, 1549), ed. Arber, p. 77, last line. In both words, the p is excrement, as is so common after m; whimper and whimpe stand for whimmer and whim; cf. Scotch whimmer, to whimper. And further, whim is an imitative word allied to whine, so that Latimer joins the words naturally enough. See Whine.+Low G. wemern, to whimper; G. wimmern. Der. whimper-er.

WHIN (1), gorse, furze. (Scand.) 'Whyennes or heth, bruiere;' Palsgrave. 'Whyne, Sallunca;' Prompt. Parv. 'With thornes, berres, and moni a gyns;' Ywain and Gawain, 159; in Ritson, Mel. Romances, i. 8. Prob. from Norw. hvin, hven, purple melle grass, hvene, bent-grass, coarse grass (Larsen); cf. Norw. hvein, thin and stalky, hveinut, stunted (Ross); hveina, used of grass-stalks and trees that are thin and stand alone (Ross); Swed. hven, bent-grass; Norw. hveinen, adj., said of birch-trees and branches with long thin twigs. Hence also (probably) W. chwyn, weeds; cf. Bret. chouenna (with guttural ch), to weed. Der. whin-bush.

WHIN (2), a kind of hard rock. (E.) G. Douglas has 'ane cald hard quhyn,' Lat. duris cauitibus, Virgil's Fin. iv. 366. ME. quin, hard stone, Cursor Mundi, 7531. [AS. form not recorded.]

WHINE, to utter a plaintive cry. (E.) ME. whinen, said of a horse, Chaucer, C. T. 5568 (D 3861). G. Douglas has 'to whine, Grein, ii. 122. Icel. hvina, to whiz, whir; Dan. hvine, to whistle, to whine; Swed. hvina, to whistle. B. All from the Teut. base hwein-*, hwin-, to make a discordant noise. Cf. Icel. hvina, to wail; Goth. hwinōn, to mourn. And see Whimper. Der. whine, sb., whin-er, whin-ing; also whin-y, Dryden, The Moon-calf, l. 119 from end, which is a sort of frequentative. And see whin-yer.

WHINYARD, a sword. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) Nares, following Minshew, explains whinyard as a hanger, i.e. a kind of sword. Minshew, in 1627, spells it whinneard; but it is usually whinyard, as in the play of Edw. III, i. 2, 83; and in Ram Alley (1611), pr. in Hazlitt's Dodsley, x. 363. Cograve explains MF. braguer as 'a wood knife, hanger, whinyard,' but Skelton has simply whynarde, hanger of Court, 363. From Icel. hvina, to whiz, as an arrow or a gust of wind; Swed. hvin, Dan. hvina, to whistle, shriek; with a suffix which simulated E. yard, a rod. It really arose from the suffix -ard (as in drunk-ard), which is of F. origin. The sense is 'a thing that whizzes through the air,' or that cuts the air with a whirling sound. Also called a whinger, from an imitative form whing, which is a variant of whine; cf. whinger, a whining person; E. D. D. See Whine.

WHIP, to move suddenly and quickly, to flog. (E.) 'I whipt me behind the arras,' Much Ado, i. 3, 63; 'Whips out his rapier,' Hamlet, iv. 1, 10. 'This seems to be the orig. sense, whence the notion of flogging (with a quick sudden stroke) seems to have been evolved.' [The AS. hwyp, a whip, and hwepian, to whip, scourge, are given by Somner, but are unauthorised; the AS. word for 'scourge' being swipe, John, ii. 15.] Another sense of whip is to overlay a cord or rope by binding thin twine or silk thread round it, and this is the only sense of ME. whippen noticed in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Whyppyn, or cloyen threde in sylke, as sylke-womene [do]. Obsolete.' But G. Douglas has 'weypp with bendis,' to translate L. mita comptos in Virgil, Æn. viii. 128. The sb. whippe, a scourge, occurs in Chaucer, 5751, 9545 (D 175, F 1671); it is spelt quippe in Voc. 811, 361; weypp, Voc. 865, 16; weypp, Nominate, ed. Skeat, 194, 886. All from the notion of rapid movement. The word is presumably English, and is preserved in the nearest cognate languages. Cf. Du. whippen, to skip, to hasten, also to give the strappado, formerly 'to shake, to wagge,' Hexham; Du. wip, a moment, a swipe, the strappado, MDu. wippe, 'a whip or a scourge,' Hexham; Low G. whippen, whuppen, to go up and down, as on a see-saw; wips! quickly; Mid. Dan. wip, a jump, whippe, to jump, to whip (Kalkar); Dan. wippe, to see-saw, rock, bob, wips! pop! vipstert, a wag-tail, lit. 'whip-start,' where start = tail; Swed. wippe, to wag, to jerk, or give the strappado; wippgalge, a gibbet, lit. 'whip-gallows, wips! quick! G. wippen, to move up and down, balance, see-saw, rock, to draw up a malefactor at a gibbet, and drop him again, to give the strappado; wippgalgen, a gibbet. B. The Du. whippen, to skip, also to wag, is regarded as being a secondary verb allied to OHG. wifan, to turn round, to reel (G. weifen), Goth. weipan, to crown, wipja, a crown; which may be connected with L. uibrare, to vibrate, swing. Cf. also Goth. bi-waiban, to wind round, which may be compared with Skt. wēp, to tremble, vibrate. Perhaps even the E. form ought to be wip (not whip).

¶ The Gael. cup, a whip, W. chwip, a quick turn, chwipio, to move briskly or nimbly, are borrowed from English, and have taken up different senses of the E. word. Der. whip, sb., as above; whip-cord, -hand, -lash; whipper; whip-er-in, one who keeps the bounds from wandering, and whips them in to the line of chase; whipp-ling, -ing-post; also whip-ster, Oth. v. 2, 244; whip-stock, i.e. whip-handle, Tw. Nt. ii. 3, 28; and in Palsgrave; and see whipp-le-tree. And see wisp, wipe. Cf. whisk, for wisk.

WHIPPLE-TREE, a swing-bar, to which traces are fastened for drawing a carriage, &c. (E.) In Forby's Norfolk Glossary (1830). Spelt wypple-tree in Palsgrave, where it is left unexplained. As in the case of swingle-tree, the word means 'piece of swinging wood,' and is composed of tree in the sense of timber (as in axle-tree, &c.) and the verb whipple, frequentative of whip, to move about quickly, to see-saw. See Whip and Tree; and see Swingletree.

 ¶ M.F. whippeltree, in Chaucer, C. T., A 2923, is the cornel-tree; cf. Mid. Low G. wipel-bom, the cornel-tree, Low G. wepe (Lübben).

WHIRE, to buzz, whirl round with a noise. (Scand.) In Shak. Pericles, iv. 1. 21. M.E. (Northern), whirr, whirr, to rush out, hurl; Wars of Alexander, 1556, 2226. Probably to some extent imitative, like whiz. = Dan. hvirre, to whirl, twirl; Swed. dial. hvirra, to whirl (Rietz). Cf. Icel. hvirfa, to turn round; the frequentative is Whirl. And see Whiz.

WHIRL, to swing rapidly round, to cause to revolve rapidly, to rotate quickly. (Scand.) M.F. whirlen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 80. In Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 24, the earlier version has 'whirl-puff of wind,' and the later version 'whirling of wind.' This word is not a mere extension of whir (which is not found till a later date), but is a contraction for whirlfe, frequentative of the verb equivalent to M.E. wherfen, to turn (Stratmann); and it is of Scand. origin rather than directly from AS. hweorfan. = Icel. hvirfa, to whirl, frequent. of hverfa (v. t. hverf), to turn round; Mid. Dan. hvirle, the same as Dan. hvirle, to whirl; Swed. hvirfla, to whirl; cf. hvarf, a turn; MDu. werwelen, 'to whirl,' Hexham; G. wirbeln, to whirl; also, to warble. β. But the verb is really a denominative one, from the sb. found as M.F. whirl, as in the compounds whirl-bone (Prompt. Parv.), whirl-wind (below); cf. Icel. hvirflind, a whirl, Dan. hvirvel, Mid. Dan. hvirlen, a whirl, a whirlpool, Swed. hvirvel (the same), Du. werfel, a hasp, werfel-wind, whirlwind, G. wirbel, a turning round, OHG. wirbil; Teut. type hvirflaz*, m.; with -mutation of e to i. From Teut. base hwerf*, as in AS. hweorfan, Goth. hwaifan, to turn; see Wharf. Der. whirl-wind, spelt whirle-wynde, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. hvirflind, a whirlwind, Dan. hvirvelind, Swed. hvirvelvind, Mid. Dan. hvirrelvind; whirl-pole, spelt whirl-pole in Palsgrave, and applied to a large fish, from the connotation which it makes. Also whirl-i-gig, spelt whirly-gigges (toy to play with) in Palsgrave; see Gig. Doublet, warble.

WHISK, to sweep round rapidly, to brush, sweep quickly, move quickly. (Scand.) The proper sense is merely 'to brush or sweep,' esp. with a quick motion, then to flourish about as when using a light brush; then (as in our phrases to brush along, to sweep along) to whisk is to move quickly, esp. with a kind of flourish. The h is intrusive, and probably due to confusion with whiz, whirl, &c. It should rather be wisk. 'He winched [winced] still allways, and whisked with his tail'; Gascoigne, Complaint of the Grene Knight, Works, ed. Hazlitt, l. 403. The whyskyng rod; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 1161. 'Whisking his riding-rod'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Noble Gentlemen, Act ii (Gentleman). 'As she whisked it' [her tail]; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 897. Cf. prov. E. wisk, to switch, beat, wisk, to switch, move rapidly (Halliwell). G. Douglas translates Virgil's barchatus (Aen. iv. 301) by 'She wiskis wind.' The verb is from M.E. wisk, sb., a swift stroke, Barbour, Bruce, v. 641. The sk (as in many words) indicates a Scand. origin. = Dan. wiske, to wipe, rub, sponge, from wisk, sb., a wipe, a rubber; Swed. wiska, to wipe, to sponge, also to wag (the tail), from wiska, a whisk. Widegren's Swed. Dict. gives wiska, 'a small broom, whisk,' and the example kundan wiskar med swansen, 'the dog wags his tail,' which precisely shows the sense of the h word in old authors. The sb. appears further in Icel. wisk, a wipe of hay or the like, lit. something to wipe with. + G. wischen, 'to wipe, whisk' (sc), rub, flügel; from the sb. wisk, 'a whisk, clout, wipe, malkin,' id. β. The sb. which thus appears as Icel. and Dan. wisk, Swed. wiska, G. wisk, meant orig. 'a wipe,' and perhaps wisk is a related form to wipe. See Wipe. Cf. also AS. weosan (for wiscan*), to wipe. Der. whisk, sb. (as above, really a more orig. word). Hence whisk-er, sb., from its likeness to a small brush; 'old Nestor put aside his gray beard and brushed her with his whiskers,' Dryden, Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. sc. 2 (R); whisker-ed. Also whisk-y, a kind of light gig, from its being easily whisked along; it occurs in Crabbe, Tales of the Hall, b. viii (K.). ¶ Note MDan. hviske, for Dan. wiske.

WHISKEY, WHISKY, a spirit distilled from grain, &c. (Gaelic). In Johnson's Dict. Spelt whisky-beath in Sinclair's Statistical Acct. of Scotland (1791-9), iii. 525; Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 285. = Gael. uisge-beatha, water of life, whisky; the equivalent of F. eau de vie. We have dropped the latter element, retaining only uisge, water. See Uisgebeath.
WHISPER, to speak very softly, or under the breath. (E.) M.E. whisperen; 'Whisperyn, mussito,' Prompt. Parv. In Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 19, 'whispering' is expressed by whistrende or whistringe. On Northumbrian hwisprian; the L. murmurāntē is glossed by hwispredon in the Rushworth MS., and by hwistredon in the Lindisfarne MS.; Luke, xix. 7. Again, the L. murmur is glossed by hwispunge in the Rushworth MS., and by hwistung in the Lind. MS.; John, vii. 12. We see, then, that hwisprian and hwistrian were parallel forms, and hwistrian is evidently closely allied to AS. hwistlan, to whistle. Whisper and whistle are allied words, both of an imitative character; further, they are frequentatives, from the bases whisp- and whist- respectively; and these are extended from an imitative Teut. root hweis-* (weak grade hwi-*). Cf. weeze, which is likewise imitative; also whiz. + MDu. wisperen, wispelen, to whisper, Hexham; G. wispeln. So also (from the base whisk or hwisk) we have Icel. hviskra, Swed. hviska, Dan. hviske, to whisper. Der. whisper, sb., whisper-er.

WHIST, hush, silence; a game at cards. (1. Scand.; 2. E.) The game was at first called whisk by Taylor the Water-poet in 1630, who is said to be the earliest writer to mention it; see Nares. It was so named from the sweeping up or whisking off the cards from the table; see Whisk. β. But about 1709, whisk was corrupted into whist (Complete Gamester, p. 86); and a new etymology was found for it, viz. that it was so named from the silence requisite to play it attentively. The old verb whisk, to keep silence, also to silence, had whisted for its past tense, but whist for its pp. 'So was the Titaness put down and whist,' i.e. silenced; Spencer, F. Q. vii. 7. 59. 'All the compagnie must be whist,' i.e. silent; Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 67. 'They whisted all'—they all kept silence, Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Aen. ii. 1. M.E. whist, interj., be silent! Wyclif, Judges, xviii. 19 (earlier version), where the later version has Be thou stille, and the Vulgate has tace. It is thus seen to have been orig. an interjection, commanding silence. See Hist and Hush. Cf. L. st! hist! G. st! bst! pst! hist, hush, stop! The orig. intention of the utterance is to represent a slight sound, such as that of something stirring, or the breathing or whispering of some one approaching. Something stirs; listen; be still; Wedgwood. By way of further illustration may be quoted: 'I... made a condescension [gesture] with my hand in manner to have hushed,' i.e. to enjoin silence; Test. of Love, b. ii. ch. vii. 122. ¶ Whisk occurs in Pope, and Epist. to Mrs. Mount (1715), l. 24, and in Thomson's Autumn (1730), l. 524; modern editions have whist.

WHISTLE, to make a shrill sound by forcing the breath through the contracted lips. (E.) M.E. whistlen, F. Ploemman, B. xv. 467. AS. hwistlun, to make a hissing noise (Toller); also found in derivatives; as hwistlere, a whistler, piper, Matt. ix. 23; 'Sibillato, hwistlung,' Voc. 1622, 44; 'Fistula, whistle,' id. 406, 23. A frequentative verb, from a base hwi-, meant to imitate the hissing sound of whistling, and extended from the Teut. base hweis-* (weak grade of hwi-*); see Whisper. + Icel. hvisla, to whisper; hvis, when! to imitate the sound of whistling; Dan. hvisle, to whistle, also to hiss; Swed. hvisla, to whistle. Der. whistle, sb.; whist-er, AS. hwistlere, as above.

WHIT, a thing, a particle, a bit. (E.) The h is in the wrong place; whit stands for wiht = wight, and is the same word as wight, a person. We find 'neuer a whyt!' in Palsgrave, p. 881, col. 1. M.E. wight; a person; also a thing, a bit. 'For she was falle aslepe a little wight' = for she had fallen asleep a little whit; Chaucer, C. T. 4281 (A 4283). 'A lutewhit' = a little bit, for a short time, Ancren Riwle, p. 72, l. 24. AS. whit, (1) a wight, person, (2) a whit, bit; see abundant examples in Grein, ii. 704. The latter sense is particularly conspicuous in awhit = ought, i.e. 'one whit,' and nawhit = naught, i.e. 'no whit.' See further under Wight (1). Der. encht, q.v.; naught, q.v.; not.

WHITE, of the colour of snow, very pale. (E.) M.E. whit (with long o), whyt; pl. white, Chaucer, C. T. 1. 90. AS. hwit; Grein, ii. 122. + Du. wit; Icel. hvíttr; Dan. hvid; Swed. hvit; Goth. hwēits; G. weiss; OHG. hwiz. β. All from Teut. type hweita-, hweitaz, white, shining; further allied to Skt. pṛṛta-, white, pṛṛt, prīt, to shine, to shine. The Skt. pṛṛta is from KWEIT*, to shine, whence also Russ. svetliti, light, bright, svetliti, to shine, give light, Oltman. szewiti, later form szewiciu, I make white, I cleanse. Brugmann, i. § 319; as to the final dental, cf. § 701, note 2. Der. white-ly; white-ness, spelt whytne in Prompt. Parv. Also white, verb, M.E. hwiten, used intransitively, to become white, Ancren Riwle, p. 150, l. 7; whit-en, M.E. whitenen, to make white, Early Eng. Psalter, Ps. l. 9, but properly intransitive, from Icel. hvita, to become white (see note on Waken). Also whit-ing, a fish with delicate white flesh, spelt whytynge in Prompt. Parv.; it also means ground chalk. Also whitish, whitish-ness; white-bait, a fish; white-faced, K. John, ii. 23; white-head; white-tead, spelt whyle lei in Prompt. Parv.; whitelimed, spelt whyltymed, F. Ploemman, B. xv. 111; white-livered, i.e. cowardly, Hen. V. iii. 2. 34; white-wash. Also whit-leather, leather dressed with alum; Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, v. 1; whit-ster, a bleacher, Prompt. Parv.; whit-tawer, a worker in white leather. And see wheat, wheat-ear, Whit-sunday, whitt-le (3). But not whit-low.

WHITHER, to what place. (E.) ME. whider; spelt whidir, Wydlf, Mark, iv. 12, whidir, id. xiv. 14. (Cf. ME. fader for fater, moder for mother.) AS. hwider, hwyder, Grein, ii. 120. † Goth. hwadrē, whither, John, vii. 35. Closely allied to Wether, and formed from the Teut. base hwa-, who, with a compar. suffix allied to Idg. ter-; see Wether. Cf. hither, thither. Der. whitherward, ME. whiderward, Chaucer, C. T. 11814 (F 1510); whither-so-ever.

WHITLOW, a painful swelling on the fingers. (Scand.) Nothing but a careful tracing of the history of the word will explain it; it seems to be an alteration of quick-flaw, i.e. a flaw or flaking off of the skin in the neighbourhood of the quick, or sensitive part of the finger round the nail. The word is properly Northern, and of Scand. origin. It is still preserved in the North E. whickflaw, a whitlow (Jalliwcll). Here whick is the well-known (and very common) Northern form of quick, in the sense of 'alive' and 'quick' part of the finger. This is why the sore was called paronychia. Paronychia, a preternatural swelling or sore, under the root of the nail, in one's finger, a felon or whitlow; † Phillips, ed. 1706. [Der. from Gk. ωπα, for ωπα, beside, and δονα, from δονα, the nail.] And this is also why horses were subject to whitlows; in farriery, it is a disease of the feet, of an inflammatory kind, occurring round the hoof, where an acrid matter is collected (Webster); the hoof of the horse answering to the nail of a man. Cf. 'Quick-scab, a distemper in horses,' Bailey, vol. i. (1735). β. If so, quick was replaced by whit, understood as white; 'some doth say it is a white flau under the nail'; A. Hoarde, Breviary of Hlath, c. 266 (Palmer). Cotgrave explains poil de chat by 'whitlow'; but Palgrave has: 'Whitflaw in ones fyngre, poil de chat'. The spelling whitflow occurs repeatedly in Holland's tr. of Pliny (see the index), and is once spelt white-flaw, showing that the former syllable was already confused with the adj. white. 'Whitflawes about the root of the nails,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 4. § 1; &c., &c. 'Paronychia . . . by the vulgar people amongst us it is generally called a whitflaw'; Wiseman, Surgery, b. i. c. 11 (R.). Both parts of the word are properly Scandinavian. — Icel. kviða, 'the quick under the nail or under a horse's hoof'; otherwise kviða, 'the flesh under the nails, and in animals under the hoofs'; and Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach, also a flake, Icel. flagna, 'to flake off, as skin or rough.' See Quick and Flaw; and see White. ¶ Whick easily turned to whit, which was naturally interpreted as white (from the words whit-law, whitster), the more so as the swelling is often of a white colour; the true sense of the word was thus lost, and a whitlow was applied to any similar sore on the finger, whether near the quick or not. Low may have been suggested by prov. E. low, 'fire'; with the idea of 'inflammation'.

WHITSUNDAY, the seventh Sunday after Easter, commemorating the day of Pentecost. (F.) Lit. white Sunday, as will appear. The word is old. In the Ancien Riwe, p. 412, l. 13, we have mention of hwitesmedei immediately after a mention of holi þursdei. Again, we find: 'þe holi goste, þe þu on hwite suna dei sendest' = the Holy Ghost, whom thou didst send on Whit-sunday; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 209, l. 16. In Layamon, l. 31524, we already have mention of hwite suna tide (= whit-e sun-e tide, in six syllables), i.e. Whit-sundae, which in the later version appears in the form Whitson-tide, showing that even at that early period the word White was beginning to be confused with wit; hence the spelling whitsundai in Wycliffe's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 158, 159, &c., is not at all surprising. In the same, p. 161, we already find whitson-weke, i.e. Whitson week. In the Cursor Mundi, the word 'white' is written wit (where the i = u); and, accordingly, we there find the form wit sundai, 18914. Cf. Wit-sonetide, S. Legendary, p. 115, l. 297. AS. hwita Sunnan-dag, only in the dat. case hwitan sunnan dag, A. S. Chron. an. 1067. However, the AS. name is certified, beyond all question, by the fact that it was early transplanted into the Icelandic language, and appears there as hwitasunn-dag. In Icelandic we also find hwita-daga, lit. 'white days,' as a name for Whitson week, which was also called hwitadaga-vika = whitedays week, and hwitasunnadaga-vika = Whit-sunday's week. β. All these names are unmistakable, and it is also tolerably certain that the E. name White Sunday is not older than the Norman conquest; for, before that time, the name was always Pentecost (see Pentecost). We are therefore quite sure that, for some reason or other, the name Pentecost was then exchanged for that of White Sunday, which came into common use, and was early corrupted into Wit-Sunday, proving that white was soon misunderstood, and was wrongly supposed to refer to the wit or wisdom conferred by the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, on which theme it was easy for the preacher (to whom etymology was no object) to expatiate. Nevertheless, the true spelling has been preserved to this day, not only in English and in modern Icelandic, but in the very plainly marked modern Norwegian dialects, wherein it is called Kvitsundag, whilst Whitson-week is called Kvitsunn-vika, obviously from kvit, white (Aasen). See, therefore, White and Sunday. β. But when we come to consider why this name was given to the day, room is at last opened for conjecture. Perhaps the best explanation is Mr. Vigfusson's, in the Icel. Dict., who very pertinently remarks that even Bingham gives no reference whatever to Icelandic writers, though, from the nature of the case, they know most about it, the word having been borrowed by Icelandic whilst it was still but new to English. He says: 'The great festivals, Yule, Easter, and Pentecost, but esp. the two latter, were the great seasons for christening: in the Roman Catholic church especially Easter, whence in Roman usage the Sunday after Easter was called Dominica in Albis; but in the Northern churches, perhaps owing to the cold weather at Easter-time, Pentecost, as the birth-day of the church, seems to have been esp. appointed for christening and for ordination; hence the following week was called the Holy Week (Helga Vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments, &c. See the whole passage, and the authorities cited. The W. suigwyn, Whitsuntide, is translated from English; cf. W. suil, sun, and gwyn, white. Hexham's MDu. Dict. has: 'Whitten Denderdag, Holy Thursday; Whitten Sondagh, Palme Sunday; White-brodt, white bread'; ed. 1658. Kalkar's Mid. Dan. Dict. has: 'Hvidesøndag, (1) the first Sunday after Easter; (2) the first Sunday in Lent; from hvid, white, and søndag, Sunday. It is clear that white Sunday was a name not confined to the day of Pentecost. ¶ It deserves to be recorded, as a specimen of English popular etymology, that many still prefer to consider AS. hwita sunnan (occurring in the A. S. Chronicle) as a corruption of the mod. G. pfingsten (which is acknowledged to be from the Gk. πεντηκοστή). Seeing that pfingsten is a modern form, and is an old dative case turned into a nominative, the MIIG. word being pfingeste, we are asked to believe that pfingeste became hwita su, and that sunnan was afterwards luckily added! Comment is needless. Der. Whitsun-week, a shortened form for Whitsunday's week (as shown by Icel. hwitasunnadaga-vika); and similarly, Whitsun-tide. Also Whit-Monday, Whit-Tuesday, names coined to match Whit-Sunday; formerly called Monday in Whitsun-week, &c.; Wycliffe, Works, ii. 161. ¶ Cf. Palmon, Lowson, as contractions of Palmsunday, Lowsonday. See Oxford Dict.

WHITTLE (1), to pare or cut with a knife. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. A mere derivative from the sb. whittle, a knife, Timon, v. 1. 183. And whittle is the same as ME. hwitel, thwitel, a knife, Chaucer, C. T. 3931 (A 3933). Lit. 'a cutter'; formed, with suffix -el of the agent, from hwit, weak grade of AS. hwitan, to whittle, to cut, to pare; whence the verb which is spelt by Palgrave both thwyte and whyte. See Rom. of the Rose, l. 933. ¶ The alleged AS. hwitel, a knife, is a mere myth; see Whittle (3).

WHITTLE (2), to sharpen. (E.) Used as a slang term; 'well whittled and thoroughly drunk'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 387 (R.). 'Thoroughly whittled' = thoroughly drunk; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 22. The lit. sense is, sharpened like a whittle or knife; see Whittle (1). It may have been confused with whet, the frequentative of which, however, could only have been whetle, and does not occur.

WHITTLE (3), a blanket. (E.) ME. whitel, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 76. AS. hwitel, a blanket, Gen. ix. 23. I. i. 'a small white thing' = AS. hwit, white. See White. † Icel. hwitell, a whittle, from kvit, white; Norweg. kwitel, from kvit, white (Aasen). Cf. E. blank-et, from F. blanc, white. ¶ Somner gave 'knife' as one sense of AS. hwitel; he was clearly thinking of whittle (1), which happens to be a corruption of thwitel; see Whittle (1). His mistake has been carefully preserved in many dictionaries.

WHIZ, to make a hissing sound. (E.) 'The woods do whiz'; Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii. l. 534. An imitative word, allied to Whistle, q.v. Cf. Icel. hwissa, to hiss, to run with a hissing sound, said, e.g., of a stream; and cf. E. whis-per, hiss, whir.

WHO, an interrogative and relative pronoun. (E.) 'Formerly who, what, which, were not relative, but interrogative pronouns; which, whose, whom occur as relatives [misprinted interrogatives] as early as the end of the twelfth century, but who not until the 14th century, and was not in common use before the 16th century'; Morris, Hist. Outlines of E. Accidence, § 188. AS. hwā, who (interrogatively), masc. and fem.; hwær, neuter; gen. hwæs, for all genders; dat. hwām, hwæm, for all genders; acc. masc. hwone, fem. hwone, neut. hwæt; instrumental hwī, hwū (mod. E. why); Grein, ii. 113; Sweet, A. S. Reader. We now have who = AS. hwī; what = hwæt; whose = hwæs, with a lengthening of the vowel, to agree with the vowel of other cases (seldom used in the neuter, though there is nothing against it); whom = dat. hwām, but also used for the accusative, the old acc. hwone being lost; why = inst. hwī; see Why. † Du. wie, who; wat, WICK (3), WICH, a creek, bay. (Scand.) In some place-names, as in Green-wich, &c. = Icel. vik, a small creek, inlet, bay; Dialect. wik*. From wik-ja, to recede; see Weak. ¶ It is not easy, in all cases, to distinguish between this and the word above. RAY, in his Account of Salt-making (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 15, p. 20, mentions Nant-wick, North-wick, Middle-wick, Droit-wick; here wick = brine-pit, apparently a peculiar use of Icel. wik above. See Wych, a salt-work, in Nares.

WICKED, evil, bad, sinful. (E.) The word wicked was orig. a past participle, with the sense 'rendered evil', formed as if from a verb wicken*, to make evil, from the obsolete adj. wikke (disyllabic), evil, once common. Again, the adj. wikke is allied to AS. wicca, magic, a wizard [wicca, fem., a witch]. Hence the adj. wikke is allied to Weak, q.v. From the weak grade wic-*, of AS. wican (Icel. wika, G. wicken), to yield, give way. And see Witoh. We also find ME. wicked, as in the adv. wicked-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 8599 (E 723); spelt wickedde, def. form of wicked, Layamon, later text, 14983, where it takes the place of swifelle (deceitful) in the earlier text. This is prob. the earliest instance of the word. β. The shorter form wikke is common; it occurs in Havelok, 688; P. Plowman, B. v. 229; Chaucer, C. T. 1089, 5448, 15429 (A 1087, B 1028, 4613); cf. wicce* rred, i.e. wicked counsel, A. S. Chron. an. 1140; as if for wicce-ig*, an adj. from wicca, a wizard. It became obsolete in the 15th century as an adj., but the fem. sb. is still in use in the form wick. Der. wicked-ly; wicked-ness, ME. wikkednesse, P. Plowm. B. v. 220.

WICKER, made of twigs. (Scand.) 'A wicker bottle,' Oth. ii. 3. 152 (folios, twiggen bottle). Wicker is properly a sb., meaning a pliant twig. ME. wiker, wikir; Wykyr*, to make wythe baskettyes, or to bynde wythe thynghys [i.e. to make baskets with, or bind things with], Vimen, vituligo?, Prompt. Parv. 'Wycker, osier'; Palgrave. The AS. form does not appear; and perhaps F. wicker may have been borrowed from Scandinavian. We find MSwed. wika, to bend, whence weck, a fold, wickla, to fold, wrap round (Ihre); also Swed. dial. vekar, vekker, wikker (which is our very word), various names for the sweet bay-leaved willow, Salix pentandra, lit. 'the bender, from veka, to bend, to soften, allied to Swed. wika, to fold, to double, to plait (Widgren). Wicker-worl means, accordingly, 'plaited work,' esp. such as is made with pliant twigs, according to the common usage of the word. The word is closely allied, in the same way, to Dan. weg, pliant [with g for k, as usual in Danish], in connexion with which Wedgwood cites, from various Danish dialects, vøge, vøgger, væge, a pliant rod, a withy (lit. a wicker), vøgrekurv, vøgrekurv, a wicker-basket, væger, vægger, a willow (=Swed. dial. vekar above); cf. Skt. vig-urvi, a uet. Cf. Weak, Wick (1), Wick (2). And see Witoh-elm.

WICKET, a small gate. (F.—Teut.) ME. wiket, P. Plowman, B. v. 611; Rom. of the Rose, 528.—AF. wiket, Tristan, ed. Michel, ii. 101; cf. Supp. to Godefroy, s.v. guichet; he also has guichet, and Littré's quotations give us the forms wicket and wiquet; mod. F. guichet, a wicket. Littré also cites the Walloon wicket, Norman wiquet, Prov. guisquet, all of them deduced from the common form wisket. It is supposed that the s is radical; and it has been derived from OHG. wisk-en, to wipe, to wash; and intr., to move quickly, to slip aside. Hence, perhaps, it meant a postern-door, to slip out at. It was esp. used of a small door easily opened and shut. Cf. MDu. wicket, a wicket, Hexham; also wincket, 'a wicket,' id.; prob. from OF. Cf. EFries. wischen, to wipe, also to move quickly; Norw. wiska (the same); Swed. dial. wiska, to throw, to swing; also Norw. wiskjen, light and quick (Ross). See Whisk. Körtling, § 10171. B. In the game of cricket, the wicket was at first (A. D. 1700) lit. 'a small gate,' being 2 feet wide by 1 foot high; but the shape has so greatly altered that there is no longer any resemblance. See the diagrams in the Eng. Cyclop. div. Arts and Sciences, Supplement; v. v. Cricket.

WIDE, broad, far extended. (E.) ME. wid (with long i); pl. wide (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 28. AS. wid, wide; Grein, ii. 690. +Du. wid; Icel. viðr; Swed. and Dan. vid; G. weit, OHG. wit. β. All from Teut. type widuz*, wide; perhaps for wi-foz*, orig. a pp. from WEIF*; cf. Skt. vi-taram, farther (Macdonell). Der. wide-ly, -ness; wid-en, verb, Cor. f. 4. 44, with each of ME. widen, Prompt. Parv., imperative wide, Palladius on Husbandry, iii. 923, though the mod. suffix -en is not the same as the ending of the ME. infin. widen (see this explained under Waken). Also wid-th, not an old word, used in Drayton's Battle of Agincourt, st. 142, as equivalent to the older sb. wideness; formed by analogy with length, bread-th, &c.; cf. Icel. vid, width.

WIDGEON, the name of a kind of duck. (F.—L.) 'A wigion, bird, glaucous,' Levins, ed. 1570. Spelt wigion, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Health, b. ii. ch. 13. The suffix and form of the word show that it is certainly French; and it is clear that the E. word has preserved an older form (presumably wigeon*) than can be found in French. Littré gives the three forms vigeon, vingeon, gingeon, as names of the 'whistling duck' (canard siffleur). Prob. from L. uipionem, acc. of uipio, used by Pliny, bk. x. c. 49, to mean a kind of small crane. Cf. Ital. uipione, a small crane (Torriano). There is a by-form bibio; probably bibio, uipio are of imitative origin, like L. pipto. (For the letter-changes, cf. E. pigeon from L. acc. pipiōnem.)

WIDOW, a woman whose husband is dead. (E.) ME. widewe, widwe, Chaucer, C. T. 255, 1173 (A 253, 1171). AS. widwe, wedwede; also widwe, widwede, widwe, Grein, ii. 692. +Du. weduw; G. wittwe, OHG. witwa, witewun, witwun; Goth. widawū, widawō. β. The Teut. types are widawō*, widawō*, fem. sb., a widow; Idg. types widhawā*, widhawā*. Further cognate with L. uidua, fem. of uiduus, deprived of, bereft of (which gave rise to Ital. vedova, Span. viuda, F. veuve, a widow); also with Irish feadh, Orlish feadh, W. gweddus, Russ. widwa, Skt. widhawā, a widow. γ. Here the L. d, as in other cases, answers to Skt. dh, and the root is widh*, to lack, want, hence, to be bereft of. This root is preserved in the Skt. windh, to lack (not in Benfey), for which see the St. Petersburg Dict. vol. vi. 1070. Brugmann, ii. § 64. Cf. also Gk. hidos (for hido-e-for*), a bachelor, one who is unmarried. Der. widow, verb, Cor. v. 6. 153; widow-hood, ME. widewehood, Holli Meidenhad, p. 23, l. 20; widow-er, ME. widewer, widwer, P. Plowman, A. 10. 194, B. 9. 174, formed by adding -er; cf. G. wittwer.

WIELD, to manage, to use. (E.) ME. welden, to govern, also to have power over, to possess, Wyclif, Matt. v. 4. Luke, xi. 21, xviii. 18. AS. geweldan, geueldan, to have power over, Gen. iii. 16; Mark, v. 4. This is a weak verb, answering to ME. wielden, and mod. E. wield, which are also weak verbs; all are derivatives from the strong verb waldan (pt. t. wald, pp. walden), to have power over, govern, rule, possess. +Icel. valda, to govern (pt. t. oll); G. walten, OHG. waltan, to dispose, manage, rule; Goth. waldan, to govern. β. The Icel. pt. t. oll is for wulfi* (Noreen, § 215), and the Idg. base was walt*, whence Celtic wala-*, Orlish faith, dominion (Stokes-Fick, 264). Hence it is supposed that Russ. vladeti(e), to reign, rule, possess, make use of, Lithuan. waldyti, to rule, govern, possess, are early loans from Teutonic. But W. gwlad, a region, is a cognate word. Some connect it with the WAL*, to be strong; cf. L. valere, to be strong. See Valiant. Der. wield-er, un-wield-y.

WIFE, a woman, a married woman. (E.) ME. wif (with long i), wyf, Chaucer, C. T. 447, 1173 (A 445, 1171); pl. wyues (wyves), id. 234. AS. wif, a woman, wife, remarkable as being a neuter sb., with pl. wif like the singular. +Du. wif, woman, wife, fem.; Icel. wif, neut. a woman; only used in poetry; Dan. wif, fem.; G. weib, neut. a woman; OHG. wip. β. The Teut. type is widom*, n. The form of the root is weib* = Idg. weip*; in accordance with which we find OHG. weibōn, weipōn, to waver, be irresolute, L. wibrare, to quiver, Skt. wep, to tremble; but the real origin of the word remains obscure. γ. It cannot be allied to AS. wefan, to weave. Der. wife-like, Cymb. iii. 2. 8, fish-wife, i.e. fish-woman; mid-wife, q.v.; house-wife (see House); wive, v., AS. wifan, Luke, xx. 34. Also wo-man, q.v.

WIG, a peruke. (Du.—F.—Ital.—L.) Wig occurs frequently in Pope; Moral Essays, iii. 65, 295, &c., and is merely a shortened form of periwig, which is much older, and occurs in Shakespeare. Cf. bus for omnibus. See further under Periwig and Peruke. Der. wig-ed.

WIGHT (1), a person, creature. (E.) ME. wigt, wight, Chaucer, C. T. 848 (A 846). AS. wiht (very common), a creature, animal, person, thing; also spelt wuht, wyht, and used both as fem. and neut.; Grein, ii. 703. +Du. wicht, a child; Westphalian wicht, a girl; Icel. vættir, a wight; vætta, a whit; Dan. vætte, an elf; G. wicht; Goth. wauhts, fem., wauht, neut., a whit, a thing. β. It is probable that the fem. and neut. sbs. were orig. distinct, but they were early confused. The Teut. base weh-l-* may perhaps be connected with AS. weg-an, to move; if so, it may have meant a moving object; orig. 'a thing carried' (L. uectum); or (in the imagination of the spectator), an elf or demon. Cf. the Celtic type wehā*, f., a movement, a course, a time; as in Irish feadh, Orlish fecht, a course, turn, time, W. gwaiht (the same); Stokes-Fick, p. 266. Whit is nothing but another spelling of wight. Doublet, whit.

WIGHT (2), nimble, active, strong. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight'; Spenser, Shep. Cal. March, gr. ME. wight, wigt, valiant, P. Plowman, B. ix. 21; Layamon, 20588.—Icel. vigr, in fighting condition, serviceable for war; the final t seems to have been caught up from the neut. vigt, which was used in certain phrases; 'þeir drápu karla þá er vigt var at'—they smote the men that might be slain, i.e. the men who were serviceable for war; referring to the rule not to slay women, children, or helpless men. See Icel. Dict. For similar instances of final t from Icelandic, see Want, Thwart. The same word as Swed. vig, nimble, agile, active (whence vigt, nimble), allied to AS. wigle, warlike. β. From the sb. which appears as Icel. vig, AS. wig, war. The Icel. vig, war, is derived from Icel. vaga, to fight, smite (quite distinct from væga, to move, weigh), allied to Goth. weigan, weihan (pt. t. waip, pp. wigans), to fight, strive, contend.—Teut. base WEIII, to fight; Fick, iii. 303. Allied to L. vincere, to fight, conquer; see Victor. Also to Olrik's fish-in, I fight, Lith. wik-rus, active, wight, wēhā, strength, Oslav. věhu, strength, Russ. wēk, life.

WIGWAM, an Indian hut or cabin. (N. American Indian.) In books relating to N. America. 'They built a long wigwam'; 'I. Ma-ther, Remarkable Providences (1684); repr. by Oflor, p. 31. In Eliot's Indian Grammar, 1666, p. 11, Eliot gives the pronominal forms of the Massachusetts word for 'house' as follows: 'Week, his house; Weekon, their house; wekhit, in his house, wekwomut, in his [read their] house. Against wekwomut he has a note—hence we corrupt this word wigwam.'—J. Platt (in N. and Q., 9 S. x. 446). S. T. Rand, in his Dict. of Micmac (a language of the Algonkin family) has: 'wigwom, a house.' Cuq gives Algonkin mikwam, also wikwam, a house (pp. 221, 438).

WILD, self-willed, violent, untamed, uncivilised, savage, desert. (E.) In Harbours of Bruce, we find will of red = will of rede or counsel, at a loss what to do, i. 248, iii. 494, xiii. 478; will of wane = will of weening or thought, at a loss, i. 323, ii. 471, vii. 225. The form will, here used as an adj., is simply due to the fact that the Icel. form for 'wild' is willr, which stands for wilfr* by the assimilation so common in Icelandic. By themselves, these passages would not by any means prove any connexion between wild and will; nevertheless, the connexion is real, as appears from a consideration of the words cognate with wild. (See further below.) ME. wilde, rarely wielde, though we find 'a wielde olyue-tre' in Wyclif, Rom. xi. 17; spelt wilde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 57, l. 1322. AS. wilde (Toller). Grein gives the examples: se wilde fugel = the wild bird; wilde deor = wild deer or animals. +Du. wild, proud, savage; Icel. willr (for wilfr*), wild; also astray, bewildered, confused; Dan. and Swed. wild; G. wild, OHG. wild; Goth. willtheis, wild, uncultivated, Mark. i. 6; Rom. xi. 17. β. All from Teut. type welthjoz*, astray, wild; the Goth. form will-theis is important, because the Goth. -th- answers to L. -t-, used as a suffix with pp. force (cf. L. rectus, right, orig. a pp. form). The orig. sense is perhaps indicated by the Icel. willr and by the common E. use of the word, viz. 'actuated by will'; to act wildly is to act willfully. Cf. the Celtic type wel-tos*, as in W. gwyllt, wild; Stokes-Fick, p. 277. Perhaps from WEL-*, to will, to wish. See WILL (1). Cf. W. gwylltys, the will. Others connect Goth. willtheis with Russ. will-iat (e), to run hither and thither. Der. wild, sb., Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 41; ME. wilde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 553, l. 11539; wild-ly; wild-ness, spelt wyldness in the Prompt. Parv.; wild-fire, ME. wylde fur, Rob. of Glouc. p. 410, l. 8485; wild-ing, a wild or crab-apple, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 17. Also be-wild-er, q.v.; wild-er-ness, q.v.

WILDERNESS, a wild or waste place. (E.) ME. wilder-ness, Ancr. Riwle, p. 158, l. 18. Wilderne first appears in Layamon, 20335; and stands for wildern-ness. It is formed by adding the ME. suffix -ness to the shorter word wildern, which was used in the same sense. Thus, in the Ancr. Riwle, p. 160, l. 7, one MS. has wilderne in place of wildernesse. So also in Layamon, l. 1238: 'þar is wode, þar is water, þar is wilderne muel'—there is wood, there is water, there is a great desert. This ME. wilderne, a desert, is formed with the adj. suffix -en from the AS. sb. wilder, wildor, a wild animal (Grein), a neuter sb. answering to Teut. type wilthos*, allied to wild (Teut. welthjoz*). See SICVERS, § 289. + MDu. wildernisse. And see be-wilder.

WILE, a trick, a sly artifice. (E.) ME. wile (disyllabic), Chaucer, 3403. AS. wil, a wile, A. S. Chron. an. 1128. This AS. wil is late; it prob. represents AF. wile*, answering to OF. guile, guile; see GUILE. Modern E. wile is rather a shortened form of AS. wigol, 'divination', in Napier (see the note on p. 159, l. 165). Cf. His [the devil's] wildes, deceits, Ancr. Riwle, p. 300. The AS. wilung (for wiglung*), divination, occurs in the Kentish Glosses, 554. Divination was regarded as heathen, and a deceit of the devil. The verb is AS. wigian, to divine; cf. MDu. wigelen (Hexham), Du. wigelen, wigelen, to divine, practise augury; whence OF. guiler. A primary form occurs in AS. wig, a sanctuary, allied to Goth. wihs, holy. Cf. L. uictima. Der. wil-y, ME. wil, wely, Cursor Mundi, 11807; wil-i-ness. Doublet, guile; whence be-guile. ¶ Note the spelling wyhl in the Play of Mary Magdalen, l. 277 (15th c.).

WILFUL, obstinate, self-willed. (E.) ME. wilful, Life of Becket, ed. Black, l. 1300 (Stratmann). Formed with suffix -ful (=full) from AS. wil, will; see WILL (2). Der. wilful-ly, ME. wilfulliche, in the sense 'willingly'. O. Eng. Homilies, i. 279, l. 8; wilful-ness, ME. wilfulness, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 73.

WILL (1), to desire, be willing. (E.) ME. willen, infin.; pres. t. wol, Chaucer, C. T. 42; pt. t. wolde (whence mod. E. would), id. 257. AS. willan, willan, Grein, ii. 708. Pres. sing. 1 and 3 p. wille, wyle (whence ME. wil, wol, wille, wyle; 2 p. wilt; pl. willað, wylð; pt. t. wolde, 2 p. woldes, pl. woldan, woldon, or woldun, + Du. willen; Icel. wilja, pt. t. wilda; Dan. wille; Swed. wilja; G. wollen, pr. t. will, pt. t. wollte; Goth. wiljan, pt. t. wilda. Teut. type weljan*. + Lithuan. weliti; L. uolle, pr. t. uolo, pt. t. uolui; Skt. yr, to choose, select, prefer. β. All from WEL*, to choose; whence also G. wahl, choice, E. well, adv., well, sb., &c. The Goth. waljan, to choose, is a causal form, from wöl*, and grade of WEL*. Der. will-ing, orig. a pres. part.; will-ing-ly; will-ing-ness. Also will (2), q.v. Also will-y will-y, answering either to will I, will II, i.e. whether I will or whether I will (will not), or to will he, will he, i.e. whether he will or whether he will (will not), as in Hamlet, v. 1. 18; we also find will we, will we, Udall, on 1 St. John, chap. 2; will you, will you, Tam. Shrew, ii. 1. 273; cf. AS. willan (short for we willan), not to wish, Grein, ii. 296, cognate with L. nolle (short for ne uelle); and see HOBNOB. From the same root are well (1), will-ful, weal, will, vol-unt-ar-y, vol-unt-n-ous.

WILL (2), sb., desire, wish. (E.) ME. will, Wyclif, Luke, ii. 14. AS. will, will, Grein, ii. 706. — AS. willan, to wish; to wish; see WILL (1). + Du. wil; Icel. wilt; Dan. wilje; Swed. vilja; G. wille; Goth. wilja. Teut. type weljan*, m. + Russ. wolia. Cf. L. uoluntas. Der. will-ful, q.v.

WILLOW, a tree, with plant branches. (E.) ME. wilow, wilow, Chaucer, C. T. 2924. AS. welig; 'Salix, welig'; Voc. 269. 36. + Du. wilg; MDu. wilge (Hexham); Low G. wilge (another Low G. name is wichel); MHG. wilge; Olow G. wilga. β. The Low G. wichel is clearly allied to E. wicker and to AS. wiccan, to give way, bend; the tree being named from the pliancy of its boughs. Perhaps the name wilow has a similar origin, as prov. E. willy not only means a willow, but also a wicker-basket, like the weede or fish-basket of which an illustration is given in Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 316. The AS. welig may be from the WEL*, to turn, wind, roll, appearing in G. welle, a wave (lit. that which rolls), and in Gk. ἐλ-ίσσω, as the willow-twigs can be wound to form baskets; cf. Gk. ἐλ-ίσσω, a wicker-basket. It may therefore have meant 'pliant'. See HELIX. γ. A much commoner name for the tree in AS. is wibig, mod. E. witky, with a like sense. See WITKY. And cf. WICKER.

WIMBERRY, the same as Winberry, q.v.

WIMBLE (1), a gimlet, an instrument for boring holes. (E.?) ME. wimbl, spelt wymbyl in the Prompt. Parv., where we also find the verb wymbylen, or wymbylen, to bore. 'A Frensch wymble', Palladius, xi. 85; spelt wymbyl, Nominal, ed. Skeat, 517. Of E. or Low G. origin; cf. MDu. wemelen, 'to peerce with a wimble', from weme, 'a wimble', Hexham; Low G. wemel, wemmel, a wimble, whence wemelen, to bore (Lübber). Also Dan. wimmel, an augur, tool for boring; borrowed from Low G. Apparently from a Teut. base wem-*, to turn; see WIMBLE (2). Cf. Shroph. wim-wam, a turn-stile. Der. gimlet.

WIMBLE (2), active, nimble. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight'; Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. Cf. North E. wheamow, nimble (Ray). The true sense is full of motion, skipping about. Spenser perhaps picked up the word in the North of England. The b (as often after m) is excrement, and due to stress. — Swed. wimmel, in comp. wimmelkattig, giddy, whimsical; Swed. vimmla, to be giddy or skittish; cf. Swed. dial, vimmla, the same, whence vimmrig, skittish, said of horses. The verbs vimmla, vimmla, are frequentatives of Swed. dial, vim, to be giddy, allied to Icel. vim, giddiness, from wim*, by-form of wimik*; see WHIM. So also Dan. vimse, to skip about, vim, brisk, quick. + Du. wemelen, to move about, or 'to remove often', Hexham; a frequentative verb from a Teut. base wem-*, perhaps meaning to turn. See WIMBLE (1). Cf. MG. wimmen, to stir oneself quickly (Schade).

WIMPLE, a covering for the neck. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 22; hence wimpled, id. i. 1. 2; Shak. L. L. l. iii. 181. ME. wimpel, Chaucer, C. T. 151; Rob. of Glouc. p. 338, l. 694; hence wympled, Chaucer, C. T. 472 (A 470). AS. winpel, the same. 'Ricimur, winpel, vel ori', Voc. 107. 37. 'Anahol, winpel', id. 125. 8. + Du. wimpel, a streamer, a pendant; Icel. winpill; Dan. and Swed. wimpel, a pennon, pendant, streamer; G. winpel, a pennon (whence F. gimpel, E. gimp). β. The AS. win-pel was doubtless a compound; prob. for wind-pel*, where wind-* is from windan, to wind; and perhaps -pel is for AS. pell, pell (Latin pallium), a covering. Cf. OHG. wim-pal, a summer garment, head-dress, pennon. And see GIMP.

WIN, to gain by labour or contest, earn, obtain. (E.) The orig. sense was to fight, struggle; hence to struggle for, gain by struggling. ME. winnen, pt. t. wan, won, Chaucer, C. T. 444 (A 442); pp. wonnen, id. 879 (A 877). AS. winnan, to fight, labour, endure, suffer; pt. t. wann, pp. wunnen, Grein, ii. 715. + Du. winnen, pt. t. won, pp. gewonnen; Icel. vinna, pt. t. wann, pp. unninn, to work, toil, win; Dan. vinde (for vinne); Swed. vinna; G. gewinnen, OHG. winnan, to fight, strive, earn, suffer; Goth. winnan, pt. t. wann, pp. wunna, to suffer. β. All from Teut. type wennan* (pt. t. wam*), to work, suffer, strive. — WEN*, to desire, hence to strive for; whence Skt. van, to ask, beg for, also to honour, L. Ven-us, desire, love, nen-er-iri, to honour; W. gwén, a smile. Der. winu-er, winning; also win-some, q. v. From the same root are wagan, wen, wen-er, win-sh; also wen-er-eal, wen-er-date.

WINBERRY, WIMBERRY, a whortleberry. (F.) Whortleberries are called, in some parts, winberries or winberries. The latter form, in Halliwell, is the more correct. ME. winberis, grapes, Cursor Mundi, 4468. AS. win-berle, win-berige, a grape; lit. a wineberry, Matt. vii. 16; Luke, vi. 44. See Wine and Berry.

WINE, WINCH, to shrink or start back. (F.—MHG.) ME. winchen, winchen, winchen. 'It is the wone of wil to wynde and to kyke'—it is the wone of Will (wiffulness) to wine and to kick, P. Plowman, C. v. 22. 'Wynce, Calcitro.' Prompt. Parv. Spelt wynche, Allit. Mort. Arture, 2104.—OK. wencir*, not found, but necessarily the older form of OF. guincir (Godefroy); (note AF. guincer, Toynbee, x. 96, to escape); North F. variant of OF. guencher, to flinch, wine (Godefroy), ME. guinchir, 'to wrigle, writh, winche a toe-side' [i.e. on the one side, aside]; Cot. Roquefort gives guincher, guinchir, to wine; also guencher, guencher, guencher, the same; Burguy gives gancher, guencher, guencher—OSax. wunikan; cf. MHG. wenken, wenchen, to wine, start aside; cf. also wanken, OHG. wankon, weak verb, the same. Teut. type wankjan*—, a causal form.—Teut. wank*, 2nd grade of wenkan*—, as in MHG. winken, to move aside, to nod, the same as G. winken, to nod; cognate with E. Wink, q. v. Wince is, in fact, merely the causal verb formed from wink. Cf. G. wanken, to totter, waver, stir, budge, flinch, shrink back.

WINCH, the crank of a wheel or axle. (E.) ME. winche; spelt wynche, Palladius on Ilusbandry, b. i. l. 426. [Cf. prov. E. wink, a periwinkle, also a winch; Halliwell. F. Cornwall wink, 'the wheel by which straw-rope is made'; E. D. S.] AS. wince, 'Girgillus, wine', Voc. 416. 6; here Girgillus is an error for girgillus, a winch; see Ducange. The connexion with winkle is obvious (see Winkle); and both winch and winkle are derivatives from Teut. base WENK, to bend sideways, nod, totter, &c.; see further under Wink. A winch was simply 'a bend, hence a bent handle; cf. AS. wincel, a corner (Somner); MHG. wenke, a bending or crooking; Lithuan. winge, a bend or turn of a river or road. And cf. Norman dial. winche, 'guinteaud'; Le Hérischer. And see Winkle, Wenoh.

WIND (1), air in motion, breath. (F.) ME. wind, wynd, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24. AS. wind, Grein, ii. 712. +Du. wind; Icel. vindr; Dan. and Swed. wind; G. wind, OHG. wint; Goth. winds, winds. β. All from the Teut. type wendōz*, m. wind. Cognate with L. uentus, W. gwint, Breton gwent, wind. Orig. a pres. part, Idg. wento-, signifying 'blowing'. From WAEW, to blow. Hence also Skt. vā, to blow, vāta-s, wind, Goth. wain, to blow; Russ. wiatel (s), to blow, wieter, wind, Lithuan. wējas, wind; as well as L. uentus and K. wind. See Brugmann, i. § 420. And see Weather. Der. wind, to blow a horn, pp. winded, Much Ado, i. 1. 243, oddly corrupted to wound (by confusion with the strong verb to wind), Scott, Lady of the Lake, i. 17. 1; &c.; wind-age, a coined word; wind-bound, Milton, Hist. of Britain, b. ii, ed. 1695, p. 44; wind-fall, that which falls from trees, &c., being blown down by the wind, hence, a piece of good fortune that costs nothing, Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, ii. 1 (Fabritio), also used in a bad sense (like downfall), Bacon, Essay 29, Of Kingdoms; wind-mill, ME. wind-mulle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 547, l. 11383; wind-pipe, spelt wyndpype in Palsgrave; wind-row, a row of cut grass exposed to the wind, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 28; wind-ward; wind-y, AS. wind, Grein, ii. 713; wind-i-ness. And see wind-ow, winn-ow, went-il-ate.

WIND (2), to turn round, coil, encircle, twist round. (F.) ME. winden, pt. t. wand, wound, pl. wonden, P. Plowman, B. ii. 220, pp. wunden, spelt wunden, Havelok, 546. AS. wundan, pt. t. wand, wond, pp. wunden; Grein, ii. 713. +Du. winden; Icel. winda, pt. t. vatt (for vaut), pp. wundin; Dan. vinde, Swed. winda, to squint; G. winden, pt. t. wand, pp. gewunden; OHG. wintan; Goth. wundan, only in compounds such as biwundan, dugawundan, uswundan; pt. t. wand; pp. wundans. β. All from Teut. type wundan* (pt. t. wand*, pp. wundans*), to wind or bind round, hence to turn. Perhaps ultimately allied to WEL*, to twine; see Withy. Streitberg, §§ 68, 203, note 2. Der. wind-ing, sb.; also wind-lass, q. v.; wend, q. v.; wand-er, q. v.; wand-er, q. v.; wand-er, q. v.

WINDLASS (1), a machine with an axle, for raising heavy weights. (Scand.) The spelling windlass is a by-form, encouraged by popular etymology (as if the word were from wind, verb, and lass), of the shorter word below. ME. windlass, windlass, Prompt. Parv. p. 529.—Icel. windill-áss, a windlass (still in use, see Notes on E. Etym., p. 321).—Icel. windill, a winder; and áss, a beam. β. But the commoner ME. form was windas, Chaucer, C. T. 10498 (F. 184); Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 103. 'Wyndace for an engyn, gyndas.' Palsgrave.—Icel. windlass, a windlass; lit. a winding-pole, i.e. a rounded pole (like an axle) which can be wound round.—Icel. wind-a, to wind; and áss, a pole, main rafter, yard of a sail, &c. γ. Here winda is cognate with E. wind; see Wind (2). The Icel. áss is cognate with Goth. ans, a beam, Luke, vi. 41 (the long á showing a loss of n). The root of áss is not known; it has nothing to do with axis or axle, as some suggest.—Du. windas, a windlass; MDu. windas, 'a windlass or an engine,' Hexham; where as (Icel. áss, a beam) is distinct from MDu. asse (mod. Du. as), an axle.

WINDLASS (2), a circuit, circuitous way. (F.—Teut.?) Shak. has windlasses, Hamlet, i. 1. 68. 'Bidding them fetch a windlass a great way about;' Golding, tr. of Cæsar, fol. 206 (R.). 'And fetched a windlass round about;' Golding, tr. of Ovid (see Wright's note on Hamlet). 'I now fetching a windlesse,' Lyly, Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 270. Apparently compounded of wind (verb) and lass; but it was prob. a popular alteration of ME. wanlace, a trick, subtlety, artifice. Golding has the form windlas, for L. gyrum, Ovid, Metam. vii. 784. Wanlace is used by Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 4378, 12010.—OF. wenelace, perfidy, deceit (Godefroy); also spelt wenelat (id.). Hence the ME. wanelsour, wandelsour, one who drives game (Stratmann). Prob. a hunting term, of Teut. origin. See Gloss. to Toynbee's Specimens of Old French. Perhaps allied to MHG. wandelit, change, alteration, OHG. wantalaŋ, G. ver-wandeln, to change, OHG. wanta, a turning, a small (green) path; all connected with Wind, verb, and Wander.

WINDOW, an opening for light and air. (Scand.) The orig. sense is 'wind-eye,' i.e. eye or hole for the wind to enter at an opening for air and light. [The AS. word was ēgyrl (= eye-thrill), Joshua, ii. 15; also ēgdura (= eye-door), according to Bosworth.] ME. window, Cursor Mundi, 1683; windoge, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 602; windohs, Ancrer Riwle, p. 50, note a; windowse, P. Plowman, B. iii. 48; Wyclif, Acts, xx. 9.—Icel. windauga, a window; lit. 'wind-eye'—Icel. windr, wind; and auga, an eye, cognate with AS. æge, an eye; Dan. vindue, a window; (cf. wind, wind, and bie, an eye); but Dan. windue is from a Low G. wind-ooge* (wind-eye). See Wind (1) and Eye. ¶ Butler has windore, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 214, as if from wind and door; but this is nothing but a corruption.

WINE, the fermented juice of the vine. (L.) ME. win (with long i), Chaucer, C. T. 637 (A 635). AS. win, Grein, ii. 712.—L. uinum, wine (whence also Goth. wein, G. wein, OHG. wîn, Du. wijn, Icel. vin, Swed. vin, Dan. vin). + (Gk. oivos, wine, allied to oivn, the vine.—WEL*, to twine; see Withy. β. 'The Northern names, Goth. wein, G. wein, &c. are undoubtedly to be regarded [with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466] as borrowed; so also Old Irish uin, wine, &c. Pott very appropriately compares the Lith. apanyus, hop-tendrill, pl. apanynei, hops. The Skt. vēgi, a braid of hair, also belongs here. We cannot see why the fruit of the twining plant should not itself have been called originally 'twiner.' The Lith. word offers the most striking analogy. The fact is, therefore, that the Indo-Germans had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice.' Curtius, i. 487. See Brugmann, i. § 204, ii. § 66. ¶ Not of Semitic origin; rather, the Heb. yayin, wine, Arab. waynal, black grape, are borrowed from the Idg. type wino-*. The early L. uinum meant 'vine.' Der. wine-bibber, Matt. xi. 19; see Bib.

WING, the limb by which a bird flies, any side-piece, flank. (Scand.) ME. winge (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1966 (A 1964); the pl. appears as hwinges, Ancrer Riwle, p. 130, last line, Layamon, 29263; we also find wenge, wenge (dat. case), P. Plowman, B. xii. 263; 'wenge of a fowle, Ala,' Prompt. Parv.; pl. wenges, Ormulum, 8024. It is clear that the form wenge is Scand.; and, as there does not seem to be any authority for an alleged AS. winge, it is simplest to suppose winge to result from wenge. [The AS. word for 'wing' is feber.]—Norw. wengja (for ON. wengja*); Icel. vængr, a wing; Dan. and Swed. vinge; North Fries. winge. Teut. type wāngi—, allied to Goth. wāng, to blow (cf. Du. waaijer, a fan); Skt. vā, to blow, wājān, winged (Macdonell); from WEL*, to blow. Der. wing, verb, to fly, Cymb. iii. 3. 28; wing-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 1387 (A 1385); wing-less.

WINK, to move the eyelids quickly. (F.) 1. ME. winken, pt. t. winked, P. Plowman, B. iv. 154. AS. wincian, to wink. 'Connivo, ie wincige.' Voc. 140. 17. 2. But winken also occurs as a strong verb, pt. t. wank, Ancient Met. Tales, ed. Hartshorne, p. 79 (Stratmann); also wonk, Lancelot of the Laik, ed. Skeat, l. 1058; and we may certainly conclude that there was also a strong verb, viz. AS. wincan*, with pt. t. wanc*, pp. wuncen*. This is verified by AS. wancol, wavering, and E. wench, q. v.; as well as by the cognate forms.—MDu. wincen (Hexham); also wenchen, 'to wink, or to give a signe or token with the eyes'; id. Allied to MDu. wanck, 'a moment, an instant,' id. (lit. the twinkling of an eye); wanchel, unsteady; Icel. vanka, to wink, to rove; Dan. vinke, to beckon; cf. vanke, to rove, stroll; Swed. vinke, to beckon, wink; cf. vanke, to rove, vankehold, fickle-minded; G. winken, to nod, make a sign; OHG. winken, strong vb., to move aside, stir, waver (see Schade). Wink, Teut. type wenkan-*, pt. *l. wank-, pp. wunkan-*. Further allied to Lithuan. wengti, to shirk work, to flinch, wingis, a bend of a river, wangus, idle. Der. wink, sb., Temp. ii. 1. 285. Also (from the same root) wence, winch, wink, peri-winkle (the sea-mall). Cf. veinilate.

WINKLE, a kind of sea-mall. (E.) IJolland, tr. of Pliny, b. ix. c. 32, uses winkles to denote shell-fish and also snails. AS. -wincela, occurring in wine-wincela, a winkle; see A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 240; misprinted pinewincela, as a gloss to torniculi in Ælfrie's Colloquy; Voc. 94. 14. Named from the convoluted shell; allied to Winoh, q.v., and to Wink. Der. periwinkle (s), q.v.

WINNOW, to fan grain, so as to separate the chaff from it. (E.) Winnow stands for window, if we may so write it; an being put for nd (but without reference to the sb. window). ME. windeuen, Wyclif, Jer. xlix. 36, to translate L. ventilare; some MSS. have wynnen, showing that the d was being lost just at this time. AS. windwian, less correctly wynwian, W. xliii. 7, ed. Spelman; to translate L. ventilare = AS. wind, wind; with formative suffix -w-. See Wind. Cf. Goth. winthi-skunr, a winnowing-fan; diswinhjan, to disperse, grind to powder; from wintks*, collateral form of winds, wind. So also OHG. wintlan, to winnow, from wint, wind; Icel. winzla, to winnow, from windr, wind; L. ventilare from ventus; see Ventilate. Der. winnow-er, winnow-ing-fan.

WINSOME, pleasant, lovely. (E.) ME. winsom, with the sense 'propitious,' Northumb. Psalter, Ps. lxxviii. 9; also 'pleasant,' id. Ps. lxxx. 3. AS. wynsum, delightful, Grein, ii. 759; formed with suffix -sum (E. -some) from wynn, joy, id. 757. Wynn is formed (by vowel-change from w to y), from winn-, weak grade of winnan, to desire, win; see Win. Cf. OSax. winnig, G. wonne, joy (from winnen); Icel. unadr, joy, unabinnr, winnise; Skt. van-, desire.

WINTER, the cold season, fourth season of the year. (E.) ME. winter, orig. unchanged in the plural; 'a thousand winter' = a thousand winters, i.e. years; Chaucer, C. T. 7233 (D 1651). AS. winter, a winter, also a year; pl. winter, or wintur, þu. winter; Icel. vetr; Olcel. vettr, vittr, assimilated form of wintur; Dan. and Swed. vinter; G. winter, OHG. wintar; Goth. wintrus. β. All from Teut. type wintraz*, for older wentraz*, winter, Fick, iii. 284; where -r is evidently a suffix. Origin doubtful, but the suggestion in Fick is a good one, viz. that it meant 'wet season,' and is a nasalised form allied to E. wet. This is made more probable by the fact that we find nasalised forms of this root in L. uula, a wave, Lithuan. uandū, water, Skt. und, to wet, moisten; whilst, on the other hand, we find E. water with a similar suffix, but without the nasal sound. See Wet, Water. Der. winter, verb, to pass the winter; wintyr-y (for winterr-y); winter-ly, Cymb. iii. 4. 13; winter-quarters.

WIPE, verb, to cleanse by rubbing, to rub. (E.) ME. wipen, Chaucer, C. T. 133. AS. wipian, to wipe; Ælfrie's Homilies, i. 426, l. 30; 'Tergo, ic wipige,' Ælfrie's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 172, l. 8. This is a weak verb, meaning to rub over with a wipe, or to use a wipe of straw; formed, with the usual causal suffix -ian, from a sb. wip*, a wipe of straw, which does not occur in AS. But it is preserved in E. Wipe, Pomeranian wip, Hamburg wype, a twist or wipe of straw, and in Low G. wiep, a wipe of straw, or a rag to wipe anything with, Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 269; and the common E. wipe is related to it. Cf. Goth. waip-s, a wreath, from the strong verb weipan, to crown (orig. to twine); cf. OHG. wifan, to wind round. See Wisp. Der. wipe, sb., sometimes in the sense of sarcasm or taunt, Shak. Lucres, 537; wip-er.

WIPE, a thread of metal. (E.) ME. wip, wyr (with long i); dat. wyre, P. Plowman, B. ii. 11. AS. wir, a wire, Grein, ii. 717. + Low G. (Hamburg) wyren, pl. wires; Icel. virr, wire; cf. Swed. wira, to wind, twist. Cf. OHG. wiara, MHG. wiere, an ornament of refined gold. Orig. a thread of metal, properly a 'twisted' thread or an ornament of twisted metal-wire; cf. Icel. viravirki, flag-rework, lit. 'wire-work'; L. wiria, armlets of metal. Formed with suffix -ro- from wiel-*, to twist, twine; see Withy. Der. wire-draw, verb, to draw into wire; wire-draw-ing; wire-work; wir-y. And see ferrule.

WIS; for this fictitious verb, see Ywis.

WISE (1), having knowledge, discreet, learned. (E.) ME. wis (with long i), ways, Chaucer, C. T. 68. AS. wis, wise; Grein, ii. 718. + Du. wis; Icel. vis; Dan. vis; Swed. vis; G. weise, OHG. wis; Goth. wis, in comp. unwis, unwise. β. All from Teut. type wisoz*; for wisoz*; from Teut. base wit-, answering to Idg. wēd, to know; see Wit (1). Thus wis = 'knowing'; cf. winning, adj.; Brugmann, i. § 759, 794. ¶ Otherwise explained as for wisoz* < wittoz*; formed from wit-, Idg. wid-, weak grade of wēd* (as above); Der. wis-ly; wis-dom, AS. wisdom, Grein, ii. 719 (where dōm = E. doom, i.e. judgement); wiseman (one word), As You Like It, i. 2. 93, &c.; wis-ness, Hamlet, v. 1. 286. Also wis (2). (But not wisecra, q.v.)

WISE (3), way, manner, guise. (E.) ME. wise (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1448 (A 1446). AS. wise, Grein, ii. 719. + Du. wijs; Icel. vis, in the comp. óðrvis, otherwise; Dan. vis; Swed. vis; G. weise; OHG. weise (whence, through French, E. guise). β. All from Teut. type wisōn*, f. Allied to AS. wisian, to show the way, direct, orig. 'to make wise,' to instruct; from wis, adj. wise. See Wise (1). Cf. L. visus, sb., appearance. Der. like-wise, otherwise. Doublet, guise.

WISEACRE, a wise fellow (ironically), a fool. (Du. -G.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - MDu. wijs-segger, as if 'a wise-sayer,' whence wijs-segen (Ilexham), a verb wrongly used as if equivalent to the more usual MDu. waer-segen, 'to sooth-say,' id., whence waer-segger, 'a diviner, or a sooth-sayer,' id. (from MDu. waer, true). But the MDu. word is merely borrowed from G. weissager, a sooth-sayer, as if it meant 'a wise-sayer;' cf. weissagen, to foretell, prophesy, soothsay.

β. Not only is the E. form a travesty of the G. word, but the latter has itself suffered from the manipulation of popular etymology, and is a corrupt form, having originally nothing to do with the verb to say, nor even precisely containing the word wise. This appears from the older forms; the G. weissagen is the MHG. wizagen, to prophesy, corrupted to wizagen, wissagen, by confusion with sagen, to say. This MHG. verb was unoriginal, being formed from the sb. wizago, a prophet, which was itself afterwards corrupted into weissager. γ. Now wiz-ag-o is exactly parallel to AS. wit-ag-a or wit-ig-a, a prophet (Grein, ii. 726; both words are formed (with adj. suffix -ig (-ig) and sb. suffix -o (-a), denoting the agent) from the verb which appears as OHG. wizan, AS. witan, to see; from wēd*, to know; see Wit. δ. It follows that the s for G. z, the equivalent of E. t; whilst the unmeaning suffix -acre is no worse than the corrupt G. suffix -ager. Moreover, the sense 'wise-sayer' is merely an erroneous popular interpretation; the true sense is simply seer (-seer).

WISH, to have a desire, be inclined. (E.) ME. wisshen, wishen; P. Plowman, B. v. 111. AS. wyscan, to wish; Grein, ii. 766; less correctly wiscan, id. The long y shows a loss of n, and wyscan represents Teut. type wunskan*, to wish; a verb formed from the Teut. sb. wunsko*, a wish. Cf. Du. wenschen; Icel. askja, with the usual loss of initial v, and written for askja; Dan. inske; Swed. önska; G. wünschen; OHG. wunscan. β. The AS. sb. is wisre, a wish, very rare, in Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. v. c. 19, ed. Smith, p. 638, l. 40, where it is misprinted wise; whence wyscan, vb., with the usual change from u to y. Cognate words to the sb. are found in MDu. wunsch (Ilexham); Icel. isk; G. wunsch; OHG. wunsc; the Teut. types being wunskaz*, m., wunskā*, f. All from Teut. wunsk-, weak grade of wen-sk-, formed with verbal suffix -sk- (L. -scē) from wen-*, to desire, strive after, appearing in Skt. van, to ask, and in E. wish; see Win. Cf. Skt. wāṅkṣ, to desire, wish, from van, to ask. Der. wish, sb., merely from the verb, and not the same as the more orig. ME. wunsch, Prompt. Parv. p. 535, which answers to AS. wāse, as above. Also wish-er, well-wish-er; well-wish-ed, Meas. for Meas. ii. 4. 27; wish-ful, i.e. longing, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 14; wish-ful-ly, wish-ful-ness. And see wist-ful.

WISP, a small bundle of straw or hay. (E.) ME. wisp, wips; spelt wipse, wips, P. Plowman, B. v. 35; wysp, wesp, wips, id. A. v. 195; the Vernon MS. has wispet* with a wesp = wiped with a wisp. As in other cases where sp and ps are interchanged, the spelling with ps is the older; cf. hap, clasp, &c. The AS. form would be wips*, but it does not occur; and the final s is formative, wip-s being closely connected with the verb to wipe. We find also Low G. wiepf, a wisp; Norweg. wippen, a wisp to sprinkle or daub with (also a swape, or machine for raising water); Swed. dial. wipp, an ear of rye, also a little sheaf or bundle; Goth. waip-s, a crown, orig. a twisted wreath (where -s is merely the suffix of the Goth. nom. case). β. Thus the Teut. base is wip-s*, weak grade of weipan-*, as seen in Goth. weipan, to crown, to wreath, OHG. wifan, to wind round (hence, to twist). See Wipe. It has probably been confused with whisk, as in IJlan. wisk, a wisp, a rubber; but the two words are from different roots; see Whisk. Cf. MSwed. wisp, a wisp; mod. Swed. wisp, a whisk, a twirling-stick.

WIST, knew, or known; see Wit (1).

WISTFUL, eager, earnest, attentive, pensive. (E.) The word appears to be not very old, and it has almost supplanted the word wisful, which was once common. The orig. sense seems to have been 'silent' or 'hushed'; as in 'the sweet dales and the wistful hill,' W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii. song 2, 544 (see Cent. Dict.). If so, it stands for whist-ful, from whist, silent, hushed; see Whist. It would naturally be associated with the adv. wisly, attentively, earnestly, used 4 times by Shakespeare, which may likewise have arisen from whist, silent. The Quartos read wisly (wishtly) for wisly in Rich. II, v. 4. 7; see also Venus and Adonis, 343. Lucrece, 1355, Pass. Pilgrim, 82. W. As regards wisful, &c., we find wisful in 3 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 14: 'There be certain Women that can kill with their eye-sight whom they look wisfully upon'; Ady, Discovery of Witches (1661), p. 97. 'O. Hoard. I long to have a smack at her lips. Hoard. And most wisfully, brother, see where she comes'; Middleton, Trick to Catch the Old One, A. v. sc. 2. 'I sat looking wisfully at the clock'; Idler, no. 67 (R.); 'We looked at the fruit very wisfully'; Cook, First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7; 'I was weary of this day, and began to think wisfully of being again in motion'; Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 98 (Todd); 'I looked at them wisfully'; Boswell, Life of Johnson, Sept. 1, 1773-y. Examples of wisful occur in: 'Lifting up one of my sashes, [I] cast many a wisful melancholy look towards the sea'; Swift, Gulliver, bk. ii. ch. 8; 'Why, Grubbinol, dost thou so wisful seem? There's sorrow in thy look'; Gay, Pastorals, Friday, l. 1. 8. Note that wisly (= wisfully) occurs in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 863 (Todd). Also, that Sir T. More seems to use wisly nearly in the sense of M.E. wisly, certainly, which suggests a possibility that wisly arose from that form: 'To putte on his spectacles, and pore better and more wisly with his hole eyen upon Saynt Johns gospell'; Sir T. More, Workes, p. 1134 (R.). Der. wisful-ly.

WIT (1), to know. (E.) This verb is ill understood and has suffered much at the hands of grammarians and compilers of dictionaries. Wit is the infin. mood; to wit (as in 'we do you to wit') is the gerund; wit is the 1st and 3 pers. of the present indicative, the 3rd pers. being often corruptly written wisteth; wist (later form wisteth) is the 2nd pers. sing. of the same tense; wiste, later wist, is the pt. t.; and wist is the pp. [The adv. yois or yois, certainly, was often misunderstood, and a verb wis, to know, was evolved, which is wholly unsanctioned by grammar; see Ywis.] M.E. witen, infin.; pres. t. wit, wost, wot, pl. witen; pt. t. wiste, pp. wist; see Chaucer, C. T. 1142, 1158, 1165, 8690, 9614 (A 1140, 1156, 1163, E 814, 1740), &c. [There was also M.E. witen, to see (with long i); see Stratmann, who puts wit under this latter verb, as if I have seen = I know. It makes little difference, since AS. witan, to know, and witan, to see, are closely connected; I follow the arrangement in Grein.] AS. witan, to know; pres. t. wite, þu wistest, he wāt, pl. witun; subj. sing. wite, pl. witun; pt. t. wiste (sometimes wiste), 2 p. wisses, pl. wiston; pp. wist; Grein, ii. 722. Allied to AS. witan, to see; pt. t. wit, pl. witun; id. ii. 724. It is clear that wit is really an old past tense (of witan) used as a present; causing the necessity of creating a new past tense wisse or wiste, which is, however, of great antiquity. Similar anomalous verbs are found in E. viz. can, may, shall, &c. The gerund is to witanne, whence mod. E. to wit. The form wet, in Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 6, is nothing but a corruption of wit. þu welen, pt. t. wist, pp. weten; Icel. vita, pr. t. veit, pt. t. vissa, pp. vitrar; Dan. vide, pr. t. veed, pt. t. vidste, pp. vidst; Swed. veta, pr. t. vet, pt. t. visste, pp. veten; G. wissen, pr. t. wiss, pt. t. wusste, pp. gewusst; Goth. witan, pr. t. wait, pt. t. weis. β. All from Teut. type witan-, to know, pr. t. wait, the base being weil-*, orig. 'to see'. Further allied to Lithuan. weizditi, to see, Russ. videti (e), to see, L. videre, to see, Gk. lbeiv, to see, oiba, I know, Skt. veda, I know, orig. I have seen (= E. was), Skt. vid, to perceive, know, orig. to see. = WEID-*, to see, perceive, know. Der. wit (a), q.v., wit-ness, q.v., i-wit (for ai-wit); wit-ing-ly, knowingly, Haml. v. 1. 11. Also, from the same root, wise, guise; vis-ion, vis-ible, &c. (see VISION); id-ec, id-of, and the suffix -id in rhomboid, &c.; ved-a. And see wisecare, wizard.

WIT (2), understanding, knowledge, the power of combining ideas with a happy or ludicrous effect. (E.) M.E. wit, Chaucer, C. T. 748 (A 746). AS. wit, knowledge, Grein, ii. 722 = AS. witan, to know; see WIT (1). Icel. vii; Dan. vidt; Swed. vett; Goth. witi, in comp. un-witi, n. lack of wisdom; allied to G. witz. Teut. type witiom-*, n. Der. wit-less, wit-less-ly, wit-less-ness; wit-ling, a pretender to wit, with double dimin. suffix -ling; wit-ed, as in blunt-witted, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 210; wit-y, AS. witig or wittig, Grein, ii. 726; wit-i-ly, wit-i-ness. Also wit-i-cism, used by Dryden in his pref. to the State of Innocence, with the remark that he asks 'pardon for a new word' (R.); evidently put for witty-ism, the c being introduced to avoid the hiatus, and being suggested by Galli-cism, &c.

WIT (3), a wise man, witty fellow. (E.) M.E. wite; AS. wita, lit. 'one who knows' = AS. witana, to know. Der. witena gemot, a meeting of 'wits', a parliament.

WITCH, a woman regarded as having magical power. (E.) Formerly used also of a man, Comedy of Errors, iv. 4. 160, Antony,

i. 2. 40; but this is unusual. M.E. wicce, applied to a man, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 69; also to a woman, Sir Percival, l. 826 (in the Thornton Romances). AS. wicca, masc. a wizard; wices, fem., a witch. 'Ariolus, wicca'; Voc. 183. 31. 'Phytonysa, wicca', Voc. 313. 5. The pl. wiccan, occurring in the Laws of Edward and Guthrum, § 11, and Laws of Cnut, Secular, § 4 (Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 172, 378), may refer to either gender. β. Wice is merely the fem. of wicca; and wicea is a sb., denoting the agent, allied to wiccan, to practise sorcery, E. rics, wikken, -MDu, wicker, 'a soothsayer', Hexham; Low G. wikken, to predict (see wiccan, to practise sorcery, in Schade). Cf. Norw. wikja (1) to turn aside, (2) to conjure away, exorcise. This links it with Icel. vikja (pp. vik-inn), to move, turn, push aside; Dan. vige, as in vige bort, Satan! 'get thee behind me, Satan!' Cf. AS. wicean, to give way; whence E. weak. Perhaps wiccan meant 'to avert'; and wicea, 'an averter'. B. Also explained as a variant of AS. wilga, shortened form of wilega, a wise man, a prophet, a soothsayer; cf. Icel. vithi, a wizard, allied to vita, to know. For AS. witega, see Wiseacre. Der. witchcraft, AS. wiccecraft, Levit. xx. 27, from wicca, a witch, and craft craft, art. Also witch, verb, AS. wiccan, Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 274, sect. 30; hence witch-ery, a coined word, Browne, Britannia's Pastors, b. ii. s. 1. 412. Also be-witch, q.v.

WITCH-ELM, WYCH-ELM, a kind of elm. (E.) Spelt weech-elm, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 475. There is also a witch-hazel. M.E. wyche, wiche; 'Wyche, tre Ulmus'; Prompt. Parv. AS. wier, occurring in a list of trees. 'Virecia, wice; Cariscus, wice'; Voc. 269. 16, 19. The sense is 'drooping'; or 'bending'; and it is derived from AS. wic-, weak grade of wican, to bend; see WICKER. The t in the word is superfluous, and due to confusion with the word witch above. 'Some varieties of the wych-elm have the branches quite pendulous, like the weeping-willow, thus producing a most graceful effect'; Our Woodlands, by W. S. Coleman.

WITH, by, near, among. (E.) M.E. with, Chaucer, C. T. 1. AS. wið, governing gen., dat., and acc.; Grein, ii. 692. It often has the sense of 'against', which is still preserved in to fight with = to fight against, and in with-say, with-stand. Icel. við, against, by, at, with; Dan. ved, by, at; Swed. vid, near, at, by. β. From Teut. type wi-th-*, against, shortened from AS. wi-ðer, against; see WITHERS. ¶ We must observe that with has to a great extent taken the place of AS. and M.E. mid, with, which is now obsolete. Der. with-al, with it, with, Teut. imp. i. 93, M.E. withalle, Chaucer, C. T. 14130 (B 3314), compounded of with, prep., and alle, dat. case of al, all, and used in place of AS. mid alle, with all, wholly, Grein, i. 238, l. 12. Also with-in, M.E. with-inne, Wycliff, Matt. ii. 16, AS. wiðinnan, on the inside, Matt. xxiii. 26; with-out, M.E. with-outen, with-outen, Chaucer, C. T. 463 (A 461), AS. wiðutan, on the outside of, Matt. xxiii. 25; and note that AS. innan and utan are properly adverbial formations, extended from in and ut respectively. And see with-draw, with-hold, with-say, with-stand; also with-ers.

WITHDRAW, to draw back or away, to recall. (E.) M.E. withdrawen, to draw back, take away, Ancren Riwle, p. 230, last line. Not found in AS. From WITH and Draw; where with has the old sense of 'towards', hence towards oneself, and away from another. Der. with-draw-al, with-draw-ment, late and coined words. Also withdrawing-room, a retiring-room, esp. for ladies (see example in Todd's Johnson, and in Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ch. ix.), now unmeaningly shortened to drawing-room!

WITHE, WITH, a flexible twig; see Withy.

WITHER, to fade. (E.) Palgrave has: 'I wylder, as a flourie dothe'; and 'I wylder, I drie up'. M.E. widren, not an old form. 'Now grene as leif, now widderit and ago'; Test. of Crescide, l. 238. This M.E. widren is nothing but a variant of M.E. wederen, to expose to the weather, so that widred = wedered, exposed to weather. Wederyn, or leyn or hangyn yn the weder, Auro; Prompt. Parv. And the verb wederen is from M.E. weder, weather; see Weather. For the i, cf. AS. ge-wider, weather, temperature; Icel. haf-vibri, a sea-breeze. Cf. G. ver-witern, to decay by exposure to the atmosphere; from wetter, weather, storm. ¶ It follows that wither is properly transitive, as in 'Age cannot wither her', Antony, ii. 2. 240; but the intrans. use is much more common.

WITHERS, the ridge between the shoulder-blades of a horse. (E.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 253. Skelton has: 'Ware gallyng in the widlers.' i. 24. So called because it is the part which the horse opposes to his load, or on which the stress of the collar comes in drawing. Cf. Cleveland witers, the bars of an arrow-head, which oppose its being drawn backwards (Atkinson). The lit. sense is 'things which resist'; formed from M.E. wider, resistance. 'Wider com to-jenes'-resistance (or an adverse wind) came against me'; Layamon, 4678. Hence wisful, full of resistance, hostile, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 51, l. 19; widren, widren, to resist, id. ii. 123, last line; and see Stratmann. Cf. AS. wider (only in gen. widres), resistance; Beowulf, 2953. — AS. wider, against, Grein, ii. 697; common in composition. Sometimes shortened to wid, against, also used in the sense of 'with'; see WITH. The AS. wider, also widre, is cognate with Du. weder, Icel. widr, Dan. and Swed. weder, G. wieder, Goth. withra, signifying against, or again. This very prefix is represented by guer- in Guerdon, q.v. β. The Goth. withra is to be divided as wi-thra, a comparative form; cf. Skt. vi-taram, away, further, from vi, away, apart. Brugmann, ii. § 75. The above etymology is verified by the similar word found in G. widerrist, the withers of a horse, from wider, old spelling of wieder, against, and rist, which not only means wrist or instep, but also an elevated part, the withers of a horse.

WITHHOLD, to hold back, keep back. (E.) ME. withholden, pp. withholdi, (Chaucer, C. T. 513 (A 511); and see Ancrén Riwlē, p. 348, l. 22. From with, in the sense of 'back', or 'towards', the agent, and Hold. Cf. with-draw.

WITHIN, WITHOUT; see under With.

WITHSAY, to contradict. (E.) ME. withseien, Chaucer, C. T. 807 (A 805); withsigen, Ancrén Riwlē, p. 86, l. 7. — AS. wið, against; and seegan, to say; see With and Say.

WITHSTAND, to stand against, resist. (E.) ME. withstonden, Wyclif, Rom. ix. 19. AS. wiðstandan, to resist, Grein, ii. 699. — AS. wið, against; and standan, to stand; see With and Stand.

WITHY, WITHE, a flexible twig, esp. of willow. (E.) Spelt withes or withs, pl., Judg. xvi. 7. ME. wiði, wiðde, &c.; spelt withes, withthe, wyithh, Prompt. Parv. p. 531; withthe, K. Alisaunders, 4714; wiði, Ancrén Riwlē, p. 86, l. 15. AS. wiðig, a willow, also a twig of a willow. 'Salix, wiðig,' Voc. 139. 30. Also AS. wiðe, a thong; Voc. 183. 16. + MDu. wiēte, 'a twig, a willow,' Hexham; Icel. viðja, a withy; við, a with (showing the different forms); viðir, a willow; Dan. viðje, a willow, osier; Swed. vide, a willow, viðja, a willow-twig; G. weide, a willow; OHG. wida, β. All from a Teut. base wīth-, weith-, Idg. base weil-*. We find allied words in Lithuan. žil-wiitis, the gray willow (used for basket-work), Gk. tría (for trivía), a willow, a wicker-shield; also in Russ. viša, a willow, Lith. wyitis, a withe, W. guden, a withe, L. uitis, a vine. The application is to plants that twine or are very flexible; and all these words are from the WEL*, to twine, plait, as in Russ. wit, to twine, plait. L. ui-ēre, L. ui-men, a twig, ui-tis, a vine, ui-num, wine (orig. vine). Brugmann, ii. § 686, 789. From the same root we have wetch, wire, ferrule (for virole), wine, vine.

WITNESSE, testimony; also, one who testifies. (E.) Properly an abstract sb., like all other sbs. in -ness. ME. witnesse, Ancrén Riwlē, p. 68, l. 3. AS. witnes, testimony, Luke, ix. 5; also gewitnes, Mark, i. 44. [The use of the word in the sense of 'witnesser' is unoriginal; it occurs in Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 60; so also O'Northumb. gewitnes, Mark, xiv. 63; and in AS.] — AS. wit, as in wit-an, to know; with suffix -nes; see WIT (1); thus the orig. sense was 'knowledge' or 'consciousness.' Cf. ME. witnen, to testify, Ancrén Riwlē, p. 384; for witen-en*, from witen, pp. of witan, to know; cf. Icel. witna, Dan. vidne, to testify. Also Goth. weit-wiðs, a witness. Der. witnes, vbi., ME. witnesen, P. Ploewman, B. prol. 191.

WITWAL, a cuckold. (E.) In Merry Wives, ii. 1. 3. Not an old word in this sense. It occurs also in Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act v. sc. 1 (Mosca); and in Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, iii. 2 (Gomera). 'Jannin, a witwall, one that knows and bears with, or winks at, his wife's dishonesty,' Cotgrave. (It does not mean 'know-all'.) It has been explained as equivalent to ME. witele, knowing, a rare word, occurring once in Layamon, 18547. And this again has been supposed to represent the AS. wital, adj., wise, sapient; formed with suffix -ol (as in sprec-ol, talkative), from wit-an, to know. In that case, the word would mean wise or knowing; or, ironically, a simpleton, a gull. β. But all this is due to popular etymology; the AS. wital is rare, occurring in the comp. nn-wital, Liber Scintillarum, p. 80, l. 12; fore-wital, A. S. Chron. an. 1067; and this hardly known in ME. Hence Wedgwood's suggestion is worth notice; viz. that a wital is the bird commonly called in olden times a witwall. Indeed, Bp. Hall uses this very form: 'Fond wit-wall, that wouldst load thy witless head With timely hours, before thy bridal bed;' Satires, i. 7. 17. Florio explains Ital. godano by the bird called a witwal or woodwale; ed. 1598. In a later edition, according to Wedgwood, this appears as: 'Godano, a wital or woodwale;' and Torriano has 'Wital, becco contento,' i.e. a cuckold. The corruption from witwall to wital is easy and natural. γ. An older spelling is wetwold; for which see Skelton, Carl. of Laurel, 187; Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 710. With this form compare MDu. wedwale, 'a kinde of a yellow bird,' Hexham; OHG. witwale, a woodwale. δ. Witwall itself is the same word as woodwale, an old name usually given to the green woodpecker, but also to the oriole; in any case, it appears that the witwall (like the cuckoo and the Late L. curruca) were the subjects of ribald jests. 'Curruca est avis, vel ille qui, cum credat nutrire filios suos, nutrit alienos;' Supp. to Ducange, by Diefenbach. On which Wedgwood remarks: 'the origin of this name [witwal] is undoubtedly from the fact that the bird known under the name of curruca is one of those in the nest of which the cuckoo drops its egg.' See further under Woodwale. Cf. gull, (1) a bird, (2) one who is deceived.

WIVERN; see Wyvern.

WIZARD, WISARD, one who practises magic, a magician. (E.; with F. suffix.) ME. wisard; spelt wysard, wysar, Prompt. Parv. It was simply formed by adding the AF. suffix -ard, as in cow-ard, lagg-ard, to the ME. wis, wise. Thus it merely meant 'wise-like.' The F. suffix -ard, due to OIHG. suffix -hart, is merely G. hart, i.e. strong, confirmed in (w E. hard).

WIZEN, to shrivel or dry up. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. ME. wisenen, to become shrivelled; see quotation in Halliwell, s. v. wisened. AS. wisnian, to become dry, John, xv. 6 (in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS., both Northumbrian). We find also AS. for-wisnode, to translate L. emarcuit, Voc. 394. 5. + Icel. wisna, to wither. β. This is an intransitive verb, with formative -n-, giving it the sense 'to become,' so that the orig. sense was 'to become dry'; see this suffix explained under Waken. The Icel. visn-a is derived from vis-inn, wisened, withered, palsied, dried up, which, by its form, is the pp. of an old lost strong verb wisa* (pt. t. weis*, pp. visinn); cf. risa, to rise (pt. t. reis, pp. risinn). The Icel. wisn is cognate with Dan. and Swed. wisen, withered; cf. also Swed. wisna, to fade, OHG. wesân, to dry up. All from a lost Teut. strong verb weis-, wis-, pt. t. weis*, pp. wisanoz*; from Idg. WEIS*. Hence also L. uir-us (for uis-us*), poison, (Gk. iôs, Skt. wish-u, poison; see Virulent. Cf. also AS. weornian, to pine away; from the same root; answering to a Teut. type wizōn* (see Learn). Der. wizen, adj., dried up, orig. the pp. of the strong verb.

WO, WOE, grief, misery. (E.) ME. wo, Chaucer, C. T. 353, 1458 (A 351, 1456). AS. wā, used as interj. and adv., sometimes with dat. case, Grein, ii. 635; wēa, wo, sb., id. 668. + Du. wee, interj. and sb.; Icel. veit, interj., used with dat. case; Dan. vee, interj. and sb.; Swed. we, interj.; G. weh, interj. and sb.; Goth. wai, interj. β. Further allied to L. ue, woi W. gwar, wo. Orig. an exclamation; hence, a cry of pain, a pain, &c. Idg. types wai*, interj., waiwa*, sb. (whence AS. wēa, wāwa, wo, OIHG. wēwa, wo). Der. wo-ful, ME. woful, Chaucer, C. T. 2058 (A 2056); wo-ful-lī, -ness. Also wo-begone, spelt woe-begon, Spenser, F. q. iii. 7. 20, i.e. surrounded with wo, from ME. wo begon, Chaucer, C. T. 5338 (B 1918), where hegon is the pp. of ME. hegon, to go about, surround, equivalent to AS. begān, compounded of be, prep. (E. by) and gān, to go; see further in Stratmann, s. v. higān. Also wo worth, wo be to; for which phrase see Worth (1). Also wai-l, q.v.

WOAD, a plant used as a blue dye-stuff. (E.) ME. wōd (with long o), Chaucer, Alas Prima, l. 17, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. Skeat, vol. i. AS. wād, woad; 'Sandix, wad; Fucus, woad'; Voc. 136. 25, 26. The OF. name is spelt waide in a Vocab. of the 13th century; id. 556. 14; cf. F. guide. + Du. weede; [Dan. vaide, weid, Swed. veide, from German]; G. waid, MIHG. weid; whence OF. waide, waiste, gaile, mod. F. guide. Root unknown: allied to L. uitrum, woad, Gk. lōatris (< fwaōtris*) woad. ¶ Distinct from weld (2).

WOLD, a down, plain open country. (E.) Spelt old in Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 125; wolde, woulde in Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. wold, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 938; the dat. case is spelt walde in one text of Layamon, 20842, but wolde in the other; it is thus seen to be the same word as ME. wald, a wood, which was, however, more commonly used in the sense of waste ground, wide open country (as in Norse); in Layamon, 21339, where one text has wald, the other has fild, field, in the sense of open country. AS. wald, wald, a wood, forest, Grein, ii. 669. + OSax. and OFries. wald, a wood; NFries. wald; G. wald, OHG. walt; Icel. vald, gen. valdar (< valthar), a field, plain; Du. wond. β. All from Teut. type walthuz*, m., a wood. It has been compared with Skt. witā-s, an enclosure; and with E. wild. Neither connexion is at all certain. Doublet, wald, q. v. Der. vale.

WOLF, a rapacious beast of prey. (E.) ME. wolf; pl. wolves (= wolues), Wyclif, Matt. x. 16. AS. wulf, pl. wulfas, Grein, ii. 750. + Du. and G. wolf; Icel. úlfr (for uulfr); Dan. ulv; Swed. ulv; Goth. wulfs. β. All from Teut. type wulfaz*, m. Further allied to Lith. wilkas, Russ. wolk, Gk. λύκος, L. lupus, Skt. vrka-, a wolf; the common Idg. type being wolgos*. γ. The sense is 'fearer,' or 'render,' from his ravenous nature. — WEI/Q*, to tear; Lithuan. wilkiti, to pull, &c. ¶ The suggested connexion with L. wulfes, a fox, is doubtful. Brugmann, ii. § 60. Der. wolf-ish, wolf-ish-ly; wolf-dog. Also wolv-er-ene, or wolv-er-ine, a coined word; apparently suggested by MHG. wölfein, a little wolf; spelt wulverin in Hakluyt, Voy. i. 477, and in Cotgrave, s.v. louviere; a name given to an American animal resembling the glutton, a name sometimes incorrectly given to the wolverine also.

WOMAN, a grown female. (E.) That woman is an altered form of AS. wifman, lit. wife-man, is certain; and it must be remembered that the AS. man (like L. homo) was used of both sexes. To show this, it is best to trace the word downwards. The AS. form is wifman, a woman, Grein, ii. 700. By assimilation, this form became wimman in the 10th century. In Judges, iv. 17, we have the dat. sing. wifmen, but in the very next verse (and in verse 23) Jael is called sēo wimman = the woman. [Similarly, the AS. loafmasse (loaf-mass) became lamm; see Lamm.] By way of further illustration, see Mark, x. 6, where the various MSS. have wifman, wifman, wimman. β. The pl. of wifman was wifmen, which was similarly reduced to wimmen, as in Gen. x. 17, and this form has held its ground, in the spoken language, to the present day. γ. But the sing. form suffered further alteration; we still find wifman (later text wimman) in Layamon, l. 1869, wimman, Iavelok, l. 1168, wifman, Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 11, l. 1 (as late as A.D. 1340; the pl. being both wifmen, p. 10, last line but one, and wimmen, according to Morris); but we also find wimman, Ancrun Kivle, p. 12, l. 11, wimman, Rich. Cœur de Lion, 3863; womun, Rob. of Glouc. p. 9, l. 211, P. Plowman, B. i. 71, l. 8; so also in Chaucer, C. T. Group D, 66 [l. 5648], where 5 MSS. have womman, and one has woman; after which the spelling womman is common. Thus the successive spellings are wifman (wifman), wimman (wimman), wumman (wumman), womman; and lastly woman, as at present. In some dialects, the pronunciation wumman [glossic wum'n] is still heard. Some have thought that popular fancy connected the word with womb, as if the word were womb-man; but the change of vowel was due to the preceding w, just as in AS. widu, later form wida, a wood; see Wood. For further discussion, see Wife and Man.

¶ Note also the word leman, which was successively lēof man, leimman, leman; here we have a similar assimilation of fin to ni, and a considerable change in sense; see leman. Der. woman-hood, ME. womanhede, wommanhede, Chaucer, C. T. 1750 (A 1748), the corresponding AS. word being wifhild, Gen. l. 27; woman-ish, K. Jolm, iv. 1. 36; woman-ish-ly, -ness; woman-kind, Tam. Shrew, iv. 2. 14; women-kind, Pericles, iv. 6. 159; woman-like, woman-ly, ME. wommonlich, Ancrun Kivle, p. 274, l. 9; woman-li-ness.

WOMB, the belly, the place of conception. (E.) Iowl. S. wame, the belly; Iurns, Scotch Drink, s. v. ME. wombe, Wyclif, Matt. xv. 17; wamhe, Prick of Conscience, 4161. AS. wamb, womb, the belly, Grein, ii. 637. 'Venter, wamb;' Voc. 306. 34-Du. wam, the belly of a fish; Icel. vömb, the belly, esp. of a beast; Dan. vou; Swed. vömb, vödm; G. wampe, wamme, OIlg. wampa; Goth. wamba. β. The Teut. type is wambin-*, f. the belly, paunch. Root unknown. ¶ Quite distinct from l. uenter.

WOMBAT, a marsupial mammal, found in Australia. (Australian.) In Webster. A corruption of the native Australian name wombac or wombac. 'The wombat, or, as it is called by the natives of Port Jackson, the wombac;' Collins, New South Wales (1802), quoted in the Penny Cyclopaedia. 'The mountain natives call it wombac;' letter from Governor Hunter, dated Sydney, 1798; in Bewick's Quadrupeds. See E. E. Morris, Austral English.

WON, to dwell, remain. (E.) In Milton, P. l. vii. 457. Practically obsolete, though occurring in Sir Walter Scott, Lady of the Lake, iv. 13. ME. wonen, Chaucer, C. T. 7745 (D 2163). AS. wunian, to dwell. + Icel. uua, to dwell; see further under Wont.

WONDER, a strange thing, a prodigy, portent, admiration. (E.) ME. wonder; pl. wondris, Wyclif, Mark, xiii. 22. AS. wundor, a portent, Grein, ii. 751. + Du. wonder; Icel. undr (for wundr*); Dan. and Swed. und; G. wunder, OIlg. wuntar. β. The Teut. type is wundaron*, n., a wonderful thing. Perhaps allied to AS. wandian, lit. to turn aside from, but usually to turn from through a feeling of fear or awe, to respect, to revere. pū ne wandast for nānum men* = thou respectest, or darest, no man; Matt. xxi. 16; Luke, xx. 21. Grein explains wandian by 'præ mētē sive aliquid reverentia omittē, cunctari'; ii. 638. Hence ME. wonden, to conceal through fear, to falter, &c.; Will. of Palerne, 4071; Gower, C. A. l. 332, bk. iii. 1569; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 1187. Perhaps further allied to Wend and Wind (2). Der. wonder, verb, AS. wundrian, Grein, ii. 753; wonder-ful, ME. wonderful, Layamon, l. 280, later text, used in place of AS. wunderlic, lit. wonder-like, Grein, ii. 753; wonder-ful-ly, -ness. Also wonder-ous, q. v.

WONDEROUS, wonderful. (E.) Spelt wonderouse in Palsgrave, and prob. not found much earlier; it is a corrupt form (like righteous for rightwise), and took the place of the older word wonders, properly an adv., but also used as an adj. 'Ye be wonders men' = ye are wonderful men; Skelton, Magnificence, 90. 'Where such a solempne yerely myracle is wrought so wonderly in the face of the world';

Sir T. More, Works, p. 133 h. Earlier as an adv., as 'wonders dere,' i.e. wonderfully clear, Test. of Love, b. ii. ch. 3, l. 45. β. Wonders is formed by adding s (an adv. suffix, as in need-s) to wonder used as an adv. or adj.; Chaucer has 'wonder diligent,' C. T. 485 (A 483); Gower has 'such a wonder syhte,' C. A. l. 121, bk. i. 235. Wonder became an adj. through the use of the AS. wunderlic, adj., wonderful, as an adv.; thus Chaucer has 'wonderly deliver,' C. T. 841; so also 'so wonderly sorc,' Tale of Gaielny, 266 (late editions, wonderously). γ. Hence the history of the word is clear; the AS. wunderlic, adj., became ME. wonderly, adv., whence ME. wonder, adj. and adv., lengthened to wonders, adv. and adj., and to wonderly, adv.; the double use of -ly, both as an adjectival and adverbial suffix, being a lasting cause of confusion. ¶ The spurious poem called Chaucer's Dream has the word wondrous, l. 1898, but the MSS. are of late date. Hence wondrous-ly, wonderous-ness.

WONT, used or accustomed. (E.) In Anglia, xi. 493, Hupe suggests that the phr. wont to (accustomed to) arose from the ME. plur. wone to, where wone was properly an adj. (AS. gewun, adj., gewuna, adj.), with the sense of 'accustomed.' This ME. wone occurs (without to) in Genesis and Exodus, 1530, Iavelok, 2297; but in Cursor Mundi, 3646, where 3 MSS. have wont to, the Cotton MS. has wonto (sic). At the same time, it is clear that ME. wone, adj., was confused with ME. woned, the pp. of wonen, to dwell, to be used to. We also find that wont came to be used as a sb.; and then, by way of distinction, a new form wont-ed was evolved, to keep up the pp. use. Hence wont-ed (= won-ed-ed) has the suffix -ed twice over! [For wont, sb., and wont-ed, see the end of the article.] 'As they were wont [accustomed] to doze;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1195 g. 'She neuer was to swiche gestes woned' = she was never accustomed to such guests, Chaucer, C. T. 8215 (E 339). 'Thou wert ay wont ech lover reprehende' = thou wert ever wont to reprehend each lover, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 510. Woned is the pp. of ME. wonen, wonien, to dwell, be accustomed to; in Chaucer, C. T. 7745 (D 2163), it means simply 'to dwell,' but the sense 'to be accustomed' was easily (in AS. times) introduced from the related adj. wone (above). Cf. AS. wunod, pp. of wunian, to dwell, remain, continue in, Grein, ii. 753; also gewunian, to dwell, to be accustomed to. 'Swā swā he gewunade' = as he was accustomed (lit. as he wont), Mark, x. 17; cf. 'whom we wont to fear,' 1 Hen. VI. i. 2. 14. A weak verb, allied to the sb. wuna, custom, use, wont, commonly spelt gewuna, Luke, i. 9, ii. 27. Allied to AS. wun-, weak grade of wunian, to strive after, orig. to desire; see Win. Wont, sb., is 'a thing desired,' a habit due to acquiescence in what seems pleasant. β. Cf. Icel. vannr, adj., accustomed, used (to a thing), vani, a usage, whence vandi, a custom, habit, venja, to accustom (pt. i. vandi, vandi, pp. vandir, vannin) = E. wan; see Wan. So also (in connexion with OIlg. gewinnen) we find MHG. gewon, OIlg. giwon, adj., accustomed to, MHG. gewon, OIlg. giwon, usage, MHG. gewonen, to be used to, gewonlich, customary; G. gewohnen, to be used to, pp. gewohnt, wont, wohnen, to dwell. See Fick, iii. 287. Der. wont, sb., Hamlet, i. 4. 6, employed in place of ME. wone, sb., by confusion with wont above. Also wont-ed, used as a pt. by Surrey instead of wont; 'Of me, that wonted to rejoice,' Complaint of the Absence of her Louer, l. 5, in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 15; so also Palsgrave gives wont as a verb, 'I wonte or use'; it is no wysdom to wont a thing that is not honest'; and hence wonted as a pp. or adj., Mids. Wt. Dr. ii. 1. 113, iii. 2. 369.

WOO, to sue, court, ask in order to marriage. (E.) Spelt wo in Palsgrave; but Spenser retains the old spelling woue, F. Q. vi. 11. 4. ME. wogen, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 546; later wouen (by change of o to u), P. Plowman, B. iv. 74. AS. wogian, to woo, occurring in the comp. wogian, to woo, Ælfric's Saints Lives, vii. 14 (E.E.T.S.). Hence the sb. wogere, a wooer; 'Procus, wogere,' Voc. 171. 6. The lit. sense is simply to bend, incline; hence to incline another towards oneself = AS. wōk (declensional stem wōg-, pl. wōge), bent, curved, crooked; Grein, ii. 731. Cf. wōk, sb., a bending aside, turning aside, iniquity; wōk-bogen, bowed in a curve, bent; id. β. The AS. wōk (Teut. type wank-*), bent, is cognate with Goth. wāks, bent, only occurring in un-wāks, straight, blameless, Luke, i. 6. = WANK, to go tortuously, be crooked; whence also Skt. vañk, to go tortuously, be crooked; cf. also vañra-, crooked, l. uacillare, to vacillate, and perhaps OSax. wāh, evil, W. gwah, worse. See Vacillate. Der. woo-er, ME. wouere, P. Plowman, B. xi. 71. AS. wogere, as above.

WOOD (1), a collection of growing trees, timber. (E.) ME. wode, Chaucer, C. T. 1424 (A 1422). AS. wudu, Grein, ii. 745; but the orig. form was widn; id. 692. + Icel. viðr, a tree, wood; Dan. ved; Swed. ved; MHG. wite, OIlg. witu. β. The Teut. type is widuz*, wood. Cf. also Old Irish fid, Irish fid, a wood, a tree; fodais, shrubs, underwood; Gael. fidh, timber, wood, a wilderness, fidhach, shrubs, W. guydd, trees, guyddeli, bushes, brakes. See Stokes-Fick, pp. 265, 280. Der. wood-bine or wood-bynd, spell woodynde in Palsgrave, wodebynde in Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, 1508 (1510 in Tyrwhitt), AS. wudebinde, used to translate hedera nigra in Voc. 137, 5; so called because it blinds or winds round trees; cf. AS. wudwinde, lit. wood-wind, used to tr. viuorna, id. 270, 16. Also wood-coal; wood-cock, AS. wodeuco, Voc. 258, 5 (note Guernsey widco, a woodcock); wood-craft, ME. wodecraft, Chaucer, C. T. 110; wood-cut; wood-dome, ME. wode-dome, Chaucer, C. T. 13700 (B 1960); wood-engraving; wood-land, ME. wodeland, Layamon, 1699; wood-lark; wood-man, Cymb. iii. 6, 28, spell woodman in Palsgrave; wood-nymph; wood-pecker, Palsgrave; wood-pigeon; wood-ruff, q.v. Also wood-ed; wood-en, i.e. made of wood, K. Lear, ii. 3, 16; wood-y, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6, 18.

WOOD (2), mad, furious. (E.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 192. ME. wood, wid (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 184. AS. wūd, mad, raging, Grein, ii. 730; whence wudin (< wudian), to be mad, 553. + Icel. ōtr, raging, frantic; Goth. wūds, mad. And cf. Du. woede, G. wuth, MHG. wunt, madness. β. The Teut. type is wīdoz*, adj., wood, frantic. Perhaps allied, as Fick suggests (iii. 308), to L. uītes, a prophet, poet, one who is filled with divine frenzy, Olrish fiūth, a prophet. Hence (perhaps) the name Widen, applied to the highest of the Teutonic divinities. Der. Wed-ned-day, q.v.

WOODRUFF, the name of a plant. (E.) Spelt wodroffe in Palsgrave. ME. wodruffe, Voc. 712, 28; woderffe, 566, 20. AS. woderf, id. 133, 30; also wuderf. See Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 412, where it is shown that it was not only applied to the Asperula odorata (as at present), but also to Aspidelus ramosus; and it is also called astula (hasstula) regia in glosses. The former part of the word is AS. wudu, a wood; the sense of rūfe is uncertain, but the ō was long; compare the sound of blood from AS. blōd, and note the form woodroff in Britten's Plant-names. As AS. ō answers to OHG. uo, the AS. rūfe is equivalent to OHG. raufe, adj. fragrant. Hence the probable sense is 'fragrant wood-plant'; well answering to the L. name Asperula odorata, which alludes to its sweet scent. So does the F. name maugre.

WOODWALE, the name of a bird. (E.) Also called witwail and even witail; see WITTO. Cotgrave explains F. ariol or ariol as 'a highlough or witwail'. [The form witwail was not borrowed from G., but stands for widwail; the old form of AS. wudu being widw.] ME. wodewale, the same as wodehake (i.e. wood-hatch or wood-hack, a woodpecker), Prompt. Parv.; Rom. of the Rose, 658; used to translate OF. ariol, W. de Bibbesworth, in Wright, Voc. I. 166 (13th century); Owl and Nightingale, 1657. Not found in AS. + MDu. weduwael, 'a kindle of a yellow bird'; Hexham; G. witwail, a yellow thrush; MHG. witwail, an oriole (Schade). β. The former element is certainly AS. wudu, wudu, ME. wode, a wood; just as MHG. witwail is from MHG. witr, a wood. Cf. ME. wodehake, above, and E. woodpecker. But the sense of the latter element has not been explained; it may mean 'stranger', from AS. wealh. Schade suggests the same sense of 'stranger in the wood from the South' for the OHG. name. The MDu. weduwael may be compared with MDu. Wael, a Celt, the same word as AS. wealh, and therefore 'stranger'. Doublet, witwail, q.v.

WOOF, the weft, the threads crossing the warp in woven cloth. (E.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 152. A corruption of ME. oof, due to a supposed connexion (which happens to be right, but not in the way which popular etymology would suggest) with the vb. to weave and the sb. weft. 'Oof', threde for webynyng, Trama, stamen, subtegm; Prompt. Parv. So also in Wyclif. Levit. xiii. 47, earlier version (cited in Way's note). AS. woef, a woof. *Cladica, weft, vel woef'; Voc. 12, 23 (8th century). *Cladica is the dimin. of Late L. clada, a woven hurdle, and weft is clearly a variant of weft; so that there can be no doubt as to the sense of woef. Somewhat commoner is the parallel form weob or weob, frequently contracted to āb; and this word has precisely the same sense. *Subtlemen, weob immediately follows 'Stamen, weap', i.e. the warp, in Voc. 262, 20; 'Trama, vel subtlemen, weob, vel āb'; id. 188, 12; 'Linostema, linen weap, vel weob [woollen] āb'; id. 151, 18; where Mr. Wright adds the note: 'the yarn of a weaver's warp is, I believe, still called an āb'. [For weap we should doubtless read woef.] β. The words woef, and weob or weob are compounds, containing the prefix ā (as in ā-wefan, to weave, see A- (4) and Weave) or ō-, short form of on, prep. Also woef and weob are both sb., meaning 'web', from weaf, i.e. on-weaf. Thus the word woof, for oof, is short for ō-woef or on-woef, i.e. on-weaf, the web that is laid on or thrown across the first set of threads or warp. See On and Weave.

WOOL, the short thick hair of sheep and other animals. (E.) ME. wolle, P. Plowman, B. v. 13. AS. wull, wul. 'Lana, wul'; Voc. 294, 19; wull, id. 190, 25. + Du. wol; id. wol (for wulf); Dan. wild (for wil or wull); Swed. wil; G. wolle, OHG. wolta; Goth. wulla. β. The Teut. type is wollā*, f., which is certainly an assimilated form for wolnā*, with Idg. suffix -nā, as shown by the cognate words, viz. Lithuan. wilna, Russ. wolna, Skt. ārnā, wool; cf. also Olrish olann, W. gylan; and perhaps Gk. λῆνος (for λῆνος), L. lana, wool. Brugmann, i. §§ 317, 524 (2); Stokes-Fick, p. 276. The same assimilation appears in L. uillus, shaggy hair, uillus, a fleece. Der. wool-en, ME. wollen, P. Plowman, B. v. 215, AS. wyllen (with the usual vowel-change from u to y), Voc. 151, 17; woll-y, Merch. Ven. i. 3, 84; wool-monger, ME. wolmongere, Rob. of Glouc. p. 539, l. 11173; woolpack, ME. wolpak, same page, l. 18; wool-sack, l. 1121, IV, il. 4, 148, ME. wolleak, Gower, C. A. i. 99; bk. l. 1692. Also wool-gathering (Halliwell), idly roving (said of the thoughts), as if gathering wool scattered on the hedges. Also woolward, q.v.

WOOLWARD, clothed in wool only. (E.) 'I have no shirt, I go woolward for penance,' L. L. L. v. 2. 717; on which Dr. Schmidt says: 'Woolward, in wool only, without linen, a dress often enjoined as a penance by the church of Rome.' ME. woolward, wolward, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 1; Pricke of Conscience, 3514; P. Plowman's Crede, 788. See four more examples in Nares, and his note upon the word. 'To goo woolward and barfott'; Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 150. Palsgrave, in his list of adverbs: 'Wolward, without any linnen nexte one's body, sans chemyse.' I have elsewhere explained this as 'with the wool next one's skin'; I should rather have said 'with the skin against the wool', though the result is practically much the same. This is Stratmann's explanation; he gives: 'woolward, cutis lanum versus.' Cf. home-ward, heaven-ward. See Wool and Ward. A like phrase occurs in French. 'Asses souvent lessa le linge Et si frota le do au lunge'; l. i.e. Very often she left off her linen [chemise], and rubbed her back against her woollen garment; Rutebeuf, il. 157, cited by Littré, s.v. lunge.

¶ To the above explanation, viz. that wool-ward = against the wool, with reference to the skin, which agrees with all that has been said by Nares and others, I adhere. In an edition of books iii and iv of Ileda's Eccl. History, by Mayor and Lumby, Cambridge, 1878, p. 347, is a long note on this phrase, with references to Jp. Fisher's Works, ed. Mayor, pt. i. p. 181, l. 13; Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, pt. iii. sect. 4. memb. 1. subsect. 2, and subsect. 3; Christ's Own Complaint, ed. Furnivall (E. F. T. S.), l. 502; Myroure of Our Lady (E. F. T. S.), p. li, where we read of St. Bridget that 'she neuer used any linnen clothe though it weer in tyme of syknes but only vpon hir heid, and next hir skyn she weer eyer rough and sharpe wolen cloth.' The note further corrects my explanation 'with the wool towards the skin,' because this 'would only suit with a clothing made of the fleece as it came from the sheep's back'; and I have amended my explanation accordingly. It then goes on: 'ward is weerd, the pp. of AS. werian, to wear, and woolward means "wool-clad," just as in Beowulf, 666, swegwæred means "clad in brightness"; scirwæred and enlawæred may be cited as other examples of this pp. in composition. It has fared with woolward, when it became a solitary example of this compound, as it did with rightwise under similar circumstances. The love for uniform orthography made this latter word into rightness, and woolward into woolward to conform to the shape of forward, &c. The use of go is the same as in go bare, naked, calit, &c. This is ingenious, but by no means proven, and I beg leave to reject it. The suffix -weerd is extremely rare; swegwæred and scirwæred each occur only once, and only in poetry, and even Grein can only guess at the sense of them; whilst caldwæred has nothing to do with the matter, as it means 'worn out by old age'; Ettmüller, p. 4. There is no such word as wulward in AS., or wolver in ME.; and it is a long jump of many centuries from these doubtful compounds with -weerd in AS. poetry to the first appearance of wolward (always so spelt) in the 14th century.

WOON, a governor, officer. (Burmese.) Burm. wun, a governor, or officer of administration; lit. 'a burden,' hence presumably the 'bearer of the burden' (Yule).

WORD, an oral utterance or written sign, expressing thought; talk, message, promise. (E.) ME. word, pl. wordes, Chaucer, C. T. 315 (A 313). AS. worð, neut. sb., pl. word, Grein, ii. 732. + Du. woord; Icel. orð (for word*); Dan. and Swed. ord; G. wort; Goth. waurd. β. The Teut. type is worðon*, n. Cognate with Lithuan. wardas, a name, L. uērōn (base uerk), a word, a verb; the Idg. type being worðom*, n. From WEK*, to speak; whence Gk. ειπερ, to speak; so that the lit. sense is 'a thing spoken.' Cf. Gk. φητωρ, a speaker, from the same root. Der. word, vb., to speak, Cymb. iv. 2. 240, ME. worden, P. Plowman, B. iv. 46; word-les, Lucrece, 112; word-ing; word-y, ME. wordi, Wyclif, Job, xvi. 21 (earlier version); word-i-ness. Also word-book, a dictionary, prob. imitated from Du. woordenboek, G. wörterbuch. And see rhetoric. Brugmann, i. § 89. Doublet, verb.

WORK, a labour, effort, thing done or written. (E.) ME. werk, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 481 (A 479). AS. weorc, werc, Grein, ii. 677. †Du. werk; Icel. verk; Dan. værk; Swed. verk; G. werk, OHG. werch, werah. β. All from Teut. type werkon*, n. work; which from Teut. base WERK, Idg. √WERG-, to work. Hence also Gk. ἐργα, I have wrought, ἐργάω (= ἐργάω), to do, work, ἐργον, a work, ἐργαστήριον, an instrument, organ, ἐργα, orgies; Zend varza, a working, varzāna, a making (cited by Fick); cf. Pers. warz, gain, profit, acquisition, habit, warzad, he studies or labours, warz-kār, a ploughman (lit. work-doer), warz-gūw, an ox for ploughing (lit. work-ox); warzak, agriculture; Rich. Diet. p. 1638. Der. werc, verb, ME. werchen, wirchen, Chaucer, C. T. 2761 (A 2759), pt. t. wrought, id. 499 (A 497), pp. wrought, id. 16800 (G 1332), from AS. wiercan, wyrcean (with the usual vowel-change to ie or y), pt. t. wrohte, pp. gewroht, Grein, ii. 759; cognate with Goth. wurkjan, Teut. type work-jan*-, from Idg. worg*, second grade of √WERG; cf. Organ. Also work-able (from the verb); and (from the sb.) work-day, ME. werk-dei (trisyllabic), Ancren Riwle, p. 20, l. 7, AS. werc-dæg, Wright's Voc. i. 37; work-house, AS. worc-hūs (L. officina), Voc. 185, 3; work-man, ONorthumb. wercmann, Matt. x. 10 (Lindisfarne MS.); work-man-like; work-man-ship, ME. werkemanskip, P. Plowman, B. x. 288; work-shop. Also worht, q.v. And see en-erg-y, lit-urg-y, metall-urg-y, chir-urg-eon, s-urg-eon, organ.

WORLD, the earth and its inhabitants, the system of things, present state of existence, a planet, society. (E.) ME. werld, Genesis and Exodus, l. 42; world, world, P. Plowman, B. prol. 19; also spelt worlde, Aynbite of Inwyrt, p. 7, l. 10; werld, Havelok, 1290; ward, Lancelot of the Laik, 3184. AS. weoruld, weoruld, weoruld, werld, werld, Grein, ii. 684. †Du. wereld; Icel. verld (gen. veraldar); Dan. verden (for verld-en, where en is really the postposed def. article); Swed. werld; G. welt, MIIG. werlt, OIIG. werolt. β. The cognate forms show clearly that the word is a composite one. It is composed of AS. wer, cognate with Icel. ver, OIIG. wer, Goth. wair, a man, L. uir, a man; and OMerc. aldw (AS. ieldw), cognate with Icel. ild, Goth. alds, an age; see Virile and Eld. Thus the sense is 'age of man' or 'course of man's life', whence it came to mean lifetime, course of life, experience of life, usages of life, &c.; its sense being largely extended. The sb. eld is a derivative from the adj. old, as shown s.v.; and is well exhibited also in the curious Dan. hedenold, the heathen age, heathen times, from heden, a heathen. γ. We may compare AS. weoruld with wer and aldw; Icel. verld with ver and ild; OHG. weralt with wer and a sb. formed from alt, old; hence the word is a very old one, formed in times previous to all record of any Teutonic speech; really from a Teut. type wer-ald-*. Der. world-ly, AS. weoruld-lic, Grein, ii. 687; world-li-ness; world-ly-mind-ed, world-ly-mind-ed-ness; world-ling, with double dlinh. suffix, AS. You Like It, ii. t. 48.

WORM, a small creeping animal. (E.) Formerly applied to a snake of the largest size; cf. blind-worm. ME. worm; pl. wormes, Chaucer, C. T. 10931 (F 617). AS. wyrn, a worm, snake, dragon; Grein, ii. 763. †Du. worm; Icel. ormr (for wormr*); Dan. and Swed. orm (for worm*); G. wurm; Goth. waurms. β. The Teut. type is wurmiz*, Idg. type wormis*; cf. L. vermis, a worm. Brugmann, i. § 371; ii. § 97. Probs. allied to Gk. πόρπος (for φόρπος), an earthworm. Der. worm, verb; worm-y. Allied words are veru-ine, veru-icular, worm-icell. (But not wormwood.)

WORMWOOD, a very bitter plant. (E.) The suffix -wood is corrupt, due to confusion with wood, in order to make it sound more intelligible. We find the spelling wormwood as early as the 15th century. β. Hoc absinthium, wormwood; Voc. 711, 24. But only a little earlier (early 15th century), we find wermod, id. 645, 35. AS. wermod; β. Absinthium, wermod, in a glossary of the 8th century; Voc. 2, 15-4. Du. wormoot, 'worm wood'; β. Hexham, G. wermuth, MIIG. wermute, OHG. wermuta, wermuta. β. It is thus evident that the word is doubly corrupt, and has no more to do with worm than it has with wood; the G. forms show clearly that the division of the AS. word is wer-mōd. [It is quite distinct from AS. wyrn-wort, Scythian alban or ullosium; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 411.] Mr. Cockayne, Leechdoms, i. 217, supposes AS. wermod to mean 'ware-moth'; i. e. that which keeps off moths; but mōd is not 'a moth', and words like 'ware-moth', in which the former part is verbal, are not found in AS. γ. The fullest forms are AS. wer-mōd, Voc. 296, 24; OIIG. weri-muota, weri-muot, as if the sense were 'manly courage'; see Werwolf. But the orig. sense remains unknown.

WORRY, to harass, tease. (E.) The old sense was to seize by the throat, or strangle, as when a dog worries a rat or sheep. ME. worwen, wirien; also wery, Rom. of the Rose, 6264; also wyrywn or worwen, and explained by 'strangulo, suffoco,' Prompt. Parv.; worow, used of lions and wolves that worry men, Pricke of Conscience, 1229; pp. worrewed, wirised, Havelok, 1915, 1921. The theoretical ME. type is wurgen* (Stratmann), which passed, as usual, into wurwen, worwen, or wirwen, and other varieties; the second w is usually due (in such a position) to an older 3, and answers to AS. g. The various vowels point back to AS. y, so that the AS. form must have been wyrgan. AS. wyrgan, found in the gloss: 'strangulat, wyrgeþ'; Corpus Gloss. 1926. †Du. worgen, to strangle, whence worg, quinsy; OFries. wergia, wirgia, to strangle; Low G. worgen; G. würgen, OHG. wurgan, to strangle, suffocate, choke; as in Wölfe würgen die Schafe, wolves worry the sheep, Flügel. β. These verbs are secondary forms, due to the Teut. str. verb wergan*-, found in MHG. wergen, ir-wergen, to strangle. The Teut. base is werg*-, from Idg. √WERGII; as in Lithuan. wersz-ti, to strangle, to oppress; cf. Slav. base verz-, to bind fast, in Miklosich. Brugmann, i. § 624. Cf. Wring.

WORSE, comp. adj. and adv., more bad; WORST, superl. adj. and adv., most bad. (E.) 1. ME. wurs, wors, wers, adv.; wurse, worse, werse (properly dissyllabic), adj. 'Now is my prison wers than before'; Chaucer, C. T. 1226 (A 1224). [Hence perhaps the suggestion of the double comp. wors-er, Temp. iv. 27.] 'Me is the wers' = it is the worse for me; Owl and Nightingale, l. 34. We find also ME. werre, worse, spelt also woorre, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1588; this is a Scand. form, due to assimilation. AS. wyrs, adv.; wyrsa, wirsa, adj.; Grein, ii. 765. †OSax. wirs, adv.; wirsa, adj.; OFries. wirra, werra, adj. (for wirsa*, werra*, by assimilation); Icel. verr, adv.; verri, adj. (for wers*, werri*); Dan. verre, adj.; Swed. värre, adj.; MHG. wirs, adv.; wirser, adj.; Goth. wairs, adv.; wairsa, adj. β. In Gothic, -iza is a common suffix in comparatives, as in hard-iza, harder, from hard, hard; and it answers to mod. E. -er. The common Teut. type is wersizōn*, adj., where -izon is the comparative suffix. The base is wers-*, perhaps to twist, entangle, confuse; whence also OIIG. werran, G. wirren, to twist, entangle. See War. γ. The same base wers* (assimilated to werr*) occurs perhaps in L. verre, verb, pt. t. verri, pp. verisus, to whirl, toss about, drive, sweep along, sweep; cf. 1. Lucetius, v. 1226. 2. The superl. form presents no difficulty. ME. worst, worst, adv.; worste, werste, adj., Gower, C. A. i. 25; prol. 641. AS. wyrst, adv., wyrsta, adj. (Grein); this is a contracted form of wyrsta, which appears as wyrresta (by assimilation) in Matt. xii. 45. †OSax. wirssta, adj.; Icel. verst, adv., verstr, adj.; Dan. verst; Swed. värst; OIIG. wirist, wirist, contracted form wirist. The Teut. type is wers-iz-oz*.

¶ It is now seen that the s is part of the base or root; worse really does duty for wors-er, which was in actual use in the 16th century; and wors-t is short for wors-est. Der. worse, verb, Milton, P. l. vi. 440, ME. worsen, Ancren Riwle, p. 326, AS. wyrrian, properly intrans., to grow worse, A. S. Chron. an. 1085; wors-en, verb, to make worse, Milton, Of Reformation in England, b. 1 (R.); wors-en, to grow worse (Craven dialect). Also worst, verb, to defeat, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 878; this answers to ME. würsien above (AS. wyrrian), and is a form due to the usual excrement t after s (as in among-st, whil-st, &c.) rather than formed from the superlative.

WORSHIP, honour, respect, adoration. (E.) Short for worship-ship; the th was not lost till the 14th century. Spelt worship, P. Plowman, B. iii. 332; but worshippe (= worshippe), Aynbite of Inwyrt, p. 8, l. 8 (A. d. 1340). AS. weorðscipe, worðscipe, honour; Grein, ii. 683. Formed with suffix -scipe (E. -ship) from AS. weorð, worð, adj., worthy, honourable; cf. L. dignus from the adj. dignus. See Worth (1). Der. worship, verb, ME. worðschipen, spelt worðschipen in St. Katharine, l. 55 (so in the MS., but printed worðschipen); not found in AS. Also worship-ful, spelt worþssful, Aynbite of Inwyrt, p. 80, l. 22; worship-ful-ly.

WORST, adj. and verb; see under Worse.

WORSTED, twisted yarn spun out of long, combed wool. (E.) ME. worsted, Chaucer, C. T. 264 (A 262). So named from the town of Worsted, now Worstead, not far to the N. of Norwich, in Norfolk. Probably not older than the time of Edward III, who invited over Flemish weavers to improve our woollen manufactures. It is mentioned as early as 1348; see Archaeologia, xxxi. 78. Chaucer is perhaps the earliest author who mentions it. β. Worsted: these first took their name from Worsted, a village in this country; γ. Fuller, Worthies, Norfolk (R.). β. Worsted stands for Worhsted: this we know from Charter no. 785 in Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, iv. 111, where the name appears as Worhstede, and w-wu, as in other instances. The AS. worð, weorð, worth, value, was also used in the sense of 'estate' or 'manor', and appears in place-names, such as Sawbridge-worth, Richman-worth; however, in the sense of 'estate', the usual form is worðig, and this may suit the AF. form Worhstede, if the former e represents an earlier -ig. The AS. stede = mod. E. stead, or place. Hence Worsted means 'the place of an estate'; see Worth and Stead.

WORT (1), a plant. (E.) Orig. the general E. name for 'plant'; plant being a Latin word. ME. wort; pl. wortes, Chaucer, C. T.

15227 (B 4411). AS. wyrt, a wort; Grein, ii. 765. +OSax. wurt; Icel. wrt (for wurt); also spelt jurt, borrowed from Low G.; Dan. wrt; Swed. ört. G. wurz; Goth. wurts. β . All from Teut. type wurtiz*, f.; Idg. type wurdiz*. Allied to W. gureiddyn, a root; Olirish frem, a root; also to Icel. röt, a root, L. radix, Gk. ῥίζα, a root; πάρις, a young shrub. Brugmann, i. §§ 550, 529; a plant, herb, Fick, iii. 294. See further under Root (1). Der. mug-wort, and other plant-names in which wort is suffixed; also wort (2). Allied to radix, liquorice, &c.

WORT (2), an infusion of malt, new beer unfermented or while being fermented. (E.) ME. wort or worte, (Chaucer, C. T. 16281 (G 813). 'Hoc idiomellum, Anglice worte;' Voc. 772. 2. AS. wyrt, in the comp. māx-wyrt, lit. mash-wort, an infusion of worts; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 216, 399. Here wyrt seems to be a peculiar use of the wyrt given under Wort (1); but the G. würze (below) is derived from wurz, a wort. Cf. also MDu. wort, 'wort, or new beer before it be clarified,' Ilexham; wurte, 'a root or a wort,' id.; Low G. wört. Also Icel. wirt; Norweg. wirt, vört, Asen; Swed. vört; G. hier-würze, beer-wort, allied to wurz, a wort, herb, whence würze, seasoning, spice, würzsuppe, spiced soup, &c. β . The Icel. virt, MHG. wirz, which differs in the vowel, are from a Teut. base wert-, which differs in gradation from wurtiz, a wort, but is closely related to it.

WORTH (1), equal in value to, deserving of; as sb., desert, price. (E.) ME. worþ, worth, adj., worthy, honourable, Will. of Palerne, 2522, 2990; Rob. of Glouc. p. 364, l. 7547. Also worþ, worþ, ill-spelt worthe in P. Plowman, B. iv. 170; but worþ in Rob. of Glouc. p. 373, l. 3674. AS. weyrðe, adj., a mutated by-form of weorþ, adj., valuable; weyrð, by-form of weorþ, sb., value. +Du. waard, adj.; waarde, sb.; Icel. verðr, adj.; verðr, sb.; Dan. verdt, adj. and sb.; Swed. värd, adj.; värde, sb.; G. wert, MHG. wert, adj. and sb.; Goth. weirþis, adj. and sb. β . All from Teut. type werthoz*, adj., valuable. This word is probably to be divided as wer-thoz*; note also Lith. wer-tas, worthy (probably borrowed from Teutonic). Also of G. werth (type wer-tas*), value, price; allied to L. ver-eri, to respect. Prob. from \sqrt{WER} , to guard, keep; see Ware (1). Der. worth-y, spelt werrþi, Ormulum, 2705, werrþiz, id. 4200. AS. wyrðig, adj., Alfred, tr. of Orosius, vi. 2 (the AS. weorþig or worþig only occurs as a sb. meaning an estate); hence worthi-ly, worthi-ness; worth-less, worth-less-ly, ness. Also worþ-ship.

WORTH (2), to become, to be. (E.) Now only in the phr. wo worth the day (=evil be to the day). ME. woorþen, to become; formerly common. In P. Plowman's Crede, a short poem of 850 (long) lines, it occurs 8 times; as 'schent mot I woorþen' = I must be blamed, l. 9; 'two mote you woorþen' = may evil be to (or happen) to you; and see P. Plowman, B. prol. 187, i. 186, ii. 43, iii. 33, v. 160, vi. 165, vii. 51. AS. weorþan, to become, also spelt weorðan, wyrðan; pt. t. weorð, pt. warden; Grein, ii. 678. +Lth. worðen, pt. t. werd, pp. geworðen; Icel. verða, pt. t. verð, pp. orðinn, to become, happen, come to pass; Dan. verde; Swed. värda; G. werden, OHG. werdan; Goth. weirþan, pt. t. weirþ, pp. weirþans. β . All from Teut. type werthan-* (pt. t. weirþ*, pp. weirþans*), to become, turn to; allied to L. uertere, to turn, uertere, to turn to. - \sqrt{WERT} , to turn; see Verse. Der. wierd, q.v.

WOT, I know, or he knows; see Wit (1). Der. not (2).

WOULD; see Will (1).

WOUND, a hurt, injury, cut, bruise. (E.) ME. wounde, Chaucer, C. T. 1012 (A 1010). AS. wund, Grein, ii. 750. +Dn. wound, or wounde; Icel. und (for wund); Dan. wunde; G. wunde; OHG. wunda. β . All from Teut. type wundā*, f., a wound. We find also an older type in the Teut. adj. wundiz*, wounded, appearing in G. wund, OHG. wunt, Goth. wunds, wounded. β . The type wund-dz* seems to answer to an Idg. type wund-ús*, formed with a pp. suffix from wund-, weak grade of Teut. wunnan- (for wennan-*), a verb signifying 'to fight' or 'suffer', represented in AS. by winnan, to strive, fight, suffer, pp. wunnen. See Win. Der. wound, verb, AS. wundian, Grein, ii. 751. Cf. won.

WOURALI, OURALI, OORALI, OURARI, CURARI, a resinous substance, extracted from the Strychnos toxifera, used for poisoning arrows, &c. (Guiana). 'The hiliti ourali;' Tennyson, In the Children's Hospital, l. 10. And see Waterson's Wanderings. From 'ourali', written also woarali, wurli, wurari, curare, &c., according to the pronunciation of the various tribes; 'W. H. Brett, Indian Tribes of Guiana, 1868, p. 140. It is spelt wourari in Stedman's Surinam (1796), i. 395; ourari in Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 689, last col.

WRACK, a kind of sea-weed; shipwreck, ruin. (E.) Wrack, as a name for sea-weed, merely means 'that which is cast ashore,' like things from a wrecked ship. This is well shown by mod. F. varack, which has both senses, (1) sea-weed cast on shore, and (2) pieces of a wrecked ship cast on shore; this F. word being merely borrowed from English. Cotgrave has F. varack, 'a sea-wrack or wreck, all that is cast land by chance or tempest.' Shak. has wrack, shipwreck, destruction, ruin, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 110; Macb. i. 3. 114, &c. ME. wrak, a wreck, Chaucer, C. T. (Six-text edition), Group B, l. 513; where Tyrrwhitt prints wrecke, l. 4933. AS. urae, 'what is driven,' Lat. 'actuarius,' O. E. Texts, p. 37; cf. urac, banishment, exile, misery, Grein, ii. 738. From wrak*, 2nd grade of Teut. wrek-an-*; the sense is immediately due to the orig. verb, AS. wreacan (pt. t. wraec), to drive, expel, cast forth; so that urae is here to be taken in the sense of 'that which is driven ashore.' The AS. wreacan also means to wreak, punish; see Wreak. And see Wreck. +Du. wrak, sb., a wreck; adj., cracked, broken; cf. wraken, to reject; cf. Icel. rek (for wrek), also rek, anything drifted or driven ashore, from reka (for wreka), to drive. Cf. Dan. vrag, wreck, wrage, to reject, Swed. wrak, wreck, refuse, trash; all from Dutch. Doublets, wreck, rack (4).

WRAITH, an apparition. (E.) 'Wraith, an apparition in the likeness of a person, supposed to be seen soon before, or soon after death. . . . The apparition called a wraith was supposed to be that of one's guardian angel;' Jamieson. He adds that the word is used by King James I (Demonology; Works, p. 125). G. Douglas translates figuras (Aen. x. 641) by 'wraiths of goists;' and umbræ (Aen. x. 593) by wraithis (also written wraithis). Note that the wraith of Æneas was formed of a cloud (Aen. x. 636); and wraith or wreth may be the same word as wreath; cf. prov. E. snow-wreath, a mass of drifted snow. Cf. Milton, P. L. vi. 58. See Wreath. β . The Ayrshire wraith, an apparition, may be a different word, and allied to the curious Norw. wardyle [=ward-evil?], a guardian or attendant spirit, a fairy or spirit said to go before or follow a man, also considered as an omen or a boding spirit (Aasen); which seems to be allied to E. ward, to guard. But there is also a prov. E. swarth, with the same sense.

WRANGLE, to dispute, argue noisily. (E.) ME. wranglen, a various reading for wradlen (to wrestle), in P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80. The sb. wrangling is in P. Plowman, B. iv. 34. A frequentative formed from AS. wrang, 2nd grade of Teut. wring-*, as seen in AS. wringan, to press. Thus the orig. sense was to keep on pressing, to urge; hence to argue vehemently. Cf. Low G. wranghen, to wrestle (Schambach); G. ringen, to wrestle; Dan. wringle, to twist, entangle; Norw. rangla, to begin to quarrel. See Wring. Der. wrangle, sb.; wrangl-er, a disputant in the schools (at Cambridge), now applied (till 1900) to a first-class man in the mathematical tripos; wrangl-ing.

WRAP, to fold, infold, cover by folding round. (E.) ME. wrappen, Chaucer, C. T. 10950; Will. of Palerne, 745. [We also find a form welapen, Wyllif, Luke, ii. 7, John, xx. 7, now spelt lap; see Lap (3).] Cf. Prov. E. warp, to wrap up, Somersetshire (Haliwell), also to weave; also, to lace together the ends of a fishing-net (F. D. 1.); warpie, to entangle, id. Not found in AS. Cf. North Frisian wraþe, to press into, to stop up. β . The form of the word suggests a connexion with Warp, q.v. G. Douglas has wurfit about (L. cingit) to translate Virgil, Aen. i. 112; wurpit (L. cinet), Aen. v. 774; wurpit my head = wrapped up my head, Trol. to Aen. vii. 95. Perhaps the sense was due to the folding together of a fishing-net; cf. Icel. varp, the cast of a net, varpa, a cast, also the net itself; skóvarp, lit. 'a shoe-warp,' the binding of a shoe; Swed. dial. varpa, a fine herring-net (Kietz). Der. wraþt-er, sb.

WRATH, anger, indignation. (E.) ME. wraþhe, wralthe, P. Plowman, B. iv. 34; wralthe, Wyllif, Eph. iv. 31. Properly dissyllabic. AS. and ONorthumbrian wræðo, wræððo, Mark, iii. 21; Luke, xxi. 23; John, iii. 36 (both in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS.). Teut. type wraithiñz*, f., from the adj. wraithiz*, AS. wræð. The sb. is somewhat rare, but in the adj. wræð, wroth, from which it is formed, is common; see Wroth. +Icel. reiði (for wraði*), wrath, from reiðr, adj., wroth; Dan. and Swed. wrede, from wred, adj. Der. wrath-ful, King John, ii. 87; wrath-ful-ly, ness.

WREAK, to revenge, inflict (vengeance) on. (E.) ME. wreken, Chaucer, C. T. 963 (A 961); formerly a strong verb; pt. t. wrak, Tale of Gamelyn, l. 303; pp. wroken, wroke, wreken, P. Plowman, A. ii. 169, B. ii. 194. AS. wreacan, to wreak, revenge, punish, orig. to drive, urge, impel, Grūn, ii. 741; pt. t. wraec, pp. wrecen. +Du. wreken, to avenge; Icel. reka (for wreku*), pt. t. rak, pp. rekinn, to drive, thrust, repel, toss, also, to wreak vengeance; G. riehen, to avenge; OHG. rechen; Goth. wrikan, to wreak anger on, to persecute. β . All from Teut. type wrekan-, pt. t. wraek; orig. to press, urge, drive; Fick, iii. 308. Further allied to Lithuan. wargti, to suffer affliction, wurgas, affliction; Russ. warg, an enemy, foe (persecutor); L. urgere, to press, urge on, Gk. εἰργειν, for εἰφειν*, to shut in. All from \sqrt{WERG} , to press, urge; Fick, i. 773. Der. wreck, q.v.; wreck, q.v.; wretch, q.v.

WREATH, a garland. (E.) ME. wrethe, Chaucer, C. T. 2147 (A 2145). AS. wreð, a twisted band, a bandage; gewriðen mid wriðe = bound with a bandage, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, cap. xvii. p. 122, l. 16. Formed (with vowel-change from ā to æ) from AS. writh, and grade of wriðan, to writhe, twist; see Writhe. Der. wreath, verb; 'together wreathed sure', Surrey, Paraph. of Ecclesiastes, c. iv. l. 34.

WRECK, destruction, ruin, remains of what is wrecked. (E.) Formerly wrack, as in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 26. ME. wrak, Chaucer, C. T. 4933 (Group B, l. 513), where Tyrrwhitt prints wreche. In a glossary of E. Law-terms, written in the 13th c., and pr. in Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 33, we find: 'Wrec, truvare de mer', i.e. what is cast up by the sea; also wrek, Stat. Realm, i. 28 (anno 1275); also shipwrek, Thorpe, Cod. Diplom. p. 382. AS. wraec, expulsion, banishment, misery; Grein, ii. 738. The peculiar use may be due to Scand. influence; see Wraek. +Du. wrak, wreck; cf. wrak, adj., broken; Icel. rek (for wrak), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore, from reka, to drive; [1] Du. wrag, wreck, Swed. wrak, refuse, trash, wreck, from Low G. (Hamburg) wrack, a broken bit, a battered ship (Richer); Guernesey wrec. β. The lit. sense 'that which is drifted or driven ashore'; hence it properly meant pieces of ships drifted ashore, also wrack or sea-weed. Secondly, as the pieces thus driven ashore were from ships broken up by tempests, it came to mean fragments, refuse, also destruction, or ruin caused by any kind of violence, as in Shakespeare and Milton. The orig. sense of AS. wreacan was to impel, drive, persecute, expel, wreck; hence wraec in AS. poetry commonly means banishment or misery such as is endured by an exile. Der. wreck, verb; also wrack, Temp. i. 2. 236: wreckful, Shak. Sonnet 65; wreckful, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 36; wrecker, one who plunders wrecks. And see wreath.

WREN, a small bird. (E.) ME. wrenne, Gower, C. A. iii. 349; bk. viii. 2227. AS. wrenna, wrenna; G. 131. 33; 286. 16. Cf. Icel. rinill, a wren; O. Low G. wrenno, wrennill, a wren (Gallée).

WRENCH, a put it out of joint; a wrench, a wrench (Gallée). ME. wrench, sb., in the metaphorical sense of perversion, guile, fraud, deceit. 'Withouten any wrench' = without any guile, Rob. of Glouc. l. 1264. Cf. wrenche (dat. wrenche), a trick, Cursor Mundi, 13336, 29307. AS. wrence (dat. wrence), guile, fraud, deceit, Grein, ii. 742. β. It is obvious that mod. E. has preserved the orig. sense, and that the AS. and ME. uses are merely metaphorical. So also G. rank (pl. ränke), a cognate form, means an intrigue, trick, artifice, but provincially it means 'crookedness', Flügel; hence M. G. renken, G. verrenken, to wrench. [On the other hand, mod. E. only uses the allied word wrong in the metaphorical sense of perverse, bad.] Teut. type wrankiti*, lit. 'a twist'. From wrank*, and grade of wrenk*, for which see Wrinkle. Der. wrench, verb, AS. wrecean, to deceive, Grein, ii. 742; so also AS. wrecean, to obtain by fraud, A. S. Apothegms, iio. 34, pr. in Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 262.

WREST, to twist forcibly, distort. (E.) ME. wresten, in the sense to wrestle, struggle, Ancræn Riwe, p. 374, l. 7; Cursor Mundi, 19353. AS. wristan, to twist forcibly, Grein, ii. 740; cf. Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 140, l. 191. We also find AS. wrist, adj., firm, strong (Grein); the orig. sense of which is supposed to have been tightly twisted, or rather (as I should suppose) tightly strung, with reference to the strings of a harp when tightened by the instrument called a wrest; see Shak. Troil. iii. 2. 23; and note that the word strong itself merely means strung. +Icel. reista, to wrest; MDan. wreste, to wrest, Dan. wriste. β. The form wrist is closely allied to writh, a wreath or twisted bandage, and stands (probably) for Teut. wraitit-l-jaz*; from Teut. wraitil*, as in AS. writh, and grade of wriðan, to writhe or twist; see Writhe. And see Wrist. Der. wrest, sb. (as above); wrest-le, q.v.

WRESTLE, to struggle, contend by grappling together. (E.) ME. wrestlen, Gower, C. A. iii. 350, bk. viii. 2240; wrestlen, Ancræn Riwe, p. 80, l. 7. The frequentative of Wrest, q.v. The AS. wristlian, to wrestle, is rare; the form more commonly found is wristlian, Gen. xxxii. 24, whence ME. wraslen, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80, where we also find the various readings wrasle, wrasle. Still, we find: 'Luctatur [read Luctatur], wraslere; Luctatur, wristliendura'; Voc. 431. 25, 26. +MDu. wrastelen, worstelen, 'to wrestle or to strangle', Elxham. Der. wrestl-er, wrestling.

WRETCH, a miserable creature. (E.) Orig. an outcast or exile. ME. wreche, Chaucer, C. T. 933 (A 931), where Tyrrwhitt prints wretched wight, and omits which. AS. wrecca, an outcast, exile, lit. 'one driven out', also spelt wrecca, wreca, Grein, ii. 739. Cf. AS. wraec, exile. — AS. wreacan, to drive out, also to persecute, wreak, avenge; see Wreak. Cf. Lithuan. wargas, affliction, misery. Der. wretch-ed, ME. wreched, Chaucer, C. T. 933 (A 921), lit. 'made like a wretch'; wretch-ed-ly, wretch-ed-ness.

WRECKLESSNESS, a misspelling of recklessness, i.e. recklessness; see Reck.

WRIGGLE, to move along by twisting to and fro. (E.) 'With their much winding and wriggling', Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 2. § 1. The frequentative of wrig, to move about; 'The bore his taylor wrygges', Skelton, Elmore Kuning, l. 177. Allied to ME. wrikken, to twist to and fro, Life of St. Dunstan, l. 82; see Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. Not found in AS., but a Low G. word as well as Scand., and preserved in mod. E. wrick, to twist. β. We find the closely related AS. wrigian, to impel, move towards, but this became ME. wrien (with loss of g), whence mod. E. wry, adj.; see further under Wry and Wring. ME. wrikken and AS. wrigian are closely related forms. +Du. wriggelen, to wriggle; frequentative of wrikken, 'to move or stir to and fro', Sewel; whence onwrikbaar, immovable, steady; Low G. (Westphalian) wriggeln, to wriggle, to loosen by moving to and fro; (Hamburg) wrickeln, to wriggle; Low G. wriggeln, to wriggle (Dannell); wrikken, to turn, move to and fro, wriggle; Dan. wrikke, to wriggle; Swed. wricka, to turn to and fro, whence wrickning, distortion. γ. The orig. sense seems to have been 'to bend' or 'turn'; and we may deduce the orig. sense of E. wriggle as having been 'to keep on bending or twisting about'. See also Rig (2). Der. wriggl-er. Also rick-ets, q.v.

WRIGHT, a workman. (E.) MF. wrighte, Chaucer, C. T. 3145 (A 3143). AS. wyrhta, a worker, workman, maker, creator; Grein, ii. 763; with the common shifting of r = AS. wyrht, a deed, work; formed, with suffix -t, from wyre-an, to work. (The AS. wyrht occurs in ge-wyrht, a work, Grein, l. 489, where the prefix ge- makes no appreciable difference; and it stands for wyrct-*, with the usual substitution of ht for ct.) OSax. wurhtio, a wright, from wurht, a deed; OHG. wurhtio, a wright, from OHG. wurht, wurht, a work, merit. β. The AS. ge-wyrht, OSax. wurht, OHG. wurhtio, are all from Teut. wurk-, weak grade of werk-; see Work. Der. cart-wright, ship-wright, wheel-wright.

WRING, to twist, force by twisting, compress, pain, bend aside. (E.) ME. wringen; pt. t. wrang, wrong, Chaucer, C. T. 5026 (B 606); pp. wungen, wrongen. AS. wringan, to press, compress, strain, pt. t. wrang, Gen. xl. 11, pp. wringan. +Du. wringen; Low G. wringen, to twist together; G. ringen, to wring, wrest, turn, struggle, wrestle; a strong verb, pt. t. rang, pp. gerungen; OHG. hringau (for wringan*), strong verb. β. All from Teut. type wring-an-*, pt. t. wrang, pp. wringanoz*; a nasalised form from a base wreg* = werg; for which see Worry. And cf. Wriggle. Der. wring-le, wrong; probably allied to wrench, wrink-le, wriggle, wry.

WRINKLE, (1), a small ridge on a surface, unevenness. (E.) ME. wrinkel or wrinkil. 'Wrynkyll, or rymyyl, or wrymyll, Ruge; Wrynkyll, or playte [pleat] in clothe, Plica'; Prompt. Parv. [Here the spelling wrymyll stands for wrynmyll*; wrinkle and rimple are from different roots, as shown under ripple (2).] Elsewhere, we find, in Prompt. Parv. p. 434, the spelling rymyll, given under R. The pl. wrinkilis occurs, in the various readings of the later version, in Wyclif, Gen. xxxviii. 14. Sommer gives AS. wrinellian, to wrinkle; the pp. ge-wrinelod occurs in Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iv. 34; l. 9. From a sb. wrinel*. β. Evidently a dimin. form from a base wrenk*, prob. allied to Teut. wring-an-*, to wring, to twist. See Wring; and see Wrinkle (2). +MDu. wrinkel, 'a wrinkle'; wrinkelen, 'to wrinkle, or to crisper'; prob. allied to wringen, 'to wreath [i.e. writhe, twist] or to wring'; Hexham. Perhaps further allied to Goth. wrinys, crooked, Luke, iii. 5; L. werg-ere, to bend; Skt. wrj-ina-, crooked; Gk. paß-ös, crooked, paß-ew, to revolve. Brugmann, i. § 371, 677. See Rhomb. ¶ Dan. rynke, a wrinkle, pucker, gather, fold, rynke, to wrinkle, Swed. rynke, both sb. and vb., and Icel. hrunka (for hrunka*), a wrinkle, are all forms due to the weak grade of an old str. vb. hrenkan-*, and are related rather to Ruok (1). Der. wrinkle, vb.; wrinkl-y.

WRINKLE (2), a hint, small piece of advice. (E.) Prov. E. wrinkle, a new idea (Halliwell). It means 'a new idea' imparted by another, a hint; but the lit. sense is 'a small trick', or 'little stratagem'. 'Having learned . . . every wrinkle'; Lyly, Euphues, p. 359 (ed. Arber). And see Polit. Poems, ed. Wright, ii. 45; l. 7. It is the dimin. of AS. wrene, a trick; for which see Wrenoh. Allied to Wrinkle (1).

WRIST, the joint which turns the hand. (E.) The pl. is spelt wrestes in Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 6. ME. wrist or wrist; also wirst, by shifting of r. 'Wrynt, or wriste of an hande'; Prompt. Parv. AS. wrist. We find '68 þā wriste' = up to the wrist; Laws of Æthelstān, pt. iv. § 7, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, l. 226, l. 17. The full form was hand-wrist, i.e. that which turns the hand about. We find 'betwix elboga and handwyrste' = betwixt elbow and handwrist; Voc. 158. 10. Cf. 'geniculi, enno-wyrste', i.e. knee-joints, Voc. 160. 17. Prob. for wrist-l*, and formed with suffix -l from wrist; weak grade of wriðan, to writhe, to twist; see Writhe. Cf. Wrest, from the same verb. +OFries. wrist, werst; whence handwrist, hand-wrist, fatorist, foot-wrist or instep; Low G. wrist; Icel. rist, the instep; cf. rið-inn, pp. of riða, to twist; Dan. and Swed. wrist, the instep; cf. vrída, vrída, to twist; G. rist, instep, wrist. Cf. also Westphal. werst, the instep, wrist, the ankle; Low G. (Hamburg) wristen, pl., wrists, ankles. Der. wrist-band, the band of the sleeve at the wrist.

WRITE, to form letters with a pen or pencil, engrave, express in writing, compose, communicate a letter. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to score,' i. e. to cut slightly, as when one scores letters or marks on a piece of bark or soft wood with a knife; it also meant to engrave runes on stone. ME. writen, pt. t. wroot, Chaucer, C. T. 5310 (B 890); pp. writen (with short i). AS. writan, pt. t. wrot, pp. writen, to write, inscribe (orig. to score, engrave), Grein, ii. 743. + OSax. writan, to cut, injure, also to write; Du. rijten, to tear, split; Icel. rita, pt. t. reit, pp. ritinn, to scratch, cut, write; Swed. rita, to draw, delineate; G. reissen, pt. t. riss, pp. gerissen, OHG. rizan, to cut, tear, split, draw or delineate. Cf. Goth. writs, a stroke made with a pen. β. All from the Teut. type wreit-an*, pt. t. wrait*, pp. writ-an, to cut, scratch, hence to engrave, write. Der. writ, sb., AS. ge-writ, also writ, a writing, Grein, i. 486, ii. 743, from writ, weak grade of writan, to write. Also writ-er, AS. writers, Matt. ii. 4; writ-er-ship, writ-ing.

WRITHE, to twist to and fro. (E.) Spelt wrethe in Palsgrave. ME. writhen, spelt wrythen in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 3. l. 15; pt. t. wroth (with long o), Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1200; pp. writhen (with short i), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 174. Cf. writhing in Chaucer, C. T. 10441 (F 127). AS. wridan, to twist, wind about, pt. t. wrið, pp. wriðen, Grein, ii. 743. + Icel. riða (for wriða*), pt. t. reið, pp. riðinn; Dan. wride; Swed. wrida, to wring, twist, turn, wrest; OHG. ridan, MllG. riden, a strong verb, now lost. β. All from Teut. type wreit-an*, pt. t. wrait*, pp. writ-an*, to twist. Der. wraith, wroth, wreath, wri-st, wre-st.

WRONG, perverted, unjust, bad; also as sb., that which is wrong or unjust. (Scand.) ME. wrong, adj., Will. of Palerne, 706; sb., P. Plowman, B. iii. 175. Late AS. wrang (a passing into o before n), occurs as a sb. in the A. S. Chron. an. 1124. Properly an adj. signifying 'a wrong thing,' a thing perverted or wrong aside; compare the use of wrong nose, for 'crooked nose,' in Wyclif, Levit. xxi. 19 (later version). Not I., but Scand. — ONorse wrangr*; as in Icel. rangr, awry, metaphorically, wrong, unjust; Dan. wrang, wrong, adj.; Swed. wrang, perverse. All from Teut. wrang*, and grade of wrengan*, to wring, twist; see Wring. Der. wrong, verb, to injure, as in 'to wrong the wronger,' Shak. Lucrèce, 819; wrong-er (as above); wrong-ly; wrong-ful, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 58 (earlier version); wrong-ful-ly, wrong-head-ed, i. e. perverse. Also wrong-wise, M. V. wrong-wis, (O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 175, l. 256 (Swed. wrånghvis, iniquitous), now obsolete, but remarkable as being the converse of I. righteous, formerly right-wise; Palsgrave actually spells it wrongeom!).

WROTH, full of wrath, angry. (E.) ME. wroth, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 504. AS. wrið, wroth, Grein, ii. 737. — AS. wrið, and grade of wridan, to writh; so that the orig. sense was twisted or perverted in one's temper. + Du. wreed, cruel; Icel. reiðr; Dan. wred; Swed. wred; OHG. reid, reidi, only in the sense of twisted or curled. All from Teut. wraith*, and grade of wreit-an*. See Wraith and Wreath.

WRIG, twisted or turned to one side. (E.) 'With visage wry;' Court of Love, l. 1162 (a late poem, perhaps 16th century). But the verb wrien, to twist, bend, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 17211 (H 262); and answers to AS. wrigian, to drive, impel, also to tend or bend towards. 'Hlaforð min . . . wriðað on wonge' = 'my lord [i. e. master of a plough] pushes his way along the field; Codex Exoniensis, ed. Thorpe, p. 403 (Riddle xii, l. 9). Of a bough bent down, and then let go, it is said: 'wriðað wiþ his geyndes' = 'it moves towards its kind, i. e. as it is naturally inclined; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, l. iii. met. 2 (cap. xxv). This AS. base wrig- is preserved in the frequentative Wriggle, q. v. See further under Awry. Der. a-wry, q. v.; wry-neck, a small bird, allied to the woodpecker, so called from 'the writhing snake-like motion which it can impart to its neck without moving the rest of its body;' Engl. Cycl. Also wry-ness.

WYCH-ELM; see under Witch-el.

WYVERN, WIVERN, in heraldry, a kind of flying serpent or two-legged dragon. (F. — L.) The final n is extraneous after r, as in bitter-n, q. v. ME. wivere, a serpent, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1010. — AF. wivere (also guivere); see Notes on E. Etym. p. 470; OF. wivre, a serpent, viper, esp. in blazon; see Roquefort and Burguy; mod. F. guivre, a viper. Burguy says it was also formerly spelt wivre, and that it is still spelt wivre in some F. dialects. — L. nipera, a viper; see Viper. ¶ The spelling with w in OF. was due to Germanic influence; as if from an OHG. wiperu*, borrowed from L. nipera. Doublet, viper.

X

XEBEC, a small three-masted vessel used in the Mediterranean. (Span. — Turk.) In Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. — Span. xabego, a xebec. See also Port. zabeco, F. chebec. — Turk. sumbaki, written sumbaki, 'a kind of Asiatic ship;' Rich. Dict. p. 852. It also gives Ivers. sumbaki, a small ship; Arab. sumbaki, a small boat, a pinnace. See Devic, Supp. to Littré, s. v. chebec, which is the F. form; he notes also Port. zabeco, Ital. zambeco, the latter form retaining the nasal m, which is lost in the other languages. He adds that the word sumbaki is given in the first ed. of Meninski's Thesaurus (1680); and that the mod. Arab. word is shubbak; see Dozy, Glossaire, p. 352.

XYLOBALSAM, the wood (or dried twigs) of the balmo-of-Gilead tree. (L. — Gk.) 'The Indians do call it Xilo, and we do call the same Balsamo;' Frampton, tr. of Monardes, fol. 7, back. Evidently an error, as the word occurs in Pliny. Spelt xylobalsamum in Holland, tr. of Pliny. — L. xylobalsamum, Pliny, Nat. Hist. l. xii. c. 25. — Gk. xylobálsamon, the wood of the balsam tree. — Gk. ξύλον, for ξύλω, wood; and βάlsamon, resin of the βάlsamon, or balsam-tree, a word of Semitic origin; see Balsam. From ξύλον we also have xylo-graphy, engraving on wood.

Y

Y-, prefix. (E.) This prefix is nearly obsolete, being only retained in the archaic words y-cleft (called), y-wis (certainly). The ME. forms are y-, i-; the latter being frequently written I (as a capital). — AS. ge-, an extremely common prefix, both of sbs. and verbs. [In verbs it was prefixed, not only to the pp. (as in mod. G. and in Middle-English), but also to the past tense, to the infinitive, or indeed occasionally to any part of the verb, without appreciably affecting the sense. In the word y-wis, certainly, many editors have ignorantly mistaken it for the pronoun I; see Ywis. It appears as e- in the word e-nough; and as a- in the word a-waere.] + Du. ge-, prefix; G. ge-; OHG. ka-, ki-; Goth. ga-. As regards usage, it resembles L. com-, con-, for cum, with; but the forms can hardly be reconciled.

YACHT, a swift pleasure-boat. (Du.) Pron. yot. 'One of his yachts;' Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 1, 1661. In Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, where it is badly spelt yacht; Bailey has yatch. — Du. yacht, formerly spelt yacht; een yacht, afte [or] See-roover. Ship, a pinnace, or a pirate's ship; Hexham. 'Jagt, a yacht;' Sewel. Named from its speed; cf. Du. jagten (formerly jachten), to speed, to hunt; jagt (formerly jacht), a hunting. — Du. jagen, 'to hunt or to chase deer, hares, &c.;' Hexham. + G. jagen, to hunt. Der. yacht-er, yacht-ing.

YAK, the name of a bovine quadruped. (Thibet.) In a Thibetan Dict., by H. A. Jäschke, p. 668, we are told that the Thibet. word is gyag, a male yak, the female being called po-gyag. The symbol γ is used to denote a peculiar Thibetan sound.

YAM, a large esculent tuber, resembling the potato. (Port. — W. African.) Mentioned in Cook's Voyages (Todd); ed. 1777, i. 146; and by H. Pitman in 1689, in Arber's Eng. Garner, vii. 367. — Port. inhame, a yam; not given in Vieira, but noted in Webster and in Littré. Littré gives the F. form as igname, which he says is borrowed from the Port. inhame; and adds: 'it was the Portuguese who first found the yam used as an object of culture, first on the coast of Africa, afterwards in India and Malacca, and gave it its name; but the language whence it was taken is unknown.' It is really W. African; see Hakluyt's Voyages (1599), v. ii. pt. 2, p. 129; where the African name is given as inania, in Bruin; under the date 1588. Called hamas in Minshew's Span. Dict. (1623). See Notes on E. Etym. p. 323. 'The country [Benin] abounds with yams;' Voyages, 1745; ii. 707. The Malay name is ubi; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 21.

YANKEE, a citizen of New England, or (later) of the United States. (Dutch?) The word occurs as early as 1765. Webster cites: 'From meanness first this Portsmouth Yankee rose, And still to meanness all his conduct flows.' Oppression, A Poem by an American, Boston, 1765. We also find in the same: 'Commonly considered to be a corrupt pronunciation of the word English, or of the F. word Anglais, by the native Indians of America.' According to Thierry, a corruption of Jankin, a dimin. of John, a nickname given to the English colonists of Connecticut by the Dutch settlers of New York, [which may be partly correct]. Note that a Captain Yanky, commanding a Dutch ship, is mentioned several times in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1699, i. 38, 39. Again, a Dutch boat seems to have been called a yanky by Smollett, Sir L. Grenaves, ch. iii (Davies). β. Dr. Wm. Gordon, in his Illustrations of the American War, ed. 1789, vol. i. pp. 324, 325, says it was a favourite cant word in Cambridge, Mass., as early as 1713, and that it meant 'excellent'; as, a yankie good horse, yankie good cider, &c. He supposes that it was adopted by the students there as a by-word, and, being carried by them from the college, obtained currency in the other New England colonies, until at length it was taken up in other parts of the country, and applied to New Englanders generally as a term of slight reproach. Cf. Lowland Sc. yankie, a sharp, clever, forward woman; yanker, an agile girl, an incessant speaker; yanker, a smart stroke, a great falsehood, a bounce; yank, a sudden and severe blow, a sharp stroke; yanking, active, pushing (Jamieson). Without the nasal, there is also Lowland Sc. yack, to talk precipitately and indistinctly, yaike, a stroke or blow. γ. The reference in 1765 may well be to Portsmouth in New Hampshire, not far to the N. of Boston; and Thierry may be right in supposing it to be a Dutch nickname. I accept the suggestion made by Dr. H. Logeman, that Yankee was formed (like Chinee from Chinese, &c.) from the Du. Jan Kees, a familiar form of John Cornelius. Both Jan and Kees are very common Du. names, and both were familiarly used as terms of contempt; see N. and Q. 10 S. iv. 509, v. 15. Cf. EFries. Jan, John, and Kes, Cornelius (Koolman). The EFries. kēs also meant 'cheese'; and it is remarkable that Ascham uses John Kees as a term of contempt; as in—'Away, good Peck-gook! hems, John Kees!' The Scholemaster, ed. Arber, bk. i. p. 54.

YAP, to yelp, bark. (E.) 'The yapping of a cur'; I'Estrange, tr. of Quevedo, p. 243 (Todd). Yap is imitative; so also yaup, the Lowland Sc. equivalent of yelp (Jamieson). The Lowland Sc. yaff also occurs, which is a variant of yap. The F. japper, to bark, to yawle, Cot., is of similar origin. Cf. EFries. and Low G. jappen, to gasp (Norm. dial. japer, to yelp (Duméril).

YARD (1), an enclosed space. (L.) ME. yard, Chaucer, C. T. 15181 (B 4365). AS. geard, an enclosure, court; Grein, i. 493. þ Du. gaard, a yard, garden; Icel. garðr (whence prov. F. garth); Dan. gaard; Swed. gård; Goth. gards, a house; allied to Goth. gardi, a field, OHG. gart, gart, whence G. garten, Russ. gorod, a town; L. hortus; Gk. χώρα, a court-yard, enclosure; Irish gori, a field. β. From the Teut. type gardaz*, m.; Idg. type ghortas*, a yard, court, enclosure. But the connexion with Gk. χώρα is uncertain. See GIRD (1). Der. court-yard, orchard. From the same root are garden, gird (1), girdle; horticulture; as well as colours, curl, curl-ain, &c. Doublet, garden, prov. T. garth.

YARD (2), a rod, an F. measure of 36 inches, a cross-beam on a mast for spreading square sails. (E.) ME. jerde, yerde, a stick, Chaucer, C. T. 149; also a yard in length, id. 1052 (A 1050). AS. gird, geril, a stick, rod; Grein, i. 536. þ Du. garde, a twig, rod; G. gerle, a rod, switch; OHG. gerla, kerla. Teut. type gardja*, I. Allied to O. Bulgarian grliti (Russ. jerde), a rod. But not to Goth. guzis, a goad. See Streitherg, § 125 (4). Der. yard-arm, the arm (i.e. the half) of a ship's yard, from the mast to the end of it.

YARE, ready. (L.) AS. ad, in Temp. v. 224; as adv., readily, quickly, Temp. i. 1. 7. ME. jare, Will. of Palerne, 895, 1963, 3265; yare, Kohn, of Glouc. p. 52, l. 1213. AS. gearn, gearn, ready, quick, prompt; Grein, i. 493. þ Du. gear, done, dressed (as meat); gear, adv., wholly; Icel. garr, adj., ready; görra, gera, görra, adj., quite, wholly; OHG. garo, karo, prepared, ready; G. gar, adv., wholly. β. Teut. type garwoz*, adj., ready (Pick, iii. 102). Allied to Gear. Der. geary, adv., Temp. i. 1. 4; also gear, garb (1), gar (2). Also (perhaps) garwoz, q.v.

YARN, spun thread, the thread of a rope. (E.) ME. yarn, jaru; jarne*, thread; Filum; Prompt. Parv. p. 536. AS. gearn, yarn, Voc. 238. 27. þ Du. garen; Icel., Dan., and Swed. garn; G. garn. β. All from the Teut. type garnum*, n., yarn, string, Fick, iii. 101. Further allied to Gk. χορδή, a string, orig. a string of gut; cf. Icel. girn, or garnir, guts (i.e. strings or cords); Lith. žarnas, guts; L. haru, in haru-spes, inspector of entrails. See Cord, Chord. Cf. Brugmann, ii. § 602.

YARROW, the plant milfoil. (E.) ME. jarowe, jarwe; Prompt. Parv. p. 536. AS. garwe, explained by 'millefolium'; Voc. 133. 32; spell garwe, id. 32. 36. þ Du. gerw; G. garbe; MItG. garbe, garwe, OHG. garawa. β. Perhaps there is a reference to the old belief in the curative properties of the yarrow, which was supposed to be a great remedy for wounds; in Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 195, we are told that Achilles was the first person who applied it to the cure of sword-wounds; hence, indeed, its botanical name of Achillea millefolium. If so, we might connect it with the verb gearulan, to make ready, from the adj. gearo, ready, yare; see Yare. Thus yarrow = that which makes yare, or restores. But this is uncertain.

YATAGHAN, ATAGHAN, a dagger-like sabre, with doubly curved blade. (Turk.) Spelt ataghan in Byron, Glauir; see note 27.

Spelt yataghan or ataghan in F. also. — Turk. yātāghān, a yataghan; see Devic, and Pavet de Courteille, Dict. du Turc Oriental; spelt yātāghān, yātāghān, Zenker's Dict. pp. 947, 958.

YAW, to go unsteadily, bend out of its course, said of a ship. (Scand. — Du.) In Iliamlet, v. 2. 120. The sense is to go aside, swerve, bend out of the course; see Phillips. — Icel. jaga, properly, to hunt; but used in the peculiarly specialised sense 'to move to and fro'; see Vigfusson. For the sound aw, cf. the derivation of mod. E. awe from Icel. agi. Cf. Dan. jage, Swed. jaga, to hunt. — Du. jagen, to hunt, drive, chase. See further under Yacht.

YAWL (1), a small boat. (Du.) In Anson's Voyages, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). 'Barges or yauls of different kinds'; Drummond's Travels (Letter, dated 1744), p. 87 (Todd). 'Like our Deal yalls'; W. Dampier, A New Voyage, i. 429. The word is common at Lowestoft. — Du. jol, a yawl, skiff; Sewel explains jol as 'a Jutland boat'. Cf. Dan. jolle; Swed. julle, a yawl. Hexham records MDu. iolleken, 'a small barke or boate'. The mod. Icel. form is jula. β. Prob. of Low G. origin. The Low G. forms are jelle, jolle, jülle (Scham-bach); also gelle, gölle, jölle (Koolman, s.v. jülle); of which the forms gelle, gölle seem older than the rest. A borrowing from L. galea seems possible. See Galley.

YAWL (2), to howl. (E.) 'There howling Scyllas, yawling round about'; Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. iv. st. 5. Also spelt yole, yowl (Halliwell). ME. goulen, Havelok, 164; youlen, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1278 (Six-text ed.); Wyclif, Micah, i. 8; jaulen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1453. Of imitative origin. Cf. EFries. jaulen, Low G. jaulen, to yawl; Du. jolen, to groan. þ Icel. gaula, to low, bellow; Norweg. gaula, to bellow, low, roar (Asen); Swed. dial. göla, jöla. Of imitative origin, like yell. See Yell.

YAWN, to gape. (E.) Spelt yawn in Palsgrave. ME. geonien, Ancrer Riwle, p. 242; whence E. yawn, by lengthening of o to open long o; cf. E. frout, broth. [Cf. also ME. ganien, Chaucer, Six-text ed., Group H, l. 35; where Tyrwhitt (l. 16984) has galpeth.] AS. geonian; tr. of Bede, Hist. iv. 19; variant of ginian, tr. of Orosius, iii. 3. From gin, weak grade of ginan* (pt. t. -gān), in comp. be-ginan, to yawn (Grein). Cf. AS. ginian, to yawn; Grein, i. 370. þ OHG. ginen, to yawn. Cf. Icel. gina, to gape, pt. t. gein; MDu. gienen, 'to yawn'; Hexham; Du. geenuen, to yawn. From Idg. GHEI*, whence also L. hi-äre, to gape; Slav. root zi-, to gape, in Miklosich. Der. yawn-ing. From the same root, hi-ai-nu.

YE, the nom. pl. of the 2nd and personal pronoun. (E.) The nom. pl. is properly ye, whilst the dat. and acc. pl. is you; the gen. pl. is properly ye, now only used as a possessive pronoun. But in mod. F. ye is almost disused, and you is constantly used in the nominative, not only in the plural, but in the singular, as a substitute for thou. Ye in ine, and I in you; John, xiv. 20; this shows the correct use. ME. ye, je, nom.; your, your, gen.; you, you, dat. and acc. AS. ge, nom.; eower, gen.; eow, dat. and acc.; Grein, i. 263, 375. þ Du. gi, je; u, you; Icel. er, ier, ie; yör, your; yör, you; Dan. and Swed. i, ye (also you); G. ih; OHG. ir, ie, iwar, iwer, iu, iu, you; Goth. jūs, ye; izwara, your; izwis, you. We also have the AS. dual form git, ye two. β. The common Idg. base is yā, whence also Lithuan. jūs, ye, Gk. h-μeis, ye, Skt. yū-yam, ye. See Brugmann, ii. § 436.

YEA, an affirmative adverb; verily. (E.) The distinction between ME. je, ja, yea, and jis, jes, jus, yes, is commonly well marked; the former is the simple affirmative, giving assent, whilst the latter is a strong asseveration, often accompanied by an oath; see Will. of Palerne, &c. Spelt ye, Chaucer, C. T. 9219 (E 1345). OFries. je, AS. gea, grā, ye; John, xxi. 15. þ Du. ja, Dan., Swed., and G. ja; Icel. já; Goth. ja, ja; W. ie; Gk. h-μis, truly. Der. ye, yes, q.v.

YEAN, EAN, to bring forth lambs. (E.) 'The new-yeán d' lamb'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, iii. 1. Spelt ean in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 88; ME. enen; Eyn*, or brynge forthe kyndelyngys, Feto; Prompt. Parv. p. 140. The difference between ean and yeán is easily explained; in the latter, the prefixed y represents the very common AS. prefix ge-, readily added to any verb without affecting the sense; see Y-, prefix, above. AS. eanian, to ean, Lambeth Palace, Pa. lxvii. 70; ge-eanian, to yeán, of which the only clear trace appears to be in the expression ge-ean eowa = the ewes great with young, Gen. xxxiii. 13. β. The AS. ean answers to Germanic au, and the suffix -ian to Germ. -nian (Sievers, Gr. § 411); so that the Germ. type is au-nian*; a type which also appears in Dutch dial. oenen, to ean; see Franck. This appears to be derived from a form au-no*, meaning 'lamb'; which some consider as being allied to Goth. au-wis, L. ow-is, a sheep, AS. eowa, a ewe. See Ewe. Scheller, in his Bavarian Dict. p. 11, cites the forms ien, iuén, iuwen, to yeán, produce lambs, which are immediately derived from ā, āu, āno, a ewe. Cf. Kluge, s.v. Schaf. γ. But Kluge and Lutz (Eng. Rym.) consider Teut. anno* = as equivalent to agnno*, corresponding to L. agnus, a lamb, and to Celtic type ogno*, a lamb, as seen in Irish éan, W. oan, Bret. oan, a lamb. So also Swed. dial. dina, éan, to yearn, from éan, a lamb (Rietz, p. 114). Also Manx cayne, to yearn, from éan, a lamb. Thus the sense is merely 'to produce lambs'. Brugmann, i. § 671, 704. Der. yeann-ling, a new-born lamb; with double dimin. suffix -ling.

YEAR, the time of the earth's revolution round the sun. (E.) ME. year, year, yer, yer; Chaucer, C. T. 601, where it appears as a plural. This sb. was formerly unaltered in the plural, like sheep, deer; hence the mod. phrase 'a two-year old colt'. The pl. year is common in Shak. Temp. i. 2, 53, &c. AS. gār, gēr, a year; pl. gār; Grein, i. 496. +Du. jaar; Icel. ár; Dan. aar, pl. aar; Swed. år; G. jahr; OHG. jār; Goth. jēr. β. All from Teut. type yērom*, n., a year. Further allied to Gk. ἔτος, a season, a year; ἔτα, a season, an hour. — yē*, to go, pass; an extension from yē* to go; whence also Skt. yātu, time. See Hour. Brugmann, i. § 308, ii. § 587. Der. year-ly, adj. and adv.; year-ling, an animal a year old, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Allied to hour.

YEARN (1), to desire strongly, be eager for. (E.) ME. yearnen, P. Ploymann, B. i. 35. Cf. AS. gierman, to yearn, be desirous; later gierman, Grein, i. 537; formed (by the usual change of eo to ie) from AS. gārman, adj., desirous, eager, id. i. 500. Cf. also georndon, desired; A. S. Chron. an. 1011; which better agrees with the ME. form. +Icel. girma, to desire; from girma, eager; Goth. gairnan, to long for, from gairns, desirous, only in the comp. faihus-gairns, covetous, lit. desirous of money. β. The verb answers to a Teut. type gerjan-, from the adj. ger-naz, desirous of. Again, the adj. is formed (with idg. suffix -no) from the base GĒK, appearing in OHG. gerōn, herōn, mod. G. be-gehren, to long for. — GHER*, to desire; whence also Gk. χαίρειν, to rejoice, χαῖρ, joy, l. hor-ior, I urge, Skt. hary, to desire. Der. yearning-ly. ✱ Not connected with earnest (1), but with hor-tatory.

YEARN (2), to grieve. (E.) This verb, not well explained, occurs several times in Shak.; and it is remarkable that Shak. never uses yearn in the sense 'to long for', i.e. he never uses it in the sense of the verb yearn (1) above. It is often spelt earn or ern in old editions. The proper sense is intransitive, to grieve, mourn, Hen. V. ii. 3, ii. 3, 6; Jul. Cæs. ii. 2, 129; it is also transitive, to grieve, we, Merry Wives, iii. 45; Rich. II. v. 5, 76; Hen. V. iv. 3, 26. Other authors use it besides Shakespeare; as in the following examples. 'I must do what my heart-strivings yearn [mourn] to do'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Houdouin, i. 4 (Judith); and see Richardson. Nares gives yearful, grievous, melancholy; so also prov. E. earnful (Halliwell, Peerce). β. In the form yearn or yearn, it is prob. the same as yearn (1) above; with a change of sense from 'desire' to 'regret'. γ. In the form ern or earn it answers to AS. eoru as found in coru-igende, murmuring, eoru-filnes, anxiety, Matt. xiii. 22. From a verb eorian, which seems to be a mere variant of geornian, to yearn for, desire. If so, yearn (2) is merely yearn (1) with a change of sense. Cf. 'His heart did earn (i.e. yearn) To proue his puissiance'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 1, 3. ✱ Possibly influenced by ME. ermen, to grieve; see Gloss. to Chaucer.

YEAST, the froth of malt liquors in fermentation, a preparation which raises dough. (E.) ME. yeest, zeest, bernie, Spuma; Prompt. Parv. p. 537. AS. gist; spelt gyst, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 118, l. 10. +Du. gist; Icel. jást, jást; Swed. jäst; [Dan. gær]; G. gäsch, gischt, MHG. jest, gest, girt. β. The Teut. type is yē-*, formed (with suffix -t) from the base YES, to ferment, appearing in MSwed. gäsa, OHG. jesan, MHG. jesen, gesen, geru, whence mod. G. gähren (causal). — yē*, to foam, ferment; whence Skt. air-yāsa, exudations of trees, Gk. ἔρρε, to boil, ἔρρος, fervent. Der. yeasty, spelt yesty in Shak. Macb. iv. 1, 53, Hamlet, v. 2, 199, just as yeast is also written yest, Wint. Tale, iii. 3, 94; the sense is 'frothy'. [Not allied to AS. yāt, a storm.]

YEDE, went. (E.) Obsolete. Also spelt yode, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7, 2. Spenser, unaware that yode and yode are varying forms of the same past tense, and that the verb is only used in the past tense, wrongly uses yode or yed as an infinitive mod (I); F. Q. i. 11, 5; ii. 4, 2. ME. yede, yode, Chaucer, C. T. G. 1147, 1281; yode, Sir Eglamour (Thornton Romances), 531; yode, yede, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 381, 1025; yode, yode, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 53, 79; l. 1217, 1766. The proper form is yode (Stratmann); it is probable that the forms yede, yode answer rather to AS. ge-yode, with prefixed ge-, as in the case of yedan and can, see Yean. AS. yode, went, only in the past tense; pl. ēodon; Grein, i. 256. β. The pl. ēodon may be compared with the Goth. pl. iddjūn, they went. The Goth. iddja, sing., answers to Skt. ayāt, he went; from the base yā, to go, allied to yē*, to go, as in Gk. ἐλ-μ, I shall go. See iddja in Uhlenbeck; Streibner, § 190; Brugmann, i. § 309 (2); ii. § 478. Cf. Year.

YELK, the same as Yolk, q. v.

YELL, to utter a loud noise, to howl. (E.) ME. zellen, yellen, Chaucer, C. T. 2674, 15395 (A 2672, B 4579). AS. gellan, giellan, gyllan, to yell, cry out, resound; Grein, i. 423. +Du. gillen; Icel. gella; also gialla (pt. t. gall); Dan. gialle, gialde (for gialle); Swed. gälla, to ring, resound; G. gellen, to resound. β. All from the Teut. type gellan-, pt. t. gall; allied to Teut. type galan-*, to sing, as seen in Icel. gala, to sing (pt. t. göl, pp. galinn), AS. galan (pt. t. göl), OHG. galan, to sing; see Nightingale. Der. yell, sb., Oth. i. 1, 75; also stan-ick, q. v.

YELLOW, of a bright golden colour. (E.) ME. yellow, Chaucer, C. T. 2168, 2172 (A 2166, 2170). Also spelt zelu, zeoluh, &c.; Stratmann. AS. geola, geola (acc. fern. geolwe), Grein, i. 497. +Du. geel; G. gelb, OHG. gelo. β. The Teut. type is gelwōz*; Idg. type ghelwōs*, Fick, iii. 103. Further allied to L. helius, light yellow; Russ. zelenii, green, Gk. χλός, young verdure of trees, χλωρός, green, Skt. hari-, green, yellow. Further allied to Gall (1). Der. yellow-ness; yellow fever, a malignant fever that often turns the skin yellow; yellow-ish, spelt yellowyshe in Palsgrave; yellow-ick-ness. Also yellow-hammer, q. v.; yel-k, yel-k.

YELLOW-HAMMER, YELLOW-AMMER, a song-bird, named from its yellow colour. (E.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Spelt yellow-kamer, Harrison, Desc. of England, bk. iii. ch. 2 (end). Beyond doubt, the k is an ignorant insertion, due to substitution of a known for an unknown word, irrespective of the sense. Yet the name is E., and very old. The former part of the word (yellow) is explained above; the latter part is the AS. amere. In a list of birds, we find: 'Scordellus, amere', Voc. 260, 27. Much older forms are AS. amer, 'Corpus gloss.', 1810; emer. Epinal gloss., 909. Cognate words occur both in Du. and G. +M.Du. emmerich, emmerick, 'a kind of merlin or a hawk'; Hexham; Low G. geel-emerken, a yellow-ammer; G. gel-ammer, guld-ammer, yellow-ammer, gold-ammer; also emmerling, a yellow-ammer; OHG. amere, an ammer.

YELP, to bark, bark shrilly. (E.) ME. zelpen, zelpen, only in the sense to boast, boast noisily; but it is the same word. 'I kepe not of armes for to yelp'; Chaucer, C. T. 2240 (A 2238). AS. gilpan, gilpan, zylpan, to boast, exult; orig. to talk noisily; Grein, i. 509. A strong verb; pt. geulp, pp. gelpen; whence gilp, gilt, gelp, gylp, boasting, arrogance, id. +Icel. gjálpa, to yelp; cf. gjálfra, to roar as the sea; MHG. gelpen. β. From a base GELP; to make a loud noise, allied to Yell. And cf. Yap. Der. yelp, sb.

YEO, a man of small estate, an officer of the royal household. (E.) ME. yeman, yeman, yoman; in Chaucer, C. T. 101, the Lansdowne MS. has yoman, whilst the rest have yeman or yeman. In Sir Amadas (pr. in Weber's Med. Rom. vol. iii.), l. 347, it is written yoman; but the usual spelling is yeman, as above, and as in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 534 (or 535). In Will. of Palerne, l. 3649, however, we have yoman, pl.; and yoman, yoman, sing., Cursor Mundi, 3077, 7822. I know not where to find an example earlier than the 13th century. β. The variation of the vowel in the ME. forms is curious, but we find other examples almost as remarkable; thus we find ME. chisen, to choose, from AS. cēosan, and mod. E. choose, answering to AS. cēosan, with the stress on ō, instead of e. So also AS. gēr, E. year, as compared with AS. gairra, E. year. And the AS. scētan gives both ME. shēten and mod. E. shoot. γ. The word does not appear in AS.; but it would (judging by the foregoing examples) take the form gēan-nan*, regularly corresponding to OFrisic gā-nan, a villager; and, as the AS. ēa (OFr. ā) answers to G. au, the first syllable is cognate with G. gau, Goth. gawi. [The alleged AS. gā is incorrect. Kentish, Saxons in England, b. i. c. 3, treats of the gā or district, though he gives no reference to show where the word occurs; Leo (A. S. Glossar.) gives gā, a district, as in Ohlgā, Noxgā, but we cannot draw such an inference from these examples.] It will be observed that the AS. assumed form gēan* would produce ME. yē-, whilst the form gā* would produce yō-, as in year, yore. 8. And in fact, we find AS. Sāðri-gēn, i.e. Southern district, in the A. S. Chron. an. 836, 855; as well as other examples, for which see II. M. Chadwick's 'Studies in O. English', p. 147, in Trans. Camb. Phil. Soc. 1899, vol. iv. pt. 2. Cf. OFrisic gā, gā (nom. pl. gāe), a district, village; whence gāman, a village; gāwō, people of a village. Also Du. gouw, gouw, a province; M.Du. gouw, 'a hamlet where houses stand scattered, a country village, or a field; goograwe or goograw, a field-judge; goy-liden or goy-nanen, arbitrators, or men appointed to take up a business between man and man'; Hexham. Also Low G. gōz, gōke, a tract of country, go-grāw, a judge in one of the 4 districts of Bremen, Brem. Wörterbuch; Bavarian gāu, whence gāumann, a peasant. Cf. also G. gau, a province, OHG. gawi, gawi, Goth. gawi. Der. yeoman-ry, where -ry is used as a collective suffix; spelt yomanry, Dictes of the Philosophers, pr. by Caxton, fol. 43 b.

YERK, in Shak. Hen. V. iv. 7, 83; equivalent to Jerk, q. v.

YES, a word denoting affirmation. (E.) A much stronger form than yea, and often accompanied, in old authors, by an oath. ME.

jus, jis, P. Plowman, B. v. 125; 'jis, be marie,' Will. of Palerne, 1567; 'jis, bi crist,' id. 5149. AS. gise, gese; 'gise, lā gese'=yes, O. yes; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 6; cap. xvi. § 4. Probably contracted from gēa swā, yea, so; cf. AS. nese, a form of denial, for ne swā, not so.

YESTERDAY, the day last past. (E.) ME. jistirdai, Wyclif, John, iv. 52. AS. geostro, giestra, gystra (yester-), Grein, i. 501; and dæg, a day; commonly in the acc. geostrian dæg, yesterday. † Du. gisteren, dag van gister; G. gester; Goth. gistra-dagis, to-morrow. β. Cf. I. hæster-nus, adj. belonging to yesterday, where the syllable hes- is cognate with Icel. gær, Dan. gaar, Swed. går, L. hari, Gk. χθής, Skt. hyas, yesterday. The suffix -ter- is a comparative form, as in in-ter-ior, ex-ter-ior, &c. Brugmann, i. § 624, 923. Der. Similarly, yester-night.

YET, moreover, besides, hitherto, still, nevertheless. (E.) ME. jit, yet, yet, Chaucer, C. T. 565 (A 563). AS. git, get, giet, gyt; Grein, i. 511. † OFries. ietā, etiā, itā, yet; Mod. Fries. jietle (Rich-tolten); MllG. ietzu, iezē; whence G. jetzt, now. Origin obscure.

YEW, an evergreen tree. (E.) Spelt yew in Palgrave. ME. rw, Chaucer, C. T. 2925 (A 2923). AS. iw, to translate I. iaxus, Voc. 138. 14; spelt inu, 49. 38. † Icel. yr; G. eibe; OHG. iwa. β. The Teut. type is iwa*, I., or iwoz, m. The Celtic type is iwo-*, as in Orlsch. type W. yw, Corn. hiuin, Bret. iuin, yew (Stokes-Fick, p. 46). Of unknown origin. † Distinct from ivy.

YES, to hieonch. (E.) Prov. E. yew (Halliwell); spelt yesh in Palgrave. ME. yesen, jesken, jozen, Chaucer, C. T. 4149 (A 4161). yzen, yezzen*, Singulo, Singulo; Prompt. Parv. p. 539. AS. gescian, to sob, sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1. c. 2. Cf. Olow G. geskon, to yawn (Gallée). Probably an extension from the Teut. base gi-, weak grade of gei-, base of gi-nan, to gape; just as I. aiscere, to yawn, gape, is extended from I. hi-äre. See YAWN, HIATUS.

YIELD, to resign, grant, produce, submit, give way. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to pay'. ME. gelden, yelden, yeldin; a strong verb; pt. yald, pp. yolden. Chaucer has un-yolden, C. T. 2644 (A 2642). In P. Plowman, B. xii. 193, we have both yald (strong) and yelle (weak), as forms of the pt. t. AS. gieldan, geldan, gildan, to pay, restore, give up; pt. t. gield, pl. guldin, pp. gultin, Grein, i. 508. † Du. gelden; Icel. gilda, pt. t. gald, pp. guldin; Dan. gælde; Swed. gälla (for gälda*), to be of consequence, be worth; G. gelten, to be worth, pt. t. galt, pp. geulten; Goth. -gildan, only in the compounds fra-gildan, -in-gildan*, to pay back. β. All from Teut. type gieldan-*, to be worth, to pay for, repay. Allied to Orlsch. gel, a pledge; gell-ain, I promise, engage (Stokes-Fick, p. 123). Der. yield, sb., yield-ing, -ly; also guld or gild; but hardly gult.

YOKE, the frame of wood joining oxen for drawing, a similar frame for carrying pails, a mark of servitude, a pair. (E.) ME. ȝok, yak, Chaucer, C. T. 7980 (E 113). AS. geoc, gōc, ioc, a yoke; Grein, i. 497. † Du. ȝok; Icel. ok; Dan. ang; Swed. ok; Goth. ȝok; G. joch, OHG. jok. Teut. type yokom*, n.; Idg. type yugom*; Russ. ig; Lithuan. jungas; Gk. ȝyros; Skt. yuga-, a yoke, pair, couple. β. All from the Idg. type yug-*, a yoke; I. ȝok; lit. 'that which joins.' From yug-, weak grade of yug- (Teut. YEUK), to join; see JoIn. Der. yoke, verb, Two Gent. i. 1. 40; yoke-fellow, companion, K. Lear, iii. 6. 39.

YOKEL, a country bumpkin. (E.) 'This was not done by a yokel'; Dickens, Oliver Twist, ch. 21. Lowl. Sc. yochel, a stupid, awkward person (E. D. D.); prov. E. yokel, the plough-boy who does the day's ploughing or yoking; W. Yks. (id.); from yoke, the time during which a ploughman and his team work at a stretch (id.). Cf. ME. ȝok, to attach a team to a cart, Barbour's Bruce, x. 215. Note yokelat, an old name (in Kent) for a little farm or manor; noticed by Sommer in his A. S. Dict., s. v. Ioel.

YOLK, YELK, the yellow part of an egg. (E.) Spelt yelke in Palgrave. ME. ȝolke, Morte Arthur, 3283; ȝelke, Prompt. Parv. p. 537. AS. geolca, gielca, the yolk; Grein, i. 497. Lit. 'the yellow part.' AS. geolu, yellow; see YELLOW.

YON, at a distance. (E.) Properly an adj., as in prov. E., in which such phrases as 'yon house' and 'yon field' are common. Common in Shaks. Mils. Nat. Dr. iii. 2. 188, &c. ME. ȝon, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 149 (also ȝon, and even ȝond, ȝeond, see the footnote). AS. geon, yon; 'tō geoure byrig'=to yon city; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 443, l. 25; where geon-re is the dat. fem. † Icel. enn, the (orig. that), used as the def. art., and often miswritten hin; see Vigfusson's remarks on hin; Goth. jains, yon, that; G. jeuer, MllG. gen, yon, that. β. The Teut. types appear to be yainaz*, yainaz*; which render difficult a relation to Skt. yas, who, that; cf. Brugmann, i. § 308. Der. yond, adv., Temp. i. 2. 409 (also incorrectly used instead of yon, Temp. ii. 2. 20), from AS. geond, adv., but often used as a prep., Grein, i. 497; cf. Goth. jaind, adv., there, John, xi. 8. Hence be-yond, q. v. Also youd-er (not in AS.), ME. yonder, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 5438 (B 1018); cf. Goth. jaindrē, adv., yonder, there, Luke, xi. 37.

YORE, in old time, long ago. (E.) ME. ȝore, yore, Chaucer, C. T. 4594 (B 174). AS. geira, formerly with the usual change from ā to long o, as in stān > stone; Grein, i. 496. Orig. geira, gen. pl. of gear, a year, so that the sense was 'of years', i. e. in years past; the gen. case being often used to express the time when, as in deges=by day, &c. See YEAR.

YOU, pl. of second pers. pronoun; see Ye. Der. you-r, q. v.

YOUNG, not long born, new to life. (E.) ME. ȝong, young, yung. In Chaucer, C. T. 79, we have the indef. form yong (misprinted yonge in Tyrwhitt); whilst in l. 7 we have the def. form yonge (disyllabic). AS. geung, giung, iung (and even geng, ging), young; Grein, i. 499. † Du. jung; Icel. ungr, jungr; Dan. and Swed. ung; G. jung; OHG. junc; Goth. juggs (written for jungs). β. All from a Teut. type yungon*, a contracted form of yungwgon*, answering to the cognate Orlsch. ōne, W. leunne, young, and to the I. form iunuenas, an extension (with Idg. suffix -kos) from iunen-i, young.

γ. The base yunen-*, young, occurs in L. iunenis, young, Skt. yuvan, young, Russ. iunni, young, Lithuan. jaunas, young. The lit. sense is perhaps 'protected,' from VEU-* to guard; cf. Skt. yu, to keep back, L. iunare, to aid, help; Fick, i. 732. Brugmann, i. § 280. Der. young, sb.; young-ish; young-ling, Spenser, F. Q. i. to 57, Mll. youngling, Wyclif, Mark, xvi. 5, with double dimin. suffix -ling; young-star, as to which see SPINSTER. Also younger, Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 11, and in G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. viii. l. 11; borrowed from Dan. juncker, also written junkeer, compounded of jung, young, and heer, a lord, sir, gentleman; Hexham has Mll. junck-heer or juncker, 'a young gentleman or a juncker' (sic). Also yon-th, q. v.

YOUR, possess. pron. of 2nd person. (E.) Properly the possess. pron. of the 2nd person plural, but commonly used instead of thy, which was considered too familiar, and has almost passed out of use in speech. ME. ȝour, your, Chaucer, C. T. 225; (A 2249). Orig. the gen. pl. of the 2nd pers. pronoun; I am heart of you, all. P. Plowman, C. xxii. 473; where aller=AS. ealra, gen. pl. of eall, all. AS. eower, your; orig. gen. of ge, ye; see Ye. Der. your-s, ME. yours, Chaucer, C. T. 13204 (B 1464), from AS. eoweres, gen. sing. masc. and neut. of eower, poss. pronoun; Grein, i. 263. Also yourself (see SELF).

YOUTH, early life. (E.) ME. youth, Chaucer, C. T. 463 (A 461); older forms yuwere, Ancien Rituel, p. 156, l. 22; ȝuȝe, Layamon, 6566; ȝeȝeȝe, id. 19837. AS. geugōd, giugōd, youth, Grein, i. 502. [The middle g first turned to w or o, and then disappeared.] † OSax. jugub; Du. jugend; G. jugend, OHG. jugund; we also find OHG. jungelid. Cf. Goth. jund, youth. β. The AS. geugōd stands for geugōd* < geugōmōd*, Teut. type yugundiz*, for yugunbiz*, f.; from Idg. base yugwen-i-, which is from yugen-, young; see YUG. Cf. I. iunenis, Skt. yuvān, youth. We also find a later ME. form jungthe, youth, Prompt. Parv. p. 539, jongthe, Wyclif, Mark, x. 20. Der. youth-ful, -ly, youth-fulness.

YOWL; a variant of Yawl (2); q. v.

YUCCA, a genus of American liliaceous plants. (Span.—Caribbean). 'They have also another kynde of rootes, which they call Yucca;' R. Eden, First Three E. Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 67; where they refers to the people of Hayti. Spelt yuca, tr. of Acosta, bk. iv. c. 17.—Span. yucca, yucca. From the old (Caribbean) language as spoken in Hayti. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 346.

YULE, Christmas. (E.) 'Y-hatch, Christmas batch; yu-black or yule-black, Christmas block; yu-gams or yule-gams, Christmas games;' Kay's Gloss. of N. Country Words. Here yu is short for yule. ME. ȝole; 'the feste of ȝole', Kob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 65, l. 6; whence ȝole-stok, a yule-stock or yule-log, Voc. 657. 6. AS. iula, geola. Spelt iula, Grein, i. 148. Spelt geola in the following: 'Se monað is nemned on Leden Decembris, and on ðre geðeode se ærra geola, forðan þa mōnðas twegen syndon nemde ænum naman, oðer se ærra geola, oðer se æftera, forðan ðe hyra oðer ganeð beforan ðæra [rend ðæra] sunnan ærþon þe heo cyrre lig to ðæs dreges lence, oðer æfter, i. e. This month is named December in Latin, and in our tongue the former Yule, because two months are named with one name; one is the former Yule, the other the after Yule, because one of them comes before the sun, viz. before it turns itself about [at the winter solstice] to the lengthening of day, whilst the other [January] comes after;' MS. Cotton, Tib. B. 1, quoted in Hickes, Thesaurus, i. 212. Beda, De Temporibus Ratione, cap. 13, has the same account (but in Latin), and calls the Yule-months Menses Giuli; i. e. he Latinises Yule as Giulus. Spelt geol, gehol, gehel, Laws of Ælfred, § 5, and § 43; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 64, note 54; i. 92, note 4; gehol, tr. of Beda, bk. iv. c. 19. The AS. form appears to represent a Teut. type geh-al-oz*, or geh-loz*, m. + Icel. jöl; Dan. juul; Swed. jul. We may also note that, in a fragment of a Gothic calendar (pr. in Massmann's Ulfilas, p. 590), November appears to be called fruma Juleis, which seems to mean 'the first Yule'; a name not necessarily inconsistent with the AS. use, since November may once have also been reckoned as a Yule-month. This Goth. form answers to Icel. jöl, December. ¶ Origin unknown; for guesses, see Uhlenbeck, Goth. Diet. The usual attempt to connect this word with Y. wheel, AS. hwōl, Icel. hjul, with the far-fetched explanation that the sun turns at the winter solstice, cannot be admitted, since an initial h or hw makes all the difference. Besides Yule did not denote the shortest day, but a season. Brugmann, i. § 681. Der. jolly.

YWIS, certainly. (F.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. r. 19. ME. ywis, Chaucer, C. T. 3277; ywis, Ancien Kivle, p. 270, l. 11. AS. gewis, adj., certain, gewislice, adv., certainly, Grein, i. 483. The adj. came to be used adverbially. + Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly; Icel. wis, certain; Dan. vis, certain; wist, certainly; Swed. riss, certain; wisst, certainly; G. gewis, certainly. β. The ge- is a mere prefix; see Y-. The adj. answers to a Teut. type wisoz*, Iug. type wid-tos*, an old pp. signifying 'known', hence 'sure'; from wid*, weak grade of WEIL*, to know. See Wit, verb. Cf. Goth. weisk, I knew. Brugmann, i. § 794 e. ¶ It is particularly to be noted that the commonest form in MSS. is ywis, in which the prefix (like most other prefixes) is frequently written apart from the rest of the word, and not unfrequently the i is represented by a capital letter, so that it appears as I wis. Hence, by an extraordinary error, the I has often been mistaken for the 1st pers. pron., and the verb wis, to know, has been thus created, and is given in many dictionaries! But it is a pure fiction, and the more remarkable because there actually exists a ME. causal verb wissen, or wissen, but it means to teach, show, instruct. We should distinguish between the ME. words wit, wot, wiste, wis, I wisse, and i-wis.

Z

ZAMINDAR, ZEMINDAR, a land-holder, occupant of land. (Hind.-Pers.) Spelt zemindar in 1778 (Yule). Hind. zamindār, vernacularly jāmīndār, corruptly zemindār, an occupant of land, a land-holder; Wilson, Ind. Terms, p. 562. = Pers. zamin, earth, land, soil; dār, holding, possessing, Rich. Dict. pp. 782, 646. Here Pers. zamin is allied to h. humus, ground; and Pers. dār to Skt. dhr̥, to hold; see Homage and Firm.

ZANANA, ZENANA, female apartments. (Hind.-Pers.) Spelt zanana in 1761 (Yule). Hindustani zanūna, vernacularly janāna, incorrectly zenana, the female apartments; sometimes, the females of a family. = Pers. zanin, women; pl. of zan, a woman. Allied to Gk. zanē, a woman, and E. queen. H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 564; Rich. Dict. p. 783; H. Horn, § 668.

ZANY, a buffoon, a mimic. (Ital.-Gk.-Heb.) In L. L. L. v. 2. 465; and in Beaumont and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, ii. 6 (Bacha). = Ital. Zane, 'the name of Iohn, also a silly Iohn, a gull, a noddie; used also for a simple vice, clown, fool, or simple fellow in a plaic'; Florio. Mod. Ital. Zanni; cf. OF. zani (Godefroy). Zane and Zanni are familiar forms of Giovanni, John. = Gk. zōnnyos; John, i. 6. = Heb. zōkhamin, i. e. the Lord graciously gave. = Heb. zō, the Lord; and khānu, to show mercy. Der. zany, verb, Beaumont and Fletcher, Qu. of Corinth, i. 2 (Crates).

ZARIBA, ZAREBA, ZEREBBA, a temporary camp, fenced round with bushes, &c. (Arab.) Chiefly used in the Soudan. = Arab. zaribah (Z), 'a fold, a pen; an enclosure for cattle; den, or haunt of wild beasts; lurking-place of a hunter'; Rich. Dict. p. 775.

ZBAL, fervour, ardour. (F.-L.-Gk.) Spelt zale in Palsgrave; zele in Caxton, Godefroy of Bologna, prol. p. 2, l. 8. = MF. zele, 'zeal', Cort. Mod. F. zèle. = L. zelum, acc. of zelus, zeal. = Gk. zēlos, zeal, ardour. Doric zēlos; Iug. type zēlos; perhaps from zē, to drive, as in Skt. zē-ir, a driver (Bretzoldt). Der. zeal-ous, L. L. L. v. 2. 116; zeal-ous-ly. Also zeal-of, Selden's Table-Talk, s. v. Zealor, from MF. zelote, 'jealous, or zealous', Cot., from L. zelōtis, Gk. zēlōtis. And see zealous.

ZEBRA, a striped animal of the horse kind. (Port.-W. African.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Described in Purchas's Pilgrimage (1617), bk. vi. ch. i. § 2. = Port. zebra. (Also Span. zebra, zebra.) The animal is a native of S. Africa, and the name originated in Congo; see N. and Q. 9 S. v. 480. According to Littré, it is Ethiopian; he cites: 'Pecora, congensibus zebra, dicta,' Ludolph, Histor. Ethiop. i. 40. But Littré is mistaken as to the true source.

ZEBU, the humped domestic ox of India. (F.-Thibet.) See Zebu in Yule. = F. zebu, a name taken by Buffon from the exhibitors of such a beast at a French fair. A perversion of zobo, a name for a male hybrid between a yak-bull and a hill-cow (Yule). = Thibet. mdzofo, the male of mdzo, a mongrel breed of a yak-bull and a common cow; the female mongrel is called mdzo-mo.

ZECCHINO, a gold coin of Venice. (Ital.-Arab.) The pl. zecchini occurs in Sandys, Travels (1632), p. 3. = Ital. zecchino, a sequin. = Ital. secca, a mint (Florio). = Arab. sikka (S), pron. sikkah, a die for coins. Doublet, sequin.

ZED, the name of the letter Z. (F.-L.-Gk.) In Shak. K. Lear, ii. 2. 69. = F. zèle. = L. zēla. = Gk. zēra. Doublet, izzard, q. v.

ZEDOARY, an East-Indian root resembling ginger. (F.-Low L.-Pers.) 'Zedoary, a spicy root, very like ginger, but of a sweeter scent, and nothing near so biting; it is a hot and dry plant, growing in the woods of Malabar in the E. Indies'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt zedoari, Hakluyt, Voy. vol. ii. pt. 1. 277; col. 1. [1st old F., the name was corrupted to citoad, citoual, citouari (Roquefort); whence the ME. esteuile, Chaucer, C. T. 13691 (B 1951), on which see my note.] = MF. zedoaire, 'an East-Indian root which resembleth ginger'; Cot.-Low L. zedoaria. = Pers. zadwār, zidwār, zedoary; Rich. Dict. p. 771; or jadwār, zedoary, id. p. 794. The initial letter is sometimes the 13th, sometimes the 14th letter of the Pers. alphabet; see Palmer, Pers. Diet., col. 314.

ZEMSTVO, a local elective assembly. (Russ.) Russ. zemstvo, collective sb., the county-courts (Kieff).

ZENITH, the point of the heavens directly overhead. (F.-Span.-Arab.) ME. zenith, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, l. 18. 4. = OF. ceuth (Littré); mod. F. zénith. = Span. zenit, formerly written zenith, as in Minshew's Span. Dict. = Arab. zanit, a way, road, path, tract, quarter; whence samt-ur-ras, the zenith, vertical point of the heavens, also as-samt, an azimuth; Rich. Dict. p. 848. Samt was pronounced sent, of which Span. zenith or zenit is a corruption; in the sense of zenith, it is an abbreviation for samt-ur-ras or sent-er-ras, lit. the way overhead, from ras, the head, Rich. Dict. p. 715. The word azimuth, q. v., is from the same source. See Devic, Suppl. to Littré.

ZEPHYR, a soft gentle breeze. (F.-L.-Gk.) In Shak. Cymb. iv. 2. 172. Chaucer has the form Zephyrus, directly from the Latin, C. T. 5. = MF. zephyre, 'the west wind', Cot.; F. zéphyr. = L. zephyrum, acc. of zephyrus, the west wind. = Gk. zēphros, the west wind.

ZERO, a cipher, nothing, denoted by o. (F. Ital.-Low L.-Arab.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. = MF. zero, 'a cypher in arithmetic, a thing that stands for nothing'; Cot.; F. zéro. = Ital. zero, 'a figure of nought in arithmetic'; Florio. A contracted form of zefiro or zefiro, parallel form to zifra, 'a cifre', i. e. cipher; Florio. = Low L. zephyrum (Devic). = Arab. sifr (with initial sd), a cipher; Rich. Dict. p. 937. See Cipher. See Devic, Suppl. to Littré; he explains that the old Latin treatises on arithmetic wrote zephyrum for Arab. sifr, which became, in Italian, zefiro, and (by contraction) zero. Doublet, cipher.

ZEST, something that gives a relish or a flavour. (F.-L.-Gk.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Phillips explains zest as a chip of orange or lemon-peel, used for flavouring drinks. = MF. zest, 'the thick skinnie or filme wherby the kernell of a wallnut is divided'; Cot. Mod. F. zeste, a piece of the skin of a citron or lemon, whence zester, 'to cut up lemon rind'; Hamilton. The E. sense is due to the use of lemon or citron-peel for flavouring. = L. schistos (schistos), cleft, divided, used by Pliny [bk. xix. c. 6]; according to Dietz, who notes that l. schedula became, similarly, F. schèle; there must have been a transference of sense from 'divided' to 'division'. = Gk. σχίστος, divided. = Gk. σχι (schi), to cleave. See Schism. (Very doubtful; but no other solution has been proposed.)

ZIGZAG, having short, sharp turns. (F.-G.) In Pope, Dunciad, l. 124. = F. zigzag. = G. zickzack, a zigzag; whence zickzack, zigzag, to tack, in sailing. [We also find Swed. sickzack, zigzag (Wiedgren, 1788).] Reduplicated from zucke, a tooth, with reference to zucken-werk, notched work; so that zickzack means 'in an indented manner'. Cf. Ffries. takken, to notch (whence tack, in sailing).

Zaok. Der. zigzag-ery, Sterne, Tristram Shandy, bk. iii. c. 3.

ZINC, a whitish metal. (G.) In Locke, Elements of Nat. Philosophy, c. 8 (R.). = G. zink, zinc; whence also F. zinc, &c. Origin uncertain; see Schade. The name der Zink occurs in Paracelsus (died 1541); see Weigand.

ZIRCON, the name of a mineral. (Arab.-Pers.) The F. form is jargon. Zircon represents the Arab. zargūn, not a true Arab. word, but from Pers. zargūn, of the colour of gold; Rich. Dict. p. 774. = Pers. zar, gold (allied to Skt. havi, yellow, and E. yellow); and gūn, colour; id. pp. 771, 1247. See Devic.

ZITHER, a cittern, kind of guitar. (G.—L.—Gk.) A modern form; from G. zither.—L. cithara.—Gk. κίθάρα, a kind of lyre. See Cithern, Cittern, Guitar, Kit (2).

ZODIAC, an imaginary belt in the heavens, containing the twelve constellations called signs. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. zodiac, zodiak, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 70.—F. zodiaque, 'the zodiac,' Cot.—L. zōdiacus.—Gk. ζωδιακός, adj., of or belonging to animals, whence ὁ ζωδιακός, the zodiac circle; so called from containing the twelve constellations represented by animals.—Gk. ζῷον, a small animal; dimin. of ζῷον, a living creature, an animal. β. Gk. ζῷον is from ζῶν, adj. living; allied to ζῷη, life, and ζῆν, ζῆν (Ionic ζῶν), to live. Allied to Zend ji, to live; from √GWEI, to live. See Vivatus. Brugmann, ii. § 488. Der. zodiac-al, adj.

ZONE, a belt, one of the great belts into which the earth is divided. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 305. 'Their zone is milde;' Higgins, Mirror for Mag., Fulgentius, st. 4.—F. zone, 'a girdle, zone;' Cot.—L. zōna, a girdle, belt, zone.—Gk. ζώνη, a girdle. Put for ζώνη*.—(Gk. ζώνη (= ζων-νυα*), I gird.—√VOS, to gird; whence also Lithuan. jūsta, a girdle, jūsti, to gird (Nesselmann). Brugmann, i. § 167. Der. zon-eal.

ZOOLOGY, the natural history of animals. (Gk.) See Pennant's

British Zoology, London, 1766. Coined from Gk. ζῷο-, for ζῷον, a living creature; and -λογία, allied to λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. See Zodiac and Logic. Der. zoologi-s-al, zoolog-ist. ¶ Pronounced zo-o-, the o's being separate.

ZOOPHYTE, an animal plant, a term now applied to corals, &c. (F.—Gk.) In Johnson's Dict.—F. zoophyte, pl. zoophytes, 'such things as be partly plants, and partly living creatures, as sponges, &c.;' Cot.—Gk. ζῳοφυτον, a living being; an animal-plant, the lowest of the animal tribe, Aristotle, Hist. Anim. xviii. 1. 6.—Gk. ζῷο-, for ζῶν, living; and φυτὸν, a plant, that which has grown, from φύειν, to produce, also to grow, from √BHEU, to grow, exist, be. See Zodiac and Be.

ZOUAVE, one of a body of soldiers in the French service, orig. Arabs, but now Frenchmen in Arab. dress. (F.—N. African.) Modern; since the conquest of Algeria by the French in 1830; Haydn, Dict. of Dates.—F. Zouave.—N. African Zuawa, a tribe of Kabyles living among the Jurjara mountains in Algeria (Mahn, Littre).

ZYMOTIC, a term applied to diseases, in which a poison works through the body like a ferment. (Gk.) Modern.—Gk. ζυμωτικός, causing to ferment.—Gk. ζύμωσις, I leaven, cause to ferment.—Gk. ζύμη, leaven. Allied to L. īās, broth; see Juice.

APPENDIX

I. LIST OF PREFIXES

The following is a list of the principal Prefixes in English, showing their origin. It is not quite exhaustive, but contains all of any consequence. For further information, see the etymologies of adown, &c., in the Dictionary.

A- (1); in a-down, a-kin, a-new, a-thirst. (E.) See Of- (below).
A- (2); in a-back, a-baft, a-bed, a-blaze, a-board, a-bout, a-bove, a-broach, a-broad, a-cross, a-drift, a-far, a-float, a-foot, a-fore, a-gape, a-ground, a-head, a-jar, a-kimbo, a-like, a-live, a-loof, a-main, a-mid, a-miss, a-mong, a-round, a-skew, a-slant, a-sleep, a-slope, a-stern, a-stir, a-thwait, a-way, a-work, now-a-days; &c. (E.) See On- (below).

A- (5); in a-bandon, a-base, a-bate, a-bet, a-beyance, a-bridge, a-butt, a-cliche, a-mass, a-merce, a-mort, a-mount, a-vail, a-valanche, a-venge, a-venue, a-ver, a-vouch, a-vow (1), a-vow (2), a-wait. (F.-L.) F. ā-, ā-; from L. ad. See Ad-. No also L. a- for ad before gn, as in a-gnate; or before sc, sp, st; as in a-scent, a-spect, a-stringent.

A- (6); in a-vert, a-vocation. (L.) See Ab- (1).
A- (7); in a-lash, a-mend, a-void. (F.-L.) See Ex- (1).
A- (8); in a-las. (F.-L.) OF. a-, interj.; from L. ah! interj. Cf. a-lack.

A- (9); in a-byss, a-cataclyse, a-cephalous, a-chromatic, a-damant, a-gnostic, a-maranth, a-methyst, a-mucsty, a-neroid, a-orist, a-pathy, a-peysia, a-ptyeryx, a-sbestos, a-sphyxia, a-sylum, a-symptote, a-taxy, a-theism, a-tom, a-tomy, a-trophy, a-zote. (Gk.) See An- (3).

A- (10); in a-do. (E.) For at do.
A- (11); in a-ware. (E.) ME. i-, y-, prefix; AS. ge-. See At- (2), Y-.

A- (12); in a-piece, a-piece. (E.) For a pair, a piece; a for an, indef. article. See An- (6).

A- (13); in a-vast. (Du. or Span.) Du. hou vast, hold fast; or Span. a-basto. (Doubtful.)

A- (14); in a-ricot. (Arab.) Arab. al, the; def. article. See Al- (4).

A- (15); in a-colyte. (Gk.) Gk. δ-, with; cf. Skt. sa-, together with.

A- (16); in a-fraid. (F.-L.) For afraid; see At- (4), Ex- (1).

Ab- (1); in ab-dicate, ab-duce, ab-erration, ab-hor, ab-ject, ab-jure, ab-lative, ab-lution, ab-negate, ab-normal, ab-olish (?), ab-ominate, ab-originis, ab-ortion, ab-ound, ab-rude, ab-rogate, ab-rupt, ab-scind, ab-solute, ab-solve, ab-sorb, ab-surd, ab-undance, ab-use. (L.; or F.-L.) L. ab, from orig. form ap, for which see Apertion, p. 25; lengthened to abs in abs-cond, &c.; cf. Gk. ἀ- + E. of; Gk. ἀπ-; Skt. apa, away from. This prefix also appears as a- (6), adv-, av-, v-; as in a-vert, a-vocation, adv-ance, av-aunt, v-guard.

Abs-; in abs-cess, abs-cond, abs-ent, abs-tain, abs-tentious, abs-tention, abs-tract, abs-truse. (L.; or F.-L.) L. abs- (F. abs-), extended form of ab-; see Ab- (1).

Ac- (1); in ac-cede, ac-celerate, &c. (L.; or F.-L.) The form assumed by L. ad before the following c; see Ad-. So also before gu-; as in ac-quaint, ac-quiesce, ac-quire, ac-quit.

Ac- (2); in ac-knowledge. (E.) ME. a-; from AS. an. Used in place of A- (2).

Ac- (3); in ac-cursed. (E.) For ME. a-; AS. ā-; used in place of A- (4).

Ad-; in ad-age, ad-agio, ad-apt, &c. (L.; or F.-L.) L. ad, to, at, for. +Goth. at; AS. æt; E. at. This prefix appears also as a- (5), ab- (2), ac- (1), af- (1), ag-, al- (2), an- (1), ap- (1), ar- (1), as- (1), at- (1); as in a-bandon, ab-breviate, ac-cede, al-fix, ag-gress, al-lude, an-nex, ap-pend, ar-rogate, as-sign, at-tract.

Al- (1); in al-fable, al-fect, al-fect, al-fiance, &c. The form taken by L. ad before f; see Ad-. So also af- for ME. a- (F. a- < L. ad); as in al-fair.

Al- (2); in al-ford. (E.) ME. a-; for i-, y-, from AS. ge-. See A- (11) and Y-.

Al- (3); in al-fright. (E.) ME. a-; from AS. ā-; see A- (4).
Al- (4); in al-fray. (F.-L.) OF. ef-; from L. ex; see Ex- (1).

Al- (5); in al-fair. See Al- (1) above.

After-; in after-math, after-most, after-ward. (E.) ME. after; AS. after. See After, p. 9.

Ag-; in ag-glomerate, ag-glutinate, ag-grandise, &c. (L.; or F.-L.) The form taken by L. ad before g; see Ad-.

Al- (1); in al-mighty, al-most, al-one, &c. (E.) For all; see All, p. 14.

Al- (2); in al-lege, al-leviate, &c. (L.; or F.-L.) The form taken by L. ad before l; see Ad-. So also al- for ME. a- (F. a- < L. ad); as in al-legiance.

Al- (3); in al-ligator. (Span.-L.) Span. el, def. art. = L. ille, he.

Al- (4); in al-battoss, al-cayde, al-chemy, al-cohol, al-curan, al-cove, al-embic, al-ghra, al-guazil, al-kali. (Arab.) Arab. al, def. art. This also appears as a-, ar-, av-, el-, l-. E. a- = a-ricot, artichoke, as-sagari, el-ixir, l-ute. See L- (2).

Al- (5); in al-legiance; see Al- (2).

Am- (1); in am-bush. (F.-L.) F. em- = L. im-, for in, prep.; see In- (2). Cf. am-buscade.

Am- (2); in am-brosia. (Gk.) See An- (2).

Amb-; in amb-assador. Of Celtic origin; see Ambassador, p. 17. And see Ambi- below, and Emb-.

Ambi-, Amb-; in ambi-dextrous, amb-ient, amb-iguous, amb-ition. (L.; or F.-L.) L. ambi-, on both sides, around. +Gk. ἀμφι. See below.

A. Summary. A few of the Prefixes given above, such as al- in al-mighty, are rather true words that can be used alone; for al- is merely a spelling of all. Omitting these and some forms that are mere variants, the list may be reduced to the following.

A- (with several values), ab-, abs- (see Alscand), ad-, al- (Arabic), ambi- or amb- (see Ambidextrous), amphi-, an-, ana-, ante-, anti- or ant-, aph- or apo-, be-, bi- or bis-, cata-, circum-, co- (com-, con-), contra-, counterc-, de-, di-, dian-, dis-, dys- (see Dysentery), e-, em- (see Euharic), eu-, endo-, epi-, eso-, ex-, exo-, extra-, for- (2), for- (3), fore-, forth, fro-.

Gain- (see Gainsay), hemi-, hyper-, hypo-, i-, il- (1), il- (2), in- (1), im- (2), im- (3), in- (1), in- (2), in- (3), indi-, inter-, intra-, intro- (see Introduce), ir- (1), ir- (2), juxta- (see Joust).

Meta-, mis- (1), mis- (2), ne- (see No (1)), non-, ob-, on-, or- (see Ordeal, Ort, Orlop), out-, over-, palin- (see Palindrome), panto- (2), para-, per-, peri-, pol- or po- (see Pollute, Position), por- (see Portend), post-, pre-, preter-, pro-, pros-, pur-, re-, red-, retro-.

Se- (sed-), semi-, sine- (see Sinecure), sub-, sub-ter-, super-, supra-, sur- (1), sur- (2), sus-, syn-, to- (1), to- (2), trans-, ultra-, un- (1), un- (2), un- (3), under-, up-, with-, y-.

B. Some of these prefixes assume various shapes in accordance with phonetic laws. Of these, the most important are the following:—

(a) The Lat. prep. ad appears as a-, ab-, ac-, ad-, af-, ag-, al-, an-, ap-, ar-, as-, at-.

(b) The Lat. prep. cum appears as co-, col-, com-, comb-, con-, cor-. Also (through F.) as co-, col-, con-, com-, cu-, cur-.

(c) The Lat. prefix dis- appears as de-, des-, di-, dif-, dis-, and even s-.

(d) The Lat. prep. ex appears as a-, as-, e-, ef-, es-, ex-, and even iss- and s-.

(e) The Lat. prep. in appears as am-, an-, em-, en-, il- (1), im- (1), in- (2), ir- (1).

(f) The Lat. neg. prefix in- appears as en-, i-, il- (2), im- (4), in- (3), ir- (2).

(g) The Lat. prep. ob appears as o-, ob-, oc-, of-, op-; we even find os-.

(h) The Lat. prep. sub appears as s- (in s-ombre), so- (in so-journ), su-, sub-, suc-, suf-, sug-, sum-, sur-, sur-.

(i) The Greek prefix apo- (ἀπό) also appears as aph-; cata- (κατά), also as cat-, catk-; eu- (εὖ), also as em-; epi- (ἐπὶ), also as ep-, eph-; hypo- (ὑπό), also as hyp-, hyph-; syn- (σύν), also as sy-, syl-, sym-.

These very common variations should be observed and learnt. For this purpose, I suggest a study of the following words:—

(a) *A-*chieve, *ab-*brebate, *ac-*cede, *ad-*mire, *af-*fix, *ag-*gress, *al-*lude, *an-*nex, *ap-*pend, *ar-*rogate, *as-*sign, *at-*tract.

(b) *Co-*agulate, *col-*lect, *com-*mute, *comb-*ustion, *con-*nect, *cor-*rode; also *co-*st, *col-*l, *cou-*ch, *coun-*cil, *cu-*ll, *cur-*ry (1).

(c) *De-*feat, *des-*cant, *di-*verge, *dif-*fuse, *dis-*pel, *s-*pend.

(d) *A-*mend, *as-*tonish, *e-*normous, *ef-*fect, *ex-*cape, *ex-*tend, *iss-*ue, *s-*ample.

(e) *Am-*bush, *an-*oint, *cm-*bellish, *en-*close, *il-*lude, *im-*mure, *im-*merge, *in-*clude, *ir-*ritate.

(f) *En-*emy, *i-*gnoble, *il-*legal, *im-*mortal, *in-*firm, *ir-*regular.

(g) *O-*mit, *ob-*long, *oc-*cur, *of-*fer, *op-*press, *os-*tensible.

(h) *S-*ombre, *so-*journ, *su-*dden, *sub-*mit, *suc-*ceed, *suf-*fuse, *sug-*gest, *sum-*mon, *sup-*press, *sur-*rogate.

(i) *Apo-*logy, *aph-*oresis; *cata-*logue, *cat-*echism, *cath-*olis; *en-*ergy, *em-*phasis; *epi-*logue, *ep-*och, *eph-*emera; *hypo-*thesis, *hyp-*allage, *hyph-*en; *syn-*onymous; *syn-*stem, *syn-*logism, *sym-*metry.

It may be noted here that more than one prefix may be placed at the beginning of a word, as in re-im-burse, run-part (= re-em-part), in-ex-act, &c.

C. Some prefixes exhibit such unusual forms in certain words that they can only be understood upon a perusal of the etymology of the word as given in the Dictionary. I note here a few curious examples.

A- replaces e- (Lat. e, for ex) in a-mend.

Al-, the Arabic definite article, appears at the beginning of al-cohol, al-ricot, al-tichuke, al-segai, al-istir, al-ute. But the al- in al-ligator is the Span. el, Lat. ille.

The Latin ab has actually become adv- in the word advantage; whilst in v-anguard it appears as v-. But, in ab-brigate, the prefix is ab-. The Latin cum- appears in co-st, co-sive, col-l, con-ch, cou-sin, cur-ry (1), cu-ll, cu-stom.

The de- in deu-con represents the Greek διδ; so also de- in de-sil.

The e- in e-tope represents the AF. e, OF. e, I. ex.

The e- in e-squire, e-sculcheon, &c., is purely phonetic, as explained.

The eu- in eu-angelist is for Gk. eu-, as in eu-logy.

The or- in or-deal and or-t is a Tonic prefix.

The outr- in outr-age represents the Latin ultra; cf. utter-ance (2).

The s- in sure (Lat. sē-cūrus) represents the Latin sē-.

The i- in i-wild represents the AS. et; but in i-audry it is the last letter of saint.

D. Numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; such as Lat. binus, dun (adverbially, bis), trēs, &c.; hence un-ni-nous, *du-*ct, *bin-*ary, *bi-*sect, *bis-*cuit, *ha-*lance, *dou-*ble, *tre-*ble, *tri-*ple, &c.

Other noteworthy Latin words are dimidium, male, pauze, semi-, vice; whence demi-, *mal-*trat, *mau-*gre, *pen-*insula, *semi-*circle, *vice-*admiral, vis-count.

As in Latin, the Greek numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; hence *di-*culeddun, from dis, twice; *tri-*gonometry, *tetra-*hedron, *penta-*gon, *hex-*agon, *hepta-*gon, *octa-*gon, *nona-*gon, *deca-*gon, &c. Other noteworthy Greek words are ἀρχι-, chief (archi-pelago, arche-type, arch-bishop); αὐτός, self (auto-graph, auth-entic, off-endi); ἡμι-, half (hemi-); ἑρεpos, other (hetero-); ἕλος, entire (holo-); ὁμός, same (homo-); μόνος, single (mono-); πᾶν, all (pau-, pauto-); πολύς, much, many (poly-); πρῶτος, first (proto-).

II. SUFFIXES

The number of suffixes in modern English is so great, and the forms of several, especially in words derived through the French from Latin, are so variable that an attempt to exhibit them all would tend to confusion. The best account of their origin is to be found in Brugmann, Grundriss der Vergleichenden Grammatik der Indogermanischen Sprachen. An account of Anglo-Saxon suffixes is given at p. 119 of March, Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language. Lists of Anglo-Saxon words, arranged according to their suffixes, are given in Loth, Etymologische Angelsächsisch-englische Grammatik, Elberfeld, 1870. Simple accounts of English suffixes in general are given in Morris, Historical Outlines of English Accidence, pp. 212-221, 229-242; in Nesfield, Historical English and Derivation, pp. 185-252; and in the two series of my Principles of English Etymology; to which the reader is referred. See also

Koch, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache, vol. iii, pt. i, pp. 29-77. It is clearly established that the Indo-germanic languages abound in suffixes, each of which was originally intended slightly to modify the meaning of the root to which it was added, so as to express the radical idea in a new relation. The force of many of these must, even at an early period, have been slight, and in many instances it is difficult to trace it; but in some instances it is still clear, and the form of the suffix is then of great service. The difference between low-er, low-ed, and low-ing is well marked, and readily understood. One of the most remarkable points is that most of the Indo-germanic languages delighted in adding suffix to suffix, so that words are not uncommon in which two or more suffixes occur, each repeating, it may be, the sense of that which preceded it. Double diminutives, such as parti-cle, i.e. 'a little little part,' are sufficiently common. The Lat. superl. suffix -issimus is an example of the use of a treble suffix, which really expresses no more than is expressed by -mus alone in the word pri-mus. The principal Indo-germanic suffixes, omitting feminine forms, are these: -o, -i, -u, -yo (written -jo), -uo, -mo, -ni, -men (-mon), -meno, -no, -ino, -ni, -nu, -es (-on), -ent (-ont), -lo, -li, -lu, -ro, -ri, -ru, -er (-or), -as (-os), -to, -men-to, -ti, -ti-on, -ti-li, -tu, -ti-li, -ter (-tor, -tr), -turo, -tro, -ilo, -id, -d, -d-on, -tū-den, -go, -go, -ko, -k, -kho, -ho. These can be readily compounded, so as to form new suffixes; so that from -men-to was formed -mento (as in E. argument).

One common error with regard to suffixes should be guarded against, viz. that of mis-dividing a word so as to give the suffix a false shape. This is extremely common in such words as logi-c, civi-c, belli-cose, where the suffix is commonly spoken of as being -ic or -icose. This error occurs, for instance, in the elaborate book on English Affixes by S. S. Haldemann, published at Philadelphia in 1865; and a work which is of considerable use as containing a very full account, with numerous examples, of suffixes and prefixes. The truth is that civi-c (Lat. civicus) is derived from Lat. civis, declensional stem of civis, a citizen, with the suffix -us (Idg. -ko); and logi-c is from Gk. λογικός, from λογω, for λογω, declensional stem of λόγος, a discourse, with the suffix -ikos, as before. Compare Lat.

civi-tas, Gk. λογω-μαχία. Of course, words in -ic are so numerous that -ic has come to be regarded as a suffix at the present day, so that we do not hesitate to form Volta-ic as an adjective of Volta; but this is English misuse, not Latin etymology. Moreover, since both -i and -ko are Indo-germanic suffixes, such a suffix as -ikos, -eus, is possible both in Greek and Latin; but in the particular words above cited it is clearer to take the -i as due to the declensional stem.

One more word of warning may perhaps suffice. If we wish to understand a suffix, we must employ comparative philology, and not consider English as an absolutely isolated language, with laws different from those of other languages of the Indo-germanic family. Thus the -th in tru-th is the -d of A.S. trīow-ð, gen. case trīow-ðe, fem. sb. This suffix answers to that seen in Goth. gabaur-ths, birth, gen. case gabaur-thais, fem. sb., belonging to the -f stem declension of Gothic strong substantives. The true suffix is therefore to be expressed as Teut. -thi, cognate with Idg. -ti, so extremely common in Latin; cf. dū-ti, dowry, men-ti, mind, mor-ti, death, mes-si (<met-ti), harvest, that which is mown. Hence, when Horne Tooke gave his famous etymology of truth as being 'that which a man troueth', he did in reality suggest that the -ti in Lat. mor-ti is identical with the -t in mori-tur or in ama-t; in other words, it was a mere whim.

III. LIST OF HOMONYMS

Homonyms are words spelt alike, but differing in use. In a few cases, I include different uses of what is either exactly, or nearly, the same word, at the same time noting that the forms are allied; but in most cases, the words are of different origin.

IV. LIST OF DOUBLET

Doublets are words which, though apparently differing in form, are nevertheless, from an etymological point of view, one and the same, or only differ in some unimportant suffix. Thus aggrieve is from L. aggravāre; whilst aggravate, though really from the pp. aggravātus, is nevertheless used as a verb, precisely as aggrieve is used, though the senses of the words have been differentiated. In the following list, each pair of doublets is entered only once, to save space, except in a few remarkable cases, such as cipher, zero. When a pair of doublets is mentioned a second time, it is enclosed within square brackets.

V. LIST OF INDOGERMANIC ROOTS

THE following is a brief list of the principal Indogermanic roots that have English derivatives. Those of which examples are either scanty or doubtful are not noticed. Many of the roots here given are of some importance and can be abundantly illustrated. I have added, at the end of the brief account of each root, several miscellaneous examples of derivatives; but these lists are by no means exhaustive, nor are they arranged in any particular order beyond the separation into groups of the words of Greek, Latin, and Teutonic origin.

Many of these roots (but given in forms which are no longer generally accepted) may be found in 'Fick, Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der indogermanischen Sprachen,' in Curtius, 'Greek Etymology, English edition, translated by Wilkins and England,' and in 'Vanček, Griechisch-Lateinisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch, Leipzig, 1877.' More correct forms are frequently cited by Brugmann and Uhlenbeck, and are here adopted. The chief modern improvements are the substitution of e or o for a in many instances, of ei for i and of eu for u likewise in many instances, and in the treatment of the gutturals.

The account of each root is, in each case, very brief, and mentions only a few characteristic derivatives. Further information may be obtained in the above-mentioned authorities. The English examples are accounted for in the present work. Thus, under the word Agitate, a cross-reference is given to Agent; and under Agent is cited the \sqrt{AG} , to drive; with a reference to Brugmann, i. § 175.

Instead of giving Grimm's Law in the usual form, I omit the Old High German modifications, and use the word 'Teutonic' as inclusive of all other Germanic forms, thus reducing the number of varying bases, as due to 'sound-shifting' of the consonants, from three to two. This being premised, I give a short and easy method for the conversion of 'Indogermanic' roots into the corresponding 'Teutonic' ones; though it must be remembered that each language has ways of its own for representing certain original sounds. Some of these modifications are noticed below.

Let the student learn by heart the following scheme.

Dentals: viz. dh, d, t, th.

Labials: viz. bh, b, p, f.

Gutturals: viz. gh, g, k, h.

This is all that need be remembered; it only remains to explain what the scheme means.

It is to be read in the following manner. When a dental sound occurs (especially at the beginning of a word, for in other positions the rule is liable to exception), an Idg. dh becomes a Teut. d [for dh is followed in the scheme by d]; an Idg. d becomes a Teut. t

[for a like reason]; and an Idg. t becomes a Teut. th (as in English).

In practice, inevitable modifications take place, some of the principal ones being these (I do not give them all).

For dh, as above, Skt. has dh; Gk. has θ; Latin has f (or if the dh be not initial, d or t).

For bh, as above, Skt. has bh; Gk. has φ; and Latin has f (or if the bh be not initial, b).

For gh, as above, Skt. has gh or k; Gk. has χ; and Latin has f or k (or if the gh be not initial, g, gu, u).

Note the threefold value of the Latin f, which may stand, initially, for dh, bh, or gh. Also, that Latin uses e for k, but the e is always hard, having the sound of k before all vowels.

A few selected examples are here noted.

Dentals. Lat. facere, to do, to put, is allied to Gk. φάσκειν, I place, and to E. do. From \sqrt{dh} , to place, put; Sanskrit has dhā, to put. Skt. duh, Gk. βίω, Lat. duo, are cognate with E. two. Gk. ῥησις, Lat. trēs, are cognate with E. three.

Labials. From the \sqrt{bh} , to bear, we have the Skt. bhar, to bear; Gk. φέρειν, Lat. ferre, to bear; E. bear. Examples of the change from the classical p to b are very scarce; compare the Lat. labium with the E. lip. Gk. ῥοῦς (stem rob-); Lat. fūs (stem pef-); E. foot.

Gutturals. From the \sqrt{gh} , to be yellow, we have the Gk. χρᾶς, gall; Lat. fel, gall, helvus, light yellow; E. gall. The Gk. γένος, Lat. genus, race, is allied to the E. kin; and the Gk. καρδιά, Lat. cor, to the E. heart. It is now recognised, however, that there are really three series of gutturals, sometimes named the palatal gutturals, the middle gutturals, and the labialised velar gutturals. Some further information on the more elementary points of comparative philology will be found in my Primer of Classical and English Philology.

I denote the palatal gutturals by GH, G, K; the middle gutturals by G(w)H, G(w), Q; and the labialised velar gutturals by GwH, Gw, and Qw. They cannot always be distinguished, and I am not sure that I have always given them correctly.

The list of Roots given below is arranged in alphabetical order. They may be regarded as elementary bases (usually monosyllabic) which underlie all the various forms that are given by way of example. Each of them may be regarded, to use Brugmann's words, as 'the nucleus (so to speak) of a whole system of word-forms,' and are of much service in grouping words together. But they do not afford any very sure indications of what the primitive Indo-germanic was like; 'it must not (says Brugmann) be supposed that the roots, which we in ordinary practice abstract from words, are at all to be relied upon as representing the word-forms of the root-period.'

By way of further illustration, I give a fuller treatment of the first root on the list.

The form AG (AK) means that the Indogermanic root AG takes the form AK in Teutonic, by the 'sound-shifting' of g to k already noticed above. The sense of the root seems to have been 'to drive, urge, lead, conduct,' and the like. The Skt. form (originally ag) has been palatalised to aj, which is the base of the verb ajami, 'I drive'; the third person singular is ajati, 'he drives'; and the form ajati is taken in Uhlenbeck's Etymological Dictionary and the Latin infinitive is agere. (It is further represented by the Old Irish agim, 'I drive'.) The chief representative of this root in Teutonic occurs in the Icel. aka, to drive (pt. t. ák); the corresponding AS. form aem (pt. t. æc) took up a new sense, viz. 'to give pain,' as in mine eagan acod, 'my eyes give pain,' or in modern English, ache. I give, as characteristic examples, the words agony and axiom, from Greek; agent, agile, and axis, from Latin; and acorn, acorn, and ache, from Anglo-Saxon. How each of these words is connected with the root AG, is explained in the Dictionary.

But these are not the only English derivatives from this root. The Latin agere had the pp. actus, whence the E. act, active, actor, actual, actuate, actuary, counteract, exact, exact, transact; while from the base ag we have also agitate, coagulate, ambiguous, conjugate, cogent, exigent, examine, prodigal. In connexion with the Gk. agony we may further cite antagonist. And it is very likely that another native English derivative is axe; for the addition of s to the base ag would give a base ags, which would necessarily become aks, accounting for the Gk. akos and the Lat. axis (see AXIS); and this new base aks would become aks in Teutonic, by the usual 'sound-shifting' from lg to k to h. But the Teutonic aks becomes ax in Anglo-Saxon, so that there is no difficulty in connecting the AS. ax, an axe, with the Latin axis; see further under AXIS.

Similarly, many other roots have often more derivatives than it seemed to me at all necessary to indicate.

AG (AK), to drive, urge, conduct. Skt. aj, to drive; Gk. áy-ew, l. ag-ere, to drive; Icel. aka (pt. t. ák), to drive. Ex. agony, axiom, synagogue, legemany; agent, agile, axis; acorn, ache.

AGH (AG), to pull tight (?). Gk. áy-ew, l. ag-ere, to vex, áy-os, anguish; Goth. ag-is, fright, awe. Ex. ail, awe. (cf. ANGH.)

AIDH (AID), to kindle. Skt. idh, to kindle; idh-as, fuel; Gk. áy-ew, to burn; idh-ep, upper air; l. ad-ēs, orig. a hearth, astuary, heat; AS. ād, a funeral pile, ād, a kiln. Ex. ether; edify, astuary; ad-house.

AK (AI), to be sharp, to pierce. Gk. ák-ew, pointed; ák-ew, whetstone; ák-ew, edge; l. ac-us, needle, ac-ere, to sharpen, ac-iv, edge; AS. ecg, edge. Ex. acacia, acme, acorn, acrobatic, acoustic; acid, acumen, acute, acid, ague, aglet, eager; ear (2), edge, awn, egg (2); and cf. paragon.

AL, to nourish, raise. l. al-ere, to nourish; ad-ol-escere, to grow up; al-tus, raised; Goth. al-an, to nourish; al-ds, an age. Ex. aliment, altitude, adolescent, adult, exalt; old.

AN, to breathe. Skt. an, to breathe; Gk. án-ew, wind; l. animus, spirit; Goth. us-anna, to breathe out, expire. Ex. anemone; animal, animosity, animadvert.

ANGH (ANG), to choke, strangle. Gk. án-ew, to strangle; l. ang-ere, to choke, anx-ius, anxious; Icel. angr, grief. Ex. quincy (for quin-anc-y); anguish, anguish, anguish; ang.

ANQ (ANH, ANG), to bend. Skt. ānch, to bend, curve; Gk. án-ew, an anchor; AS. ān-ew, a bend; l. unc-us, curved, ang-ul-us, an angle; AS. ang-el, a hook. Ex. anchor; angle (1); angle (2).

AR, to plough. Gk. ár-ew, l. ar-ere, AS. er-ian, to plough. Ex. arable; car (3).

AR, to fit. Skt. ar-as, spoke of a wheel; Gk. ár-ew, fitted, ár-ew, joint; ár-ew, joint, shoulder; l. ar-mus, ar-tus, a limb; ar-ma, arms, ar-s, art; Goth. ar-ms, an arm. Ex. harmony; arms, art, article; arm (1).

ARG, to shine. Skt. arj-unas, white (cf. raj-atam, silver); Gk. ár-ew, white, ár-ew, silver, l. arg-entum, silver, arg-illa, white clay; arg-ure, to make clear. Ex. argent, argillaceous, argument. Also Argonaut.

ARQ, to protect, keep safe. Gk. ár-ew, to keep off; l. arc-ere, to keep off, arc-a, a box. Ex. arcana, ark.

AUG(w) (AUK), to increase. Apparently allied to AWE(w), WEG(w); see WEG(w). Skt. au-er-a, very strong, aj-as, strength (cf. vaj, to strengthen); l. aug-ere, to increase; Goth. auk-an, to eke. Hence AUG(w)-S, AUQ-S, as in Gk. auē-árew, to increase,

l. aux-ilium, help. Ex. augment, augment, anction, author, also auxiliary; ake (1), ake (2).

AWES, to shine; see EUS, WES.

BHA [-bha], to speak, declare. Gk. ph-é, I say, ph-é-ew, report, ph-é-ew, a saying, ph-é-ew, clear voice; l. f-eri, to speak, f-er-a, fame, f-er-bula, a narrative, f-er-ior, I confess. Ex. antiphon, anthem, prophet, euphemism, euphuism, phonetic; fate, fable, fairy, fame, affable, confess. See BHAN (below).

BHAN (BAN), to speak, declare. Skt. bhan, to speak, declare; AS. ban-nan, to proclaim. Ex. ban, banan.

BHA [-bha], to shine, to be clear. Skt. bhā, to shine. Hence the extended forms BHAL, BHAN, BHAW.

BHAL, to shine. Skt. bhāl-am, lustre, Lith. bāl-ti, to be white, Gk. ph-é-ew, white. Breton bal, a white streak in an animal's face, AS. bāl, a blaze. Ex. bald, bald-faced; also bale-fire, beltane.

BHAN, to show, display clearly. Gk. ph-é-ew (for ph-é-ew*), to show, ph-é-ew, to display, ph-é-ew, appearance, phase; Irish bhān, white. Ex. fancy, hierophant, ycrophant, phantom, phenomenon, phase. Also phant.

BHAW, to glow. Gk. ph-é-ew (for ph-é-ew*), ph-é, light; ph-é-ew, to shine, glow. Ex. phantom, phosphorus.

BHEID (BEIT), to cleave, bite. Skt. bhid, to cleave; l. funder (pt. t. fid-er), to cleave; AS. bite-an, to bite; Icel. baita, to make to bite, to bait. Ex. assure; bite, bitter, bait, abet, bet. (Cf. bill (1), which Walde refers to an Idg. type bhid-tem*.)

BHEIDH (BEID), to persuade, trust. Gk. ph-é-ew (for ph-é-ew*), I persuade; l. fid-ere, to trust, fid-es, faith, fid-ua, a treaty. Ex. affiance, confide, defy, faith, fidelity, infidel, perfidious, federal, confederate. Perhaps bide (1). Perhaps bide (disputed).

BHELGH (HELIG), to bulge, swell out. Icel. bulg-inn, swollen, from a lost strong verb; Irish bulg-aim, I swell, bulg, a bag, budget, belly, pair of bellows; Goth. bulg-s, a bag; AS. bulg-an, to swell with anger. Ex. bulge, bulge, budget; bag (?), belly, bellows, billow, bolled. Cf. bill (1).

BHELS (BELLI), to resound. Lith. bals-as, voice, sound; AS. bell-an, to make a loud noise. Cf. Skt. bhāsh (for bhāsh*), to speak (Uhlenbeck). Ex. bell, hollow, bull (1).

BHENDH (BEND), to bind. Skt. bandh (for bhandh*), to bind; Pers. band, a bond; Gk. ph-é-ew (for ph-é-ew*), a cable; l. off-end-ia, a knot, band; Goth. bind-an, to bind. Ex. bind, band, bond, bundle.

BHER (BER), to bear, carry. Skt. bhr, to support, bhr-tar, a brother, friend; Gk. ph-é-ew, l. fer-a, I bear; fer-s, chance (which brings things about); für, a thief (cf. Gk. ph-é). Ex. fertile, fortune, fortuitous, furtive; bear (1), burden, bier, barrow, bairn, barn (2), birth, brother; bore (3).

BHER (BER), to cut, bore. Zend bar, to cut, bore; Pers. bur-enda, sharp, cutting; Gk. ph-é-ew (for ph-é-ew*), ph-é-ew, a ravine, ph-é-ew, gullet; l. fer-er, AS. bor-ian, to bore. Ex. pharynx; perforate; bore (1), bore (2).

BHERG, BHLEG (BERK, BLEK), to shine, burn. Skt. bhrāj, to shine; Gk. ph-é-ew, to burn, l. fulg-ere, to shine, ful-men (ful-men*), thunder-bolt, flag-rare, to burn, flam-ma (flam-ma*), flame; Goth. hairs-t, bright. Ex. phlox; refulgent, fulminate, flam-rant, flame; bright. Also blink, blunk.

BIERS (BEKS), to be stiff or bristling. Skt. bhrāj-ji, a point; Icel. brod-er (broz-er*), a spike; AS. byrs-t, a bristle, bears, bars, a perch (fish). Ex. brad, bristle, hass (2).

BHEU (BEU), to dwell, become, be. Skt. bhā, to be; bhar-an (a), a dwelling, house; Gk. ph-é-ew, he was; l. fu-t, I was; AS. bō-an, to be; bō-d, a house; Goth. bau-an, to dwell; Lith. bu-ti, to be. Ex. physic, euphuism, imp; future; be, boor, booth, buck (1), bower, byre, by-law, burly, build.

BHEUDH (BEUD), to awake, inform, bid, command. Skt. budh (buddh*), to awake, understand, būdā-ya, to inform; Gk. ph-é-ew (a), I search, ask; AS. bōd-an, to bid. Ex. bid (2), beadle, bode.

BHEUQW, BHEUGW (BEUIW), to bow, bend, turn about. Skt. bhuj, to bend, stoop; Gk. ph-é-ew, to flee; l. fug-ere, to flee; AS. bīg-an, to bow, bend, bog-a, a bow. Ex. fugitive, fugue, refuge, subterfuge; bow (1), bow (2), bow (3), big, bowl, buxom. See Brugmann, i. § 68; who adds boil (3).

BHLE (-bhlē), Teut. BLE (-blē), to blow. l. flū-re, AS. blā-wan, to blow. Ex. flautist; blow (1), blaze (2), blast, bladder.

BHLEG, to shine, burn; see BHERG.

BHLO (-bhlō), Teut. BLO (-blō), to blow as a flower, to flourish. l. flō-s, a flower, flō-ere, to flourish; AS. blō-wan, to blow, blō-ma, bloom. Ex. floral, flourish; blow (2), bloom, blossom, blood, bleed, bless.

BHOG, bhōg (BAK, bōk), to bake or roast. Gk. ph-é-ew, to roast, bake; AS. bac-an (pt. t. bōc), to bake. Ex. bake.

BHREG (BREG), to break (with a cracking noise). L. frangere (pt. t. frīg-i), to break; frag-ilis, fragile; Goth. brik-an, AS. brec-an, to break. Ex. fragile, fragment, frail; break, brake (1), brake (3). Perhaps brook (2).

BHREU (BREU), to crowd close, fence round, shut in. Gk. φράσσειν (φράσσειν*), to shut in, make fast, φράγ-μα, a fence; L. frēqu-ens, crammed; far-ire, to stuff full. Ex. diaphragm; frequent, farce, force (2).

BHREU (BREU), to decoct. L. dē-fru-tum, new wine boiled down; Thracian βῆρ-ov, beer; OIrish bruith, cooking; AS. brēo-wan, to brew. Ex. brew, broth, bross, bread. Allied to the above words are, further, Gk. φύπ-iv, to mix up, mingle together, Skt. bhūranya, to be active, L. fur-ere, to rage. Ex. fury; also purple. Also L. feru-ire, to boil, to be fervent, fermentum, leaven; AS. beorma, yeast. Ex. fervent, ferment; barm (1).

BHREUG (BREUK), to enjoy, use. L. fru-or (for frūg-uor*), pp. fruc-tus, I enjoy, frūg-ūs, fruit, frū-mentum (frūg-mentum*), corn; AS. brūc-an, to use. Ex. fruit, frugal, frumity, fructify; brook (1).

BUG, to bellow, snort, puff; of imitative origin. Skt. bukh, to sound; L. bucc-a, the puffed cheek. Ex. disembogue, debouch, embouchure.

DAK (TAH), to bite, tear, hold fast. Skt. daṭ, to bite; Gk. δάκ-iv, to bite; Goth. tah-jan, to rend; AS. tang-e, a pair of tongs. Ex. tang (1), tang (3), tongs.

DAM (TAM), to tame. Skt. dam, to tame; Gk. δαμ-iv, to tame; L. dom-are, to tame; Goth. ga-tam-jan, to tame. Ex. adamant, diamond; daunt; tame.

DE (=dē), to bind. Gk. δέ-iv, I bind, δέ-iv, fillet. Ex. diadem. DEK (TEH), to show, point out. Skt. dip, to show; Gk. δείκ-iv, I show, δέκ-iv, justice; L. in-dē-ire, to point out, dicere, to tell; Goth. ga-leik-an, to teach, tell; AS. lēon (lēk-an*), to accuse. Ex. synic; indicate, dedicate, diction, &c.; digit, index, judge, judicious, &c.; verdict, vindicate; teem, token, teach.

DEIW (TEIW), to shine. Skt. dī, to shine; dēu-a(s), God, dīu-ya(s), brilliant, divine; Gk. Zeús (stem diŷ-), Zeus, di-os, heavenly, L. di-us, God, dīu-us, divine, dī-ēs, day; AS. Tig (gen. Tīwes), the god of war. Ex. Zeus; Jupiter, deity, divine, dial, diary, meridian, joyals; Tuesday.

DEK, to honour, think fit. Skt. dī, to honour, worship; Gk. δοκ-iv, it seems fit, δόκ-a, opinion; L. dec-et, it is fit, doc-ere, to teach, discre (di-dē-scere*), to learn. Ex. parados, dogma, dialectic; decent, decorum, docile, disciple.

DEM (TIM), to build. Gk. δέμ-iv, to build, δέμ-iv, a building; L. dom-us, a house; Goth. tim-ijan, to build. Ex. dome, major-domo, domestic, domicile (also despot); timber. Perhaps L. dom-inus, a master, with its derivatives, is from the same root.

DER (TER), to tear, rive. Skt. dr-nīmi, I burst open, tear asunder; Gk. δέρ-iv, to flay, δέρ-iv, skin; Goth. ga-tairan, to break, destroy; AS. ter-an, to rend. Ex. epidermis, pachydermatous; tear (1), tire (1), tire (4); perhaps tree, lar, larch.

DERBH (TERB), to knit together. Skt. darbh, to bind, darbh-a(s), matted grass; AS. turf, turf. Ex. turf.

DEU (TEU), to work, prepare. Skt. dā-ta(s), a messenger (?); Goth. taw-jan, to do; AS. taw-ian, to prepare, to scourge; tā-l (tāh-l*), a tool. Ex. taw, tau, two, (1), tool. (Hence the final -t in heriot.)

DEUK (TEUH), to lead, conduct. L. dūc-ere, to lead; Goth. tīuk-an, AS. tēo-n, to draw, pull. Ex. duke, ad-duce, &c.; conduit, doge, douché, ducal, redoubt, educate; two (1), tug, tuck (1), tuck (3), tie, touch, tocin, team.

DHE (=dhē), weak grade dhe (Teut. dhē*, dō*), to put, place, set, do. VI. DISTRIBUTION OF WORDS

The following is an attempt to distribute the words in the English language so as to show the sources to which they originally belonged. The words selected for the purpose are chiefly those given in large type in the dictionary, to the exclusion of mere derivatives of secondary importance. The English list appears short in proportion, chiefly because it contains a large number of these secondary words, such as happiness, heartily, helpful, and the like.

I have no doubt that, in some cases, the sources have been wrongly assigned, through ignorance. Some indulgence is requested, on account of the difficulty of making the attempt on a scale so comprehensive. The account of some words has been altered, by way of correction. Some words, not given in the ordinary lists, will be found among the Hybrid Words at the end.

ENGLISH. With the exception of some words of imitative origin, most of the following words (or their origins) can be found in Anglo-Saxon or in Middle English of the earliest period.

Portuguese from Spanish from Brazilian: agouti.

Portuguese from Brazilian: ananas, copaiba, ipeacuanha, manioc, tapioca.

French from Portuguese from Brazilian: petunia.

French from Brazilian: acajou, cashew (nut), cougnar, jacamar, sapajou, toucan.

South American: araucaria, mahogany, tolu.

Spanish from Araucan: poncho.

French from Caribbean: peccary.

HYBRID WORDS. English abounds in hybrid words, i.e. in words made up from two different languages; and the two languages compounding the word are often brought into strange conjunction, as in the case of interloper, which is half Latin and half Dutch. The complexity thus caused is such as almost to defy classification, and, as the words are accounted for in the body of the work, each in its due place, I content myself with giving a list of them, in alphabetical order.

abroach, across, affray, affreightment, aitch-bone, allot, allure, aloof, altruism, ampersand, apace, apiece, appoggiatura, arblast, architrave, around, arouse, array, asafetida, astray, athwart, attorney, attune, avadavat (amadavat), awkward.

bailliwick, bandog, bandy-legged, bankrupt, barbican, bashful, bay-window, becalm, because, bechance, befeater, befool, beguile, begun, belabour, besiege, betake, betray, bewail, bicycle, biffin, bigamy, bilberry, blackguard, blackberry, blunderbuss, boatswain, bressoner, briar-root, brickbat, bulk-head, bum-bailiff, butterfy.

calthorp, camelopard, candytuft, cannel-coal, castor-oil, cesspool, chamberlain, Christmas, cockloft, codling (2), colza oil, commingle, compose, contour, contradistinguish, contrive, co-parcener, costermonger, counteract, counterscarp, country-dance, court-cards, coxswain, cupboard, curmudgeon, curry (1).

Daguerotype, daniel, dastard, daywoman, debar, debark, debase, debauch, debris, debut, decant, decipher, decompose, decoy, defile (1), demarcation, demean (2), depose, derange, detach, dethrone, detour, develop, disable, disabuse, disaffect, disannul, disappear, disapprove, disarrange, disarray, disband, disbelieve, disburden, disburse, discard, discharge, discommend, discommon, discompose, discontent, discredit, disembark, disemboil, disencumber, disengage, disenfranchise, disenthral, disenfranchise, disguise, dishearten, disinheritor, disinter, dislike, dislodge, dismask, dismay, disown, dispart, dispose, disregard, disrelish, disrepute, disrespect, disrobe, dissatisfy, dissimilitude, distaste, distrust, disuse, doleful, dormer-window, dormouse, duleimer.

ecelat, embalm, embark, ember-goose, embody, embolden, embosom, emboss (1), emboss (2), embower, enamel, encroach, endure, enfeoff, enfold, enfranchise, engage, engrailed, engrave, engulf, enkindle, enlighten, enlist, enliven, enrapture, enshrine, enslave, ensnare, entangle, enthrall, enthrone, entomb, entrap, entrust, entwine, entwist, envelop?, enwrap, escarpment, essoin, exhilarate, expose, eyelet-hole.

feckless, flotsam, fore-arm (2), forecast, fore-castle, foredate, forefront, forejudge (1), forenoon, fore-ordain, forepart, forerank, foretaste, forfend (forefend), frankalmoin, frankincense, fray (2).

gaffer, gainsay, gallipot, gammer, gamut, gier-eagle, grateful, greengage, grimalkin, guelder-rose, guerdon, gunwale, gyr-falcon.

Hallowmass, hammercloth, harspichord, hautboy, heirloom, hobbyhorse, horse-courser, huggermugger, hurly-burly.

imbank, embark, imbitter, imbody, imbosom, imbower, imbrown, impark, impose, impunity, Indiaman, Indian rubber, indisposed, ingulf, inorganic, inshrine, instal (install), interaction, interleave, interlink, interloper, intermarry, intermingle, interpose, intertwine, interweave, intomb, intone.

jackanapes, jemadar, jolly-boat, jury-mast. kerbstone.

lancegay, lapis lazuli, lay figure, ledger-line, life-guard, lign-aloes, lime-hound, linseed, lug-sail.

macadamise, madrepora, magpie, malaria, malinger, mangrove, marigold, Martinmas, Michaelmas, misapply, misapprehend, misappropriate, misarrange, miscalculate, miscall, miscarry, misconceive, misconduct, misconstrue, misdate, misdeemeanour, misdirect, misemploy, misfortune, misguide, mishap, misinform, misinterpret, misplace, misprint, mispronounce, misquote, misrepresent, misrule, mispend, mistern, monocular, mountebank, mulberry, muscoid, mystify.

natterjack, nonconforming, nonjuror, nonsense, nonsuit, notpated, nunchion, nutmeg.

oppose, orchard, ostrich, outbalance, outcast, outcry, outfit, out-line, outpost, outpour, outrigger, outskirt, outvie, outvote, overact, overarch, overawe, overbalance, overcast, overcharge, overcoat, overdose, overdress, overhaul, overjoyed, overpass, overpay, overplus, overpower, overrate, overrule, overstrain, overtake, overtask, overturn, overvalue.

paletot, palfrey, Fall-mall, partake, pastime, peacock, peajacket, pearl-barley, pedestal, pentroof, perhaps, peruse, petrify, pettitoes, piebald, piecemeal, pink-eyed, pismire, planisphere, pole-axe, polecat, polynomial, pomander, portly, pose (2), posset, potwalloper, predispose, prehistoric, press-gang, presuppose, prewarn, propose, purblind, puzzle.

raiment, rearward, re-echo, refresh, regain, regard, regret, reimburse, reindeer (raindeer), relay (2), remark, remind, renew, replevy, repose, rest-harrow, retire, retrieve, retronsé, reward, rigmarole, rinderpest, rummage.

saltcellar, saltpetre, samphire, sax-horn, scaffold, scapegoat, scaup-duck, scotfree, scribble, seamstress (sempstress), seraskier, Shrovetide, Shrove-Tuesday, skewbald, smallage, snubnosed, sobriquet, solau-goose, somnambulist, spikenard, spudrift, sprightly, sprucebeet, squeamish, statist, sublease, sublet, submariner, subsection, subsoil, supercargo, superexcellent, superfine, superhuman, suppose, surcharge, surcoat, surname.

tamarind, tarpaulin, tea-poy, tee-totaller, teil-tree, titlark, titmouse, tocsin, tomboy, tomtit, touchwood, train-oil, transpose, Troy-weight, turnip.

unaneled, undertake, ungaily, unruly, until. vaward, venesecion. wagtail.

ETYMOLOGY UNKNOWN. awning, bamboozle, beagle, coke, conundrum, culvert, dhow, dudgeon (1), dudgeon (2), jade (1), kelp, prawn, privet, Yankee.

Of many other words the ultimate origin is very obscure, and the solutions offered must be admitted to be doubtful.

SUPPLEMENT

I here subjoin a few corrections and additions. The words marked with an asterisk do not appear at all in the preceding pages.

ADMIX. to mingle with something else. (L.) The vb. admix is no older than 1533 (N.E.D.), and is really a back-formation from the form admixt, which was used as a pp. much earlier, as it occurs in Palladius on Husbandry, bk. i. st. 9, l. 60 (ab. 1420). — L. admixt-us, pp. of admixere, to mix with. — L. ad, to, with; and miscere, to mix. See MIX; and COMMIX (below).

ANON. line 7. For Grien read Grein.

ATTAIN. The N.E.D. explains the word fully, and notes how it was falsely Latinised as attinctus, as in Blackstone. I here make the note that an early example of the mistake occurs in the attainder of George, Duke of Clarence, in 1477. In the 17th Edw. IV, the order for his execution was made out, because he had been 'convicted et attinctus.' But the true pp. of L. attingere was attactus. Hence E. taint; see Taint (below).

BAMBOO. Of Malay origin; not from Canarese, as suggested at p. 45; the Canarese form is merely from the later Portuguese form bambu. But the quotations in Yule and in the N.E.D., s.v. mambu, show that the older form was mambu, both in Portuguese and English, the E. form being borrowed from the Port. mambu, which occurs in Garcia (1563); see Yule. There can be no doubt that this mambu is merely a clipped form of the Malay samambā, samambā, or s'mambā, in which the first syllable is unstressed and was easily lost. This samambā is really a kind of rattan (not the grass Bambusa), but its superficial likeness to the ordinary bamboo is such that the difference would only be apparent to those familiar with the Malay region and its products. In fact, Yule notices the use of bamboo-cane, and Stedman, in 1796, speaks of a bamboo-rattan (N.E.D.).

BAWD. Prof. Weekley (Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909) shows that the ME. baud is, probably, merely a shortened form of ME. ribaud, and therefore a doublet of ribald.

BEAVER. (2). Cf. 'the helme, the visere, the two bauers,' &c.; Hall's Chron. (1548); King Henry IV, first year; § 9.

BOOTY. In the N.E.D. the earliest quotations for botye and butin are from Caxton. But in some Ordinances for the use of the English army made in 1419, printed in Excerpta Historica, p. 43, there is an ordinance 'for them that Sault [assault]... to make them boty.' It begins:—'Also that all men make them boty, vij or v to-gader, that alway iij of the vij, or ij of the v, be assigned to wayte, and not to departe from the standers' [standards], &c. Cf. 'il aura sa part du butin (v.s. butin);' Black Book of the Admiralty, l. 437.

BRANKS. Prof. Weekley (Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909) shows that brank answers to the OF. branche, the equivalent, in the Norman dialect, of OF. branche, whence E. BRANCH. See branch (iv. 11) in N.E.D.

CABBIOLETT. Not (F.—L.), but (F.—Ital.—L.); as the etymology shows.

CHEEK. The N.E.D. duly gives cheek, 'insolence, jaw,' the earliest example being in 1840; at which date is also recorded the phrase to give cheek, 'to be insolent.'

The origin of this phrase is not quite obvious. Perhaps it becomes a little clearer if we note that the Bremen Wörterbuch, in the Supplement, p. 405, gives the equivalent keek, cheek, as a Lübeck word, in the phrase holt de keek, lit. hold your cheek, in the sense 'hold your mouth,' hold your jaw, shut up! The date is 1771; nearly 70 years earlier than the date above.

Thus the original idea was that of too much use of the cheek or mouth in talking; hence, chatter, prattle, unasked advice, and the like; exactly as in the case of 'jaw.'

COCKNEY. It is suggested by Prof. Weekley that there were two words of this form, which have coalesced. 1. It represents coken-ey, 'egg of cocks,' as explained at p. 118 (above), in F. Plowman, and in the Tournament of Tottenham; but this usage appears to be obsolete. 2. In the sense of 'an effeminate person,' it does not represent an OF. coquins* (as I proposed in the First Edition of the present work (viz. in the Supplement, at p. 785), but is to be taken as representing (with loss of initial a, which is quite common) an OF. coquins, which actually occurs, and meant 'spoiled,' or 'self-indulgent.' Cotgrave has:—'Accoquins, made tame, inward, familiar; also, grown as lazy, slothfull, idle, as a beggar.' Also:—

'Accoquiner, to make tame, inward, familiar;' and 'S'accoquiner, to wax as lazie, become as idle, grow as slothfull, as a beggar.' The OF. coquins, with loss of initial a, is closely represented by the ME. cokeney or cokenay. The original sense of this OF. word would be 'addicted to frequenting a kitchen,' or 'frequenting of a kitchen.' Allied to L. coquarius, to cook, coquinus, pertaining to a kitchen, and coquina, a kitchen (Lewis). All from L. coquere, to cook; see COOK. As to the ME. suffix -ey (-ay), we may compare attorney, from OF. atorné. As to the various senses of the word, see the exhaustive discussion by Prof. Weekley (Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909). Hence the word is to be marked as (F.—L.).

COMMIX. For (Hybrid; L. and E.) read (L.). The N.E.D. shows that commix was a back-formation from the earlier word commist. Commix is not found before 1519; and commist was taken immediately from L. commixtus, pp. of commiscere, to mix together; from com-, together, and miscere, to mix. See further under MIX (p. 380). And see ADMIX (above).

CONVEK. It is now held that L. convexus has nothing to do with the verb convexere; but rather answers to a compound of con- with wacuo*, from the root wac- which also appears in vacillare, to stagger. The sense would be 'bent,' cf. Skt. vak-rā-, bent, crooked, vaksh, to waver, totter, go crookedly. Closely allied to AS. wið, bent, crooked, from a wint*, base wank* answering to Idg. wank*, nasalised form of wak*, to bend. See WOO, and WANCH.

COSSACK. The earliest quotation for Cossack (spelt Cassack) given in the N.E.D. is dated 1598. The pl. Cassacks occurs three times in the Antiquarian Repertory (1808), vol. ii, 399, which quotes at length A Letter sent from the Great Turk to the Queenes Maiestee in anno 1590. The Letter speaks of 'the Theeues called Cassacks, and other like facinorous persons.'

DANDLE. Cf. also Low G. dandeln, to thwart; used as F. dandiner. It occurs in the Supp. to the Bremen Wörterbuch, with the note that it means, in particular, to dandle a child in one's arms. Berghaus gives the Low G. dändelhen, dändeln, dänken, the same as G. dändeln.

DAWDL. Cf. also Low G. (Hamburg) dawdelt, to waste one's time (Richcy). Quoted in the Bremen Wörterbuch (Supplement). According to C. Schmidt, the Strassburg dialect has däde, to dawdle, to lounge.

DODGE. Ross has the Norw. dagga, to maintain one's place in an open sea against wind or waves by small movements of sail or oar. This may very well be a related word. The E.D.D. gives dodge and dodges, to walk slowly and clumsily; and here again we may compare (from Ross) Norw. dagga, to go very slowly and easily.

DOG. a fire-dog, and iron. (E.) The form fire-dog is modern (1840). 'One pair of dogges in the chimney,' Unton Inventories, p. 5 (1596). Doggy is the ME. form of dog, an E. word. But the idea was suggested by MF. chenets, 'andirons'; Cot. The OF. chenet occurs in 1317, and is a dimin. of OF. chen, a dog (from L. canis). Hatfield says that the heads of andirons often represented the heads of dogs.

DUB. So also Low G. dubben, to knock at a door; Supp. to Bremen Wörterbuch. Berghaus has Low G. dubben, to beat; dubsen, a knocker; dubsen, to strike repeatedly, to hammer.

FABRIC. 1. 5. For DHAB read DHABH.

FERRULE. Spelt virole about 1410. 'La virole le mambre garde, The virole the haft keepeth' i.e. holds fast the haft of a knife; Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 48. 20.

FINAL. It is remarked in the N.E.D. that final is a variant of final, and, apparently, of English origin. The earliest quotation, from the Chester plays, is of uncertain date, but of about A.D. 1400. Whether it was, at the first, 'king's English' or not, we are at any rate sure that it was king's French. For in 1404 we find Henry IV using the expression 'a finale destruccioun de son povre estat, i.e. to the final destruction of his poor estate. See Royal Letters of Henry IV (Rolls Series), ed. Hingston, i. 310.

FLANK. For (F.—G.) read (F.—OHG.).

FOLD. (2). The orig. sense of AS. fald, fald, was a coweded or ox-stall, or a shelter 'made with boards'; from the AS. fala, a board, plank, bar. This AS. fala is not explained in the Dictionaries, but it may be found in the Epinal Glossary. See the facsimile.

p. 27, col. 1, l. 11, which has: 'abula, falo.' This is the source of the glosses in which 'tabula' is misspelt 'tubulo'; as in 'tubulo, falo,' Voc. 52. 11; Corpus Glossary, ed. Hessels, p. 117, l. 321; Leiden Glossary, ed. Hessels, note on p. 208, s. v. tubulo. The AS. falaed is explained as 'hobellum' or 'stabulum'.

FOREHEAD. The oldest AS. form is foran-hiafof; see Sweet, O. E. Texts, p. 611.

FRAIL (2). AF. frail, W. de Bibbesworth, in Wright, Voc. i. 172; spelt frail in AF., and frayel in ME., in Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 79. 4-6.

FRISSE (1). We find 'des draps appelez Friseware' in 1376-7; Statutes of the Realm, i. 398.

GAIN (2). The derivation of the OF. word from OHG. is well illustrated by the occurrence of the AF. weiner, to gain. Cf. 'chevaux et armes, or et argent weine;' i.e. they had gained horses and arms, silver and gold; Excerpta Historica, p. 71, l. 60.

GIBBON, a name for the long-armed ape. (E.) 'The Gibbon, or long-armed ape . . . is a native of the East Indies;' tr. of Buffon (1793), i. 327. The name was conferred on this ape by Buffon, who, according to Hatzfeld, had it from Duplex. It was alleged to be an Indian word, but has not been found in any Indian language.

Duplex was in India from 1730 to 1754; and it is probable enough that he imagined gibbon to be the Indian name for the creature. I suggest that the 'Indian language' in which the name arose was certainly English, with whom the French at that time were in frequent contact and conflict. How the name came into existence we cannot tell, but that it was suggested by an Englishman (perhaps as a jest referring to a comrade) can hardly be doubted. The Prompt. Parv. has:—'Gylbon or Gylberde (Gylbon or Gylbert), propriy name, Gilbertus.' Hence Gibbon is merely an extension of Gib, the usual pet name for Gilbert. Gib was also a familiar name for a cat; cf. 'Gibbe our cat,' Romaunt of the Rose, 6204. And to this day Gib (with hard g, as in Gilbert) is a familiar name for a tom-cat in many E. dialects (E.D.D.). Any Englishman who knew this might easily suggest that, if Gib meant 'cat,' Gibbon would do for 'ape.'

GRAZE (2), to touch lightly, &c. The N.E.D. suggests that the right reading [in my l. 4] is 'like to the bullets grazing,' where bullets is plural; the sense being:—'like the bullets that graze the ground.' There can be no doubt that the original sense was 'to cut the grass,' or 'to score the grass.' Schambach gives, as a sense of Low G. grasen, 'to cut grass.' The quotations in N.E.D. show that the special sense arose from the ricocheting of cannon-balls along grass. There is a passage in Chapman, Revenge of Bussy D'Amblois, A. iv. sc. 1, that is particularly helpful:—'And as a great shot from a town besieged At foes before it flies forth black and roaring—But they too far, and that with weight oppress'd—As if disdaining earth, doth only graze, Strike earth, and up again into the air, Again sinks to it, and again doth rise,' &c.

HACKNEY. ME. hakney is certainly from ME. Hakeney, i.e. Hackney, in Middlesex. The OF. haquene and MF. haquente (Cotgrave) and all the foreign forms are simply borrowed from English, which had the word first. See Fitzstephen's description of London, temp. Henry II, in Stowe's Survey of London, ed. Thoms, pp. 211, 212. The great horsemart was in Smithfield, which is still connected with Hackney by Hackney Road and Mare Street; and the pastures for horses were to the North of London (p. 209), of which Hackney Downs and London Fields are still remnants. The ME. Hakeney represents AS. Hacan teg, 'Haca's settlement beside a stream.' Cf. Hacan pundfeld, 'Haca's pound,' in a charter dated 961.

HOGMANAY, an old name for New Year's Eve. (L.) The N.E.D. says: 'Hogmanay corresponds exactly in sense and use to the OF. aguilanneuf, the last day of the year, new year's gift, the festival at which new year's gifts were given and asked with the shout of aguilanneuf. Of this Godefroy gives many variants.' See also the E.D.D. From the OF. huginant, huginano (Godefroy); also agulan, guillanneu, agulloneu, hagullenneuf, aguilanneuf, &c.—L. hoc in anno, lit. 'in this year;' which was the original burden or chorus sung upon the occasion. In the Norman Glossary by Édilestand and Duméril (Caen, 1849), we find huginètes, new year's presents, or rather, presents given on new year's eve; called huginettes at Caen, and huginettes at Saint-Lo. De Brieux has preserved for us a sort of song, without rime, which was still sung, in his time, when the huginettes were asked for, hoc in anno.

Si vous veniez à la despense . . .

On vous servirait du rost—

Hogmanay !

Donnez-moi mes haguinètes . . .

Mais il est encore à payer

Haguinelo !

Here, in the very song itself, we first find hoc in anno spelt hoguino, and and then repeated in the corrupt form haguinelo; as it was sung by children ignorant of Latin. Thus hoc in became aguin, and further corruption was easy; anno was supposed to mean an neuf (new year). Hogmanay is for hoc in anno; and so on. The Spanish form (borrowed from F.) is aguilando, otherwise aguilando. The form hogu-manay may be due to the F. form huginant, shortened to hogu-manay, with a stress on the last syllable. Jamieson quotes the Scotch form as being so pronounced; as in—'The cottar weanies, glad and gay, W' pocks out owre their shoulder, Sing at the doors for haguinay.'

HOGSHEAD. I find an early spelling not noted in the N.E.D. 'In duobus hogsheads vini albi,' occurring in 1437; see Brand, Pop. Antiquities (1849), ii. 75, note. The spelling hewed affords a clear proof that the latter element is really the mod. E. head.

HUZZA! The earliest quotation in the N.E.D. is dated 1573. There is an instance twelve years earlier in the second edition (1807) of Grose's Antiquarian Repository, vol. i, p. 236. We there find a speech made at a dinner given at Norwich in 1561. It is said that on that occasion one Johnny Martin, of Norwich, proposed the health of the mayor whilst he could still 'speak plain English,' and before the beer, which 'is pleasant and potent . . . catch us by the caput, and stop our manners. And so huzzar for the Queen's Majesty's grace, and all her bouny-browed dames of honour! Huzzar for Master Mayor, and our good dame Mayoresse!'

ISING-GLASS. The earliest quotation in the N.E.D. is dated 1545. It occurs in 1528 in some accounts printed in Excerpta Antiqua, by J. Croft, p. 84; and again in 1530, in the same, p. 91. The same substance is mentioned by the name of husblax (which is nearer to the original) as early as 1371 (N. and Q. 10 S. x. 411).

KERSEY. The statement in the N.E.D. that there is nothing to connect cloth-making with Kersey, in Suffolk, is due to oversight. The fact is, rather, that there was once a large cloth-trade carried on in the south of Suffolk. In A Breviary of Suffolk, by Robert Keyce, written in 1618, and edited by Lord F. Harvey, stress is laid upon 'the excellent commoditie of clothing, which of long time hath here flourished . . . hee who maketh ordinarily twenty broad clothes every weeke, cannot sett so few a worke as 500 persons.' In Hall's Chronicle (Henry VIII, year 17, § 8) we read how an attempt to raise a heavy subsidy failed, owing to the opposition of the 'riche Clothiers' of Suffolk, who told 'their Spinners, Carders, Fullers, Weavers, and other artificers' that they would be unable to pay them wages if the subsidy was granted; so that the men of 'Lauam [Lavenham], Sudbury, Hadley, and other townes aboute' (which would include Lindsey and Kersey) rebelled to the number of 'four thousand men.' In Skelton's Why Come ye Nat to Courte, l. 128, he refers to 'a webbe of lyse-wulse' (see note on Linsie-Woolsey below); and at l. 930, he speaks of 'Good Sprynge of Lanam,' i.e. Lavenham, who 'must counte what became Of his clothe makinge.' Dyce's note on the latter line refers to Stowe's Annales, ed. 1615, p. 525, where we read that 'the rich clothiers, Spring of Lanam and other, had given over occupying; i.e. had ceased to employ men, when the disturbances arose in 1525 (as above).

LASCAR. Not directly from Persian; but Portuguese from Persian. The Port. form is lascar or lascarin (Vieyra).

LECKER. The OF. lecheor (Godefroy) was Latinised as leccator, lit. 'a licker of dishes,' hence a 'ribald' or ruffian, one of the unscrupulous hangers-on who attached themselves to mediæval households and were of ill repute. Cotgrave has lesecheur, 'a licker, a licorous companion.' Cf. MDu. lecker, 'a licker of dishes'; lecker, 'a liquorish or a daintie-mouthed man'; Hexham. See leccator in Ducange.

LINSIE-WOOLSEY. Probably named after the stuff called Linsie, spelt lynsey as early as 1435-6. In any case, linsie-woolsey (and probably also lynsey) was really named from the place now called Linsiey, in Suffolk, which is but two miles from Kersey, whence Kersey cloth took its name. This is proved by the fact that Skelton, in Why Come ye Nat to Courte, l. 128, has the form lyse-wulse; and Dr. Copinger, in his Collections for Suffolk, gives lynsey, lysey, and lesey as old forms of Linsiey. The form Lesey occurs in Inguia post Mortem, anno 1314-15. See note just above, on Kersey.

MAKE, verb. The AS. macian, a weak verb, seems to be a derivative from an adj. of which the Teut. type is makos, 'suitable, fitting,' or 'joined together,' as seen in AS. gemac, Icel. mahr, suitable; whence also AS. maca, a companion, and E. match. See Match (1).

MALL (2). For (F.—L.) read (F.—Ital.—L.).

MANCHET. Also spelt manichet; Caxton, in his Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 68, has 'a copel of manichetis.' I accept the etymology proposed in N.E.D., viz. from maine, an epithet of bread of the finest quality, and chet, an epithet of bread of second or ordinary quality; see Cheat, sb. (2) in N.E.D. Perhaps both forms are docked. Maine is short for demaine, as in gain demaine, representing L. pānis dominicus, 'lord's bread'; see my note on Chaucer, C. T. B 1915. Chat occurs in 'Manchet and chef bread,' Babees Book, p. 315, l. 501, and perhaps means 'bought bread,' as distinguished from home-made bread; from OF. achet, 'a bargain or purchase, or thing bought or purchased.' Cot. Thus 'manchet bread' may be the best quality of bought bread. See further under Demaine and Cates.

MARMALADE. The oldest quotation for marmalade in the N.E.D. is dated 1533; but there is a note to say that it is referred to in 1524. But we have a clear example of its occurrence in 1514. In the Rutland Papers (Camden Soc., 1843), at p. 27, we find, among the provisions made for the marriage of Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VII.:—Item, a boxe of Codignac charre de qwyne marmelade.

MAT. See matta in Walde's Lat. Etym. Dict., where it is suggested that the Semitic form is exemplified by the Heb. matlāh [where the t is teḥ], a portable bed, lit. 'a thing spread out'; from the verb nāḥā, to spread out. The form of the root may account for the by-form matta.

MOUCH. To play truant, to loiter. (F.—Teut.) The N.E.D. quotes from Abbe's tract of Aleman's Guzman de Alfarache (1622), ii. 289:—'We . . . runne a-mouching eyther to our Aunts house, or to our grandfathers.'—On North F. muecher, mucker; MF. muser, muser, 'to hide, keep close, lurk, skowle, or squat in a corner'; Cot.; mod. F. muser—Olliv. mukhin, to hide, to lie in wait for and steal; cf. prov. G. muecheln, to conceal, cheat, G. muechel-mürder, a secret murderer. Idg. root mewg*, to hide; as in Irish for-muig, the hidden. See Misch.

MUMMER. The statement, in l. 6, that mommy and mommyngs occur in Trevisa, is mistaken. They occur in Caxton's translation of Higden, which is later than Trevisa's, viz. ab. 1482. However, mommyngs occurs in the Prompt. Parv. (1490).

NESS. A promontory. The AS. ness or ness answers to a Teut. type nas-jaz*. The long grade occurs in I. nās-us, nose; the weak grade occurs in the Teut. type nās-i*, AS. nosu, nose. See Streitberg, Ugerm. Gr., p. 69. See Nose.

NOTE. The etymology of L. nota is doubtful. Walde rejects all connexion with L. noscere, and, seeing that nota sometimes has an ill sense, as meaning 'a mark of infamy,' proposes to connect it (as Prellwitz does) with the Gk. ἄνοτος, ἄνοτος, blameworthy, and ἄνοτος, ἄνοτος, I blame.

OBLETE. The earliest example in N.E.D. is dated 1600. But it occurs in Hall's Chronicle (half a century earlier), according to Ellis's reprint. 'Neither fyre, rust, nor fretting tynne [error for tyme] shal amongst Englishmen ether appall his honour or oblete his glorye.'—King Henry V, 10th year, last paragraph.

OBSCENE. Walde gives a simple derivation of the Latin obscenus from obs, prefix, 'near,' and caenum, 'mud,' so that it meant 'muddy,' or 'covered with mud.' The prefix obs occurs in os-tendere, where os stands for ops, the original form of obs.

OFFICE. Walde explains L. officium as from opi-ficiū (for opi-ficiū*); from opi- (for opus), work, and fici-ere, to do. In fact, the spelling officiū occurs (Lewis and Short); as well as opificina (for officina); cf. opi-fex, a worker. See Operate.

ORIEL. a recess (with a window) in a room. (F.—L.—Gk.) From OF. oriel, a porch, gallery, corridor (Godefroy). Prof. Weekley (in Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909) makes the excellent suggestion that the OF. form represents the Late L. aulolum, which Ducange gives as a derivative from L. aula, a court of a house, and (in Late L.) a hall. Ducange explains aulolum as 'sacellum,' a small chapel. We might well suppose that aulolum could mean 'a recess in a hall;' and it would pass into OF. as oriel, by natural dissimilation from oriel* or oriel*. If this be right, oriel is ultimately from L. aula, which is not a true L. word, but borrowed from Gk. αὐλή, a courtyard, hence a court, a hall.

OSTRICH. The very form ostreich occurs in Old French; see Poems of W. Mapes, ed. Wright, Camden Soc., p. 319, col. 1, st. 2.

PAINTER. (see p. 423). It seems certain, from the examples in the N.E.D., that painter is a mispronunciation, due to association with the ordinary word signifying 'one who paints.' The right form is penter, as in 1671. It is from the OF. pentoir, also spelt pentour; the latter form is given by Ducange under the L. form pentorium, which is short for Late L. penditorium, orig. a perch to hang clothes upon to dry (Ducange); from L. pendere, to hang. Godefroy gives OF. pentoir, pentour, a perch to hang clothes on, a suspender for keys, a suspender of a sword from a sword-belt, a pot-hook, a strong rope. Moisy gives Norm. dial. pentoir, one of two poles placed at the two sides of a window to hang clothes on that have just been dyed. That penter is the right E. form is corroborated by the fact that it is accurately represented (as a borrowed word) by the Norw. penia, a spirit with which a sail is spread out, a rope or a cord to fasten a sail with. This has the double sense, viz. of the Norm. dial. pentoir, and of the OF. pentoir, a strong rope; see Aasen. Ross explains Norw. penia as a rope attached to the side of a sail for keeping the sail close-hauled. Godefroy further gives, in his Supplement, under the heading pendour (though both of his examples have pentoir), the explanation—a marine term, ropes supporting a pulley, tackle. Thus we see that the sense was transferred from that of 'clothes-perch' to 'clothes-line,' and thence to a cord for various uses. It is now the E. painter, commonly restricted in sense to the cord that hangs down from the bow of a boat, and is used for securing it. It has nothing to do with the ME. panter, as suggested at p. 423.

PATE. It has been suggested to me that the substitution of pate for plate may have been due to Walloon influence, since (near Lille) they say pate for plate; note that De Ho gives the W. Flemish form pate for Du. plated, a dish; and Remacle gives the Walloon form pu for F. plus. Hexham, on the contrary, gives MDu. plattinen as a by-form of plattigen, in the sense of 'wooden shoes or pattens.'

PERE. The AS. per, perre (nom. per, acc. peran), is in a late MS., and merely used to represent a Late L. pera (ab. 1150). The latter is merely the AF. pera, a stone, done into Latin. The statement in the N.E.D. that the derivation of pera from OF. piere does not satisfy the phonetics is beside the mark; for the AF. form is really pera, a stone, from L. petra. La pera means stones from a quarry; see Chardry, La Vie des Set Dormans, 1018. Cf. 'les murs de haut pera taile,' and again—'Et des gros peres qeurent assez plente,' Excerpta Historica, p. 73, ll. 121, 125. And the pl. peres, stones, occurs thrice on one page; see Langtoft, i. 124. See six more examples in the Vie de S. Auban.

POLONY. The derivation from Bologna is made quite certain by a passage in the old play entitled Lord Cromwell, A. iii. sc. 2; pr. in 1602. The scene is laid at Bononia, i. e. Bologna; and in the course of the scene Hodge reads out a letter:—'I am at this present witting among the Polonin saissies.' Chapman refers to 'Bologna sausages' in A. iii. of his play called The Ball.

PONY. Well illustrated by comparing the MF. poulner, 'to fole as a mare'; Supplement to Palgrave, p. 952, col. 3.

POUR. For (F.—L.) read (L.). The OF. pur would only give pure, not pour. The difficulty as to the vowel-sound is solved at once by the supposition that pour was not borrowed from OF., but taken immediately from the Late L. pūrāre; i. e. that it was a word of direct monastic origin. The monks were skilled in simple culinary arts. The development is precisely like that of E. dour from L. dūrus, hard (N.E.D.); or of L. sour from AS. sār. Hence the old pronunciation of pour was really power, as in Pope and Gay (p. 469). So also sear, from L. excūrāre; see Seour (1).

PRIMROSE. Cf. 'Ou de quylle la primrose, other to gadere the primrose;' Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 47, 19.

PRIVET. The statement (in ll. 10–13) that the form primet occurs in the Grete Herball, turns out to be due to a mistake; for no such form occurs there. This leaves the etymology very uncertain; the word cannot be said to be satisfactorily accounted for.

PRUNE. (1), to trim trees. The last section (§ y) of the article is wrong. No doubt prune is derived (as said) from the OF. proignier (Godefroy), to prune, Norman dial. prognier (Moisy); but there we must stop. Godefroy is wrong in identifying these with F. proignier, as that is quite another word, with the very different sense of 'to extend by layers to propagate,' from the F. sb. provin, as said at p. 487. Sir James Murray has pointed this out to me, and gives the probable origin of the OF. proignier in the N.E.D. Most likely, it represents a Late L. form provināre*, to tend a vineyard; from the prefix pro- and Late L. vineāre, to plant a vineyard (Ducange), from vineā, a vine-yard, a vine. See Vine.

QUILL. (2). The note on the quill is illustrated by the occurrence of the AF. quillir (written for quillir) as a variant of OF. cuillir, to collect. It occurs in the Assault of Massoura, l. 346; see Excerpta Historica, p. 80.

RATHE. a cart-rail; see N.E.D. (E.). Also rade; and even rave (with v for voiced th). Cf. AS. raðen-ghegrad, translating 'tabula planstrii'; Voc. 267, 33. Probably allied to Hurdle and Crata.

RIME. (1). The N.E.D. gives the earliest spelling with rk from Cooper's Thesaurus (1556), which has: 'Rhythmus, . . . meeter, rhyme.' The earliest example of the spelling rhyme is dated 1610; the spelling rhyme occurs earlier, ab. 1557. All later than 1550. As late as 1660, an edition of Cotgrave translates F. rhyme by 'Rime, or meeter'; and Sherwood's Index to the same has—'A rime or meeter, Rime, rhyme, ryme,' and again—'To rime, rimer, rithmer, rymmer, rimeanner, rimeyer.'

RUSH (2). The common word rush, as the name of a water-plant, is of doubtful origin. I cannot accept the usual explanation, which quotes the AS. form as ryse, and tells us that it is no native word, but a mere adaptation of the Latin ruscum, which means 'butcher's broom'.

It is difficult to see why we should resort to Latin for the name of a plant so extremely common; nor is it at all easy to see why the butcher's broom should have been selected as a type of it.

But the fact is, that the AS. ryse, though it accounts for the modern rush, is by no means the only or the commonest form. The forms in the dialects are very variable; besides rush, we find also rash, resh, and rish, and the Southern forms raz and res. There is no possibility of extracting rash, resh, and rish out of a single form such as ruscum.

The very variability of the forms suggests a Teutonic gradation, such as we find in the AS. brecan, to break, with its pt. t. brec, pp. brecen, and the derivative which appears in ME. as braken and braket. I would propose to connect it with the adjective rash, and to explain it as 'the plant which quickly springs up and is of slender growth.' For it is very remarkable that this adjective likewise shows similar changes of form. The Ger. rash appears in OHG. not only as rase, but varies in MHG. to resch and rish, and even to rosch. The oldest form of 'rush' in AS. is actually rise (as in OE. Texts); and this I would set beside the E. Friesic adj. rish; which Koolman explains by 'risch, aufrecht, gerade, schlank, frisch,' i. e. quick, upright, straight, slender, fresh; the very qualities of the common rush. Cf. Hannover risch, a rush. Lübben actually gives the Low G. rusch, explained by 'rusch, schnell;' also rusch, a rush.

RUSTLE. Probably a native word; cf. Omerican rüslende (or rüslende), 'making a noise;' Matt. ix. 23 (Rushworth gloss). For 'rüsleude'; allied to AS. hrýscan (or hrýscan), to roar; see under Rush (1). Cf. AS. gehrust (or gehrust), a tumult (Bosworth); also Goth. hrusjan, to crow; Gk. κρυαυή, clamor. See L. cornix in Walde. See the long note by Max Förster on AS. gehrust, tumult; in Englische Studien, xxxix. 344.

SASH (2). But according to the N.E.D., the word is not of Persian, but of Arabic origin; viz. from Arab. shāsh, muslin, turban-sash (Dozy). Gesenius gives Heb. shesh, fine linen (Gen. xli. 42); which he supposes to be of Egyptian origin.

SCURF. The corresponding native E. word appears in ME. shorff, occurring as a gloss to AF. royne, F. rogne; Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 50. 5.

SHARK. A good example of the North F. cherquier or cherquer occurs in the future tense cherquuray, in the Vows of the Heron, pr. in Political Poems, ed. Wright, i. 16.

SKILLET (1), a small pot. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) The derivation of this word, as given at p. 566, is probably wrong, though it has been frequently given. Prof. Weekley points out that it was rightly explained by the editor of the Catholicum Anglicum (dated 1483). At p. 341 of that work we find:—'Skela, [h]emicadum;' and the note says that skela is the same as the prov. E. skel, a milk-pail, a dairy-vessel (see E.D.D.). 'From this word we have the dimin. skillet, a little pot or pan, also still in use.' At p. 240 of the Catholicum we find:—'A milke-skela, mulgarium, multrale, multarium.' The mod. E. skel (ME. skel) answers to AS. skel and Icel. skjál; hence the derivation is from Icel. skjál, a pail, bucket, of which Vigfusson notes that it is the same as 'the North E. and Scot. skel or shell, a milk-pan.' Skillet (also skellet) is a diminutive; the F. dimin. suffix -et may easily have been suggested (as Prof. Weekley says) by association with the word posset, also a dialectal word with the sense of 'iron pot' or 'saucpan'. The Icel. skjál appears in the Swed. dialects as skjula and skyla (Rietz). The form of the root is SKEU; so that skel cannot be in any way allied to scale and shell.

SKILLET (2), SKELLAT, a little bell, a hand-bell, an iron rattle. (F.—Teut.) See E.D.D. and Jamieson.—OF. esquillette (cited by Prof. Weekley), variant of eschelatte, 'a little hand-bell, such as cryers use,' Cotgrave. Dimin. of OF. esquille, eschelle, eschelle, a bell (Godefroy). Of Teut. origin; from OHG. scella, MHG. schelle, a bell, which is from the strong verb scellan, schellan, to resound; cf. MDu. schelle, 'a small bell' (Hexham), schellen, to ring a bell; Icel. skella, a rattle to scare horses, skella, to clash; allied to the Icel. strong verb skjalla, AS. scellan, to resound, clash. All from Teut. SKEL, to resound.

SQUASH. It is satisfactory to find that the AF. esquasser had the sense of crush or squash, and suffices to account for the modern form. In 'The Assault of Massoura,' l. 128, we read how the Saracens attacked some English knights, 'et des marteaux pesans les nez esquasserent,' i. e. and beat our men down with heavy hammers. See the Excerpta Historica, p. 73.

SQUIRT. The quotation from de Bibbesworth, viz. bilaggid wit swirling, means, literally, dirtied with splashing. In the No-minale, l. 408, the corresponding passage has besquireid, a scribal error for besquirid; for there is also a corresponding passage in Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 78, 13, which reads af-squyr, and (four lines below) he hath many of squyrin, i. e. of splashes.

STALEMATE, a position (in chess) in which a player, whose king is not in check, is unable to move any piece. (F.—OHG.) First explained by me in Phil. Soc. Trans., 1906. 'They stand at a stay; like a stale at Chess, where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stirre.' Bacon, Essay 12. 'For under cure I gat sik stak Quhill I nicht noch remul nor nek [prevent] Bot [without] eythir stail or mailt.' Montgomery, Cherlie and the Slay, 216 (1597). Cf. ME. stal, a fixed position; Layamon's Brut, l. 1671. From OF. estal, a fixed position, as in prendre estal, to take up a fixed position against attack; cf. en estal, à estal, in the same place, in a firm position, estre à estal, to stand firm. See Chanson de Roland, 1108, 2139.—OHG. stal, a stall, fixed place; cognate with E. stall; see Stall and Mate (2).

STANIEL, a kestrel, a kind of hawk. (E.) It occurs in Lady Alimony, sign. B 1 (Nares); and has been proposed as a reading in Twelfth Night, li. 5. 124. Prov. E. stannel, stanyal, stanchel, stone-gall (E.D.D.). Corruptly, stand-gale, from its hovering in the wind; for which reason it is also called stand-hover. AS. stān-gella, lit. 'yeller from the rock.' It frequents rocks, and has a resonant voice. See Stone and Yell.

STRAND (2), part of a rope. Add, that the spelling strand also occurs in Hakluyt, Voyages, iii. 847.

SULEIN. Prof. Weekley regards sullen as a doublet of solemn; for reasons which do not convince me. I can find no connexion of form between the ME. slein, soulein, solitary (as in 'In soulein place, be miselwe,' Gower, C. A., vi. 135) and the ME. solémpne, sollemne (as in 'With a solémpne sacrifice' in the same, vii. 4703). Nor do I regard the OF. solémpne, solémpne, 'solemn,' as a 'learned' form; cf. Ital. solenne, solemn, which could not have a doublet of the form solano. More light is, no doubt, desired; but I adhere (for the present) to a connexion between sullen and the L. sólus, 'sole.' For examples of AF. soulein, soulein, soulain (four times), meaning 'alone,' and soule, 'alone,' see Gower's French Works, ed. Macaulay.

TAINT, a stain; to stain, infect. (F.—L.) The various senses are best understood by observing the note upon Attaint in the N.E.D., in place of which taint was frequently used. 'Attaint, pp., ME. ateynt, ateynt, adapted from OF. ateint, ateint, pp. of OF. ateindre, to attain; formed like teindre, pp. teint, joindre, pp. joint, and not from L. attactus. Hence, erroneously Latinised in med. L. as attinctus, and referred (in England at least) to L. tinctus, 'dyed, stained,' an etymological fancy which warped the meaning of the word and its derivatives.' We may say that taint may almost always be ultimately referred to this Late L. attinctus, and is therefore from the verb to attain, i. e. from L. attingere, compounded of ad and tangere. But we cannot leave L. tinctus out of the account, because there is no instance in which the original verb attain has the sense 'to infect.' See the note on Attaint (p. 777).

TARN. Properly a 'separate' pool, without inlet or outlet. Cf. W. darn, a fragment, piece torn off, from the DER, to tear.

TARRIER, TERRIER, a kind of auger. (F.—C.) Halliwell gives 'Terrier, an auger.' In London, a tarriver (in the oil trade) is a kind of triple auger, resembling three tapering corkscrews united at the tops and arranged so that each is at an angle of 120 degrees from the other; used for extracting skives (or wooden bungs) from barrels of turpentine.—MF. tariere, 'an auger;' Cot.; terrière, 'a terrier, or auger;' id. Cf. OF. tardere, later tarere; tarere is in the Supplement to Godefroy; tardere is in 'Les Glosses Françaises de Gershom de Metz,' par L. Brandin, Paris, 1902; no. 101, at p. 70. From Low L. taratrum (Ducange).—OIrish tarathar, 'terebra,' Windisch; cf. W. taradr, an auger. A genuine Celtic word, cognate with L. terebra, Gk. τρίπερον, a borer, from L. terere, to bore, Gk. τρίπερον, to rub away.

TESTAMENTO. The L. testis, a witness, has lost an r, and stands for 'testis;' as shown by the Oscan tristatamentud, 'testamento.' Allied to 'tristis,' parallel to OIrish trass, 'third,' ordinal of tri, three. The orig. sense was therefore 'third man' or 'odd man;' see Umpire. (So Brugmann, Walde).

TOMAHAWK. From Renäpe of Virginia tāmähān, an apocopated form of tāmähākan, (what is) used for cutting, a cutting utensil; from tāmähākan, he uses for cutting, from tāmähākan, he cuts. A name applied by the Renäpe Indians, among whom the English settled in 1607, to a stone ax or hatchet employed as a weapon and as an implement for chopping wood.—W. R. Gerard, in The American Anthropologist, Vol. 10, no. 2; 1908.

WORSTED. Mentioned as early as 1293. In the Camden Miscellany, vol. ii. p. 13, we find 'Pro xj. ulnis de worsted, under the date Friday, May 1, 1293.
